markable. The Reform Bill excited much ill-feeling against the Duke, who was actually followed by a hooting mob from the Tower to Lincoln's Inn, pelting him with mud, and this, too, on the anniversary of the Battle of Waterloo! Several pages are occupied with a detail of preparations against a threatened outbreak in London, and the most minute directions were given by the Duke as to the disposition of the troops in different parts of the metropolis. Like other great men, the Duke was wrong in many of his conclusions. For instance, he believed "the existence of the Church of Ireland depends on the continuance of the union;" yet we have seen the former disestablished, while the latter endures. As for Repeal, he declared: "O'Connell is certainly driving at the Repeal of the Act of Union, and I cannot doubt that he knows that the Repeal must occasion the dissolution of the connexion with Great Britain." "He will work at the Repeal in Parliament, and out of Parliament in Ireland. If he should fail, as he will, he and his followers will then commence a sort of desultory plan of operations against the Government, having for its object to prevent all business." The last sentence will remind of Irish obstruction as it exists in our day. History repeats itself as much as perhaps is possible in the relations of England and Ireland.

London Notes: A Lost Charter: The Tradition of London Stone. By H. C. Coote, F.S.A. (London and Middlesex Archaeological Society.) Though the City of London has always been most careful about the preservation of its records, Mr. Coote suspects, and in fact proves from the evidence of Richard of Devizes and other contemporary historians, that one of the most important charters has not only been lost, but that no abstract or record of it remains. During the early Norman kings, the portreeve was merely a nominee of the king. The earliest charter conferring the right of electing a mayor on the citizens was granted by John in 1214; but the historians alluded to all describe the formal grant of the privilege by John when he was attempting to seize the throne during his brother's absence in 1191, and was anxious for the support of the citizens of London. That so important a matter must have been duly recorded in some document is most probable, considering that the privilege remained undisputed after the return of Richard I., although there is no mention of a previous grant in the well-known charter of 1214. What has become of the lost charter must be left to conjecture. Perhaps the researches of the present learned custodian of the City records may throw some light on the matter. As to London Stone, Mr. Coote conjectures it to be a portion of the house of FitzAylwin, the first mayor, and thus connected in men's minds with the lordship of the City, as appears from the words of Jack Cade on his entry into London.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW AND Co. send us a substantial volume by Mr. W. G. Marshall, M.A., entitled Through America; or, Nine Months in the United States. In the course of his journey Mr. Marshall visited the Empire City, Niagara Falls, Utah and other Western States, San Francisco, the Yosemite Valley, &c. His work contains a large number of illustrations, of which many are exceedingly interesting, if not always original; and in this matter Mr. Marshall is more straightforward than many people think it necessary to be nowadays, for in his Preface he tells us from whom he obtained permission to copy illustrations. Mr. Marshall makes a touching appeal to his critics for a little consideration for his book as being his first literary venture, but we really do not see that there was much occasion for so doing. The book is written, for the most part, in a pleasant and interesting way, and we only quarrel with his devoting too much space to Mormonism. As this is a subject in which he evidently takes a deep interest it would have been, perhaps, better to have treated it in a separate volume.

Lilian Adelaide Neilson. By M. A. de Leine. (Newman.) This is a very short and unassuming account, from personal acquaintance, of one of the most popular, if not the most accomplished, of modern actresses. Little direct biographical detail is given, but the author by implication protests against any harsh view being taken of Miss Neilson's character.

Congrès provincial des Orientalistes français. Compte-rendu de la première Session, 1875. 1er Bulletin. (St.-Etienne: Theolier Frères.) The French Orientalists have held two more provincial meetings since the congress of St.-Etienne in 1875. Consequently, this volume of Transactions, consisting of papers on Egyptological subjects by savants of various nationalities, edited with introductory and biographical notices by the President of the congress, Baron Textor de Ravisi, appears several years after date. It is to be regretted that the publication of the work should have been so long delayed. Five years count for much in the annals of modern science; and already the valuable memoir of M. Golénischeff on "An Ancient Chapter of the Book of the Dead," and Dr. A. Weidemann's excellent paper on "The Immortality of the Soul according to the Ancient Egyptians," suffer disadvantage by being read so long after delivery. Each writer offers his own explanation of the nature of the Ka, and both interpretations are already superseded by the more recent researches of Prof. Maspero and M. Le Page Renouf. The Ka, as we now know, can neither be rendered as "the name of the man in a higher sense" (Weidemann) nor as "being, person, individual, type, form" (Golénischeff). The Ka of the Egyptians corresponded, in fact, to the genius, or imago, of the Latins, and was a kind of spiritual double, like the Frayishi of the Iranians. As the Ka accompanied the man in life, so it survived him after death, and was believed to have its post-mortem abiding-place in the funereal statue of the deceased. As many as twenty duplicate statues are sometimes found in the serdabs, or walled recesses, of tombs of the Ancient Empire; the object of this multiplication of portraits being to ensure a perpetual shrine, or support, for the Ka. In an able paper lately communicated to the Asiatic Society, Prof. Maspero has shown that those who performed the customary periodical rites in honour of the dead believed themselves to be in the spiritual presence of the deceased, as represented by his funereal statue, the visible shrine of the invisible Ka.* A propos of his text, which treats of the walking of the deceased in company with his Ka, M. Golénischeff points out that free movement, after the mummied and bandaged state of death, was among the highest felicities of the Egyptian Elysium; adding this pregnant remark—"les Egyptiens comprenaient bien que seul le mouvement était la vie, et qu'en dehors du mouvement, il n'y avait que la mort." M. Chabas, taking for his theme the funereal libations of the Egyptians, shows how water was deemed to be the essential principle of life, and aridity a synonym for death. As Osiris himself was resuscitated by the effusion of water, so the revivification of the mummy must depend on restored moisture; hence the importance attached to perpetuated funereal rites and offerings, in which libations of pure water played a prominent part. "L'Hymne au Char du Roi," translated by Dr. Ermann, of Berlin, from an inscribed potsherd in the Edinburgh Museum, abounds in alliterative conceits, and is more curious than interesting. It was probably composed for some Pharaoh of the Nineteenth or Twentieth Dynasty. But by far the most attractive article in the volume is Prof. Lieblein's paper, headed "Les Egyptiens connaissent-ils le Mouvement de la Terre?" Replying to this question by an exhaustive comparison of texts, the learned writer shows that the Egyptians were unquestionably acquainted with the motion of the earth. In a hieratic inscription of the period of the Ancient Empire, it is said, for instance, that "the earth navigates the celestial ocean in like manner with the sun and the stars;" and, again, in a remarkable passage of the great Harris papyrus we read how "Pthah moulded man, created the gods, made the sky, and formed the earth revolving in space." In both these examples, the word "rer" expresses the act of circulating or revolving. At the same time, as M. Revillout has elsewhere pointed out, "rer" is also used in the sense of "surrounding," and must necessarily be so translated in texts which will bear no other interpretation. Prof. Lieblein maintains that the Egyptians, whose astronomical skill enabled them to determine the periods of the solar year and the heliacal rising of Sothis, based their knowledge of the movement of the earth upon exact observations, and not upon mere conjecture. Among the Greeks of classic times, it was only the Pythagoreans, says Aristotle, who were acquainted with this important truth; and Prof. Lieblein suggests that Pythagoras may have learned it during his travels in Egypt. Baron Textor de Ravisi, while premising that he is no Egyptologist, contributes an ingenious essay on the rhythm of Egyptian poetry; a paper on Egyptian war-chariots, with illustrations from the monuments; and a lengthy dissertation on the psychology, demonology, and superstitious practices of the ancient inhabitants of the Nile Valley. This last would have been more advantageously published as a separate work. As it is, the original and editorial matter supplied by the learned President fills more than five hundred pages out of 576, and over-weights the volume.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE are pained to learn that Father Foley, S.J., has nearly lost his sight from cataract. He is, however, working hard at the seventh volume of the Records of the Society of Jesus, which will give a summary of the English Province and the names and short notices of all its members, from its commencement in 1621 until 1773. It involves a very large number of the old English Catholic families. A catalogue of upwards of one thousand aliases, beneath which the real parties have lain concealed for ages, will be given in an Appendix. Father Foley's enthusiasm may be measured by the fact that he purposely defers a surgical operation in the hope of leaving his rough MS. in a complete state, so that another may carry the work through the press should the effort to restore his sight prove unsuccessful.

THE second volume of Messrs. Cassell and Co.'s Encyclopaedic Dictionary is nearly all printed. It will comprise B and a small part of C. Arrangements have been made to hasten the preparation of the work, so that two volumes may be brought out yearly. Every pains is being taken to make the vocabulary much more complete than that of any previous dictionary.

MR. S. C. HALL announces the publication, through Messrs. Griffith and Farran, of a series of 220 short poems entitled Rhymes in Council: Aphorisms Versified. They are written in his eighty-first year, and he bequeaths them as a legacy to his kind—"the result of knowledge based on experience and matured by thought, the proceeds of a long life."

A COLLECTION of eight MS. poems and letters of Burns was sold at Edinburgh by Messrs. Chapman on April 18. The total amount realised was £210 10s. 6d. The following were some of the lots:—"Holy Willie's Prayer," on three pages foolscap, with a note by another hand (£31 10s.); "Yestreen I had a Pint o' Wine" and "The Night it was a Haly Night," both on the same sheet (£15 4s. 6d.); "There was an Auld Man and he had a Bad Wife" (£15 15s.); Poetical Epistle to Mr. Willm. Stewart, unpublished (£39 18s.); Address to the Right Honble. W— P—, signed "John Barleycorn," on three pages foolscap (38 17s.); and a Letter addressed to Mr. W. Stewart, unpublished (£38 17s.).

MISS MATHILDE BLIND's forthcoming poem, The Prophecy of St. Oran, will be published immediately by Messrs. Newman and Co. The volume includes, also, a number of lyric and narrative pieces and a series of sonnets.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW and Co. will publish in one volume in a few days a revised and enlarged edition of Mr. Francis Hitchman's Public Life of the Earl of Beaconsfield, K.G., which has been for some time in preparation.

MESSRS. CROSBY LOCKWOOD and Co. are about to publish The Purchase of Gas and Water Works, by Mr. Arthur Silverthorne, C.E., which has been prepared from statistics of the chief local authorities of the United Kingdom.

MR. EBSWORTH has nearly finished a fresh volume of Roxburghe Ballads for the Ballad Society. They are chiefly political—on Titus Oates and his times.

WE understand that the Rev. W. B. Crickmer, of Beverley, is engaged on the Greek Testament Englished, a translation in which he proposes to give the absolute value and force of each Greek word in the corresponding English equivalent, irrespective of its grammatical order. The work will be published at an early date by Mr. Elliot Stock.

CAPT. DE CARTERET-BISSON is actively engaged in bringing out the third volume of his work on the Oxford and Cambridge Certificate and Local Examinations, which will contain the complete returns of all these examinations from their commencement in 1838 to the present time. A new and revised edition of Our Schools and Colleges, by the same author, is also promised during this month.

THE May issue of Harper's Magazine will include papers on "George Eliot" and "Thomas Carlyle," interesting because of the close associations of the writers of the papers with their subjects, and for the illustrations with which they are accompanied. Mr. C. Kegan Paul was long a friend of Mrs. Cross, and in a reverent spirit reports much as to her personality and associations. His article is accompanied by a portrait—the first, we believe, printed in any periodical—and by likenesses also of Mr. Lewes and Elizabeth Evans ("Dinah Morris," in part), as well as by various views. Mr. M. D. Conway is the writer of the Carlyle article, and gives a number of conversations with Mr. Carlyle, particularly while with him in Edinburgh at the time of the famous address. The illustrations include early and later portraits of Mr. Carlyle, portraits of his mother and wife, and views of Craigenputtock and of other places associated with the Carlyles.

THE season of scientific congresses is setting in. Invitations have been sent out for an International Congress of Orientalists at Berlin in September. An international gathering of

* See also Prof. Maspero's paper on the nature of the Ka contributed to the Third Congress of Provincial Orientalists, Lyons, 1879; and M. Le Page Renouf's Fourth Hibbert Lecture, 1879.

Spelling Reformers is to take place in the same city a little later. Another invitation has just been received from the Society of Finnish Literature, which intends to celebrate its fiftieth anniversary from June 30 to July 2 at Helsingfors. The programme of papers to be read is most tempting, though we miss any papers on Accadian literature and its relation to Finnish and Lappish. Scholars wishing to join the congress should apply to the secretary, F. W. Rothaten, Helsingfors.

A WORK entitled Colonel Gordon in Central Africa will be published by Messrs. De La Rue and Co. early in May, mainly composed of extracts from letters written home by Col. Gordon in 1874-79 during his Governor-Generalship of the Soudan in Upper Egypt. The work deals largely with the efforts made by Col. Gordon for the suppression of the slave-trade in those regions of Central Africa, and it also throws much curious light on the subject of the relations subsisting between Abyssinia and Egypt. The editor is Dr. George Birkbeck Hill.

We read in the Index that in America, as well as in Germany, it is proposed to hold a centennial celebration this year of the publication of Kant's Kritik der Reinen Vernunft.

A Life of Christ, by the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, which has been for many years in progress but was recently suspended, will shortly be completed.

MR. ALBANY DE FONBLANQUE'S valuable handbook, How we are Governed, has been translated into French under the title of Le Gouvernement anglais: ses Organes, son Fonctionnement (Paris: Germer Baillière), with a Preface by the prominent politician, M. Henri Brisson. The translation is made from the thirteenth edition, published in 1879.

A GERMAN translation of the Rev. J. Sibree's valuable work on Madagascar has just been published by Messrs. Brockhaus, of Leipzig.

DR. F. H. STRATMANN has printed to the end of H of his Supplement to his Dictionary of the Old-English Language of the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries.

DR. EMIL HAUSKNECHT has finished his edition of the romance of the Soudane of Babylone for the Early-English Text Society. He has examined the French MS. in the Hanover Library, and finds that it is not the original of the English romance.

MR. SIDNEY J. HERRTAGE'S new edition of Sir David Lyndesay's Monarchie is now printing for the Early-English Text Society.

MR. FURNIVALL'S test-search for the Inventory of Shakspeare's goods at New Place, which was expected to be among the eight-and-twenty boxes of old Inventories at the Probate Office in Somerset House, has come to an end with the moral certainty that Shakspeare's Inventory is not in these boxes. The search has been, of course, conducted by the officer in charge of the documents, Mr. J. Chaloner-Smith, the Superintendent of the Reading Room. He has dived into every part of every box so as thoroughly to test its contents, and has shown every Inventory as he unrolled it to Mr. Furnivall. About three hours have been given to each box, so that a fair trial of its contents has been made. The result is that only some two or three per cent. of the wills are before 1640, the great bulk lying between 1660 and 1700, though a few go down to 1724. Of the wills before 1640 most are about 1530. No will has been found between 1600 and 1630. The conclusion forced on the searchers is that the bags containing the late sixteenth- and early seventeenth-century Inventories have perished—no doubt burnt in the Fire of London—while some of those of the latter half of the seventeenth century were preserved with a few separate Inventories of the sixteenth century. This test-search has made Mr. Furnivall give up his previous intention of appealing to the Treasury for funds for a complete calendar of the Inventories.

MR. W. J. ROLFE'S excellent editions of Shakspeare's Plays, the School and College Series, are to be introduced into the English market. Their annual sale in the United States has now reached thirty thousand, and is steadily increasing. His last two issues are The Taming of the Shrew and All's Well that Ends Well. Coriolanus and the Comedy of Errors are far advanced at press; and Mr. Rolfe is now at Cymbeline and Measure for Measure, which he hopes to finish in July and have published in the autumn. In The Shrew and All's Well the critical extracts in the Introductions are from Hazlitt, Mrs. Jameson, Schlegel, Verplanck, Dowden, and Furnivall; while the Notes are as full of helpful illustrative matter as in former volumes of the series, with extracts from Knight, the Cowden Clarkes, &c., on the places and minor characters of the plays. The usual Indexes of words and phrases explained are also added. In The Shrew Mr. Rolfe wisely adopts the view of Prof. Grant White and other late writers who hold that the old play of The Taming of a Shrew, 1594, was recast by some adapter, and strengthened by Shakspeare only in the scenes in which Katherine, Petruchio, and Grumio appear, and in the Induction. The evident power and developed humour of Shakspeare's part of the play have induced Mr. Rolfe to favour, as other critics have done, "a date not earlier than 1597, and possibly a year or two later." In All's Well, Mr. Rolfe recognises the work of two periods of Shakspeare's art, and says, "There can be little doubt, we think, that the play is a revision of The Love Labours Wonne, included in Meres's often-quoted list," and so of the dates 1592-93 and 1601-3.

THE following are the arrangements after Easter at the Royal Institution:—Prof. Dewar will on Tuesday next begin a course of six lectures on "The Non-Metallic Elements;" Prof. Tyndall will, on Thursday next, begin a course of six lectures on "Paramagnetism and Diamagnetism;" and Prof. Morley will, on Saturday next, begin a course of three lectures on "Scotland's Part in English Literature," to be followed by a lecture on "Thomas Carlyle." On Saturday, May 21, Prof. E. C. Turner, of the University of St. Petersburg, will begin a course of five lectures on "The Great Modern Writers of Russia." The Friday evening discourses will probably be given by Prof. J. Stuart Blackie, on "The Language and Literature of the Scottish Highlands;" by the Hon. George C. Brodrick, on "The Land-Systems of England and of Ireland;" by Mr. Francis Galton, on "Mental Images and Vision;" by Mr. Walter H. Pollock, on "Shakspeare Criticism;" by Prof. H. B. Roscoe, on "The Artificial Production of Indigo;" by Prof. W. G. Adams, on "Magnetic Disturbance, Auroræ, and Earth Currents;" and by Prof. Dewar, on "Origin and Identity of Spectra."

WE take the following notes from the Revue Critique:—Almost up to the last days of his life M. Paulin Paris was at work upon an examination into certain points connected with the history of Francis I., especially concerning his private life. This work was left nearly complete, and will shortly be published. The Ecole des Langues Orientales has just issued Recueil de Documents sur l'Asie centrale, translated from the Chinese by M. Imbault-Huart. The forthcoming volumes of the same series are:—Histoire universelle, translated from the Armenian by M. Dulaurier; Histoire du Bureau des Interprètes de Pékin, by M. Deveria; and La Chronique de Nestor, translated from the Russian, with notes, by M. Louis Leger.

THE French Société des Etudes Historiques has selected the following subjects for the two Raymond prizes (of 1,000 frs. each) for 1882:—The condition of the peasantry in the sixteenth century, from the accession of Francis I. to the death of Henri II.; The history of the Danubian principalities, from the Turkish invasion to the Treaty of Unkiar Skelessi.

THE French novelist, M. Alphonse Daudet, has written a sort of literary autobiography, under the title of "Histoire de mes Livres," which is now appearing in the pages of the Indépendance Belge. The first instalment gives the genesis of Fromont jeune et Risler aîné, by which his fame was established. Incidentally he gives an interesting glimpse of a group of five writers, then equally unread and moneyless, who used to meet on Sundays in the rooms of one of their number, Gustave Flaubert. The other four were—Daudet himself, Tourguéneff, Goncourt, and Zola. After the first success of Fromont, only six years ago, the author of L'Assommoir exclaimed, "Nous ne nous vendrons jamais, nous autres!" The following passage also is worthy of quotation:—

"Bientôt les tirages se succélerent, puis ce furent des demandes de traduction pour l'Italie, l'Allemagne, l'Espagne, la Suède, le Danemark; l'Angleterre y vint aussi, mais tardivement; c'est le pays où j'ai été le plus lent à pénétrer avec un goût minutieux des choses intimes qui là, mieux qu'ailleurs, semblait-il, aurait dû plaire."

THE town of Santa Cruz, in Teneriffe, the capital of the Canary Islands, boasts two periodicals—the Revista de Canarias and the Museo Canario—both of which give some space to literary subjects.

THE Rassegna Settimanale for April 10 has, for its London Letter, notices of some recent books about Ireland and of Carlyle's Reminiscences, signed "H. Z."

M. CALMANN LÉVY announces L'Histoire d'une Parisienne, by M. Octave Feuillet.

PROF. LAMY, of the University of Louvain, is engaged upon a critical edition of the unpublished works of St. Ephrem, preserved in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris and the British Museum. The text will be accompanied by a translation and a commentary. Of two volumes, the first is announced by the Revue critique internationale to be almost ready.

A FIRST volume has just appeared, under the auspices of the Société des Bibliophiles liégeois, of Papiers de Jean-Remi de Chestret, pour servir à l'Histoire de la Revolution liégeoise (1789-91).

A POSTHUMOUS volume—the eighth and last—has just been published (Paris: Calmann Lévy) of Mortimer-Ternaux's Histoire de la Terreur, edited by the Baron de Layre.

ANOTHER posthumous work of importance is the second volume of H. Fournel's Les Berbers: Etude sur la Conquête de l'Afrique par les Arabes d'après les Textes arabes imprimés, completed, after the death of the author, by M. Gustave Dugat (Paris: Imprimerie Nationale).

A NEW edition of the complete works of the Russian poet Nekrasov has just appeared. Unlike similar editions of Russian classics, it is issued at a price (three roubles) which makes it obtainable by readers of all classes. It contains all the poems included by the author himself in the 1873 edition and in the Last Songs published in 1877, as well as those which have appeared in various periodicals since his death. Indexes are also added.

NOTWITHSTANDING its late extraordinary attempt to suppress the Malo-Russian language, the Russian Press Censorship has authorised the publication of a miscellany, the Luna, which is to contain some productions, hitherto unprinted, of Shovchenko, and contributions by Kostomarov, Levitski, Staritski, and others.

MESSRS. TEUBNER'S announcements include:—Die homerischen Verbalformen systematisch zusammengestellt, by the late E. Frohwein, with a Preface by Prof. B. Delbrück; Abriss der Quellenkunde der griechischen u. römischen Geschichte, Part II., by Arnold Schaefer; Einleitung in die homerischen Gedichte, by Dr. A. Gemoll; "Das Tonsystem und die Tonarten des christlichen Abendlandes, ihre Beziehungen zur griechisch-römischen Musik und zur Entwicklung bis auf die Schule Guido's von Arezzo. Mit einer Wiederherstellung der Musiktheorie Berno's von der Reichenau, nach einer Karlsruher Handschrift," by W. Brambach; Κοινότυποι ἐπιδρομή τῶν κατὰ τὴν Ἑλληνικὴν θεολογίαν παραδεδομένων, edited by C. Lang; Fragmenta geographorum Graecorum et Latinorum, collected, &c., by C. Frick; Imp. Justiniani Novellae quae vocantur sive constitutiones quae extra Codicem supersunt, edited by C. E. Zachariae; Quintiliani declamationes quae supersunt CXLV., edited by C. Ritter; and Vorlesungen über die Theorie des Magnatismus, by Prof. F. Neumann.

THE Senatus Academicus of the Edinburgh University have decided to celebrate their tercentenary in 1883 by the publication of a history of the university, and by a formal ceremony, to which representatives from other universities will be invited. The inaugural speech of the Earl of Rosebery as Lord Rector will probably be postponed to the same occasion.

A GERMAN translation has appeared (Bonn: Nolte) of M. Spiridon Lambros' pamphlet on the monastic libraries of Mount Athos.

THE author who writes under the nom de plume of "Hyazinth Wäckerle" has just brought out a new series of poems in the Swabian dialect.

By a mistake for which we cannot account we regret to say that, in the ACADEMY of April 9, the name of Mr. H. Calvert Appleby, of Hull, who was announced to have in hand a book upon Carlyle, was printed as Mr. H. C. Calverley.

OBITUARY.

THE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD.

THE latest of the three deaths which have made the winter of 1880-81 memorable in English history does not, like its two fore-runners, concern the ACADEMY, except in part. We have not here to give any account of Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield, as a statesman, but only as a man of letters and, to some extent, as an orator. It is true that, as usual, it is impossible wholly to separate the different aspects; but they must be separated as well as may be. Nor is it needful to give more than a very brief sketch of the external events of Lord Beaconsfield's life. Before these columns are read scores of daily newspapers will have reminded our readers that Lord Beaconsfield was born on December 21, 1805, and was thus in his seventy-sixth year at the time of his death; that he was educated more or less privately; that he travelled a good deal in early life; unsuccessfully contested Wycombe in 1832, was successful at Maidstone in 1837, and, after exchanging the Kentish borough for Shrewsbury, settled down at last into a sort of freehold of the seat for Buckinghamshire, which he only gave up in order to enter the House of Lords five years ago. He had married shortly after his first entrance into Parliament; and, when Mr. Gladstone came into power at the end of 1868, Mr. Disraeli, instead of (as some people who misjudged him curiously thought he would do) himself retiring to the Upper House, accepted a peerage for his wife, which she enjoyed not quite four years. His successive tenures of office may be here omitted with only the remark that, as his retirement in 1868 produced Lothair, so did his retirement in 1880 produce Endymion. It is more to the purpose to note that, between the Reform Bill and the repeal of the Corn Laws, Mr. Disraeli was known as something of a dandy, and as a very decided leader of the Young England movement. Both points are of importance in estimating his literary as well as his political character.

Long and brilliant as was Lord Beaconsfield's political career, it was far exceeded in length, if not in brilliancy, by his career as a man of letters. It is, perhaps, worth noting at this moment, when the proposal is being made to limit copyright to half-a-century, irrespective of the life of the author, that the writer of the Life of Schiller and the writer of Vivian Grey would, had such a scheme been actually at work, have outlived their copyrights. The interval between Vivian Grey and Endymion is immense in point of time; it is singularly narrow in any other respect. Although in The Revolutionary Epick, and in one or two other unimportant pieces, Mr. Disraeli trespassed into verse, prose, and almost only one description of prose, was his real literary field. The novel of politics and social satire, with a strong infusion of the romantic element, was his forte. Sometimes, though rarely, as in the Life of Lord George Bentinck, the fictitious element dropped out; sometimes, as in Popanilla, Ixion, and to a certain extent in Alroy, satire and romance had it all their own way; once in the memorable novel of Henrietta Temple, and again to some extent in Venetia, romance ruled alone; sometimes, as in Contarini Fleming, the author seemed to aim more at delineating individual character than anything else. But, on the whole, the books by which Lord Beaconsfield will be most (we do not say most deservedly) remembered are Vivian Grey, Coningsby, Sybil, Tancred, Lothair, Endymion, which deserve the full description given above. The merits of all these books are, on any just estimate, extraordinarily high, though they are unequally present; and, though no single book of their author, with the doubtful exception of Henrietta Temple, deserves unqualified praise, that extraordinary tour de force is, perhaps, the only novel, not merely of its author but of any other, in which love-making pure and simple supports a book. Everywhere else the author touches a great many springs. The almost unequalled power of sarcastic and, at the same time, really illustrative epigram which Lord Beaconsfield possessed lights his novels up; his love of personal anecdote and gossip gives them a living and human interest; his knowledge of the world and of business saves them from being trifling; his remarkable imaginative power, his freaks of fancy, and even the "gorgeousness of upholstery," of which he has been accused, prevent them from appearing dull or commonplace. There is, indeed, always in them a certain amount of what may be called wilful mystification. Partly a kind of amiable mischief of which he was never devoid, and partly a true sense of art, made Lord Beaconsfield mix up and embroil his portraits in a manner very puzzling to simple-minded people, who merely wanted to be told "Who's who." The odd way in which Byron and Shelley are portrayed in Venetia might have served as a warning to the good persons who a few months ago were racking their brains over Lord Roehampton and Prince Florestan.

One great merit of Lord Beaconsfield's novels remains to be mentioned. He is sometimes called unreal; but in truth hardly any writer has truer touches of humanity. The gambling scene in The Young Duke (one of the poorest of his books as a whole) would have done honour to Thackeray or Flaubert; and more amiable instances of the same power abound. When Endymion appeared, a great opponent of Lord Beaconsfield's policy remarked to the present writer on the vivid sense of association and human interest shown by the passage about St. James's Street. Perhaps, with all his supposed yearnings after vague Oriental splendours, no place was so real to Lord Beaconsfield as London; and it is hardly a hyperbole to say that to few men was London so real as to him. He had the historic sense of the nation of his birth, and he transferred it to the nation of his adoption. The face-to-face withstandings of St. Stephen's, the obscurer contests on country hustings, the infinite delights of the political battle, were to him intensely actual; and yet he realised all the generations of men who had fought and conquered and fallen before his days. Such a man could not be other than a Tory at heart, whatever measures he might be found supporting at one time or another.

The power of epigram which has been mentioned as only part of Lord Beaconsfield's equipment as a novelist was a still greater part of his equipment as an orator. Probably no one else in the memory of the present generation has had, as he had, the knack of summarising men and things in terse phrases which were really luminous because they were always true in the main, though they may have been put with the one-sidedness essential to the epigrammatist. It was the rarest thing in the world to read a speech of Lord Beaconsfield's which contained nothing quotable; and the quotations, unlike most such, were not likely to be forgotten. In some of the gifts of the orator he was indeed deficient. He could not condense complicated facts into luminous exposition as some of his rivals could; perhaps a certain indolence, which naturally goes with extreme mental quickness, accounts for this. He could not be virtuously indignant or contagiously enthusiastic; he saw all sides of the question too clearly for that. But in a careless, Olympian scorn which never failed to hit the joint in the armour; in flashing little side-lights of insight on his subjects; in adjusting exactly the fitting commonplaces of compliment and sympathy on worthy occasions, it may be doubted whether he has ever had an equal—he certainly never has had a superior.

In brief space and time only the most general aspects of a large subject can here be touched upon. In particular, an interesting and much debated point—the style of Lord Beaconsfield—cannot be dealt with. Nor, in truth, is it altogether fitting to analyse such points minutely at such a moment. Readers of books have not lost much, perhaps, by Lord Beaconsfield's death, for he has already given them what he had to give. But that a great light has gone out of the parliamentary debates no one, whatever his political views may be, is at all likely to deny. Lord Beaconsfield's foes said that he rather dazzled than illuminated, but they never charged him with want of brightness. On the other hand, those who acknowledged themselves his followers, without approving every act of his political career or regarding him with the slavish devotion which has sometimes been professed in England towards public men, fixed upon this one quality of brightness as their special reason for admiration. Lord Beaconsfield always saw, and he always enabled those who had eyes to see to see likewise, if not as he saw, yet how he saw. It is the constant presence of this quality of light in his literary work which gives it its value.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

THERE have also died during the past week the Rev. W. Morley Punshon, whose gift of eloquence was no less conspicuous as a lecturer than from the pulpit; Dr. W. Hardwicke, coroner of Central Middlesex, and author of some works on sanitation; and the Rev. R. Burgess, Prebendary of St. Paul's, who published The Topography and Antiquities of Rome in 1831 and Greece and the Levant in 1835.

"TO A GREAT AND GOOD PHYSICIAN."

THE following poem was addressed to Dr. Kidd, some years ago, by a grateful patient whose name, if we were at liberty to publish it, would be recognised as not unknown in literature:—

God hears to-day, and every day, for thee
Blessings and prayers uncounted; therefore hear
Once for thyself, to greet thee this New Year,
What He hears always:—little though it be
That words can tell. We thank Him for thy life,
Fulfilled in one strong, simple, selfless strife
With pain and ill; that, never taking breath
For one hour's ease, wrestles all day with death,
And conquers in His Name; and for the power
For soul and body's aid, that is thy dower,—
The mighty gift of healing, half of God,
And half of some steep journey nobly trod,
Some sublime hour of sacrifice in youth,
Where the two ways met,—this world's praise, and Truth.

Is not the time of trial without fear
Because the comfort of thy voice is near?
Have we not known how, all these years gone by,
Wherever called thee the most hopeless cry;
Wherever want most sad, and pain most sore,
Wherever most thy heart was pierced and rent,
Through the dark hours thy steadfast watchings wore,
The touches of thy tenderness were spent,
Till from the saved, the succoured, the consoled,
One blessing wraps thy name a thousandfold?

Ah, to how many a man, like Hercules,
Hast thou brought home out of the gates of death
The best-beloved, and joined hands of these
That parted hopeless;—or brought back the breath
Which even to the last had ebbed away
In little, lovely, moaning forms that lay
Chill on their mothers' bosoms! Who shall say
Of what deliverances from what despairs
How many still are mindful in their prayers,
And still remember thee by! At thy door
Even now what anxious faces evermore
Wait for the pity of thine eyes to cross
The story of their sickness or their loss;
And no one goes away without some balm.
The pain made softer, or the fear more calm.
What restless forms to-day are lying, bound
On sick-beds, waiting till the hour come round
That brings thy foot upon the chamber stair,
Impatient, fevered, faint, till thou art there.
The one short smile of sunshine to make light
The long endurance of another night.

But of thy loving-kindness and thy care,
Hope, that thy footsteps follows everywhere,
Skill without measure, patience without fail,
Each one who knows thee knows a separate tale;
But only God knows all.—And if to some
(Are they indeed His best-beloved?) there come
Hours of severer proof, and furnace-tries,
Which may not be cut short nor turned aside,—
When the art fails then the love triumphs mere;—
The last and best of gifts is yet in store.
Through uttermost extremity of pain,
Through darkness of deep waters, comes a strain
(The words return, the sense is mazed and dim),
"And there appeared an Angel, strengthening him."

And thy face is the vision, and thy voice
Is soft above the tempest, though it close
Over one sinking in slow fires. Who knows
How many hearts for evermore rejoice
For that revealing what a friend may be,
For that upholding they have had of thee
In that unspoken, solemn fellowship!

This blessing go with thee from heart and lip:
Because for our sake, us the sufferers,

Thou makest of thy moments and thy hours
From sunrise unto sunset ministers
Unspared, unwearied, unto needs of ours,—
(From sunset unto sunrise who shall say How often?) still foregoing day by day
The common ease and pleasure of the way,
Without self-pity and without regret
Wholly to thy heroic labour set,—
May God repay thee better than thy loss,
And such stray streaks as cannot choose but cross
The daily toil and tedium of thy track
Yield unto thee a sevenfold sunshine back!

The grace of God upon thee, mayst then feel
The shortened slumber and the hasty meal
Refresh thee as a sacrament;—thy sense
Be quickened into rapture more intense
Because thy joys are fewer;—and the green
Valleys be fairer because far between.
The first white flashing of a swallow's wing,
Glimpses of pear-trees between walls in spring,
The morning air from new-mown fields in June,
The water-lilies on a Sabbath noon,
The solemn river-sunsets through the smoke,
The first reviving smile from eyes awoke
Out of Death's shadow unto life again,—
Be sweeter unto thee than other men.

And because mortal sorrow needs must fall
On all men, and the highest most of all,
And some sharp struggle crowns each perfecting,
And that our lower love no shield can bring

Between thee and the higher Love to stand,
That strikes for Love's own sake unfaltering,— Therefore when thou too stretchest out thy hand
For help, when thy need cometh, doubt, or pain,
Or loss, or other anguish of this earth,
And though we died for thee our death were vain,
And though we gave all it were nothing worth,
And of the many thousands whom thy face
Hath comforted, can none return the grace,
Being less than thee,—may the one Higher One
Do to thee even as thou to us hast done,
O Soother of our Sorrows! May'st thou see,
Steadfastly gazing towards Eternity,
The heavens opened, and at God's right hand
With the same smile as once thy Master stand:—
Nor only so, but come down from His place
And stand beside thee, and His arms embrace;
Ner ever let thy hand go, holding fast
Till all the tyranny be overpast.

New Year's Day.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

In these evil days, when "academical organisation" at Oxford and Cambridge has become little more than a euphemistic equivalent for "redistribution of the plunder," it is a pleasure to turn to the organic regulations adopted the other day by the court or governing body of the new university at Manchester.

Hitherto we have felt it our duty to scrutinise somewhat jealously this precedent for the multiplication of bodies empowered to confer degrees. But, now that the Victoria University has been called into existence by Royal charter, it would be mere perversity to revert to arguments which can no longer do any good, and which experience in the near future may signally refute. We confess, also, that the spirit pervading these regulations entirely disappoints our sinister anticipations. We are only left to hope that what reads so well on paper will be achieved in practice, and that the new university will not fail because of the very loftiness of its ideal.

The subjects treated of, or at least those of general interest, are the qualifications for a degree. In these we notice some unnecessary complications, such as the distinction between an ordinary degree and a degree in honours, and the proceeding from B.A. to M.A. without any further trouble than the payment of a fee. But, setting these aside as of comparatively little importance, the whole scheme appears to us to be the most sensible and the most complete of any that exists in a British university. The essential distinction between culture and science, between letters and knowledge, is sharply drawn from the first by the institution of two co-equal degrees, those of arts and science. The bifurcation begins from the very commencement of the academical course, and is carried through consistently to the end. A student in engineering will never be able to call himself B.A.; while a student in philosophy will rightly be qualified for that distinction. This fundamental division once recognised, the other subdivisions follow naturally. The arts student has his choice of four subjects or schools: (1) classics, (2) English, (3) history, (4) philosophy; similarly, the science student has his choice among six: (1) mathematics, (2) engineering, (3) chemistry, (4) zoology, (5) physiology, (6) geology, mineralogy, and palaeontology. The present staff of Owens College is prepared to supply classes meeting the proposed requirements of each of these ten schools.

Equal boldness and good sense characterise the details of the scheme. Upon one point only have we space to dwell. The establishment of English as a school of its own, for the first time in the academical history of this country, seems to us alone to compensate for the hypothetical dangers of a new university. With English, as subordinate but compulsory subjects, are associated Gothic, Old French, and the alternative of Icelandic or Old Saxoo. The study of philology is thus definitely cleared from the prevalent misconception which would limit it, as at the old universities, to Latin and Greek, with a smattering of Sanskrit. One department of learning is yet left out in the cold—that of Oriental studies; though we believe that Cambridge has recently made a move in this direction. England is still obnoxious to the disgrace of having no complete faculty of a department of knowledge in which she has a special political interest, and which is now entering upon a stage of rapid progress.

But it would be the height of injustice to blame the Victoria University for not attempting everything when it has attempted so much. We wish all prosperity to an institution which, in its first public professions, sets an example to its elder sisters by avoiding their errors and filling up some of their deficiencies.

JAS. S. COTTON.

A LITTLE-KNOWN BYRON LETTER.

THE original MS. of the following letter by Lord Byron is, we are informed by our valued correspondent, Mr. C. Heath Wilson, in the possession of an Italian gentleman; and we learn from the present proprietors of Galvani's Messenger, who have most promptly and courteously replied to our enquiries on the subject, that it was published in that journal, though the exact date is difficult to ascertain as the file for the year 1819 is not to be found. It was also published in facsimile in Galvani's edition of the poet's works (1835). As, however, it is not included in Moore's Life or in any other memoir of Byron which we have seen, it seems worth while to reprint it here.

The circumstances which gave rise to it are shortly as follow:—In the spring of 1816 the Shelleys and Byron were living not far from each other on the shores of the Lake of Geneva. With Byron, as medical companion, was an Italian named Polidori, hot-tempered, eccentric, and vain, the only uncongenial spirit of the party, which included Miss Jane Clermont. During a week of rain they read together a book of German ghost stories in a French translation called Fantasmagoriana (Paris, 1811), and it was agreed that they should all write stories of the kind. Byron proposed that he and Mrs. Shelley should publish theirs together.

The most important result of this agreement was Mrs. Shelley's Frankenstein. Byron commenced a story called The Vampire in an old account-book, which he says he kept because it contained the word "Household" written twice by his wife, "the only two scraps I have in the world of her writing, except her name in the deed of separation." He only wrote a small portion of it, which is published in the Appendix to Moore's Life of the poet; but he told the sketch of the story at a meeting of the friends, at which Polidori was present. Shortly afterwards Byron dismissed Polidori, who in 1819 published in London a book of his own composition called The Vampire, a Tale by the Right Hon. Lord Byron, which attracted a good deal of attention on the Continent, where the imposture at first appears to have been undetected. Some allusions will be found to it in two letters from Byron to John Murray, parts of which are printed in Moore's Life. In one of these he enclosed the original MS. of his own fragment, and gave Murray permission to publish it in the Quarterly.

"SIR,

"In various numbers of your journal I have seen mentioned a work entitled 'The Vampire' with the addition of my name as that of the author. I am not the author and never heard of the work in question until now.

"In a more recent paper I perceive a formal announcement of the 'Vampire' with the addition of an account of 'my residence in the Island of Mitylene'—an Island which I have occasionally sailed by in the course of travelling some years ago through the Levant, and where I should have no objection to reside, but where I have never yet resided. Neither of these performances are mine, and I presume that it is neither unjust nor ungracious to request that you will favour me by contradicting the advertisement to which I allude. If the book is clever it would be base to deprive the real writer, whoever he may be, of his honours, and if stupid, I desire the responsibility of nobody's dulness but my own. You will excuse me the trouble I give you, the imputation is of no great importance, and as long as it was confined to surmises and reports, I should have received it as I have received many others in silence. But the formality of a public advertisement of a book I never wrote, and a residence where I never resided is a little too much, particularly as I have no notion of the contents of the one, nor the incidents of the other. I have besides a personal dislike to 'Vampires,' and the little acquaintance I have with them would by no means induce me to divulge their secrets. You did me a much less injury by your paragraphs about 'my devotion' and abandonment of society for the sake of religion which appeared in your Messenger during last Lent; all of which are not founded on fact, but you see I do not contradict them, because they are merely personal whereas the others in some degree concern the reader.

"You will oblige me, by complying with my request of contradiction. I assure that I know nothing of the work or works in question and I have the honour to be (as the correspondents to Magazines say), 'Your constant reader and very

"Obedt humble servt"

"BYRON

"To the Editor of Galignani's Messenger
Venice April 27th 1819"

UNPUBLISHED VERSES OF THOREAU.

The following verses, from a MS. in the handwriting of Thoreau, are printed in the New York Critic for March 26:—

"OMNIPRESENCE.

"Who equalleth the coward's haste,
And still inspires the faintest heart;
Whose lofty fame is not disgraced,
Though it assume the lowest part.

"INSPIRATION.

"If thou wilt but stand by my ear,
When through the field thy anthem's rung,
When that is done I will not fear
But the same power will abet my tongue.

"PRAYER.

"Great God! I ask thee for no meaner self
Than that I may not disappoint myself;
That in my conduct I may soar as high
As I can now discern with this clear eye;
That my weak hand may equal my firm faith,
And my life practise more than my tongue saith;
That my low conduct may not show,
Nor my relenting lines,
That I thy purpose did not know,
Or overrated thy designs.

"MISSION.

"I've searched my faculties around,
To learn why life to me was lent;
I will attend the faintest sound,
And then declare to man what God hath meant.

"DELAY.

"No generous action can delay
Or thwart our higher, steadier aims,
But if sincere and true are they,
It will arouse our sight and nerve our frames.

"THE VIREO.

"Upon the lofty elm-tree sprays
The Vireo rings the changes meet,
During these trivial summer days,
Striving to lift our thoughts above the street."

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- CRANE, Walter. "The First of May:" a Fairy Masque. Sothoran. 26 6s.
DOUDAN, X. Pensées et Fragments. Paris: Oalman Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
DOUGLAS, Mrs. Stair. The Life of William Whewell, D.D.; and Selections from his Correspondence. O. Kegan Paul & Co. 21s.
GAMBETTA, M. Discours et Plaidoyers politiques de. p. p. J. Reinach. 2^e Partie. Paris: Charpentier. 7 fr. 50 c.
GILLIOT, A. Etudes historiques et critiques sur les Religions et Institutions comparées. 1^{re} Partie. Les Origines. Paris: Germer Baillière. 3 fr.
GUYOT, Y. La Science économique. Paris: Reinwald. 4 fr. 50 c.
HOLUB, E. Seven Years in South Africa. Trans. E. E. Frewer. Sampson Low & Co. 42s.
LECLERCQ, E. Caractères de l'Ecole française moderne de Peinture. Paris: Reaouard. 3 fr.
LOPE DE VEGA, L. Théâtre de. Traduit par M. Damas-Hinard. Paris: Charpentier. 7 fr.
PATRICKSON, J. The Liberty of the Press, Speech, and Public Worship. Macmillan. 12s.
RIMMER, A. Our Old Country Towns. Chatto & Windus. 10s. 6d.
STILLERBEIN-ALCANTARA, R. Graf, u. B. KÜLLER. Die Hohen-zollern u. das deutsche Vaterland. 2. Lfg. München: Bruckmann. 10 M.
ZOLA, E. Nos Auteurs dramatiques. Paris: Charpentier. —3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY.

- SINGER, S. Onkelos u. das Verhältniss seines Targums zur Halacha. Frankfurt-a-M.: Kaufmann. 1 M. 20 Pf.
SMITH, W. Robertson. The Old Testament in the Jewish Church. A. & O. Black. 7s. 6d.
TRUMBLET, le Col. Les Saints de l'Islam: Légendes hagiologiques et Croyances. Paris: Didier. 4 fr.

HISTORY.

- HIPPRAU, C. L'Instruction publique en France pendant la Révolution. Paris: Didier. 4 fr.
KERMINGANT, P. L. de. Cartulaire de l'Abbaye de Saint-Michel du Tréport (Ordre de Saint-Benoît). Paris: Picard. 60 fr.
MEISSNER, F. Studien üb. die französische Revolution. Basel: Schneider. 1 M. 60 Pf.
MÉMOIRES-JOURNAUX de Pierre de l'Etoile, p. p. G. Brunet, etc. T. IX. Paris: Lib. des Bibliophiles. 15 fr.
MONUMENTA Germaniae historica. Venanti Fortunati opera poetica. Rec. et emendavit F. Leo. Berlin: Weidmann. 12 M.
SMITH, W. Old Yorkshire. Vol. I. Longmans. 7s. 6d.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- CHWOLSON, G. Allgemeine Theorie der magnetischen Dämpfer. Leipzig: Voss. 3 M. 30 Pf.
EVANS, J. The Bronze Implements, Arms, and Ornaments of Great Britain and Ireland. Longmans. 25s.
HOLDEN, E. S. Sir William Herschel, his Life and Works. W. H. Allen & Co. 6s.
NICHOLSON, H. A. On the Structure and Affinities of the Genus Monticulipora and its Sub-genera. Blackwood. 15s.
TISSOT, J. Essai de Philosophie naturelle. Paris: Germer Baillière. 12 fr.
VORSCHECHT, die, der Ethnologie. Berlin: F. Dümmler. 2 M.
WATSON, W. Kant and his English Critics. MacLehose. 12s. 6d.
WILH, H. Die Temperaturverhältnisse d. russischen Reiches. 2. Hälfte. Leipzig: Voss. 30 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- BAUMANN, J. De Arte metrica Catulli. Landsberg: Schaeffer. 1 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE STATUS OF A POPE AFTER ELECTION.

Oxford: April 9, 1881.

In the notice of my Bampton Lectures which you were good enough to publish last week (ACADEMY, No. 465), but which, owing to absence from home, I have only just seen, your reviewer, Mr. G. A. Simcox, calls attention to a fact of which he seems to think that I might have made use in support of one of my conclusions.

As the point is not uninteresting in itself, and is one upon which others besides your reviewer may possibly entertain a misconception, I hope that you will allow me to state the grounds upon which I excluded the fact in question from the evidence which I offered.

Mr. Simcox states that a Pope becomes possessed of the powers of his office by virtue merely of election (more accurately, as soon as he has signified his acceptance of the election). This is probably true of the later practice. But it is not a survival of an ancient usage; it is an exception which has become a rule. That it was an exception is shown by the leading authority—viz., the well-known decree of Nicholas II. in 1059: "Plane postquam electio fuerit facta, si bellica tempestas vel qualiscumque hominum conatus malignitatis studio restiterit ut is qui electus est in apostolica sede juxta consuetudinem inthronizari non valeat, electus tamen sicut verus papa auctoritatem habeat regendi sanctam Romanam ecclesiam et disponendi omnes facultates illius. Quod beatus Gregorius ante suam consecrationem fecisse cognoscitur." (I have quoted the text as given in Pertz, Legum, vol. ii., Appendix, p. 177, and in Richter's edition of Gratian, Dist., xxiii., c. i.—the text as given in the Chronicon of Abbat Hugh of Flavigny, Pertz, Script., vol. viii., p. 408, has the curious variant "electionem" for "consecrationem" in the last line.)

That which converted the exception into a rule was the transfer of the residence of the Popes from Italy to France. The election of Clement V. was not and could not be followed by his enthronisation in the chair of St. Peter. Some persons therefore impugned the validity of his acts. He consequently, from his residence at Pessac, near Bordeaux, issued a decree, which now forms part of the Corpus Juris Canonici (c. iv., de Sent. Excomm. in Extrav. Comm. v. 10), excommunicating those "qui . . . litteras nostras super negotiis quibuscunque confectas quae a nobis ante coronationis nostrae insignia emanarunt ausi fuerint impugnare."

But on the return of the Popes to Rome the earlier view that such an exercise of jurisdiction was to be regarded as exceptional seems to have revived. In the best authority with which I am acquainted, the Liber Rituum Ecclesiasticorum, printed at Venice in 1516 with the sanction of Leo X., it is stated, "ante consecrationem suam electus Romanus Pontifex consistoria tenere non consuevit neque provisiones aliquas ecclesiarum facere;" but he may do so in case of urgency, in which event, however, he uses a special form of "bulla."

Other evidence might be adduced to the same effect. I will not, however, do more than mention that the best indication of earlier usage seems to be afforded by the letter which was sent soon after the election of John V. to the Irish clergy (Bede, H. E., ii. 19). This letter seems to show conclusively that at that time the ordinary administrators of the Roman See during a vacancy continued to exercise their functions after the election of a new Pope, for it is sent not, as it would have been in later times, by the Pope-elect, but by the administrators of the See; of these the Pope-elect, as being Archdeacon of Rome, happened to be one, but his name occurs only in the second place, after that of the archpresbyter. (This fact is quoted in support of my proposition by Garner in his edition of the Liber Diurnus, chap. ii., tit. 1, p. 9, ed. Paris, 1680; and by Baronius, ad Ann. 590, x.)

Your reviewer mentions, in reference to the same point, that a Pope-elect, if not already a bishop, is consecrated bishop after election. This also is a late usage. I can find no early trace of it. Moreover, the statement, in the form in which Mr. Simcox makes it, has relation to the modern practice of confining the election to persons already in holy orders. The mediæval usage was that if a "merus laicus" were elected Pope he was required to pass, though without the ordinary interstitia, through all the grades of orders and holy orders. The form of ritual for such a case is given in the rare Pontifical published by Castellani at Venice in 1520, under the auspices of Leo X., pp. 44 et seqq.

Into your reviewer's more general criticisms of my Lectures I do not propose to enter. Some of them seem to me to have been made, and I venture to think that what I have stated above confirms my inference, not from the point of view which I assumed—that of the early evidence, but from one which I deprecated—that of modern theories. EDWIN HATCH.

MR. FYFFE'S "HISTORY OF MODERN EUROPE."
Dresden: April 8, 1881.

These notes are written in courtesy to Mr. Fyffe, and not with the idea that our controversy deserves public attention. The facts, or opinions, on which we appear to differ are not of very capital importance, and with respect to some of them proof is less attainable than conjecture.

Pitt and the War with France.

Mr. Fyffe says that "the declaration of war by the Convention on February 3 [the proper date seems to be February 1] only anticipated the intention of the English Government."

My criticism was that this remark betrayed ignorance of the negotiation at the Hague between Lord Auckland and Dumaulde, which proved that, even after the French Minister, Chauvelin, had been required to leave London in consequence of the execution of Louis, Pitt still clung to the hope of peace.

Mr. Fyffe's reply is that, far from forgetting that negotiation, he knows all about it, and that its existence is his "very ground for saying that Pitt 'hoped against hope for peace.'"

Unfortunately for this theory, it happens that the Hague negotiation was proceeding at the precise moment when, according to Mr. Fyffe, as quoted above, Pitt was intending war; so that "hoping against hope for peace" is the same thing as determining to declare war.

But we must go a little deeper. The Hague negotiation was going on after Chauvelin's departure from London—i.e., during the last days of January and the first half of February, when it collapsed. Now Mr. Fyffe's phrase, "hoping against hope for peace," occurs immediately after his account of the violation of the Scheldt, which was in November, and before the mention of the execution of Louis in January; and it distinctly refers to Pitt's struggle against the "swelling national passion" roused in England "by the massacres of September, by the King's execution," and by the revolutionary propaganda. Yet Mr. Fyffe assures us that "hoping against hope" is an allusion to the negotiation which occurred weeks and months later.

Nelson's Behaviour at Naples in 1799.

(a) Mr. Fyffe objects to "mythical," "un-critical," and "fantastical" as "too severe" on his authority, Colletta. I reply that the Neapolitan historian deserves these adjectives, and worse. In describing, for instance, the meeting of Nelson and Lady Hamilton, their first kisses, with Nelson's original dislike to the bloody policy initiated at Palermo, and his final compliance, overcome "by the caresses of the beloved woman," Colletta writes like a novelist. In the Caracciolo affair, "none but himself can be his parallel." He gravely asserts that Nelson hated and envied Caracciolo because the Neapolitan admiral's ship easily weathered a certain storm, when the Vanguard could hardly keep the sea, and carried away her mast and yards! To glut his vengeance, Nelson demanded Caracciolo of Cardinal Ruffo, and, when the court was hesitating, hurried on the trial; the sentence was imprisonment for life, whereupon Nelson came forward and said, "Death!" Colletta also insinuates an infamy à la "Mille. Giro," or "Nana," with respect to Lady Hamilton and the Queen of Naples which is fabulous. He has his merits as an imitator of Tacitus, but is altogether unvarnished; as Prof. Sybel justly says, Colletta, like Botta, is "thoroughly confused and worthless."

(b) Mr. Fyffe says, in answer to my charge that he has neglected the Nelson despatches, that his quotations prove that for 1798-99 "generally" he has used them as much as Colletta. This fails to touch my criticism, which was, that he had not used Nelson's despatches, with the Appendix by Sir H. Nicolas, in his account of these particular events, and that he had blundered in consequence.

Haugwitz and the Treaty of Schönbrunn.

I have been ignorant enough to talk of the mission of Haugwitz to Vienna, whereas Mr. Fyffe and the wise know that the said mission was "to Napoleon's camp." I was not there to see, but Haugwitz was; and on his instructions, drafted by himself, he wrote, "Mémoire du Comte de Haugwitz pour lui servir d'instruction lors de son voyage à Vienne en Novembre 1805." My "holloa," as Mr. Fyffe says, is also out of tune when I say that fresh orders were sent to Haugwitz from Berlin after the arrival of the news of Austerlitz. If Mr. Fyffe consults the authority he will find that my "holloa" is correct.

Haugwitz and Hardenberg, and Stein.

Mr. Fyffe says that Hardenberg "gave up the first place in the King's counsels to Haugwitz," and I objected that Haugwitz was on half-pay, and not in office. Mr. Fyffe's reply is, that his description is correct, as Haugwitz exercised a predominating back-door influence.

As to my own "mere mistake," I repeat that in 1806 Hardenberg went out and Haugwitz came in under pressure from Napoleon.

In the case of Stein, Mr. Fyffe has resorted to our old logical and critical friend, the ignoratio elenchi. I disagree with his account of the circumstances of a Minister's withdrawal from office, and am refuted by a proof that my date for that incident is not correct by a week or so! It would be a pity to spoil Mr. Fyffe's triumph by suggesting that "after" is a misprint for "before" Eylau, especially as of such chronological minutiae I desire, as Gibbon says, to remain ignorant.

Trafalgar.

I objected to this great battle being "dismissed allusively and unintelligibly in two lines," when a whole page is bestowed on Mack and the capitulation of Ulm. Here Mr. Fyffe misrepresents me by quoting the criticism without its justification. He replies, "Trafalgar, with its effects, occupies nearly two pages." Precisely so; "one halfpennyworth" of fact to this "intolerable deal" of effects!

G. STRACHEY.

AUSTRALIAN AND GREEK MYSTERIES.

London: April 16, 1881.

Mr. Tylor, in his review of Kumilaroi and Kurnai, speaks of the turndän, an instrument whirled round so as to produce a roaring noise in the mysteries of the Kurnai. This seems to be the ῥόμβος, which, according to Clemens Alexandrianus, was one of the sacred objects in the mysteries of Dionysus Zagreus. The scholiast defines the ῥόμβος in terms exactly applicable to the turndän. I have not the correct reference by me, but the passage in the English translation is vol. i., p. 30. It is not in this curious point alone, but in several others, that the rites of Greek mysteries resemble those of African, American, and Australian tribes. For example, the mysteries of the Iroquois were instituted to console Manabozho for the disappearance of Chibiabos, who was afterwards made ruler of the dead. The parallel to the grief of Demeter, the Eleusinia, and Persephone's place as Queen of Hades is obvious. A. LANG.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, April 25, 7 p.m. Institute of Actuaries: "The Mortality of Danish Oerkyemen from 1650 to 1818," by Mr. Harald Westergaard.
7.30 p.m. Aristotelian: "Schelling and Hegel," by Prof. W. T. Harris and Dr. J. Burns-Gibson.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Antor Lectura."
TUESDAY, April 26, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Non-Metallic Elements," by Prof. Dewar.
8 p.m. Anthropological Institute: "Some Archaic Structures in Somersetshire and Dorsetshire," by Mr. A. L. Lewis; "A New Instrument for determining the Facial Angle," by Mr. G. M. Atkinson; "Thomas of Aquinum and Anthropology," by the Rev. W. S. Cawser.
8 p.m. Institution of Civil Engineers: "The Relative Value of Upland and Tidal Waters in producing Scour," by Mr. Walter R. Brown.
WEDNESDAY, April 27, 8 p.m. Geological: "The Precise Mode of Accumulation and Derivation of the Moel Tryfan and Other Similar Shelly Deposits," by Mr. D. Mackintosh; "A Mammalian Jaw from the Purbeck Beds at Swanage, Dorset," by Mr. E. Willett; "The Correlation of the Upper Jurassic Rocks of England with those of the Continent," by the Rev. J. F. Blake; "Fossil Chelostomatous Bryozoa from the Yarra-Yarra, Australia," by Mr. A. W. Waters.
8 p.m. Society of Arts.
THURSDAY, April 28, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Magnetism," by Prof. Tyndall.
4.30 p.m. Royal.
8 p.m. Society of Arts.
8 p.m. Society for the Fine Arts: "The Autotype Process as applied to Fine Art Reproductions," by Mr. J. R. Sawyer.
8 p.m. Society of Telegraph Engineers.
8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
FRIDAY, April 29, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Language and Literature of the Scottish Highlands," by Prof. Blackie.
8 p.m. Society of Arts.
SATURDAY, April 30, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Scotland's Part in English Literature," by Prof. Morley.

SCIENCE.

Report on the Scientific Results of the Voyage of H.M.S. "Challenger" during the Years 1873-76. Zoology. Vol. I. Prepared under the Superintendence of Sir C. Wyville Thomson, F.R.S., &c. (Published by Order of Her Majesty's Government.)

(Second Notice.)

REPORT on the Ostracoda, by G. Stewardson Brady, M.D., F.L.S. No less than 184 pages and forty-four plates are devoted to the description of about 221 species of these minute Crustacea, and it appears that the monotony of the labour was rarely enlivened by anything extraordinary.

"One half of the dredgings contain no traces of the existence of living Ostracoda. In by far the greater number of cases, the specimens consist of detached valves, or of perfect, though empty, shells. When any vestige of the soft parts remained, it was carefully examined, and threene new genera—Phlyctenophora, Bythocypris, and Crossophorus—are here described as a result of such investigation; some little new knowledge has also been gained of the characters of other genera. Still, as a whole, the results of the Challenger's work in this department are disappointing. I had thought it possible that in this, as in other departments of zoology, forms might have been found connecting our own age, more distinctly than has hitherto been done, with bygone geological epochs, or, even more probably, showing new and remarkable variations of structural type. But these anticipations have in no way been realised."

One reason for this sterility of interest is the fact that these minute Entomostraca are infinitely more numerous between tide-marks than in mid-ocean, where the especial work of the Challenger was. Moreover, the extreme depths of the sea, "though supporting an abundance of animal life of many kinds, nevertheless present conditions very unfavourable, it would seem, to the existence of the particular group which forms the subject of this Report." Usually bits of broken valves, detached and much worn, represent the Ostracoda in the abyssal areas. But Dr. Brady concludes that the "Ostracoda do live, though in very limited numbers, in the most profound depths of the sea." Only nineteen species were found in dredgings exceeding 1,500 fathoms in depth, and no new genera; moreover, some of the forms have a very considerable bathymetrical distribution, and some must have sunk down after death. Thus, the most striking, perhaps, of all the Ostracoda noticed, Halocypris atlantica, Lubbock, ranges from 500 fathoms to more than 1,500 fathoms; and it is one of two forms which live near the surface of the ocean almost universally. Dr. Brady finds that the southern Ostracod fauna of Kerguelen has British species; and he notices the East Indian habitat of others. Alluding to fossil forms, in spite of what he has already said, he notices that "except Krithe bartonensis, Jones, Cythere canaliculata, Reuss, Cythere polytrema, Brady, and perhaps Bairdia ovata, Bosquet, no Ostracoda have been met with which can be referred with certainty to species described by palaeontologists."

The first-mentioned species, which appears, according to Dr. Brady, to be a post-Tertiary (quaternary?) species, is interesting, because it is very widely diffused, and is not a mere surface form. It follows the law of the duration in age of widely distributed forms. The Cythere just mentioned as having been named by Reuss is Tertiary in Europe, and recent in shallow water in Australian seas; and the last-named Cythere which was described by Dr. Brady is thus noticed:—

"A few detached valves brought from the Challenger from Prince Edward's Island in the Southern Ocean are in no respect distinguishable from the fossil specimens described by me in a monograph on the Fossil Ostracoda of the Antwerp Crag, under the name Cythere polytrema."

Finally, the Bairdia described by Bosquet, from the Tertiaries of Limbourg, is probably identical with a living form from Simon's Bay. Other long-lasting forms are, moreover, noticed in the classificatory part of the Report, such as Pontocypris trigonella, Sars, from post-Tertiary deposits in Scotland, which is recent in European seas, as far south as Cape Verde and west to Bermuda, where it lives at a depth of 435 fathoms. Bass'

Straits and Honolulu yielded a form, found in the Antwerp Crag, of this same genus. Cythere crispata, Brady, is not only post-Tertiary, but has a vast horizontal range from the North Atlantic to Port Jackson and Hong Kong. Loxoconcha guttata, Norman, found only as far north as Vigo Bay, is a Scottish post-Tertiary species; the species variolata of the same genus is common to the Antwerp Crag and Booby Island. Xestoleberis depressa, with its tiny shell, not a millimetre in length, lived during the Miocene age in Europe, was noticed as a fossil in Scottish post-Tertiary deposits, and is common as a living form in the seas of the Northern Hemisphere. The Challenger got it from the other hemisphere at Kerguelen. Pseudocythere caudata, a Kerguelen form, is also a Northern species, and it dates back to post-Tertiary times.

In noticing the family Cypridinidae, Mr. Brady remarks on their superior size and phosphorescence in the Tropical seas, and states:—

"The males only are endowed with swimming power, the females being non-natatory and passing their lives wholly at the bottom—a condition imposed upon them by the absence of the tuft of long filaments attached to the first pair of antennae, which is characteristic of the males. . . . Judging from the large number of fossil species belonging to this family which have been found in the coal measures and other Palaeozoic formations, we must suppose that the Cypridinidae were much more abundant in old times than now; we may perhaps infer they were chiefly inhabitants of shallow warm water, possibly of brackish and estuarine localities. Some few species have been described from Cretaceous and Tertiary strata."

No fossil forms of this family were found represented in the recent state. The specific distinctions of some of these numerous forms dredged up by the Challenger appear to naturalists who have studied other groups to be very slight; and, until more is generally known regarding the amount of variation possible to a species, the slight differentiations will be accepted with doubt. At any rate, Dr. Brady's care and trouble have been immense. The plates are well done; and it would have been better if a scale of comparative measurement had been added, for most of the figures are magnified fifty diameters.

Report on the Development of the Green Turtle, by Prof. William Kitchen Parker, F.R.S. This very distinguished anatomist undertook the dissection and description of the embryo turtles which were collected by the expedition and by Dr. Maclean, R.N. The results of his labour refer principally to the development of the cranium, face, and cranial nerves. But he notices other parts incidentally, and they will be completed in a future volume. The turtle leaves its egg complete in its structure, and attains its vast dimensions by a process of simple growth; but, before hatching, it has a most instructive development, through which it passes very rapidly by a series of transformations. In the first stage examined by Prof. Parker, the embryo being three lines and a-half long, there is nothing to distinguish it from that of a snake, lizard, or bird. There are four clefts, the heart is looped, the rudiments of the sense-capsules are very distinct, there are twenty-seven muscle-plates, indicating, as it were, as many body segments, and there are thickenings where the limbs will be. In the second stage (half-an-inch long) the number of segments has increased, and the heart has its three cavities; while in the third stage, six lines and a-half long, there are rudiments of all the principal organs. The segments now amount to fifty-two behind the head, and the author brings us back to old thoughts, for he considers the head is a segmented region, as well as the body. The attenuated tail of the embryo is curled and serpentiform, and the huge head is greatly bent. The body segments are divided into three well-defined regions—the cervical, dorsal, and caudal; and the only clear indication of the chelonian nature is the beginning of the lower edge of the carapace, the limbs being still outside, as in the non-shielded types. In embryos three-quarters of an inch long, the transformation has proceeded rapidly. The limbs are more distinct, the carapace is defined, the long tail is turned in under the body, and a big, bumpy head has a gigantic eye; moreover, the auditory and nasal organs have attained some development. After noticing the relative condition of the trabeculae and intertrabeculae between the optic nerves and the olfactory sacs in Selachians, the Tadpole, the Axolotl, and in the Seironota, Prof. Parker shows that the "intertrabecula has in it a unique development as to relative size and continuity and in its early appearance." The homology of the paired elements of the skull-base and skull-walls with the series of paired cartilages of the spine (neural arches) is clearly to be seen in this stage, according to the author. Here, again, is a little bit of ancient philosophy cropping up, and none the less welcome. Some of the new follows; and we are informed "the prochordal part of the trabeculae is segmented off from the parachordal part. The tissue is continuous, but the cartilage divides and forms a temporary joint, inherited, I have no doubt, from some old type to whom such a joint was useful." Possibly it was one of the rigidly armoured Silurian fishes which learned to snap at its prey, and got more food by the attempt to wobble its cranium.

The rapidity of transformation is illustrated by the fact that when the embryo has only attained an inch and one-third in length, it has "assumed much of the form which is permanent in this gigantic species. . . . The chondro-skeleton is now complete; they [the embryos] are at a stage which represents the permanent skeleton of cartilaginous fishes and the temporary skeleton of amphibian larvae." The carapace, however, has overlapped the limb girdles; the head is less sauropsidian and more chelonian; and the chondro-cranium, which was more or less batrachian in the last stage, has assumed its proper chelonian character. When the little thing has attained the length of three inches and a-half, the general form of the head is like that of the adults, and there are some remaining batrachian resemblances. In his "General Conclusions" Prof. Parker points out the affinities and divergences of the turtles with regard to the great divisions of the Reptilia and Amphibia, and notices that the large number of muscle plates of the embryo as compared with what is seen in the adult, suggests a longer necked and tailed ancestry.

"A long-necked ancestry, with a feebly developed carapace and many feeble bones of the plastron arranged triserially, would bring us very near the Plesiosaurs. The great and close conformity of the turtles, even now, to the Lacertilia suggests a common parentage."

The thirteen plates of this memoir are from the pencil and chalk of the very industrious and estimable professor.

Report on the Bones of Cetacea, by Prof. Turner, F.R.S., of Edinburgh. This Report relates to specimens of parts of Mesoplodon layardi, Ziphius cavirostris, Megaptera lalandi, and Balaena australis, which were collected from Antipodean museums and some exposed situations on shore. The first has an enormous range in the Southern Pacific and South Atlantic Oceans; the second wanders as far north as the Shetlands, and is known by many synonyms in the great oceans; the third is the large Rorqual of the seas of the Southern Hemisphere; and the last is the right whale of New Zealand. Prof. Turner acknowledges the value of Mr. H. N. Moseley's services in obtaining specimens and in giving the free use of his valuable notes. He gives some most interesting details about the teeth of the first-named Cetacean, and speculates concerning the method by which the unprotruded tooth of the young assumes the remarkable form and structure of the adult. In reference to the other forms the scientific world has to thank him for absorbing species and genera, and in stating upon what very slight structural evidence specific and even generic determinations have been adopted in the Cetacea.

The second part of this Report deals with the numerous tympanic bullae (ear-bones) and some other parts of the skeletons of Cetaceans—of Cetaceans which were dredged or more frequently trawled up. These remains have attracted the attention of chemists, as well as anatomists, on account of their being coated, infiltrated, and environed with a brown substance containing peroxide of manganese and iron. They came from very deep water—2,275 to 2,750 fathoms; some from the ocean south of Australia and from the Pacific, not very remote from the west coast of South America, and the majority from the Great Pacific in the southerly and south-easterly track of the Challenger after she left the Sandwich Islands. All come from south of the Equator. One set was obtained from 28° 9' W. long. in the South Atlantic in about the latitude of Rio. The notion that has been widely spread is, that these ear-bones and the manganese deposit have always been found in relation to the "red clay;" but an examination of the chart proves that they are also found in globigerina ooze, gray ooze, and Radiolarian ooze. Moreover, the abundance of these remains is not so great after all; for it must be remembered that in trawling there is a considerable space travelled over.

Far out at sea, midway between South America and New Zealand, in 2,335 fathoms, no less than ninety tympanic bullae were recognised. Some belonged to a southern Rorqual, others to a Pike whale, and a few to a species which resembles, in the smallness of the ear bone, a crag form. Prof. Turner considers that these bullae may have belonged to a species of Balaenoptera no longer extant. A group of bullae appear to belong to the Balaenidae, but to small types. Mesoplodon had its ear bones represented in the set. The remainder of this extraordinary collection consisted of the ear bones of Delphinidae and of the short-headed sperm whale of the Southern Seas. The author remarks,

"If we were to suppose that the eighty-nine tympanic bullae obtained in this station had been exact pairs, and that the numerous petrous bones all belonged to the same animals as the tympanic bullae, it would follow that the remains of at least forty-five whales were brought from the bottom of the ocean in this single station by one haul of the dredge; but, as the bones were not in pairs, the remains of a much larger number of whales were obtained in this station."

The bottom was red clay. A bone, corresponding with the Shetland Ziphius, was found in globigerina ooze. In 2,750 fathoms, Radiolarian ooze, a tympanic bone from a Globiocephalus and another from one of the Delphiidae were found with bones closely encrusted with manganese. The preservation of the ear bones and the fragments of backs of Ziphioid whales, Prof. Turner very properly states to be due to the extreme density of these portions of the skeleton. The bones had rested where they were found, and had not been rolled. Sharks' teeth of great size were found in the red clay, with the Cetacean bones; and, as they are presumed to belong to extinct genera, Prof. Turner infers (inasmuch as Mr. Murray has shown that the floor there is subject to a minimum amount of deposition from above) that the sharks' teeth may be of Tertiary age, and have not been covered, or that there may be huge sharks which have lasted on since the Tertiaries. But before we can recognise that the sharks' teeth are of extinct Tertiary forms, we must get over the difficulty of the associated recent Cetacean remains, and the fact that no fossil shells have been recovered. The Professor seems to rely too much upon the distinction between the Tertiary times and the recent; but he is very careful in his argument, and appears to leave the age of some of the Cetacea open for further discovery. All through this most interesting paper reference is made to an unpublished work of Mr. Murray, and to its plates; and really the Report will be greatly enhanced in value when that work appears. There are three plates attached to the Report.

The collection of fishes entrusted to Dr. Albert Günther, F.R.S., Keeper of the Department of Zoology in the British Museum, consists of specimens which were collected near the coasts of the various localities at which the expedition landed, and of others obtained from the open sea at all depths. The first group, numbering 1,400 specimens, representing 520 species, of which ninety-four are new to science, is considered in this volume, and the forms are noticed geographically. This plan enables the reader to grasp Dr. Günther's interesting generalisations at once, and does not detract from the zoological value of the "Report on the Shore Fishes." The fish fauna of the shores of the Atlantic is first considered; and naturalists are reminded at once of one of the many interesting distributional relations between the faunas on the East and West of the Atlantic. "The shore fauna of the Temperate zone gradually merges into that of the Tropical zone, so that, while the Madeira fishes are almost purely Mediterranean, those of the Cape Verde Islands show a great admixture of West Indian species."

It is also explained that the fish around St. Paul's Rocks in Mid-Atlantic belong partly to the West Indian and partly to the Ascension and St. Helena faunas; and a member of the widely spread genus Holocentrum is especially described. "Ascension, like St. Helena, has several fishes which hitherto have not been found elsewhere, but their distinctive characteristics are merely specific, not generic." After describing some new species from a trawling off Pernambuco, and enumerating the great piscine fauna of Bermuda, our knowledge of which is so largely owing to Mr. J. M. Jones, the fish of the Temperate zone of the South Atlantic are described. Most of those collected from the mouth of the La Plata are new to science, but those from the Cape of Good Hope do not offer any particular interest. Coming to the fish fauna of the Antarctic Ocean, and of shores abutting on it, Dr. Günther states:—

"The abundance of fish-life appears to decrease in the same proportion towards both Poles. The forms peculiar to the Antarctic are analogous to those of the North; thus the Cottoids of the North are represented by the Nototheniæ, Chaenichthyæ, &c., of the South, the Salmonoids by the Hyplochromidæ. Yet there is no such relation between the representative forms as might be considered to be generic. The resemblance is rather an external one, indicated by the general form of the body, structure, and development of the fins, presence of an adipose fin, &c. Beside those fishes which are peculiar to the Antarctic, some other forms, well developed in the North, but nearly or entirely disappearing in the Tropics, re-appear, as Sebastes, Agonus, Spinax, Myxine, differing but little from their Northern congeners."

The Straits of Magellan, the Falkland Islands, and the littoral archipelago on the Western side of the extremity of South America have a fauna thoroughly Antarctic in its character, like Kerguelen Island. Farther north, but on the Pacific side, the faunas of Valparaiso and Juan Fernandez show extraordinary affinities. "The fauna of Chili and Juan Fernandez might be described without much exaggeration as a mixture of European and New Zealand forms; of the fishes mentioned here, two being identical with, and four representative of, European forms." Acanthias Blainvilli, Risso, of the Mediterranean is widely spread in the South Temperate seas. The River Mary in Queensland yielded one of the species of Ceratodus with small scales, otherwise there is nothing particularly interesting about the specimens from Australia. The Fiji group did not yield any novelties, but the sea between Australia and New Guinea was prolific in interesting species. As a whole, the fauna "bears thoroughly the character of the Indo-Pacific Ocean, and probably none of the characteristic forms will be found to be absent. There is but a slight admixture of Australian forms." The Sandwich Islands have a very Polynesian fish fauna; but there are some American species found there, and the freshwater species are mostly peculiar. The Report closes with a description of the Japanese fish fauna from the southern and south-eastern shores of Nipon, and from the Inland Sea. Dr. Günther states:—

"A fact to which I have repeatedly drawn attention, and again quite recently, that there exists the greatest similarity between the marine fauna of Japan and that of the Mediterranean, the adjacent parts of the Atlantic and the West Indies, is fully borne out by the Challenger collections. It is proved not only by a number of species absolutely identical in the seas named, but also by a large proportion of representative species. This similarity becomes still more obvious when we take into consideration species which live at a moderate depth of from two hundred to four hundred fathoms."

A list of nineteen species is given in proof of this most interesting distribution. Dana many years since indicated the affinities of the Crustacea of the Japanese seas and the Mediterranean, and the Porcupine dredgings showed the analogies between the common Flabellum of the European region with that of the Far East. A systematic index concludes this admirable paper, which is magnificently illustrated with thirty-two plates by Mintern.

P. MARTIN DUNCAN.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

WE understand that Mr. R. H. Major, whose retirement from the office of Keeper of Maps at the British Museum we have previously alluded to, has also resigned the secretaryship of the Royal Geographical Society, which he had held for some fifteen years. The vacancy will be filled up at the anniversary meeting on May 30.

DR. OSCAR LENZ on April 13 gave an account of his journey across North-western Africa to a joint meeting of the Berlin Geographical Society and the German African Association, by the latter of which the expedition was sent out, with the original intention that his labours should be confined to Morocco and the Atlas Range. At the conclusion of his address, the main features of which have already been given in the ACADEMY, Dr. Lenz alluded to the project for laying the Sahara under water by letting in the sea. This his investigations have shown to be impossible of execution, because, although there are certain depressions here and there, the lowest place which he passed had an elevation of not much less than five hundred feet above the level of the sea. Dr. Lenz's explorations have revealed the presence in the Sahara of many mountain chains and table-lands with which we were not before acquainted.

News respecting the expedition of Dr. Gouldsbury in West Africa, to which we referred in December last, has been almost as scarce as about that of Mr. H. M. Stanley on the Congo. We now learn that it left Bathurst on January 21, and consisted of Lieut. Dumbleton and Dr. Browning, with an armed escort of twenty men and a hundred porters. They are to ascend the Gambia to Yabutenda, and then go to Timbo and Falaba, which places are about 570 miles from Bathurst in a south-south-easterly direction. From Timbo they will make their way to Sierra Leone, 270 miles distant, returning to Bathurst by sea about the end of May. Apart from the commercial benefits likely to result, we may hope that the expedition will make considerable additions to our knowledge of this part of West Africa.

A COMMITTEE is said to be in course of organization at Sfax, in the south of the regency of Tunis, for opening, under French auspices, direct commercial intercourse with Central Africa by means of regular caravans. The route that would be taken is probably new to Europeans; but in the existing state of political relations with the Bey the execution of the scheme will no doubt be deferred.

LIEUT. GAUTHIER, of the French Navy, has been ordered to proceed on a journey of exploration to the frontiers of French Cochinchina. His labours are to be directed to the country of the Moi, Sciamba, and Stieng tribes, and to the unknown forest region on the border. Dr. Neis, we may add, returned to Saigon early in January from a journey of two months' duration through the forest country on the north-east of the French possessions in this quarter, and brought back some additions to our geographical knowledge. In particular he ascertained the position of the eastern branch of an important river, the Dong-nai, but was unable to make a thorough exploration of it owing to opposition from the wild tribes of the country. He afterwards crossed Annam to the coast, and returned to Saigon by sea.

DR. JULES CREVAUX has returned to Paris from his journey in South America to which we have before referred. It has not, perhaps, been so fruitful in results to geography as his previous expeditions in Guiana and the Amazon basin, but it has made us acquainted with an important affluent of the Orinoco which was previously only known for a short distance above the confluence. After leaving the Upper Magdalena in October last, Dr. Crevaux crossed the Eastern Cordillera in search of the unknown upper course of this river, the Guyabero; and, having found it, he and his companion, M. Lejanne, constructed rafts on which they descended it to the Orinoco. The distance they traversed by this river was nearly 1,300 miles, and for more than a quarter of that distance they found the country along its banks a desert waste. They made a detailed survey of the course of the Guyabero, which may, perhaps, prove to be an important commercial highway into the interior.

MR. ROBERT GORDON, whose elaborate Report on the Irawady River we have before alluded to, has issued some carefully prepared maps in connexion with the same subject. These include Eastern Bengal, Assam, Burma, and parts of China and Siam, the Irawady Delta, &c., but perhaps the most interesting are those showing the various theories of the source of the Irawady River. Mr. Gordon, we should mention, has revived the old theory that the Sanpo, the great river of Tibet, is the upper channel of the Irawady, in opposition to the now more generally received opinion that the Sanpo flows into the Brahmaputra.

M. J. KORÖSI, Director of the Municipal Statistical Office of Buda-Pest, has published a Projet d'un Recensement du Monde (Paris), in which he advocates the taking of a synchronous world's census, on the lines laid down at various statistical congresses. Looking to the close relations which now knit together the countries of the world, and the interchange of their populations which is perpetually going on, it would certainly be desirable, on practical as well as on theoretical grounds, that the enumeration of the peoples should be carried on on the same day; but the somewhat weak and diluted arguments put forward by M. Korösi are not likely to convince those who have not already arrived at views identical, in the main, with those he advocates.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Geology in Yorkshire.—The last part of the Proceedings of the Geological and Polytechnic Society of Yorkshire opens with a suggestive address on the work of scientific associations delivered by the Marquis of Ripon as President of the society. This is followed by an interesting paper on the "Fossil Fishes of the Yorkshire Coal-fields," by the Hon. Secretary, Mr. J. W. Davis. During the past year the most important work of the society has been the exploration of a fissure or cave in the Raygill limestone-quarries, near Skipton. This cave has already yielded the remains of various extinct mammalia which once roamed over the district. Among these remains may be mentioned the bones and teeth of Elephas antiquus and of the British lion, Felis leo, variety spelæa. These fossils have been placed in the Leeds Museum, and it is hoped that they will, in due course, be fully described by Prof. Miall.

M. CAMILLE JORDAN has been elected a member of the Académie des Sciences, in the department of geometry, as successor to the late Michel Chasles.

A RUSSIAN lady, Mlle. Skvorzet, has just received the degree of Doctor of Medicine at Paris, winning high commendation for her qualifying thesis from Dr. Charcot.

THE prospectus of Mr. A. Featherman's forthcoming work in ten volumes, entitled The Social History of the Races of Mankind (Trübner), fully bears out the announcement that "it is probably the largest ever attempted in the department of anthropology." The human family are divided into the following six stocks:—(1) Nigritions, or more popularly the negroes of Africa; (2) Melanesians, including Papuans, Australians, Malays, and Polynesians; (3) Maranons, being the Indians of North and South America; (4) Turanians, comprising the Mongolian, Indo-Chinese, Dravidian, and Ugro-Altaic races; (5) Aramaeans, in which term is comprehended both the Semitic and Hamitic stocks; (6) Iranians, or the Aryan stock. The fifth of these divisions, the Aramaean stock, is already in the press, to be followed by the first and the fourth.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE last volume issued by the Société des Anciens Textes français contains the chanson de geste of Elie de Saint-Gille, edited by M. G. Raynaud, together with a translation by M. E. Koelbing of the Elis Saga, which is merely another version of the Old-French chanson. The two next volumes to be published are vol. ii. of the Œuvres d'Eustache Deschamps, with a notice by M. S. Luce of the rare MS. of French poems of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries stolen from the Bibliothèque Nationale, and now in the Ashburnham collection; and the Provençal chanson de geste of Daurel et Beton, edited by M. Paul Meyer for the first time from a unique MS. in the possession of M. Alfred Didot, which also contains some fragments of Provençal literature hitherto unknown. Yet a fourth volume is far advanced under the auspices of this active society. This is an edition of Raoul de Cambrai, based not only upon the MS. in the Bibliothèque Nationale, which was used, though carelessly, for the edition of 1840, but also upon numerous fragments of another MS. preserved in the handwriting of President Fauchet.

HERR H. ZIMMER, a privat-docent at Berlin, has been appointed Professor of Sanskrit and Comparative Philology in the University of Greifswald.

THE Society of Cymmrodorion, which assumes the old-fashioned appellation of "honourable," appears to be entering upon a career of renewed activity. About a month ago (ACADEMY, No. 464) we announced that it had taken in hand a bibliography of early Welsh printed books, under the editorship of the Rev. John Davies. We now learn that it is also proposed to establish a philological or Welsh dialect section, of which the primary aim will be to obtain phonetic representations of the pronunciation of words in the various existing dialects of the Welsh language. Twelve dialectal districts have already been marked out, for each of which a worker will be required to take down certain selected words in accordance with recognised phonetic rules.

THE Society for the Preservation of the Irish language has scarcely reached the scientific stage. Its chief object at present—and one by no means to be depreciated—is the encouragement of the study of Irish in the primary schools of the country. This it is effecting by the publication of cheap (and, we may add, good) Irish books, and by continually pressing the subject upon the attention of the people and the Government.

THE April number of the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society begins with a new instalment of Mr. Howorth's learned researches on the Northern frontagers of China, treating this time of the Khitai or Khitans. This is followed by an article by Mr. W. Simpson devoted to the identification of the site of the old Buddhist city of Nagarahara. It seems that Col. Yule had requested Mr. Simpson, when on his way to join the army in Afghanistan, to look out for the ruins of that once famous city, which had been visited and described by Hiouen-thsang; and there can be little doubt that Mr. Simpson has carried out his commission most successfully. Near the spot where M. V. de St.-Martin had hypothetically indicated the site of that vanished town, close to where the Sarkhar falls into the Kabul River, Mr. Simpson has discovered the actual ruins of Nagarahara. It is clear from his interesting paper that a regular exploration of the Jellalabad Valley would bring to light many important Buddhist antiquities. Mr. Nelson, in an essay on "Hindu Law at Madras," enforces the views which he has put forward on former occasions—viz., that so-called Hindu law was never administered in the kingdoms south of the Vindhya Mountains, and that its introduction into the Madras Presidency violates the understanding that the laws and customs of the native tribes should be respected by the English Government. The subject is extremely curious, and deserves a fuller treatment than it has hitherto received. The translations of the prose Dharmasūtras lately published by Dr. Bühler in The Sacred Books of the East may somewhat modify Mr. Nelson's views, which, however, in the main seem perfectly correct. Is not Mittekharā-Kār simply meant for Mitāksharā-Kāra—i.e., the author of the Mitāksharā? Sir T. E. Colebrooke's article on the "Proper Nouns of the Mohammedans" contains, like every contribution from that veteran writer, valuable materials carefully selected and well arranged. After these thoroughly business-like articles follows an apologetic paper from Prof. Monier Williams which seems strangely out of place in the transactions of a learned society. The Professor had brought some grave charges against Keshub Chunder Sen, which the members of the Brahmo Missionary Conference at Calcutta declared to be contrary to fact and called upon him to withdraw. The Professor pleads that some of his charges were made "in a lecture delivered before a private audience, and never intended for publication, though an imperfect report appeared in a local paper and found its way to India." He then proceeds to justify some of his strictures by quoting the report of a lecture likewise delivered before a private audience by Keshub Chunder Sen. In this case, however, the report was formally contradicted by those who were present at the lecture, and the name of the person who wrote the report was no secret; it was Pandit B. K. Goswami, the only missionary who seceded from Keshub Chunder Sen! The Professor then proceeds to quote some important statements from Miss Collet's Brahmo Year-Book; and, while modifying some of his charges against the great Indian reformer, he maintains that on the whole his strictures were just. At the end of this article there is a long note on a few remarks which occurred in our notice of the last number of the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society. The ACADEMY spoke kindly of the Professor's lecture, and the Professor himself says that it was an honour that his paper should have been noticed in the ACADEMY. We never thought that the strange inaccuracies we pointed out were anything but misprints or little pramādas.

THE first volume of a work long expected by all Sanskrit scholars in Europe has just been published—Ludwig's Commentary on the Rig-Veda. We owe to that eminent scholar a complete translation of the hymns of the Rig-Veda recognised as far the most scholar-like by all impartial judges. That was followed by a volume on the literature and religion of the Veda, and we now receive from the same indefatigable student the first instalment of his Commentary. Such a Commentary has long been wanted, because it is in a Commentary only that the reasons for the various and often very discordant renderings of Vedic poetry can be fully given. Prof. Ludwig's works mark a new departure in Vedic scholarship, and represent a reaction against the purely divinatory school of interpreters, and a return to a more careful, though always independent, study of the native Commentary of Sāyana. That Commentary, which was published for the first time by Prof. Max Müller, 1849-74, is out of print, and we hear that a new edition of the first volume is in preparation.

FINE ART.

DÜRER'S PORTRAIT OF HIMSELF.

MOST persons interested in Dürer-history will remember Goethe's description (quoted in all biographies) of a portrait of Dürer painted by himself in the year 1493, when he was twenty-two years old. This portrait, when Goethe saw it, was in the possession of Herr Hof-rath Bereis, but since that time no one has known what has become of it. Dr. Thausing, it is true, describes a portrait he had seen as being the one referred to by Goethe, "much restored," but his description and that given by Goethe do not agree in several important particulars. For instance, Goethe expressly states that this "priceless picture, worthy of being set by the lover of art in a golden frame and treasured in the choicest cabinet," was painted on a "thin panel;" whereas the one seen by Dr. Thausing had been painted on parchment and transferred from that to linen. Moreover, above the head of this one was written an old German distich, which does not appear to have been on the portrait possessed by Herr Bereis. Whether from Goethe's eloquent description, or from the desire of knowing what Dürer was like as a handsome young student of twenty-two, this portrait has always excited the attention of Dürer's biographers, some of them supposing that it was the one sent in exchange to Raphael, and others that it was sent home by Dürer during his Wanderjahre as a present to Agnes Frey. The sprig of blue eryngium, called by Germans Mannstreu, held in his hand in this portrait favours the latter view.

However this may be, it would be pleasant to know that this much-discussed portrait was still in existence to speak for itself; and this is what is now asserted by several German authorities. In a pamphlet or prospectus issued by the Leipzig publisher, Herr Haessel, it is stated that the picture passed by inheritance from the Bereis family to someone who did not know its history but esteemed it only as a portrait by Dürer. A short time ago it was brought by Herr Haessel to Leipzig, and was seen by Dr. Lütcke, Director of the Town Museum, who immediately recognised it, among a number of old pictures of doubtful value, as the portrait of 1493 described by Goethe. Since then Dr. Lütcke's opinion has been confirmed by several good judges, so that there really seems reason for believing that this long-hidden portrait has been brought to light. Further scientific evidence is, however, promised, and we must certainly wait for this before giving entire credence to Herr Haessel's assertions. He has the picture for sale, and the pamphlet he puts forth must, therefore, be regarded more in the light of an advertisement than a criticism. There seems no cause at present, however, for doubting his good faith. MARY M. HEATON.

ART NOTES FROM FLORENCE.

PROGRESS is making with the subscription for the restoration of the Bigallo. The German colony in Florence, headed by an architect, have come forward. There is no statement as yet of what is proposed to be done. The lower part, with its chapel, was very well restored some years ago; and so rapid is the effect of the climate and dust of Florence that it already looks ancient work, at all events in colour. Florence is paved with stone from the quarries near Fiesole, which grinds so quickly under the action of wheels that the streets are muddy in wet weather, and the public buildings are befouled with dust mixed with many impurities. Hence the injury to all outdoor sculpture, the ruin of frescoes, and the generally dingy look of buildings in Florence.

A picture by Gentile da Fabriano has been added to the collection in the Florence Gallery. It came from the sacristy of S. Niccolò ol' Arno, the church in the belfry of which, it is said, Michelangelo found a refuge after the siege of Florence. This picture is divided into four compartments, in each of which is painted a figure nearly life-size. The first is St. Mary Magdalene, the second St. Nicholas of Bari, the third St. John Baptist, the fourth St. George. It is historically known that in the centre there was a figure of the Virgin, but this has disappeared. This picture has been most skilfully repaired by Prof. Mazzanti, whose knowledge, especially of the Tuscan masters, is as profound as his skill in conscientious restoration is unsurpassed.

He has also repaired the two well-known pictures by Ridolfo Ghirlandajo, which are in the great Tuscan room of the gallery. Unhappily, the two prevalent winds at Florence—the maestrale and the scirocco—inflict serious damage on old pictures. The first dries and shrinks the panels, the second expands the wood; and these alternating processes blister the paint and even make it fall off in flakes. Besides, the panels are so perforated with worms that they become spongy. To prevent the pictures altogether disappearing, repair is needful. We all know how destructively this was done in former years, but now all that reverence and skill can do is effected.

Another picture also repaired by Prof. Mazzanti is by Jacopo Chimenti da Empoli, which has suffered like those by Ridolfo Ghirlandajo. It represents the Orphans presented to St. Ivo. It is now again in its place.

Double windows are being fixed in the long galleries, and the disastrous effects of the prevalent winds may be modified, but it is well known that, unhappily, the most precious pictures are more or less suffering. Nor is it very clear how they can best be preserved, unless by their transfer to canvas, which is not desirable.

The Director of the galleries, the Commendatore Chivacci, who has held his office for a brief period, has died of typhoid fever. During his tenure he has done much for the reform of the galleries, which were previously managed deplorably. The important post was offered, with an increase of salary, to the President of the Academy of Fine Art at Siena, but he has declined. Such an office requires not only an accomplished judge of art, but also a firm and able administrator, and one fit to rule the officials with as much decision as fairness and sense of duty.

C. HEATH WILSON.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE exhibition of pictures and many objects of art which we spoke of some weeks ago as being organised for the benefit of an East End population has now been opened in three large rooms attached to the church of St. Jude, Whitechapel, and is worth a visit even from many persons who may be familiar with West End exhibitions. We are not of opinion that the paintings form by any means the strongest portion of the show. Mr. Watts is largely represented, but we could have wished him represented by his more popular designs. Neither in the East nor in the West is great enthusiasm excited by his dignified allegories, such as the design which he entitles To All the Churches. Significance these designs undoubtedly have, and many Academical virtues to boot, but we doubt if to any considerable extent they can touch or charm. Mr. Burne Jones is more happily represented. The Sea Nymph of last winter's Grosvenor Gallery is now at the East End; and likewise the yet more captivating Wood Nymph, her pale colours and delicate form seen against a background of lovely leafage. This is a picture which gains greatly on acquaintance. Mr. Herbert Herkomer is strongly represented, some of the best water-colour drawings he has ever executed—and some of the most careful and delicate—being displayed. Sir Frederick Leighton is chiefly represented by sketches. His elaborate pencil drawing of a lemon-tree at Capri shows in perfection his delicate qualities of draughtsmanship. The exhibition is rich in embroideries of the East and of Europe; there is much ancient work, and one or two faultless specimens of modern art-needlework. Rhodian platters and eighteenth-century china meet in the show cases. Messrs. Morris and Co. make a loan of rugs, and Mr. De Morgan furnishes some of his finest pieces of lustrous ware. The exhibition can only remain open a day or two longer.

THE exhibition of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours will be opened to the public on Monday, April 25. The private view is to-day. The Crown Princess of Germany, who was last year elected a member of the Institute, has sent for exhibition the study of a head wearing a red hood.

WE understand that Miss Catherine Frere's exhibition of drawings, &c., which is now being held at the Librairie de l'Art, 134 New Bond Street, for the benefit of the South African Relief Fund, will probably be closed at the end of this month.

WE learn from the Scotsman that the Scottish Society of Antiquaries have recently had a notable windfall. In 1872 they acquired from the Faculty of Advocates a collection of coins, contained in an old cabinet. For this cabinet the sum of £50 was paid, and it has now been sold for no less than £3,500. It turns out to be a remarkable example of art workmanship of the Louis Quinze period. In size it is about seven feet high by three feet wide. Its shape is simple, but graceful. Its material is described as some fine-grained wood, engrained with various other woods. Its attraction, and its factitious value, are due to the designs wrought upon its face in brass, which are modelled with great spirit and the highest finish. In the centre, concealing the lock, is a group of three nude boys apparently engaged in coining Roman denarii. On each side are panels, with medallion portraits of the twelve Caesars. Covering the lock of a drawer below is an elephant's head, grouped with helmet, shield, and other emblems of war. Lower down, above each leg of the cabinet, there is a helmeted bust of Roman type, tapering off into scroll ornament. The cabinet, it is said, has been purchased for the Continent; while the Scottish Antiquaries will use the purchase-money "for the purchase of objects illustrative of the unwritten history of Scotland." It may be as well, perhaps, to add that the Lords of the Treasury would not allow the society to share the unexpected profit on the resale with the original vendors, the Faculty of Advocates.

MR. THOMAS KERSLAKE, the bookseller and indefatigable antiquary of Bristol, has prepared a little book to re-assert the opinion about the "Primaeva British Metropolis of Caer Pensaulcoit" which he first published about four years ago. Since then the Somersetshire Archaeological Society appointed a committee to investigate the subject, with Prof. Boyd Dawkins and Gen. Lane-Fox as assessors. Their reports appeared in two numbers of the Proceedings of the society for 1878 and 1880. Mr. Kerslake contends that their decision is unsatisfactory, on the ground that they were "misdirected into a side-issue." He has, therefore, written in reply the little book referred to above, which he will be happy to send to all those interested in the archaeology of South-western England.

THE department of antiquities in the Bibliothèque Nationale has lately received the interesting addition of what is known as Dagobert's Chair, in which all the Carolingian kings of France were seated when they received the oaths of their vassals. This historic chair remained for many years in the Abbey of Saint-Denis, but, after the suppression of that abbey and the general pillage of the monasteries in 1793, it passed to the Palais Royal. Napoleon I. borrowed it for the purpose of distributing the first decorations of the Légion d'Honneur at his camp at Boulogne in 1804, but it does not appear to have been used by any of the later French Sovereigns. The chair is of bronze, gilded in places, and decorated with the heads of panthers. It has lately been made over to the Bibliothèque Nationale, together with a number of other antiquities—arms, coins, &c.—formerly stored in the Château de Saint-Germain.

GIGANTIC dimensions are not usually associated with our conception of Japanese art. But we learn from the Japan Weekly Mail that the porcelain dealers of Ozaka have just presented to the shrine of Sumiyoshi at Sakai a pair of lamp pedestals, made of white porcelain with blue under the glaze, no less than twenty-three feet in height. They are said to be without flaw from top to bottom, and it may well be believed that they are the biggest specimens of pottery in the world.

WE hear that Prof. Erasmus Wilson's forthcoming work on Egyptian history is to be published by Messrs. C. Kegan Paul and Co.

M. EDOUARD NAVILLE has reprinted in pamphlet form his two excellent papers contributed to the Lyons Congress of Orientalists (1878), entitled Un Ostrakon égyptien et Les quatre Steles orientées du Musée de Marseilles.

MARIETTE-PASHA, it is said, has left an archaeological will, or paper of instructions and suggestions in regard of future excavations, for the benefit of his successor.

THE bronze bust of the Florentine citizen, Bindo Altoviti, by Benvenuto Cellini, which Michelangelo declared to be one of the most beautiful things he had ever beheld, has, after long oblivion, been recognised by the Commission for the Preservation of Historic Monuments in Italy. It was found in the Palazzo Altoviti at Rome, and has been bought by the Commission.

IN consequence of the decision lately formed by M. Turquet, the French Under-Secretary for Fine Arts, all the pictures recently acquired by the French nation are now being exhibited together in the old Musée des Souverains at the Louvre. The most important of these pictures is The Prodigal Son by Jan Steen, said to be a splendid work of that inimitable master. Another Netherland painter, Dirk Hals, is also present; and one French painter of note, Théodore Rousseau, by whom is exhibited Le Dormeur, bought at the Edwards sale. The chief feature of the present exhibition, however, is five paintings by English masters recently bought by that most flourishing of art journals, L'Art, and presented by it to the Louvre. These paintings are The Glebe Farm, by Constable; The Drinking-Place, by Mulready; The Hall, by George Morland; a Portrait, by John Opie; and The Brother and Sister, by Sir William Beechey.

THE Paris Cercle de la Librairie is arranging for an exhibition of engravings, which will be opened on May 20.

THE Russian Archaeological Institute intends publishing, as a memorial of the late Czar Alexander II., an account of the various antiquarian researches conducted in Russia during his reign. M. Cherniavski has already compiled an index to about fifteen thousand articles and publications relating to the various branches of the science of archaeology, giving in special cases a summary of contents. M. Danilov has made a collection of Government orders referring to the maintenance and examination of Russian antiquities which have been issued since the time of Peter the Great; and M. Gavrilov has made a supplementary collection of similar orders emanating from the Holy Synod during the period from 1855 to 1880. This extensive work will also include an index to articles dealing with ecclesiastical antiquities, and an account of all compositions relating to Russian heraldry.

WE take the following from the Times :—

"In the course of the excavations necessary for the reconstruction of the baths at Dürkheim, in the Palatinate, the workmen have come upon an enormous iron chest containing the celebrated treasure of the Abbey of Limbourg, which disappeared after the siege of the abbey in 1504. The treasure is supposed to have been put in safety by the abbot out of fear of an attack. It is composed of a large number of vases and other objects of gold and silver, of precious stones, and a host of coins of the fifteenth century. There are also a number of articles for worship, dating from the commencement of the abbey, which was constructed by Conrad the Salic, and his wife, Queen Gisela, and opened in 1030. By the law of the Palatinate, half the treasure goes to the State and half to the French company which has the working of the baths."

A LARGE sale will shortly take place of Gustave Courbet's works. As many as sixty of his pictures belonging to the Courbet family have been sent to Paris to be disposed of by public auction. The celebrated Enterrement d'Ornans and the Grands Combats de Cerfs are among the number.

At a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, M. François Lenormant read an elaborate paper upon the Roman mints during the first three centuries of our era. The first part of this paper was devoted to distinguishing the Senatorial mint, which coined copper money only, from the Imperial mint, which coined gold and silver. The former, situated on the Capitol in the Temple of Juno Moneta, preserved its independence from Republican times until after the reign of Nero. In the reign of Caracalla, if not earlier, it was removed to the Gardens of Nero, where the Imperial mint had been placed some years earlier; and finally, under Aurelian, the two were united under the same management. The second part of M. Lenormant's paper aimed at showing, contrary to the commonly received opinion, that local mints existed in the provinces even before the third century. The principal of these were situated at Lyons, Antioch, and Siscia in Pannonia.

THE STAGE.

THE Easter changes at the theatres have been less important than usual, only one new play of any moment having been produced, and attention having chiefly been given to a revival on Saturday night at the Lyceum. The Belle's Stratagem—practically the only work by which Mrs. Cowley is known—has, in spite of a fantastic and unreal plot, held the stage for several generations; not, indeed, as a play that could hope to be performed for a long succession of nights before eager and excited audiences, but as a play welcome by reason of some curious portrayal of old-world manners, by reason of not unlively dialogue, and, most of all, by reason of its affording to a leading actress the opportunity of appearing in a part in which skill is bound to be employed, and in which skill must tell. Fifteen years ago that graceful artist, Miss Herbert—then in the full tide of her success—thought fit to revive the piece at the St. James's Theatre, and her Letitia Hardy was found to be acceptable. An actress of the temperament of Miss Ellen Terry—presumably more mercurial than the elder comedian—had, then, good reason to hope to impress and entertain the public by one of those exhibitions of high spirits of which the best Ophelia of the day is perfectly capable. And, indeed, the lightness of Miss Terry's vivacity did on Saturday night, in spite of nervousness, stand her in good stead. Mr. Irving's Doricourt is not a new performance. It has been given twice before—first at the St. James's during Miss Herbert's revival, and then at the Lyceum itself a very few years ago. Doricourt, with his airs and graces, and his tricks to accomplish his ends, is one of those characters which Mr. Irving delights from time to time to play, to show that a thousand performances of The Bells and of tragedy have not extinguished his sense of humour or dulled his capacity to amuse. But, beyond the fact that it shows this, we are not aware that the Doricourt of this eminent actor is a part by which he could be long remembered. His performance is wonderfully complete, however. What is lacking is lacking to the part, and not to the comedian.

Arkwright's Wife, one of the best of the many dramas with which the late Mr. Tom Taylor endowed the stage, has been revived at the Imperial Theatre. It will be in the recollection of some of our readers that it was first produced seven or eight years ago at the Globe Theatre, with Mr. Charles Kelly in the part of the inventor-hero and Miss Helen Barry in the part of the heroine. Mr. Kelly does not now take part in the performance; and by this the performance greatly loses, for anything more quietly realistic than his acting as the man whose work is wrecked by his wife it would not be easy to find on our contemporary stage. Mr. Kelly was very little known to the London public when he created this character, and the lapse of time since then has only shown that he could play other parts as well—nothing better. Nor has Miss Barry, who resumes her old character—and for whom, indeed, the revival presumably takes place—ever shown, to our thinking, any material advance upon that first prominent performance of hers. Her acting in the part has always been unequal, but at times it has been strong. The play itself is one of those somewhat obvious moralities which Mr. Taylor was fond of presenting at the theatre, and which, to tell truth, no one presented more shrewdly. His artistic moralities had an air of conviction which will always be a powerful element in stage success. His work in Arkwright's Wife was not wholly intellectual. There was emotion in it. It moved people.

THE new play by Mr. Jones, adapted from a novel which has been a good deal read, was brought out on Saturday at Sadler's Wells. We shall next week hope to speak of it more fully; meantime, it suffices to say that in the writer of the play we see one of only two or three dramatists who have lately shown signs of promise. Living chiefly, we believe, in the country, Mr. Jones has yet found occasion to study closely the conditions of dramatic writing—those practical considerations which the ambitious poetaster and the compiler of smart dialogue generally unite to neglect. Moreover, Mr. Jones has known how to fit Miss Bateman with one of those lachrymose characters in which the public demands to see her. Miss Bateman's appearance on the stage as a well-treated wife or a happy mother would be gravely resented by her audience.

MR. CHARLES KELLY has organised, for an early tour in the country, an efficient company, which will perform Mr. Savile Clarke's successful adaptation of Mr. Moy Thomas's well-known novel, A Fight for Life.

To close students of Shakspeare's text, the performance last Saturday of the first sketch of his Hamlet, contained in the Quarto of 1603, was full of interest. It is, we suppose, the first time since 1603 that this first sketch has been on the boards in England, and that an audience has had a chance of testing the value, as an acting play, of "The Tragical Historie of Hamlet, as it hath bene diuerse times acted by his Highnesse seruants in the Cittie of London, as also in the two Vniuersities of Cambridge and Oxford and else-where," before Queen Elizabeth's death. Subject, as the performance was, to the unavoidable drawback of amateur acting, it yet established, we think, the soundness of the opinion expressed by the actor-critics—Eduard and Otto Devrient—that the First Quarto is an excellent acting play, and one better constructed, dramatically, than the later and enlarged Second Quarto of 1604, which no manager now dares to play in its entirety on account of the drag of its great length. The First Quarto play "went" admirably, and was finished in the orthodox two hours and a-half of Shakspeare's time. Another point of Devrient's that the performance justified was that the right place for the pathetic interview between Hamlet and Ophelia is directly after Polonius's suggestion that the meeting should take place, and not, as in the Second Quarto, after Polonius has himself tried to worm out Hamlet's secret, and the interview with the players has taken place. On the "alternating fashion of the play" in its revised version, and the difficulties that this blowing hot and cold creates for the actor, the Devrient's remarks (Furness, ii. 347) are most instructive. The impression that the entire performance left on the hearer was that Quarto 1 was distinctly the representation—through whatever clouds—of a whole, a complete play that could and did well stand alone; and that this play was not merely a distorted version of the authorised text of Quarto 2 when completed for the Folio, but a drama differently motivated, in which revenge was more prominent, the Queen clear of guilt, and Laertes less treacherous—a play which might well have been revised into that contained in Quarto 2. Of course much of the beauty and profundity of the later version was absent; familiar passages were looked for, but did not appear; the strangeness and baldness of some of the dialogue raised the doubt whether it could even represent Shakspeare's work; but the dramatic action was always present, with all the main outlines of Shakspeare's creation. The performance itself was certainly up to the average of amateur performances of a high class. The only failure was the Ghost. The honours of the afternoon rested with Ophelia, played with genuine feeling and a good conception of the character by a young lady who called herself Helen Maude. Next came the Gravedigger and Corambis (Polonius), Mr. G. Battiscombe and Mr. F. J. Lowe, both quite at home on the stage, and acting with great humour and intelligence. Hamlet was personated by Mr. W. Poel, who took on himself the burden of getting-up the play, training the minor actors, and superintending every detail. He looked the pale and thoughtful student to the life, and in some passages moved his audience to warm applause; but his voice and he were hardly up to the requirements of his part—who, indeed, is?—and his emphasis was sometimes faulty. Mr. Hallward as Horatio, Mr. H. Stacke as the King, and Miss Zoe Bland as the Queen played their characters well; and on the whole the company may be congratulated on a satisfactory performance of an entirely untried and very difficult play, for which they have earned the gratitude of every real Shakspeare student who saw it.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Requiem for Solo Voices, Chorus, and Orchestra (Op. 70). By Th. Gony. (Leipzig: Breitkopf & Härtel.) This distinguished French composer is already favourably known in this country by a symphony in F performed a few weeks ago at M. Lamoureux' first concert. The Requiem is the work of an able and accomplished musician. The music contains a great variety of rhythm and modulation, and a constant flow of pleasing melody. Yet at times, owing to a certain restlessness and striving after effect, the dignity and solemnity necessary to such a composition are wanting. The quaver figure at the opening of the "Dies Irae" reminds one of the corresponding movement in Cherubini's Requiem in C minor. As far as we can judge from piano score, the "Introitus," the "Recordare," and the "Confutatis" appear to us the best numbers of the work.

1st Quatuor en Sol (Op. 21). 2^d Quatuor (Op. 22). Par C. E. Stephens. (Mayence: Schott.) Prizes were adjudged by Trinity College, London, to both these compositions in 1879—to the first the second prize, to the second the first. It would not be fair to find fault with these quartets because they are not remarkable for originality or novelty, for the composer's chief aim must have been to show that he understood the laws of composition and that he was master of form. All his thoughts are clearly expressed, and the workmanship throughout shows the hand of a skilled and well-trained musician. It is easy to say of a work that it is in the Haydn-Mozart style, but to imitate masterpieces of soberness and simplicity is an arduous and difficult task. The second quartet is decidedly the better of the two; the themes are more flowing and the developments richer and more interesting than those of the first.

Harold Glynde: Cantata. Written by Ed. Foksett, with Music by John Stainer, C. S. Jekyll, G. C. Martin, &c. (F. Pitman.) Only portions of the cantata are set to music in the form of solos, duets, trios, part-songs, and choruses. All the music is simple in character, well written, and very pleasing. The accompaniment to No. 3 is very difficult, not to say impossible, to play. It is not an independent part—only the voice parts written in compressed score.

Second Set of Ten Trios for Female Voices. Composed by Carl Reinecke. (Novello, Ewer & Co.) This charming and clever set of trios will form a welcome addition to the somewhat limited stock of pieces for female voices. They are all in canon form, some in two parts with free third part, others three-part canons. The author further displays his ingenuity by using various forms of imitation, by inversion, augmentation, and even diminution. All the numbers flow smoothly and easily, and there is not a trace of dryness or pedantry.

Kings and Queens; Would you ask my Heart? &c.: Six Part-Songs. By C. Pinuti. (Novello, Ewer & Co.) Easy, pleasing, but not very original.

The Choral Symphony. Pianoforte Arrangement by Berthold Tours. (Novello, Ewer & Co.) A simple and effective transcription of Beethoven's great work. The orchestral indications add greatly to the value and interest of the arrangement. It forms an excellent substitute for those who are unable to read or to procure a full score.

The Organist's Quarterly Journal. Parts 48, 49, 50. (Novello, Ewer & Co.) Part 48 contains a very dry fugue which must surely have been composed as an exercise. It is well written, however, with the exception of the last page, which is weak. The three numbers contain pieces of the average character and interest.

Lyra Studentium. Pianoforte Pieces, Edited, Revised, and Fingered by Frederick Westlake. (Ashdown & Parry.) An excellent and varied selection of pieces from the works of Bach, Handel, Haydn, Hummel, &c. Generally speaking, the fingering is good.

Dictionary of Music and Musicians. Part 13. Edited by G. Grove, D.C.L. (Macmillan.) This part takes us as far as the name Richter. It contains many important articles—Polyphonia, Purcell, Raff (with a catalogue of his numerous works), Rameau, Requiem, &c. In an interesting article on Programme-music, the writer "F. C." states that in only two instances (the Pastoral and Battle symphonies) has Beethoven described the picture in his mind after which he worked. Did he not, however, give The Tempest as the picture of the Appassionata and the D minor sonatas? Again, the writer complains that musicians invent imaginary "programmes" where composers have mentioned none, and quotes as an instance Weber's Concertstück. Yet, according to Sir J. Benedict, Weber himself gave the programme or picture of that piece.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

THE conduct of the Musical Union, discharged for thirty-six years by Prof. Ella, passes into the hands of M. Lasserre. M. Lasserre is known not only as a prince of violoncellists, but as an able chef-d'orchestre, and he brings with him Royal patronage and the support of many noble and wealthy subscribers. He has been fortunate in engaging a strong caste—Rubinstein, Auer, Ritter, and others being promised. The first matinée, at St. James's Hall on April 26, at a quarter-past three, is looked forward to with much interest.

In 1 vol., 8vo, pp. 416, price 12s.

Dedicated by permission to his Grace the ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

THE ART OF PREACHING, and the COMPOSITION OF SERMONS; with an Introductory Essay on the Present Position and Influence of the Pulpit of the Church of England. By the Rev. HENRY BURGESS, LL.D., Vicar of St. Andrew's, Whitley. It is written throughout on the principles of the English Ordinal, is the result of long experience, and is free from party bias. The Chapters on Original and Borrowed Sermons, on the Material Pulpit and its Surroundings, and on the Influence of Home Life on the Sermons of the Clergy treat of some important ecclesiastical reforms.

London: HAMILTON, ADAMS, & Co., Paternoster-row; MITCHELL & HUGHES, 140, Wardour-street, W.

This day is published, super royal 4to, with Six Plates, 16s. 6d.

A MEMOIR of the ECHINODERMATA of the ARCTIC SEA to the WEST of GREENLAND. By P. MARTIN DUNCAN, M.B. (London), F.R.S., F.L.S., F.G.S., &c., and W. PERCY SLADEN, F.G.S., F.L.S., &c.

London: JOHN VAN VOORST, 1, Paternoster-row.

A LITTLE GEM by GEORGE CRUIK-SHANK, 4s. by 3s., showing the Effects of Industry and Idleness.

"Keep within compass, and you will be sure To avoid many evils that others endure."

Price Sixpence.

London: WILLIAM TROO, Paucras-lane, Cheap-side, E.C.

Fcap. 8vo, 128 pp., price 1s. 6d.

A MEDLEY of NOTABLES: What they said and What others said of them. By G. F. S.

"This little book contains on one side of each page a quotation from some well-known author, and on the other side a brief notice of that author by other authors. If we turn to Shakespeare, for instance, we find quoted Dame Quickly's description of Falstaff's death, while there are given notices of Shakespeare by Keats, Ben Jonson, Browning, Barnefield, and by some anonymous writer who likely enough is the editor. From him we learn that 'Shakespeare went before all men, and stands in the array of human intellect like the sun in the system, single and unapproached.'"—Saturday Review.

Published at 21, Castle-street, Holborn.

SHEPHERD BROTHERS, Art Commission Agents and Picture Dealers, Nottingham, beg to announce that their LONDON PICTURE GALLERY is NOW OPEN, at 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W. (opposite Messrs. Christie & Manson's).—Choice Works ON VIEW by Henry Dawson, senr., T. S. Cooper, R.A., E. J. Neumann, L. J. Pott, Ernest Burton, Marcus Stone, A.R.A., Noble, Stark, Jutsum, &c.

RARE ETCHINGS, ENGRAVINGS, and DRAWINGS by the most esteemed OLD MASTERS may be obtained at GEORGE LOVE'S OLD PRINT SHOP, 81, BUNHILL ROW, LONDON. The Engravings, &c., are in fine condition, and have formed portions of the most celebrated collections. A Catalogue of a small portion of the Stock will be sent on receipt of two penny postage stamps.

* Established above 60 years.

NEW BOND STREET.

The very valuable and important Corner Premises, 47, New Bond-street, end of 60, Maddox-street, together with the Hanover Gallery, a finely proportioned saloon, so skillfully constructed with regard to the perfect lighting of the wall-space as to be considered by artists and connoisseurs one of the best exhibition rooms in London. The property includes two excellent modern shops, with four upper floors, comprising several sets of first-class residential chambers, and a housekeeper's offices in the basement. The gallery has a handsome entrance from Maddox-street, and is on the ground-floor level. Its dimensions are about 92ft. by 26ft., and its capital position in the art centre of the Metropolis renders it equally eligible for the public exhibition or private sale of pictures. Under the gallery, and with a separate entrance from Maddox-street, is a large dry warehouse, about 62ft. by 26ft. 6in., which could be readily converted into superior wine cellars. There is a second picture gallery about 27ft. by 16ft. 9in.; also two offices and other conveniences. The shops and chambers are let at rents amounting to £194 15s. per annum. Possession of the Hanover Gallery, with the warehouse, &c., may be had if desired, but there is an offer to take a lease of these portions for seven, fourteen, or twenty-one years, at £1,225 per annum. The property is held under two leases for long, unexpired terms, at moderate ground-rents.

MESSRS. DEBENHAM, TEWSON, FARMER, & BRIDGEWATER will SELL the above-described highly improved HOUSEHOLD PROPERTY, at the MART, on TUESDAY, MAY 17, at 2, in One Lot—Particulars of Messrs. TEWSON, BAWTREE, & STEVENS, Solicitors, 25, Old Jewry, and Witham, Essex; and of the AUCTIONEERS, 20, Chancery-lane.

WORKS OF POLITICAL INTEREST

ISSUED BY

Her Majesty's Publishers.

I.
THE CORRESPONDENCE of PRINCE TALLEYRAND and LOUIS XVIII. during the CONGRESS of VIENNA. In 2 vols., demy 8vo. [Just ready.]

II.
THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of PRINCE METTERNICH: 1773—1829. Edited by his Son, PRINCE RICHARD METTERNICH. In 4 vols., demy 8vo, 72s.

III.
LORD BEACONSFIELD: a Critical Study based upon his Works. By Professor GEORG BRANDES. In demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

IV.
THE LIFE of LORD PALMERSTON, with Selections from his Diaries and Correspondence. By the Hon. EVELYN ASHLEY, M.P. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

V.
THE POLITICAL DIARY of LORD ELLENBOROUGH: kept while in Office, 1828—1830. Edited by LORD COLCHESTER. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

VI.
THE HISTORY of LORD ELLENBOROUGH'S ADMINISTRATION in INDIA. Containing his Letters to Her Majesty the Queen, and Correspondence with the Duke of Wellington, &c. Edited by LORD COLCHESTER. In demy 8vo, 18s.

VII.
SIR ROBERT PEEL: a Memoir. By the Right Hon. LORD DALLING AND BELWER. In demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

VIII.
MEMOIRS of EARL SPENCER (Lord ALTHORP). By the late Sir DENIS LE MARCHANT Bart. In demy 8vo, 16s.

IX.
THE LIFE of CHARLES JAMES FOX. By EARL RUSSELL. In 3 vols., crown 8vo, 33s.

X.
A MEMOIR of CHARLES the TWELFTH. By His Majesty the KING of SWEDEN and NORWAY. Translated, with His Majesty's permission, by GEORGE ALFRED, late Her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Stockholm. In royal 8vo, with Two Illustrations, 12s.

XI.
THE LIVES of the PRINCES of the HOUSE of CONDE. By the Duc d'AUJALE. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Two Portraits, 30s.

XII.
THE LIFE of OLIVER CROMWELL. By M. GUIZOT. Translated by ANDREW SCORLE. In crown 8vo, with Four Portraits, 6s.

XIII.
THE LIFE of MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS. By M. MIONET. Translated by ANDREW SCORLE. In crown 8vo, with Two Portraits, 6s.

XIV.
THE HISTORY of the FRENCH REVOLUTION. By ADOLPHE THIERS. Translated by FREDERICK SHORER. With Forty-one fine Engravings upon Steel by Greatbach. New Edition. In 5 vols., demy 8vo, 36s. [Just ready.]

LONDON:

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

13, Great Marlborough-street.

HURST & BLACKETT'S NEW WORKS.

CATHARINE of ARAGON, and the SOURCES of the ENGLISH REFORMATION. Edited from the French of ALBERT DU BOIS, with Notes, by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE, Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe," &c. 2 vols., 21s.

PLAYS, PLAYERS, and PLAY-HOUSES, at HOME and ABROAD; with Anecdotes of the Drama and the Stage. By LORD WILLIAM PITT LENOX. 2 vols., 21s.
"These volumes are full of good stories and anecdotes, told with remarkable spirit, and will be a treasure to old playgoers."—Grobian.
"A vast amount of curious information and anecdotes has been gathered together in these pleasant, gossiping volumes."—Sunday Times.

OUR HOLIDAY in the EAST. By Mrs. GEORGE SUMNER. Edited by the Rev. G. H. SUMNER, Hon. Canon of Winchester. 8vo, with Illustrations, 15s.
"This is a sparkling and very charming record. It will be read for its own intrinsic merits as well as for the undying interest in the Holy Land."—British Quarterly Review.

MY JOURNEY ROUND the WORLD. By Capt. S. H. JONES PARRY. 2 vols., 21s.
"A very pleasant book, well worth reading."—Spectator.

LODGE'S PEERAGE and BARONETAGE for 1881. Under the Especial Patronage of HER MAJESTY. Corrected by the Nobility. Fiftieth Edition. 1 vol., with the Arms beautifully engraved, 31s. 6d., bound, gilt edges.
"A work of great value. It is the most faithful record we possess of the aristocracy of the day."—Post.

THE NEW NOVELS.
HARRY JOSCELYN. By Mrs. OLIPHANT, Author of "Chronicles of Carlingford," &c. 3 vols.

LOVE-KNOTS. By the Author of "UNSLA'S LOVE STORY," &c. 3 vols.
"There is a good deal of interest in these cleverly knitted 'Love-knots.'"—Athenaeum.
"A pleasant, healthy novel, full of life and spirit. It will secure a large number of readers."—Sunday Times.

BESIDE the RIVER. By Mrs. MACQUOID, Author of "Patty," &c. 3 vols.
"We are inclined to rank this as the best of Mrs. Macquoid's novels; her stories are always entertaining."—Academy.
"A bright and pleasant story."—St. James's Gazette.

HIS LITTLE MOTHER. By the AUTHOR of "JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN." 1 vol., 10s. 6d.
"This is an interesting book, written in a pleasant manner, and full of shrewd observation and kindly feeling. It is a book that will be read with interest, and that cannot be lightly forgotten."—St. James's Gazette.

HER DESERTS. By Mrs. ALEXANDER FRASER. SECOND EDITION. 3 vols.
"A striking novel, which cannot fail to engross all readers, and will probably be one of the most attractive of its author's works."—Post.

IDONEA. By Anne Beale, Author of "Fay Arlington," &c. 3 vols.

SYDNEY. By Georgiana M. Craik, Author of "Dorcas," "Anne Warwick," &c. 3 vols. [Next week.]

CHEAP EDITIONS.
Each Work complete in 1 vol., price 6s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound in cloth.
Sir J. GIBBERT, MILLAIS, HUNT, LEACH, POYNTER, FOSTER, TENNIEL, SANDYS, E. HUGHES, SAMBOURNE, &c.
HURST & BLACKETT'S
STANDARD LIBRARY
OF CHEAP EDITIONS OF POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

Sam Slick's Nature and Human Nature.	Sam Slick's American Humour.
John Halifax, Gentleman.	Barbara's History. By Amelia B. Edwards.
The Crescent and the Cross. By Eliot Warburton.	Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Nathalie. By Miss Kavanagh.	No Church.
A Woman's Thoughts about a Woman. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	Christian's Mistake. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Adam Graeme. By Mrs. Oliphant.	Alec Forbes. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
Sam Slick's Wise Saws.	Agnes. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Cardinal Wiseman's Pope.	A Noble Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
A Life for a Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	Dixon's New America.
Leigh Hunt's Old Court Suburb.	Robert Falconer. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
Margaret and her Bridesmaids.	The Woman's Kingdom. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Sam Slick's Old Judge.	Annals of an Eventful Life. By G. W. Dasent, D.C.L.
Darien. By Eliot Warburton.	David Elginbrod. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
Sir B. Burke's Family Romance.	A Brave Lad. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
The Laird of Norlaw. By Mrs. Oliphant.	Hannab. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
The Englishwoman in Italy.	Sam Slick's Americans at Home.
Nothing New. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	The Unkind Word. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Frederic's Life of Jeanne d'Albret.	A Rose in June. By Mrs. Oliphant.
The Valley of a Hundred Fires.	My Little Lady. By E. Frances Poynter.
Barke's Romance of the Forum.	Picche, Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Adèle. By Miss Kavanagh.	Life of Marie Antoinette. By Professor C. D. Yonge.
Studies from Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	Sir Gibbie. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
Grandmother's Money.	Young Mrs. Jardine. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Jackfreese's Book about Doctors.
Mistress and Maid. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Les Misérables. By Victor Hugo.
St. Olave's.
Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.

THE NEW VOLUME (APRIL 29)

WILL COMPRISE

LORD BRACKENBURY.

By AMELIA B. EDWARDS,
Author of "Barbara's History," &c.

NEW WORK BY DR. E. A. FREEMAN.

In 2 vols., 8vo, with Sixty-five Maps, price 31s. 6d., cloth.

THE HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY of EUROPE.

By EDWARD A. FREEMAN, D.C.L., LL.D.,

Author of "History of the Norman Conquest of England," &c.

The Times, April 12:—"However extensive the reader's knowledge of history, he will find that this work gives it definiteness and precision; however keen his interest in geography, its illustration by means of history and politics will add to it new life and substance for him. The volume of maps which accompanies it begins with Homeric Greece and ends with the Treaty of Berlin, and the text itself traces the changes that have taken place in the political geography of Europe between the two periods. To do this in less than six hundred pages is a signal feat of compression and learning. The work is invaluable for reference and full of instruction, whether to the historical student, the geographer, the politician, or even to the diplomatist. It is full of instruction and even of entertainment of the most varied kind. The maps are certainly admirably adapted for the purposes aimed at. We cannot but congratulate Mr. Freeman and his readers on the successful accomplishment of so solid a piece of work."

LONDON: LONGMANS & CO.

PROF. ROBERTSON SMITH.

Just ready, in crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

THE OLD TESTAMENT in the JEWISH CHURCH.

By W. ROBERTSON SMITH, M.A.,

Professor of Hebrew and Exegesis of the Old Testament, Free Church College, Aberdeen.

EDINBURGH: ADAM & CHARLES BLACK.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY. SUMMER EXHIBITION

WILL OPEN ON

MONDAY, MAY 2.

Admission, One Shilling; Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

REGISTRUM MALMESBURIENSE, VOL. II.

Now ready, in royal 8vo, pp. 596, price 10s., half-bound.

THE REGISTER of MALMESBURY ABBEY, preserved in the Public Record Office. Vol. II. Edited by the late J. S. BREWER, M.A., and C. T. MARTIN, B.A., F.S.A., and published by the Authority of the Lords Commissioners of H.M. Treasury, under the Direction of the Master of the Rolls.
This work throws light upon many curious points of history, and illustrates the growth of society, the distribution and cultivation of land, the relations of landlord and tenant, and national history and customs.
London: LONGMANS & CO. and TRUBNER & CO. Oxford: PAECKER & CO. Cambridge: MACMILLAN & CO. Edinburgh: A. & C. BLACK and DOUGLAS & FOULIS. Dublin: A. THOM & CO.

THE PROTECTORATE, A.D. 1654.

Now ready, in imp. 8vo, pp. 734, price 15s., cloth.

CALENDAR of STATE PAPERS, Domestic Series, 1654, preserved in the State Paper Department of H.M. Public Record Office. Edited by MARY ANNE EVERETT GREEN, and published under the Direction of the Master of the Rolls with the sanction of H.M. Secretary of State for the Home Department.
*The period comprised in the present volume, the seventh of the Commonwealth Series, is the last ten months of the year 1654, during which time, in spite of occasional outbreaks of discontent, the power of the PROTECTOR became gradually consolidated, and the Government displayed vigour both in its foreign and domestic policy.
London: LONGMANS & CO. and TRUBNER & CO. Oxford: PAECKER & CO. Cambridge: MACMILLAN & CO. Edinburgh: A. & C. BLACK and DOUGLAS & FOULIS. Dublin: A. THOM & CO.

MAP of a HUNDRED SQUARE MILES ROUND AVEBURY, WILTSHIRE; with a KEY to the BRITISH and ROMAN ANTIQUITIES. By the Rev. A. C. SMITH, Rector of Yatesbury, Wilts; Hon. Secretary of the Wilts Archaeological and Natural History Society.

The above work will consist of two parts:—

First, THE GREAT MAP, 78 in. by 48 in., on the scale of 36 square inches to the mile, showing all the British and Roman Earth- and Stone-Works, printed in six colours.

Second, THE KEY, in large 4to, containing the Great Map in Sections, with accompanying descriptive letterpress and References to the best authorities, Views, Plans, &c.

The work, constituting a permanent record of one of the most important archaeological districts in Europe, has been twenty-five years in preparation, and will be published and issued to subscribers by the Marlborough College Natural History Society.

For Prospectus, giving full particulars and the opinions of antiquaries who have seen the work, apply to the Rev. J. A. PRESTON, The Green, Marlborough.

BIBLE REVISION

THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA:

The Six Principal English Versions of the New Testament, in parallel columns, beneath the Greek Original Text. Wiclif, 1380.—Tyndale, 1534.—Crammer, 1539.—Geneva, 1557.—Rheims, 1582.—Authorized, 1611. 1 very handsome vol., 4to, £2 2s., or morocco, gilt edges.

"In form and substance it is an admirable present for any clergyman."—Observer.

London: S. BAGSTAR & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row.
And sold by all Booksellers.

No. XXIII. Price Six Shillings.

THE

CHURCH QUARTERLY REVIEW

For APRIL, 1881.

CONTENTS.

1. ON CHRISTIAN MARRIAGE.
2. THE RISE of the HUGUENOTS.
3. THE TARGUMS on the PENTATEUCH.
4. THE APOCRYPHAL GOSPELS.
5. ON SOME FACTS of PLANT LIFE.
6. THE LETTERS of POPE GREGORY I.
7. THE DAWN of the PAPAL MONARCHY.
8. RECENT FORTUNES of the CHURCH in OXFORD.
9. GEORGE ELIOT.
10. DEAN HOOK'S LIFE.

SHORT NOTICES.

London: SPOTTISWOODE & CO., New-street-square.

On April 29 (One Shilling), No. 257.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For MAY.

With Illustrations by GEORGE DU MAURIER and W. SMALL.

CONTENTS.

- A GRAPE from a THORN. By JAMES PAYN. (With an Illustration.) Chap. XIX.—The Lost Locket. XX.—Mr. Aird's Love Story. XXI.—Hilma in the Hotel. XXII.—The Invitation.
- BABIES and SCIENCE.
- A BISHOP'S CONFESSION.
- "AT HOME" in the POOR.
- FRANZ GRILLPARZER.
- ONE YEAR in a GERMAN COOKERY SCHOOL.
- LOVE the DEBT. (With an Illustration.) Chap. XXII.—A Proposal. XIV.—Guardians. XV.—Mr. Robert Sagar.
- London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterloo-place.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

To-night, at 8, SHAKESPEARE'S Tragedy of
ROMEO AND JULIET.
 Characters by Messrs. Wilson Barrett, John Ryder, Forbes-Robertson, Clifford Cooper, E. Price, Norman Forbes, E. B. Norman, Brian Darley, Neville Doone, J. W. Phipps, W. P. Grainger, E. Butler, &c., and G. W. Anson; Mesdames Helena Modjeska, M. A. O'Farrell, B. Garner, J. Clifford, &c., and R. G. Le Thiere.
 Preceded, at 7, by
TWO OLD BOYS.
 Box-office open from 11 to 5. Doors open at 6.45. Carriages at 11. No fees. Acting Manager, Mr. H. HERMAN.

DURRY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

On MONDAY NEXT, APRIL 25,
VIRGINIUS.
 VIRGINIUS—Mr. JOHN MCCULLOUGH.
 VIRGINIA—Miss LYDIA COWELL.
 SERVIA—Mrs. ARTHUR STIRLING.
 Dentatus—Mr. John Ryder; Appius Claudius—Mr. J. H. Barnes; Numitorius—Mr. J. R. Gibson; Lucius—Mr. G. Andrews; Caius Claudius—Mr. De Lange; Iulius—Mr. Augustus Harris.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.30, HESTER'S MYSTERY.
 A new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, called
THE UPPER CRUST.
 Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Billington, E. W. Garden, G. Shelton, and E. D. Ward; Mesdames Effie Lister, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorne.
 At 10, THE WIZARD OF THE WILDERNESS.
 Mr. J. L. Toole.
 Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to £3 3s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Under the direction of Mr. ALEXANDER HENDERSON.

To-night, at 8, an entirely new and original Opera Comique, in three acts, by OFFENBACH, entitled
LA BOULANGERIE.
 Under the immediate direction of Mr. H. B. Farnie.
 New and elaborate scenery by Ryan and Hicks. Dresses, after designs by Grévin and Faustio, by Allas.
 Preceded, at 7.30, by a Comedy, after Melhac and Halévy, entitled CEILING FROG-FROG.
 Mesdames Anadi, Maud Taylor, Turner, Dubois, Graham, Evelyn, and Wadman; Messrs. Cella, Temple, Ashford, Mansfield, Stepan, and Paulton.
 Greatly augmented chorus and orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Miller. Ballet master, Mr. Lauri.
 Box-office now open. Acting Manager, Mr. W. A. BURT.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(200 yards from the Angel.)

To-night, at 8, HIS WIFE,
 a new Play by H. A. JONES (Author of "A Clerical Error," &c.), founded on a Novel by Mark Hope.
 Entirely new scenery and appointments.
 Miss BATEMAN (Mrs. Crowe) will appear as MARGARET FIELD, the character having been written expressly for her.
 The following artists will also appear—Messrs. E. H. Brooke, J. D. Beveridge, W. Young, E. F. Edgar, E. Lyons, G. Canine, R. Lyons, &c.; Mesdames John Carter, Laura London, and Kate Pattison (by kind permission of Messrs. Hare and Kendall).
 Act 1. Fairdale Hall—Evening. Act 2 and 3. Chaplain's Parlour at Tolmister Gaele. Act 4. Mr. Billing's Private Asylum. Act 5. Fairdale Hall—Morning.
 Prices from 6d. to 7s. 6d. Doors open at 6.30. Farce at 7.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. DOVLY CARTE.

TO-NIGHT, for the first time, a new Aesthetic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN, entitled PATIENCE.
 Messrs. George Grossmith, Rutland Barrington, Richard Temple, F. Thornton, and Durward Lell; Mesdames Leonora Braham, Jessie Bond, Julia Gwynne, Fortescue, and Alice Barnett.
 Produced under the personal direction of the Author and Composer.
 Box-office now open.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BRUCE.

To-night, at 8.40, a new Comedy, in three acts, called
THE COLONEL.
 By F. C. BURDAND.
 Preceded, at 7.30, by a one-act Comedy, by SYDNEY GRUNDY, in honour of
IN HONOUR BOUND.
 Messrs. Coghlan, Fleckton, W. Herbert, Eric Hayley, Rowland Buckstone, and Edgar Bruce; Mesdames Amy Rastell, Myra Holmes, C. Graham, Leigh Murray, &c.
 New Scenery by Mr. Bruce Smith.
 Doors open at 7.30. Box-office open daily from 11 to 5.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WALTER GOOCH.

To-night, at 7.45, an entirely new and original romantic spectacular Drama of sensational interest, entitled BRANDED.
 Written by RICHARD LEE.
 Messrs. Henry Neville, Edmund F. Archer, J. Beauchamp, F. Charles, H. C. Sidney, Allen Thomas, Hewitt, Estcourt, Evans, Gardiner, Greville, W. Avondale, Chamberlain, Striding, &c.; Mesdames Carolines Hill, Maud Milton, Katie Barry, Katie Neville, Hunter, and Lyons.
 Produced under the direction of Mr. Harry Jackson.
 New and realistic scenery by Charles Brooke. New overture and incidental music by Michael Connolly. New military costumes direct from the Army Contractors, Paris. The horses supplied by Mr. George Sanger.
 Preceded, at 7, by the Farce,
THE INTRIGUE.
 Doors open at 6.30. Box-office open daily.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER.

To-night, at 7.30, a new Opera, PRISONERS AT THE BAR, by Messrs. OXFORD and MEADOWS.
 At 8.15, STACEO STRUCK,
 Miss Kate Lawler's great Gaiety success.
 Mesdames Kate Lawler and Harriet Coveney; Messrs Arthur Williams, S. Dallas, and Frank Wyke.
 At 9.20, DON JUAN JUNIOR.
 Re-dressed and re-tuned. The success of the country.
 Stage Manager, FRANK ROTHBART. Acting and General Business Manager, CECIL RABELOH.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S

Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA

"If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa."
Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."
 W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.

"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted."
 CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

EXTRACT

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
 A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

TO PROPRIETORS OF NEWSPAPERS

and PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, Brief News, & Opinion, the Flourist, Gazette, the Review, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPLETE, ECONOMIC, and PUNCTUAL PRODUCTION OF PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether Illustrated or Plain. Estimates furnished to Proprietors of New Periodicals, for either Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—74 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

SUN LIFE OFFICE, LONDON.

Established 1810.

CHIEF OFFICE, 63, THREADNEEDLE STREET.

BRANCH OFFICES, 60, CHANCERY CROSS;

And Oxford-street, corner of Vere-street.

Very low premiums without participation in Profits, especially for young lives. Half Premium, Non-Forfeiture, and Endowment Assurances granted.

Prompt settlement of Claims.

The Society's newly revised Prospectus, and a greatly simplified form of Proposal, will be forwarded on application.

J. G. PRESTLEY, Actuary.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHANCERY CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROMFIELD, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1831.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.
 The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

1st March, 1880.

FRANCIS HAYNSCROFT, Manager

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

331, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

(Twenty doors west of Jude's Library.)

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Colotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.
 AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Meissonier, Corot, De Neuville, Burne-Jones, Rossetti, Gave Thomas, &c., &c., &c.

Just published, in Cloth Portfolio, Six Guineas the Set.

TWELVE AUTOTYPE REPRODUCTIONS OF PAINTINGS and DRAWINGS, by PHILIP GILBERT HAMPTON, mostly of Scottish mountain scenery, and including copies of paintings in monochrome and of sepia and charcoal drawings. The twelve subjects are mounted on uniform boards, 28 in. by 21 in. Each Autotype can be obtained separately, price 10s. 6d.

COME INTO THESE YELLOW SANDS," after the painting by W. FIELD, Esq., on India, two sizes, 42s. and 21s.

PICTURES CLEANED, RESTORED, FRAMED.

To adorn the walls of Home with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 331, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Kaling Dene, Middlesex.

General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWYER.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on MOEDER'S FIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal.

Cash prices.

No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Price Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.
 F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suits, from £8 6s. to 50 guineas.
 Drawing-room Suits, from £9 9s. to 45 guineas.
 Dining-room Suits, from £7 7s. to 40 guineas.
 And all other goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones. Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.
 Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.
 Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.
 Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.
 Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

fluid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. By gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drowsy feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulder, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

BRAND & CO.'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS:—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
 MAYFAIR, W.

YATES & ALEXANDER,

PRINTERS OF

Books, Pamphlets, Magazines, Newspapers, and Periodicals.

Catalogues, Posters, Price Currents, Circulars, Notices, and all General Commercial Work.

Parliamentary, Law, and General Printing.

Contracts entered into with Public Companies; Bankers, Insurance Offices, Auctioneers; Manufacturers, Merchants and Traders, &c.

PRINTING WORKS:

LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE
 (OPPOSITE THE CHANCERY LANE POST-OFFICE).

W. H. SMITH & SON'S

SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY,

186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the RAILWAY BOOKSTALLS.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON's numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their books. There are 500 Bookstalls available for this purpose. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or 186, Strand, London.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in charge a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

I.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A LONDON TERMINUS, OR 186, STRAND—

		6 Months.	12 Months.
		£ s. d.	£ s. d.
For One Volume at a time ...	(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)	0 12 0	1 1 0
For Two Volumes "	(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)	0 17 6	1 11 6
For Four "	"	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Eight "	"	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Fifteen "	"	3 0 0	5 5 0

II.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A COUNTRY BOOKSTALL—

For One Volume at a time ...	(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)	0 12 0	1 1 0
For Two Volumes "	(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)	0 17 6	1 11 6
For Three "	"	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Four "	"	1 8 0	2 10 0
For Six "	"	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Twelve "	"	3 0 0	5 5 0

III.—FOR COUNTRY BOOK CLUBS, READING SOCIETIES, &c.

For Twenty-four Volumes at a time ...	5 5 0	9 9 0
For Thirty-six "	8 0 0	14 2 6
For Forty-eight "	10 10 0	18 16 0
For Sixty "	13 0 0	23 9 0
For Seventy-two "	15 10 0	28 2 0
For Eighty-four "	18 0 0	32 15 0

For every additional Twelve Volumes, £4 12s. 6d.

TERMS FOR SPECIAL TRAVELLING SUBSCRIPTIONS, Lists of Books in circulation, or any other information can be obtained at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or at 186, Strand, London.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings for Gentlemen's Libraries.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 469.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, APRIL 30, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO.'S LIST.

"TWO REMARKABLE RECORDS OF TRAVEL."—TIMES.

The Times, of April 18, in a review of the two following works, says:—"These remarks are suggested by the two remarkable records of travel just published by Messrs. Sampson Low & Co., to be followed shortly, we believe, by a third—the narrative of Mr. Joseph Thomson. A unique phenomenon, both in the annals of publishing and of African exploration."

MAJOR SERPA PINTO'S HOW I CROSSED AFRICA; from the Atlantic to the Indian Ocean, through Unknown Countries; Discovery of the Great Zambesi Affluents, &c. Translated by Professor ALFRED ELWES. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Twenty Full-page and 118 Half-page and smaller Illustrations, Thirteen small Maps and One large one, cloth extra, 42s.

DR. EMIL HOLUB'S SEVEN YEARS in SOUTH AFRICA: Travels, Researches, and Hunting Adventures (1872 to 1879). Translated by ELLEN E. FREWER, Translator of Schweinfurth's "Heart of Africa," &c. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Two Hundred Illustrations and Map, cloth extra, 42s. [Ready.]

In the press, to be published immediately.

TO the CENTRAL AFRICAN LAKES and BACK: the Narrative of the Royal Geographical Society's East African Expedition, 1878—80. By JOSEPH THOMSON, F.R.G.S. 2 vols., crown 8vo, with Portrait and brief Memoir of the late Keith Johnston, and with Portrait of the Author, Route Map to Lakes Nyassa and Tanganyika and back; also a Sketch Map, showing Geology of East Central Africa; cloth.

In the press, to be published early in May.

THE HEAD HUNTERS of BORNEO; up the Mahakkam and down the Barito. By CARL BOCK. Super-royal 8vo, with many Full-page Coloured Plates and Woodcuts from the Author's own Drawings. Among other matters the book describes and gives drawings of the fair-skinned race inhabiting the forests of the island, of whom the women at least have never previously been seen by any European traveller.

THE LATE LORD BEACONSFIELD.

Messrs. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO. will have ready by May 2 a REVISED and CHEAP EDITION, in 1 vol., of

THE PUBLIC LIFE of the Right Hon. BENJAMIN DISRAELI, EARL of BEACONSFIELD, K.G.

By FRANCIS HITCHMAN.

Crown 8vo, about 600 pp., price 8s. 6d.

N.B.—This Edition will contain the very fine Photographic Portrait of his Lordship, by W. & D. Downey, taken when in office, as Prime Minister, in attendance on the Queen at Balmoral.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

For MAY.

The following are prominent features of the May Number:—

GEORGE ELIOT:

A Paper of Biography and Personal Reminiscence.

By C. KEGAN PAUL.

With Fine Portrait, and other Illustrations, including her Birth-place, the Drawing-room where her Receptions were held, the Grave, Portraits of G. H. Lewes and of Elizabeth Evans (the original of "Dinah Morris"), &c., &c.

THOMAS CARLYLE:

A Paper of Personal Reminiscences of Eighteen Years.

By M. B. CONWAY.

Including many Conversations of Carlyle. With Portraits of Carlyle in later and earlier years; his Mother, Mrs. Carlyle; "an Interior at Chelsea," Views of Craigenputtock and other places, facsimile of Writing, &c.

An exquisite Frontispiece by E. A. ABBEY, one of the finest specimens of wood-engraving yet produced in America, and another fine Engraving, "The Indian Girl," after WALTER SHIRLAW.

Among the many illustrated Papers are those on ATHENS, of timely interest in view of the Greek Question, with Portraits of KING GEORGE and QUEEN OLGA of Greece, and many Views; one of a series on MUSIC and MUSICIANS in the chief musical centres, with Portraits of SULLIVAN, GERSTER, CAMPANINI, JOSEFFY, WILHELM, and other celebrities; one on the new DECORATIVE POTTERY of Cincinnati, with Twenty Illustrations; &c.

The continuations of Mr. THOMAS HARDY'S striking story, "A LAODICEAN," with Illustration by GEORGE DU MAYER, and of the American novel, "ANNE," also a remarkable short story, "THE UNEXPECTED PARTING of the BEAZLEY TWINS;" &c. &c., &c.

As this, the finest number yet issued in England, is expected to create an unusual demand, Orders should be sent at once.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON, CROWN BUILDINGS, 188, FLEET STREET, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
MEMOIRS OF PRINCE METTERNICH, by Sir TRAVERS TWISS	311
GOSSE'S ENGLISH ODES, by Prof. E. DOWDEN	312
MISS GORDON CUMMING'S AT HOME IN FIJI, by W. SIMPSON	313
NICHOL'S DEATH OF THE THEMISTOCLES, by G. SAINTSBURY	314
SIMPSON'S OLD ST. PAUL'S, by H. B. WHEATLEY	315
FO'BLE YAKES, by COSMO MONKHOUSE	315
SOME BOOKS ABOUT INDIA, by JAS. S. COTTON	316
NOTES AND NEWS	317
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	318
LETTER FROM MALTA, by Miss TOULMIN SMITH	318
SELECTED BOOKS	319

CORRESPONDENCE:—

Warburton's Epigram against Dean Tucker, by the Author of "Sylvestra"; "Derring-do," by F. J. FURNIVALL	320
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	320
SELLAR'S ROMAN POETS OF THE REPUBLIC, by R. ELLIS	321
THE HERBERT LECTURES	321
NOTES OF TRAVEL	321
SCIENCE NOTES	322
PHILOLOGY NOTES	322
SOME BOOKS ON PHILOSOPHY	322
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	323
WEBER'S MONUMENTS ON MOUNT SIPHYLOS, by W. M. RAMSAY	323
EXHIBITIONS: THE INSTITUTE OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS, by FREDK. WEDMORE; ROSA BONHEUR'S PICTURES	325
OBITUARY: MR. WILLIAM BURGESS, by J. T. MICKLETHWAITE	325
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	326
MR. GILBERT'S SATIRE	326
STAGE NOTES	327
BERLIOZ' "SYMPHONIE FANTASTIQUE: EPISODE DE LA VIE D'UN ARTISTE," by J. S. SHEDLOCK	327

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

The NEXT TERM will commence on TUESDAY, 3RD OF MAY.
F. W. MADDEN, M.A., R.A.S., Secretary.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, Ely-

place, St. Stephen's-green, Dublin.—Founded 1832, for preparation of Candidates for competitive Examinations; over 1,000 Pupils have passed direct from the Academy. The Special Classes for R.I. CONSTABULARY Cadetships have carried off 80 per cent. of the Cadetships offered for competition last year: First Place, four times. Special Work for Woolwich and Sandhurst; over 320 have passed Army Exams., including 2nd, 3rd, 6th, 6th, 7th, at recent Competitions.—Apply to W. J. CHETWODE CRAWLEY, LL.B., F.G.S., F.R.G.S., Director and Sole Proprietor.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—KENSINGTON

HOUSE, Calverley Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. E. R. STEBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 200 Guineas.

HEATH BROW SCHOOL.—Boys prepared for the Public Schools. Girls for the Higher Schools and Colleges. Classics, FRENCH, STOCK, D.L.L., M.A. Lond.; Mathematics, JOHN BRIDGE, M.A. Lond. Kindergarten for Day Pupils. The SUMMER TERM begins MAY 4TH.—Prospectus on application to Mrs. CASE, Heath Brow, Hampstead, London.

SAINT PAUL'S SCHOOLS.—About

EIGHT SCHOLARSHIPS will be AWARDED Next Term.—For information, address CLERK to GOVERNORS, Mercers' Hall, E.C.

OWENS COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

The COUNCIL, having decided to found a new PROFESSORSHIP of APPLIED MATHEMATICS, invite applications from Gentlemen desirous of becoming Candidates. The fixed stipend is £350 per annum, in addition to Two-thirds of the Fee paid by students.

The appointment will date from the 29th September next. Further information respecting the duties of the Professor may be obtained from the PRINCIPAL of the College.

Applications and testimonials, addressed to the Council, will be received up to the 25th MAY.

J. HOLME NICHOLSON, Registrar.

THE MASON SCIENCE COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL PROFESSORS.

Applications for the ADDITIONAL CHAIRS of Physiology, Geology and Mineralogy, Civil and Mechanical Engineering, Latin and Greek, English Language and Literature, and LECTURERSHIP in the French and German Languages (see former advertisements) must be sent in by the 30th INSTANT, addressed to Mr. G. H. MORLEY, Secretary, The Mason Science College, Birmingham.

ARTISTS' GENERAL BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION, for the Relief of Distressed Artists, their Widows and Orphans.

The ANNIVERSARY DINNER will take place in WILLIS'S ROOMS, on SATURDAY, MAY 14TH, at 6 o'clock.

The Right Hon. the EARL OF ROSEBURY in the Chair.

Donations will be received and thankfully acknowledged by—

JOHN EVERETT MILLAIS, R.A., Honorary Secretary.

PHILIP CHARLES HAYDICK, Treasurer.

F. LAMBE FRICK, Secretary, 24 Old Bond-street, W.

Dinner Tickets, including Wines, One Guinea.

GRAY'S INN.—EXAMINATION for the

"DAON" and "HOLT" SCHOLARSHIPS.—NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that an Examination for these Scholarships will be held in GRAY'S INN HALL, on the 14TH and 15TH days of JUNE next, commencing at 10 o'clock A.M. precisely.

These Scholarships are of the yearly value of £45 and £40 respectively, tenable for two years, and are open to every Student for the Bar who, on the 14th day of June next, shall have been a Member of Gray's Inn for not more than Five Terms, and who shall have kept every Term since his admission, inclusive of that in or before which he shall have been admitted.

In the Examination for the Scholarships there will be set Two Papers of Questions—viz.

1st. One on the CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY OF ENGLAND to the End of the Reign of George the Second.
2nd. One on the GENERAL HISTORY OF ENGLAND to the same date.

And there also be given to the Candidates Two or more Subjects connected with the Constitutional and General History of England to the above date, any one of which Subjects a Candidate may select, and on the one which he does select he will be required to write a Short Essay.

The time to be allowed for each of these Three Papers will be Three Hours.

(Signed) WM. P. JOLLIFFE, Treasurer.
THOS. C. SARDIN, Examiner.

Dated this 16th day of February, 1881.

ST. ANDREW'S HALL, PLYMOUTH.

ART AND INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION, 1881.

£200 IN PRIZES.

OPENING MONDAY, MAY 23RD.

SPECIAL PRIZES.

£20 GOLD MEDAL for the best Picture painted by any Artist residing in Devon, Cornwall, Somerset, or Dorset, each Competitor being allowed to show three Pictures. 2nd Prize, SILVER MEDAL; 3rd, BRONZE.

£20 GOLD MEDAL for the best Picture exhibited. Open to all England.

£20 GOLD MEDAL for the best exhibit in the Exhibition.

N.B.—Pictures will not be eligible for this competition.

Winners of these Gold Medals will be paid in Money if preferred.

100 Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals will be given in the following Classes:—

Class 1.—Professional Workmanship.

Class 2.—Amateur Productions, made by Exhibitors who follow some other trade than that to which their articles belong.

Class 3.—Inventions and Novel Contrivances. To include both Amateur and Professional Workmanship.

Class 4.—Models, Architectural, Mechanical, Marine, and Ornamental.

Class 5.—Fine-Arts, including Oil and Water-Colour Paintings. Open to all England.

Class 6.—Oil and Water-Colour Paintings and Drawings, open to Students of any recognised School of Art or Private School.

Class 7.—Oil or Water-Colour Paintings, open to residents in Devon, Cornwall, Somerset, or Dorset. Each competitor will be allowed to exhibit three pictures.

Class 8.—Carving and Fret Work. Two Classes—Amateur & Professional.

Class 9.—Sculpture.

Class 10.—Preserved Natural Objects.

Class 11.—Ladies' Work of all kinds.

Class 12.—Musical Instruments.

Class 13.—Furniture.

Class 14.—Painters' Graining of Wood.

Class 15.—Photography.

Class 16.—Bicycles, Tricycles, and Sewing Machines.

Class 17.—China Painting.

Class 18.—Electricity Inventions.

Class 19.—Pen and Ink and Crayons by Amateurs.

Class 20.—Pottery.

Class 21.—Miscellaneous. This will include all objects not properly belonging to any of the other Classes.

Further particulars may be obtained of the Secretary, Mr. THOS. MARTIN, Plymouth.

THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.

The NINETY-FIFTH EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, 5, PALL MALL EAST, from 10 till 6. Admission, 1s.; Catalogue, 6d.

ALFRED D. FRIFE, Secretary.

SOCIETY of BRITISH ARTISTS.—

FIFTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION NOW OPEN at the SUFFOLK STREET GALLERIES, PALL MALL EAST, from 9 to 6 daily. Admission, 1s.

THOMAS ROBERTS, Secretary.

ON EXHIBITION.—PAINTINGS and

DRAWINGS by the American Artist, the late WILLIAM MORRIS HUNT, Author of "Talks about Art."—Gallery, 14, Grafton-street, Old Bond-street.

NOW on EXHIBITION.—PAINTINGS

of NIAGARA FALLS, by the late WILLIAM MORRIS HUNT, Author of "Talks about Art." also other Paintings and Charcoal Drawings by the Same Artist.—GALLERY, 14, GRAFTON STREET, OLD BOND STREET.

FRENCH GALLERY, 120, Pall-mall.—The

TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION OF PICTURES by Artists the Competent Schools (including Portraits of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prince Bismarck, Count Moltke, Dr. Böttlinger, and other works by Franz Lenbach) is NOW OPEN. Admission 1s.

"SCOTLAND FOR EVER!!"—Grand

New Picture, "CHARGE OF THE 'GREYS' AT WATERLOO," by Mrs. BUTLER, painter of the "Roll Call." ON VIEW at the EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly, from 10 A.M. till 6 P.M. Admission One Shilling.

A PHOTOGRAPHURE will shortly be published by Messrs. HILDESHEIMER & CO., of London, Manchester, and New York.

ROSA BONHEUR'S celebrated PIC-

TURES "ON THE ALERT" and "A FORAGING PARTY," which gained for the Artist the Cross of the Order of Leopold of Belgium at the Antwerp Academy, 1879; also the Complete Engraved Works of ROSA BONHEUR, including the well-known "HORSE FAIR."—NOW ON EXHIBITION at L. H. LEVEY'S GALLERY, 1A, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S, S.W. Admission One Shilling. 10 to 5.

A LITTLE GEM by GEORGE CRUIK-

SHANK, 13 by 3½, showing the Effects of Industry and Idleness.

"Keep within compass, and you will be sure To avoid many evils that others endure."

Price Sixpence.

London: WILLIAM TEGO, Paternoster-lane, Cheapside, E.C.

SHEPHERD BROTHERS, Art Com-

mission Agents and Picture Dealers, Nottingham, beg to announce that their LONDON PICTURE GALLERY is NOW OPEN, at 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W. (opposite Messrs. Christie & Manson's).—Choice Works on View by Henry Dawson, secus. T. S. Cooper, R.A., J. S. Manti, L. J. Fott, Ernest Parton, Marcus Stone, A.R.A., Noble, Stark, Jutsum, &c.

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT

BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

Professor H. MORLEY will THIS DAY (SATURDAY), APRIL 30TH, at 3 o'clock, begin a COURSE of THREE LECTURES on "SCOTLAND'S PART IN ENGLISH LITERATURE," and ONE LECTURE on "THOMAS CARLYLE." Subscription to this Course, Half-a-Guinea; to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

SIR JOHN SOANE'S MUSEUM,

13, LINCOLN'S INN FIELDS.

ANTIQUITIES, PICTURES, and SCULPTURE.

OPEN FREE, from 11 to 5, on TUESDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, THURSDAYS, and SATURDAYS in MAY, JUNE, JULY, and AUGUST. Cards for Private Days and for Students to be obtained of the CURATOR, at the Museum.

ARTS ASSOCIATION, NEWCASTLE-

UPON-TYNE.

The SIXTH EXHIBITION OF PAINTINGS and SCULPTURE by LIVING ARTISTS will be OPENED in the ASSEMBLY ROOMS, NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE, on the 1ST WEEK in SEPTEMBER.

Agent for forwarding Works from London, Mr. W. A. SMITH, 14, Charles-street, Middlesex Hospital.

Artists can obtain particulars from T. R. SPENCER, Secretary.

BRITISH MUSEUM.

The BRITISH MUSEUM will be CLOSED on MONDAY, the 2ND, and RE-OPENED on MONDAY, the 9TH of MAY.

ENW. A. BOND, Principal Librarian.

BARTOLOZZI.—Will holders of AUTO-

GRAPH LETTRES to or from BARTOLOZZI, the eminent Engraver, kindly allow me an opportunity of inspecting them for the purposes of my book on "Engravings and Engravers," the first part of which is in the press? Any information and assistance will be gratefully acknowledged. Examples of his Prints would be purchased.—ANDREW W. TUCKER, 20, Notting-hill-square, London, W.

MR. CHARLES SIMMONS (M.A., Ball.

Coll., Oxford) wishes to READ with EVENING CLASSES the Classical Subjects for the Examinations of the University of London.—11, Houghton-place, N.W.

DR. DALMAZZO will give a COURSE of SIX LECTURES in ITALIAN on "MODERN ITALY and ITALIAN LITERATURE," at TRINITY COLLEGE, MANDEVILLE PLACE, MANCHESTER SQUARE, W., on FRIDAY EVENINGS, at 8 o'clock, commencing MAY 6TH.

Fees for the Course, Half-a-Guinea; Single Lecture, Half-a-Crown. For Prospectuses or Tickets apply to the SECRETARY, at the College; or to Dr. DALMAZZO, 2, Upper Bedford-place, W.C.

TO BOOKBUYERS.—Ready, CATA-

LOGUE (No. 11.) of OLD BOOKS.—Post-free of JOHN SAMPSON, Bookseller, York.

ENGLISH ETCHINGS: a Monthly

Publication of Original Etchings, the work of English Artists. Part I, JUNE. Price 3s. 6d.; Annual Subscription, £2 2s. A limited number of Parts, containing First Proofs on Japanese Paper, prices per Part one guinea. Each Part will contain Four Etchings, which, together with descriptive Letterpress, will be contained in a handsome Portfolio, embellished with a Portrait of Rembrandt. Size: 1 imp. 4to (13 by 11).

London: WILLIAM REEVES, Publisher, 185, Fleet-street.

LONDON LIBRARY.

12, ST JAMES'S SQUARE.—Founded 1841.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

PRESIDENT—THOMAS CARLYLE, Esq. This Library contains 99,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature in various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year, or £2 with Entrance-fee of £6; Life Membership, £250.

Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town, Members. Reading-room open from Ten to Half-past Six. Prospectus on application.

ROBERT HARRISON, Secretary and Librarian.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

THE NEW SEASON.—NOTICE.

The attention of all Readers of the Best Literature is respectfully requested to the List, Revised for the New Season, of the Principal Recent Books in Circulation at Mudie's Select Library. This List (postage free on application) will be found to contain an unusually large and varied Selection of Recent Works in History, Biography, Religion, Philosophy, Travel and Adventure and the Higher Class of Fiction.

The Terms of Subscription are the lowest on which it is possible to furnish a constant and satisfactory supply of the leading Books of the day.

Fresh Copies of all New Books of General Interest continue to be added as the demand increases, and arrangements are made with the leading Publishers for an ample supply of all the Best Forthcoming Books as they appear.

In addition to the List of Recent Books in Circulation, a New Edition of Mudie's Catalogue of Second-hand Books is also ready for delivery. This Catalogue comprises a large selection of the best Books of the Past and Present Seasons, in good condition, with many older Works, several of which are out of print and not otherwise procurable, at the lowest current prices.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW OXFORD STREET.

City Office: 2, King-street, Cheapside.

TRÜBNER & CO.'S LIST.

FRANCE and the FRENCH, in the SECOND HALF of the NINETEENTH CENTURY.

By KARL HILLENBRAND. Translated from the Third German Edition.
Post 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. [Now ready.]

EDGAR QUINET:

HIS EARLY LIFE and WRITINGS.

By RICHARD HEATH. With Portrait, Illustrations, and an Autograph Letter. Post 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. [Nearly ready.]

PICTURES of INDIAN LIFE.

Sketched with the Pen, from 1852 to 1878. By ROBERT M. CUST, late of H.M. Indian Civil Service, and Hon. Sec. to the Royal Asiatic Society; Author of "Modern Languages of the East Indies" and "Oriental and Linguistic Essays." Crown 8vo, cloth. [Nearly ready.]

"THE MESNEVI"

(Usually known as the Mesnevi-i Sherif, or Holy Mesnevi of Mevlana (our Lord), Jelalu'd-din Muhammed Er-rumi. Book the First. With a Life of the Author, his Ancestors, and Descendants. Illustrated by Anecdotes from El Eflaki. Translated, and the Poetry Versified, in English, by J. W. REDHOUSE, M.A., &c. Post 8vo, cloth, 12s. A complete treasury of occult Oriental lore.—"Saturday Review."

THE SCIENCE of BEAUTY:

An Analytical Enquiry into the Laws of Aesthetics. By A. W. HOLMES-FORBES, M.A., of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s. "The book will be welcomed by all students as the outcome of a highly trained intellect."—"Pictorial World."

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of

MARK RUTHERFORD,

Disseminating Minister. Edited by his Friend, JEBBEN SHAPCOTT. Crown 8vo, boards, 5s. "This is a remarkable little book, and one that we strongly recommend for perusal."—"St. James's Gazette."

THE HISTORY of INDIA

from the EARLIEST AGES.

By J. TALBOYS WHEELER, late Assistant Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department. Vol. IV., Part 2. MOGIUL EMPIRE—AURUNGEZEB. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

BRITISH ANIMALS EXTINCT

within HISTORIC TIMES;

With Some Account of British Wild White Cattle. By J. E. HAUGHTON, F.L.S., F.Z.S. Demy 8vo, with Illustrations by Wolf, Whymper, and others, cloth, 14s. "Mr. Harting has collected every available piece of evidence."—"St. James's Gazette."

DR. APPLETON:

his LIFE and LITERARY RELICS.

By J. H. APPLETON, M.A., late Vicar of St. Mark's, Stapleford, Rutland; and A. H. SAYCE, M.A., Queen's College, Oxford. Post 8vo, with Portrait, cloth, 10s. 6d. "The brief story of his life is told with much feeling and simplicity."—"Scotsman."

KING'S COLLEGE LECTURES

ON ELOCUTION;

or, the Physiology and Culture of Voice and Speech, and the Expression of the Emotions by Language, Countenance, and Gesture. To which is added a special Lecture on the Causes and Cures of Impediments of Speech. By C. J. FLETCHER, Lecturer on Public Reading and Speaking. Dedicated by permission to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. New and greatly Enlarged Illustrated Edition. Demy 8vo, cloth, 15s. "The work . . . merits high commendation."—"Church of England Pulpit."

THE GULISTAN;

Or, Rose Garden of Shekh Musthufi'd-din Sâdi of Shiraz. Translated for the first time into Prose and Verse, with Preface and Life of the Author from the Atish Kebab. By E. R. EASTWICK, F.R.S., M.A., &c. Second Edition. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. "It is a very fair rendering of the original."—"Times."

BUDDHIST BIRTH STORIES;

Or, Jataka Tales. From the Jatakavamsana. Translated from the Original Pali by T. W. RHYDS DAVIDS. Vol. I. Post 8vo, cloth, 18s. "Will be of the greatest interest and importance to students."—"St. James's Gazette."

CONTRIBUTIONS to the HISTORY of the DEVELOPMENT of THE HUMAN RACE.

Lectures and Dissertations. By LAZARUS GEORGE. Translated from the German by DAVID ASHER, Ph.D. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s. "The papers translated in this volume deal with various aspects of a very fascinating study."—"St. James's Gazette."

THE CLASSICAL POETRY

of the JAPANESE.

By B. H. CHAMBERLAIN, Author of "Yezo Henkaku Ichiran." Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. "All who like interesting legends told in very readable verse should have the book."—"Times."

THE BIRDS of CORNWALL and the SCILLY ISLANDS.

By the late E. HEARLE RODD. Edited, with an Introduction, Appendix, and Brief Memoir of the Author, by JAMES E. HARTING, F.L.S., F.Z.S. Post 8vo, with Portrait and Map, cloth, 14s. "The book will prove a great boon to all bird-lovers who visit Cornwall."—"Academy."

THE LIGHT of ASIA;

or, the Great Reincarnation. Being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Told in Verse by an Indian Buddhist. By EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I., Author of "The Indian Song of Songs." Crown 8vo, boards, 2s. 6d. "The most sympathetic account ever published in Europe of the life and teaching of the Sakya Saint, Prince Gautama Siddhartha, the Lord Buddha."—"Times."

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

The only Work giving contemporaneous evidence on the condition of English society in the fifteenth century.

LOCI E LIBRO VERITATUM:

Passages selected from Gascoigne's Theological Dictionary, illustrating the Condition of Church and State, 1493—1558, with an Introduction by JAS. E. THOROLD ROGERS, M.P. 4to, cloth, 10s. 6d. [Just ready.]

CICERO DE ORATORE. With

Introduction and Notes by AUGUSTUS S. WILKINS, M.A., Owens College, Manchester, Professor of Latin in the Victoria University. Book II. Demy 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE SACRED BOOKS of the EAST.

Translated by various Oriental Scholars, and Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER.

Vol. X., Part I.—The DHAMMAPADA, translated from the Pâli by F. MAX MÜLLER; Part II.

—The SUTTA NIPÂTA, translated from the Pâli by V. FAUSBÖLL; being Canonical Books of the Buddhists. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

Vol. XI.—BUDDHIST SUTTAS. Translated by T. W. RHYDS DAVIDS.

Part I., containing—

1. The Mahâ-parinibbâna Suttanta.
2. The Dhamma-kukka-ppavattana Sutta.
3. The Teviggâ Suttanta.
4. The Âkankheyya Sutta.
5. The Ketokhila Sutta.
6. The Mahâ-sudassana Suttanta.
7. The Sabbâsava Sutta.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

[In a few days.]

SOPHOCLES. Edited, with English

Notes and Introductions, by LEWIS CAMPBELL, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Greek in the University of St. Andrews. In 2 vols. Vol. II.—AJAX, ELECTRA, TRACHINIAE, PHILOCTETES, FRAGMENTS. 8vo, price 16s. [In a few days.]

A CYCLE of CELESTIAL OBJECTS

OBSERVED, REDUCED, and DISCUSSED by Admiral WM. H. F. SMITH, R.N., K.S.F., D.C.L. Revised, Condensed, and greatly Enlarged by GEORGE F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S., Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition. 8vo, 21s. [In a few days.]

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE,

Oxford University Press Warehouse, 7, PATERNOSTER-ROW.

DAVID DOUGLAS'S

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

CAPTAIN TROTTER'S JOURNEY TO FEZ
Immediately, 1 vol., square demy 8vo, 14s.

OUR MISSION to the COURT of MAROCCO in 1880, under Sir JOHN DRUMMOND HAY, K.C.B., Minister Plenipotentiary at Tangier, and Envoy Extraordinary to His Majesty the Sultan of Morocco. By Captain PHILIP TROTTER, 93rd Highlanders. Illustrated from Photographs by the Hon. D. Lawless, Rifle Brigade.

CAPTAIN ST. JOHN'S ADVENTURES IN CHINA AND JAPAN.

1 vol., small demy 8vo, with Maps and Illustrations, 12s.

NOTES and SKETCHES from the WILD

COASTS of NIPON. With Chapters on Cruising after Pirates in Chinese Waters. By HENRY C. ST. JOHN, Captain R.N.

"One of the most charming books of travel that has been published for some time."—"Scotsman."

"There is a great deal more in the book than natural history. . . . His pictures of life and manners are quaint and effective, and the more so from the writing being natural and free from effort."—"Athenæum."

III.

LIEUT. ROBERTSON'S AFGHANISTAN.

Immediately, 1 vol., small crown 8vo, with Maps.

KURAM, KABUL, and KANDAHAR: being a Brief Record of the Impressions in Three Campaigns under General ROBERTS. By Lieut. ROBERTSON, 8th, "The King's" Regiment.

"Vouchsafe, to such as have not read the story, that I may prompt them; and of such as have, I humbly pray them to admit the excuse of time, of numbers, and due course of things, which cannot in their huge and proper life be here presented."—"KING HENRY V."

IV.

COMPLETION of MR. SKENE'S CELTIC SCOTLAND.

3 vols., demy 8vo, with Maps, £2 5s.

CELTIC SCOTLAND: a History of Ancient

Alban. By WILLIAM F. SKENE. Book I., Vol. I., History and Ethnology. Book II., Vol. II., Church and Culture. Book III., Vol. III., Land and People.

"All students, not only in this country, but throughout the world, who are interested in the history of the Celtic race, will welcome this fresh contribution from one of the most zealous and able of their fellow-labourers."—"Athenæum."

V.

DR. MITCHELL'S RHIND LECTURES IN ARCHAEOLOGY.

1 vol., demy 8vo, with 148 Woodcuts, 10s.

THE PAST in the PRESENT: What is

Civilisation? Being the Rhind Lectures in Archaeology. Delivered in 1876 and 1878. By ARTHUR MITCHELL, M.D., LL.D., &c., Secretary to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland.

"Few more interesting archaeological works have lately been published than the ten 'Rhind Lectures' which make up Dr. Mitchell's volume, 'The Past in the Present.' We must thank him heartily for the manner and method of his book, for the curious and valuable facts which he has collected from personal observation, and for the admirable woodcuts which adorn as well as illustrate his volume."—"Saturday Review."

VI.

MR. ANDERSON'S RHIND LECTURES IN ARCHAEOLOGY.

1 vol., demy 8vo, with Eighty-four Wood Engravings and Three Quarter Diagrams of Celtic Ornamentation, 12s.

SCOTLAND in EARLY CHRISTIAN

TIMES. By JOSEPH ANDERSON, Keeper of the National Museum of the Antiquities of Scotland.

"We know of no work within the reach of all students so completely realising its professions, and we can confidently recommend to the architect, artist, and antiquary, young and old, this volume on Celtic art in Scotland."—"British Architect and Engineer."

VII.

MR. MILN'S EXCAVATIONS IN BRITANNY.

In the press, 1 vol., royal 8vo, illustrated with numerous Plans and Woodcuts.

EXCAVATIONS at CARNAC: a Record of Archaeological Researches in the Alignments of Kernario. By the late JAMES MILN, Author of "Researches in the Basseins and Mont St. Michael."

VIII.

RELICS of FRANKLIN'S EXPEDITION.

Immediately, 1 vol., post 8vo, with Facsimiles of the Record, and Irving's Medal.

A MEMORIAL SKETCH and a SELEC-

TION from the LETTERS of the late LIEUT. JOHN IRVING, R.N., of H.M.S. "Terror," in Sir John Franklin's Expedition to the Arctic Regions. Edited by BENJAMIN DELL, F.R.S.E.

IX.

MEMOIRS of a SCOTTISH FARMER.

Now ready, 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

A SKETCH of the LIFE of GEORGE HOPE of Fenton Baras. Compiled by his DAUGHTER.

"One of the most successful of Scottish farmers, the late Mr. George Hope of Fenton Baras, is well entitled to have his biography placed before the world."—"Scotsman."

"The book has, of course, a primary interest for the cultivators of the soil, embodying, as it does, the ripe fruits of Mr. Hope's observations and experience."—"North British Daily Mail."

X.

PROFESSOR HODGSON ON WORDS.

In the press, 1 thick vol., crown 8vo.

THE USES and MISUSES of ENGLISH

WORDS. Illustrated from the Writings of English Authors from the Fourteenth Century to Our Own Time. By the late W. B. HODGSON, LL.D., Professor of Political Economy in the University of Edinburgh.

XI.

REV. GEORGE GILFILLAN.

Immediately, 1 vol., demy 8vo.

SELECTIONS from the UNPUBLISHED

MS. of the late GEORGE GILFILLAN, Dundee. Edited by FRANK HENDERSON, M.A.

EDINBURGH: DAVID DOUGLAS.

BENTLEYS' FAVOURITE NOVELS.

Each Work can be had separately, price 6s., of all Book-sellers in Town or Country, and in Melbourne of GEORGE ROBERTSON.

MRS. HENRY WOOD'S NOVELS.

East Lynne. (100th Thousand.)	Lord Oakburn's Daughters.
The Channings. (35th Thousand.)	Master of Greylands.
Anne Hereford.	Mildred Arkoll.
Bessy Rane.	Mrs. Halliburton's Troubles.
Dene Hollow.	Orville College.
Edina.	Oswald Cray.
Elster's Folly.	Parkwater.
George Canterbury's Will.	Pomeroy Abbey.
Johnny Ludlow. (First Series.)	Red Court Farm.
Johnny Ludlow. (Second Series.)	Roland Yorke.
Lady Adelaide.	Shadow of Ashlydyat.
Life's Secret, A.	St. Martin's Eve.
	Trevlyn Hold.
	Verner's Pride.
	Within the Maze.

RHODA BROUGHTON'S NOVELS.

Nancy.	Second Thoughts.
Not Wisely, but Too Well.	Cometh up as a Flower.
Red as a Rose as She.	Good-bye, Sweetheart!
	Joan.

JANE AUSTEN'S NOVELS.

The only Complete Edition.

Northanger Abbey, and Persuasion.	Emma.
Pride and Prejudice.	Lady Susan, and The Watsons.
Sense and Sensibility.	Mansfield Park.

MRS. ALEXANDER'S NOVELS.

The Heritage of Langdale.	The Wooing o't.
Her Dearest Foe.	Which shall it be?

MRS. EDWARDES' NOVELS.

Susan Fielding.	Leah: a Woman of Fashion.
Steven Lawrence: Yeoman.	Ought We to Visit Her?

MRS. PARR'S NOVELS.

Adam and Eve.	Dorothy Fox.
---------------	--------------

MISS FOTHERGILL'S NOVELS.

Probation.	The First Violin.
	The Wellfields.

By MARCUS CLARKE.

For the Term of his Natural Life.

By VARIOUS AUTHORS.

The Three Clerks.	By Anthony Trollope.
Nellie's Memoirs.	By Miss Carey.
Olive Vanece.	By Mrs. Notley.
Breezie Langton.	By Hawley Smart.

By HELEN MATHERS.

Comin' thro' the Rye.	Cherry Ripe.
-----------------------	--------------

BENTLEYS' FOREIGN FAVOURITE NOVELS.

Each Work can be had separately, price 6s., of all Book-sellers in Town or Country, and in Melbourne of GEORGE ROBERTSON.

By MRS. AUGUSTUS CRAVEN.

A Sister's Story.

By E. WERNER.

Success: and How he Won It.	Under a Charm.
-----------------------------	----------------

STANDARD WORKS ON MODERN COOKERY.

FRANCATELLI'S MODERN COOK. Containing 1,500 Recipes and Sixty Illustrations. Twenty-fifth Edition. In 8vo, price 12s.

FRANCATELLI'S COOK'S GUIDE. Containing 1,000 Recipes and Forty Illustrations. Forty-sixth Thousand. In crown 8vo, price 5s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,
NEW BURLINGTON STREET,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

SMITH, ELDER, & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

Now ready (One Shilling), No. 257.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For MAY.

With Illustrations by GEORGE DU MAURIER and W. SMALL.

CONTENTS.

A GRAPE from a THORN. By JAMES PAYN. (With an Illustration.) Chap. XIX.—The Lost Locket. XX.—Mr. Alda's Love Story. XXI.—Blues in the Hotel. XXII.—The Invitation.

BABIES and SCIENCE.

A BISHOP'S CONFESSION.

"AT HOME" to the POOR.

FRANZ GRILLPARZER.

ONE YEAR in a GERMAN COOKERY SCHOOL.

LOVE the DEBT. (With an Illustration.) Chap. XIII.—A Proposal.

XIV.—Guardians. XV.—Mr. Robert Sugar.

MR. BRANDRAM'S SHAKESPEARE FOR THE YOUNG.

Large crown 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE.

Certain Selected Plays abridged for the Use of the Young.

By SAMUEL BRANDRAM, M.A. Oxon.

"Mr. Brandram has performed a somewhat difficult task with wonderful judgment and skill. He has solved the difficulty as to the best way in which Shakespeare can be reproduced for the use of young people. The result is a volume which ought to supersede all other editions for the use of young people, and we should be glad to think it had found a place on the bookshelf of every thoughtful student of English literature."—John Bull.

NEW VOLUME BY MISS THACKERAY (MRS. RICHMOND RITCHIE).

With Four Illustrations, crown 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

MISS WILLIAMSON'S DIVAGATIONS.

By MISS THACKERAY (MRS. RICHMOND RITCHIE).

Reprinted from the Cornhill Magazine, &c.

MR. J. A. SYMONDS' "RENAISSANCE IN ITALY."

In the press, 2 vols., demy 8vo, price 32s.

RENAISSANCE IN ITALY: Italian Literature.

By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS, M.A.,

Author of "Studies of the Greek Poets," "Sketches in Italy and Greece," &c.

Being Vols. IV. and V. of "Renaissance in Italy," and concluding the Work.

FARMING in a SMALL WAY. By James

LONG, Author of "Poultry for Prices and Profit," "The Goat," &c. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"We heartily recommend all who are interested in farming in a small way to secure it while there is yet time."—Gardener's Magazine.

"Mr. Long writes clearly and concisely, and has the knack of putting a great deal in a little room."—Land.

"A thoroughly practical book."—Graphic.

"A comprehensive volume of husbandry."—Daily Telegraph.

NEW NOVELS IN THE PRESS.

MRS. GEOFFREY. By the Author of

"Molly Bawn," "A Fairy Litten," "Phyllis," "Beauty's Daughters," &c. 3 vols., post 8vo. [In May.]

FOUR CROTCHETS to a BAR. By the Author of "The Gwilliams," 3 vols., post 8vo. [In May.]

ILLUSTRATED EDITIONS of POPULAR WORKS.

Handsomely bound in cloth gilt, each Volume containing Four Illustrations, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE SMALL HOUSE at ALLINGTON. By ANTHONY TROLLOPE.

FRAMLEY PARSONAGE. By ANTHONY TROLLOPE.

THE CLAVERINGS. By ANTHONY TROLLOPE.

TRANSFORMATION: a Romance. By NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE.

ROMANTIC TALES. By the Author of "John Halifax."

DOMESTIC STORIES. By the Author of "John Halifax."

NO NAME. By WILKIE COLLINS.

ARMADALE. By WILKIE COLLINS.

AFTER DARK. By WILKIE COLLINS.

MAUDE TALBOT. By HOLME LEE.

THE MOORS and the FENS. By Mrs. J. H. RIDDELL.

PUT YOURSELF in his PLACE. By CHARLES READE.

WIVES and DAUGHTERS. By Mrs. GASKELL.

NORTH and SOUTH. By Mrs. GASKELL.

SYLVIA'S LOVERS. By Mrs. GASKELL.

CRANFORD, and other Stories. By Mrs. GASKELL.

MARY BARTON, and other Stories. By Mrs. GASKELL.

RUTH, the GREY WOMEN, and other Stories. By Mrs. GASKELL.

LIZZIE LEIGH: a Dark Night's Work, and other Stories.

By Mrs. GASKELL.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & Co., 15, Waterloo-place.

REMINGTON'S

NEW BOOKS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

ON LATMOS: a Novel. By Fanny

AIKIN-KORTRIGHT, Author of "Anne Sherwood," "Waiting for the Verdict," "He that Overcometh," &c. 2 vols., 21s.

A STORY of AUTUMN. By Mrs.

COMYNS CARE, Author of "North Italian Folk." 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

"A story really interesting and charming."

Saturday Review.

"A decidedly pretty story, written in a graceful, unaffected way."—St. James's Gazette.

DIVIDED: a Novel. By the Author of "Shakespeare's Stories Simply Told." 2 vols., 21s.

"Sufficiently fresh and unbackneyed, and at the same time natural, to make it pleasant reading."—Athenaeum.

OUR SONS and DAUGHTERS: a Novel. From the French of ERNEST LEGOUVE. By E. MILLS. 2 vols., 21s.

"Always easy, graceful, and entertaining. . . . There is much homely wisdom in these volumes, and it is clothed in such an agreeable form that it can hardly fail to get a wide hearing."—Pall Mall Gazette.

IRELAND'S TRUE DAUGHTER:

a Novel. By MARCELLINA. Dedicated, by permission, to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

"The authoress has drawn a pleasant picture of a whole-hearted honest and courageous Irish girl."—Echo.

MY SISTER'S PRUSSIAN LOVER:

a Novel. By BOUTON D'OR. 2 vols., 21s.

"An unusually bright and readable story."—City Press.

WITH the IRREGULARS in the TRANSVAAL and ZULULAND. By W. H. TOMASON, late Adjutant of the Irregular Cavalry. 1 vol., 7s. 6d.

"This book is worth half-a-dozen of the cut-and-dried accounts of which we have had so many."—Graphic.

A TOUR through INDIA in LORD

CANNING'S TIME. By EUSTACE MEBERTH MARTIN. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE ADVENTURES of WILLIAM

JERMYN: a Novel. By the Author of "A Love's Gamut." 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

DOROTHY BROWN: a Novel. By

Mrs. LAWRENCE JONES. 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

SONG-BLOOM: a Volume of Poems.

By GEORGE BARLOW. 1 vol., handsomely bound, 7s. 6d.

"There are few of our living poets who possess a greater mastery than Mr. Barlow of form and metre." Scotsman, 9th April, 1881.

GRAND TOURS in MANY LANDS:

a Poem in Ten Cantos. By JOHN MCCOSH, M.D. Edin., F.R.G.S., Author of "Nuova Italia." 1 vol., 7s. 6d.

LONDON:

REMINGTON & CO., NEW BOND STREET, W.

SATURDAY, APRIL 30, 1881.

No. 469, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Memoirs of Prince Metternich. Edited by his son, Prince Richard, and Translated by Mrs. Alexander Napier. Vol. IV. (Bentley.)

THE fourth volume of Prince Metternich's Memoirs contains a very interesting collection of State papers which have an important bearing on the early stages of the Eastern Question, and are of a very different character from the usual contents of Parliamentary Blue-books or Ministerial Yellow-books. We have no wish in making this observation to disparage those modern devices for making generally known the results of diplomatic negotiations after they have been concluded; but such publications rarely afford any insight into the real motives which have influenced the respective Governments. They supply an excellent menu of the artistic combinations which a skilful diplomacy has achieved, but they rarely disclose the secrets of the diplomatic cuisine. It is otherwise with the memoranda and the despatches which Prince Richard Metternich has selected for publication in the present volume, which embrace a period from 1823 to 1829—a most eventful epoch for the Christian races of Eastern Europe. The position of those races was peculiar. While the Catholic Powers of Europe had no sympathy with them on the ground of religion, as being members of what they regarded as a schismatic Church, the Emperor Alexander I. had never any real sympathy with the Greek insurrection of 1821, but he felt an interest in the Greeks by reason of their religion; and the Greeks, as persecuted Christians, had some just claim to his support in virtue of treaties between Russia and the Ottoman Porte.

Prince Metternich with his usual sagacity foresaw, in 1822, that a new era for Eastern Europe had commenced with the Greek insurrection. In a memorandum which he submitted to the Emperor Alexander I. as early as April 19, 1822, he expressed his conviction that it was desirable for the Allied Cabinets to unite in impressing on the Porte the necessity of consolidating the relations between the Ottoman empire and its Christian subjects, and of putting an end to the troubles and disturbances which constantly threatened the tranquillity of the neighbouring empires. But neither the Porte nor the Greek insurgents were disposed to listen to the friendly counsels of the Allied Powers; and a despatch from Prince Metternich addressed to Prince Esterhazy, in London, on October 17, 1824, discloses a state of affairs, as they then stood, which has almost its parallel in the present day.

"The Porte, like the Greeks, will not yield to the proposals, however just and wise they may be. The Divan will refuse from habit, from indomitable pride, from its natural spirit of jealousy, which constantly prevents the very services which the Powers wish to render to it from being regarded otherwise than as a pretension on their part to dictate as to its internal affairs, or as a mask to cover some secret and ambitious views. The Turks, in short, always see in an affair what is not there, and never see what is there in reality. The Greeks, on the other hand, will not listen to a proposal which does not rest on the principle of political independence, or, what comes to the same thing, which does not show that the Powers have determined to regard the Ottoman empire as extinct in Europe. But even if a definite arrangement of the affairs of the East is prevented by insurmountable difficulties, it is still of the greatest importance to prevent new and unhappy complications in the future—complications which the united action of the Allied Powers can alone prevent."

The entry of Mr. Canning into the Cabinet of Lord Liverpool as Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs led to a change in the policy of Great Britain. The Greek insurrection had become in 1824 a question of fact beyond the domain of diplomacy to change the aspect of it. But, while Austria, Russia, and Prussia were only prepared to announce to the Porte that, in case of a peremptory refusal on its part of concessions deemed by them to be indispensable, they saw the necessity of admitting the independence of the Morea and the islands; Mr. Canning declined to take any part in the Conferences of St. Petersburg (1824), except on the positive basis of supporting the declaration of the Greeks themselves against any pacification which should not be grounded on their political independence. So matters remained until the death of the Emperor Alexander I., which happened somewhat unexpectedly towards the end of 1825, after a reign of twenty-five years. The accession of his brother Nicholas to the throne of the Czars was full of difficulties to himself, and at the same time was full of hope for the Greeks. The Emperor Alexander had destroyed Old Russia by introducing into his empire the refinements of modern civilisation after the pattern of Western Europe, of which the civilisation had deep roots in the aristocratic constitution of the respective States, whereas in Russia the aristocracy properly speaking did not form a superior class, but the superior class consisted only of the Imperial Court and its surroundings, and, according to Prince Metternich's view, he had failed to create a New Russia. One of the first steps of the Emperor Nicholas was to adopt a new foreign policy and to separate himself from Austria and Prussia on the Eastern Question. With this object he authorised the signature of the Protocol of April 4, 1826, which the Duke of Wellington negotiated at St. Petersburg, and under which Greece was to remain a dependency of the Porte, paying to it an annual fixed tribute, but governed by authorities of its own choice and enjoying full liberty of conscience and of commerce. The Courts of Vienna, Paris, and Berlin were invited to join in a convention to carry out this Protocol. Austria and Prussia, however, declined any direct interference in the affairs of Greece; and out of this Protocol grew up the triple alliance between Great Britain, France, and Russia under the Convention of July 6, 1827, which culminated in the Battle of Navarino (October 28, 1827), an event as destructive to the naval power of the Porte as the sea-fight of Tchesme had been in 1770. Mr. Canning had died in the summer before the Battle of Navarino, and Lord Dudley was Foreign Secretary. The tidings of the affair of Navarino had somewhat shocked the public sentiment of Western Europe, as the three Powers whose navies had co-operated to destroy the Turco-Egyptian fleet were avowedly at peace with the Porte, and their alliance was professedly for the purpose of mediation between the Porte and the Greeks. On the other hand, the news was received with great rejoicing and triumph at St. Petersburg, as the event was in fact the creation of a new era for Eastern Europe, and the Ottoman empire had ceased for a moment to belong to itself, Constantinople being for a time defenceless.

The Protocol of April 4, 1826, above alluded to, is the famous Protocol which is known in the present day as "the self-denying Protocol," by reason of its fifth article, the authorship of which has been revealed for the first time in these Memoirs. The article in question is of this tenor:—

"Neither of the two contracting parties will seek in this arrangement any increase of territory, or exclusive influence, or commercial advantage for its subjects, which shall not be equally attainable by every other nation."

The authorship of this article was disclosed by the Emperor Nicholas himself in an audience which he gave to Count Zichy, the Austrian ambassador at St. Petersburg, on April 22, 1828, and of which Count Zichy has given a full account in his despatch to Prince Metternich of April 24 (p. 487). It appears that it was at the express request of the Emperor himself that the Russian negotiators of the Protocol drew up and inserted the fifth article in the said Protocol; and that the motive of the Emperor in making this request was to assure himself that England had not in view any commercial advantages or predominant influence for herself. The Duke of Wellington, after some days of reflection, accepted the Emperor's proposal; and the article has been stereotyped as it were, and has been inserted at the request of England in her turn in most, if not all, of the subsequent treaties of alliance between Russia and the Western Powers which have had in view a course of concerted action in any branch of the Eastern Question. A correspondence of Earl Granville with the Ministers of the five Powers, suggesting their adoption, in common with England, of an identical Protocol, which was in fact agreed to in the autumn of last year, has been recently laid before Parliament by command of the Queen; and the treaties themselves have been published in Sir E. Hertslet's most useful work, The Map of Europe by Treaty.

Within two months after the Battle of Navarino the Sultan issued a Hatti-Scheriff designating Russia as the irreconcilable enemy of the Ottoman empire and of its Faith, and imputing to Russia the insurrection of Greece and the defection of two friendly Powers, France and England, and finally calling all Musulmans to arms in defence of the Faith, the Throne, and the Empire. The Emperor Nicholas replied by the circular note of February 20, 1828, and by an order to the Russian guards to march. The despatch of Count Zichy to Prince Metternich of April 24, 1828, above alluded to, is of the greatest interest, as it contains the explanations which the Emperor Nicholas himself made to the Austrian ambassador respecting his general policy, and the point of view from which he regarded the duties imposed upon himself. The first campaign of Russia against the Porte was unfavourable to Russia, as the Czar made the capital mistake of attacking the enemy with insufficient forces, believing that the Porte would yield to fear. But the second campaign saw the Russian standards planted victoriously under the walls of Adrianople; and the dénouement of this important stage of the Eastern Question was accomplished by the Peace of Adrianople (September 14, 1829). The views of the Austrian State-Chancellor as to the result of the Russian campaign are set out in a despatch addressed to Prince Esterhazy at London on September 22, 1829.

"The Ottoman Porte is shaken to its foundations. A State condemned to owe its existence to what the mass of the public pleases to call moderation on the part of the conqueror has ceased to be counted among independent States. Some great unforeseen revolution, or some unexpected war, may suddenly raise it from its decadence, but neither the Powers nor the Sultan can form any calculation on such an event."

Such a war, however, did arise in 1854, but the Ottoman empire was too much disorganised for the Porte to take advantage of it.

Meanwhile, before the Peace of Adrianople had been concluded, the victorious progress of the Russian arms by land had warned the Porte that it would be advisable for it to accept the mediation of the three Allied Powers for the pacification of Greece rather than to fall into the hands of Russia alone. The Porte accordingly signified to the ambassadors of France and of Great Britain at Constantinople its willingness to acquiesce in any conditions which the Conference of the three Allied Powers at London might resolve upon. The Powers, accordingly, decided to amend their previous arrangements, which had contemplated an administrative independence of the Morea and the islands under the suzerainty of the Porte; and they agreed that Greece should enjoy complete political independence under a Sovereign Prince, who should not be chosen from the family of any of the Allied Powers. To this amendment the Porte agreed. Thus the policy which had originated in 1824 with Mr. Canning received, with some modifications, its unexpected fulfilment.

Forthwith, several Princes of Germany began to covet the Greek throne, and Naples had its candidate in competition with Bavaria. When Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg accepted conditionally the invitation of the three Allied Powers to become the hereditary Sovereign of the new State, Prince Metternich could not refrain from writing to Count Apponyi, in Paris, and saying:

"I hope that the choice of a Regent will soon be settled. Prince Leopold must have been stung by a tarantula to wish for this place. To reign over emptiness is a dreary occupation; and yet, if Greece offered nothing but emptiness, there would be the means of coming to an understanding. But this is not so, for she is, on the contrary, full of all kinds of disorder."

These observations had, no doubt, reference to the deplorable results of the misgovernment of the inchoate Hellenic State by its President, Count Capo d'Istria. This Corfiote politician had been one of the most trusted advisers of the Emperor Alexander I. in many important matters of his foreign policy for some years after the Peace of 1815, but he had lost the confidence of that Sovereign some time before his death. He availed himself, however, of the accession of the Emperor Nicholas to present himself once more at the Court of the Czar, and to assure the new Autocrat of his devotion to Russian interests. His language to Admiral Miaulis on board the frigate Hellas on his way back to Greece has been placed on record in the Memoir published by Frederic Thiersch at Leipzig in 1833. "I have cleverly caught those simpletons in London and in Paris, but it is to the North that we must turn ourselves. Our true friends are to be found there." Much might have been done by Count Capo d'Istria to lay a sound foundation for the future happiness of the Hellenic State; but he sowed tares instead of wheat, and he introduced into his adopted country many of the corruptions of the Russian system of government with which he was familiar. He perished at last by the daggers of the unfortunate Princes of Maina; but we must not anticipate events which will probably be noticed in a future volume of the Memoirs.

The limits of our space have constrained us to omit all notice of several important events of general European interest on which there are valuable papers in the present volume. The significance, however, of those events has been in a manner transitory, whereas the Eastern Question is still a diplomatic perplexity. Prince Metternich had a profound conviction of the incapacity of States professing Islamism to conduct themselves according to the moral rules of Christendom. On the other hand, he had great influence with the Turk, particularly with the Sultan Mahmoud, which was founded in a singular circumstance. The Prince, in an autograph letter to the Sultan, quoted a sentence from the Koran in support of his advice. The Sultan at once sent for the Austrian internuncio, and observed to him, "I was not aware before now that Prince Metternich was a Musulman." The internuncio demurred to the Sultan's observation, upon which the latter replied, "I have the proof, for the Prince has quoted to me a sentence from the Koran." Upon the internuncio assuring the Sultan that his conclusion was not well founded, the Sultan observed, "I see, then, how the matter is—the Prophet has inspired him; he will become a true believer." We repeat this anecdote upon the authority of a letter from the Prince himself, and it seems to show on what delicate hinges diplomatic influence in the East may turn. The mistake of the Sultan, however, was quite as venial as that of Pope Leo XII., who, misled by certain expressions of the Prince, in which he had mentioned to Cardinal Albani, the Papal Legate at Vienna, that the colour of "red" was extremely pleasing to him, sent word to the Prince that if he really desired the red hat he would propose him in the next secret consistory as a candidate for election into the College of Cardinals. "You may well imagine," adds the Prince, in a private letter to Gentz (p. 185), "the answer which I gave to the friendly interpreter of thoughts which I had never entertained."

TRAVERS TWISS.

English Odes. Selected by Edmund W. Gosse. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

"APPLES of gold in baskets of silver"—shapely fruits of English poetry in the comeliest little volume. The spirit of Gray receives amends for the wrongs of a century since. "Mr. Dodsley," he wrote to Horace Walpole, "might, methinks, have spared the Graces in his frontispiece, if he chose to be economical, and dressed his authors in a little more decent raiment—not in whited-brown paper and distorted characters, like an old ballad. I am ashamed to see myself." The two large-limbed young women existing beautifully in the frontispiece of English Odes would probably have gratified the fastidious poet more than did Dodsley's Graces; and as to type and paper, not only Mr. Dodsley but Strawberry Hill is made to look impoverished.

Mr. Gosse's task of selection was not quite simple, for he had to find an answer to the question, "What is an ode?" Everything Gray wrote, though it were but "a receipt to make apple-dumplings," was called an ode by Walpole. A large proportion of English odes may best be described as poems in which the writer sets out from nothing and arrives nowhere. But these are not the poems Mr. Gosse wished to present to his reader. Something of clearness, perhaps, may be gained by such a division of lyrical poetry as that of Rudolf Gottschall—"Die Lyrik der Empfindung, das Lied; die Lyrik der Begeisterung, die Ode; die Lyrik der Reflexion, die Elegie;" but how shall we define Begeisterung? On the whole, we shall hardly do better than Mr. Gosse, who writes, "We take as an ode any strain of enthusiastic and exalted lyrical verse, directed to a fixed purpose and dealing progressively with one dignified theme."

The selection ranges from Spenser to Mr. Swinburne, and includes our highest names in lyrical poetry. Spenser's Epithalamium stands, Mr. Gosse thinks, by itself, having no English progenitor nor any tolerable successor. It certainly differs as widely as possible from the "Epithalamie" as described by the author of The Art of English Poesie, 1589; and Spenser's refrain, changing from the echoing rejoicings of the bridal day to the silence of night, seems imagined almost in opposition to those loud and shrill night-songs of Puttenham's treatise (if Puttenham's it was), accompanied by the casting of pots full of nuts upon the floor, and the "wanton scambling" and catching after the nuts of the gentlewomen and others come to honour the marriage. The importer of the ode, as we usually understand it, into English, says Mr. Gosse, was Ben Jonson; and it may be noted that all his odes were not of the Horatian type, written in regular stanzas of like construction. He wrote also that Pindaric ode to the memory of Sir Lucius Cary and Sir H. Morison, with its "strophe or turn," "antistrophe or counterturn," and "epode or stand"—an ode of which one strophe at least is well known to all lovers of poetry—

"It is not growing like a tree

In bulk, doth make men better be," &c.

Jonson had lost his first son, "the child of his right hand and joy," "his best piece of poetry;" and that strong, combative man, who also lamented so tenderly little dead Salathiel Pavy, had learnt in his own life how the lily, though it fall early and die, may be fairer than the oak which endures during centuries to wither at last.

Cowley, therefore, with Jonson's ode expressly called "Pindaric" before him, might well have escaped that error of supposing that Pindar's characteristic was a self-regulating enthusiasm. And yet we can hardly regret an error which gave us those delightful lines wherein Cowley pictures the Pindaric way of life—the law of liberty:

"If life should a well-order'd poem be (In which he only hits the white

Who joins true profit with the best delight)

The more heroic strain let others take;

Mine the Pindaric way I'll make;

The matter shall be grave, the numbers loose and free.

It shall not keep one settled pace of time.

In the same tune it shall not always chime.

Nor shall each day just to his neighbour rhyme;

A thousand liberties it shall dispense,

And yet shall manage all without offence,

Or to the sweetness of the sound, or greatness of the sense."

Mr. Gosse calls attention to "A Discourse on the Pindarique Ode," by Congreve (which he styles the "finest fragment of poetical criticism that our Augustan age has left us"), recommending the true Pindaric manner to English writers of the ode. It was from his friend Gilbert West's translations of Pindar, and from his own study rather than from Congreve's precepts, that Gray acquired the Pindaric manner of his Progress of Poesy and The Bard. Mr. Gosse errs, I think, in supposing that Mason favoured the irregular ode. The influence of Gray and of Akenside helped to keep him from a slovenly Pindarism; and I believe the few irregular odes which Mason wrote are supposed by him to be justified by having been composed for music. Certain it is that it was in reply to some setting forth of strict doctrine by Mason that William Preston (of whom Coleridge in an early volume spoke with much respect as a legislator for the Sonnet) wrote his "Thoughts on Lyric Poetry" (Poet. Works, vol. ii., ed. 1793), in which he skilfully defends his own position as a composer of the irregular ode. Mason had urged that the facility of the irregular ode tempts unskilful writers to produce much worthless verse. This is true, and, mediocrity allowed, every licence falls low indeed. But it is not difficult to attain mere technical correctness in regular forms, while these may to a certain extent conceal the absence of really harmonious versification, thus, in a different way offering a temptation to mediocrity. To write a true poem either in the manner of Gray's Bard or Coleridge's France is not, under any circumstances, excessively easy. The modulation of the irregular ode by a true poet is a piece of art perhaps more hazardous and subtle than any mere lacing-up of imagery, as Preston expresses it, "in the strait waistcoat of strophe, antistrophe, and epode." Our attitude, at least as readers, should be that of hospitality towards all that is excellent; and Mr. Gosse has proved by his selection that English poetry must admit the verse that moulds itself like fruit, and the verse that gathers and disparts like clouds loose and blown upon by upper airs of song.

The choice of poems in this volume shows excellent judgment. Everyone probably would wish to see some favourite piece included which he will not find here; but hardly anyone would wish to lose anything that Mr. Gosse has given. It is to be regretted that some inaccuracies of statement in the notes, and some provoking errors in the text, detract from the worth of a book made for delight. Of such errors, the most unlucky are land for lead in Collins's Ode to Evening (which professes to follow the 1748 text of Dodsley, but does not precisely do this), and the naught for not in Shelley's "Pine for what is not."

EDWARD DOWDEN.

At Home in Fiji. By Miss C. F. Gordon Cumming. In 2 vols. (Blackwood.)

LADIES have in our own day attained to the highest position in literature and art, and their claims to enter on new fields of work has been one of the much-talked-of questions of the time. Those who would confine the direction of women's work would not be likely to grant that travelling in remote lands and exploring unknown regions were among the suitable class of employments for them; yet in this, which might be deemed an almost exclusively masculine line of action, ladies have been lately doing great things, and making reputations for themselves. Sir Samuel Baker ascribes a great deal of his success to his wife; Miss Bird has been wandering among the untrodden paths of Japan; Lady Florence Dixie has been riding through Patagonia; Miss North has been in all the four quarters of the globe, and set up her easel in the most out-of-the-way spots. With such examples before us, who will say what women can or cannot do, or what they ought or ought not to do?

To the names already given must be added that of Miss Gordon Cumming, a lady who has travelled in many climes, and has had experiences of "roughing it" such as few of the stronger sex can boast of. From the Hebrides to the Himalayas, which appeared in 1876, gives an account of her movements in these two widely separate regions. Since the Himalayan excursion she has explored some of the unfrequented spots in Ceylon, and slept for the night on the summit of Adam's Peak to see and sketch the sunrise from that point. A lucky chance enabled her to visit Fiji; and she has penetrated to unknown regions in these tropical isles, spending more than two years in her wanderings there, observing, writing, and sketching. The return journey was made through China, Japan, and America, the whole expedition lasting about five years. Miss Gordon Cumming has brought back a collection of very elaborate and careful sketches, copies of some of which appear in her book; and she has accumulated a stock of information about Fiji, to which subject—and some excursions in New Zealand—the two volumes just published are limited. When Sir Arthur Gordon went out as Governor of Fiji, Miss Gordon Cumming accompanied Lady Gordon; and Government House at Levuka became her head-quarters. But whether the title of the book means being "at home" there, or when she was wandering over the islands, is somewhat uncertain, for she seems to have been quite at home travelling in the native craft, living alone in the villages, attending missionary meetings, at native weddings, sketching under umbrellas, or bathing in lonely pools, with no other attendant than a Fijian girl. A good deal of travelling was done in company of the Rev. Mr. Langham, the head of the Wesleyan Mission, and his wife; and the book will be considered of some value to those interested in the missionary cause, as it bears ample witness to what has been accomplished in Fiji. There are already 900 Wesleyan churches, by whose influence the people have been changed from polygamous cannibals into peaceful Christians. King Thakombau himself seems to carry a big Bible, which he likes to have always near, because, as he says, "it makes him feel so good." The Pacific Islands are being rapidly transformed. Missionaries are changing their religion; ships bring muskets and other European arms, which supplant the primitive war clubs; the simple and scant costume of the region is undergoing modifications; the mythology and folk-lore are dying out. Everything will, in a few years, be altered. And, as we are now beginning to appreciate the value of a knowledge of people living in rude conditions of civilisation as throwing light on the prehistoric period of our own civilisation, it becomes of importance to have as many details as possible of races like the Fijians.

Previous to 1835, when the first missionaries arrived, cannibalism was the custom. The cover of Miss Gordon Cumming's book is decorated with a representation of a "Cannibal Fork," such as was exclusively used for eating human flesh. Some of these forks belonging to the chiefs were "eighteen inches long, of dark polished wood, with handles richly carved." The ovens still exist in which the cannibal cookery was carried on; and many details of the process, and the particular kind of vegetables eaten with such food, are given. One chief gave the authoress his opinion on the relative merits of pork and human flesh, expressing his preference for the latter, and declaring "There's no comparison between them!" The embracing of the missionaries' religion, which necessitated the relinquishment of such a delicacy, becomes all the more meritorious on the part of the Fijians, who had "to be satisfied with inferior meat." The islanders have a very peculiar liquor which they drink, called yangona, made from a root of the same name—at least, that is one of the ingredients; the other, and the preponderating substance, may be guessed from an experiment made by Dr. Macgregor. The yangona root is first chewed in the mouth by young men, water is then poured on the pieces and strained off through a piece of hibiscus fibre. "A turbid, yellowish fluid is thus produced, in taste resembling rhubarb and magnesia flavoured with sal volatile." Dr. Macgregor's experiment was this: he had six ounces of the root chewed in the usual manner, and on being weighed afterwards it had increased to seventeen ounces! Some of the gentlemen at Government House had begun to have a liking for yangona, but this experiment, we are told, rather altered their appreciation for the Fijian tippie. The yangona is drank at all ceremonials of state; and King Thakombau's great yangona bowl, with his magnificent war club, were presented to Queen Victoria, through Sir Hercules Robinson, on the cession of Fiji to her Majesty. These interesting articles are now in the safe keeping of the British Museum, in Mr. Frank's department.

Mr. Ed. Thomas, who has contributed a very valuable paper to the Transactions of the Royal Asiatic Society on the position of women in the East in olden time, will find at p. 236, vol. ii., of Miss Gordon Cumming's work, that in Fiji "all rank comes through the mother," this being exactly the rule which, as Mr. Thomas insists, was followed in the East at a former period, and which he illustrates from coins and monuments. This, with other customs, tends to show some connexion in the past between the natives of the Pacific and the Asiatic continent. Cutting off a joint of the little finger as a sign of grief and mourning, a custom among the ladies of Fiji, belongs to the class of ceremonial institutions about which Mr. Herbert Spencer has accumulated a mass of evidence.

Miss Gordon Cumming's trip to New Zealand enabled her to visit a wonderful volcanic region, where there are numerous geysers and strange phenomena of a sulphurous and chemical nature; and she indulged in mud baths, and frightened her Maori guides by her venturesomeness. The Maoris, it would seem, after having been Christianised, have relapsed into something like their original faith. The churches which were constructed for their use when Christians are now deserted. The same took place in California. The Franciscans had converted large masses of the Indians, baptised them, married them, and kept them at work. While watched over by the monks, the converts did well; but as soon as the guiding influence was withdrawn, the Indians returned to their previous condition.

At Home in Fiji is a publication of letters written to relatives and friends at home. Being penned on the spot, these letters give what we may take for granted to be faithful descriptions of what the authoress saw around her. As to their vividness and freshness all readers can judge for themselves; the talented traveller need not be afraid of the public verdict on this head.

WILLIAM SIMPSON.

The Death of Themistocles, and other Poems.
By John Nichol. (Glasgow: MacLehose.)

In this volume Prof. Nichol has included a "dramatic fragment" of some length, and a considerable number of miscellaneous poems ranging in date over the last quarter of a century. "The Death of Themistocles" is in blank verse, and deals with the well-known story, though Prof. Nichol has wisely suppressed the bull's blood. It opens with a dialogue between Themistocles and Asia, his daughter, in which he tells her the story of his wrongs. Then his son Cleophantus arrives from Athens, full of glowing patriotism and admiration for the city which Pericles has begun to make magnificent, as Themistocles had begun to make it great. Cleophantus and his sister Nicomache vehemently, but for a long time vainly, combat the ill-will of their father towards his native country. He is on the point of accepting the offers, or rather obeying the commands, of Artaxerxes, when his nephew Phraortes arrives from Cyprus with news of Cimon's death. Themistocles accepts this act of Nemesis with a rather savage complacency, but it partially disarms him, and he resolves on the course which he historically adopted. There is much excellent verse in the play, as here—

"When Cyrus' son, Cambyzes, dying lay
Beyond the Tigris, in the morning land,
With all the fury faded from his face,
And all his kingship, ere the close, returned."

And here—

"THEM. Accepting our exchange,
The land of memory for the land of hope.
ASIA. Yet memory's music lingers; hope decays."

And here—

"I heard the wind through all Dodona's oaks Make surge of oracles."

But perhaps the greatest merit of the piece is the complete manner in which the character of Themistocles is brought out and illustrated in its weakness as well as in its strength.

Prof. Nichol indulges in elaborate description of events and places, which he has justified by notes. In one of these there is a slip of memory which would be worth rectifying in a future edition. In a note on the story of the end of Pausanias, Prof. Nichol says: "Thucydides tells the story. The Ephors listened while Pausanias was telling his treason to a suborned slave, and then sat by the temple, immaculate, like the Inquisition, from the effusion of blood, till he was starved to death." This seems, though perhaps Prof. Nichol does not intend it, to imply that the process was continuous, whereas the overheard confession was in the precincts of the Temple of Poseidon, at Taenarus, and the attempted arrest was some time afterwards, ἐν τῇ πόλει, where Pausanias, on his return, was warned by a nod from one of the Ephors, and sought refuge in the Temple of Athena Chalcoecus.

"The Death of Themistocles" is succeeded by a considerable number of miscellaneous poems. Most of these are classed in three batches—Pictures by the Way, In Memoriam, and Miscellaneous and Political. The second is, in our judgment, the best. Some of Prof. Nichol's funeral verses are admirable.

Here, for instance, is a sonnet which must have been written quite recently:—

"THOMAS CARLYLE.

"Sirius has ceased from out our firmament:
Of that proud star bereft, we grope our way Through darker nights and dawns more dull and grey.
Mentor and master! Meteor spirit, blent
Of tears and battle-music; passion-rent,
Yet, crowned by years, a lamp of constant ray
To shipwrecked hearts and weary souls astray.
To what far isles is now thy message sent?
Cassandra prophet, cleaving through the cloud
With iron scourge of coward compromise,
Thou stood'st on Sinai's heights, to call aloud
Lightning and doom on all the world of lies.
Herculean hydra-layer; all thy days
Are gathered in a sunset storm of praise."

We have only two emendations to propose here, "crowd" for "cloud" and "for coward compromise" instead of the present ambiguous "of coward compromise." Perhaps it is no part of the reviewer's duty to suggest such things; but just now, when the "storm of praise" has given place to an equally thoughtless and infinitely more irrational storm of blame, we cannot help wishing to free a most eloquent and poetical tribute to the late ruler of English letters from any chance of verbal objection.

Another excellent poem in the same division is headed "Intercession."

"Once more,
Look down upon me from thy starry throne!
Save me from out this darkness darker grown:
Still let thy spirit move,
With its redeeming presence as of yore,
Making the spells of peace, of love,
Return once more."

"Once more,
After long years of exile, may I turn
Back to the land where ancient altars burn
And hallowed memories dwell;
Where, on the windings of a secret shore,
The murmuring surges sink and swell
For evermore."

"Once more,
Stretch thy sustaining hands from heaven's high dome
Over the wanderer as he wanders home;
Let their far brightness gleam,
Making my life that lies before
A something better than a sultry dream:
Forgive once more!"

It ought to be a truism to call the work of a regius professor of literature scholarly, but unfortunately it is not. To Prof. Nichol's work the term may be applied without fear of indiscretion. We have only one charge to bring against him as to the technical part of his work—that he is too apt to break his rhythms without sufficient cause. "Paganini's violin" occupying the place of a full eight-syllable line does not justify itself, nor "Thou front and emblem of the world's toil" as a decasyllabic verse, nor "Stets fest und treu" o'erwhelming vain "Gloire" as another. These are probably—at least the last two—mere oversights, but they make an unpleasant jar on the ear. The first is perhaps intentional, but it partakes of the nature of a trick—a thing to be more than all other things avoided in poetry. However, if Prof. Nichol chooses to claim a licence now and then, he may perhaps be said to have earned the indulgence, though, for our own part, we had rather that he had not exercised his right. His "Pictures by the Way" are frequently vivid and always in good taste. Of his obituary poems enough has been said; and of the "Miscellaneous and Political" division we shall only say that, though some readers may quarrel with the sentiments of this or that poem, the expression is usually a good deal above the average.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

Chapters in the History of Old St. Paul's.

By W. Sparrow Simpson, D.D., F.S.A. (Elliot Stock.)

THE Cathedral of St. Paul's has been fortunate in its historians; but, although much has been written, there was room for a book specially devoted to the history of the old building. Old St. Paul's was for centuries the very eye of London, the centre where all Londoners met; and that is a position to which its successor, the present building, never attained.

Dr. Simpson has long been known as an ardent collector of information respecting the body of which he is so worthy a member; and the task of constructing a satisfactory record of Old St. Paul's could not have fallen into fitter hands than those of the librarian, who has already issued two valuable works on the cathedral. The result of these labours is the book before us, which is full of fresh information treated in such a manner that we can read from cover to cover with pleasure.

The chapter on the personal staff of the Cathedral in 1450 brings before us very vividly the condition of a cathedral of the old foundation, and the large number of persons connected with it. Two of the minor canons were called cardinals (Cardinales cleri), an office which the author tells us is not found in any other church in England; and he should be an authority, as he holds one of these offices at the present time. Another of the minor canons was called the Pitantiary, and it was his duty to collect and to distribute the pittances and other payments due to the body. In the next chapter, on the Ritual and Services, we see what the staff, consisting of bishop, dean, canons residentiary, minor canons, vicars, chantry priests, and subordinate officers, did to keep up the religious life of the cathedral. In addition to the ordinary daily offices, there were the occasional services at the shrines for which the cathedral was renowned, one of the most famous being that of St. Erkenwald. The bishop was violently reprovved by Edward II. in 1323 for allowing services to be said before a tablet erected to the memory of Thomas Earl of Lancaster, a cousin of the King, who had been executed as a rebel. The tablet was taken down, and the wax taper which stood before it removed; but the people continued to make oblations at the pillar on which the tablet had hung in honour of a saint of their own canonisation.

A walk round Old St. Paul's shows us the handsome exterior, with its noble spire, and the churchyard, not originally a thoroughfare, but an enclosure, containing the Church of St. Gregory, the Lollard's Tower, used as a prison for heretics, the Bishop's Palace, the Deanery, Paul's Cross, the Chapter-house, and other buildings. The public road went round Ave Maria Lane and Paternoster Row into Cheapside.

The interior was full of interest. The grand nave was of remarkable length; and the middle aisle, famous as Paul's Walk, was usually crowded with visitors from eleven to twelve and from three to six. Between twelve and three a few loungers, who knew not where to get a dinner, remained, and were said to dine with Duke Humphrey, from the mistaken opinion that the noble tomb of Sir Guy Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, was that of the good Humphrey Duke of Gloucester, who was really buried at St. Albans. Beside the strollers in Paul's Walk there were those who made it a mere thoroughfare, and two small doors opposite each other offered peculiar facilities for such a use of it. Dr. Simpson deplors the desecration of the sacred building, not merely by the loungers, but by those who bought and sold within the church. This is certainly most repugnant to modern ideas; but we must bear in mind that in old times the nave of a church, as distinguished from the choir, was always looked upon as the chief meeting-place of the people. When the beauties of the nave, with its magnificent tombs, and the choir, with its stalls, altar, and reredos, have been sufficiently admired, there is still the crypt to be seen. Here were the Church of St. Faith, Jesus Chapel, the meeting-place of the wealthy Guild of Jesus, and various other chapels.

Having dealt fully with the chief features of the building and its surroundings, the author directs attention to the many personal associations connected with it. One of the first of these is "Wyclif in St. Paul's," when the great Reformer was summoned by Courtenay, Bishop of London, to appear before himself and the Metropolitan on a charge of heresy. Wyclif appeared supported by his powerful friends, John of Gaunt and Lord Percy, the Earl Marshal, and the scene is graphically described by Dr. Simpson.

Paul's Cross has four chapters devoted to its history, which is of most varied interest. Here Dr. Ralph Shaw preached in favour of Richard Duke of Gloucester, here Jane Shore did penance, here Latimer discoursed on the Plough and on the Ploughers, here Dean Nowell was snubbed by Queen Elizabeth, and here the first announcement of the defeat of the Spanish Armada was made. Isaac Pennington, the Puritan Lord Mayor, is credited with the destruction of Paul's Cross, but, apparently, it had been taken away before he was in power. In course of time the site was forgotten, and it was not until 1879 that it was discovered by Mr. Penrose, the Cathedral surveyor.

The last chapter of Dr. Simpson's book relates to St. Paul's during the Interregnum, when the revenues of the Cathedral were confiscated, the building converted into barracks, and the Deanery into a prison. This desecration ends the eventful history, and a few years afterwards the whole building and its surroundings were destroyed in the Fire of London.

We have already shown how good the author's matter is, and have only to add that the book is well printed and pleasant to the eye. We must, however, protest against the long esses, the use of which makes the print unnecessarily difficult to read. In respect to those words where s and f come together, as misfortune, transfer, &c., we believe it was the custom to use a short s, and that the use of a long s is really a blunder in these cases. In conclusion, we must compliment the binder on his successful imitation in cloth of old panelled calf.

HENRY B. WHEATLEY.

Fo'e'sle Yarns. (Macmillan.)

As the author says, "A yarn's a yarn;" and the distinction (I take it) between a yarn and an ordinary story is that a yarn is not told, but "spun." Not from the head but the central being of a man comes a yarn, as a web from a spider, and the length and tenuity of it is a matter as much of idiosyncrasy and accident as of design. Fo'e'sle Yarns are true yarns. The spinner is of course a sailor. He was a Manx fisherman till he fell in love, and found what a "terrible" thing it is, in consequence of which he went "forrin" and spun in a fo'e'sle; and when he came back Betsy Lee was dead, killed by the slander of that intelligent young man, "Misther Taylor"—a fact already well known to readers of Macmillan's Magazine.

Such readers will not be disappointed with the other yarns, all of which are "home," not "forrin." In one of these, a sad and beautiful story, called "Christmas Rose," the speaker is, as in "Betsy Lee," a principal actor. In the others he speaks as a witness, and so preserves the personal and impromptu element which is so necessary to yarns. They are all more or less tragic; love and hate and jealousy are their themes; but their "terribleness" is softened with true pathos and lightened with genuine humour. Even in those bursts of refined emotion conveyed in rough words which, while forming the greatest charm of the book, are felt to be above the level of the supposed speaker, there is no "clap-trap;" and in the forcible painting of scenes of terror, like the drowning of Captain Hugh, there is no touch of melodrama.

If a yarn is to be told in verse it is plain that the least formal of metres is the best for the purpose. Symptoms of premeditation are fatal to yarns. That the metre selected has four feet is about all that can be said of it in the way of technical definition, and the rhymes are often mere assonances; but in apparent artlessness consists a great deal of art, especially in yarns. Unfortunately, it is difficult to select a piece short enough for quotation; but the following lines will show the author's hand:—

"for its seemin to me
When your lovin the loveliest things you see,
Its lovin God that made the things—
That made them—eh? and the birds they sings,
They does, and its God that gives the notes,
Stretches the bags of their little throats;
And the sun is bright, and the sky is blue;
And a man is strong, and a horse is too,
And God's in all. But I tell ye the when
You can see His face, if you ever can.
Its when He lights sweet holy fire
In the eye of a woman; and lifts her higher
Than all your thoughts, a woman true
But not for you, man, not for you.
Who for? No matter! If you've got any sense
Of course you'll know the difference.
You'll know when you're wanted, and when you aint,
And never make no sort of complaint;
But touch your hat—'My sarvice, Madam!'
And her not knowin you from Adam."

With the aid of this flexible metre and the large addition to orthodox rhymes which he gets out of dialect and mispronunciation, such as "mossel" and "apostle," and "noses" and "ghoses" (ghosts), the yarns proceed without check, the lines varying in sway according to the requirement of the moment—description, dialogue, sentiment, humour, pathos, or terror. Sometimes dactylic, sometimes anapaestic, they swing, sway, gallop, trot, plunge, swim—anything but walk—with something of the freedom and volume, if not often the grace, of the sea.

As a yarn is always true, it is, of course, ridiculous to object to any incident as improbable or unnecessary; otherwise it might be doubted whether the finding of Jenny and her baby in "Betsy Lee" was not a little too convenient, and the suicide of Mrs. Cain useless to the story of "Tommy Bigeyes," if not inconsistent with her character. But they are strong stories, and would each furnish enough plot and almost enough incident for a novel by Mr. Black or Mr. Blackmore, with both of which writers the author has some affinity. Add touches of Mr. Browning and Bret Harte, and you have a rough description of the quality of Fo'c'sle Yarns.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

SOME BOOKS ABOUT INDIA.

The History of India from the Earliest Ages. By J. Talboys Wheeler. Vol. IV. Part II. Moghul Empire—Aurangzeb. (Triebner.) The merits and the defects of Mr. Talboys Wheeler's Indian History are now too well known to require lengthy notice. In this volume, we feel bound to say that the latter are more conspicuous than the former. The author does not rise to his opportunities. In human interest, no less than in political importance, the reign of Aurangzeb is only second to that of Akbar. From both points of view, Mr. Talboys Wheeler fails to do justice to his subject. His reply would be that the materials are too scanty. But we do not demand a long history. What we have looked for in vain is analysis of character and dramatic description of events. One other matter deserves to be noticed. Though we are nowhere told so in the Preface, by far the greater portion of the present volume has already appeared in the same author's Short History of India, published by Messrs. Macmillan only last year. The order of events and the language are occasionally varied; but a somewhat cursory examination of the parallel passages does not tend to increase our estimate of Mr. Talboys Wheeler's qualifications for writing sober history. In the present volume we read (p. 546): "At the same time the Europeans in Bengal began to fortify their settlements against the Mahrattas." In the Short History the same circumstance was thus described (p. 267):—"It was at this juncture that the native inhabitants of Calcutta began to dig the once famous Mahratta ditch, to keep the enemy's horsemen out of the Company's bounds." The difference between these two statements is not so trifling as it looks; and, after all, minute accuracy is not the least important of an historian's qualifications. We venture to conclude with saying that no literary enterprise is more wanted at the present day than a standard History of India, whether large or small.

A Selection from the Despatches relating to India of the Duke of Wellington. Edited by Sidney J. Owen. With an Introductory Essay, Maps, and Plans. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) In adding this volume to his Selections from the Wellesley Despatches, Mr. Sidney Owen has conferred a great benefit upon all students of Indian history. Indeed, of the two volumes we are not sure that the present is not the more valuable. The name of the Marquess of Wellesley will always stand out writ large in the history of the English in India. His services run no risk of being forgotten. He invented a policy; he carried it out with decision; he left behind him a school of Anglo-Indian statesmen. But few Englishmen are aware of the prominent part played at that time by Sir Arthur Wellesley, the future Duke of Wellington. At most, they are accustomed to regard him as the victor in a few Sepoy battles. In real truth he was the most trusted and the most active agent of the Wellesley policy. Having arrived in India before his brother, he prepared his mind to appreciate local intrigues and personal jealousies. Being in direct contact with native Princes and Ministers, and possessing even then an unparalleled knowledge of military affairs, he supplied the two most important elements which the Governor-General necessarily lacked. Lastly, coming back to England also in advance of his brother, he was able both to defend his conduct and to interpret to him the feeling at home. And, with all this, we must recollect that he was no feeble shadow of the Marquess, but no less a man than the Duke of Wellington himself. In this connexion, we may repeat what was said by Brougham of the original despatches, they will be read when we are all forgotten.

The Garden of India; or, Chapters on Oudh History and Affairs. By H. C. Irwin. (W. H. Allen.) With unpardonable injustice we have delayed until now our notice of this admirable book, which is perhaps the most important contribution to our knowledge of India that has appeared since Dr. Hunter's first work, The Annals of Rural Bengal. It presents the life of an Indian province under native rule as seen from a critical standpoint; and suggests the solemn reflection, if we have not succeeded in Oudh, have we succeeded anywhere? And yet Mr. Irwin is by no means a pessimist. No man who has taken an active part in the administration of India can but feel the honourable consciousness that Englishmen, despite their half-knowledge and the inevitable disadvantages of their alien ways and modes of thought, have persistently striven to perform their duty by the subject races. If Lord Dalhousie did wrong by his annexation, if subsequent Governors have failed to model the system of land-tenure according to the best possible standard, the fault was in the head rather than in the heart. At a time when people seem to think that they have discharged their conscience towards India when they have arrived at some conclusion with regard to our relations towards Afghanistan, it is more than ever desirable that their attention should be directed to a book like this, which will disclose to them some part of the complex problem which Indian civilians have constantly upon their hands. Anglo-Indians want sympathy in their task of internal administration, not in their dreams of frontier policy.

Mathurā: a District Memoir. By F. S. Growse. Second Edition. (Printed at the North-Western Provinces and Oudh Government Press.) It has been our lot not only to see, but also to read through, nearly all the accounts of districts and of provinces which the example of Dr. W. W. Hunter has drawn in recent years from so many Anglo-Indian officials. They contain a magazine of local information which has never been duly appreciated in this country. So far as possible, the cream of the labour of a hundred willing but unknown workers will be given to the English public in the forthcoming Imperial Gazetteer of India. But students will always be anxious to resort to the fountain-head. To such, we recommend Mr. Growse's District Memoir as probably the one among all which is most inspired with the genuine love of India and the Indian people. A photograph of a great native banker (now dead), taken by a native, faces the title-page; and all through the volume native art, native forms of religion, native manners and customs, are the chief subjects dealt with. Mr. Growse is not only one of the first of Hindi scholars; he is also a sympathetic imitator of Hindu architecture. To turn to his pages and his numerous photographs, after having dazed our wits in the labyrinthine figures of an administration or settlement Report, is like passing from the glare of a tropical sun into the cool of some Hindu shrine or Mahomedan tomb. We feel that we are learning something of the charm which still envelopes the East for all those who have the faculty to perceive it. For the benefit of the ignorant, we may add that "Mathurā" is the proper transliteration of the name vulgarly printed as "Muttra," the home of the worship of Vishnu in his pastoral incarnation as Krishna; and that it must be carefully distinguished from "Madura," a scarcely less famous city in the extreme South.

Memoirs of a Griffin; or, a Cadet's First Year in India. By Capt. Bellow. Illustrated from Designs by the Author. New Edition. (W. H. Allen.) For the sake of those who do not inherit old Anglo-Indian traditions, we have added the sub-title of this book, in order to show that it has nothing to do with the monstrous fowl that keeps guard over the site of Temple Bar. Originally published about five-and-twenty years ago, the time of the story goes back to a full generation earlier—in fact, so far as we can judge, to the Governor-Generalship of Lord Amherst (1823-28). Whether the author be still alive, we know not. The person to whom he dedicates the book died as far back as 1859. However this may be, we gladly welcome the republication, not because of its literary merits (though they are not contemptible), but because it is a faithful picture of a state of society now so completely passed away as to be almost forgotten. When cadets and writers went out to India at the age of sixteen; when veterans who had fought with Clive were still domiciled in their adopted land; when it was possible to consume five months on the journey from Calcutta to Delhi; when relations with the natives were perhaps too friendly—all these circumstances carry us back almost beyond living memory. Amid the press of books that are always lauding the merits of our administration, it is well to get an occasional glimpse at Anglo-Indian society as it was in its early beginnings, and as it is still remembered (better than we often think) by the natives themselves.

Sketches in Indian Ink. By John Smith. (Calcutta: Englishman Office; London: W. H. Allen.) This book consists of two portions. The first half is a series, or rather a double series, of personal sketches, such as Anglo-Indians are particularly fond of drawing of one another, and which reached their high-water mark in the Tour of Sir Ali Baba by the late Aberigh Mackay, whose early death was as heavy a loss to Indian letters as is the retirement of Mr. Phil. Robinson. Of the present specimen of this caricaturing with the pen we cannot give a very favourable opinion. The latter half of the book contains two longer narratives—one the life and death of a civilian of the modern type, the other a prae-Mutiny incident. The latter of these two narratives is simply sensational; the former is, to our mind, the one really interesting part of the book. We can give it no higher praise than that it suggests the Competition-Wallah, and in some respects is superior to that which it suggests. The deep pathos of Anglo-Indian life, which would be overwhelming if it were not driven out of the mind by hard work, here constitutes the main thread of the story, and, indeed, may be detected in almost every page of the book.

The Steam-House. Part II. Tigers and Traitors. By Jules Verne. Translated from the French by Miss Agnes D. Kingston. Illustrated. (Sampson Low.) We see no reason to alter our opinion (ACADEMY, December 11, 1880) that this is not one of Jules Verne's happiest productions. It is true that the final catastrophe is conceived with perhaps more than his usual command of plot and incident. But the main narrative seems to us distinctly dull; and the local colouring smells of the lamp. Would that it had been revised by some friend with actual knowledge! To a person of precise mind, it is painful to find the native State whose capital is at Gwalior described as "Scind," and to be told to "go into Guicowar [?] and render homage to the King of Baroda." The presence of lions and zebras in the Himalayan terai may be paralleled by the zoological blunders in The Swiss Family Robinson. The elephants, also, in the illustrations have been copied from the African (if not from a non-descript) species. JAS. S. COTTON.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MISS CHRISTINA ROSSETTI has, our readers will be glad to hear, put into the hands of Messrs. Macmillan and Co. a new volume of poems, which will be published in the course of the summer.

MR. RICHARD JEFFERIES, author of The Gamekeeper at Home, has recently been engaged in writing a new work, which will be published next month, in two volumes, by Messrs. Cassell and Co., under the title of Wood Magic: a Fable.

AN autograph letter of the late Lord Beaconsfield, occupying seven pages of note-paper, and addressed on the 28th of last December to Mr. Francis George Heath, will be reproduced in facsimile in a fourth edition, which is being prepared, of Mr. Heath's Peasant Life in the West of England.

UNDER the title, Memorials of Lord Beaconsfield, Messrs. Macmillan and Co. will publish immediately a small volume, which will contain the memoir that appeared in the Standard, together with extracts from the articles and reports published since the commencement of Lord Beaconsfield's illness, lists of the principal callers at Curzon Street, an account of the funeral, and a selection from all that has been written in the Standard illustrative of the widespread national feeling. The book will thus possess a permanent historical value.

A NEW work called Life in Western India, by Mrs. Guthrie, author of Through Russia, My Year in an Indian Fort, &c., in two volumes, with illustrations, will be shortly published by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett. The same firm will also issue in May the two following novels:—Among the Hills, by Miss E. Frances Poynter, author of My Little Lady, &c., in two volumes; and The Future Marquis, by Catharine Childar, in three volumes.

THE Rev. F. Brown has been for fifteen years working at the history of all the county families of Somerset, and has a complete account of every one of them. It seems a great pity that the county archaeological society, or some other antiquarian association, should not undertake the publication of such a valuable mass of material now ready for the press when it can be had for the asking. The Somersetshire gentry should see to it.

MESSRS. HODDER AND STOUGHTON announce that they are about to publish by subscription a new and revised edition of Dr. Stoughton's History of Religion in England from the Opening of the Long Parliament to the End of the Eighteenth Century. This edition will consist of six volumes, instead of the seven of the original and more expensive edition.

MESSRS. RIVINGTON will shortly issue the Addresses delivered by the Rev. W. J. Knox Little, M.A., in St. Paul's Cathedral during Passion Week.

WE are glad to hear that Principal Tulloch has somewhat recovered from the severe attack of nervous prostration induced by over-work which lately incapacitated him from performing his literary and clerical duties. It may be some time, however, before he is able to resume these.

WE have already announced that a map is preparing of Avebury and a Hundred Miles Round It, by the Rev. A. C. Smith. There are few districts in England richer in antiquarian interests; and it is not creditable that no full and exact map has been previously issued. Mr. Smith's knowledge of the neighbourhood is thorough; and his work—this map—is indeed a labour of love. All the British and Roman remains, both in earth and stone, will be carefully entered. The map is to be published and issued to subscribers by the Marlborough College Natural History Society.

MR. HENRY SWEET is to support, before the Cambridge Philological Society, on May 5, the scheme of partial historic spelling reform recommended by the Philological Society of London, the adoption of which was mainly due to him.

DR. REICKE, of Königsberg, is engaged along with Dr. Sintenis in collecting materials for a complete edition of Kant's correspondence. They have already got about six hundred letters to Kant, and a smaller number from him. Dr. Reicke thinks that the libraries or private collectors of this country may possess such autograph letters. Dr. W. Wallace, of Merton College, Oxford, will be glad to communicate any information on the point to Dr. Reicke.

M. PIERRE LAFITTE, Director of Positivism, is announced to give two lectures in French on "The Positive Method in Sociology and Ethics during the Eighteenth Century." They will be delivered on Wednesdays, May 4 and 11, at five o'clock, in Newton Hall, the new room of the Positivist Society, situated in Fleur-de-lis Court, Fetter Lane. Admission to the lectures will be free.

WE quote from the Manchester Guardian the following letter addressed by George Eliot to Mr. James Thompson, the author of The City of Dreadful Night:—

"The Priory, 21, North Bank, Regent's Park, May 30, 1874.—Dear Poet,—I cannot rest satisfied without telling you that my mind responds with admiration to the distinct vision and grand utterance in the poem which you have been so good as to send me. Also, I trust that an intellect informed by so much passionate intensity as yours will soon give us more heroic strains with a wider embrace of human fellowship in them—such as will be to the labourers of the world what the odes of Tyrtæus were to the Spartans, thrilling them with the sublimity of the social order and the courage of resistance to all that would dissolve it.—Yours sincerely, "M. E. LEWES."

THE summer number of Society is announced under the title of Midsummer Dreams, edited by George W. Plant. It will contain poems and stories by Joseph Hatton, Sir C. L. Young, Bart., George Mannville Fenn, Annie Thomas, Annie Hodgkinson, and other well-known writers. The illustrations will be by Wallis Mackay, G. H. Edwards, G. B. Le Farni, &c. This will be a companion work to Mr. Plant's successful winter number, Round the Fireside.

THE large and valuable library of Dr. John Hill Burton, which is especially rich in antiquarian and historical works, will be sold by Messrs. Sotheby and Wilkinson on May 16 next.

IN correction of a statement that appeared in the ACADEMY of April 9, we understand that it is the two chapters on Homer contributed by Profs. Mahaffy and Sayce to the latter's History of Classical Greek Literature which have recently been translated into German by Prof. Imelmann, of Berlin. The two form a single book for the use of German schools and universities.

AT the next meeting of the New Shakspeare Society on May 13, Mr. Furnivall proposes to open a discussion on "The Worth of the First Quarto of Hamlet as an Acting Play," instead of reading his promised paper "On the Cruxes in Shakspeare's Early Comedies."

VICTOR HUGO's forthcoming work—Les quatre Vents de l'Esprit—which we have already announced, consists of two volumes. The first, containing two dramas, is already printed; the second will conclude with a long poem, entitled "Les Révolutions."

OF the several prizes offered in connexion with the Calderon celebration, the following have been already awarded:—In France, to M. Francis Melvil, already known as the author of a volume of verse entitled Les Voyageurs; in Switzerland, to Dr. Edmond Dorer, of Zurich; and in Bohemia, to M. Svatoopluk Czech. What may have been the result in England we have not yet heard.

THE University of Prague, which dates from 1348, being thus the oldest university within the limits of the Holy Roman empire, has just been reconstituted on a novel basis. By an imperial decree dated April 11, which does not, however, come into operation until October 1, it will, Janus-like, have two faces, the one speaking German and the other speaking Bohemian or Czech; but neither of these, according to the Politik, will be older or younger than the other. The two will continue to bear the joint-name, derived from the original founder, of Carolo-Ferdinandea. This concession to national feeling has aroused much enthusiasm in Bohemia; and great hopes are entertained that it will result in advancing the study of Czech literature.

A TALENTED Russian dramatic author, A. I. Palm, has lately published, under the title of Sick People, two volumes of prose fiction, in which some of the unhealthy phenomena of contemporary Russian society are delineated.

SHAKSPEARE's works are being rendered into the Malo-Russian language by a well-known writer in that dialect, M. Kulish, who has already completed a translation of six of the plays.

AT the last meeting of the ethnographic section of the Russian Geographical Society, a communication was made on behalf of M. Kunovin, who has been engaged during the past quarter of a century in gathering materials for a study of the Gipsy race. M. Kunovin, who belongs to the medical profession, has followed a roving life of devotion to this particular department of ethnographic science. Since 1876, however, he has been occupied in preparing for publication a work on the dialects of the Gipsies of Europe and Asia, which is to embody the results of his studies.

THE Magazin für die Literatur des In- und Auslandes for April has a review of Mr. Black's White Wings and Mr. Hardy's The Trumpet-Major, by T. Leo.

DR. HERMANN VARNHAAGEN, to whose publications of Early-English texts we have from time to time called attention, has been appointed Professor of English at the University of Greifswald.

PROF. WÜLCKER, of Leipzig, will issue in a fortnight the first half-volume of his new edition of Grim's Bibliothek der angelsächsischen Poesie. The texts have been all carefully revised.

MESSRS. JANSEN, McCURG AND Co., of Chicago, announce two new prose works by Joaquin Miller—Shadows of Shasta and The Danites of the Sierras.

We are glad to read in the Rassegna Settimanale of a new periodical at Rome, which will be devoted to the reproduction of old Italian documents. It is to be called the Archivio paleografico italiano, and will be edited by Cesare Paoli and Ernesto Monaci.

We take the following from the Times:—

"The historical collections of the city of Berne have just been enriched by two interesting and valuable acquisitions. The heirs of the late Col. von Erlach, of Hindelbank, have presented to the Council of Burghers the correspondence of Gen. von Erlach during his sojourn in France and the campaign of 1797 and 1798, in which he commanded the Bernese contingent. The Council have received further, from Col. von Senner, three MS. volumes, consisting of letters addressed by various illustrious personages in the early part of the eighteenth century to the Landamann Jerome and Sigismund von Erlach. Among them are original letters from Marlborough, Prince Eugene, and the Emperor Leopold III. Both collections will be placed in the City Library."

THE Börsenblatt calls attention to the acquisition by H. F. Münster's Buchhandlung at Verona of a copy of the folio Virgil printed at Brescia in 1473. The copy in the Spencer Library, described by Dibdin, was hitherto believed to be unique. The book possesses a special interest as being the first production of the Brescia press.

Among the fresh Vice-Presidents of the New Shakspere Society will be Prof. J. K. Ingram, LL.D., of Trinity College, Dublin; Prof. M. Trautmann, LL.D., the successor of Dr. Delius at Bonn; and Dr. F. H. Stratmann, the editor of Hamlet, and author of the well-known Old-English Dictionary.

THE Report of the Mitchell Library at Glasgow for 1880 (Glasgow: Robert Anderson) is of a very satisfactory nature. Founded only three years ago, this prosperous library now boasts 33,000 volumes, with an annual issue of twelvefold that number. It appears to be well supported, as it deserves. Last year it received 1,400 volumes by presentation and 1,100 by bequest. We are glad also to notice that the three special features of the library—"the Poets' Corner" for Scottish poetry, the "Glasgow collection" of books, &c., illustrating the history of the city, and the collection of early books printed in Glasgow—are all of them steadily growing. The Mitchell Library is entirely supported by endowment, and keeps down its expenses to the limit of the interest received upon its capital of £65,000.

We have received Messrs. Sampson Low's English Catalogue of Books for 1880, a handy work of reference which is simply invaluable to all those whose business is with contemporary literature.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE current number of the Antiquary (Elliot Stock) is very much above the average. It is strong in articles of general interest. Mr. Henry Wheatley contributes a paper on the old game of "Pall Mall," which contains many facts which will be new to almost everybody. Mr. John Henry Parker gives us notes on Roman roads and aqueducts, engineers and architects. It will well repay the reader, for Mr. Parker is not only very amusing, but has devoted years of continuous labour to investigating in the field and the study those things on which he now instructs us. He makes some most righteously severe remarks on the dense stupidity of those railway authorities who insisted on carrying their line through the vast Roman rampart which bears the name of Servius Tullius. From what he says it seems quite clear that no useful end was gained by this act of destruction. It would appear, indeed, to have been a mere act of wantonness—a painful exhibition of a passion which some uncultured persons have for making needless war upon the memorials of a past whose meanings they cannot fathom. "Lord Roland in Italy," by Mr. Evelyn Carrington, is a curious addition to our knowledge of folk-lore. It appears proved that we have in Italy and in England a ballad in which not only the main drift, but many minute touches are identical; and yet there does not seem to be the slightest reason for believing that the one has been copied from the other. Mr. S. R. Bird prints some interesting briefs or permissions to beg of early date. They are curious as showing the manner in which the sufferings of soldiers, ecclesiastics, and other persons were relieved by the authorities out of the pockets of the lieges. The manner and form of the petitions are at times very entertaining. One man who lived in or about the time of Henry VI., and had suffered in the King's wars abroad, begs the Chancellor that he would "fowchesaffe atte the reverons of God and of his dereworth passion to have compassion and pitee over hym for ye pite that Christe hadde over Mary Mawdeleyne." These documents are the precursors of those briefs which used to be read in our churches down almost to our own time. Mr. Hutcheson's account of the family of Saint Clair of Ravenscraig is continued. It is a remarkably clear and compact chronicle of a house memorable alike in history and in song.

Revue de Droit international et de Législation comparée. (Bruxelles et Leipzig: Muquardt.) The first number of the new volume of this Review contains several interesting papers. The first in order, and very opportune in its publication, is an article by Prof. Eugène van der Rest, of the University of Brussels, on "The Latin Monetary Union, its Origin and its Different Phases." The Latin Union, as it has been infelicitously termed, seeing that it has admitted Greece among its members, was originally founded in 1863 between France, Italy, Belgium, and Switzerland. It outgrew its name in 1868, when Greece joined it. Its primary object was to secure a uniformity of value in the coinage of the States of the Union, so that the coins of the respective States might circulate freely throughout each and all. Its monetary system is bimetallic, gold and silver both having a legal currency, but its standard of value is monometallic, the franc weighing five grains of silver, nine-tenths fine, being its unit of value, and its gold coins, also nine-tenths fine, being originally struck in the proportion of one kilogramme of gold to fifteen kilogrammes and a half of silver. Unfortunately, however, the bullion market has not worked in harmony with the views of the Union; and, while gold became more plentiful and lost comparative value in the market up to 1874, silver has since that year been produced in increased quantities, and has, in its turn, become depreciated in the market in comparison with gold. The States of the Union have accordingly been perplexed how to maintain a permanent proportion in the comparative value of their gold and silver coins in accordance with the ratio agreed upon in 1865; and Prof. van der Rest reviews the various measures unsuccessfully adopted by the different States with that object. Prof. Louis Renault, of the School of Political Sciences at Paris, has contributed the next paper—on an international law-suit before the Court of Cassation in Paris, in illustration of the principle of arbitration as applicable to the settlement of the minor disputes between Governments. It appears that the French merchant-vessel, Le Phare, of Bordeaux, arrived in the Port of Cotinto, in the republic of Nicaragua, with a cargo of muskets and revolvers on board at a moment when the Nicaraguan Government was expecting an insurrectionary movement against itself. The Custom House authorities at Cotinto immediately seized Le Phare and her cargo. The French Government, on the other hand, demanded the release of the vessel and cargo; and Nicaragua, after a lengthened diplomatic correspondence, offered to submit the matters in dispute to the arbitration of the High Court of Cassation in Paris. A convention of arbitration was accordingly settled between M. Waddington on behalf of France and Gen. Guzman on behalf of Nicaragua; and the history of the subsequent proceedings furnishes an excellent lesson to Governments as to the cautious precision with which such conventions should be drawn up. The final decision of the Court of Cassation was in favour of the French Government. The paper following is by Advocate Martin, of Geneva, on the general principles applicable to international extradition. The advocate du Bois, of Gand, supplies, in the next place, a bulletin of recent Belgian jurisprudence in matters of private international law, bearing more particularly on questions of national character. A notice of the proceedings of the Institute of International Law at its recent session in Oxford follows; and it is accompanied by an interesting correspondence between Field-Marshal Count von Moltke and Prof. Bluntschli, of Heidelberg, a late President of the Institute, on the subject of the "Manual of the Laws of War" recently drawn up and published by the Institute. Prof. F. Martens, of the University of St. Petersburg, gives an account of "The Society of International Law" recently established at St. Petersburg, of which Prince Peter of Oldenburg is President. The Review concludes with a bibliography of recent publications on international and other branches of law, drawn up by Prof. A. Rivier and Prof. Arntz, both of the University of Brussels.

THE Deutsche Rundschau for April has a pleasant article on botany by Prof. Cohn, who, under the title "Der Zellenstaat," draws out the analogy between the life of plants and their cells and the organisation of the State and its citizens. Prof. von Inama-Sternegg deals with the economic conditions of the present age, which he calls "the Age of Credit," pointing out the means by which credit may be increased, and its effects upon production. Prof. Schmidt gives an interesting description of an archaeological journey "From Athens to Delphi," and what he saw on the way.

IN the Rivista Europea for April, Signor Venturi gives an account of the artistic activity of Ippolito II. of Ferrara in France in the middle of the sixteenth century. Signor Vecchi calls attention to the "Marine Episodes of Cervantes," showing the minuteness of detail in which the great Spaniard indulged in a matter with which his life could not have given him much familiarity. Signor Marchesi begins an historical survey of the "Relations between Venice and Tunis in the Eighteenth Century."

LETTER FROM MALTA.

Valetta: April 19, 1881.

The Bibliotheca in Valetta—not to be confounded with the Garrison Library; a well-stocked modern subscription library and reading-room—was founded as a public library in 1760 by the Order of the Knights of St. John. To a nucleus formed by donation or purchase of several collections from the Bailiff, L. Guerin Tencin, Card. Portocarrero, and Commander Sanitaj, joined to the already existing library of St. John, were added later that of the Order of St. Anthony of Vienna and books from the Camerata in Valetta. Other additions and bequests have been made from time to time, some of them, probably, under the law passed at a General Chapter of the Order in 1612, from which the old library of St. John took its rise; it decreed that books of deceased knights should not be dispersed, but should be retained for that library. The Maltese Government at present give £300 a-year for the purchase of new books (of which £50 goes to the public library in Gozo, the second island of the Maltese group). Nearly 48,000 volumes have been thus gathered together, and are now housed, with a small museum of antiquities, in a handsome building erected by the Grand Master Rohan at the end of the last century. This is open free, daily, from nine to three, and in the evening for the two hours after sunset during eight months of the year; the readers, most of whom are Maltese students and professional men, number daily from 170 to 190. Books are also lent upon proper recommendation; 7,000 volumes borrowed during the last year show how this privilege is valued. The old catalogues being insufficient, Dr. Cesare Vassallo, the late venerable librarian, issued in 1843 and 1844 a classified catalogue (in Italian) of the printed books, to which he added a supplement in 1873, and in 1856 a catalogue of the 324 MSS. The British Museum does not (or did not quite recently) possess copies of any of these; the Bodleian is better off.

A library supplied by such means—and it will be remembered that the knights were drawn from all parts of Europe—may be expected to contain, as it does, in fact, many valuable works and rare editions, as well as the speciality of numerous tomes in print and in MS. bearing on the history of the Knights of St. John. The present courteous librarian, Dr. A. Caruana, appointed in December last, is anxious, with a laudable patriotism, to make the institution under his care more worthy of the antiquities and renown of the island, while taking measures for the immediate preservation of the older books, many of which are undergoing rapid decay from the need of fresh binding and from the attacks of insects. In England, though we find a few "worm-holes" here and there in our old books, we have little idea of the ravages these pests cause, not only riddling the book through and through, but eating broad channels sideways through leaves and binding. And no one who sees a wild beast such as I caught a few days ago in one of the knights' registers in the archives here (where, however, they are comparatively rare)—nearly an inch long, horny, with mandibles and many legs—will wonder at the mischief done by them in this warm and dusty climate, where insect life thrives lustily.* The librarian, in a Report lately presented to the Chief Secretary, dwells upon the danger to the books, and asks for modest additional grants to enable him to have thorough cleaning and repair of the leaves and bindings executed at once, as well as a small sum annually to keep the books constantly clean. The economy of spending £30 a-year for this last purpose, which accords with the advice given by the officers of the British Museum, cannot fail to recommend itself another year, if unsuccessful this.

As to the antiquities, Dr. Caruana's proposal is that a central museum should be formed of Maltese antiquities and natural history, combining the collection illustrating the geology and natural history of the islands, now at the university, with the antiquities now in the library, which, though few in number, are valuable and important relics of Maltese history under the Phoenicians, Greeks, Romans, and Saracens. The Phoenician remains here are specially interesting. The cohesion thus given would attract more local antiquities, ancient vestments, and other things which are rapidly passing out of the island, where they alone have their full meaning; while casts and facsimiles of those now gone to other parts of Europe would be obtained, and something like an historic arrangement be given to the whole. Already several gifts have been promised from private hands if the scheme is carried out.

As if to plead for the recognition of Maltese antiquities, the opportune discovery of a large Roman villa has lately occurred at Citta Vecchia, the ancient capital of Malta. This is exciting much interest, not only on account of the beauty of the mosaics and statues uncovered, but from the fact that it is the first private Roman dwelling known either here or in Gozo. [These remains were described at length by Mr. Greville J. Chester in the ACADEMY of April 16.]

The selection of a Cambridge scholar, Mr. Hunnybun, as the new Professor of English Literature marks an advance in the cultivation of our language as well as our literature among the Maltese. By raising the standard of English taught in the university and the Lyceum, that of the lower schools will of course be affected. The preference is now given in all schools to English over Italian, but the problem of teaching a young Maltese in a tongue so different to the genius of his own Arabic dialect is a difficult one. Nevertheless, the active educationists here, led by the Hon. S. Savona, are facing it bravely. Mr. Hunnybun is now giving lectures on Shakspeare and Scott. The elementary schools follow the model of the Board schools in England.

In the absence of any modern guide or handbook (I could not even get a map of Malta in London) the appearance this spring of two little volumes compiled by the Rev. G. N. Godwin—one A Guide to the Maltese Islands; another, The Geology, Botany, and Natural History of the islands—is welcome. The Guide contains a mass of useful and interesting information not readily attainable by strangers; though some errors of date and detail, and the want of an Index, are to be regretted. It is published in London and Valetta.

The Public Archives, where are deposited the voluminous records of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, including those they brought from Rhodes, and continued down to 1798, when their rule in Malta ended, present an unwonted scene of literary activity this spring. I do but mention the spoils carried off by the Rev. W. K. R. Bedford, a chaplain to the modern Order, which has its head-quarters in the Old Gate at Clerkenwell; the six letters of Card. Pole (a joint find), relating to the proposed re-establishment of the Order in England under Mary, not printed in Larking, Seddall, or Whitworth Porter; and interesting collections concerning the hospitals for the sick kept in Malta by the knights; all which are to result in a paper to be read by Mr. Bedford at St. John's Gate on June 24 next.

M. Delaville le Roulx, one of the modern school of French archivists, is at work upon an important undertaking, that of preparing a calendar or précis of the Libri Magistrum Bullarum, from the earliest date preserved (1346), taking in especially the period of the Rhodian occupation and the establishment of the Order in Malta. This will be illustrated by specimens of the different instruments given in full, with discussions upon, and comparisons of, difficult matters of administrative action hitherto imperfectly understood, as well as by documents of a more general historic interest taken from other volumes, correspondence, and the records of Councils and Chapters in the archives. Several moot points may be hoped to be cleared up; and the whole will, if successfully carried out, form a valuable contribution to the accurate understanding of the growth and internal history of the powerful Order who have left such lasting marks on Europe.

LUCY TOULMIN SMITH.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BIART, L. Les Ailes brûlées. Paris: Hennuyer. 3 fr. 50 c.
 BOTKIN, M. Alexander Andrejewitsch Iwanoff. 1806-58. Berlin: Asher. 10 M.
 BUCHTA, R. Die oberen Nil-Länder. Volkstypen u. Landschaften, dargestellt in 160 Photogr. Mit e. Einleitg. v. H. Hartmann. Berlin: Siebm. 250 M.
 CHAMPELLEURY. Bibliographie céramique: Nomenclature analytique de toutes les Publications faites en Europe et en Orient sur les Arts et l'Industrie céramiques depuis le XVI^e siècle jusqu'à nos Jours. Paris: Quantin. 20 fr.
 COX, Sir G. W. An Introduction to the Science of Comparative Mythology and Folk-Lore. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 9s.
 DICTIONARY of Music and Musicians. Part XIII. Ed. G. Grove. Macmillan. 3s. 6d.
 FROHNKER, W. Terres cuites d'Asie-Mineure. Paris: Hoffmann. 75 fr.
 GONZALEZ, E. Les Caravanes de Scaramouche. Avec une Notice historique par Paul Lacroix. Paris: Dentu. 10 fr.
 JACOBS, H., et N. CHATRAIN. Monographie du Diamant. Paris: Supplé. 6 fr.
 KOTZEBUE, W. v. August v. Kotzebue. Urtheile der Zeitgenossen u. der Gegenwart. Dresden: Baensch. 3 M. 50 Pf.
 LAYELEY, E. de. Le Socialisme contemporain. Paris: Germer Baillière. 7 fr. 50 c.
 LEMOS, M. Luis de Camoesa. Paris: 10 Rue Monsieur-le-Prince.
 LOATOT, F. David Livingstone et sa Mission sociale. Paris: Charavay. 3 fr. 50 c.
 MAYERHOFFER, A. Die Florentiner Niobegruppe. Bamberg: Buchner. 2 M.
 PINTO, S. How I Crossed Africa. Sampson Low & Co. 42s.
 SOLDI, E. Les Arts méconnus. Paris: Leroux. 25 fr.
 STEINWALD, W. Lyrisches im Shakspeare. München: Ackermann. 3 M.
 WIATKI, M. Die Krisis in der Landwirtschaft u. Mittel zur Abhilfe. Berlin: Herbig. 5 M.

THEOLOGY.

- METZ, A. Die antipetrinische Rede d. Apostels Paulus (Gal. II. 14-21) dialektisch erörtert. Hamburg: Nolte. 2 M. 50 Pf.
 TALMON, L. de Jérusalem, traduit par M. Schwah. T. 4. Traité des Schabbath et Eroubin. Paris: Maisonneuve. 10 fr.

HISTORY.

- ACTEN der Erfurter Universität. Bearb. von J. O. H. Weissenborn. 1. Thl. Halle: Hendel. 27 M.
 CALENDAR of State Papers, Domestic Series, 1654. Ed. M. A. E. Green. Rolls Series. 15s.
 CHARAVAY, E. Revue des Documents historiques: Suite de pièces curieuses et inédites. T. 2. Paris: Charavay. 16 fr.
 DAILLET, A. Le roi Horemhou et la Dynastie thébaine au 11^e siècle avant notre ère. Paris: Maisonneuve. 3 fr.
 DOVAL-JOUVE, J. Montpelier pendant la Révolution; 2^e période: la République du 21 Septembre 1792 au 18 Brumaire An VIII. Montpelier: Joulet. 3 fr. 50 c.
 EXTRAITS des Auteurs grecs concernant la Géographie et l'Histoire des Gaules, p. p. E. Cougny. T. 3. Paris: Loozes. 9 fr.
 FREEMAN, E. A. The Historical Geography of Europe. Longmans. 31s. 6d.
 HANSERESKE, 2. Abth. Von 1431-76. Bearb. v. G. Fehr. v. der Kopp. 3. Bd. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 20 M.
 HERZOG, E. Ueb. die Glaubwürdigkeit der aus der römischen Republik bis zum J. 387 d. St. überlieferten Gesetze. Tübingen: Fues. 2 M. 20 Pf.
 HESSEL, F. Geschichte der preussischen Politik 1807 bis 1815. 1. Abth. 1807-8. Leipzig: Hirzel. 13 M.
 MÉNARD, René. La Vie privée de l'Antiquité. Vol. II. La Famille dans l'Antiquité. Paris: Morel. 30 fr.
 REGISTRE MALMESBURIENSE. Vol. II. Ed. J. S. Brewer and C. T. Martin. Rolls Series. 10s.
 RÉMUSAT, Maxime de, Lettres de, p. p. P. de Rémusat. Paris: G. Lévy. 15 fr.
 URKUNDBUCH, pommersches. 2. Bd. 1. Abth. 1254-78. Bearb. u. hrsg. v. K. Prümers. Stettin: v. d. Nahmer. 9 M.
 WEZEL, E. De officio officibusque apud veteres Romanos dissertation. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M. 20 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BUCHENAU, F. Flora der ostfriesischen Inseln. Norden: Brauns. 3 M.
 CARLEET, G. Précis de Zoologie médicale. Paris: Masson. 7 fr.
 LEIBNIZENS U. HUYGENS' Briefwechsel mit Papin. Bearb. v. E. Gerhard. Berlin: Dümmler. 13 M. 50 Pf.
 LEYDIG, F. Die augenähnlichen Organe der Fische anatomisch untersucht. Bonn: Strauss. 13 M. 50 Pf.
 LUKE, A. Sammlung planimetrischer Aufgaben üb. das Dreieck m. besond. Berücksicht. d. Determinirten der Aufgaben. 1. Hft. Halle: Schmidt. 2 M. 40 Pf.

* The species found are Acarus eruditus, Termes fatalis, and Timus pertinax.

NEUMAYR, M., u. V. UHLIG. Die Ammonitiden aus den Hilsbildungen Norddeutschlands. Cassel: Fischer. 100 M.
 PERIER, E. Les Colonies animales et la Formation des Organismes. Paris: Masson. 18 fr.
 REYER, E. Zinn. Eine geologisch-montanistisch-histor. Monographie. Berlin: Reimer. 4 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

ADAM, L. Les Patois lorrains. Paris: Maisonneuve. 10 fr.
 AZAIS, G. Dictionnaire des Idioms romans du Midi de la France. Paris: Maisonneuve. 48 fr.
 BRANDT, R. Studies on Slavonic Accentology. (In Russian.) St. Petersburg: Hartg. 2 Rub.
 CALLE, A. de la. La Glossologie, 1^{re} Partie. La Physiologie du Langage. Paris: Maisonneuve. 10 fr.
 CORDIER, H. Bibliotheca Sinica. Fasc. 4. Paris: Leroux.
 FEE, L. Etudes bouddhiques. Le Livre de Cent Légendes (Avaddha Catulla). Paris: Maisonneuve.
 SENART, E. Les Inscriptions de Piyadasi. Paris: Leroux. 16 fr.
 TRUMPP, E. Der arabische Sazbau nach der Anschauung der arabischen Grammatiker. München: Ackermann. 3 M. 60 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WARBURTON'S EPIGRAM AGAINST DEAN TUCKER.
 Gloucester: April 20, 1881.

In last week's number of the ACADEMY (No. 467) there was a notice of Sylvestra, for which I thank an amiable critic so willing to be pleased as to be able "to forgive the cruel manner in which" he thinks the author has "altered and applied to Dean Tucker alone the epigram which the dictatorial Warburton directed against that great economist and a brother dean."

That epigram, "My Dean's trade is Religion, and Religion is his trade," is given on p. 34, vol. i., of Sylvestra just as I heard it from the lips of one who was grown up, and living in Gloucester, in the lifetime of Dean Tucker. Receiving it from oral tradition, I never searched for it in books until I read this review of Sylvestra. I have since found Warburton's saying, exactly as I gave it, in Fosbrooke's History of the City of Gloucester, p. 217. In Seward's Anecdotes of Distinguished Persons, p. 479, vol. ii.—a book which ran through four editions while Dean Tucker was living—it is not given in full, but implied as a well-known saying:—"The sarcasm of his lively bishop was like many other lively sayings—a sacrifice to point at the expense of truth, the Dean having published many excellent sermons and religious dissertations founded on the soundest divinity," &c.

Lastly, and most of all to my point, the writer of an obituary notice of Dean Tucker in the Gentleman's Magazine for November 1799 (vol. lxi. pt. 11) gives what he himself heard from Dean Tucker in the following words:—

"On my once asking him concerning the coolness which subsisted between him and Warburton, Bishop of Gloucester, his answer was to the following effect, and in similar expressions:—'The Bishop affects to consider me with contempt; to which I say nothing. He has sometimes spoken coarsely of me; to which I replied nothing. He has said that religion is my trade, and trade is my religion. Commerce and its connexions have, it is true, been favourite objects of my attention; and where is the crime? And as for religion, I have attended carefully to the duties of my parish; nor have I neglected my cathedral. The world knows something of me as a writer on religious subjects; and I will add, which the world does not know, that I have written near a hundred sermons, and preached them all again and again. My heart is at ease on that score; and my conscience, thank God, does not accuse me.'"

It may be that my friendly critic can refer me to some pamphlet or letter by Bishop Warburton widening the application of the sarcasm which Dean Tucker seems to have taken to himself.

THE AUTHOR OF "SYLVESTRA."

"DERRING-DO."

3 St. George's Square, N.W.: April 22, 1881.

Often as I've read about "deeds of derring-do" performed by gallant knights, I never asked myself the origin of the word till the following lines from Henry V.'s copy of Chaucer's Troilus (now Mr. Bacon-Frank's MS.) came under my eyes to-day:—

"And certainly in storye it is founde,
 That Troilus was neuere vnto no wight,
 As in his tyme, in no degre seconde
 In dorryng don bat longeth to a knyght."

Book V., stanza 120, l. 837.

These show that "derring-do" is simply "daring to do." Spenser's "derring-doers" should be treated as a compound.

F. J. FURNIVALL.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, May 2, 2 p.m. Royal Institution: Annual Meeting.
 7.30 p.m. Aristotelian: "Hegel" (continued), by Prof. W. T. Harris and Dr. J. Burns-Gibson.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture III., "The Art of Lace-Making," by Mr. Alan S. Cole.
 8 p.m. Victoria Institute: "An Examination of the Philosophy of Herbert Spencer," by the Rev. W. D. Ground.
 TUESDAY, May 3, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Non-Metallic Elements," by Prof. Dewar.
 8 p.m. Biblical Archaeology: "The Date of Moses," by the Rev. Ernest de Bunsen; "An Historical Inscription," by Prof. A. Eisenlohr.
 8 p.m. Institution of Civil Engineers: "The Relative Value of Upland and Tidal Waters in producing Scour," by Mr. Walter R. Browne.
 8.30 p.m. Zoological: "Some Points in the Anatomy of the Cæcum in the Hare and Rabbit," by Mr. W. M. Parker; "Contributions to the Systematic Arrangement of the Asteroidea. Part I.—The Species of the Genus Asterias," by Prof. J. Jeffrey Bell; "Additional Observations on the Anatomy of the Spotted Hyæna," by Dr. M. Watson; "The Indian Species of the Genus Mus," by Mr. Oldfield Thomas.
 WEDNESDAY, May 4, 4.30 p.m. British Archaeological: Annual General Meeting.
 7 p.m. Entomological.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Buying and Selling: its Nature and its Tools," by Prof. Bonamy Price.
 THURSDAY, May 5, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Magnetism," by Prof. Tyndall.
 4.30 p.m. Royal.
 8 p.m. Linnean: "The Dragons-Blood Tree and its Products," by Prof. Bayly Balfour; "New Species of Coleoptera from the Challenger Expedition," by Prof. G. Bux; "New Genera of Plants from Madagascar," by Prof. Bayly Balfour.
 8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
 FRIDAY, May 6, 5 p.m. London Institution: "Oliver Wendell Holmes," by the Rev. H. R. Haweis.
 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Land-Systems of England and of Ireland," by the Hon. Geo. Brodric.
 8 p.m. Philological: "The Rhaeto-Romanic Dialect—Part IV.," by Mr. Russell Martineau.
 SATURDAY, May 7, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Scotland's Part in English Literature," by Prof. Henry Morley.

SCIENCE.

The Roman Poets of the Republic. By W. Y. Sellar, Professor of Humanity in the University of Edinburgh. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

THE first edition of this work was published more than twenty years ago, and has been out of print for a considerable time. It is now re-issued with the enlargements and corrections necessitated by the new literature on the poets of the Republic which has appeared since then, notably Munro's "Lucretius," the most important contribution probably ever made by an Englishman to Latin philology.

If the first edition of Prof. Sellar's volume was excellent, the new one is in every way better. The earlier work contained nothing on Roman comedy; this serious deficiency is now supplied by two new chapters, one on Plautus, the other on Terence and the other comic poets of whom fragments alone remain. Of these two, we prefer the former; if anything, it is too short—far too short to please those scholars who, trained by Ritschl, have learnt to see in Plautus a greater literary light than less particular judgments are apt to suppose him. In speaking of Terence, brevity is perhaps a virtue; the faintness with which, as Prof. Sellar admirably says, most of his characters are drawn must always make him comparatively uninteresting. Who would not be glad to sacrifice all he has left us for one comedy of Menander? It is one of the most unhappy of accidents (was it accident or was it bigotry?) which has preserved six whole plays of Terence and only a few passages of Caecilius.

The chapter on Lucilius is considerably modified, as was to be expected after the appearance of L. Müller's edition. Whatever may be thought of that scholar's often arbitrary reconstitutions of the Lucilian text, he has made in his edition one of the most solid and substantial additions to our knowledge of the life, thought, and feeling of Republican Rome. And it is this Rome, not the Rome of Augustus and his Imperial successors, nor even the Rome of Cicero and Catullus, which we long to know more of, of which we are disappointed to find so little expression in Plautus—indeed, anywhere. Only in Ennius partially, and in almost every line remaining of Lucilius, we seem to trace the genuine outline of the true Roman character, its combativeness, its rough humour, and its imperfect submissiveness to rules of art which it had long been trained to distrust as foreign.

With this earlier Roman spirit Prof. Sellar is, we think, far more in sympathy than with the later of Imperial Rome; and we do not hesitate to prefer the present volume, mainly on this ground, to his Virgil, published four years ago.

Most readers will find the four chapters on Lucretius the most interesting part of the book. They discuss the personal characteristics of the poet, his philosophy, his religious attitude and moral teaching, his literary art and genius. It would, probably, have been more satisfactory to the mass of readers if less had been said about the poetry and more about the philosophy. The interest of Lucretius' poem is, perhaps, more scientific than literary; and it is in its scientific, not its literary, bearings that it is likely to be studied increasingly. Readers who take up Prof. Sellar's volume will, we think, be disappointed not to find a more detailed account of the Atomic Theory—the more so that no work exists in English which gives anything like a rational statement of it and its relations to modern science. The little which is said is good, and makes us wish for a larger supply. On the other hand, the characteristics of the Lucretian poetry are less difficult to grasp, and might have been dismissed in much fewer words. Prof. Sellar's grave and somewhat heavy style seems to us peculiarly well fitted to be the exponent of a philosophical system which, like that set forth in the Nature of Things, calls for close attention to each step in the argument.

The chapter on Catullus has been recast and improved. It contains, we think, some of Prof. Sellar's happiest criticism—e.g., p. 438, "To no style, in prose or verse, in any language, could the words 'simplex munditiis' be with more propriety applied;" "the form is, indeed, so perfect that we scarcely think of it;" and, speaking of the sixty-second poem, "it sounds like a song in a rich idyl." We cannot say, however, that we have found much that is new or that has not been said already; unless, indeed, it be the comparison of Catullus' poems with Cicero's letters to Atticus, as both "giving back the flavour of that homely native idiom which constitutes the real strength of Plautus."

The chief point we desiderate in Prof. Sellar as a critic of poetry is lightness of touch. All he says is solid and valuable, and worth remembering; but it is not often that the form in which he says it is such as to arrest the attention and fix the remark in the memory by the mere felicitousness of its expression. There is, indeed, hardly a page in the book which can be called light reading. But then there is hardly a page in it which can be called uninteresting. Published as it is by the Clarendon Press, it is likely, we believe, to make the Republican poets, hitherto too much neglected at least in one university, more read; and, if we may augur from the prominence given to Lucretius, to increase the study, at present too little diffused, of this poet.

R. ELLIS.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES.

THE important series of lectures instituted by the Hibbert Trustees was continued on April 26 by the delivery at St. George's Hall of the first of a course of six lectures to be given on successive Tuesdays by Mr. Rhys Davids on "The Origin and Growth of Religion as illustrated by Buddhism."

The lecturer pointed out that it would not be possible, in the limited time at his command, to do more than touch upon some of those facts in Buddhist history which would be most likely to be of service for the comparative study of religious belief. In choosing the points to be selected, it should be borne in mind that it was no longer of any use to compare other religions with our own in order to attract attention to them by showing that they agreed in some respects with ours. It was fully admitted that truth was not confined to any one country; and the points on which religions differed were often the very points which threw most light on the gradual development of religious beliefs. He deprecated also the attempt to arrive at truth by observing what was held in common in various countries, or by various teachers—a principle advocated in an interesting speech quoted from the records of our House of Commons of the year 1530. The object of the comparative study of religions was to ascertain, not ultimate truths in religion, but the facts of religious history. In this respect the methods followed in the allied studies of comparative philology and comparative mythology were cited as examples. Such general tendencies as could be observed in the course of the progress of religious beliefs would really be the most valuable results of the comparisons which were about to be made. But there was no reasonable hope of ascertaining anything more than tendencies. There were no hard-and-fast rules in such matters. And the expression "science of religion" was, as yet at least, rather a misnomer than an exact description.

Turning to Buddhism itself, it could not be understood without a clear perception of the long course of religious belief of which it was the outcome and the result. It was often supposed, as having arisen in the sixth century B.C., to be very old—as old, as primitive, as rudimentary as the arts and sciences of those far-off times. But, comparatively speaking, it was one of the latest products of the human mind. The old animistic beliefs of the Aryans had developed into polytheism, and the schools of the Brāhman philosophers had elaborated a sort of pantheistic monotheism before Buddhism arose. The most ancient ideas had, however, survived; the development had hitherto been along the same lines; and the people among whom Buddhism was first proclaimed held an unquestioning faith in the existence, within them and without them, of numberless souls or spirits. A deep despair of life had settled over the land; the salvation sought for was one beyond the tomb; and the belief in transmigration rendered the attainment of any permanent condition of happiness nearly hopeless. It was probable that this curious despair of life, so contrary to the child-like delight in existence manifest in the Vedas, was due rather to climate than to any actual miseries in the daily life of the Aryans; and it certainly could not be explained by the beginnings of the caste-system, the evils of which had often been much exaggerated. Buddhism was by no means the earliest attempt at reformation. There was perfect freedom of thought in ancient India. Brāhmans themselves had appeared as teachers of a new way of escape independent of ritual; and teachers of other sects were allowed to preach doctrines inconsistent with the privileges of the sacred caste. But it would be wrong to derive Buddhism from the doctrines of Kapila or from any of the six well-known systems of Hindu philosophy, much less from the predecessors of the Jains. These were all recorded in books much later in their present shape than the Pāli Pīṭakas; and the only right source for the knowledge of the immediately pre-Buddhist ideas was the Upanishads. These taught the doctrine of a union of men's souls, after death, with the One self who was the latest outgrowth and summary of all the external souls supposed to animate nature. The distinguishing characteristic of Buddhism was that it started from a new standpoint, that it swept the whole of the great soul-theory from the field of its vision, and taught a summum bonum to be reached in this life by self-culture and by self-control, entirely without reference to any gods, and without desire for any future life. This position of Buddhism, in contrast with the old animism and all its children, was the most important fact in the comparative study of that religion. But the gradual decadence of Buddhism, and its final expulsion from India, showed how strong the old animism was, and were an example of how much more powerful than the voice of the prophets was the influence of congenial fancies and inherited beliefs.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

WE understand that the Council of the Royal Geographical Society have for some time past had in preparation three works which will be of great value and assistance to travellers and students of geography. The first, which is in the most forward state, and will probably be published in May, is a General Index to the fourth set of ten volumes of the society's Journal, including abstracts of the Presidential Addresses and classified lists of the papers and maps on the plan adopted by Col. Yule with the previous ten volumes. The second, which is now in the press, is a carefully arranged catalogue of the splendid collection of maps in the society's map-room, which will be especially useful to cartographers. The third, which is not yet completed, is a second Supplement to the Catalogue of the society's library (published in 1865), and will include additions to the end of 1880.

THE MS. of the Gazetteer of the World, which

Mr. Stanford has had in preparation for some time, is now complete. It is possible that the results of this year's census throughout the British Empire may be incorporated in the work before it is published.

WE hear that Mr. McCall and his party have safely reached Manyanga, near the right bank of the Congo above the Yellala Falls, and have established themselves there. The Livingstone (Congo) Inland Mission, therefore, have now no less than five stations in the first two hundred miles up the river—viz., Banana; Mataddi Minkanda, opposite Mr. H. M. Stanley's station at Vivi; Paraballa; Banza Montega; and Manyanga, which is situated a few miles inland from the northern bank of the Congo. They propose shortly to establish themselves at the confluence of the Edwin Arnold River and the Congo, and hope even to reach Stanley Pool before the end of the present year. The party at the present moment includes thirteen missionaries, an engineer, and three ladies. During the past three years they have lost three of their members from the fatal African fever, the last, Mr. Hugh McKergow, having died at the Paraballa station last January. Reinforcements are on the way out; and the operations of the expedition are now materially aided by the possession of a small steam-launch, which has been named the Livingstone.

THE Rev. T. J. Comber, the leader of the Baptist Missionary Society's expedition, whose objective point is also Stanley Pool, has not been so fortunate in his progress as Mr. McCall. He went out two years ago, and established his party at San Salvador, in the Congo region, and endeavoured to achieve his purpose by a land-march through Makuta. In this, as we have before recorded, he has hitherto signally failed, his party having at the last attempt been attacked and himself wounded. He accordingly remains still at San Salvador; but, although he has not attained his end, he has been able to supply much interesting information regarding the geography of the region, in addition to discovering the Arthington Falls in the Zombo Mountains. Now, however, his difficulties are probably much greater than before, as a Jesuit missionary expedition, under Portuguese protection, has entered the field. They ascended the Congo in January, and proceeded to San Salvador by Mr. Comber's own route, taking with them considerable presents for the king. They were escorted to their destination with much pomp by Portuguese officers, and a gun-boat is to pay periodical visits to the river to ensure their safety.

As we have before recorded, Père Depelchin some time back made his way from the Diamond Fields with a large party of Roman Catholic missionaries to Gubuluwayo, the capital of Matabele Land, whose king, Le Bengula, was but lately suspected of being very unfriendly to foreigners. Having established an amicable understanding with the king, and got his party into working order, he started for the River Zambesi with the view, we believe, of ascertaining whether it would be practicable to form a station among the tribes living to the north of the river. His prolonged absence had caused great anxiety to his friends at Gubuluwayo, and they began to fear that some disaster had befallen him. News, however, reached Cape Town in February that he had arrived at Tati to the south of the Matopopo Mountains, on the northern slopes of which Gubuluwayo is situated; but no details with regard to his expedition have yet come to hand.

THE engineers of the Panama inter-oceanic ship-canal do not appear to be yet quite happy about the task before them, as they are now engaged in making a "complementary" survey of the route, or, in other words, doing last year's work over again. Their great difficulty seems to be how to deal with the River Chagres, and their present idea is to do away with it altogether. This they hope to accomplish by building a huge dam between two mountains at the point where it impinges on the line of the proposed canal. This, however, from the figures given, promises to be such a stupendous work that no time can well be fixed for its completion, even if the necessary funds be forthcoming. The dam would have to be a mile long, and over 1,000 yards thick at the bottom and 250 at the top, with a height of some fifty yards. By the construction of this dam the engineers hope to turn the Chagres into a lake, relieved by an overflow to the Pacific.

SCIENCE NOTES.

The Turquoise in Prehistoric Times.—Under Pliny's name of Callais, M. Damour some years ago described a greenish mineral, apparently a variety of turquoise, which had been found, worked into ornamental forms, in some of the dolmens of the Morbihan, and had evidently been employed for purposes of personal decoration in prehistoric times. M. Cazalis de Fondouce has had occasion to examine a large number of objects worked in this material, and found not only in various parts of France, but also in Portugal. Thus M. Ribeiro obtained no fewer than 214 beads of callais in his exploration of the artificial grotto of Palmella. M. Cazalis de Fondouce has collected all the facts connected with the subject, and has contributed an interesting paper to the last number of M. Cartailhac's Matériaux pour l'Histoire de l'Homme. He believes that the callais, or turquoise, must have been imported into Western Europe from the East, probably towards the close of the Neolithic period; at any rate, it was largely used at the commencement of the Bronze age. It is difficult to speak definitely as to the ethnical characteristics of the prehistoric people who used this material, but it is suggested that they may have been the Ligurians, the Indo-European precursors of the great Celtic invasion.

DETAILED Reports on the Total Solar Eclipses of July 29, 1878, and January 11, 1880, have been collected, and are now published by the United States Naval Observatory in a volume which is to form Appendix III. of the Washington Observations of 1876. A number of expeditions were sent out to observe the eclipse of 1878, some of the stations chosen being more than 7,000 and 8,000 feet, and that at Pike's Peak, Colorado, even 14,000 feet above the level of the sea, so that some additional experience was gained respecting the suitability of high stations for astronomical observations. The reports are contributed by about sixty observers, and are given in their own words; and it has been the aim to reproduce as exactly as possible in the prints facsimiles of the original drawings and photographs, so that the fifty-five plates contained in the volume may be relied on as faithful copies. Some of the principal results of the observations have been previously given to the public. But the full meaning of them can only be deduced by careful comparison of these records with previous observations, especially with the great collection of eclipse records made by Mr. Ranyard, and published in the forty-first volume of the Memoirs of the Royal Astronomical Society. Several observers have devoted the few minutes of total eclipse to a search for planetary bodies in the neighbourhood of the sun; but the evidence of their reports is conflicting, and the question whether such bodies have really been seen by Prof. Watson and Mr. L. Swift, or how their observations can be satisfactorily explained, must for the present be left an open question. Perhaps the observations upon the corona will be regarded with special interest. Prof. A. W. Wright, of Yale College, who observed with Asaph Hall and others at La Junta, Colorado, examined specially the character of the polarisation of the corona. Observations made by three independent methods agree in showing that the polarisation is radial, and, therefore, the result of reflections of the sun's light from the coronal matter. Around the circumference the intensity of polarisation appears to be approximately uniform, except for a region about the sun's poles, where it seems rather greater. The polarisation decreases from the moon's limb outwards—a somewhat unexpected result, the reality of which, however, appears to be fully established by the observations. In case the matter of the corona consisted of solid particles or masses, the degree of polarisation should increase outwards from the sun. If the solid matter prevailed at the outer limits of the corona, the polarisation produced by it would be moderate in amount and continually decrease inwards. But if, nearer to the sun, the solid matter became vaporised by the heat or mingled with vaporous matter in continually increasing proportions, the stronger action of the latter might easily reverse the ordinary conditions and cause the polarisation to increase towards the sun, as actually observed. In this way is found a simple and satisfactory explanation of the phenomenon, which is accounted for with difficulty on any other supposition.

SOME of the arrangements have already been made for the anniversary meeting of the British Association at York this autumn. The address of the President-elect, Sir John Lubbock, will of course be delivered on the opening day, August 31, after the chair has been resigned in his favour by Mr. A. C. Ramsay. On the evening of the following day there will be a soirée. The two evening discourses will be given (on September 2) by Prof. T. H. Huxley, who has taken for his subject "The Rise and Progress of Palaeontology;" and (on September 5) by Mr. William Spottiswoode, who has chosen "The Electric Discharge: its Forms and its Functions." On September 6 there will be another soirée; and the concluding general meeting will be held on September 7. The two afternoons allotted for excursions are those of September 3 and September 8. The following is the list of presidents in the several sections:—(A.) Mathematical and Physical Science, Prof. Sir W. Thomson; (B.) Chemical Science, Prof. A. W. Williamson; (C.) Geology, Mr. A. C. Ramsay; (D.) Biology, with its three subdivisions of Zoology and Botany, Anthropology, and Anatomy and Physiology, Mr. Richard Owen; (E.) Geography, Sir J. D. Hooker; (F.) Economic Science and Statistics, Mr. Grant Duff; and (G.) Mechanical Science, Sir W. G. Armstrong.

M. MASSON has just published the first part of a new fortnightly periodical, entitled L'Electricien: Revue générale d'Electricité, edited by MM. E. Mercadier, Gariel, Niaudet, Dr. de Cyon, and Gaston Tissandier.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

WE understand that the author of the English version of Aristotle's Metaphysics, Book I., which was recently published by Messrs. Macmillan and Co., has in preparation a translation of the fourth book, and intends eventually to translate the whole thirteen.

MESSRS. TRÜBNER AND Co. have done a service to all Oriental students by publishing a second edition of their Catalogue of Leading Books on Egypt and Egyptology and on Assyria and Assyriology. Egypt takes up thirty-six pages; while Assyria and Babylonia (together with some other countries not very far off) require no less than fourteen pages for the literature they have already gathered.

JOHANNES TZETZES, the voluminous Greek grammarian of the twelfth century, has become, by a curious coincidence, the subject of two recent German monographs. The one is by Dr. Giske, of the University of Rostock, entitled De Joannis Tzetze scriptis ac vita; the other, by Dr. Hart, is published as a supplement to Fleckeisen's Jahrbücher.

THE French publishing house of Firmin Didot has just issued the third volume of M. P. Mullach's Fragmenta Philosophorum Græcorum. We hope shortly to give a review of this monumental work, which has yet to be completed by a fourth volume.

E. GROSSWALD, who has acquired a reputation by his translations from the Finnish language, intends making a journey through Finland in the course of the summer for the purpose of collecting popular songs and legends.

THE other day, at an old book-stall in Paris, the discovery was made of a MS. commentary upon the De Anima of Aristotle by Théophile Corydalleus, a French grammarian of the seventeenth century.

SOME BOOKS ON PHILOSOPHY.

Les Maladies de la Mémoire. Par Th. Ribot. (Paris: Germer-Baillière.) This is a good book—clear, concise, original, and marking in many respects a real advance. It is short enough to be read through at a sitting, simple enough for everybody to understand, and deep enough to tell us all something which we did not know before. It is itself too condensed to stand further condensation, so that any attempt at a résumé would be wholly impossible within the limits of our space—several pages at least would be requisite to sketch out the main argument; but a few remarks on its special novelties of treatment may serve as a guide to English psychological readers. M. Ribot affiliates memory on such general biological facts as the common impressionability, and reproductivity of nervous tissue, which is exemplified in secondarily automatic actions. This he regards as the unconscious equivalent of memory, and memory as the conscious equivalent of this. But the realisation on the author's part of the extreme complexity of even the simplest act of memory gives new and great value to his work. He is thoroughly penetrated with the idea that each memory depends upon the simultaneous excitation of numerous scattered nervous elements, bound together by the tie of habit. He thus distinguishes between what he calls the statical and the dynamical bases of memory, the former consisting of the modifications of the nervous elements and the latter of the associations established between them. The pathology of memory is then employed as a test and illustration of the physiological theories already advanced. The order in which elements of memory disappear in epilepsy, old age, or softening of the brain is shown to follow certain regular laws; the more complex fading away before the simpler, and the more firmly registered or older acquisitions outlasting the more loosely registered and later. A few interesting cases are cited to show that, when (as rarely happens) a lost memory is restored, the restoration exactly reverses this process of obliiviscence. The order of loss seems to be thus: first, recent events disappear; then complex individual ideas—proper names, persons, places; next, general and simple ideas; afterwards, sentiments and emotions; finally, bodily activities. This law is proved by numerous examples, and is also shown to be a priori natural. Partial losses of memory are accounted for on the principle that there is really no such thing as the memory; there are only individual memories; and of these any one may be lost by special lesions of the parts where it is localised. Here, again, M. Ribot's marked analytical faculty stands him in good stead. He is able to explain the apparent capriciousness of partial amnesias (for example, in aphasia) by the extraordinary number of elements involved. We may forget sounds, or printed letters, or combinations of letters, or motor impulses necessary for the formation of articulate speech; and so we may possibly remember how to read, while we forget how to speak; or remember audible words, while we forget how to articulate them; or remember how to articulate, while we forget their meaning; or remember their meaning and appearance, while we forget their audible sound. The author's final summing up is to the effect that memory consists in a process of organisation varying between two extreme limits—absolute novelty of sensation on the one hand, complete organic registration on the other. M. Ribot writes, as always, on the pure biological side, with a marked anti-spiritualistic bias. In England we should say, perhaps, that he was a little aggressive; but then, with us, the battle of the schools has been practically fought out long since, whereas in France it still rages fiercely, and the "official" psychology still has all the honours to itself, so that a little wholesome aggressiveness is perhaps not wholly unnatural. There are sundry minor points on which we should be inclined to hesitate in agreeing with the author—for example, when he follows Prof. Max Müller and his school in those speculations as to the origin of Aryan roots which would imply that the primitive Aryans had words for highly abstract ideas before they had words for simple concrete ones (a palpable impossibility, it seems to us, from the evolutionist standpoint); or, again, when he accepts as genuine the remark of an English lady (temporarily semi-conscious) that she saw men "as trees walking," which was clearly suggested to her by Scripture, and was probably the result of a pious fraud or a desire to accommodate her sensations on recovering consciousness to the recorded case in the Gospel; but to insist upon such small questions would give a false air of disagreement where the book, as a whole, is thoroughly to be welcomed. Add that it is written in M. Ribot's lucid, graphic, and animated style, and psychologists generally will see that the work is one which they cannot afford to overlook.

A History of Greek Philosophy from the Earliest Period to the Time of Socrates. With a general Introduction. Translated from the German of Dr. E. Zeller by S. F. Alleyne. In 2 vols. (Longmans.) These two handsome volumes contain a translation of the first volume of the original as it appears in its last (i.e., the fourth) edition. As Miss Alleyne remarks, "there is no need to speak highly of a work so well known." It may, however, be pointed out how in this, as in earlier editions, Zeller has noticed and estimated for his own purposes almost everything, whether in learned periodicals or special monographs, that modern criticism has contributed to generate or discover light amid the manifold darkness of the early Greek philosophy. Teichmüller's Studien and Neue Studien zur Geschichte der Begriffe receive at least as much attention as their brilliant, but erratic, author deserves; and the views of Lange on the Atomists, and of Grote on the Sophists, are fairly stated and brought to the due point which the historian of a single school or period of thought is apt to miss. The translation is excellent; alike in ease and accuracy it reaches a high standard of merit. Even readers familiar with German may be glad to consult the work of Zeller in this shape. Miss Alleyne is to be congratulated on the successful achievement of what must have been, especially as regards the notes, an arduous and, at times, a tedious task. From the students of ancient philosophy, to whom this work on the origines of Greek speculation is indispensable for guidance and reference, she deserves a hearty vote of thanks. The text seems, so far as our inspection has gone, to be wonderfully correct. But to show that we are not disposed to abandon the part of Momus altogether, we may suggest that in vol. ii. "year" in the fourth line from the foot, p. 117, and "ancient" in the fourth line from the foot, p. 302, are slips for "third" and "earlier" respectively.

THE current number of Brain contains two articles of general interest. The first, which is from the pen of one of the editors, Dr. Bucknill, discusses the influence of the late Lord Chief Justice on legal ideas of insanity. Sir Alexander Cockburn is here said to have been distinguished for his early and cordial recognition of the forensic value of medical knowledge. He fully saw the multiform character of delusion, and was among the warm supporters of such a change in the criminal law as would recognise the existence of uncontrollable impulse, even along with considerable intelligence as to the nature of the action performed. At the same time, he tended, according to Dr. Bucknill, too much to split up the mind into perfectly distinct faculties, after the analogy of the separate parts of the bodily organism, and so did not allow enough to the general presumption that delusion involves a disturbance of the mind as a whole. This erroneous tendency appears most conspicuously in his view of the civil, as distinguished from the criminal, side of lunacy in the courts. Sir Alexander Cockburn's ideas on the bearing of mental disturbances on testamentary responsibility are compared in an interesting way with those of Lords Brougham and Penzance. The whole article is thoroughly judicious in tone, and should serve to make clear to the lay mind the present position of these intricate practical problems. The second article to which reference was made is that on "Observations on Certain Optical Illusions of Motion," by Dr. C. S. W. Cobbold. Setting out from Prof. Thompson's article in a recent number of Brain, the writer seeks to show that the Professor's law of "subjective complementary motion," by which certain apparent slight movements of objects are referred to a state of fatigue of the retina, though capable of accounting for many of the facts, does not account for all. In addition to this cause, Dr. Cobbold recognises two others—namely, the persistence of retinal impressions leading to a momentary confusion of small contiguous spaces over which the eye is travelling, and that recognised in the "muscular slipping" theory—that is to say, the execution of slight ocular movements without the corresponding consciousness of these, which Prof. Thompson seems to put aside altogether. We think the author has done good service to the psychological student in calling attention to the complexity of these phenomena of illusory movement. Much will still have to be done before the theory of them is complete. This may be seen by a glance at one of the latest German works on the subject, Die Schein-Bewegungen, by Prof. J. I. Hoppe.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.—(Wednesday, April 20.)

CHARLES CLARK, ESQ., Q.C., in the Chair.—Mr. Robert N. Cust read an interesting paper on "Spain, its Cities and Customs," in which he described the cathedrals, civil guard, and brigands, the bull-fights, hotels, railroads, &c., and the demeanour of the people toward strangers, which he found everywhere to be kind, courteous, and hospitable. Travellers were not troubled by the police, and do not require passports. Mr. Cust then called attention to the architectural "restorations" now or recently in progress, which, in the case of the Al-Hamra, he considered to be excessive; on the other hand, in the great mosque-cathedral of Cordova, and in the Jewish synagogues at Toledo, the work had been judiciously done. With regard to the peculiar institution of the bull-fight, he expressed the opinion that, as spacious arenas had been built in every town in Spain for its exhibition, there was little hope of its being done away with.

SOCIETY FOR THE PROMOTION OF HELLENIC STUDIES.—(Thursday, April 21.)

C. T. NEWTON, ESQ., C.B., V.-P., in the Chair.—The following papers were read:—(1) By Mr. C. T. Newton, on the statuette of Athene Parthenos recently discovered at Athens, and believed to be copied, as to its main features, from the Chryselephantine statue by Pheidias.—(2) By Canon Greenwell, on votive helmets and spear-heads, several of which have of recent years been discovered in the soil at Olympia. "These were dedicated alike by cities and by individuals to the deities to whose favour the dedicator attributed his success. The writer showed that, whereas most of the dedicatory helmets which have come down to us were actually used in warfare, this was not true of the spear-heads, which were of awkward shape, and made of bronze at a time when iron was used for warlike weapons.—(3) By Mr. P. Gardner, on boat-races among the Greeks, which the writer showed, both by quotations from ancient writers and the evidence of coins, to have been not unusual.—(4) By Mr. Geldart, on the adjectives ἐνός and ἐνός.

FOLK-LORE SOCIETY.—(Friday, April 22.)

MR. HYDE CLARKE in the Chair.—The Chairman read a paper on "The Relation of English Folk-Lore to the English Tongue, and on the influence of Each on the Other." Pointing out that the nursery rhymes and popular sayings of England generally began with what our fathers called head-rhymes, Mr. Clarke proceeded to show the evidence which this gave of the antiquity of popular sayings, and how the poetry of literature had always been influenced by the genius of the language for head-rhymes, even after end-rhymes had come into vogue.—In the discussion which followed the paper, Mr. Alfred Nutt, Mr. Pfoundes, Mr. Fitzgerald, and Mr. Gomme took part.

FINE ART.

THE MONUMENTS ON MOUNT SIPYLOS.

Le Sipylos et ses Monuments. Par E. Weber (Paris: Ducher.)

THIS work deserves attention as the first systematic attempt to bring into one view the many interesting remains which mark the range of mountains, twenty miles long by ten broad, known to the Greeks as Sipylos. Some of the most remarkable ruins are the discovery of the author; others are described almost for the first time in these pages. Even in the case of those which have been long known and often described, he has been able to add something to the published accounts.

To understand the feeling of love and awe with which the Greeks regarded Sipylos, a feeling that is most apparent in Pausanias, one must go back to primitive days. To the Hellenic mind mountains were simply a barrier and a defence. The Hermus Valley, on the north of Sipylos, had nothing to do with the Vale of Smyrna on the south. They belonged to different races; and thus the history of Sipylos falls into two parts, according as it is connected with Magnesia and the Hermus Valley, or with the great city of Smyrna. But, at an earlier time, the state of affairs was very different. Both valleys formed part of one empire, whose stronghold was on the mountains, while its sea-port—Naulochon—lay beside the Gulf of Smyrna. Of this early empire, which had decayed before Greek colonists began in the eleventh century B.C. to occupy the coast of Asia Minor, history, in the usual sense of the word, has perished. Among the older races the individual is of little consequence; chiefs rule, pass away, and their memory dies with them. Their religion is the one enduring institution; and epithets connected with their religion mark the various kings as the servants of their gods. The power of these gods is confined to the country in which they are worshipped; but there it is supreme, and strangers acknowledge it as much as natives. Hence, when new empires supplanted the old, the former gods continued to be worshipped by the new inhabitants as much as by their ancient votaries. A familiar example occurs in Jewish history, 2 Kings xvii. When the Assyrian conqueror peopled Samaria with new inhabitants, they did not at first worship the God of Israel, "they feared not the Lord;" and the misfortunes which befel them were stayed, according to the sacred historian, by fetching an Israelitish priest to "teach them the manner of the God of the land." So the Greek colonists began to worship the gods of Sipyles, alongside of those whom they brought with them. Thus it has fortunately happened that the legends which always gather around religious ceremonies were preserved among the Greeks, and have kept alive the memory of an otherwise forgotten empire. In Asia Minor no writer has preserved for us, as Pausanias has so often done in Greece, the more homely local form of the legends, which is, for history, far more important than the moralised and beautiful form of the same legends as they appear in literature. We would gladly know what the local cultus of Magnesia said about Niobe and Tantalos, as well as what Homer and Aeschylus have said. Scattered allusions in literature to actual worship must be combined with the evidence of coins, inscriptions, &c., to complete our knowledge. But, before this task could be properly performed, a trustworthy account of the actual sites and of the country in which they are situated was required. Hence the importance of M. Weber's work, which supplies for the first time many of the data required. Of the two familiar antiquities of Sipylus, the Niobe and the Acropolis that overhangs the north-eastern corner of the Gulf of Smyrna, there existed already the careful and accurate account with plans in Curtius's Beiträge zur Geschichte Kleinasiens. But nothing has ever been written about the other ruins in various parts of the mountain, except a brief notice of two of them in the Journal of Hellenic Studies, vol. i., until M. Weber's work appeared.

The book is divided into two parts—topographical and historical. Of these, the first is the more important, and the one that scholars will turn to with most interest. It is the work of one who knows well the places he describes, and whose statement of what he saw is direct and simple. I am able from personal observation to add that the plans given of the different sites are most accurate and trustworthy, and that the chief fault to be found with the descriptions is that one could wish them longer. It appears as if the writer had a wholesome fear of giving a wearisome mass of details; and he is therefore too brief for a reader who desires to know the most minute details about the character of the ruins and the style of building employed, for on such details alone can a judgment as to the age of the ruins be founded. Of the plans I have hardly any criticism to offer, except that the entrance marked 9 of the Hieron of Cybele ought to be placed at a very sharp angle with the wall. This is an interesting, but not uncommon, phenomenon. In the walls of Volterra, two gateways are thus placed obliquely; and in both cases Mr. Dennis (Etruria, ii. 148) observes that the right side of an enemy approaching would be exposed to the defenders on the walls. Here this is not the case; the road winds round the hill and enters obliquely because the slope is too steep for a direct entrance.

One cannot linger over the ruins of Sipylus without trying to identify them with the places mentioned by Greek authors. M. Weber has started a new hypothesis, which would fix approximately several of these places. He considers that he has found the ruins of the Hieron of Meter Plakiane or Plastene (the reading is doubtful, Paus. v. 13), and that this Hieron was the sacred spot in Sipylus to which the people of Smyrna resorted. After repeated visits I can find nothing in this site to lead me to consider it a Hieron; it has been a strongly fortified city with a double line of wall. Moreover, from the terms in which Pausanias speaks of the Hieron of Meter Plakiane, one is led to believe that it was still a familiar place of worship in his time. Now the tutelary goddess of Smyrna was Meter Sipylene. Her temple was on the east side of the city, apparently outside the wall; and there is not, so far as I know, the slightest evidence to show that the people of Smyrna went anywhere else to worship the goddess of Sipylus than to this temple—τῆς εἰληχίας θεοῦ τὴν πόλιν (Arist. i. 375, Dind.). I firmly adhere to the old opinion that the so-called Niobe is the sacred image of the Hieron that Pausanias mentions.

Those who have followed the recent controversy in the pages of the ACADEMY with regard to the "Niobe" will probably look at once to see what M. Weber says as to the disputed feet. Mr. Dennis, in one of his letters, quoted M. Weber as agreeing with him; but Prof. Sayce may with equal justice quote M. Weber's book on his side: "les pieds, selon toute apparence, appuyés sur un tabouret." Authority—which is, however, of little importance in such questions—is certainly against Mr. Dennis. The only other description published by a professed archaeologist is that of Hirschfeld in Curtius's Beiträge, p. 83, who says, "Die Füsse anscheinend auf eine Fussbank gesetzt." Hirschfeld visited the Niobe in company with Curtius, Stark, and others; and we may presume that he expresses the opinion of the party, as Stark, Nach dem griech. Orient, refers to his description without expressing dissent. One gentleman in whose company I once visited the figure, and whose name (were I at liberty to mention it) would carry much weight, was unable to discern feet; but he was consistent in his scepticism, and declined to recognise that the figure was a sitting figure at all. This seems to me to put the question in its proper bearings. The figure is so rude and disproportioned that it is hard to determine its general character; but, if one once inclines to the view that it represents a sitting woman, two shapeless projections near the base of the chair or throne, separated from one another by a deep groove (Mr. Dennis always speaks of them as "a ledge"), can be explained only as feet. But Mr. Dennis, rightly as I think, disbelieves in the "upturned toes" of which Prof. Sayce speaks. It is inconsistent with the rude outlines of the image that such details should be expressed. Mr. Dennis argues that there are no carefully carved feet such as Prof. Sayce had seemed to speak of, but perhaps he would not refuse to admit that there is a rude and shapeless indication of them. But the question has been as yet treated too much as a matter of individual appreciation, and too little attempt has been made to bring the figure into connexion with the symbolism of the cultus to which it belonged, and to consider its relation to other hieratic images.

M. Weber justly estimates very high the value of Pausanias's references to Sipylus. It is evident that Pausanias seizes every occasion to refer to these mountains, beneath which he must have been born (Paus. v. 13), and anyone who knows the country must be struck with the vivid character of his brief words.

The historical part of M. Weber's book has not the value of the topographical part. It aims at giving a summary of opinion on the subject, and does not contain much that is new. In particular, it cannot be said that much has been done to clear up the mystery that hangs over the fate of old Smyrna. One of the great Ionic cities, the rival of Miletos and Colophon, it seems to have disappeared without leaving a trace. A good deal can be said about the older Lydian city, whose necropolis of mounds is well known. Much is also known of the later Smyrna, whose tombs have been opened in great numbers, and have supplied multitudes of the "Ephesian terracottas" which, when completed and gilded by skilful Athenian hands, were formerly so popular. Not a single grave has yet been opened, not a single relic found, which can be assigned to the great city that for four centuries ruled this district of Asia Minor. The "seconde acropole," which M. Weber has discovered near Bournabat is a most interesting ruin; but one cannot admit that a rude and simple wall of enclosure, built without any plan and at the foot of a sloping hill, is the acropolis of a great city. One must, however, remember what difficulty the author has had in writing the historical part without any of the literary or other appliances necessary for such a work. The book has been to him a labour of love in the intervals of other work. That part is best which is most necessary, and which could be done only in Smyrna; that part is least excellent which could be better done in Paris or London. Anyone who wishes to understand the history of this important district must work on M. Weber's book as a foundation.

It would be unfair to finish without referring to the acknowledgment that the author pays to the library of the Greek Evangelical school of Smyrna. Without it the study of archaeology in Smyrna would be possible only to one who could bring a library with him; and a great service can be rendered to the study by anyone who presents a new book of reference to the not over-furnished shelves of the library. Its books are always placed at the service of all interested in such studies.

W. M. RAMSAY.

EXHIBITIONS.

THE INSTITUTE OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.

THE last spring exhibition which the Institute is likely to open in its present gallery and under the existing condition of things is not made remarkable, it may be said, by the presence of any one perfectly satisfactory masterpiece in water-colours; but it contains a very fair number of excellent drawings, of which, as is usual at the Institute, the greater number are figure pieces. Prominence has been assigned, and not unduly by any means, to the skilfully conceived and brilliantly executed genre picture by Mr. Gregory, Last Touches (No. 144); but in the conception of this work a certain vulgarity has accompanied the skill, and in its execution a certain bravado has thrown discredit on the brilliancy. Yet whatever may be its offence of sentiment—however it may irritate by its abundant evidence of the employment upon the commonplace and the ungainly of a talent that might be better devoted to the refined and the beautiful—it remains about the most forcible of the contributions to this year's show. In it the artist has known perfectly what it was that he intended to do, and he has exactly done it. For any equally complete realisation of an aim firmly kept in view we should probably have to go to the work of the one master landscape painter the Institute is happy in possessing; and then we should recognise, as we have often had occasion to recognise before, that within its well-assigned limits the art of Mr. Hine is accomplished and faultless.

But though there is no little display of strong or delicate landscape studies at the Institute—in the contributions of Mr. Hine, Mr. Collier, Mr. Syer, Mr. Fahey, Mr. Orrock, Mr. Aumonier, and this year of Mr. Clausen—it is the presence of a few highly cultured figure painters that gives to this exhibition much of its fascination. Mr. Gregory, of course, with all his wanton disregard of beauty, is one of these men, and one of the cleverest of them. Mr. Bale, a student of fine colour, if of somewhat ugly and heavy humanity, is another. Mr. Gow is among the number. So are Mr. Linton and Mr. Charles Green and Mr. Towneley Green. These figure painters are, obviously enough, men of exceedingly different aim, some of them treating the figure as a medium for the expression of comedy, some portraying intimate character with pathos or humour, and some content or even proud to allow the human interest—at all events, the interest of adventure, whether light or sad—to fall into the secondary place, and to claim the first attention for their solution of purely artistic problems—questions of line and of hue. Mr. Gow—occupied, it is to be hoped and believed, in fully justifying his recent election to the Associate-ship of the Academy—is unrepresented in his accustomed place of exhibition. Mr. Charles Green sends one of his most distinctly humorous and one of his most completely finished performances, Behind Time (No. 44)—an elaborate drawing of a more than middle-aged lover thus far disappointed at the place of rendezvous. Something of exaggeration or of caricature in the expression of a face yet very cleverly conceived connects the work not quite so much with Nature as with the comedian's view of it; but it is the view, at all events, of a refined comedian, who makes his point perhaps rather obviously, yet without grossness of emphasis. Mr. Towneley Green is a still gentler comedian than his brother. He is not quite so perfect a craftsman—that is, in the imitation of textures and in the laying of tints his skill is not so absolutely developed. But there is much of engaging Nature, much command of delicate sentiment, in the agreeable drawing (No. 67), Talking them over, in which Mr. Towneley Green depicts the assuredly successful wiles practised by a cajoling damsel upon a disheartened parent. The people are of the lower middle class—small farmers of their own land—and the quaint interior depicted is such a one as is common even now in the remoter regions of Wales. Mr. Linton is the remaining figure painter whose work suggests itself for discussion. He sends an Amy Robart (No. 152) which does not entirely satisfy. Its presence gives occasional justification to an often inaccurate charge that he is primarily a painter of costume. The costume is perfect. His Janet Foster, however (No. 137), shows him a painter of admirable human beauty, as well as an almost faultless student of the relations of light, shade, and colour. As regards the character, Mr. Linton has fairly enough presumed in Janet Foster a native refinement which is the occasional accident of her class; and she takes her place worthily in the little gallery, the artist is gradually accumulating, of drawings which realise that picturesqueness if not too profound humanity which engaged the interest of a novelist who was more an antiquary than an analyst.

Removed from painters of the figure by the comparative unimportance of his figures when he does introduce them, and removed from landscape painters by his refined devotion, not to Nature unadorned, but to Nature as she looks when the hand of the landscape gardener or of the architect of the Renaissance has been feelingly laid upon her, Mr. Fulleylove's place is a perfectly individual one, and he continues to occupy it worthily. Quite unqualified approval of his most ambitious design—an illustration to Mr. Morris—no one is called upon to give; but it has excellent qualities, easy of recognition; while of such drawings as that of the Boboli Gardens (No. 97) it may truly be said that they realise for us in unfamiliar ways a quietude of ordered beauty that appeals least to the least refined. Void of a generally acceptable subject, often curious, though exceedingly skilful, in composition, and rich and subtle in colour, they gain upon us, partly by right of the artist's own complete sympathy with a kind of beauty it is easy to style artificial, and to think one has condemned and disposed of when one has so styled it. In them, too, the sentiment of a dignified Past is suggested with that adroit reticence which is of the essence of art—it is not insisted upon or emphasised.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

ROSA BONHEUR'S PICTURES.

SATURDAY last was the private view of an interesting exhibition of two important pictures, now open to the public at the gallery No. 1A King Street, St. James's, by the veteran painter of the Horse Fair and other admirable works not soon to be forgotten. These new pictures are called On the Alert and A Foraging Party, both forest scenes, life-size. The first-named represents a noble stag rearing his head and expanding his ears to catch the distant sound that has alarmed him; the other, two wild boars, grubbing along among the mast of last season in the fresh spring-time. The yellow leaves of the autumn ferns are mixed with, and partially covered by, the bright-green fronds but lately spread. The great head of the leading boar, with its almost terrible red eye surrounded by curious cool gray bristles shading off into black, and its broad ridge of back—whereon the artist has indulged with admirable effect in a certain sleight-of-hand execution by means of the handle of the brush and palette knife—are realistic in the extreme. The background of this subject is composed of broken ground, rocks, and brushwood, wherein some others of the herd are partially seen; the background of the stag is evidently the confines of a wood in morning mist. Here the white stems of young birch-trees characteristic of such a locality, rising close to the foreground, compose admirably, both in their forms and in colour, with the rich brown fur and the polished antlers of the startled animal. This fine specimen of the species is, we believe, a friend and companion of M^{me}. Bonheur—one of her familiars in the country home now her general residence. If the visitor remembers the velvety softness and, we must say, conventional dexterity of Landseer's handling, he will be surprised and interested by the fidelity and uncompromising veracity of the execution shown in the various textures of the hair of M^{me}. Bonheur's king of the herd. We understand that these pictures have been lately exhibited in Antwerp, where they gained for the artist the Order of Leopold.

OBITUARY.

MR. WILLIAM BURGESS.

THE death of Mr. William Burgess, which happened on Wednesday week after a short but severe illness, leaves a serious gap in the front rank of English architects. He was only fifty-three years of age, and neither had nor sought to have a large practice; but he was one of the few men whose example and teaching have had a distinct influence on the course of English art. That this influence was in one respect unfortunate we do not hesitate to say. Mr. Burgess was the earliest and ablest advocate of the introduction of Early French Gothic architecture into England. The conspicuous merit of the designs in that style produced by him and by one or two others called forth a legion of imitators, who easily caught up some of the tricks of the style, but lacked altogether the skill needful to turn it to any good use, and who covered the land with buildings which for downright ugliness surpass all others even in this age of ugly buildings. No one was stronger in his condemnation of these things than Mr. Burgess himself, but they did not shake his faith in his favourite style. Other thinking architects, who were for a time attracted by the apparent strength of the new importation as compared with the rather tame style of Gothic then most in use, soon found that, neither by its own merits nor by its adaptability to modern wants, was the French of the thirteenth century fit to become the basis of English architecture of the future. The vulgar parodies of it by men of the baser sort completed their discontent with it; and now for a long time Mr. Burgess has been almost its only advocate of any mark. But the reasons by which he defended his preference were such as to exclude all the inferior imitations from his protection. He thought that the Early French Gothic gave the most scope for the development of the highest qualities of architecture; and, although in this we may not agree with him, we may thank him for the persistence with which he insisted upon the recognition and cultivation of those qualities. No man saw more clearly or taught more plainly that the essential of good architecture is art, and that style is a mere accident. And he could himself, if need were, produce good work in other styles than that which he had chiefly made his own; as witness his remodelling of Worcester College Chapel, Oxford, and the design, not yet executed, for the reredos of King's College Chapel, Cambridge.

Mr. Burges was a pupil of the late Mr. Edward Blore. One of his earliest works was the repair and fitting-up of the nave of Waltham Abbey, which he did in his own style, and not according to the mischievous canons of "restoration." Cork Cathedral and the additions to Cardiff Castle are his most important buildings; and among the others may be mentioned the churches at Studley and Skelton near Ripon, and the house which he lately built for himself. Some of his unexecuted designs added much to his reputation. His design for the memorial church at Constantinople was accepted, but afterwards laid aside for one by Mr. Street, for reasons which we need not now discuss. In union with Mr. R. P. Pullan, he obtained the first place in the European competition for the cathedral at Lille; but French national vanity would not allow the work to be given to foreigners, and so it was taken away from them. The executed building is, we believe, a feeble "improvement" on their design. Mr. Burges was one of the eleven architects commissioned to make designs for the New Law Courts, and sent in one of very great merit. It was afterwards published, and for some years formed the chief stock-in-trade of the competition jobbers.

The only book published by Mr. Burges was a collection of his sketches. But he wrote many papers upon architecture and its allied arts, which appeared in the Ecclesiologist, the Gentleman's Magazine, the Archæological Journal, and elsewhere; and he contributed several very valuable essays to the Gleanings from Westminster Abbey. His most important antiquarian work will probably be the Catalogue of Helmets, which he leaves almost ready to be issued by the Archæological Institute.

Only a few weeks ago Mr. Burges was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, a distinction which he had fairly earned, and it is to be hoped that the place he vacates will be as well filled.

J. T. MICKLETHWAITE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

WE understand that the reproduction of the editio princeps of the Ars Moriendi, which the Holbein Society have had in hand so long, is now complete. The only perfect copy of this edition known to exist is in the British Museum, having been purchased at the Weigel sale. The Introduction will, we understand, be written by Mr. George Bullen. The facsimile has been executed by Mr. F. C. Price.

WE hear from Prof. Sayce, who has just returned to Oxford from his travels in the Levant, that Dr. Schliemann has closed his excavations at Orchomenus. He recommenced the work on April 1—an ill-omened day—and finished it on April 11, having thoroughly cleaned out the Treasury of the Minyae.

WE gather from an account of an exhibition of the Société des Aquarellistes Belges which is now taking place at Brussels that Miss Clara Montalba, who is a member of that society, has taken to practise in a new field. An "interior" by her, shown there, is spoken of with much praise. The brilliant water-colour artist of Venetian effects has never, to our remembrance, exhibited a single interior in the London galleries, where her works are best known.

THE first of Prof. C. T. Newton's course of lectures during the current term will be delivered at University College on May 6, at four p.m. The subject is "General Characteristics of Greek and Roman Sepulchral Monuments and Rites;" and the public will be admitted without payment or ticket.

AN exhibition of paintings by living artists will shortly be held at Leeds; and among those who have promised contributions are Messrs. Pettie, Briton Rivière, Herkomer, Calderon, Absolon, Aumonier, P. R. Morris, Linton, Topham, and C. E. Johnson.

MR. SEYMOUR LUCAS' painting of The Gordon Riots is stated to have been purchased for the Colonial Gallery at Melbourne. It was exhibited at the Royal Academy two years ago, and latterly at the Melbourne International Exhibition.

MILLET's celebrated picture of L'Angelus, the sale of which we recorded a few weeks ago in the Wilson collection, has again changed hands. The French Government bid for it at the Wilson sale up to 150,000 frs., but it was acquired by M. Secretan for 160,000 frs., and has now been resold by him for 200,000 frs.

WE are informed that the celebrated picture by Rubens representing Neptune and Amphitrite has been sold by Count Schönborn, of Vienna, not to the German Crown Prince, but to the Berlin Museum. This masterpiece, which since the seventeenth century has been in the possession of the Schönborn family, was probably painted about the year 1610. The subject is treated in a very fantastic way, and makes one suppose that the artist intended to represent an allegory of the marriage of the earth with the sea. The execution is uncommonly firm and elaborate. The picture has been engraved by Schmutzer.

THE Académie des Beaux-Arts has elected M. Chaplain a member in the section of Engraving, in the place of the late M. Gatteaux.

A CURIOUS subject of study is brought forward by M. Charles Ephrussi in a short monograph he has lately published, entitled Les Bains de Femmes d'Albert Dürer. Dürer students will probably remember a large wood-cut called Le Bain d'Hommes, which is usually reckoned among Dürer's works. M. Ephrussi, who is known by his unwearying study of Dürer's drawings, describes one in the Museum at Bremen, wherein is represented "a women's bath." Six naked women of appalling ugliness sit or stand about on the steps of a mediaeval German bathing-house, performing with ungraceful actions the various operations of the bath. This drawing is signed A. D., with separate letters, as was Dürer's manner in his early time, and is dated 1496. Hausmann mentions it, and recognises its relation to the better-known "men's bath." Both were probably enough studies by Dürer of the naked figure in its most realistic aspect in his early time. The same subject with variations is treated also in a drawing in the Duke of Devonshire's collection at Chatsworth; and M. Ephrussi has found two reversed proofs of a wood-cut of the Bremen drawing in the Cabinet des Estampes at Paris passing under the name of Hans Baldung Grün. Bathing-houses were common in Germany in the fifteenth century, and artists may have been glad to seize upon such opportunities of studying the human figure. M. Ephrussi gives excellent reproductions of the drawings mentioned, and of two others that he refers to as belonging probably to the same subject. But the pen-drawing in the British Museum representing Death holding his hour-glass over the shoulder of a naked young woman, who is contemplating her charms in a convex mirror, does not seem to us to have anything to do with the others, and we have never accepted it as an authentic work by Dürer. The style and the drawing are quite different from his.

A BRONZE statue of Dante has lately been set up in the square of the Collège de France, this being the quarter in which he lived when in Paris in 1302.

WE have before mentioned the fine collection of water-colour drawings illustrative of the Fables of La Fontaine that has been made by M. Roux. This collection, comprising in the whole 200 works, is now being exhibited at the French Society of Water-Colours, Rue Lafitte. Many of the most celebrated French artists of the day have contributed to it, the Catalogue containing such names as those of Baudry, Gérôme, Henner, G. Moreau, de Nittis, Heilbuth, Pasini, Delaunay, Ph. Rousseau, &c., beside twenty-one water-colour drawings by the late Jules Jacquemart—works not included in the Jacquemart exhibition, and hitherto entirely unknown.

THE South Kensington Museum, of which a new volume was commenced in January, still continues to give eight facsimiles of etchings of interesting specimens of art treasures for one shilling. A marked improvement is observable in the plates, due either to greater perfection in the method of reproduction or superior skill in printing; some of those in the last number are quite brilliant in comparison with the flat, toneless productions of last year.

THE Great Historic Galleries of England, with its superb permanent photographs from superb pictures, could scarcely be expected to improve upon the first volume, but it has increased and varied its interest, both "historic" and artistic, by its lovely selections of miniatures. These seem to lend themselves to reproduction through the camera. The Olivers and the Pettits come out beautifully, but the Cosways and Holbeins are even kinder. The Holbeins are from Windsor Castle, the rest from Castle Howard. Among the pictures reproduced are the Hertford Nelly O'Brien, by Sir Joshua Reynolds, and Mrs. Hope's Lady reading a Letter, exhibited in Burlington House last winter. It would be impossible to exceed the force and clearness of the reproduction of the latter, which, hitherto ascribed to Metsu, is now believed by some good authorities to be the work of J. Vermeer, usually called Van der Meer, of Delft.

THE STAGE.

MR. GILBERT'S SATIRE.

WE confine ourselves, in this column, to noticing, from a dramatic and literary point of view, the new skit on the best-abused people in London—the professional aesthetes—omitting any comment upon Mr. Arthur Sullivan's charming music. And, from the point of view from which we consider it, Patience is a distinct success. Everything that is possible has now been done; and when Patience and The Colonel have had their run the subject will be left in peace, and the heroes of it forgotten. With every appreciation of Mr. Burnand's Colonel, we take leave to think that the venial errors and pleasant vices of the would-be aesthetes—the mere imitators, after all, of artists and critics of culture and attainments—are better suited for such satire as may be applied to them lightly in comic verse and melodious music than for the satire that is applied through the medium of comedy. Mr. Gilbert's instinct guided him well when he elected to write, not a comedy, but the libretto of a comic opera. Some things are still sacred for comedy; nothing is sacred for a comic opera. No one can reasonably take even the slightest umbrage at the fun that is here made; if the joke is a small one, pretty music and a patter song may be trusted to carry it off successfully; and the pleasure of the eye is assured by a parade of damsels, first in the hues of Morris, Helbronner, and Liberty, and then in the garments of M^{de}. Louise. In a word, all the material for effective comic opera is here, and it is skilfully used. We have the two aesthetic poets—the one of them permanently an aesthete; the other eventually altered from “this melancholy literary man” to that perhaps not very obviously higher type of humanity, “a threepenny bus young man.”

“A steady and stolid-y jolly Bank-holiday
Every-day young man.”

We have a company of dragoons who—in despair of otherwise winning the attentions of their loves—endeavour in vain to follow in the fashions of aestheticism. We have the pretty milkmaid who gives her name to the piece, and who naturally becomes the love of a poet whose songs are of pastoral puerility, and whose art is that of a Marcus Ward Christmas-card—quite excellent in its way, but hardly an adequate substitute for Michelangelo and Velasquez. We have, lastly, the twenty damsels themselves, who being not “very” but “supremely” happy, somehow “never seem quite well,” but who eventually pass from under the melancholy dominion of the poetaster to a world of commonplace activity, in which they appear as “prettily patterning, cheerily chattering, Madame Louise young girls.”

The story by the aid of which these changes come about is, if anything, a little too ingenious for the requirements of comic opera. It is an elaborate adaptation of the ballad about the two “mild” curates in the Bab Ballads. Mr. Gilbert has planned his story skilfully and has conducted its various scenes with bright and generally healthy humour. The dialogue is full of entertaining things, and the sharp clatter of the songs is Mr. Gilbert's own. For our own part we have only two complaints to make to him. He might suppress all mention of the particular remedy—culled from the British Pharmacopoeia—which is to cure “the woes” of the transcendental; and, in his next piece, he might perhaps altogether dispense with the assistance of that frowsy middle-aged character, between whom and the youthful beauties he is so fond of instituting distasteful if ludicrous comparisons. We do not care to hear again the vulgar utterance of the middle-aged spinster, “I am ripe, Reginald, and already I am decaying.”

As regards the acting, it is undertaken by acknowledged experts in comic opera: Miss Leonora Braham, Miss Alice Barnett, Mr. Rutland Barrington, and Mr. George Grossmith. The piece provides the public with the certainty of a merry and exhilarating hour. Thus far, if—as we opine—it is the aesthetic people who have had the beauty, it is undoubtedly the Philistines who have had the wit. And the Philistines must consider themselves fortunate in having both Mr. Gilbert and Mr. Burnand upon their side. They are but too well represented.

STAGE NOTES.

It is on Monday next that Mr. Irving and Mr. Edwin Booth will appear together for the first time since the former achieved celebrity. Mr. Irving will play Iago and Mr. Booth Othello on this occasion.

MR. M'CULLOUGH, an American tragedian, made his first appearance at Drury Lane Theatre this week, in Sheridan Knowles's effective drama Virginius, in which Mr. Macready used to be so remarkable. He was strongly supported by Mr. John Ryder, Mrs. Arthur Stirling, and Miss Lydia Cowell.

Virginia was, of course, played by the highly promising actress last named. Mr. M'Cullough would seem to be an earnest and somewhat declamatory actor of the old-fashioned sort.

It is said to be in contemplation for Mrs. Scott Siddons to return to the London stage, and to occupy the Haymarket Theatre during the usual autumn absence of Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft.

THAT continual desire of the public to see Miss Bateman (Mrs. Crowe) as a deeply injured woman against whom all the fates conspire is, without doubt, even better gratified than ever it has been before by the play which Mr. Jones has written for the Sadler's Wells management. Margaret Field, the doleful heroine of the new drama, is a woman of humble life, who has proved so attractive that a gentleman, after expressing some little regret for her possession of a virtue beyond her station, has been betrayed into marrying her, and has subsequently been betrayed into deserting her. It is the intention of the Colonel to marry one Nelly Christy, the daughter of a Baronet; and at the Baronet's house Margaret Field, arriving in the guise of a dressmaker, discovers her husband and immediately claims him. The situation, painful for the wife, is difficult for the Colonel; but, having few scruples, he arranges that his wife shall be robbed of her marriage certificate, and, this being effected through the agency of a too subservient domestic, the Colonel is free to denounce his wife as an impostor or to charge her with madness. It seems, on the whole, that of the two courses the more convenient one is to say that she is mad; and this being not only said with energy, but supported by what looks like evidence that can be accepted, Margaret Field is immured in a lunatic asylum, in which no small proportion of the action of the drama is made to pass. At this point it seems probable that the arrangements of the Colonel will be so far complete as to allow him to marry Miss Christy with impunity. But a counter-plot has been going on, and his designs are frustrated as they are on the very eve of accomplishment. The Colonel then dies. Nothing has graced his life so much as his manner of quitting it. He commits suicide, thereby leaving his persecuted wife free to marry the most chivalrous of her champions—a prison Chaplain. This play, it is perfectly obvious, is one of strong incident, relieved, however, by more of rough humour than it is easy to convey in the brief narration of its theme. Mr. Jones, the dramatist, has been inspired by Mr. Mark Hope, the novelist; and we should judge that Mr. Mark Hope, in his turn, had been inspired by Mr. Charles Reade, as there is so much in the story that recalls—albeit it may be accidentally—both The New Magdalen and the novel devoted by Mr. Reade to the wrongs of those confined in private madhouses. But Mr. Jones, as a dramatist, has a right to take his stand upon the saying of an earlier fellow-labourer of his, and a not inconsiderable one—“Je prends mon bien où je le trouve.” He has made the piece his own. Having little pretensions to refinement, it is exciting and harrowing. The play is strongly acted, and with some completeness. That Mrs. Crowe is capable of doing thorough justice to the sufferings of the persecuted woman—sufferings which are by no means borne in silence or with conspicuous resignation—no playgoer can doubt, and her art enables her to produce varied effects out of a material which might easily be only monotonously doleful. She is powerful and touching. Mr. Beveridge is excellent as the Chaplain. Mr. E. H. Brooke plays the villainous officer with much effect; and Miss Kate Pattison, who acts gently and dresses very satisfactorily and pleases the public a good deal, is seen agreeably as the daughter of Sir Wemyss Christy.

MUSIC.

“SYMPHONIE FANTASTIQUE: EPISODE DE LA VIE D'UN ARTISTE,” BY HECTOR BERLIOZ.

THIS work will be performed to-day, for the first time in London, at Mr. Ganz' first Orchestral Concert. The recent production of several of Berlioz' most important compositions is an historical event of great importance. The future historian of the development of music since the death of Beethoven will have to acknowledge the influence and estimate the importance of the great French composer. The Symphonie fantastique and the dramatic symphony, Roméo et Juliette, are two remarkable specimens of programme-music; and in both the Leitmotive and the metamorphoses of themes form characteristic features. Facts are stubborn things, and the dates of those works must be taken into account. The first was written in 1828, the second in 1839—that is to say, long before the appearance of any of Wagner's or Liszt's important works. We have no wish to unduly extol Berlioz, or to assert that he is superior, or even equal, to the above-mentioned composers; but it must not be forgotten that they were both personal friends of his, and were well acquainted with his works. Hence it is but natural to suppose that they must have been more or less influenced by his characteristic and thoroughly original style of writing. Berlioz' compositions are all of great difficulty, and demand for performance “an immense apparatus of complicated machines” (to use Wagner's phrase). They have, therefore, seldom been produced, and it is doubtless principally owing to this fact that his claims to notice have been ignored or forgotten. We now propose to give a brief account of the Symphonie fantastique.

In 1828 an English company visited Paris and performed Hamlet and Roméo and Juliet. The parts of Ophelia and Juliet were played by Miss Smithson, an actress celebrated both for her beauty and her talent. Our composer fell desperately in love with her, and five years later she became his wife. Berlioz was the Byron of music; the latter (though he was fond of denying it) loved to picture himself in poetry, and so did the former in music. He has prefixed to the score of the Episode a detailed programme, of which we can give a brief, but excellent summary in his own words:—“le sujet du drame musical n'est autre que l'histoire de mon amour pour miss Smithson, de mes angoisses, de mes rêves douloureux.” The work was produced at the Conservatoire in 1830 and again in 1832. On the latter occasion it was followed by a monodrame lyrique entitled Lelio, ou le Retour à la Vie. Berlioz calls this the “fin et le complément” of the Symphonie fantastique; hence he speaks of the whole work as a “drame musical.” The Episode is, however, sufficiently complete without this second part, for which a stage and actors are required. Berlioz himself admits this, for in the Preface to the score of the symphony he expresses a hope that it “offre en soi un intérêt musical indépendant de toute intention dramatique.” When given without Lelio, the sequel, Berlioz proposed to withdraw the detailed programme, and merely leave the titles of the various movements—viz., “Rêveries, Passions,” “Un Bal,” “Scène aux Champs,” “Marche au Supplice,” “Songe d'une Nuit de Sabbat.” The titles in themselves are clear and suggestive; the programme is, however, needed to explain why a ball scene should be followed by a pastoral scene, and this in its turn by a “Marche au Supplice.” The first and third movements are certainly the finest, and the last two the most characteristic. Wagner speaks of the “Scène aux Champs” as a perfect specimen of programme-music. Notwithstanding much that is bizarre and original, the work may be said to follow the traditional lines of the symphony as regards form and even the order of movements. The chief feature of the work is the representation of the femme aimée by a melody which is heard in all the movements. The artist goes to a ball, but the image of the beloved one follows him; he goes into the fields and listens to the singing of birds, but the melody still haunts him; he dreams that he is condemned to death, and the theme comes before him "comme une dernière pensée d'amour interrompue par le coup fatal." In the last movement he is surrounded by witches, imps, and monsters; the melody is heard once more, but disguised and rendered trivial and grotesque. The various metamorphoses of the theme are extremely ingenious; in the "Scène aux Champs" they are wonderfully light, and ethereal as "gossamers that idle in the wanton summer air." With respect to melody and harmony we can scarcely do better than quote what Schumann says in his celebrated notice of the work:—"If ever I found a judgment unjust, it was that of Fétis: 'I saw that it was wanting in harmonic and melodic ideas.' Though he should deny to Berlioz (as he does) all his qualities—imagination, invention, originality—how could he be deaf to his richness of melody and harmony?"

It is impossible to describe the infinite variety, the richness, delicacy, and also power, of the orchestration throughout the work. Yet would we mention the long-sustained note by violoncellos and double basses, with horn solo and staccato figure for violins with mutes, in the opening largo; the imposing tutti on the return of the principal theme in the allegro and the passage for solo wind near the close of the same movement; the pastoral dialogue between English horn and oboe, the delicate tremolo for divided altos with mutes; the wonderful imitation of birds quite as original as the passage of the Pastoral Symphony; and the clever effect of thunder produced by four drums tuned in curious and original fashion—all in the third movement ("Scène aux Champs"); the sombre and mysterious opening of the "Marche au Supplice," with drums struck by sticks with sponge heads, and double basses divided into four parts; and, in the last movement, the Dies Irae intoned by bassoons and ophicleides amid the clang of bells, the passages with strings all divided into two and three parts and all with mutes except the basses, and the furious tutti for an immense orchestra for wood wind, including piccolo, two clarinets, and four bassoons; for brass, including four horns, two cornets, three trombones, and two ophicleides; three pairs of drummers and strings. Berlioz suggests that several pianos can be used instead of bells in the last movement. He had already used the piano as an orchestral instrument in a fantaisie on Shakspeare's Tempest, written for a concert given at the Théâtre Italien. This piece afterwards formed the concluding chorus of Lelio.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSICAL UNION MATINÉE.

M. PAUL VIARDOT, son of the illustrious vocalist, M^{me}. Viardot, was leading violinist at the opening matinée of the Musical Union last Tuesday afternoon. The concert was one of special interest, being the first under the management of the new Director, M. J. Lasserre. M. Viardot proved himself an intelligent leader; in the string quartets—Haydn in G (op. 54) and Beethoven in F (op. 18, No. 1)—he was associated with Herr Wiener, M. van Waefelghem, and M. Jules Lasserre. Particularly would we notice the fine playing of all the artists in the adagio and scherzo of the latter quartet. M. Alfred Reisenauer, a pupil of Liszt, made his first appearance in England. He is only eighteen years of age, and certainly gives ample proof of intelligence and technical proficiency. In Rubinstein's well-known and difficult trio in B flat the pianoforte part was at times too loud; and several points with regard to nuances, ensemble playing, &c., showed that the youthful pianist has not (as stated in the analytical programme) quite completed his studies on the pianoforte. As solo he played Schumann's Carneval. Several of the numbers were excellently performed, but others in an exaggerated and unsatisfactory manner. The next concert will take place on Tuesday, May 10.

J. S. S.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY

For MAY, 1881. Price 2s. 6d.

THE "SILVER STREAK." By Admiral LORD DUNSANY.
PEACE in the CHURCH. By the Right Hon. A. J. B. BERNARD HOPE, M.P.
GEORGE ELIOT. By EDITH SIMCOX.
PROFIT-SHARING. By SEDLEY TAYLOR.
FRENCH VERSE in ENGLISH. By WILLIAM M. HARDINGE.
RELIGIOUS FAIRS in INDIA. By W. KNIGHTON, LL.D.
WEST-END IMPROVEMENTS. By the Hon. MAUDE STANLEY.
CARLYLE on the PERIODS of EUROPEAN CULTURE. Transcribed by Professor EDWARD DOWDEN.
THE IRISH LAND BILL. By His Grace the DUKE OF AROYLE.
London: G. KEAN PAUL & CO.

FRASER'S MAGAZINE.

MAY, 1881. No. 617. NEW SERIES, No. CXXXVII. Price 2s. 6d.

IN TRUST: the Story of a Lady and her Lover. Chap. X. Family Councils. XI. Projects of Marriage. XII. Mistress and Maid.
THE COLLEGES as LANDLORDS. By OXONIENSIS.
A LANCASHIRE POETS' CORNER. By J. A. NOBLE.
THE "SUNBEAM" in a STORM. By Mrs. BRANSEY.
YOUNG OXFORD. By AN OXFORD TUTOR.
ON the ORIGIN of the PRINCE of WALES' FEATHERS. By WILLIAM STUBBS, F.R.S. (Illustrated.)
AUTOBIOGRAPHY of an AGNOSTIC. By R. THOMAS.
MR. THURLEIGH. By T. E. KEBBLE.
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY for ACCIDENTS to WORKPEOPLE. By EDWIN CHADWICK.
THE FIRST ACT.
London: LONDON & CO.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 259. For MAY. Price 1s.

CONTENTS OF THE NUMBER.
1. THE PORTRAIT of a LADY. By HENRY JAMES, Jun. Chapters XXIX.—XXXIV.
2. MEMORY'S SONG. By A. MATHESSON.
3. OLD MYTHOLOGY in MODERN POETRY. By ANDREW C. BRADLEY.
4. LOST.
5. SIR DONALD STEWART'S MARCH from KANDAHAR to KABUL.
6. THE ENGLISH COMMUNITY in IOWA. By ROBERT BENSON.
7. A SHORT PLEA for SCIENTIFIC AGRICULTURE and for AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION.
London: MACMILLAN & CO.

Price 8d.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL

For MAY 2.

Interesting Facts concerning Mor-tality.
Japan.
A Kiss as good as a Mile.
In a Quiet English County.
Some Curious Vows.
The Earliest Known Life-Relief.
Earthenware in London.
Something about Examinations.
Edinburgh: a Tale of Tundra.
A Tiger Loose in Hongkong.
Jingomai. By W. Chambers.
Catherine and Crawford Fair.
Sites of Buildings Mysteriously Changed.
India in 1859 and India in 1880.
THE FORTUNES of HERTHAM OAKLEY.
By J. B. HARWOOD. Chapters XVII.—XXI.
London and Edinburgh: W. & R. CHAMBERS.

THE MUSICAL TIMES FOR MAY

contains: Verdi's Opera, "Simon Boccanegra," at the Scala of Milan—The Music of Dvorak—The Great Composers: Berlioz—Mr. Pepys the Musician, by F. H. C. "Last Hours"—Sullivan's New Opera—Monday Popular, Crystal Palace, and Bach Choir Concerts, &c.—Royal Academy of Music Notes, Foreign and Country News, Reviews, Correspondence, &c. Price 3d.; post-free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES FOR MAY

contains:—"The Son of God goes forth to War" ("St. Ann's Tune"), by ARTHUR SULLIVAN; and "God so loved the World," Anthem, by Sir JOHN GOSN. Price 1d.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER, & CO.

have the honour to announce that they have purchased the ENTIRE STOCK and COPYRIGHTS of the Works hitherto published by MESSRS. NOVELLO & CO., of Newbury Hall, including the whole of the valuable Compositions of HENRIETTA ROEMER, &c., &c.
London: NOVELLO, EWER, & CO., 1, Berners-street, W., and 89 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

Svo, sewed, 1s.

JESUS of NAZARETH and HIS CON-

TEMPORARIES.
WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR MAY.

THE ORIGIN of RELIGION considered in the LIGHT of the UNITY of NATURE. By the DUKE of AROYLE.
A DIALOGUE on POETIC MORALITY. By VERNON LEE.
LAW REFORM in the DAYS of JUSTINIAN. By THOMAS HODGKIN.
THE BOOK of BIRTH-STORIES. By RICHARD MORRIS.
BIMETALLISM. By Professor W. STANLEY JEVONS.
THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S COHIBIT PRACTICES BILL. By SYDNEY C. BUXTON.
THE POST-OFFICE, and AIDS to THRIFT. By the Rev. W. L. BLACKLEY.
MR. WYLLIE'S LIFE of THOMAS CARLYLE. By ROBERT BUCHANAN.
ANCIENT EGYPT in its COMPARATIVE RELATIONS. By R. S. POOLE.
MR. FROUDE as a BIOGRAPHER. By JULIA WEDGWOOD.
London: STRAHAN & CO. (LIMITED), 34, Paternoster-row.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

For MAY, 1881. No. DCCCLXXXVII. Price 2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

THE SWORD.
A FRENCH SPECULATION.
SHORT SERVICE and ITS SUPPORTERS.
THE PRIVATE SECRETARY.—PART VII.
AUTOBIOGRAPHIES.—No. III.—MARGARET, DUCHESS OF NEWCASTLE.
MR. GLADSTONE'S ELEVENTH BUDGET.
TRUE MAGIC. To W. W. S.
THE NEW NOSTRUM FOR IRELAND.
THE EARL of BEACONSFIELD.

Edinburgh and London: WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS.

BIBLE REVISION

THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA:

The Six Principal English Versions of the New Testament, in parallel columns, beneath the Greek Original Text. Wiclif, 1380.—Tyndale, 1534.—Cranmer, 1539.—Geneva, 1557.—Rheims, 1582.—Authorised, 1611. 1 very handsome vol., 4to, £2 2s.; or morocco, gilt edges.

"In form and substance it is an admirable present for any clergyman."
Observer.

London: S. BAISTER & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row.
And sold by all Booksellers.

MAP of a HUNDRED SQUARE MILES

ROUND AVEBURY, WILTSHIRE; with a KEY to the BRITISH and ROMAN ANTIQUITIES. By the Rev. A. C. SMITH, Rector of Yatbury, Wilts; Hon. Secretary of the Wilts Archaeological and Natural History Society.

The above work will consist of two parts:—

First, THE GREAT MAP, 78 in. by 48 in., on the scale of 36 square inches to the mile, showing all the British and Roman Earth- and Stone-Works, printed in six colours.

Second, THE KEY, in large 4to, containing the Great Map in Sections, with accompanying descriptive letterpress and References to the best authorities, Views, Plans, &c.

The work, constituting a permanent record of one of the most important archaeological districts in Europe, has been twenty-five years in preparation, and will be published and issued to subscribers by the Marlborough College Natural History Society.

For Prospectus, giving full particulars and the opinions of antiquaries who have seen the work, apply to the Rev. J. A. PRESTON, The Green, Marlborough.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

(Twenty doors west of Meade's Library.)

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Collotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.

AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Meissonier, Corot, De Neuville, Burne-Jones, Rossetti, Cave Thomas, &c., &c.

Just published, in Cloth Portfolio, Six Guineas the Set.

TWELVE AUTOTYPE REPRODUCTIONS of PAINTINGS and DRAWINGS, by PHILIP GILBERT HASELTON, mostly of Scottish mountain scenery, and including copies of paintings in monochrome and of seals and church drawings. The twelve subjects are mounted on uniform boards, 22 in. by 21 in. Each 1/4 autotype can be obtained separately, price 10s. 6d.

COME INTO THESE YELLOW SANDS," after the painting by W. FIELD, Esq., on India, two sizes, 42s. and 21s.

PICTURES CLEANED, RESTORED, FRAMED.

To adorn the walls of Home with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 531, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Ealing Dene, Middlesex.

General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWTEE.

TO PROPRIETORS of NEWSPAPERS

AND PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, Brief News & Opinion, the Furniture Gazette, the Review, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPLETE, ECONOMIC, and PUNCTUAL PRODUCTION of PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether illustrated or plain. Estimates furnished to Proprietors of New Periodicals, for either Printing or Publishing.—74 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

NEWSPAPERS and PERIODICALS

PRINTED BY FAST (ROTARY) MACHINERY.—MANAGERS, Fleet Printing Works, 14, Whitefriars-street, E.C.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

To-night, at 8, SHAKSPEARE'S Tragedy of ROMEO AND JULIET.
 Characters by Messrs. Wilson Barrett, John Ryder, Forbes-Robertson, Clifford Cooper, E. Price, Norman Forbes, E. E. Norman, Brian Darley, Neville Doone, J. W. Phipps, W. P. Granger, E. Butler, &c., and G. W. Anson; Mesdames Helena Modjeska, M. A. Giffard, B. Gardner, J. Clifford, &c., and B. G. Le Thiere.
 Preceded, at 7, by TWO OLD BOYS.
 Box-office open from 11 to 5. Doors open at 6.45. Carriages at 11. No fees.
 Acting Manager, Mr. H. HERMAN.

DURRY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS BARRIS.

To-night, at 8.15, VIRGINIUS.
VIRGINIUS—Mr. JOSEPH MCCULLOUGH.
VIRGINIA—Mrs. LYDIA COWELL.
SERVIA—Mrs. ARTHUR STIRLING.
 Dentatus—Mr. John Ryder; Appius Claudius—Mr. J. H. Barnes; Numitorius—Mr. J. R. Gibson; Lucius—Mr. G. Andrews; Calus Claudius—Mr. De Launce; Icilius—Mr. Augustus Harris.
 Preceded, at 7.30, by THE STORES.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.30, HESTER'S MYSTERY.
 A new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, called THE UPPER CRUST.
 Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Billington, E. W. Garton, G. Shelton, and E. D. Ward; Mesdames Eliza Liston, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorne.
 At 10, THE WIZARD OF THE WILDERNESS.
 Mr. J. L. Toole.
 Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to £3 3s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THE OPERA SEASON
Under the direction of Mr. ALEXANDER HENDERSON.

To-night, at 8, an entirely new and original Opera Comique, in three acts, by OFFENBACH, entitled LA BOULANGERIE.
 Under the immediate direction of Mr. H. B. Farnie.
 New and elaborate scenery by Ryan and Hicks. Dresses, after designs by Grövin and Faustini, by Alais.
 Preceded, at 7.30, by a Comedy, after Méliès and Halévy, entitled SEEING FROU-FROU.
 Mesdames Amadi, Maud Taylor, Turner, Dubois, Graham, Evelyn, and Wadman; Messrs. Celli, Temple, Ashford, Mansfield, Stepan, and Paulton.
 Greatly augmented chorus and orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Miller. Ballet master, Mr. Leitch.
 Box-office now open. Acting Manager, Mr. W. A. BURT.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(300 yards from the Angel.)

To-night, at 8, HIS WIFE.
 A new Play by H. A. JONES (Author of "A Clerical Error," &c.), founded on a Novel by Mark Hope.
 Entirely new scenery and appointments.
 Miss LATIMER (Mrs. Crowe) will appear as MARGARET FIELD, the character having been written expressly for her.
 The following artists will also appear—Messrs. E. H. Brooke, J. D. Beveridge, W. Younge, E. F. Edgar, R. Lyons, G. Camling, R. Lyons, &c.; Mesdames John Carter, Laura London, and Kate Patison (by kind permission of Messrs. Haro and Kendall).
 Act 1. Fairdale Hall—Evening. Acts 2 and 3. Chaplain's Parlour at Tolminster Hall. Act 4. Dr. Billings' Private Asylum. Act 5. Fairdale Hall—Morning.
 Prices from 6d. to 7s. 6d. Doors open at 6.30. Farce at 7.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. DOVLY CARTE.

To-night, a new Aesthetic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN, entitled PATIENCE.
 Messrs. George Grossmith, Rutland Barrington, Richard Temple, P. Thornton, and Burward Leli; Mesdames Leonora Braham, Jessie Bond, Julia Guyano, Fortescue, and Alice Barnett.
 Produced under the personal and direction of the Author and Composer.
 Box-office now open.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BRUCE.

To-night, at 8.40, a new Comedy, in three acts, called THE COLONEL.
 By F. C. BURNANO.
 Preceded, at 7.30, by a one-act Comedy, by SYDNEY GRUNDY, in HOSOCIE BOUND.
 Messrs. Coghlan, Flockton, W. Herbert, Eric Hayley, Rowland Buckstone, and Edgar Bruce; Mesdames Amy Rosalie, Myra Holmes, C. Graham, Leigh Murray, &c.
 New scenery by Mr. Bruce Smith.
 Doors open at 7.30. Box-office open daily from 11 to 5.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WALTER GOOCH.

To-night, at 7.45, an entirely new and original romantic spectacular Drama of sensational interest, entitled BRANDED.
 Written by RICHARD LEE.
 Messrs. Henry Neville, Redmond, F. Archer, J. Beauchamp, F. Charles, H. C. Sidney, Allen Thomas, Hewitt, Betcourt, Evans, Gardiner, Greville, W. Aoudiaie, Chamberlain, Stirling, &c.; Mesdames Caroline Hill, Maud Milson, Katie Barry, Katie Neville, Huntley, and Lyons.
 Produced under the direction of Mr. Harry Jackson.
 New and realistic scenery by Charles Brooke. New overture and incidental music by Michael Connolly. New military costumes direct from the Army Contractors, Paris. The horses supplied by Mr. George Sanger.
 Preceded, at 7, by the Farce, THE INTRIGUE.
 Doors open at 6.30. Box-office open daily.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER.

To-night, at 7.30, a new Operetta, PRISONERS AT THE BAR, by Messrs. OXFORD AND MEADOWS.
 At 8.15, STAGE STRUCK, Miss Kate Lawler's great Gaiety success.
 Mesdames Kate Lawler and Harriet Conway; Messrs Arthur Williams, S. Dallas, and Frank Wyatt.
 At 9.30, DON JUAN JUNIOR, Re-dressed and re-tuned. The success of the century.
 Stage Manager, FRANK KOTHAK. Acting and General Business Manager, CECIL KALEIGH.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

SUMMER EXHIBITION

WILL OPEN ON

MONDAY, MAY 2.

Admission, One Shilling; Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA "If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa." Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

EXTRACT "It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way." W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.

"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted." CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
 A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET and CHURCH CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.
 Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.
 Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.
 The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.
 The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.
 Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.
 A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.
 1st March, 1880. FRANCIS HAVENS-CROFT, Manager

PROVIDE AGAINST ACCIDENTS!
ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN!

A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury, may be secured by a Policy of the
RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY,
 The Oldest and Largest Company insuring against Accidents of all kinds
 The Rt. Hon. Lord KINNAIRD, Chairman.
SUBSCRIBED CAPITAL, £1,000,000.
PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £230,000.
MODERATE PREMIUMS.
 Bonus allowed to Insurers after Five Years.
£1,630,000
HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.
 Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, and West end Office, 8, Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing-cross, or 64, CORNHILL, LONDON.
 WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on
MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.
 The original, best, and most liberal.
 Cash prices.
 No extra charge for time given.
 Illustrated Priced Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.
 F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.
 Bed-room Suits, from £5 6s. to 50 guineas.
 Drawing-room Suits, from £9 9s. to 45 guineas.
 Dining-room Suits, from £7 7s. to 40 guineas.
 And all other goods in great variety.
 F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.
 Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

Received April 18, 1881.

"DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS"
 I have always found give relief in the distressing attacks of Asthmatic Coughs and Consumption.

(Signed) "J. SPENCER, M.P.S., 225, Gt. Cornhill-street, Birmm
 They lustely relieve—rapidly cure—and taste pleasantly.
 Sold at 1s. 1½d. per box.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

fluid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion, by gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drowsy feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s. 9d. and 1s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

BRAND & CO.'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS!—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
 MAYFAIR, W.

PROTECTION FROM FIRE.

BRYANT & MAY'S

PATENT SAFETY

MATCHES.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

ADVANTAGES.

Are not POISONOUS
 Are free from SMELL
 Are manufactured
 Without Phosphorus
 Are perfectly harmless
 To the operatives employed
 Are very DAMP PROOF

LIGHT ONLY ON THE BOX.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

PROTECTION TO HEALTH.

MR. HUBERT HERKOMER, A.R.A., has executed a large design for a PICTORIAL ADVERTISEMENT (size 11 ft. 6 in. by 9 ft.), in reference to which an Article appears in THE MAGAZINE of ART for MAY, under the title of "The Streets as Art-Galleries."

THE STREETS as ART-GALLERIES.—Mr. HUBERT HERKOMER'S large design for a Pictorial Advertisement has been reproduced on a small scale to suit the pages of THE MAGAZINE of ART, and appears in this Magazine for MAY, with the Article above referred to.

THE MAGAZINE of ART for May,

Price 1s., contains—

"The Symbol." From the Painting by FRANK DICKSEE, A.R.A. Frontispiece.
Treasure-Houses of Art: The Collection of Mr. C. P. Matthews. By ARTHUR GRIFFITHS. With Five Engravings.
English Birds and their Haunts. By GRANT ALLEN. With Five Illustrations.
Our Living Artists: William Quiller Orchardson, R.A. By ALICE MEYNELL. With Portrait and Two Engravings.
"Apple Blossom." From the Painting by M. BEYLE.
Children in Painting and Sculpture. By J. H. P. With Four Engravings.
The Homes of our Artists: Mr. Millais' House at Palace Gate. By JOHN OLDCASTLE. With Five Illustrations.
The Future of Sculpture in London. By EDMUND W. GOSSE.
Decorative Iron Work. By GEORGE WALLIS. With Six Illustrations.
The Streets as Art-Galleries. With Two Engravings.
Pictures of the Year. With Four Illustrations.
"Shepherds Discovering the Head of Orpheus." From the Bas-Relief by M. CONDONNIER.
Art Notes.

"The Magazine of Art contains a very storehouse of Art."—THE TIMES.

CASELL, PETTER, GALPIN, & CO., Ludgate-hill, London.

POPULAR EDITION OF THE DORÉ MILTON.

NOW READY, PART I., price 7d., of MILTON'S PARADISE LOST.

ILLUSTRATED BY GUSTAVE DORÉ.

TO BE COMPLETED IN 25 MONTHLY PARTS.

"If the reader has seen the engravings, he does not want them described; if he has not seen them, such a brief sketch as this will convey little idea to his mind. But our remarks may be productive of one advantage—they may induce some persons to procure Messrs. CASELL'S splendid tribute to our great poet and examine it for themselves."—Times.

CASELL, PETTER, GALPIN, & CO., Ludgate-hill, London.

NOW READY, PART I., price 7d., of the NEW and REVISED EDITION.

CASELL'S HOUSEHOLD GUIDE to EVERY DEPARTMENT of PRACTICAL LIFE. With Illustrations on nearly every page, and Coloured Plates.

"'CASELL'S HOUSEHOLD GUIDE' is a book for every household, and its possessors may dispense with many others on a smaller scale, because it is, as the title says, a complete Encyclopædia of Domestic and Social Economy."—QUEEN.

NOW READY, complete in Five Handsome Quarto Volumes.

Prof. Morley's Library of English Literature.

Selected, Edited, and Arranged by HENRY MORLEY, Professor of English Literature at University College, London. With Illustrations from Original MSS. and other authentic sources.

Vol. I.—SHORTER ENGLISH POEMS. 12s. 6d. Vol. III.—ENGLISH PLAYS. 11s. 6d.
 Vol. II.—ILLUSTRATIONS of ENGLISH RELIGION. 11s. 6d. Vol. IV.—SHORTER WORKS in ENGLISH PROSE. 11s. 6d.
 Vol. V.—LONGER WORKS in ENGLISH VERSE and PROSE. 11s. 6d.

"Its survey of the field of English Literature is certainly far more searching and extensive than anything to be met with elsewhere. Among the most striking features of the contents of these handsome volumes are the freshness of matter selected and the intrinsic interest of the woodcuts, which are all of them authentic."—Daily News.

CASELL, PETTER, GALPIN, & CO., Ludgate-hill, London.

NOW READY, price 1s.; post-free, 1s. 2d.

BOSWELL AND JOHNSON:

Their Companions and Contemporaries. By J. F. WALLER, LL.D. Being Vol. III. of CASELL'S MONTHLY SHILLING LIBRARY. (Also, published in cloth, 2s.)

N.B.—The First Edition of this Work having been exhausted on the day of publication, a SECOND EDITION has been prepared, and is now ready.

CASELL'S MONTHLY SHILLING LIBRARY.

Vol. I. consists of HISTORY of the FREE-TRADE MOVEMENT in ENGLAND. By A. MONGREDIEN. THIRD EDITION. 1s.
 Vol. II. consists of THE SCOTTISH COVENANTERS. By the Rev. J. TAYLOR, D.D., F.R.S.E. SECOND EDITION. 1s.

CASELL, PETTER, GALPIN, & CO., Ludgate-hill, London.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 470.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MAY 7, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

PLAIN REASONS against JOINING the CHURCH of ROME. By RICHARD FREDERICK LITTLEDALE, LL.D., D.C.L. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s.

THE ENGLISHMAN'S BRIEF on BEHALF of his NATIONAL CHURCH. New, Revised, and Enlarged Edition. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

FATHERS for ENGLISH READERS.

[The object of this Series is to supply in a handy and readable form accounts of the Chief Fathers of the Christian Church, of their Age, and of their Writings.]

ST. AUGUSTINE. By the Rev. E. L. Cutts, B.A., Author of "St. Jerome," "Turning Points of English and General Church History," &c. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

LEO the GREAT. By the Rev. Charles GORE, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

GREGORY the GREAT. By the Rev. J. BARMBY, B.D. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

ST. AMBROSE: his Life, Time, and Teaching. By the Rev. R. THORNTON, D.D. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

ST. BASIL the GREAT. By the Rev. RICHARD TRAVERS SMITH, Canon of St. Patrick's, Dublin. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

ST. JEROME. By the Rev. Edward L. CUTTS, D.D. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE APOSTOLIC FATHERS. By the Rev. H. S. HOLLAND. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE DEFENDERS of the FAITH; or, the Christian Apologists of the Second and Third Centuries. By the Rev. F. WATSON, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE VENERABLE BEDE. By the Rev. G. F. BROWNE. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

NON-CHRISTIAN RELIGIOUS SYSTEMS.

BUDDHISM: being a Sketch of the Life and Teaching of Gautama, the Buddha. By T. W. RHYS DAVIDS, of the Middle Temple. Fcap. 8vo, with Map, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

CONFUCIANISM and TAOISM. By ROBERT K. DOUGLAS, of the British Museum. Fcap. 8vo, with Map, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

CORAN (The), its Composition and Teaching, and the Testimony it bears to the Holy Scriptures. By Sir WILLIAM MUIR, K.C.S.I., LL.D. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

HINDUISM. By Monier Williams, M.A., D.C.L., &c. Fcap. 8vo, with Map, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ISLAM and its FOUNDER. By J. W. H. STOBART, B.A. Fcap. 8vo, with Map, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

COMMENTARY on the APOCRYPHA.

Vol. V. (Completing the Society's Commentary.) By VARIOUS AUTHORS. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 4s.; half-calf, 10s.; whole calf, 12s.

The Seven Volumes complete, to Members of the Society, One Guinea.

CHURCH HYMNS with TUNES. Medium folio (Music size). Edited and Revised by ARTHUR SULLIVAN, Mus. Doc. With Notes and Illustrations to the Hymns by the Rev. JOHN ELLERTON, M.A., Rector of Barnes. Cloth, bevelled boards, red edges, 21s.

THE HOME LIBRARY.

[The Series of Volumes embraced under this head are intended to form a Sunday Library, though they are adapted for general reading.]

THE CHURCHMAN'S LIFE of WESLEY.

By R. DENNY URLIN, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister, F.S.S. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

THE NORTH AFRICAN CHURCH.

By the Rev. JULIUS LLOYD, M.A., Author of "The Gallican Church," &c. Crown 8vo, with Map, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

SKETCHES of the WOMEN of CHRISTEN-

DOM. Dedicated to the Women of India. By the Author of "The Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family." Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

GREAT ENGLISH CHURCHMEN; or,

Famous Names in English Church History and Literature. By W. H. DAVENPORT ADAMS. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

NARCISSUS: a Tale of Early Christian

Times. By the Rev. W. BOYD CARPENTER, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

THE HOUSE of GOD the HOME of MAN.

By the Rev. G. E. JELF, M.A., Vicar of Saffron Walden. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

THE INNER LIFE, as Revealed in the Correspondence of Celebrated Christians. Edited by the late Rev. T. ERSKINE. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

THE MILITARY RELIGIOUS ORDERS of the MIDDLE AGES: the Hospitallers, the Templars, the Teutonic Knights, and others. By the Rev. F. C. WOODHOUSE, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

NATURAL HISTORY of BRITISH

FISHES: their Structure, Economic Uses, and Capture by Net and Rod. Cultivation of Fish Ponds. Fish suited for Acclimatisation. Artificial Breeding of Salmon. By the late FRANK BUCKLAND, H.M. Inspector of Fisheries. With numerous Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

SOME HEROES of TRAVEL; or, Chapters from the History of Geographical Discovery and Enterprise. Compiled and Rewritten by W. H. DAVENPORT ADAMS, Author of "Great English Churchmen." With Map. Crown 8vo, satteen cloth boards, 5s.

WRECKED LIVES; or, Men who have Failed. By W. H. DAVENPORT ADAMS. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d. each.

AFRICA, seen through its Explorers. By CHARLES H. EDEN, Esq., Author of "Australia's Heroes," &c. With Map and several Illustrations. Crown 8vo, satteen cloth boards, 5s.

CHIEF ANCIENT PHILOSOPHIES.

[This Series of Books will deal with the Chief Systems of Ancient Thought, not merely as dry matters of History, but as having a bearing on Modern Speculation.]

EPICUREANISM. By Wm. Wallace, M.A.,

Fellow and Tutor of Merton College, Oxford. Fcap. 8vo, satteen cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

STOICISM. By the Rev. W. W. Capes,

Fellow of Hertford College. Fcap. 8vo, satteen cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

DIOCESAN HISTORIES.

[This Series, which will embrace, when completed, every Diocese in England and Wales, will furnish, it is expected, a perfect library of English Ecclesiastical History.]

CANTERBURY. By the Rev. R. C. Jenkins,

Rector and Vicar of Lymington, Hon. Canon of Canterbury. With Map. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

SALISBURY. By the Rev. W. H. Jones,

Vicar of Bradford-on-Avon. With Map and Plan of the Cathedral. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

EARLY CHRONICLERS of EUROPE.

[The object of this Series, which will embrace similar volumes on the Chroniclers of Germany, Italy, &c., is to bring readers face to face with the sources of early European History.]

ENGLAND. By James Gairdner, Author of "The Life and Reign of Richard III.," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 4s.

FRANCE. By Gustave Masson, B.A.

Univ. Gallie, Assistant-Master and Librarian of Harrow School, &c. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 4s.

At the Depots in London and Brighton a discount of 2d. in the Shilling is allowed to Non-Members off all the Miscellaneous Publications of the Society.

LONDON: NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, CHARING CROSS, S.W.; 43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.; 48, PICCADILLY, W.; AND 135, NORTH STREET, BRIGHTON.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
FREEMAN'S HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY OF EUROPE, by the Rev. C. W. BOASE	329
ST. BERNARD AND ST. AUGUSTINE, by G. A. SIMCOX	330
ESBORTH'S AMANDA GROUP OF BAGFORD POEMS, by R. C. BROWNE	331
THE SUCCESSORS OF BURNS, by W. WALLACE	332
RIMMEE'S OUR OLD COUNTRY TOWNS, by E. PEACOCK	333
NEW NOVELS, by G. SAINTSBURY	334
RECENT ITALIAN BOOKS, by SIGNORA VILLARI	335
ORIGINAL VERSE: SONNET SUGGESTED BY SIR FRED. LEIGHTON'S PICTURE OF ELISHA RESTORING THE WIDOW'S SON, by COSMO MONKHOUSE	335
NOTES AND NEWS	336
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS	337
OBITUARY	337
MAAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	337
THE LATE EARL OF BRACONSFIELD AS A JOURNALIST	338
THE LITERARY SOCIETY OF FINLAND	338
SELECTED BOOKS	338
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Morality of the Profession of Letters, by Robert Louis Stevenson; Assurance, by Capt. R. F. Burton; Prof. Nichol's Decasyllabic Lines, by Edward B. Nicholson; A Little-Known Byron Letter, by B. J. Baker	339
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	339
ROBERTSON SMITH'S OLD TESTAMENT IN THE JEWISH CHURCH, by the Rev. T. K. CHEYNE	339
THE HIBBERT LECTURES	340
NOTES OF TRAVEL	340
SCIENCE NOTES	341
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	341
THE ROYAL ACADEMY, I., by J. COMYNS CARR	342
THE GROSVENOR GALLERY, I., by COSMO MONKHOUSE	343
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	344
"OTHELLO" AT THE LYCEUM, by DUTTON COOK	344
STAGE NOTES	345
GANZ'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERT; &c., by J. S. SHEDLOCK	345

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, Ely.
place, St. Stephen's-green, Dublin.—Founded 1822, for preparation of Candidates for Competitive Examinations; over 1,000 Pupils have passed direct from the Academy. The Special Classes for RY. CONSTABULARY Cadets have carried off 80 per cent. of the Cadetships offered for competition last year: First Place, four times. Special Work for Woolwich and Sandhurst; over 320 have passed Army Exams., including 2nd, 3rd, 6th, 8th, 7th, at recent Competitions.—Apply to W. J. CHETWOOD CRAWLEY, LL.B., F.G.S., F.R.G.S., Director and Sole Proprietor.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—KENSINGTON
HOUSE, Calverley Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. R. STEBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 200 Guineas.

HEATH BROW SCHOOL.—Boys prepared for the Public Schools. Girls for the Higher Schools and Classics. Class. 1. FRED. STOCK, D.Lit., M.A. Lond.; Mathematics, JOHN BRIDGE, M.A. Lond. Kindergarten for Day Pupils. THE SUMMER TERM begins MAY 4TH.—Prospectus on application to Mrs. CASE, Heath Brow, Hampstead, London.

OWENS COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

THE COUNCIL, having decided to found a new PROFESSORSHIP of APPLIED MATHEMATICS, invite applications from Gentlemen desirous of becoming Candidates. The fixed stipend is £350 per annum, in addition to Two-thirds of the Fees paid by Students.
The appointment will date from the 29th September next. Further information respecting the duties of the Professor may be obtained from the PRINCIPAL of the College.
Applications and testimonials, addressed to the Council, will be received up to the 25TH MAY.

J. HOLME NICHOLSON, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY of LONDON.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the next Half-yearly EXAMINATION for MATRICULATION in this University will commence on MONDAY, the 20TH OF JUNE, 1881. In addition to the Examination at the University, PROVINCIAL EXAMINATIONS will be held at Owens College, Manchester; Queen's College, Liverpool; Queen's College, Birmingham; St. Catherine's College, Oxford; St. Catharine's College, University College, Bristol; the Yorkshire College, Leeds; The School of Science and Art, Newcastle-upon-Tyne; The Literary Institute, Edinburgh; St. Benedict's College, near Inverness; and (for Ladies only) at the Ladies' College, Cheltenham.
Every Candidate is required to transmit his Certificate of Age to the Registrar (University of London, Harington-gardens, London, W.), at least Fourteen Days before the commencement of the Examination.

April 30th, 1881.

ARTHUR MILMAN, M.A., Registrar.

ARTISTS' GENERAL BENEVOLENT
INSTITUTION, for the Relief of Distressed Artists, their Widows and Orphans.

The ANNIVERSARY DINNER will take place in WILKES'S ROOMS, on SATURDAY, MAY 14TH, at 6 o'clock.

The Right Hon. the EARL of ROSEBERY in the Chair.

Donations will be received and than fully acknowledged by—

JOHN EVERETT MILLAR, R.A., Honorary Secretary.

PHILIP CHARLES HARDWICK, Treasurer.

F. LANGE PRICE, Secretary, 24, Old Bond-street, W.

Dinner Tickets, including Wines, One Guinea.

"SCOTLAND FOR EVER!!!"—Grand

New Picture, "CHARGE of the 'GREYS' at WATERLOO," by Mr. HUTCHER, painter of the "Roll Call." ON VIEW at the EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly, from 10 A.M. till 6 P.M. Admission One Shilling.

A PHOTOGRAPHURE will shortly be published by Messrs. HILDEBRANDMEYER & Co., of London, Manchester, and New York.

"THE SIR ROWLAND HILL

MEMORIAL FUND," MANSION HOUSE.

TO THE HONORARY SECRETARY.

SIR,—In laying before you for the information of your Committee a further published letter upon the subject of the hitherto supposed intentions of the late Sir Rowland Hill, I beg leave to recapitulate—that, in lately looking up at the Library of the British Museum, material having reference to my pamphlet, "The Ashburton Stamp," I came across a Blue-Book of date April, 1835, entitled the "Fifth Report of the Commissioners of Post-Office Enquiry," wherein it is recommended by these Commissioners that Prices Current and publications of a similar nature than subject to the same high and variable rate of postage as were letters, be passed through the Post-Office at a low and uniform rate of postage, charged by weight and prepaid by stamp, at the rate of 1d. the half-ounce.

The second fact to which I draw notice is—that, in his writings, Sir Rowland Hill exceptionally avoids reference to this pre-existing document, while putting forward, in the main, its valuable principles and figures to be those of his own conception, as applied by him to letters in his Penny Postage Scheme of 1837.

The discovery of these two facts alters the whole relations as hitherto existing between Sir Rowland Hill and the public.

By the first fact we find that these valuable principles and figures were not of his invention. By the second fact we find him ignoring the original while putting himself in its place.

I submit this discovery, so vitally affecting the relations between the late Sir Rowland Hill and the public at large, to the consideration of your Committee.

I am, respectfully, Sir,

Your most obedient Servant,

J. T. CHAMBERS

(Of No. 35, Alexandra-road, Wimbledon).

9th March, 1881.

April 20th.—No exception has been taken to the facts stated in the above—the Committee simply declines to entertain the subject, as being "too late in the day." I submit it is never too late to arrive at the truth, and to show that the intentions of the late Sir Rowland Hill were not, as popularly supposed, the invention of the late Sir Rowland Hill, but pre-existed in the document above named, to which, in his writings, he exceptionally avoids reference.

F. C.

ST. ANDREW'S HALL, PLYMOUTH.

ART AND INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION, 1881.

£200 IN PRIZES.

OPENING MONDAY, MAY 23RD.

SPECIAL PRIZES.

£20 GOLD MEDAL for the best Picture painted by any Artist residing in Devon, Cornwall, Somerset, or Dorset, each Competitor being allowed to show three Pictures. 2nd Prize, SILVER MEDAL, 3rd, BRONZE.

£20 GOLD MEDAL for the best Picture exhibited, open to all England.

£20 GOLD MEDAL for the best exhibit in the Exhibition.

N.B.—Pictures will not be eligible for this competition.

Winners of these Gold Medals will be paid in Money if preferred.

100 Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals will be given in the following Classes:—

Class 1.—Professional Workmanship.

Class 2.—Amateur Productions, made by Exhibitors who follow some other trade than that to which their art belongs.

Class 3.—Inventions and Novel Contrivances. To include both Amateur and Professional Workmanship.

Class 4.—Models, Architectural, Mechanical, Marine, and Ornamental.

Class 5.—Fine-Art, including Oil and Water-Colour Paintings. Open to all England.

Class 6.—Oil and Water-Colour Paintings and Drawings, open to Students of any recognised School of Art or Private School.

Class 7.—Oil or Water-Colour Paintings, open to residents in Devon, Cornwall, Somerset, or Dorset. Each competitor will be allowed to exhibit three pictures.

Class 8.—Carving and Fret Work. Two Classes—Amateur & Professional.

Class 9.—Sculpture.

Class 10.—Preserved Natural Objects.

Class 11.—Ladies' Work of all kinds.

Class 12.—Musical Instruments.

Class 13.—Furniture.

Class 14.—Painters' Gaining of Wood.

Class 15.—Photography.

Class 16.—Bicycles, Tricycles, and Sewing Machines.

Class 17.—China Painting.

Class 18.—Electrical Inventions.

Class 19.—Pen and Ink and Crayons by Amateurs.

Class 20.—Pottery.

Class 21.—Miscellaneous. This will include all objects not properly belonging to any of the other Classes.

Further particulars may be obtained of the Secretary, Mr. THOS. MARTIN, Plymouth.

ARTS ASSOCIATION, NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.

THE SIXTH EXHIBITION OF PAINTINGS AND SCULPTURE by LIVING ARTISTS will be OPENED in the ASSEMBLY ROOMS, NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE, the first week in SEPTEMBER.

Agent for forwarding Works from London, Mr. W. A. SMITH, 14, Charles-street, Middlesex Hospital.

Artists can obtain particulars from T. R. SPENCE, Secretary.

SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.—

FIFTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION NOW OPEN at the SUFFOLK STREET GALLERIES, PALM MALL EAST, from 9 to 6 daily.

Admission, 1s.

THOMAS ROBERTS, Secretary.

NOW ON EXHIBITION.—PAINTINGS

of NIAGARA FALLS, by the late WILLIAM MORRIS HUNT, Author of "Talks about Art"; also other Paintings and Charcoal Drawings by the Same Artist.—GALLERY, 14, GRAFTON STREET, OLD BOND STREET.

FRENCH GALLERY, 120, Pall-mall.—The

TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of PICTURES by Artists of the Continental Schools (including Portraits of the Right Hon. W. R. Gladstone, F.R.S., Viscountess Countess, Mr. Disraeli, and other works by Franz Leubach) is NOW OPEN. Admission is.

HERBERT EXHIBITION.—"The JUDGMENT OF DANIEL," Painted for the House of Lords, and other Works by J. H. HERBERT, R.A., will be ON VIEW at the HANOVER GALLERY, 47, NEW BOND STREET, on and after MONDAY, 9TH INST.

CORPORATION of LIVERPOOL.

AUTUMN EXHIBITION of MODERN PICTURES in OIL and WATER-COLOUR, 1881.

NOTICE to EXHIBITORS.

The above EXHIBITION will OPEN in the WALKER ART GALLERY on MONDAY, 5TH SEPTEMBER. The days for Receiving Pictures are from the 1st to the 31st of August, both inclusive.

Forms, Cards of Particulars, and all information may be obtained on application to Mr. CHARLES DYALL, Curator, Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool, to whom all Works of Art intended for Exhibition should be addressed.

London Agent: Mr. JAMES BOULET, 17, Nassau-street, Middlesex Hospital.

JOSEPH RAYNER, Town Clerk, Honorary Secretary.

ROSA BONHEUR'S celebrated PIC-

TURES "ON THE ALERT" and "A FORAGING PARTY," which gained for the Artist the Cross of the Order of Leopold of Belgium at the Antwerp Academy, 1879; also the Complete Engraved works of ROSA BONHEUR, including the well-known "HOMER FAIR," NOW ON EXHIBITION at L. H. LEVEY'S GALLERY, 11, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S, S.W. Admission One Shilling. 10 to 5.

SHEPHERD BROTHERS, Art Com-

mission Agents and Picture Dealers, Nottingham, beg to announce that their LONDON PICTURE GALLERY is NOW OPEN, at 27, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S, S.W. (opposite Messrs. Christie & Manson's).—Choice Works ON VIEW by Henry Dawson, senr., T. S. Cooper, R.A., E. J. Neumann, L. J. Pott, Ernest Parton, Marcus Stone, A.R.A., Noble, Stark, Jutsum, &c.

NO. 62, CHEAPSIDE.

On View.—Fifteen Days' Sale of the very valuable Stock of Engravings, Drawings, and Pictures of the old-established and respected firm of Messrs. J. & B. JENNINGS, retiring from business after a career of nearly fifty years.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce for SALE BY AUCTION, on the premises, No. 62, CHEAPSIDE, on MONDAY next, the 27TH MAY, and fourteen following days (Saturdays and Sundays excepted), at 1 o'clock precisely each day, the very valuable STOCK of ENGRAVINGS, WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS, and PICTURES. The first week's sale will be arranged as follows:—

May 9th and 10th.—Artist proof and other Engravings, belong examples of nearly all the successful publications of the last half-century, and including impressions of most of the works after Sir E. Landseer and J. M. W. Turner.

May 11th.—Chromo-lithographs, Coloured Engravings, &c.

May 12th.—Water-colour Drawings, including works by Alonso. De Fleury. Macpherson. Howbatham.

Duckley. Drummond. Penly. Scandrett.

Cattermole. Hensley. Prout. Russell Smith.

Cruikshank. Holson. Lyne. Steeple.

Dunkin. Jenkins. Rayner. Walswright.

May 13th.—Pictures, including works by Arafield. A. Gilbert. Knell. Pritchett.

Bright. Gills. Meadows. Puller.

Buchanan. Hensley. Mogford. Jobina.

Callow. Hill. Morris. Guido Schmidt.

Danby. Hogg. Moir. L. Verboeckhoven.

Drummond. Johnstone. Percy. Williams.

(On view.—Particulars of the second and third week's sale will be duly advertised. Catalogues of the entire stock (at 2s. 6d., or of each week separately at 1s.) to be had on the premises, or of Messrs. FOSTER, 54, Pall-mall.

DEM literarisch gebildeten Deutsch sprechenden Publikum London's steht ein aussergewöhnlicher Kunstgenuss bevor. Den Auftragsbesitzer mehrerer Jahre lang hat der berühmte in Deutschland, Russland, und Frankreich wohl bekannter Recitator, Herr Professor ALEXANDER STRAKOSCH, vom Conservatorium in Wien, sich entschlossen, hier einige DIAMANTISCHE VORTRÄGE zu halten, welche unter hohem Protektorate in der STEINWAY HALL, Lower Seymour-street, Portman-square, W., stattfinden werden. Zum Vortrage gelangen:—

Freitag, den 13. Mai, "Hansel," von Shakespeare; Mittwoch, den 18. Mai, erster Monolog aus "Faust," von Goethe, und "Demetrius," von Schiller; Freitag, den 20. Mai, "König Lear," von Shakespeare. Abonne-ment-Karten für alle drei Vorträge, à 2 und 1 Guinea, für numerierte und à 1 Guinea für unnumerierte Plätze; so wie Billets zu einzelnen Vorträgen, à 1, 1/2, 1/3, 1/4, 1/5, und 1/6, zu haben bei den Herren D. Natt, 270, Strand, W.C.; J. Mitchell, 33, Old Bond-street, W.; A. Siegel, 110, Leadenhall-street, E.C.; F. Thim, 24, Brook-street, Grosvenor-square, W.; Triebner & Co., 57 und 59, Ludgate-hill, E.C.; Williams & Norgate, 41, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, W.C. Anfang der Vorträge abends 8 1/2 Uhr.

Das STRAKOSCH COMITE.

ENGLISH ETCHINGS: a Monthly

Publication of Original Etchings, the work of English Artists. Part I, JUNE. Price 3s. 6d.; Annual Subscription, £2 2s. A limited number of Paris, containing First Proofs on Japanese Paper, price per Part One Guinea. Each Part will contain Four Etchings, which, together with descriptive Letterpress, will be contained in a handsome Portfolio, embellished with a Portrait of Rembrandt. Size: Imp. 4to (15 by 11).

London: WILLIAM REEVES, Publisher, 185, Fleet-street.

32 pp., price 6d.; annual subscription, 6s. 8d., post-free.

THE ORCHESTRA and the CHOIR.

Edited by W. A. HARTNETT, Mus.B., F.R.S.L., &c. A Monthly Review: Musical, Dramatic, and Literary.

London: Sold by W. REEVES, Depot for Musical Works, Fleet-street.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

NEW AND CHOICE BOOKS.

All the best New Works in History, Biography, Religion, Philosophy, Travel and Adventure, and the Higher Class of Fiction are in circulation at MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, and may be had without delay by all Subscribers of One Guinea per Annum. See MUDIE'S LIBRARY CIRCULAR for MAY. New Edition now ready, postage free.

CHEAP BOOKS.

More than One Hundred Thousand Volumes of the most Popular Books of the Past and Present Seasons are now on SALE at MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY. See MUDIE'S CLEARANCE CATALOGUE for MAY. New Edition now ready, postage free.

THE LONDON BOOK SOCIETY.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY Messengers call to deliver Books at the Residences of Subscribers in Every Part of London and the Immediate Neighbourhood, on a plan which has given general satisfaction for many years.

Several Thousand Families in London and the Suburbs already subscribe to this Department of the Library, and obtain a Constant Succession of the Best New Books on or soon after the day of publication.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW OXFORD STREET.

City Office: 2, King-street, Cheapside.

WM. H. ALLEN & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

LADIES on HORSEBACK. By Mrs. POWER O'DONOGHUE, Author of "The Knave of Clubs," "Horses and Horsemen," "Grandfather's Hunter," "One in the Thousand," &c., &c. 5s.

SKETCHES from NIPAL, Historical and Descriptive; with Anecdotes of the Court Life and Wild Sports of the Country in the Time of Maharaja Jung Bahadur, G.C.B.; to which is added an Essay on Nepalese Buddhism. By the late A. A. OLDFIELD, M.D., many years Resident at Kathmandu. 2 vols., illustrated, 36s.

ENCOUNTERS with WILD BEASTS. By PARKER GILMORE, Author of "A Ride Through Hostile Africa," "The Great Thirst Land," &c., &c. Illustrated by Alfred T. Elwes. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

IN ZULULAND with the BRITISH, throughout the WAR of 1879. By CHARLES L. NORRIS-NEWMAN, Special Correspondent to the London Standard, the Cape Town Standard and Mail, and Times of Natal. 8vo, with Four Portraits, Map, and numerous Plans, 16s.

THE HISTORY of CHINA. By DEMETRIUS CHARLES BOULOIR, Author of "England and Russia in Central Asia," &c. Vol. 1. 8vo, 18s.

THE EXPIRING CONTINENT: a Narrative of Travel in Senegambia; with Observations on Native Character, Present Conditions and Future Prospects of Africa, and Colonisation. By ALEX. WILL. MITCHELLSON. 8vo, with Sixteen Full-page Illustrations, 18s.

MERV, the QUEEN of the WORLD, and the SCOURGE of the MAN-STEALING TURKOMANS. By CHARLES MARVIN, Author of "The Disastrous Russian Campaign against the Turkomans," &c. With Plans and Portraits. 18s.

WITH the KURRAN VALLEY FORCE in the CABUL CAMPAIGN of 1878-79. By Major J. A. S. COLQUHOUN, R.A.

THE LYRICAL DRAMA: Essays on Subjects, Composers, and Executants of Modern Opera. By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS, Author of "The Russians at Home and Abroad," &c. With numerous Maps and Plates. 18s.

CATHOLIC DOCTRINE of the ATONEMENT: an Historical Enquiry into its Development in the Church; with an Introduction on the Principles of Theological Development. By H. NICHOLSON. A New and Enlarged Edition. 14s.

STORIES of the CITY of LONDON; Retold for Youthful Readers. By Mrs. NEWTON CROSSLAND. Crown 8vo, with Ten Illustrations, 6s.

TURKEY, OLD and NEW: Historical, Geographical, and Statistical. By SUTHERLAND MENZIES. 2 vols., 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, 32s.

KANDAHAR in 1879: being the Diary of Major A. LE MESSERTIER, R.E., Brigade Major R.E. with the Quetta Column. Crown 8vo, 8s.

CHILI: its PEOPLE and RESOURCES. Notes of a Visit during the War 1879-83. By H. NELSON BOYD, Author of "Coal Mines Inspection." Crown 8vo, 8s.

LUCK and WHAT CAME of IT: a New Novel. By CHARLES MACRAT, LL.D. 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

HOW to RIDE and SCHOOL a HORSE; with a System of Horse Gymnastics. By EDWARD L. ANDERSON. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

LONDON: W. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.

THE ART JOURNAL.

"Notable amongst the illustrations of the May number is a facsimile, not only in drawing, but colour, of Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON's design for his picture of the 'LADY IN PHOEBIA'."

"Not less faithful is a facsimile of MERYON's celebrated etching of 'THE ABIDE OF NOTRE DAME,' which forms one of the illustrations to Sir W. Prynne's paper on 'Hints to Collectors—Charles Meryon.'"

"A steel engraving, after H. S. MARKS's 'Experimental Gunner,' completes the full-page engravings."

"Illustrated articles by Mr. ROBSON (architect to the London School Board), on 'ART AS APPLIED TO SCHOOLS'; by HERBERT MARSHALL, on 'SKETCHING IN WATER-COLORS'; by PROFESSOR RICHMOND, on 'COMPOSITION AND DECORATION'; and by GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALLA, on 'A RENAISSANCE ART PLAGIARISM,' are amongst the literary features of the number."

THE ART JOURNAL, MONTHLY, 2s. 6d.

26, IVY LANE, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, pp. 320, price 6s.

ESSAYS and PHANTASIES. By JAMES THOMSON.

Also, by the SAME AUTHOR, price 5s. each: Large Paper, 10s. each.

THE CITY of DREADFUL NIGHT, and other Poems.

VANE'S STORY, and other Poems.

GEORGE ELIOT on "The City of Dreadful Night."

"I cannot rest satisfied without telling you that my mind responds with admiration to the distinct vision and grand utterance in the poem which you have been so good as to send me."

LONDON: REEVES & TURNER, 196, Strand.

BOOKS FOR BOTANISTS.

BRITISH WILD FLOWERS. Illustrated by J. E. SOWERBY; Described by C. P. JOHNSON. A large 8vo vol., with Ninety Coloured Plates of the 1,780 Plants Growing Wild in this Country, including the Ferns, Horsetails, and Club Mosses. 43 3s.

AN ELEMENTARY COURSE of BOTANY, Structural, Physiological, and Systematic. By Professor ARTHUR HENFREY, F.R.S., L.S., &c. Illustrated by upwards of 600 Woodcuts. Third Edition, by MAXWELL T. MASTERS, M.D., F.R.S., L.S., &c. Post 8vo, 15s.

BRITISH POISONOUS PLANTS. Illustrated by J. E. SOWERBY; Described by CHARLES JOHNSON, Botanical Lecturer at Guy's Hospital, and C. P. JOHNSON. Second Edition, containing the principal Poisonous Fungi. Post 8vo, with Thirty-two Coloured Plates, 6s. 6d.

LONDON: JOHN VAN VOOST, 1, Paternoster-row.

THE LATE MR. JOHN GOULD'S
MAGNIFICENTSeries of Ornithological and other Works
IN NATURAL HISTORY.

MESSRS. HENRY SOTHERAN & CO. have the pleasure of announcing that they have now completed the purchase, from the Executors, of the various Works of the above distinguished Naturalist (recently deceased), comprising the Entire Stock, Lithographic Stones, Copy-right Interests, &c., &c.

The Works include:—

THE BIRDS of GREAT BRITAIN. With nearly 370 Coloured Plates. 5 vols., imp. folio. Recently completed.

THE BIRDS of EUROPE. With 449 Coloured Plates. 5 vols., imp. folio.

THE BIRDS of ASIA. With nearly 500 Coloured Plates. 32 parts, imp. folio. This work is on the eve of completion.

THE TROCHILIDÆ, or HUMMING BIRDS. With 300 Coloured Plates. 5 vols., imp. folio.

 The well-known collection of Mounted Humming Birds, which was some years since exhibited by Mr. Gould in the Zoological Gardens, has been recently purchased by the Trustees of the British Museum (in which national repository it now remains) at the inadequate sum of £3,000.

THE BIRDS of NEW GUINEA and the PAPUAN ISLANDS. In course of publication. 11 Parts now ready.

THE BIRDS of AUSTRALIA. With upwards of 700 Coloured Plates. 8 vols., imp. folio.

THE MAMMALS of AUSTRALIA. With 180 Coloured Plates. 3 vols., imp. folio.

THE MACROPODIDÆ, or KANGAROOS. 2 parts, imp. folio.

THE RAMPHASTIDÆ, or TOUCANS. 1 vol., imp. folio. Second Edition.

THE TROGONIDÆ. 1 vol., imp. folio. Second Edition.

THE ODONTOPHORINÆ, or PARTRIDGES of AMERICA. 3 parts, imp. folio.

 Fuller particulars of these grand Works will shortly be issued.

SUBSCRIBERS to the WORKS now in course of issue, and possessors of Incomplete Copies of any of Mr. Gould's Publications, are recommended to communicate with the present Proprietors.

HENRY SOTHERAN & CO.,

36, PICCADILLY; 136, STRAND; 77 & 78, QUEEN STREET, CITY.

MANCHESTER: 49, CROSS STREET.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

On Wednesday next, at all the Libraries and Booksellers'.

THE CORRESPONDENCE

OF

PRINCE TALLEYRAND

AND

KING LOUIS XVIII.

DURING THE CONGRESS OF VIENNA.

(Hitherto unpublished.)

From the MSS. preserved in the Archives of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs at Paris. With a Preface, Observations, and Notes by

M. G. PALLAIN.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo.

FOUR NEW NOVELS

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

I.—TWO PRETTY GIRLS. By Miss M. A. LEWIS. 3 vols.

II.—POLICY and PASSION. By Mrs. CAMPBELL PRAED. 3 vols.

"There seems to be an almost vista of interest and novelty opened up by this novel. The story is written with much mastery of the subject, power, strong earnestness, and sincerity."—Daily News.
"A remarkably good book, full of fresh and capable description, and abundantly supplied with sketches of character which show not a little power and observation."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"A novel of considerable power and of decided interest."—Athenaeum.

III.—AN OCEAN FREE-LANCE.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c. 3 vols.

"An unquestionably interesting book."—St. James's Gazette.

IV.—A CHILD of NATURE.

THIRD EDITION. By ROBERT BUCHANAN, Author of "The Shadow of the Sword," &c. 3 vols.

"The work of a genius and of a poet."—Spectator.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

JOHNNY LUDLOW. Second Series.

By Mrs. HENRY WOOD, Author of "East Lynne," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,
NEW BURLINGTON STREET,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

13, Great Marlborough-street.

HURST & BLACKETT'S NEW WORKS.

CATHARINE of ARAGON, and the SOURCES of the ENGLISH REFORMATION. Edited from the French of ALBERT DU ROY, with Notes, by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE, Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe," &c. 2 vols., 21s.

PLAYS, PLAYERS, and PLAY-

HOUSES, at HOME and ABROAD: with Anecdotes of the Drama and the Stage. By LORD WILLIAM RUSSELL. 2 vols., 21s.

"These volumes are full of good stories and anecdotes, told with remarkable spirit, and will be a treasure to old playgoers."—Graphic.

LIFE in WESTERN INDIA. By

Mrs. GUTHRIE, Author of "Through Russia," "My Year in an Indian Fort," &c. 2 vols., with Illustrations, 21s. [Just ready.]

OUR HOLIDAY in the EAST.

By Mrs. GEORGE SUMNER. Edited by the Rev. G. H. SUMNER, Hon. Canon of Winchester. 8vo, with Illustrations, 15s.

LODGE'S PEERAGE and

BARONETAGE for 1881. Under the Especial Patronage of HER MAJESTY. Corrected by the Nobility. Fifteenth Edition. 1 vol., with the Arms beautifully engraved, 31s. 6d., bound, gilt edges.

THE NEW NOVELS.

HARRY JOSCELYN. By Mrs.

OLIPHANT, Author of "Chronicles of Carlingford," &c. 3 vols.
"This book is very clever and entertaining. The characters are good, and every page abounds in those little touches of true and subtle observation in which Mrs. Oliphant excels."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"Mrs. Oliphant presents in these volumes a succession of studies, worked out with great care, and evidencing her own peculiar skill."—Saturday Review.

SYDNEY. By Georgiana M. Craik,

LOVE-KNOTS. By the Author of

"ESULA'S LOVE STORY," &c. 3 vols.

"There is a good deal of interest in these cleverly knitted 'Love-knots.'"—Athenaeum.
"A pleasant, healthy novel, full of life and spirit."—Sunday Times.

BESIDE the RIVER. By Mrs.

MACQUOID, Author of "Patty," &c. 3 vols.
"We are inclined to rank this as the best of Mrs. Macquoid's novels; her stories are always entertaining."—Academy.
"A bright and pleasant story."—St. James's Gazette.

HIS LITTLE MOTHER. By the AUTHOR of "JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN," 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

"This is an interesting book, written in a pleasant manner, and full of shrewd observation and kindly feeling. It is a book that will be read with interest, and that cannot be lightly forgotten."—St. James's Gazette.

SECOND EDITION of HER DE-

SEIRTS. By Mrs. ALEXANDER FRASER. 3 vols.

"A striking novel, which cannot fail to engross all readers."—Post.

THE FUTURE MARQUIS. By

CATHARINE CHILDAK. 3 vols. [Next week.]

CHEAP EDITIONS.

Each Work complete in 1 vol., price 5s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by Sir J. GILBERT MILLAR, HUNT, LEITCH, BURNER, FOSTER, TENNIEL, SANDYS, E. HUGHES, SAMBOURNE, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS of POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

Sam Slick's Nature and Human Nature.	Sam Slick's American Humour.
John Halifax, Gentleman.	Barbara's History. By Amelia B. Edwards.
The Crescent and the Cross. By Elliot Warburton.	Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Natalie. By Miss Kavanagh.	No Church.
A Woman's Thoughts about Women. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	Christian's Mistake. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Adam Graeme. By Mrs. Oliphant.	Alice Forbes. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
Sam Slick's Wise Saws.	Agnes. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Cardinal Wiseman's Popes.	A Noble Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
A Life for a Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	Dixon's New America.
Leigh Hunt's Old Court Suburb.	Robert Falconer. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
Sam Slick's Old Judge.	The Woman's Kingdom. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Darien. By Elliot Warburton.	Annals of an Eventful Life. By G. W. Dumas, D.C.L.
Sir B. Burke's Family Romance.	David Elphinstone. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
St. Olave's. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	A Brave Lady. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Oliphant.	Humann. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
The Englishwoman in Italy.	Sam Slick's Americans at Home.
Nothing New. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	The Unkind Word. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Freer's Life of Jeanne d'Albret.	A Rose in June. By Mrs. Oliphant.
The Valley of a Hundred Fires.	My Little Lady. By E. Frances Pownall.
Burke's Romance of the Forum.	Phoebe Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Adèle. By Miss Kavanagh.	Life of Marie Antoinette. By Professor C. D. Yonge.
Studies from Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	St. Gilbert. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
Grandmother's Money.	Young Mrs. Jarline. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Jentreson's Book about Doctors.
Mistress and Maid. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Los Miséables. By Victor Hugo.
St. Olave's.
Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.

THE NEW VOLUME (NOW READY)
CONTAINS

LORD BRACKENBURY.

By AMELIA B. EDWARDS,
Author of "Barbara's History," &c.

Three Important New Books OF AFRICAN TRAVEL.

MAJOR SERPA PINTO'S

HOW I CROSSED AFRICA;

From the Atlantic to the Indian Ocean, through Unknown Countries; Discovery of the Great Zambesi Affluents, &c.

Translated by Professor ALFRED ELWES.

2 vols., demy 8vo, with Twenty Full-page and 118 Half-page and smaller Illustrations, Thirteen small Maps and One large one, cloth extra, 42s.

[Ready.]

DR. EMIL HOLUB'S

SEVEN YEARS in SOUTH AFRICA:

Travels, Researches, and Hunting Adventures (1872 to 1879).

Translated by ELLEN E. FREWER,
Translator of Schweinfurth's "Heart of Africa," &c.

2 vols., demy 8vo, with Two Hundred Illustrations and Map, cloth extra, 42s.

[Ready.]

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 24s.

TO the CENTRAL AFRICAN LAKES and BACK:

The Narrative of the Royal Geographical Society's East Central African Expedition, 1878-1880.

By JOSEPH THOMSON, F.R.G.S.,
In command of the Expedition.

With a short Biographical Notice of the late Mr. Keith Johnston, Portraits, and a Map.

Now ready, a REVISED and CHEAP EDITION, in 1 vol., of

THE PUBLIC LIFE

OF THE

Rt. Hon. BENJAMIN DISRAELI,
EARL of BEACONSFIELD, K.G.

By FRANCIS HITCHMAN.

Crown 8vo, about 600 pp., price 8s. 6d.

N.B.—This Edition contains the very fine Photographic Portrait of his Lordship, by W. & D. Downey, taken when in office, as Prime Minister, in attendance on the Queen at Balmoral.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON,
Crown-buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, MAY 7, 1881.

No. 470, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Historical Geography of Europe. By E. A. Freeman. Vol. I., Text; Vol. II., Maps. (Longmans.)

MR. FREEMAN has always paid much attention to geography in his historical works, and especially to the changes of national boundaries and of national names. What more natural, then, than to collect the results of his enquiries, and give a summary of the whole? The work has been in hand for some time, and the earlier portion was printed several years ago. This has led to some alteration of plan. Instead of treating Europe throughout as a whole, it has been needful to divide it into several large geographical groups. Up to the end of the sixth chapter, it was possible to look at all changes as affecting the old empires which had their centres at Rome and Constantinople. But after the seventh chapter (on ecclesiastical geography), separate chapters are devoted to the "Imperial" States (Germany, Italy, Burgundy, Switzerland, Savoy, Austria), to France, the Eastern Empire, the Baltic lands, Spain, the British Islands.

In the Introduction historical geography is defined, and its relations to history, ethnology, and comparative philology pointed out.

"The work we have before us is to trace out the extent of territory which the States and nations of Europe have held at different times, to mark the different boundaries which the same country has had, and the different meanings in which the same name has been used. Some names of countries are strictly geographical; they really mean a certain part of the earth's surface marked out by boundaries which cannot well be changed. Others simply mean the extent of country which is occupied at any time by a particular nation, and whose boundaries may easily be changed. Thus Britain is a strictly geographical name; but England, Scotland, Wales, are names of parts of the island called after different nations which have settled in it, and the boundaries of all of which have differed greatly at different times. Gaul, again, is the geographical name of a country which is well marked on three sides; but within the limits of Gaul names like France, Flanders, Britanny, Burgundy, and Aquitaine are political names of parts of the country, whose limits have varied as much at different times as those of the different parts of Britain."

Short sections follow on the geographical aspect of Europe, the effects of geography on history, and the geographical distribution of races. Not quite as much physical geography is given as has been often thought requisite. The combination of mountain and plain and river system furnishes the ground-work on which the national life of a country has moulded itself, and which has determined the character of much of its political and all its industrial life, and the course of its natural expansion. "It has been well said that neither the Greeks in any other country nor any other people in Greece could have been what the Greeks in Greece really were." And, on the larger scale, the character of rivers and the nature of mountain passes determine the course of migrations and the march of armies, and show us why commerce has taken one route rather than another. Thus, it has been often noticed that, owing to the nature of the Alpine passes, which converge towards Italy, but spread out like a fan towards France, it is much easier to invade Italy from the French side than for the Italians to attack France. And, again, the Pyrenees cannot be crossed by an army except by the famous pass of Roncevaux on the Western side or through Perpignan on the Mediterranean coast. But Mr. Freeman has, of course, the right to define the limits of his enquiry, and he confines his historical sketch very much to changes of boundary and of name. He allows for natural boundaries—deserts, seas, mountains, rivers. Thus he points out that Sweden at one time extended herself far beyond her natural boundary, and could not maintain her conquests when Germany and Russia recovered strength. The use of the word "natural" is always somewhat dangerous; but a natural boundary may perhaps be defined as one that tends to re-appear when kingdoms and empires break up, or that tends to isolate a people sufficiently to give it a feeling of nationality. All such lines of separation, however, seem to lose their influence more and more as civilisation advances. Some of them have had a long history; thus the Ticino and the Trebia were boundary rivers in the earliest age, just as in our own times. The whole question, however, is only one of degree. The Pyrenees are a strong instance of a natural boundary; yet even the low ranges between England and Scotland served as a frontier for generations. On the other hand, Mr. Freeman makes light of the Ural, and thinks the march of Russian conquest towards the sea of Japan natural. Natural progress thus comes really to mean little more than that there is no power strong enough to check it. The French made quite a natural progress towards the Rhine till they were checked. And the Russians made little progress till Timour had crushed the power of the Horde of Kipchak, and so prepared the way for the Russian advance Eastwards. And is it quite safe to speak of the Spanish kingdom as "less Portugal and Gibraltar for ever"?

In the second chapter, on Greece and the Greek colonies, Mr. Freeman rightly lays stress on the catalogue in the second book of the Iliad. "It gives us a map of Greece so different from the map of Greece at any later time that it is inconceivable it can have been invented at any later time." This is one of the many proofs against Mr. Paley's theory of the late date of the Iliad, and the catalogue itself is probably later than some other parts of the poem. Perhaps not quite enough stress is laid on the physical fact that Greece and Italy face, as it were, different ways. The richest part of Greece is east of Pindus, and faces Asia Minor, and hence the country lay open to influence from the East. The western coast is comparatively poor. Similarly, Italy faces west rather than east, and the intercourse across the Adriatic in the earliest times was not large.

Mr. Freeman's favourite studies, and his theory of the continuity of history, lead him to work out with care the history of the Roman Empire, East and West, and of the States into which it was dismembered, and then the history of the Holy Roman Empire and of the various States connected with Germany. This accounts for the form into which parts of the work are thrown. Thus Sicily, Venice, and Hungary come in the tenth chapter (on the Eastern Empire), where one might have hardly expected them. Of course there is a justification for this, since the Eastern Emperors long held to Sicily, and Venice long owned a nominal subjection to Constantinople. Mr. Freeman, however, himself points out that the Christianity of Hungary came from the Western Church, and not from the Eastern; and some writers believe that the early advance of the Hungarians in civilisation may have been due to their settling down among the remains of the Roman colonists in Pannonia. Even setting aside its connexion with Austria, it would seem more natural to connect Hungary with the central power of Germany. But our author thinks that the importance of the Hungarian migration lay in this, that it placed a barrier between the Northern and the Southern Slavs. No opinion is given in this work as to the original settlements of the Slavs, and judgment is reserved as to Sathas' view that the "Slavonian" occupation of Greece really refers to the immigration of Albanian tribes. This might affect the view given in p. xlvii.; Sathas' view, however, as to the derivation of Morea is not noticed.

It might have been useful to have had some references to the general authorities for each section, such as Mr. Freeman has gathered into a note at the beginning of each chapter of his Norman Conquest; e.g., as to ecclesiastical geography, reference could be made to such books as Wiltsh, of which there is a translation. The Preface to the new edition of Spruner's atlas contains useful collections of such authorities. The atlas in the second volume is very convenient. The small coloured maps, sixty-five in number, supply much illustration, but are not always referred to in the text. Thus map iv., "The Lands round the Aegean at the Beginning of the Kleomenie War," contains even more than is necessary for the text, but links it on to the fuller geographical notices in the author's Federal Government—of which we hope still to receive the second volume, with a full account of the German and Swiss Confederacies. In map xvii., our own coast north of York, and all North Ireland, are marked as belonging to the empire of Charles the Great; but the only reference to this is in the text, p. 545: "The momentary dealings of Charles the Great with Scotland and Northumberland," where there might have been a reference to Einhard. Map xlix., "South-eastern Europe according to the Treaty of Berlin," unfortunately gives Greece more than she is likely to receive. South-eastern Europe seems to have rather more than its fair share of maps, but perhaps not more than are needed to show the constant fluctuations of the frontier of the Eastern Empire towards the Bulgarian, the Frank, and the Ottoman; and Mr. Freeman has carefully worked out this part of his subject.

It was hardly possible to give on this scale maps corresponding to the ecclesiastical divisions, and yet, as our author points out, these constantly preserve the memory of earlier political divisions. In France, for instance, the dioceses represented the jurisdictions of the Roman cities; in England they represented the ancient English kingdoms and principalities. Thus Lancashire, Cumberland, and Westmoreland are shires which do not exist in Domesday; but the older divisions were marked by the boundaries of the dioceses of York, Carlisle, and Lichfield or Chester as they stood down to the changes under Henry VIII. Gregory the Great meant London to be the metropolitan see of the South; but it was fixed at Canterbury as being the capital of the Kentish kingdom, while the see of Rochester preserves the memory of the West Kentish kingdom. The variations of the episcopal system largely affected Church history everywhere. In Southern Europe the bishop was bishop of a city; in the North he was bishop of a tribe or a district. Within the Empire each city had its bishop. In Italy and Southern Gaul, where the cities were thickest on the ground, the bishops were most numerous and their dioceses were smallest. Hence at the Council of Constance the importance of the rule that the bishops of each nation should vote collectively, as else the Southern bishops would have out-voted all the rest; and this fostered the growth of the feeling as to national Churches. For the very same reason care was taken at later councils that the bishops should vote singly and not collectively, for thus the decision was practically reserved to the Papacy, which controlled the Southern bishops. The influence of the great German sees on German history is well known. The bishops were temporal princes, and could levy armies. Hence the contest about investitures was not fought out for mere ecclesiastical reasons. The kings could not give up the control over such enormous dominions. These large districts were not secularised till the Treaty of Westphalia, and many of them not till the wars of the French Revolution. The secularisation of the Papal States is only the last step in a long-continued series of changes. It is pointed out that, as to the temporal dominion of the Papacy itself, the new doctrines regarding it had made great advances by the fifteenth century, when the Popes were for the first time really able to reduce their claims into possession. Again, the vast diocese of Utrecht did not lend itself well to the arrangements of the Inquisition; there was not sufficient control over the Reformers, and hence Philip II. demanded power to divide it into many smaller dioceses. Again, Denmark had its metropolitan see at Lund, in the flat Southern portion of Sweden called Scania, which really forms part of the Northern plain of Europe, and was long Danish territory; and, further, the Baltic conquests of Denmark gave the Danish metropolitan a distant suffragan in the Bishop of Revel on the Gulf of Finland.

Chap. xi. is devoted to the "Baltic" lands, and describes the fall of the Scandinavian kingdoms as Germany and Russia grew strong. The relations of Poland and Russia are carefully traced; and it is shown how Poland absorbed parts of Russia, and how Russia gradually recovered her lost territory. This is often forgotten, since the wrongs of Poland are more recent than those of Russia. But the oldest Russia was formed mainly of lands which afterwards passed under the rule of Poland and Lithuania. The "three partitions of Poland" gave no part of the original Polish realm to Russia. The ancient kingdom of Poland was divided between Prussia and Austria, and the oldest Poland of all fell to the lot of Prussia." The Russian case is carefully stated by our author, especially as regards her conquests in Asia. "She has had her India, her Canada, and her Australia, her Mexico, her Brazil, her Java, and her Algeria, geographically continuous with her European territory. This fact is the key to much in the later history of Russia." On the other hand, the case is stated against Austria in several sections somewhat too strongly. It must be remembered that historical theories affect present politics, and that views as to races and nationalities are now pressed on statesmen. What are the old German lands? What are the old Slavonic lands? The Slavs once reached to the Elbe, and Prussia contains much Slavonian territory. A war of races might even yet renew the horrors of earlier times, and prove as destructive as the religious wars of Europe. The march or frontier lands of the different countries have an especial attraction for Mr. Freeman, and of course their shifting frontiers need a minute description. Prussia and Austria are both of them march lands in their origin. The way in which the outlying possessions of Prussia have been united to the central part on the Oder, and the whole welded together, is fully described. The middle States, too, receive much attention—such as Switzerland, Savoy, and Burgundy. The last two chapters are devoted to Spain and Britain, with their colonies—for the colonies really represent an extension of European life, when growth beyond the sea was the natural outcome of growth at home.

The book contains the condensed result of the author's historical studies; and he apologises in the Preface for certain inequalities, since no man has an equal knowledge of all branches of so wide a subject. He sometimes assumes rather too much knowledge in his readers, and short geographical descriptions here and there would be acceptable. Thus the limits of the Exarchate and Pentapolis are not given where we should expect them. To define the Valltellina as the upper valley of the Adda would not take up much space, and would make the history clearer. So in Russian history Ingria is given in the map as Ingermanland, but Severia and Carelia do not define themselves. Some explanations of names are inserted. Thus the Dobrutcha is said to preserve the memory of the despot Dobroditius. It is noted that the Emperor Constantine Porphyrogenetos means Hungary and Germany by his Τουρκία and Φαγγγία. The derivation of Czar from Caesar is upheld. Some similarly derive the Kral of Servia from Karl the Great. As to the Roumanians, Mr. Freeman no longer holds to the belief in the unbroken life of the Roman name and speech in the lands north of the Danube. He adopts the other view that the Roumans migrated from the south. The name Rus is said, in a note, to be not a Scandinavian name, but a name applied to the Swedes by the Fins. Vilhelm Thomsen, in his Oxford Lectures of 1877, says it probably comes from a Swedish word adopted by the Fins, meaning "rowers"—i.e., scafarers.

There are not many misprints. Oliverca (p. 537) should be Olivença, and p. 157, l. 5, we should read "pressed westward." Some similar mistakes are corrected in the "Additions and Corrections," and it is a curious fact that no words slip more easily out of their places in any book than East and West, or so easily escape revision. The date given for the surrender of the Prussian rights over Neufchatel, 1848, must be explained by the remark in the Preface (p. ix.).

The book ends with a summary of geographical change and a full Index—a very essential addition to what will prove to be one of our handiest works of reference, for we do not know of any existing book that occupies the same ground. Himly's book on Central Europe, in two volumes, goes into much greater detail than the student requires. Mr. Freeman has successfully solved the problem which he set before himself; and he hardly does his book full justice when he says, "The work aims at little more than tracing out the extent of various States at different times, and at attempting to place the various changes in their due relation to one another, and to their causes." The book is really in many ways a sketch of the progress of the European commonwealths.

C. W. BOASE.

St. Bernard on the Love of God. Translated by Marianne Caroline and Coventry Patmore.

Coelestia: the Manual of St. Augustine; the Latin Text side by side with an English Interpretation in Thirty-six Odes. With Notes, and a Plea for the Study of Mystical Theology. By James Skinner, M.A. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

BOTH these books (issued by the same publishers) bear witness to the union of earthly and heavenly love. The one thing which Mr. Patmore tells us in his Prefatory Note is, "My wife was occupied on this translation at the time of her death. Pp. 1-98 include her work; the rest is mine." Mr. Skinner dedicates "these Odes, written at various times of sickness and distress," to his wife.

Mr. Patmore does not wish his readers to ask when or for whom St. Bernard composed the "little work on the Love of God" which forms the smallest and least important part of his volume, nor what was the title or the occasion of the last fragmentary work out of which he and his wife have chosen fragments. Mr. Skinner is more communicative. He gives a clear account of the mediæval compilation which found its way into St. Augus-tin's works; and in his notes he traces the variants of the different texts, and supplies references to its sources, especially where he has thought it edifying to insert passages omitted by previous compilers.

Readers who prefer Mr. Patmore's method will wish that it had been carried farther. A mediæval treatise has commonly a kind of method of its own, which is not apt to commend itself nowadays even to those who wish they could recover the mediæval temper. And, if the little treatise had been broken up into fragments, room might have been found for some of the beautiful thoughts of the same writer on the same subject which are scattered through his other works; and we should have been spared the perplexity of reading that "love is one of the four natural affections which all the world knows, and which need not to be enumerated."

There is a remarkable argument in the second chapter on the theoretical sufficiency of the motives which infidels have for loving God; and in the eleventh on the impossibility that the souls of the saints should attain to perfect purity of love, and consequently to perfect blessedness, so long as they desire to be re-united to the body, this desire being the milk which until the consummation tempers the wine of the Bridegroom. It is curious that John XXII., one of the least spiritual of Popes, should have been led to deviate from orthodoxy as a private doctor by one of the most spiritual of saints. It is equally curious to see how far the discussion of affective and active love in the fragments goes to countenance the Jesuit speculations denounced by Pascal and Boileau. It is true that St. Bernard holds the entire absence of affective love for a dangerous sign; but he also lays down that active obedience is the substance of the precept, and that, if sensible affection were the substance of the precept, it would be impossible to fulfil it.

There is an instructive contrast to much fashionable theologising in the following passage:—

"There are, again, hearts to whom the Lord appears as a Father or as a Sovereign; hearts, I think, magnanimous and brave, which have acquired, through special purity of conscience, a free, courageous, enterprising spirit. . . . Such souls dare to aspire to great things because they themselves are great. To such, God says that He will give all the ground that they tread upon, for their great faith merits great reward, and they take possession of whatever realms they cover with the feet of hope."

Throughout, the caution of the author is very remarkable. He always shrinks from identifying the Bride with the individual soul, because no soul, or hardly any, can venture to claim the perfections of the Bride; and even for the Bride he extracts rebukes from the Vulgate which are not to be found in the Hebrew. She asks to be told where her Beloved feedeth at noon; in itself, her request is good—"We can only be safe from the noonday fiend by dwelling in the noonday"—but it is asking for too much. "If you do not know yourself, go forth from my presence." All the remarks upon humility which are hung upon this doubtful text are shrewd as well as devout. "If anyone could know himself as God knows him, the duty of each would be to esteem himself neither too lowly nor too highly, but in this, as in all things, to acquiesce in the truth."

He is equally ingenious in the entreaty to the daughters of Jerusalem not to awake the Beloved from her sleep "till she pleases."

"This implies a permission to the soul to be her own director in the division of her time between the different duties of Martha and Mary. If she loves so much as to be capable of true contemplation, there is no fear that she will neglect the many services of charity, though she will always avoid being busied in them."

Still, as the soul finds too soon,

"these recurrent alternations are not without distress. . . . She complains with holy Job: 'When I lie down to sleep, I say, When shall I arise? and when I am risen, I wait impatiently for night.' That is, when I am in my repose I accuse myself of having neglected work, and when I am at work I blame myself for having troubled my repose."

But the distress, like the inconsistency, is only on the surface; the author is quite unconcerned to find himself putting two senses upon the same text. In the "little treatise" the flowers and fruits which the languishing Bride asks to be sustained withal are the flowers of the Resurrection and the fruits of the Cross in the fragment:—

"Flowers mean faith, and fruits works. These are all that are left to the soul when, for a time, she loses the light of contemplation. . . . Whenever she falls from contemplation she retires into activity as the best means of recovering her repose. . . . When I have seen that any of you, my children, have profited by my discourse, I do not repent of having preferred the trouble of teaching you to my spirit's repose. I do not regret to have interrupted the delightful exercise of contemplation because I am surrounded by the flowers and fruits of piety. For it is long since that charity, 'which seeketh not its own,' has persuaded me to give more for your advancement than for all else that is dearest to me. Praying, reading, writing, and all other spiritual exercises I have counted but as loss for the love of you."

It is surprising to find that copying is a more spiritual exercise than preaching. Equally quaint is the reason why "none," and monks least of all,

"should ever criticise or reproach a bishop. . . . How could a woman knitting at home criticise the actions of a soldier on service? Remember that to go forth to fight is a manly, admirable thing. If a soldier has his imperfections, remember that charity covers a multitude of sins."

Perhaps Mr. Skinner's plea for the study of mystical theology reminds one of Gerson rather than of St. Bernard. He is too anxiously on his guard against error to be an attractive teacher to those who are not much in earnest. A reader who is not personally drawn to the study may follow St. Bernard for the time, as one follows the pageantry of a procession passing on to a festival to which one is not bidden. St. Bernard always remembers, what Mr. Skinner seems to forget, that it is not every Shulamite who is brought into the chamber of Solomon.

The Odes are, on the whole, more satisfactory than the Preface. An unkind critic once said that a late noble poet had "John Gilpinised the book of Job." Sometimes, as in the sixteenth ode, Mr. Skinner almost succeeds in "George Herbertising" the "Manual of St. Augustin." A shorter and equally favourable specimen may be extracted from the close of the fifteenth:—

"O coming joy, supreme delight,
When God the Son shall bring
His saints into the Father's sight
Upon the Spirit's wing;

"When He shall make them sit on high,
While angels prostrate fall,
That God, in glorious majesty,
May then be All in All."

This is on the highest level of Dr. Watts, and is well worth reading even after the original, which we subjoin:—"Revera cumulus felicitatis erit, cum Dominus adducet Suos Sanctos in Visionem Paternae Glorise et faciet in Coelestibus considere, ut sit Deus omnia in omnibus." G. A. SIMCOX.

The Amanda Group of Bagford Poems (circa 1668). Collected and Annotated, with Special Wood-cut Illustrations, by J. Woodfall Ebsworth, M.A., Editor of the "Bagford Ballads." (Hertford: For the Ballad Society.)

READERS of the Bagford Ballads will know what sort of entertainment they may look for here. It is "set out with all manner of deliciousness"—in the very Banqueting House, so to speak, with the Whitehall of Charles II. in the background. The editor assumes the robe of Comus for the nonce, and hurls his dazzling spells into the air with wonted charm and witchery. With his old energy of iteration he asserts the special historic value of the relics of a bygone day—however trifling or even offensive they may be. Still retaining the contrary opinion (formerly expressed in these pages), we are content to note, without dwelling upon, the inconsistency of this claim with the fact that certain matters take much the same course in all periods of history. Mr. Ebsworth himself says that England was not behind in the knowledge of vice even in Tudor days, and that there is "ample evidence of licentiousness even in London" in the reigns of James and Charles I. Certainly; as before and since. But that the minute knowledge of this side of the past can "guide us to a better employment of the present" we may well "make some dram of a scruple" to admit.

However, we can well afford to pass by in silence both these assertions and the diatribe against the "ill-conditioned persons" who contradict them. Very soothing were the words of Charles Lamb to one scandalised at a hazardous utterance on some grave matter of doctrine: "You mustn't mind what Coleridge says; it's only his fun!"

The kernel of this Supplement is a series of four poems dealing with the Doll Tear-sheets of the Restoration, and their relations, friendly and hostile, with the London apprentices. The light-skirts are first shown in alliance with the youths, whom they instruct in the most approved methods of defrauding their masters. The sky suddenly changes; and the fair deluders suffer many things at the hands of their quondam admirers, who were apt, as a preparation for Lent, to forsake (or at least to vary) their evil courses, and to pull down and plunder houses of ill-fame, from zeal for virtue and in hope of booty.

These penitential proceedings raised so alarming a tumult in the Shrove-tide of 1668 that four persons were hanged for it at Tyburn. They were some of the idle fellows who startled Mr. Pepys by having the "confidence to say that they did ill in not pulling down" the worst house—Whitehall.

The aggrieved women complain of this amateur justice on one of these broad-sheets addressed to the 'prentices, who reply in like fashion. A citizen sums up the case against both, and a fourth copy of verses sets forth the hardships of Bridewell. Around these are disposed various other rhymes, brought together by the grace of association and Mr. Elsworth. His special learning and ingenuity supplies the matter in which they are embedded, and what deodorisation may be needed is very fairly performed. For some ornaments of his theme he has gone far afield into the fifteenth century, whence he has brought two love-songs (from the Canterbury Cathedral MSS.). One of them is given more fully than Mr. Sheppard printed it in his Report (Hist. MSS. Commission, v. 458a).

The name Amanda group is taken, somewhat oddly, from a poem written by Thomas Cranley more than fifty years before 1668. But we remember Dame Quickly's offence at the very mention of "Jenny's case," and Amanda certainly sounds better than the plain title of the chief broad-sheet. Of Cranley's poem we have an extract only (the remonstrance of Amanda's former lover against her evil life), and we are told that the story ends with her repentance. The seven-line stanzas have an echo in them of Shakspeare's Sonnets, though lacking their deep feeling and firmly compacted thought. The rhythm presses on with a steadfast earnestness which has a dignity of its own; e.g.—

"For my sake, therefore, I adjure thee here
To turn thy course and bend another way:
For thy friend's sake, to whom thou should'st be
dear,
Come home unto thyself and do not stay.
For thine own sake I charge thee to obey:
And in compassion of that soul of thine,
Live not in darkness when the sun doth shine."

We find here also the Merry Man's Resolution to leave all his town haunts and acquaintances (with a curious enumeration of London localities), and the Ranting Wanton's Resolution of a directly opposite tendency. Mottoes, running titles, and apposite Shaksperian quotations are ever with us; and at the back of the last page we receive the parting shout of the editor in a rollicking Finale.

Before his triple Index Mr. Elsworth reviews his Bagford labours, and from fresh discoveries fills up some lacunae therein. As we look over Index II., "Of Subjects mentioned in Editorial Text or Notes," we see the extent and variety of the stores laid under contribution to this pamphlet of some eighty pages. To a critic disposed rather to cavil than to marvel at this display, we might tender the suggestion of Guiderius—"but his neat cookery." For indeed much of the broad-sheet text is in itself of little worth. But like "a clear Cavalier" the staunch editor "will not repine." He deals with his materials as Nell Cook dealt with hers, and with like success. He bids his readers not adieu, but au revoir. They will be glad to see him again—in better company.

R. C. BROWNE.

THE SUCCESSORS OF BURNS.

The Poetical Works of William Motherwell.
With Memoir. By James McConechy.

The Poems and Songs and Correspondence of Robert Tannahill. With Life and Notes.
By David Semple.

Rhymes and Recollections of a Handloom-Weaver. By William Thom. Edited, with a Biographical Sketch, by W. Skinner.

Poems and Lyrics. By Robert Nicoll. With a Memoir of the Author. New Edition.
(Paisley: Alexander Gardner.)

THESE four writers by no means complete the roll of "Scotland's second Burns." There are other "minor poets" that came in Burns's wake, or were quickened into life by the opulent sunshine of his influence, who have a larger individuality or even a larger share of "the master's mantle." There is less variety, perhaps less talent, in any of them than there is in Hogg, or even in Cunningham. There is more of the Burnsian humour, on its specially Scotch side, in Sir Alexander Boswell, the author of Jenny's Bawbee; and more of the Burnsian power of photographing men and manners in John Mayne, the author of the Siller Gun, than in all four put together. But Hogg must be reckoned a disciple of Ramsay rather than of Burns; certainly his best work is not in Burns's vein. Cunningham was rather a man of "all round" industry and versatility than a poet of any special school; he threw off very successful imitations of Burns, just as he threw off such clever imitations of old Nithsdale and Galloway song as completely, or partially, deceived his first patron, Cromek. Boswell, unfortunately, did not give up the best of himself to poetry; and the duties of an exacting profession exercised an equally effectual curb upon Mayne. But it may be doubted if either Tannahill, Thom, Nicoll, or Motherwell himself would have written, or at least published, had there been no Burns before him; their best—certainly their best-known—are in one or other of Burns's veins. The shadow of Burns fell on their personal lives no less than on their poetical aspirations—they were not fated to ripen or to reach the haven of success, or even personal happiness. Tannahill committed suicide in a fit of despondency in his thirty-seventh year. Professional strain killed Motherwell at the same age, and Nicoll at twenty-three. Thom lived to fifty-nine; but he had more than his share of the poet's miseries—alike the misery that comes from without, the hopeless pathos of circumstances, and the misery that arises within, that springs from self-helplessness on the ethical side. His life was linked wretchedness—as of his own "Mitherless Bairn"—long drawn out.

We have placed Motherwell first among the successors of Burns because he has most of Burns's distinguishing characteristics—bold originality, "thoroughness," and directness of style. Paradoxical as it may seem, it is nevertheless the fact that, of the four poets under review, he came nearest Burns because he imitated him the least. He struck out—or would have struck out had he lived—a special line for himself. He was the first of Scotch poets to write English well; he wrote it, as the late Mr. G. L. Craik in his Literature and Learning in England says Burns alone could write Scotch, "like a gentleman." Such poems as "A Madman's Love" and "True Love's Dirge" serve mainly to make us regret his early death; and, as the ballad singer of the Vikings in such efforts as the "Sword Chant of Thorstein Raudi," "he sang," as Prof. Minto says, without exaggeration, "with a vigour that entitles him to be named as a link between Gray and Collins and Mr. William Morris." "Isaac Brown," here first included in an edition of Motherwell's poems, proves further that he had a considerable amount of humour, and could use the stanza of Ohilde Harold with effect. Still it is by his Scotch poems and songs that Motherwell is at present, and perhaps will for some time be, best known—such as "Jeanie Morrison" and "My heid is like to rend, Willie"—and it is in these that he comes nearest to Burns. Burns may have anticipated the spirit, but even he has not surpassed the sweetness and strength, of such lines as these in "Jeanie Morrison"—

"The throssil whusslit i' the wud,
The burn sang to the trees,
And we with Nature's heart in tune
Concerted harmonies;
And on the knowe abune the burn,
For hours thegither sat
In the silentness o' joy, till baith
Wi' very gladness grat!"

Nor has Burns so hunted pathos to death—perhaps in his refraining from doing so he has shown himself the superior artist—as in "My heid is like to rend, Willie," in which reproach, love, and pity are all dissolved in tears. It is too sorrowful in subject and treatment for quotation; but lighter, although akin, is the song of "Wearie's Well." Seldom has forgiveness for desertion gone so far, or been so happily expressed, as in

"Fareweel, and for ever,
My first love and last,
May thy joys be to come,—
Mine live in the past.
In sorrow and sadness
This hour fa's on me;
But light as thy love may
It fleet over thee!"

Tannahill, Thom, and Nicoll are much more decidedly under the spell of Burns than Motherwell, and—more especially Tannahill—are better known. Of the three, the first has inherited most of Burns's "lilt"—only a Scotch word can express what is meant—in describing tender emotions and their background of rural scenery; the second most of Burns's power of photographing misery and "misery's sons and daughters;" and the last most of his sympathy with Scotch life of the Cotter's Saturday Night order, with a little of a Crabbe-like delight in portraying character—not so much character as village "characters"—super-added. Of the three, Thom seems to us to have the most of "the master's" heart. Tannahill is sweet and unaffected and musical, no doubt, with his

"How sweet is the brier, wi' its saft fauldin' blossom!
And sweet is the birk, wi' its mantle o' green;
Yet sweeter and fairer, and dear to this bosom,
Is lovely young Jessie, the flower o' Dunblane."

But is this not, after all, amatory poetry, with the eros left out? Then, again, there is undoubtedly what Mr. Arnold calls "high seriousness" in Robert Nicoll; and his life—struggle was a gallant—from the moral standpoint an unimpeachable and even lofty—one. But would the pen of the first Burns have written, would his ear have tolerated, such lines as these from "the second," as Ebenezer Elliot styled his brother in rhyme and Radicalism, with pardonable, because "funeral sermon," enthusiasm?—

"I ken na why ane wi' anither shauld fight,
When to 'gree wauld make a' body cosie an' right,

When man meets wi' man, 'tis the best way ava
To say, 'Gi'e me your hand—we are brethren a'!"

But there is deep, genuine pathos in Thom, as well as true Scotch "eeriness," if there is nothing else. Here is a picture of sodden misery, such as even Burns has not given us:—

"Hear ye the heartsick souns that fa'
Frae lips that bliss nae mair?
Like heilldless birdies when they ca'
Frae wet wee wing the batted snaw,
Her sang soughs o' despair."

A word of commendation is due to the Scotch publisher who has given us the series of "Reprints" of which "Motherwell" is the latest. When it is borne in mind that poems written in Scotch appeal to an audience not gradually, but rapidly diminishing, Mr. Gardner's enterprise must be considered a bold, if not a hazardous, one. But he has persisted in it, and he has made the most of it. He has given us the minor Scotch poets with such type, such paper, such amplitude of biographical and explanatory matter as they have never had before. In the last there may sometimes be seen provincialism, a tendency to speak of little fishes—what play-bills in country towns describe euphemistically as "local talent"—as if they were great whales. But Mr. McConehy's biography of Motherwell, though written shortly after the poet's death, is singularly and commendably free from this blemish.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

Our Old Country Towns. By Alfred Rimmer. (Chatto & Windus.)

MR. RIMMER has given us a beautifully illustrated book of sketches of travel in England. The wood-cuts are simply delightful to look upon; and the text, though we could find fault with it in numerous parts, is on the whole a very pleasant accompaniment to them. Mr. Rimmer is as enthusiastic for England and things English as though he were a cultivated American who had visited this island now for the first time, and has little sympathy with the misguided folk who, before they have seen the interesting things which this country has to show, rush off to take their holiday in a foreign land. In much that he says we heartily agree with him, but there is another side of the picture of which he does not seem to have taken account. Most of us do not travel for mere pleasure, but for rest of mind and body. It may be a truism to say that there is as much beauty to be found at home as in this or that foreign country; but what the ordinary tourist is in want of is not beauty. The one thing which the hard-worked professional man, man of letters, or man of business wants is rest. His desire is to get away from association with things like those which he sees at home. He cannot do this in Devonshire or Yorkshire. The same language is spoken and the same manners prevail there—with minute provincial differences, it is true—as at home. He can, however, gain in a great measure the repose he requires by crossing the Channel. In Normandy or Belgium perhaps the things are in themselves not better worth seeing, but they are of a character which acts as a tonic on the wearied brain; while the other, though equally good, would have a thousand threads of connexion with home-life and the cares of business. The mere fact that the people across the Channel speak different languages from English is not without its attraction. But very few of us speak any tongue but our own so well as to be able to converse in a foreign language without some degree of effort, and the energy which is expended in doing this takes the mind away from the cares which prey upon it to the destruction of health.

We have no doubt that Mr. Rimmer's book will induce many persons to visit our old English towns who, if he had not arisen to comment on their points of attraction, would never have seen them, or would have passed through them with absolute indifference. This will be an unmixed gain, for, whatever may be said in favour of Continental travel, it ought never to stand in the way of a knowledge of one's own country. This latter is a needful part of education which should in no case be omitted, save on the ground of poverty.

Though Mr. Rimmer would probably not feel flattered if told that he had made a valuable addition to our stock of guide-books, it is so, however; and we should not be surprised if we were to learn that there had been a large demand for his work when the tourist season sets in. In one unfortunate particular it is indeed far too much like certain guide-books. Mr. Rimmer is constantly discoursing about the food he got in this or that inn at which he stayed. Generally, he tells us, he found the eating and drinking good and cheap. We are, of course, glad that he met with pleasant accommodation, for so genial a traveller must certainly deserve it; but he must pardon us for telling him that it is somewhat of an intrusion to thrust these personal experiences upon the notice of his readers.

We are not sure whether it be not too much to ask, but we really should have thought that a gentleman who has evidently so keen an interest in past times would have felt it worth while to make himself acquainted with the outlines of the history of the places of which he has to tell, and not have permitted himself to be led into error by the first blundering book of reference that came in his way. No one can travel much about England without coming on genuine traces of Oliver Cromwell; but the Protector figures in Mr. Rimmer's pages more than once in positions where, could he see the book, he would be much surprised to find himself. When Mr. Rimmer has occasion to refer to the stormy times between 1642 and 1660, Cromwell usually comes before us in such a manner as to suggest the unpleasant notion that Mr. Rimmer shares with our peasantry the notion that Oliver fought in every battle and dismantled every old castle that is roofless or has a hole in its walls. To our unlettered poor, Cromwell supplies the place of all earlier mythic heroes. We have no objection to contemplating "the King of the Fens" as our forefathers regarded Arthur; and as the "flos regum" was not only buried at Glastonbury, where his tomb was shown inscribed,

"Hic jacet Arthurus Rex quondam rexque futurus," but at Carlisle, Caerleon, and a dozen other places in Scotland and Brittany beside, so, if it pleases persons of imaginative temper, we can well consent to fancy that any number of contradictory things were done by Oliver. But mythology and history must be sternly kept apart, and we therefore cannot forgive Mr. Rimmer for suggesting that the future Protector did things in which it is certain he could have had no hand. One example will be enough to show what we mean. Mr. Rimmer is speaking of Hawarden Castle. He says:—

"Henry VI. granted it to Sir Thomas Stanley, and the house of Stanley held it until it was forfeited again to the Crown, when James Earl of Derby was taken after the Battle of Worcester and beheaded at Bolton. Cromwell sold it for some nominal sum to Serjeant Glynne, and it remained in his family till the sudden death of Sir Stephen Glynne in London, when it passed to his sister, Mrs. W. E. Gladstone."

It would take a far larger space than we can spare to point out all that requires amendment in this little extract. What we are now concerned to note is the fact that Hawarden Castle was not sold by Cromwell for a nominal or any other sum, for the simplest of all reasons, that it was never his to sell. On July 6, 1651, a Confiscation Act was passed by the Parliament ordering the sale of the estates of certain Royalists, among others those of the Earl of Derby (Scobell, Acts and Ord., part ii., p. 156); and by that authority, which was then supreme, his estates were sold. There is not much doubt that if Mr. Rimmer were to consult the Royalist Composition Papers in the Record Office he would find there a valuation of the estate and a memorandum of how much Serjeant Glynne paid for it. The estates of the Royalists were usually disposed of at their fair value, and there seems to have been no reason why the great lawyer should have been exceptionally favoured.

Mr. Rimmer gives a very interesting and accurate account of the great Eastern Fenland, but he exaggerates the volume of water by which it was in the old time overflowed. "Almost all the rainfall of Yorkshire, Derbyshire, and Nottinghamshire found its way through the Ouse, or Nene, or Trent into the swampy lake." There is strange error here. Has not Mr. Rimmer forgotten the existence of the Humber, and confounded the Yorkshire Ouse with its Fenland namesake? It is certain that the waters of the Trent have not during the historical period found their way into that great marsh.

A popular writer has remarked that Henry

VIII. was signally unfortunate in his relations with women. A similar evil shadow seems to cross Mr. Rimmer's path when he has occasion to mention rivers. He or his forefathers must have done wrong to some spirit of the waters who is now taking a cruel revenge. His book shows that he appreciates poetry. Is it possible that he has never read, or, having read, has forgotten, Sir Walter Scott's magnificent description in Marmion of the migrations of St. Cuthbert's body, and how

"After many wanderings past,
He chose his lordly seat at last,
Where his cathedral, huge and vast,
Looks down upon the Wear:
There deep in Durham's Gothic shade
His relics are in secret laid?"

It must be so, for Mr. Rimmer, when comparing Durham with Lincoln, speaks of the former rising over the Tees. We are often told that Scott's verse is not popular now. If it were as well known as it ought to be it might sometimes prove a safeguard against errors in topography.

EDWARD PEACOCK.

NEW NOVELS.

Harry Joscelyn. By Mrs. Oliphant. (Hurst and Blackett.)

An Ocean Free Lance. By W. Clark Russell. (Bentley.)

Luck, and What Came of It. By Charles Mackay. (W. H. Allen.)

On Latmos. By Fanny Aiken-Kortright. (Remington.)

It is always pleasant to find, in taking up the work of a veteran novelist, that "Todgers' can" still "do it when it chooses." Some of Mrs. Oliphant's latest books have done so little justice to any of her powers, except her power of putting together a barely readable novel out of the scantiest materials and with the least possible display of skill, that Harry Joscelyn is particularly welcome. The first half is nearly as good as anything the author has ever done, and the remainder is not unworthy of it. Harry Joscelyn is the son of a North-country squireen whose family has rather come down in the world, but who still enjoys a rude sort of affluence derived from farming and horse-breeding. He is rather more than less boorish than his neighbours, and bullies his patient, and rather spiritless, wife royally. Harry is the youngest son; and being, of course, his mother's darling, as well as the favourite of his great-uncle (an ancient person who has made some money, and has succeeded in keeping himself at a higher level, socially speaking, than the head of the house), is a butt for his father's violent proceedings. The boy, who is home from Liverpool, where he has a stool in a merchant's office, commits a special maladroitness by suggesting that his father shall lend him his mother's money to obtain a partnership; and a quarrel follows which results in Ralph Joscelyn locking not merely his son, but his daughter Joan, out of his house on a cold spring night. The adventures of that night are told with such elaboration that, with their immediate sequel, they pretty well fill the first volume. The second volume tells how Harry, going off in a huff, and determined to make his fortune over seas, lands "promiscuously" at Leghorn, and falls on his feet there. The humours of a certain Anglo-Italian, Paolo Thompson by name, are drawn by Mrs. Oliphant with nearly the same minuteness as the family jars of the household on the fells, and are nearly as good. We shall say nothing of the conclusion of the book, or of the minor characters, except to remark that Mrs. Oliphant has never drawn anything much better than Joan Joscelyn, the notable, eldest (and elderly) daughter of the house. Rita Bonamy, too, the heroine as far as there is any heroine, is a pleasant contrast and companion-study. Joan's younger sister, Lydia, though she seems to be a favourite with the author, is not so good; and the brothers and brothers' wives are a little conventional. But such a scene as that at the "Red Lion," the village inn, in the first volume, is very nearly enough to set a book up by itself.

An Ocean Free Lance will very fairly sustain the reputation which Mr. Clark Russell has won for sea romances. Of course there is something else beside sailing and fighting in it; but the loves of Julian Madison and Madeline Palmer are not of much more importance than those of Marryat's heroes and heroines, which, indeed, they very much resemble. The "ocean free lance" is rather Captain Shelvocke, master of the privateer schooner Tigress, than his mate Madison; and a very agreeable sea-guerrilla he is. The Tigress, of course, is as ever-victorious as Colonel Gordon's army. She sinks a French lugger just outside the Downs, as a sort of whet to her appetite; fights and, by sheer pluck and seamanship, captures a heavy corvette immediately afterwards; chases French brigs-of-war all about the Channel; and is left at the end of the book conducting Parthian warfare with one of the formidable frigates which the 'cuteness of the United States set afloat in 1812 to overpower English cruisers less heavily armed. By-the-way, à propos of these same ships, Mr. Clark Russell has made a slight slip in his naval history. He makes Shelvocke say of the Yankee cruiser, "How do you know that she may not prove the Constitution, the Hornet, or, worse still, the President? One of those vessels I'll swear she is; in which case she will be carrying over fifty guns," &c. Now this description applies well enough to the Constitution and the President but not to the Hornet, which was only a brig, and certainly did not carry fifty guns. However, this is but a trifle. All Mr. Clark Russell's fights are delightfully fought, and carry the reader back to the days when he first rejoiced in Peter Simple or Percival Keene. Mr. Russell, too, if he has not quite so light a hand as Capt. Marryat, is better at the set pieces of description which novel readers expect nowadays. Altogether An Ocean Free Lance is a very pleasant book. We should like to hear more of Captain Shelvocke and the Tigress, if, as Mr. Russell informs us, there is more to tell.

Luck, and What Came of It, is a well-enough written book, which is chiefly wanting in interest—if it is wanting—because of a certain conventionality about the characters and incidents. It is the history of a most respectable family nearly related to the peerage and possessed of the good things of this world. Mr. Haughton, of Mill Haughton, has a very Scotch wife, and two daughters (one of whom is rather unreally sentimental and the other still more unreally fast), and a seat in Parliament, and strong Liberal principles. The family go about a good deal, and a good many things happen to them and their relations. They meet a German professor at Oban who says that Dr. Johnson was a dummer esel. It is interesting for the idle mind to exercise itself in imagining what Dr. Johnson would have said of the German—who, by-the-way, remarks that Gaelic is a grand old Asiatic language once spoken all over Europe. They meet a Mr. Rigglesby, who is a swindler, and holds that Shakspeare and Milton and Byron were all Celts. They have a cousin who loses five thousand pounds on the Derby and marries a farrier's daughter. They have another cousin who, though apparently a squire of low degree, turns out to be something very different, and is victimised by the great secret society which it pleases the author to call "Maireann," doubtless to show its connexion with the before-mentioned grand old Asiatic language. There is thus plenty of incident and movement in the book, though there are a few slips here and there. The author will hardly persuade us that a wealthy country lawyer, devoted to French wines, would be so ignorant as to think Bordeaux the head-quarters of Burgundy. He himself, alas! spells a certain liquor "Lafitte." The book would be a good book enough if it were not signed by the author of the Cholera Chant and the Salamandrine.

Many persons have at different times been pronounced felices opportunitate mortis. This description may now be extended to the late Nathaniel Hawthorne. Miss Aiken-Kortright dedicates her book to him on the plea that "he would have best understood it." To understand On Latmos would require a mental effort to which the celebrated phrase about going through so much and gaining so little seems especially applicable. To begin with, On Chat Moss or on or off anything else would be as appropriate a title for the book as On Latmos. Nobody is on Latmos that we can see, even in the metaphorical sense of the epigraph with which the author decorates her title-page. There is a heroine, Horatia Ormsby, who is very proud and very virtuous and very ill-bred. She misconducts herself with a music-master. There is a certain Lord Selmore who pays his addresses by turns to Horatia and a rather vulgar little friend of hers named Ellen Grantley, and who expires of a broken heart in the unheroic act of reading his wife's correspondence. There is an improper person who lives in Park Lane. There is a mysterious being who is just like the music-master, and who writes a great many mysterious letters. All these materials are mixed thickly and slably by the aid of a very clumsy style, of which this is an example:—

"Horatia was no mindless beauty. She stands under the cedar, and, gazing towards her inheritance from under her long, thick lashes, she is dreaming; like her father, dreaming when the strength of those walls shall be renewed, the unsightly holes filled up, the moss and lichen swept away, and the masonry repaired. Ere long it must be; and the manor-house shall rise in its old glory under the fostering hand of her husband—her husband; who will he be?"

Having given this "portrait of a lady with her eye on the main chance," we may perhaps take leave of On Latmos with a parting remark that it would be much better if bad novelists would not, in selecting their titles, take liberties with good poets.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

RECENT ITALIAN BOOKS.

Niccolò Machiavelli e i suoi Tempi, illustrati con nuovi Documenti. By Prof. Pasquale Villari. Vol. II. (Florence: Le Monnier.) For obvious reasons it is impossible for us to offer any criticism on this second instalment of Prof. Villari's historical work. Its appearance, long delayed by the author's ill-health, has been awaited with much eagerness by the Italian reading world, and the rapidity of its sale testifies to the cordiality of its welcome. All things are relative; and here in Italy it is of no ordinary occurrence for three hundred copies of a book to go off in the first days of publication. The volume is mainly dedicated to an examination of Machiavelli's doctrines as embodied in his principal works, notably in the Discourses and the Prince; but its first chapter gives an exposition of the spirit of the Italian Renaissance, as shown in the mighty development of the fine arts and their general influence on the minds of men. The narrative of the protagonist's personal career is carried down to the period of his disgrace and retirement to the country, on the restoration of the Medici to Florence. The description of the ex-Secretary's life at Sant' Andrea, and of the causes urging him to the composition of the Discourses and the Prince, is illustrated by copious extracts from his private correspondence. But the analysis of Machiavelli's political creed and of the doctrines specially connected with his name forms the chief theme of the book. It concludes with a survey of the opinions of the best-known commentators of Machiavelli, and is followed by an Appendix, containing many newly discovered documents, inclusive of the curious notes inscribed by Christina of Sweden on the margin of her pocket copy of the Prince. An English version of Prof. Villari's new volume is now completed, and will probably appear before long.

Le Origini della Lingua poetica italiana; Principii di Grammatica storica italiana. By Dr. C. N. Caix. (Florence: Le Monnier.) Prof. Caix, several of whose works have already been noticed in these pages, is a distinguished member of the zealous band of Italian philologists, and a specialist of the Romance languages. His present volume, which has received honourable mention from the Academy of the Lincei, furnishes a valuable contribution towards the history of the Italian language. It is based upon the theory that, whereas Italian prose has been built up on almost exclusively Tuscan models, the language of verse is a conglomeration of elements derived from many dialects, particularly from those of Sicily and Apulia; and that the difference of diction in Italian prose and verse is to be mainly attributed to this difference of origin. In support of his theory, the author marshals a long array of examples drawn from careful study of old MSS. His researches have been pursued with an ingenuity and an accuracy of method that have gained him the applause of all experts in his particular branch of learning.

Storia della Letteratura italiana nel Secolo XVI. By U. A. Canello. (Milan: Vallardi.)

Signor Canello is another young professor of the Romance languages, but has temporarily deserted philology in favour of the history of Italian literature. Although showing undoubted talent, this work makes no use of unpublished materials, and, as the author acknowledges, has been written in haste. Signor Canello seeks to prove that the key to the history of Italian literature is only to be found in that of Italian civilisation; and from this point of view he undoubtedly offers us certain new and original observations. But although Italian literature may, equally with the fine arts, be a product of civilisation, it has, nevertheless, a special and independent value of its own which no history of the subject should fail to assert. In fact, the chief fault of the book consists in its too frequent excursions into the political history of Italy, and in dwelling rather upon the historical aspects of literary works than on their intrinsic and artistic worth. On this account the volume has a certain originality that attracts, but does not altogether satisfy the reader's curiosity.

Monumenta ad Neapolitani ducatus Historiam pertinentia. Vol. I. Edited by Bartolommeo Capasso. This superb volume, just issued by the Historical Institute of Naples, is a collection of old Latin documents illustrative of the little-known history of the Duchy of Naples, annotated and commented by Signor Capasso, who may be said to be the most learned and competent authority on this special branch of history.

La Lingua dei Promessi Sposi, nella prima e nella seconda Edizione. (Naples: Morano.) This book is devoted to what, in Italy, is known as the everlasting question of language, and what English readers may be tempted to designate as the everlasting question of Manzoni. As all know, no sooner had Manzoni written his celebrated novel than he was so pestered by philological pedants as to the diction he had employed that he brought out a second edition of his book, entirely rewritten, in a more Tuscan and familiar form, and he never again wrote a work of fiction! The investigation of the different idioms and forms of expression employed in the Promessi Sposi has been long a favourite subject with Italian philologists; and, in fact, Prof. d' Ovidio's new volume is an amplification, for school use, of a former essay in his Saggi Critici. To his great philological equipment Prof. d' Ovidio unites so rare a literary gift and brilliancy of style that, notwithstanding the dryness of his theme, his book is eminently readable. None the less so because, controversy being, at all times, one of the Professor's strong points, his pages are larded with pungent attacks upon brother philologists.

Dante e la Statistica della Lingua. By Filippo Mariotti. (Florence: Barbera.) Signor Mariotti, whose translation of the orations of Demosthenes is well known in Italy, is also an ardent Dantophilist. The volume before us contains statistical tables of Dante's relative use of the different parts of speech and the total of words employed in the Divina Commedia. This total consists of 5,860 words, being 218 in excess of the number (5,642) quoted by Renan as the sum of words used in the Bible. The author gives other curious particulars of the same kind, and maintains that the study of similar statistics will lead to important results in the investigation of the laws of thought. He confines himself, however, to the statement of facts, leaving his readers to draw their own conclusions. The book concludes with a musical Appendix giving the notes of the different settings of Dante's words.

La Vita e i Tempi di Luigi Provana da Sabbione. By Leone Ottolenghi. (Turin: Loescher.) The name of Provana is probably unknown beyond the Italian frontier; but, as one of the group of Piedmontese literati whose writings had no small share in arousing the national spirit in the years preceding 1848, this careful narrative of his life's work is a useful contribution towards the history of the rise of Italian independence.

Poesie di Edmondo de Amicis. (Milan: Treves.) This volume will hardly add to the reputation of the very popular author of Sketches of Military Life and a score of books of travel. We opened his poems in the hope that, as is sometimes the case with authors who are rather too diffuse in prose, the exigencies of verse would have pruned away some exuberance of epithet, and compelled the writer to express his thoughts with greater vigour and conciseness. But we have been disappointed. The verse of Signor de Amicis exaggerates the faults of his prose. Nowhere does his sentiment rise to the height of passion, and in his search for simplicity he sometimes descends to childishness, especially in his tiresome abuse of diminutives. Nevertheless, he is a graceful singer of the domestic affections; and, if we cannot accord him much praise as a poet, this volume, like all other works from his pen, gives us a highly pleasant impression of his merits as a man.

Il Marito di Laurina. Racconto da Salvatore Farina. (Turin: Roux e Favale.) Under this title we are glad to meet again with the series of sparkling sketches of Italian middle-class life that have appeared at intervals in the pages of the Nuova Antologia. Signor Farina holds a high place among purveyors of light literature in Italy, and is at his best in subjects of the genteel comedy kind. This tale has little or no plot. Starting with the marriage of a young couple, its only incidents are supplied by ordinary domestic events—the birth and rearing of a child, the shock of discovering that the child has grown into a woman, and parental anxiety regarding the suitors for her hand. Signor Farina is optimistic in his views, and, without being an imitator, is evidently a student of Dickens. He does not try to penetrate beneath the surface of life; but his wit plays very prettily over its exterior aspects. His tone is healthy, and his fun is excellent throughout. In these days of Zolaesque writing it is easy to forgive an Italian novelist for not soaring very high, in consideration of his preference for sun-lit paths rather than subterranean channels.

LINDA VILLARI.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

SONNET.

Suggested by Sir Frederick Leighton's Picture of Elisha restoring the Widow's Son.

"Thy staff is on his face," Gehazi said,
 "And yet he wakes not." Silent, fierce, alone,
 Elisha passed into the room, and prone
 He flung himself upon the floor and prayed.
 "O Lord our God, are we forgot, betrayed?
 What is this hidden thing that Thou hast done
 Turn Thou again Thy countenance that shone
 And leave us not in darkness, and dismayed!"
 Nor only prayed: but with his body whole,
 With eye to eye and large to little hand,
 And mouth to mouth, he called; and answer came.
 Body replied to body, soul to soul;
 And the eyes, stricken with a strange command,
 Opened, and saw the Prophet's, and took flame.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

NOTES AND NEWS.

IN his Preface to The Treaty of Ripon, published by the Camden Society, the late Mr. Bruce pointed to a continuation of Sir John Borough's notes relating to the negotiations between the Scottish and English Commissioners in London during the first months of the Long Parliament as deserving future publication. It is known that these notes are, in one respect, very deficient. They do not give at length the official documents which passed from one side to the other, but merely cite them by their initial words. Fortunately, the want can now be filled up, at least as far as the end of March 1641, by a valuable MS. in the Advocates' Library at Edinburgh, which appears, strange to say, to have escaped the notice of the many admirable publishing societies of Scotland. It is marked 33. 4. 6., and contains the whole of the correspondence between the Scottish Commissioners in London and the Committee at Newcastle, accompanied by the missing documents.

A FOURTH volume of Henricus de Bracton's great work, De Legibus et Consuetudinibus Angliæ, will shortly appear, edited by Sir Travers Twiss, Q.C., D.C.L., for the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, as part of the Rolls Series. The Introduction will throw some new light upon the disfeudation of advowsons, through the operation of the Assise of Last Presentation, and will raise some novel points, among others, as to the legal division of the hour of the day into forty moments, which, according to Bracton, was in use in Westminster Hall in the reign of Henry III., and seems to have been in harmony with the practice of Accursius and the Italian civilians.

WE are glad to hear that the text of the Greek Testament, upon which Canon Westcott and Prof. Hort have been working for the better part of thirty years, will be published, in the course of next week, by Messrs. Macmillan and Co. It will be followed very shortly by a uniform volume containing the Introduction and Appendix. Messrs. Macmillan will also publish, in about a fortnight, the Croall Lectures for 1879-80, which were delivered by Prof. Milligan, of Aberdeen. The subject was The Resurrection of our Lord.

WE hear that Count Ugo Balzani is engaged upon a little book for the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, treating of a subject which he has specially studied—the early chronicles of Italy. It will be translated by his English wife, and will be ready in time for the publishing season of the new year.

THE Delegates of the Clarendon Press will publish very shortly Historical Writings of St. Athanasius, according to the Benedictine text, with an Introduction by Canon Bright. The treatises in this volume are those which were translated by Dr. Newman, in the "Library of the Fathers," under the title of Historical Tracts of St. Athanasius, together with another, which was included in a second series of translations from the Fathers, which Card. Newman has recently reprinted. Their value for the historical student is best represented by Montfaucon's statement as to the longest of them—that it is the most authentic source of information for the history of a very important period in the fourth century.

AT the meeting of the Camden Society held on May 2 it was announced that the book for the subscription of the current year was The Puritan Visitation of the University of Oxford, edited by Prof. Burrows. A strong feeling was expressed at the meeting that the attention of the numerous students of history in this country should be drawn to the good work which the society is doing, as testified by the reception accorded to its books by the press, and to the urgent need of fresh subscribers if it is to carry on that work successfully. The subscription is £1, and prospectuses may be had on application to Messrs. Nichols, 25 Parliament Street. Among materials waiting for publication are—the valuable correspondence of Sir E. Nicholas, secretary to Charles I. and Charles II.; a fresh series of the Verney papers, unedited letters of John Locke, a set of wardrobe accounts of Henry IV., &c., &c.

A YOUNG Scotsman, of university education, who recently left London to take a mercantile position in Lima, is collecting materials for a history of the South-American War, especially in its latest phases. This will in no way touch upon the ground occupied by the exhaustive work mentioned by Sir Edward Reed in a recent letter to the Times.

MESSRS. W. STEWART AND CO. will publish, in a few days, Punishments in the Olden Time, by William Andrews, hon. secretary of the Hull Literary Club. The book will contain an historical account of the ducking stool, brank, pillory, stocks, drunkard's cloak, whipping post, &c. It will be profusely illustrated by George Cruikshank, L. Jewitt, F.S.A., and others.

THE Rev. Walter Gregor, of Pitsligo, Fraserburgh, is trying to form a society for the publication and reproduction of the best of the Scottish literature, chiefly the poetical, before 1600. The society is to be much after the fashion of the Early-English Text Society, and will in fact supplement that. Mr. Furnivall has suggested that the new society shall include all our early Northern Dialect Literature, not only the small portion distinctively Scottish, and then the new society and the Early-English Text might produce many works in partnership. At any rate, Mr. Gregor will be glad to receive the names of any men who are inclined to support his new scheme.

MESSRS. LONGMANS announce the immediate publication, in a separate volume, of the letters which have recently appeared in the Times upon the condition and management of the great Irish estates. These letters, we understand, were written by Mr. Finlay Dun.

THE next addition to the Clarendon Press Series will be the First Part of a Modern German Reader, a graduated collection of prose extracts from modern German writers, edited, with English notes, a Grammatical Appendix, and a complete Vocabulary, by Dr. C. A. Buchheim.

MESSRS. MACNIVEN AND WALLACE, of Edinburgh, announce for publication this month The Last Supper of Our Lord, by J. Marshall Lang, D.D., being the fourth volume of their "Household Library of Exposition;" A Scotch Student: Memorials of the Rev. Peter Thomson, M.A., of St. Fergus, by the Rev. George Steven, Logieatmond; and a Bible Class Primer on Moses and the Exodus, by the Rev. Jas. Iverach.

PROF. TANNER is engaged upon a series of Reading Books on the Principles of Agriculture, for use in elementary schools. The first of the series, The Alphabet of the Principles of Agriculture, will be published by Messrs. Macmillan and Co. at an early date.

MR. EDWARD STANFORD has ready for immediate publication the Balance Sheet of the World for Ten Years, 1870-80, by Mr. Michael G. Mulhall, with twelve coloured diagrams. This work consists of a comparison of the statistics of all the nations of Christendom relating to commerce, agriculture, revenue, and public debt. In some sort, it will serve as a companion to the decennial census now being taken of the population of the British Empire,

THE second volume of the "International and Freethought Series," which will be issued during the present month, is The Student's Darwin, by Edward B. Aveling, D.Sc. The first volume of the series was Mrs. Besant's translation of Büchner's Mind in Animals.

WE learn from Morning Light, "a New Church Weekly Journal," that Mr. J. R. Boyle, of Hull, is engaged upon a complete bibliography of the literature relating to Swedenborg and the New Church from the publication of Swedenborg's first work in 1709 down to the present time. If Mr. Boyle fulfils his promise of searching for and describing "every book, pamphlet, tract, or periodical, in any language," bearing upon the subject, we can well believe that he will have to give notices of from five to six thousand separate publications. One can only regret that so much labour should be expended upon a matter of such little interest from the literary or historical point of view.

A FORTHCOMING number of the Jewish Chronicle will contain a story in verse, of some length, by Mr. Sydney Montagu Samuel. It is founded on a not too well-known legend of the Talmud.

THE Rev. E. G. Charlesworth, Vicar of Acklam, near Middlesborough, has rewritten his principal poem, "Eccs Homo," in rhymed verse, for publication in the next issue of the North of England Illustrated Annual.

MR. MARTIN SIMPSON, Curator of the Museum of the Whitby Literary and Philosophical Society, and a well-known writer on the geology of the Yorkshire coast, has now in the press a History of England during the reign of William III.

WE are glad to hear that the subscriptions for the endowment of University College, Liverpool, now amount to nearly £100,000. The whole of this large sum has been collected within a period of little more than a year; but, as it is almost entirely appropriated to specific professorships, further contributions will be required for buildings and for the general purposes of the institution. In the meantime, the constitution of the college has been drafted; and the Council, which will be the chief administrative authority, has already held its first meeting. The promoters have wisely determined to begin operations at once, without waiting for a charter of incorporation, which will no doubt come in due time; and it is hoped that the first classes may be opened in October. Lord Derby, Mr. W. Rathbone, M.P., Mr. S. S. Rathbone, Mr. E. Lawrence, Mr. A. T. Squarey, the Rev. G. Butler, and Mr. J. A. Pictou have prominently associated themselves with the scheme.

A BRANCH of the Hellenic Society has been established at Cambridge, of which the Master of Trinity is chairman, Prof. Colvin vice-chairman, and Mr. Oscar Browning secretary.

THE Rev. H. R. Haweis began the repetition of his Royal Institution course on the American Humorists at the London Institution last Friday week. On April 29 the theatre was crowded to listen to "Washington Irving," and yesterday, May 6, "Oliver Wendell Holmes" was given. The plan of single tickets at two shillings and sixpence is a decided improvement on the old heavy fee for the course, which places the Royal Institution lectures beyond the reach of many willing auditors.

AT the meeting of the Clifton Shakspeare Society held on April 23, Dr. J. E. Shaw presented a Report on the plants and animals mentioned in Henry V. Mr. C. P. Harris, B.A., read a note on "Fluellin." A paper by Mr. J. W. Mills, B.A., on "The Death of Falstaff" was read. Mr. P. A. Daniel's "Time-Analysis of Henry V." (read with the Time-Analysis of the other histories at the meeting of the New Shakspeare Society on June 13, 1879) was also read.

THE Japanese Government has just published a great dictionary of military and naval terms in five languages—Japanese, French, English, German, and Dutch. This is said to be the first Japanese dictionary arranged on the European plan. The compiler is Col. Kadumitô.

IT is proposed to celebrate at Moscow, on May 29, the fiftieth anniversary of the foundation of the Rumiantseff Museum, out of which has grown the public museum of that city.

MESSRS. BROCKHAUS will publish in the course of this month the second part of Oskar Meding (Gregor Samarow)'s Memoiren zur Zeitgeschichte, dealing with the year 1866; and the third part of H. E. Brockhaus' biography of Friedrich Arnold Brockhaus.

HERR H. DENIFLE is about to publish with Messrs. Weidmann a work on the German "Friends of God" in the fourteenth century, as an introduction to the history of German mysticism.

THE first part of Mr. T. H. S. Escott's England, dealing with private life, has been translated into French by M. René de Lubersac, under the title of L'Angleterre, le Pays, les Institutions, les Mœurs (Paris: Maurice Dreyfous).

HERR FRIEDRICH, of Leipzig, has brought out a volume of German translations of Roumanian poems, by "Carmen Sylva," the recognised pseudonym of Queen Elizabeth of Roumania.

AN édition de luxe of Mickiewicz's Pan Tadeusz is in course of publication by M. Altenberg, of Lemberg. This edition of the Polish classic is to appear in twelve monthly parts, corresponding to the number of cantos of which the poem consists, and will be illustrated by M. Andriolli, a Polish artist.

MR. FURNIVALL hands us the following letter:—

"In an old deed—a copy of which is in my possession—relating to the tythes of the parish of St. Helen, Bishopsgate, in the year 1539, are the following entries:—

Marke Antonio Bassano—8/3 tithes.

Jeronymy Bassano—13/9 "

"It is not possible that one of the Bassanos may have been the friend of Shakspeare, or known to him by name, and so have furnished the name for Bassanio in The Merchant of Venice?

"The 'Theatre' being in the same parish would, I venture to think, support this view.

"R. H. HILLS."

THE Variorum Edition of the New Testament with various renderings and readings from the best authorities, now re-issued separately, with "considerable additions," by Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode, needs no commendation at our hands. The work is to us a marvel of compression, if of nothing else. Centuries of learning and research may be said to be contained in the notes. The reader has here the text of the Authorised Version, together with the means not only of correcting the translation, but also of revising the text, in very little more space than would be filled by the text of the Authorised Version alone. The names of the original editors, the Rev. R. L. Clarke, M.A., and Alfred Goodwin, M.A., to which that of the Rev. W. Sanday, D.D., has been added for this edition, are a guarantee for the accuracy with which the work has been done. The opportuneness of the publication at this moment, in view of the forthcoming Revised Version, which the unlearned will now have the means of testing for themselves, hardly needs to be pointed out.

THE Peterburgskiya Gazeta states that a daily newspaper in the English language will shortly appear in the Russian capital. It will be edited by Mr. Gibson, and published by Mr. Watkins, proprietor of the English library, and the only English bookseller in St. Petersburg.

THE Comparative Dictionary of the Slavonic Languages which the Russian Academy has undertaken, and the compilation of which will be superintended by Dr. Jagic, is to be published under the title Linguarum Slavicarum lexicon comparativum. Each word admitted into the text will be accompanied by a reference to the source from which it is taken, and its primary meaning will be given in Latin. All the languages are to be represented, beginning with the oldest extant records. Groups of related words from each of the various dialects will be printed together, and in the following order—viz., Palaeo-Slavonic, Russian (with the Malo-Russian and Bielo-Russian dialects), Bulgarian, Serbo-Croatian, Slovenian, Bohemian (with the Slovak dialect), Upper and Lower Sorbian, Polish (with the Kashub dialect), and the relics of the Polabian dialects.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

WE have received:—Thomas Carlyle, the Iconoclast of Modern Shams: a Short Study of his Life and Writings, by the Rev. John Wilson (Paisley: Gardner); A Handbook of English Dictation, Compiled for the use of Candidates in all Civil and Military Examinations (Stanford); The Church Catechism explained by Holy Scripture: in Question and Answer, by the Rev. Douglas L. Scott (Stanford); Storia naturale della Civiltà, Saggio di Gabriele Rosa (Brescia: Malaguzzi); Histoire des Institutions municipales de Senlis, par Jules Flammarion, Bibliothèque de l'Ecole des Hautes-Etudes (Paris: Vieweg); &c., &c.

OF new editions we have received the following:—The Spirit of the Christian Life: Sermons preached on Various Occasions, by the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke, Second Edition (C. Kegan Paul and Co.); Old Faiths in New Light, by Newman Smyth, Second Edition (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons); Swedenborg's Writings and Catholic Teaching; or, a Voice from the New Church Porch, in Answer to a Series of Articles by the Vicar of Frome-Selwood, by the Rev. Augustus Clissold, Third Edition (Longmans); Ireland, by J. B. Kinnear, Second Edition, Revised (Smith, Elder and Co.); Cries in a Crisis: Anent Free-Trade in Manufactures, &c., compiled by R. A. Macfie, of Dreghorn, Second Edition, Enlarged (Stanford); The Early History of Charles James Fox, by G. O. Trevelyan, New Edition (Longmans); Lord Brackenbury, by Miss Amelia B. Edwards—new volume of the "Standard Library" (Hurst and Blackett); Christian Schools and Scholars; or, Sketches of Education from the Christian Era to the Council of Trent, by Augusta Theodosia Drane, Second Edition (Burns and Oates); &c.

WE have also received the following pamphlets:—A Memoir of the Earl of Beaconsfield, reprinted, by permission, from the Times (Longmans); Monaco, and its Gaming Tables, by John Polson, First and Second Editions (Elliot Stock); Earl Beaconsfield: with Two Portraits and Autographs: a Sketch, by Frederick A. Hyndmann (W. H. Allen); Imperial and Colonial Partnership in Emigration, by W. M. Torrens, M.P. (Stanford); The Land Question, Ireland—No. X., Mr. Gladstone's Bill; No. XI., Foregone Conclusions: the Bessborough Commission (William Ridgway); The Jewish Sabbath and the Christian Lord's Day: a Lay Sermon, by Prof. John Stuart Blackie (Edinburgh: Wheeler, King and Co.); Handel: an Outline of his Life and an Epitome of his Works, by Clarinda A. Webster (Aberdeen: Milne); The Idylls of the King: their Growth and Meaning, by R. W. Boodle (Toronto: Rose-Belford); Studies in the Early History of Institutions—The Theory of Primitive Communism, I., by Denmau W. Ross (Cambridge, U.S.: Sever); Shakespeare-Bibliographie, 1879 und 1880, von Albert Cohn (Berlin); Il Suffragio universale: Discorso del deputato Sidney Sonnino (Roma: Eredi Botta); Lo Scrutinio di Lista: Discorso del deputato Fortunato (Roma: Eredi Botta); &c., &c.

OBITUARY.

THE Rev. Charles Girdlestone, elder brother of the famous Canon of Bristol, died on April 28, at Weston-super-Mare, where he had lived for several years. He was born in 1797, and elected a Fellow of Balliol in 1818. He was a voluminous author on theological subjects from the Low Church point of view, and was in middle life an active parochial clergyman in Staffordshire. Among his better-known works were A Family Commentary on the Bible (1832-42); The Book of Psalms, according to the Two Authorised Translations, in Parallel Columns, with Marginal Notes (1836); and Christendom sketched from History in the Light of Holy Scriptures (1870).

MR. ERNEST SEYD, until recently a member of the Council of the Statistical Society, and well known for his able advocacy of a bi-metallic currency, is reported to have died at Paris, whither he had gone in order to influence the decisions of the International Conference, now sitting.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE May number of Harper's Magazine is one of unusual interest, as it contains articles on Carlyle and George Eliot, by Mr. Moncure Conway and Mr. Kegan Paul respectively. The article of the former was written before the appearance of the Reminiscences; and Mr. Conway expresses an opinion as to the judgment shown in the selection of the editor which would otherwise have possibly been modified. His own memories are all agreeable, and reveal the best side of the man, free from the "accidents" of dyspepsia and old age. As an intimate friend, he had the rare opportunity of watching Carlyle in various moods, but he only once saw his countenance "without any trace of spiritual pain." This was on the evening of the day when he was inaugurated Lord Rector of Edinburgh University. The account of that day, and the talk in the evening afterwards, when Carlyle gave him reminiscences of his childhood, is perhaps the most interesting part of a singularly interesting and important paper. Mr. Conway's sympathy with Carlyle does not seem to have in any way blinded him to his defects; and the article gives the fullest and pleasantest, probably the truest, picture of the man that we have yet had. Mrs. Carlyle's character, and her relations with her husband, are also brought out with great clearness and sweetness. Mr. Kegan Paul's paper states the few facts of George Eliot's life with probably greater accuracy than any of the many notices which have appeared since her death, and is written with excellent taste. Among many striking remarks, it contains one upon the type of her face for which we must find space. "The face," writes Mr. Kegan Paul, "was one of a group of four, not all equally like each other, but all of the same spiritual family, and with a curious inter-dependence of likeness. These four are Dante, Savonarola, Cardinal Newman, and herself." The other group which he mentions—viz., Christ, Shakspeare, and St. Ignatius Loyola—is, perhaps, more open to question. The author's judgment as to the qualities in which George Eliot's genius was pre-eminent is one which is not likely to be reversed. "In the description of the tragedy which underlies so much of human life, however quiet-seeming, in the subtle analysis of character, in the light touch which unravels the web of complex human motives, she seems to us absolutely unrivalled in our English tongue, except by . . . Shakespeare."

Le Livre for April continues its useful articles on armorial bindings, and its papers on Casanova, which will henceforward be indispensable to all students of that agreeable rascal. There is only one other original article—the famous Paris bookseller, Potier, who died last year. M. Potier's name and the excellent catalogues which he used to draw up, not merely of his own possessions, but of the great libraries which he was from time to time commissioned to sell, are well known to all students of French literature. A portrait of M. Potier illustrates the number; and there is also a pleasant reproduction of an intensely eighteenth-century plate of Moreau Le Jeune, where the shepherd, the shepherdess, her crook, her two dogs, her lamb, and everything else are the purest quintessence of elegant and impossible convention. The ephemeral matter, in the way of reviews, &c., is abundant and good as usual. But we miss the very useful advertisements of new and old books which used to accompany the magazine, and to be one of its most attractive features. Whether it be the editor or the advertisers who are responsible, the change seems to be a mistake.

PARTS V. and VI. of The South-African Folk-Lore Journal are before us, completing the second volume. The South-African Folk-Lore Society is to be congratulated upon having so far and so successfully carried on its work in spite of many and great difficulties. The present numbers could not go to press for nearly three months, all the compositors in Cape Town having been called out to fight the Basutos! Now that the indefatigable editor, Miss Lloyd, has been released from her drudgery at the Grey Library by the appointment of a librarian, a career of increased usefulness and interest may confidently be predicted for the Journal. The present numbers contain a valuable folktale—"The Fleeting Girls and the Rock," the South-African counterpart of the widely spread Märchen, in which the hero, or heroine, and companions seek refuge from their pursuers within a rock which opens to certain magic words. One of the companions, as is usually the case, makes a wrong use of the charm, and suffers in consequence. Then follow some "Words about Spirits," which, in Zululand, invariably turn into snakes, and are much dreaded. The most important paper, however, is that on the "Religious Ideas and Customs of the Ovaherero," in two instalments, the first dealing with the "Ideas about God," the second with the "Customs at the Birth of Twins." The reverence paid to twins is a prominent feature in many religions, as shown by the frequent recurrence of the "twin formula" in mythology and folk-tale; but it seems to have reached its highest pitch among the Ovaherero. The South-African Folk-Lore Journal is the only publication devoted to a systematic study of the beliefs and customs of the native races, and it is sincerely to be wished that it may receive a larger measure of support from the English public than has hitherto been the case. Subscriptions may be paid through the London agent, Mr. David Nutt.

THE LATE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD AS A JOURNALIST.

IN an article entitled "Private History of the Rise and Fall of a Newspaper," by a Parliamentary Reporter, the London Magazine for September 1826 (pp. 110-18) gives details concerning the connexion of "the younger D'Israeli" with the Representative.

"The scheme of this paper originated in a determination on the part of John Murray to put down the Times, a journal which he considered to have attained a dangerous degree of power and profit. . . . It was called the Representative, because it was intended to represent, as in the bright reflection of a mirror, an image as faithful as brilliant of the political events, the literature, and the manners of the passing time."

"The projector of this newspaper, it is now pretty generally understood, was the younger D'Israeli. . . . Of D'Israeli I do not know much, and mean to say less. He was, I believe, fresh from college [?], with all the conceit which is usually generated in such a place. He was utterly ignorant of the management of a newspaper; nay, I am pretty certain he would have thought it an insult to his gentility to impute such knowledge to him. As a political writer, he was of course nothing; as a mere littérateur, poor; even as a theatrical critic, pert, superficial, and teeming with affectation of the meanest and most despicable kind."

"Political character or consistency the paper had none. It oscillated from the anti-liberal to the liberal hart [sic] of the Ministry, and from the latter to the rankest radicalism. One day there was the selfish acrimony and aristocratic pride of the Blackwood scribes; another, some milk-and-water support of the measures of Messrs. Canning and Huskisson; a third, a strong smack of Cobbett's Register. In a word, an ignorant vacillation, a barbarous inconsistency, which were never surpassed in the whole history of folly."

The first number of the Representative appeared on January 25, 1826. At no time healthy, it died within a few months, or rather became united with the New Times—but not before "John Murray had quarrelled with the younger D'Israeli, his impreario."

[This incident, like most of those in the early life of Lord Beaconsfield, is by no means free from obscurity. No reference to it whatever is to be found in Mr. T. P. O'Connor's Biography. Mr. Hitchman mentions it (Public Life, &c., vol. i., pp. 20-22), but only to discredit it. He attributes its currency to an article in the Edinburgh for 1828, and also quotes what purports to be an absolute denial from Lord Beaconsfield himself. It will be seen, however, that the London Magazine is contemporary evidence by one who had special sources of information.—ED. ACADEMY.]

THE LITERARY SOCIETY OF FINLAND.

THE Literary Society of Finland, as we have already announced, intends celebrating its jubilee on June 30 of the present year. Some interesting details of the work it has accomplished during the past fifty years are given by a correspondent of the Nové Vremya. The society was founded in 1831 by a group of young Finnish scholars and littérateurs, of whom E. Lönnrot, the distinguished editor of some of the most remarkable memorials of the national literature, was one. During the first years of its existence, the society published the Kalevala and Kanteletar, as also collections of popular tales, proverbs, and folk-lore. The philology of the Finnish language and Finnish ethnography and history were also studied. The fruit of these researches appeared in the society's Annual, which was published at first in Swedish, but afterwards in Finnish. In course of time, the sources of membership of the society increased. Simultaneously, the sphere of its operations gradually widened. Translations of foreign classics into the Finnish language were made, and prizes were awarded for the best original works. Latterly, manuals in various branches of science and dictionaries have been published. The publications of the society, consisting of upwards of sixty volumes, form the most important part of Finnish printed literature. On the application of the Diet, an annual grant of 10,000 marks was made by the Russian Government, to which a yearly sum of 1,200 marks has been added from the Finnish treasury.

From the report submitted to the last annual meeting, it appears that during the year 1880-81 the following works have been published—viz., (1) A Manual for the Study of the Hungarian Language, (2) Alphabetical Catalogue of Finnish Literature, (3) Ancient Finnish Magic Runes, by E. Lönnrot, (4) concluding part of Lönnrot's Finnish-Swedish Dictionary (this extensive work was begun in 1865), (5) Examination of the Language of Russian Karelia, (6) Shakspeare's Romeo and Juliet, translated by R. Kajander, (7) Greek Grammar by J. Lindequist. The following works are in the press, or are being prepared for publication—viz., (1) Finnish-Latin Dictionary, (2) the society's Annual, (3) English-Finnish Dictionary, (4) Finnish-German Dictionary, (5) a new edition of Kanteletar, (6) General History of Literature, &c. Prizes have been adjudged to the best translated and original works during the year—among others, to M. Kant for his original drama Murtovarkans ("The Burglary"), and to M. Krohn for the first part of a work, not yet published, entitled A History of Finnish Literature. The expenditure of the society during the year has amounted to 33,819 marks, and the revenue 25,762 marks; but there is still a considerable surplus of funds on hand.

It has been suggested by Prof. Y. Koskinen president of the society, that a congress should be held on the occasion of the jubilee, at which the most important questions relating to Finnish philology, literature, grammar, ethnography, &c., should be discussed. This suggestion has been adopted, and a committee has been formed for the purpose of inviting papers from eminent Finnologists on the various subjects enumerated. The reading of these papers will be followed by the discussion of questions naturally suggested by them. The first day will be devoted to Finnish philology, mythology, and poetry; the second to Finnish grammar and versification; and the third to Finnish ethnography, history, and archaeology. If any foreign scholar desires to read a paper, or take part in the discussions, his remarks will be interpreted in the Finnish language. All the papers and discussions will be printed, and issued as a special supplement to the society's periodical, Suomi. An outline report of the jubilee proceedings will be subsequently published in the French language.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- EMILE-SOLDI. Les Arts méconnus; les nouveaux Musées du Trocadéro. Paris: Leroux. 25 fr.
FEUILLET, O. Histoire d'une Parisienne. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
FISCHER, L. v. Kunstdenkmäler d. Mittelalters. Baukunst. 2. Serie. 1. Lfg. Aachen: Cramer. 2 M. 80 Pf.
HEERBT, W. Goethe in Wetzlar 1772. Gotha: Perthes. 5 M.
MINERVINI, G. Terrecotte del Museo Campano. Fasc. 7. Napoli: Detken & Rocholl.
PIEZMAIER, A. Die japanischen Werke aus den Sammlungen der Häuser. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 4 M.
TROTTIER, P. Our Mission to the Court of Morocco in 1880. Edinburgh: Douglas. 24s.

THEOLOGY.

- RABINOVITZ, R. Variae lectiones in Mischnam et in Talmud Babylonicum. Pars II. Tract. Baba Bathra, Masechet: Roenthal. 9 M.

SINGER, S. Onkelos u. das Verhältniss seines Targums zur Halacha. Frankfurt-a-M.: Kauffmann. 1 M. 20 Pf.

HISTORY.

- BOISLISSE, A. M. de. Mémoires des Intendants sur l'Etat des Généralités dressés pour l'Instruction du Duc de Bourgogne. T. 1. Mémoire de la Généralité de Paris. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 12 fr.
- COU, E. De quelques Inscriptions relatives à l'Administration de Diocletien. Paris: Thorin. 5 fr.
- GAUENHAOFEN, O. Geschichte d. 1. schlesischen Kriege nach archival. Quellen. 1. Bd. Bis zum Abkommen v. Klein-Schnellendorf. Gotha: Perthes. 10 M.
- MAGNIENVILLE, R. de. Le Maréchal d'Humières et le Gouvernement de Compiègne, 1648-51. Paris: Plon. 6 fr.
- MAISEL, J. Jules César en Gaule. T. 3. Blocus d'Alesia. Paris: Firmin-Didot.
- PALLAIN, G. Correspondance inédite du Prince de Talleyrand et du Roi Louis XVIII. pendant le Congrès de Vienne. Paris: Plon. 9 fr.
- RAUNIG, E. Chansonnier historique du XVIII^e siècle. 2^e Partie. Le Règne de Louis XV. Paris: Quantin. 10 fr.
- SAIGES, G. Les Juifs du Languedoc antérieurement au XIV^e siècle. Paris: Picard. 15 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- DUNCAN, P. M., and W. P. SLADEN. Memoir of the Echinodermata of the Arctic Sea to the West of Greenland. Van Voorst. 10s. 6d.
- PFEIDERER, E. Kantischer Kriticismus u. englische Philosophie. Halle: Pfeffer. 2 M. 50 Pf.
- STINDACHNER, F. Beiträge zur Kenntnis der Flussische Südamerikas. II. 5 M. Ichthyologische Beiträge. 2 M. 60 Pf. Wien: Gerold's Sohn.
- STAUENMILLER, L. Grundriss der Logik od. der Lehre vom wissenschaftl. Denken. Leipzig: Böhme. 2 M. 80 Pf.
- WERNER, K. Kant in Italien. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 4 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BISCHOPP, F. Der Coniunctiv bei Chrestien. Halle: Niemeyer. 3 M. 60 Pf.
- FRANK, K. De hymni in Cicerone Homerici compositione, dictione, setate. Kiel: Lipsius & Tischer. 1 M.
- HEISEMANN, K. Ueb. das Hrabianische Glossar. Halle: Niemeyer. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- HEYDEMANN, K. Satyr- u. Bakchennamen. Halle: Niemeyer. 3 M.
- KIMKE, Diodorus Siculus u. die römische Annalistik. Königsberg: Lowack. 2 M.
- LAVER, K. Kritisch-exegeseische Beiträge zu Vergils 6. u. 10. Eclogie, sowie zum 1. Buche der Georgica. Lyck: Wiebe. 1 M.
- MAYER, P. Untersuchung ü. die Frage der Echtheit d. Briefwechsels Cicero ad Brutum sowie vom historischen als vom sprachlichen Gesichtspunkt aus. Stuttgart: Knapp. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- SACHAU, E. Ueb. die Lage v. Tigranokerta. Berlin: Dümmler. 5 M.
- STEINHAL, H. Abriss der Sprachwissenschaft. 1. Th. Die Sprache im Allgemeinen. 2. Abt. Berlin: Dümmler. 1 M. 50 Pf.
- TAMMPE, E. Grammatische Untersuchungen ü. die Sprache der Bräutis. München: Ackermann. 4 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE MORALITY OF THE PROFESSION OF LETTERS.

Paris: April 27, 1881.

I have just seen the ACADEMY of April 9. Your critic has a kind appreciation of my style; but I must suppose him to exaggerate, for I seem to have failed to convey my meaning. I do not know whether £500 (or only £300, as people used to say) be the necessary substructure of decent literary performance. It is a poor account of us if it be so. It is not so in other arts; witness, for instance, Millet. Journey work is done in all the provinces of human labour; and in all it is useful, if it is done well. A man is a sub-lieutenant before he is a general; and many remain subalterns till their death. I neither deny the existence nor am ignorant of the manners of the modern Grub Street. But it is my contention that, even there, a man may do some service to the world, and himself learn patience, precision, and courage in his profession. He may never rise higher; what then? The vast majority of mankind never rise. In the midst of clamant wants, and busy with entirely mechanical and unprogressive toils, they must end their lives as they began them. Yet if these people neglect their dull and ill-paid duties, we can tax them roundly. The literary man, even in Grub Street, has a very different hope before him; he can say, or he can leave unsaid; he has a career, if it be only of a kind; he has an influence, although it be anonymous. Your critic speaks of my optimism. I am optimistic enough to hope, or at least pray, for a time when a man shall do whatever his hand findeth to do with his full energy; and, instead of complaining that it is his "worst work," shall take effectual steps to make of it his best.

Times change, and we continue to expect a better. The conscience of the literary profession has surely grown more scrupulous since the days of the Restoration; and surely it may grow more scrupulous still. And your critic will hardly persuade me that the worst of current work is written by the poorest men. He has fully persuaded me, however, of one thing—that the influence of literature lies chiefly in single and striking expressions, since not even a critic seems able to observe both the end and the beginning of an article so short as mine.

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

ASSONANCE.

Trieste: April 25, 1881.

The Pall Mall Budget, in a rather "knagging" and creaking notice of Mr. J. J. Aubertin's last study of Camoens (Seventy Sonnets), raises a question worth discussing. The reviewer blames such lines as

"While fortune was disposed to cheer my sight
With hope some consolation here to find,"

and

"In blossom thou wast snatched, but newly grown,

Ah! Dom Antonio, by too harsh a blow," &c.

His reason for blaming the words in italics is that they are "assonants;" his authority is Coleridge, who held such assonance "peculiarly distressing to the ear;" and his conclusion is that "rhymes should vary as much as possible in sound."

All know that Coleridge wrote musical verse, but his ear, in popular phrase, was not everybody's. To my ear the assonance, used and not abused, adds to pleasure; it acts ritornelle, it binds the lines, compacting the whole, and it preserves the pitch. The dictum concerning the extreme variety of rhyme-tone apparently arises from what induced English sonnetteers to affect a misplaced terminal distich, the sluggishness of the Northern ear, which expects a thump as with the national steam-hammer. This coda, by-the-way, is well treated by Mr. Aubertin in his Dedicatory Letter.

It would be interesting to know if the Pall Mall critic expresses, on the subject of "assonance," his own feeling or that of the general. I hope not the latter. The verdict would add to the difficulty of translation, already hard enough—

"Sith rhyme in English hath such scarcity."

R. F. BURTON.

PROF. NICHOL'S DECASYLLABIC LINES.

London Institution: May 3, 1881.

Mr. Saintsbury says that the two following lines in Prof. Nichol's new volume are not decasyllabic:—

"Thou front and emblem of the world's toil,"

and

"Stets fest und treu 'o'erwhelm'ing vain 'Gloire.'"

I believe that there be parts of this island where the two-syllable Old-English word woruld (compounded of the stems of wer and aldr) has not degenerated into wor(l)d, nor the two-syllable word o'er into au(r). And, Southron myself, I say for Prof. Nichol—

Πελοποννησιαστὶ λαλεῖντες·

Δωρίσδεν δ' ἔξεστι, δοκῶ, τοῖς Δωριέεσσιν —especially when Dorising is simply pronouncing rightly.

EDWARD B. NICHOLSON.

A LITTLE-KNOWN BYRON LETTER.

Bath Literary Institute: April 27, 1881.

The original of the letter of Lord Byron published in your last issue (ACADEMY, No. 468) is in my possession, and not in the hands of an Italian gentleman, as there implied. I shall be happy to show it to anyone interested.

B. J. BAKER.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- MONDAY, May 9, 5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.
- 7.30 p.m. Aristotelian: "The English School (Hardy, Mill, &c.)," by Mr. W. A. Casson.
- 8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture III., "The Art of Lace-Making," by Mr. Alan S. Cole.
- 8.30 p.m. Geographical: "A Journey among the Great Andes of the Equator," by Mr. Edward Whymper.
- TUESDAY, May 10, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Non-Metallic Elements," by Prof. Dewar.
- 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Trade Relations between Great Britain and her Dependencies," by Mr. W. Westgarth.
- 8 p.m. Anthropological Institute: "Some Naga Skulls," by Prof. G. Dancer Thane; "The Wild Tribes of the Naga Hills," by Col. R. G. Woodthorpe.
- 8 p.m. Photographic.
- 8 p.m. Institution of Civil Engineers: "Torpedo Boats and Light Yachts for High-Speed Steam Navigation," by Mr. J. L. Thornycroft.
- WEDNESDAY, May 11, 5 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Manufacture of Glass for Decorative Purposes," by Mr. H. J. Powell.
- 8 p.m. Geological.
- 8 p.m. Microscopical.
- THURSDAY, May 12, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Magnetism," by Prof. Tyndall.
- 4.30 p.m. Royal.
- 8 p.m. Mathematical: "Note on the Co-ordinates of a Tangent Line to the Curve of Intersection of Two Quadrics," by Mr. W. R. W. Roberts; "Some Solutions of the '15 School-girl' Problem," by Mr. E. Osypmael; "Notes on Ptolemy's Theorem," by Mr. O. W. Merrifield; "Algebraical Notes," by Mr. O. Hudson; "The Summation of Certain Hypergeometric Series," by the Rev. T. A. Terry.
- 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Recent Progress in the Manufacture and Applications of Steel," by Prof. A. K. Huntington.
- 8 p.m. Telegraph Engineers.
- 8 p.m. Society for the Fine Arts: "Art Exhibitions," by Dr. Frensd.
- 8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
- FRIDAY, May 13, 5 p.m. London Institution: "James Russell Lowell," by the Rev. H. R. Haweis.
- 8 p.m. Quakers.
- 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Burmah," by Gen. Sir Arthur Phayre.
- 8 p.m. New Shakespeare: "The Worth of the First Quarto of Hamlet as an Acting Play," by Mr. F. J. Furnivall.
- 8 p.m. Folk-Lore: "The Superstitions of Pepys and his Times," and "A Note on English Fairies," by Mr. H. B. Wheatley.
- 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Mental Images and Vision," by Mr. F. Galton.
- SATURDAY, May 14, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Scotland's Part in English Literature," by Prof. H. Morley.
- 3 p.m. Physical: "Electric Absorption," by Prof. H. A. Rowland and Mr. E. H. Nichols.

SCIENCE.

The Old Testament in the Jewish Church: Twelve Lectures on Biblical Criticism. By W. Robertson Smith. (Edinburgh: A. & C. Black.)

THE trial of progressive Biblical science in the person of Prof. Robertson Smith, whatever its result may be to the Free Church Aberdeen College, can hardly be regretted in view of the strengthened position of Biblical science at the bar of public opinion. It is not too much to say that the possibility of a free and yet religious handling of the Biblical texts has been established by the various defences of Prof. Robertson Smith, as it had not been established before. The last, and perhaps the most important, of these defences consists of the twelve lectures now laid before the public, which were originally delivered to very large audiences in Edinburgh and Glasgow in the early part of this year. To have accomplished the composition, the delivery, and the printing of such a delicate and complicated investigation within so short a time is a feat which more than anything else shows the fullness of learning and the fertility of resource of this highly cultured Biblical scholar. It is still more to his credit that he should have preserved so moderate and "objective" a tone; some of his fellow-students will even be disappointed for a moment at the small amount of detailed "higher criticism" which this volume contains. Only, indeed, for a moment. It was indispensable to lay a firm foundation for a study so new in England and Scotland as that of Old Testament criticism, and that could best be done by an historical conspectus of primary facts and presuppositions.

Passing over the two opening lectures, which define the author's position towards the Bible and towards the traditional criticism and exegesis, we may dwell for a moment on the third lecture, concerned as it is with one of the most important chapters of Biblical science—the activity of the Scribes or Scribes. It is shown that the object of the Scribes was not to discover the simple, natural meaning of the Scriptures, but to reconcile the oral tradition and the written law, so that the Talmudic exegesis, which has directly or indirectly influenced all the later schools except the most modern, is fundamentally opposed to sound philology; and, further, that the Talmudic text handed down to us is not based on a critical recension, but most probably on a single standard MS. not older than the third century B.C. The fourth lecture is chiefly important from its use of the Septuagint as a witness to the growth-theory rendered necessary by many parts of the Old Testament literature. The author's moderation is shown by his resting in the generally received, but far from indisputable, view that the last twenty-seven chapters of Isaiah form a single prophecy. The argument is continued in the fifth lecture, which also deals with the Jewish view of revelation and with the Apocrypha. The author, like the Evangelical school in general, finds "a distinct line of demarcation" between the canonical writings and the Apocrypha. Lectures vi. and vii. are excellent summaries relative to the history of the Canon and the Book of Psalms. More important is the eighth, on "The Traditional Theory of the Old Testament History." It exhibits the outlines of the popular worship of the Israelites, as sketched in the Books of Kings and the contemporary prophets, but finds a remarkable contrast between this popular worship and the system of the Pentateuch. The same subject is pursued in lectures ix. and x., with results which "have a much larger interest than the question of the date of the Pentateuch." Lecture xi. deals with the Pentateuch, especially the earlier legislation; lecture xii. with the Deuteronomic Code and the Levitical Law, and also with the predecessor of the latter—the Torah of Ezekiel. There is, perhaps, nothing more important in the whole volume than the clear and convincing explanation of the "legal fictions" of the so-called Mosaic Code (pp. 384–87). The twelfth and last lecture closes somewhat abruptly with an emphatic assertion of the gain accruing to faith from the distinction "between these quasi-historical precedents, which were meant to be taken only as laws, and the actual history, which was meant to be taken literally" (p. 387).

To a scholar the most interesting part of the book will be the two concluding lectures (probably no one at home is so well acquainted with the Pentateuch legislation as Prof. Smith), and the notes at the end. It is refreshing to meet at last with an English scholar who is not afraid to speak out on the condition of the Old Testament text and the necessity of conjectural (but not arbitrary) emendation. The value of the Septuagint for the latter purpose is strikingly shown (after Wellhausen) on 1 Kings viii. 12, 13 (pp. 403–5). Among the many other interesting details of the notes, the student will observe the explanation of Shaddai as "he who pours forth rain" (pp. 423, 424); of the "thank-offering of heaven," Amos iv. 5 (p. 434); of kappōr, "to atone" (p. 438); and of the prohibition of seething a kid in its mother's milk (p. 438); also the illustration of the law of the Gēr, or protected stranger, from the author's travels in Arabia (p. 434); beside many suggestive observations on passages in the Pentateuch.

The theological tinge which these lectures have received was, no doubt, desirable under the circumstances. It would be a pity, however, if anyone who preferred a via media should be repelled from the study of the work by its ultra-Protestant tendencies; a pity, moreover, were it to be demanded of every Old Testament scholar that he should be always holding up his theological flag. On special occasions, frankness like that of Prof. Robertson Smith is a quality to be much prized; but no study can progress without a certain amount of assumption on points not directly at issue. It is best, to use the words of our author, "to discuss historical questions by purely historical methods, without allowing theological questions to come in till the historical analysis is complete."

T. K. CHEYNE.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES.

MR. RHYNS DAVIDS' second lecture was on the Buddhist doctrine of transmigration.

The lecturer was careful to point out the difference between the doctrine of "transmigration of souls" as held by the Hindus, Greeks, Romans, &c., and that taught by Buddha. The great Hindu reformer wiped out from the creed of his followers all belief in ātma, or soul, in the place of which he substituted another and altogether different abstraction, namely, karma—i.e., the moral quality of actions (good or evil). The Buddhists believe in the continuity of karma, so that man has no beginning, and, with the exception of the saints, or arahats, no ending. Buddha formulated the doctrine that what a man sows that will he reap—

"Our deeds follow us from afar,
And what we have been makes us what we are."

The karma of each individual was deemed capable of being transmuted; death and re-birth, according to the Buddhists, were simultaneous states of existence. At death a new being was produced, not identical and yet not different, "not the same, and not another;" the second being was by reason of the first. That which caused the future re-birth at death was desire, the cleaving to existence.

The lecturer drew attention to the fact that the Vedas make no mention of transmigration in any form. The germs of the belief appear in the Upanishads, and were probably derived from the older animism of the non-Aryans of India. The Manichaeans held curiously similar and curiously dissimilar views. The Greek belief on this point was then referred to; but Mr. Davids considered that the mode in which it found expression in Plato and Pythagoras was not national, but philosophic. In the former writer there were some expressions that seemed much like the Buddhist teaching of tanha, or desire. There were also Irish legends tending to show popular belief in transmigration. Such passages as "Did this man sin, or his parents?" seemed to suggest that the Jews may have held views similar to the Buddhists with respect to karma.

With the non-belief in the soul there sprang up among the early Buddhists a thorough contempt for future existence. The question as to its possibility implied the holding of heretical notions. Man's best interests were in this life—his chief concern was with his present duties and obligations. There was, indeed, a higher state of existence than a re-birth in heaven to be attained here upon earth by those who entered upon the Noble Path—who, by the extinction of all lusts and passions, became "dead unto sin," and arrived at the perfect state of an arahat, or saint. This condition of a perfect life on earth is called Nirvāna. For these saints, in whom all desire for future existence had gone out, there was no new birth. For all else there was the endless round of re-birth in heaven, purgatory, or on earth, as men or animals.

Mr. Rhys Davids stated that, while re-birth in the animal life is held by later Buddhists, it is scarcely ever referred to in the Pitakas. But we think the lecturer's statement somewhat too positive, and that it is only true so far as the printed texts are concerned. We are inclined to believe that many passages might be found in the unedited Pitaka texts proving that the re-birth of man as an animal is a fundamental tenet of ancient Buddhism. In the Mahāśāhanāda sūtra of the Majjhima Nikāya mention is made of the pañca gatiyo, or five modes of re-birth, one of which is re-birth in the womb of an animal. Buddha is represented as saying that he knows this re-birth, the path, and the steps to it.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

IT was announced in two recent issues of the ACADEMY that, owing to failing health, Mr. R. H. Major had retired, on full pension, from the Keepership of the Department of Maps and Charts in the British Museum, which he had held since 1844; and that for the same reason he had sent in his resignation of the office of hon. secretary to the Royal Geographical Society, the duties of which, in conjunction with his colleague, Mr. Clements R. Markham, he has discharged for many years with unswerving assiduity. We have now the pleasure of supplementing the latter announcement by a piece of news which we doubt not will greatly gratify Mr. Major's many friends and admirers. On receiving his letter of resignation, the Council of the society, after stating that there was but one feeling of regret for the cause which rendered such a step necessary, requested their president, Lord Aberdare, to express to Mr. Major their hope that he would still preserve his connexion with the society by accepting the office of vice-president, for which honour he is to be proposed at the approaching annual meeting. The gracious manner in which this intimation was conveyed does infinite credit to the noble president and the Council of the society; and we doubt not that Mr. Major will be as proud of the honour for which they have spontaneously and unanimously elected him as he may well be of the decorations conferred upon him for his valuable contributions to geographical science and literature by several of the Sovereigns of Europe. Mr. Major, who has been wintering at Algiers, proposes to leave that place on the 12th inst., and is expected to arrive in London on the 21st.

CAPT. W. GILL, R.E., has returned to England from the East, having been refused permission to visit Merv. He accomplished the journey from Tiflis to London in eight days, travelling day and night without stopping, and on his return found awaiting him on his study table the gold medal of the French Geographical Society.

THE other medals of the French Society have been awarded as follows:—The grand gold medal to Major Serpa Pinto; and the four remaining ordinary gold medals to M. Villemin, for two cartographical works; to J. Zweifel, for his journey to the sources of the Niger; to M. François P. Moreno, for his travels in Patagonia; and to Mr. B. Leigh Smith, for his Arctic voyages in the years 1871, 1873, and 1880. Englishmen thus obtained two out of six.

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Times announces by telegraph the arrival at Ichang on March 14 of Messrs. Soltan and Stevenson, of the China Inland Mission, who left Bhamo last November. This is the first instance of a European accomplishing the overland journey from Burmah to China—the same journey which Capt. Gill and others have accomplished the reverse way.

THE new number of the Monthly Record of Geography opens with Mr. Jas. Stewart's paper on Lake Nyassa and the water-route to the lake region of Africa, which is illustrated by a map of the north end of the lake in continuation and correction of one formerly supplied by the same author. Col. H. C. B. Tanner's notes on the Chugani and neighbouring tribes of Kafiristan follow, supplemented by the very interesting discussion in which Col. Yule and Sir H. Rawlinson took a leading part. The map of Kafiristan illustrating this paper is the best and most accurate extant. Under the title of "Dr. Junker's Journey in the Nyam Nyam Country" we find some extracts of recent letters from that well-known Russian traveller. Among the geographical notes are a few further particulars respecting the late Capt. Phipson-Wybrants' ill-starred expedition to Umzila's country in South-east Africa, and an account of a journey made by a missionary party from Gubuluwayo, in Matabele-land, to the same region. The departure from Loanda is announced of Dr. Pogge and Lieut. Wissmann, who are about to visit the Mwata Yanyo's capital in Central Africa. The fruits of much geographical research on the part of the well-known missionary traveller, the Abbé Desgodins, are given under the heads of the Eastern Frontier of Tibet and the Sanpo of Tibet, the latter of which shows how untenable is Mr. R. Gordon's newly revived theory that the Sanpo is the upper course of the Irawady.

INTELLIGENCE down to February 15 respecting Dr. Gouldsbury's expedition, to which we referred on April 23, reached Bathurst at the end of March. The party were then in good health (with the exception of some of the carriers, who had been sent back), and had arrived at Bady, two hundred miles from Bathurst, and about a hundred and twenty miles south-east of Yabutenda. It is important to learn that they had found the water-route easily practicable, although it was the dry season; provisions, however, were difficult to obtain, but the chiefs all showed a friendly disposition, and were apparently desirous of entering into arrangements for opening roads. The expedition intended to follow the Gambia into the territory of Molah, so as to avoid the hostile tribes of the north bank, who are at present engaged in a war among themselves. It is thought probable that the friendly reception of the party is due to the absence of the large military escort which usually accompanies similar French expeditions, and has a bad effect on the natives. Favourable news has also reached Sierra Leone, as messengers, who were sent in January to the Futa Jallon highlands, have returned with a reply from the king, expressing his willingness to receive white men. On their return journey these messengers were accompanied by 1,300 of the king's men, bearing gold, ivory, beeswax, and other produce for sale at Sierra Leone.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC missionary expedition has just left England for Borneo.

H.M.S. Alert, formerly commanded by Sir George Nares, has lately been for some little time in Sydney Harbour, but was expected to resume her voyage in April in order to survey Torres Strait and the various passages used by vessels between it and the Dutch islands of the Eastern Archipelago. This duty will probably occupy some two years in completion.

WE have received from Messrs. Hachette and Co., of Paris and London, a Map of Tunis and Eastern Algeria. It brings out clearly enough the principal geographical points of present interest—the comparatively small area of the Regency of Tunis; its advantages over the coast-line of Algiers in the possession of natural harbours; and the mountainous character of the actual scene of operations.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Discovery of "Feather-ore" in the Isle of Man.—To the last part of the Transactions of the Royal Geological Society of Cornwall Mr. Warington Smyth, the Crown Inspector of Mines, contributes an interesting description of the occurrence of Plumosite, or Feather-ore, in the Foxdale Mine, Isle of Man. This mine is well known as yielding rich argentiferous lead-ores, but it had not been known to contain any antimonial minerals until the recent discovery of plumosite, which is a double sulphide of lead and antimony. Plumosite is occasionally found in the Hartz, and is there called, from its capillary form, Federerz; but in this country it is a mineral of exceeding rarity. At Foxdale it presents the usual appearance of extremely delicate fibres matted together, so as to look almost like a tuft of dark cotton-wool. Under the microscope, however, it is seen to be a reticulation of prismatic crystals of brilliant metallic lustre. It is curious that other antimonial minerals have not been found in association with the plumosite of the Isle of Man.

It is proposed to celebrate, by a gathering of scientific men, the opening of the Meteorological Observatory upon the summit of the Pic du Midi in the Pyrenees (9,734 feet). This observatory, in substitution for the one somewhat lower down the mountain on the Col du Sencours, has been established by the Société Ramond, at the instigation of its president, Gen. de Nansouty. A proposal is now under consideration to transfer it to the State for the sum of 20,000 frs. (£800). The ceremony of inauguration is fixed for the month of August. Perhaps the successful accomplishment of this undertaking will give fresh stimulus to the Scotch project of erecting a similar observatory upon the summit of Ben Nevis, the highest point in Great Britain (4,406 feet).

A SERIES of weekly lectures, in continuation of those delivered last year, will be given in the lecture-room in the gardens of the Zoological Society, commencing on June 16. The names of the lecturers include Profs. Flower, Miyart, and W. K. Parker, Mr. P. L. Selater, Mr. W. A. Forbes, and Mr. J. E. Harting. The hour of delivery is five p.m., and the lectures will be free to all visitors to the gardens.

DR. CARTER BLAKE, late Lecturer on Comparative Anatomy and Zoology at the Westminster Hospital, will deliver during the month of May four lectures on fossil mammalia, birds, and reptiles at the Natural History Department of the British Museum, Cromwell Road, South Kensington.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.—(Monday, April 25.)

ROBERT N. CUST, ESQ., Hon. Secretary, in the Chair.—The Rev. S. W. Koeker read a paper entitled "Tartar or Turk?" in the first portion of which he discussed the question whether "Tartar" or "Tatar" was the correct and original spelling of this word, and brought forward a considerable amount of evidence in favour of the first form, its meaning being that of "wanderer." The second form, he suggested, was probably due to Arab influence, which changed "Mongol" into "Mogol." The two names "Tartar" and "Turk" he held to be, linguistically, of common origin, and appellations merely, rather than the proper names of distinct tribes.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—(Tuesday, April 26.)

PROF. W. H. FLOWER, F.R.S., V.-P., in the Chair.—Mr. J. E. Price exhibited a collection of bones discovered by himself and Mr. Hilton Price at the Roman villa at Brading, Isle of Wight. The bones had been examined by Prof. Flower, who reported that they were all in much the same state of preservation, and probably all contemporaneous. They consisted of—(1) Man: fragments probably of one and the same skeleton. From the condition of the bones it is certain that the individual was adult, and probably of middle age and about the average stature. (2) Dog: numerous remains of at least three individuals, all of nearly the same age and size, not more than half-grown, having only the milk teeth in place. (3) Ox: young. (4) Horse: one incisor tooth.—Mr. A. L. Lewis read a paper on "Some Archaic Structures in Somersetshire and Dorsetshire." The author, in speaking of the great stone circles at Stanton Drew, near Bristol, mentioned the elaborate astronomical theories which had been propounded concerning them by antiquaries of the last century, and said that, while he had no belief in them, he thought that the larger stone circles, of which this group was a specimen, had been used as places for solar worship. The paper was illustrated by the exhibition of plan, model, and some worked flints, &c., found by the author at some of the monuments mentioned by him.—Mr. G. M. Atkinson read a paper on a "New Instrument for determining the Facial Angle."—The Rev. W. S. Caiger read a paper on Thomas of Aquinum and anthropology.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—(Thursday, April 23.)

EDWIN FRESHFIELD, ESQ., V.-P., in the Chair.—Mr. C. R. B. King exhibited some fragments of stone, forming part of the fourteenth-century architectural work in the painted chamber at Westminster, which still retained traces of colouring and gilding.—Mr. J. H. Cooke contributed an account of a Romano-British cemetery at Ryeham Fields, near Berkeley, which is mentioned in Smyth's MS. account of the Berkeley family, written in 1618. Instances of cremation and unburial occur, as well as interments of the entire corpse. The coins found were of the periods of Constantine and Allectus.—Mr. Loftus Brock read a paper upon the discovery of mediæval and Roman remains beneath the site of Leadenhall Market. The mediæval arches were built in pits, dug through Roman débris which was the result of a fire about fifteen feet below the present surface of the ground. Roman walls were found of great thickness, composed of ragstone and layers of tiles alternately, like the walls found at the Tower. Mr. Brock exhibited a carefully drawn plan of the discoveries, but at present it was not possible to decide the purpose of the building of which they formed a part.

SOCIETY OF BIBLICAL ARCHAEOLOGY.—(Tuesday, May 3.)

SAMUEL BIRCH, ESQ., D.C.L., LL.D., President, in the Chair.—The President announced that, from information sent to him by a correspondent, he was able to make some remarks on one of the newly discovered pyramids of Sakkarah. The hieroglyphs are portions of religious inscriptions; perhaps, as has been suggested, portions of religious formulas older than the so-called Ritual, or Book of the Dead. In this respect they have a certain resemblance to the formulas found on the early rectangular coffins of the Sixth and subsequent Dynasties, which have chapters of the Ritual intermingled with other prayers and adorations. The inscriptions of the Pyramid of Ramei, the Apappus or Aphobis of the Fifth Dynasty, have this character, and are, to a great extent, difficult to translate. They have no historical value, though they are of great mythological importance, as in them constant allusion is made to the myth of Osiris; and the name of the deceased king, whenever mentioned, is preceded by the name of that god. A considerable portion of the text refers to the goddess Nut, or Nutpe, to whom the prayer on the sarcophagus of Menkara is addressed; and this legend of Nut is much enlarged in the present texts. But the inscriptions demand considerable study, which the President stated he proposed to give to them.—A description of the pyramid and of the position of the inscriptions, sarcophagus, &c., was read by the Secretary.—Mr. Ernest de Bunsen read a paper on "The Date of Menes and the Date of Manetho." It was suggested that 4620 B.C. had been adopted in Hebrew chronology as the date of the Creation because it was the date (known to the compilers of the Septuagint from Manetho) of the accession of Menes, the first King of Egypt; and that 473 B.C. had been similarly taken for the foundation of Solomon's Temple because it was possibly the date of the birth of Gautama-Buddha.—A communication was read from Prof. A. Eisenlohr on "An Egyptian Historical Monument;" and also some notes by Prof. W. Wright upon four Phœnician inscriptions recently found in Cyprus by M. Pierides.

FINE ART.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

(First Notice.)

THE present exhibition, though it has suffered in an exceptional degree from want of tact and skill on the part of the hanging committee, betrays no sort of decline in the general character of the work which it contains. The younger painters of our school seem, indeed, to be steadily advancing in technical power and resource. There is still some lack of adventure shown in the very limited scheme of design in which they are for the most part content to exercise their craft; and it is a rarer thing here than it would be in Paris to find an artist risking a year's labour upon a canvas of extended scale and of doubtful market value. English painters soon settle down to some special form of artistic production. Their wild oats are quickly sown; and, when once they have established a reputation for a certain sort of commodity, they are prudently disinclined to tempt their fate again. This speedy concentration of artistic energy has certain advantages of its own; but its immediate effect is not to add to the interest or variety of the annual exhibition. It is not, of course, to be expected that every painter should discover an aptitude for the highest order of monumental design; and it is obviously better that he should paint cabbages with some approach to mastery than blunder on for ever in works of empty pretension and affected poetry. But it is possible even for the most moderately gifted artist to take to his cabbages too soon. Just as a writer who is destined to occupy himself with prose is none the worse for the verses made in his youth, so in the same way it will be all the better even for a painter of genre if he can bring to his modest labour a sense of style and a largeness of treatment derived from earlier experiments in a wider field. Our younger artists, it may be fairly urged, are too much disposed to deny themselves this season of preparation; nor is it wonderful that they should pass at once to the kind of work in which they feel they can excel when we consider the substantial rewards that lie within their reach. To counteract the force of this temptation there is need of some stronger encouragement than has yet been offered to them; and it is therefore highly gratifying to learn from the lips of the President that the Academy is at last to make a serious attempt to foster the practice of decorative painting in England.

Scarcely less important in the influence it is likely to exercise in raising the level of style in all branches of art is the promised establishment at Burlington House of a separate school for modelling. This is a subject that has often been insisted upon in these columns. The need of such a school is indeed so obvious that it seems, as Sir Frederick Leighton truly observed, almost wonderful that it should not have been organised long ago. Nor is the explanation that was offered for the delay quite worthy of a society which holds a national position. To aver that there were not enough students to justify the establishment of a separate class is only to say, in other words, that the claims of sculpture had been so completely neglected as almost entirely to stamp out all ambition to practise in this branch of art. It was, therefore, the more incumbent upon the Academy to initiate a reform in the defective system of their teaching; and it was surely a mistaken conception of duty which led them to defer the establishment of the school until a revival of interest in sculpture, brought about by other influences, had supplied them with the required number of pupils. Of the reality of this revival there can be no manner of doubt. The sculpture galleries this year are by no means the least interesting feature of the exhibition; and it is easy to perceive, from the evidences of several prominent examples, that their authors, deprived of the means of instruction at home, have sought inspiration from the contemporary sculptors of France. The figure of Cain (1488), by Mr. Thomas Stirling Lee, very clearly reveals the traces of this foreign influence. Mr. Lee is a student of the Academy, it is true; but the training and technical skill which he brings to his work have surely not been acquired in the schools at Burlington House. Mr. Thorneycroft's very remarkable figure of Teucer (1495) supplies another instance of wider opportunities of study than are afforded to English students. In the careful thoroughness of its modelling, as well as in the marked individuality of the style in which it is treated, there is evidence of an intelligent appreciation of what is best deserving attention both in ancient and modern work. The result is such as will be found fully to justify Mr. Thorneycroft's recent election as an Associate member of the Academy. A genuine sentiment of refinement is displayed in the attitude of the figure, and in the studious observation of Nature which has been brought to bear upon every detail of the composition. There is no trace in his work of the merely traditional acceptance of antique models which is found sufficient in the case of so many English sculptors. The nerveless grace of Gibson's art, perpetuated in the series of plaster models which he bequeathed to the Academy, may be regarded as the final note in a pedantic phase of the history of sculpture which dates from the criticism of Winckelmann and the practice of Canova. The artists of the French school, looking to the masters of the Renaissance no less than to the surviving records of the schools of Greece and Rome, have long ago shaken themselves free from this paralysing tradition; and it is a sign of promise for the future of sculpture in England that there should be found among us some few artists capable of understanding these larger possibilities of their craft. The equestrian group by Mr. Brock, already known by the plaster model exhibited last year, bears witness, in its different style, to the increasing resource and knowledge which English sculptors are beginning to acquire. About the beauty of the design there may be room for differences of opinion; but there can be no sort of doubt that the workmanship displays wide and accurate knowledge of form, as well as cultivated power in the management of the chosen material. These are qualities which serve as the enduring basis of every great achievement, and the Academy has done well to recognise their importance by the exceptional honour they have bestowed upon the work of Mr. Brock. In so far as it can be said to indicate a feeling of respect for the growing pretensions of sculpture, praise is equally due to the spirit which has prompted the purchase of Mr. Calder Marshall's marble figure. It was, perhaps, necessary to award some distinction to a titled representative of the art, and perhaps this was the best example that offered itself at the moment.

It will be necessary to return on a future occasion to examine several other of the exhibits in this class. My purpose in these prefatory remarks has been merely to direct attention to the increasing attractiveness of the sculpture in the Academy, which is this year more marked than at any period since Alfred Stevens sent his bronze group for the Wellington Monument. In the department of painting, the amount of work with any corresponding elevation of aim is perhaps more than usually small. The picture which seems to me to secure the most complete and satisfying effect of beauty is the Sappho of Mr. Alma-Tadema. The mode of Mr. Tadema's invention is so entirely individual that it would be difficult to define with any approach to precision the class to which his work belongs. On occasions when he has undertaken to treat the human form upon the scale of life, he has not always shown a preference for the highest type of beauty; nor do the characteristic excellences of his refined and delicate workmanship appear to full advantage in the covering of large surfaces of canvas. But there is a temptation to forget whatever limitations his art may own in the keen enjoyment which such a picture as the Sappho awakens. Here, at least, the wonderful resources of his brush are employed upon material which they can easily command. Mr. Tadema stands almost alone among artists who are fascinated by the beauty of antique life in the strong feeling for outward nature which he imports into his design. His colour, whether of flesh or costume, always lives in sunlight; and the forms that people the scenes of his invention take an added beauty from the charm of the landscape that surrounds them. There have been few artists of any time who have so skilfully combined this sentiment of landscape with the severe definition of form. The results of wide archaeological knowledge are, in his case, so lightly born that they mingle without any sense of conflict with the fruits of direct observation of Nature. Mr. Tadema's painting has always the note of absolute vitality. I speak now, not of individual forms or faces, but of the work as a whole, of the quality of the colouring, of the actual touches of the brush. In the extreme minuteness of much of his execution he contrives to preserve admirable breadth of light and shade, with an unimpaired strength and force in the local tints. There is a certain audacity in the manner of his invention which enables him to carry his regard for the vivid beauty of Nature into scenes and subjects that would, at first sight, seem to reject any kind of realistic treatment. The brilliant fairness of white marble, the intense blue of a sapphire sea or a southern sky—these are among the natural realities that would seem to have fixed themselves in his imagination. They have grown familiar in his work; but their appearance produces no sense of fatigue, for they are imaged for us with un-failing sympathy and power. In this respect the Sappho is perhaps the most characteristic, as it is certainly among the most complete, of Mr. Tadema's productions. The invention of the scene as a whole, the disposition of the figures, the choice of attitude and gesture, are in the highest degree representative of a style of art that has something more than the dignity of genre, with something less than the formality of purely ideal design, recalling for us the long-silent life of the past in language that has a familiar and homely accent, and preserving the vivid impression of Nature even in the most elaborate attempts to reconstruct a vanished civilisation.

J. COMYNS CARR.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

(First Notice.)

THE only reason why the absence of any work by Mr. Burne-Jones from this exhibition is not to be regretted is because the present display shows conclusively that Sir Coutts Lindsay, without the help of his great and unique power, can gather together such a fine collection of pictures by living artists as justifies the opening of the gallery at the same time (this year it happens on the same day) as the Royal Academy. Of Mr. Burne-Jones' followers, also, some of the most remarkable are to all effect absent. Mr. Strudwick sends nothing, Mr. Spencer Stanhope a small landscape only. The tradition of his manner and feeling is sustained only by Miss E. Pickering. One other strong individuality (that of Mr. Whistler, who, with Mr. Burne-Jones, is inseparable from the "idea" of the Grosvenor in its earlier years), has again asserted itself. No picture by this artist can be without that personal flavour which forms so large a part of the charm of art; and his portrait of Miss Alexander (113) would be welcome, for the artist's sake, if it were even less attractive than it is. While, indeed, we congratulate the artist on his re-appearance in oils, and gladly recognise unflinching power in manipulation and the management of colour, it is difficult to congratulate his subject. In this, as in many cases nowadays, the critic has a difficulty in characterising a portrait as it deserves for fear of being personal to the sitter. Flattery is objectionable in art, as elsewhere, but some portrait painters seem to find it impossible to tell the truth without being rude. Amateur work, another specialité of the Grosvenor, is well represented, Sir Coutts Lindsay displaying unusual sense of composition and much imagination in a very large picture from Dante, called The Boat of Charon (22). Virgil and Dante are standing on the shore from which Charon is sternly thrusting his boat—filled with its melancholy freight. The work is very unequal, and open to severe criticism in detail; but it would be unfair to expect from Sir Coutts Lindsay satisfactory treatment of a theme which perhaps Michelangelo, alone of all artists who ever lived, would have been quite competent to handle. With all its faults, it is noble in effort, and has sufficient sympathy with the spirit of the poet whom it illustrates to deserve respect. By Lady Lindsey, the Marchioness of Waterford, and other amateurs there is also much good work, which we must leave for the present.

Writing without having seen the exhibition of the Royal Academy, it is difficult to believe that either Mr. Millais or Mr. Alma-Tadema can have contributed to that exhibition anything more perfect in their several ways than the former's Sweetest Eyes were ever Seen (39) or the latter's Ave Caesar—Io Saturnalia (41). It is seldom that an artist is so justified in forestalling criticism by a title as Mr. Millais in this case. If there are still sweeter eyes yet unseen than those of this charming girl, with the basket of violets and sprigged jacket, there is a decided answer to Mr. Mallock's unsettling and unsettled question as to the worth of life. The artist would be much better employed in painting their possessor for us, and thus giving us another "joy for ever," than in showing the soot-like effect of a lady's skin seen through black crape, even though the lady be Mrs. Kate Perugini (68) and the imitative skill miraculous. Unless, however, there be degrees in miracles, the last epithet can be properly applied to one picture only in this exhibition, and that is Mr. Alma-Tadema's just mentioned. The scene is possibly the finding of Claudius, who has hidden himself in a temple for fear after the murder of Caligula. Pale as death he stands within the fold of a wonderfully painted purple curtain, which is being drawn aside against his will by a soldier, who is saluting him as Emperor. Although the soldier's back is turned, there is not wanting a touch of irony in his gesture. The mosaic floor is encumbered with a pile of the dead revellers. Outside surges a crowd of soldiers and others, one of whom, apparently a dancing girl, is pressing forward, and watching with mingled curiosity and delight the fear of the Emperor-elect. The play of rich colour, the complexity and fullness of the composition, the rendering of an uncountable number of distinct textures, the character of the figures and the variety and justness of their expression, make a picture which, small as it is, it would be impossible to describe fairly within the limits of this article. The first view of a picture, even though it be a long and a careful one, is not sufficient to justify the use of such unqualified praise as we are at present disposed to award to this wonderful little work. Mr. Alma-Tadema's other and still smaller work (40) is almost equally remarkable. It represents a lady, in a dress which contains a beautiful harmony of different reds, singing, with her full face turned to the spectator. The pose of the body and the curve of the open mouth suggest the flood of melody which is issuing from the lips. It is not every lady who looks charming while she sings, but this lady does; it is still rarer to find an artist who can draw a singing face, but Mr. Alma-Tadema can.

Another Academician, Mr. Watts, is also well represented here, especially by his splendid Wife of Pygmalion (58), whom we are glad to see again. His portraits include a fine head of the late Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe (51), and a likeness of Miss Venetia Bentinck (64), very peculiar but successful in colour. His design of the Spirit of Greek Poetry (55) reminds us, but not pleasantly, of Michelangelo. It is dangerous to dispute the drawing of so learned an artist, and perhaps the attitude is one which ought to recommend itself as appropriate to a spirit; but the figure is uncouth. Mr. Watts' strange design of Endymion (56), with his divine lover, her arched form poised above him like a cloudy crescent, and swathed with innumerable folds of fleecy drapery, is poetical in conception, but somewhat too obvious and intricate in its art. In his Arcadia (57) he has painted such a "nut-brown" maiden as to suggest that she generally dispenses with even the slight raiment which she carries. The figure is graceful, but scarcely more worthy of the artist than Reverie (52), a study in natural colours of the same face. Mr. Watts' landscape, Carrara from the Leaning Tower of Pisa (72), is more remarkable as a careful study of mountain form than as a picture.

Mr. W. B. Richmond sends a large variety of beautiful work, which fully sustains his reputation. In his portraits he has been happy in obtaining subjects which amply repay all the time and skill at his disposal; and in his one large imaginative design, Behold the Bridegroom Cometh (75), he has carefully carried out a fine and original conception. It is, however, inferior, both in vigour and beauty, to his Dance of Miriam of last year. The ten virgins are in a large marble hall, with a bath or water-tank in the centre. One foolish one is asleep, and another, alarmed, is waking her; others are seeking for their lamps, or stretching to recover them from the places where they have left them. The wise are, of course, prepared, and one is worshipping at an altar on which a flame is burning. The time is early morning; and the white pillared hall filled with cool gray light is an admirable relief for the drapery of delicate tints with which the virgins are clothed. The whole scene is managed with much skill; but the figures, separately, are not remarkable for their grace, and the attitudes of those of the foolish virgins who are alive to the urgency of the occasion are deficient in energy and sense of fear. Mr. Richmond has, however, never shown his peculiar talent for portrait painting to greater advantage. The sweet refined face of H.R.H. the Princess Louise (50) he has treated with as much sympathy as the more magnificent beauty of The Hon. Mrs. Lyulph Stanley (26); while his tender appreciation of children is shown in his dear little Miss Edith Kennedy (59) in her white frock. He has also been fortunate in obtaining a sitter of such rare, rich, and intellectual beauty as the lady represented in (60) A Sketch and (139) A Portrait. Nor are his portraits of men less deserving of notice. His Bishop of Salisbury (146) is fine in character and colour; while his George Howard, Esq., M.P., and artist (71), is marvellously natural, easy, and happy in expression.

In portraits it will be seen that this exhibition is unusually strong; and beside those we have mentioned there are others deserving special attention, with some of which it will be convenient to conclude our first notice. Mr. Holman Hunt sends a portrait of Professor Owen (44), painted with his usual care, and even more than his usual glare. There can be no mistaking the wonderful face, rendered with such extraordinary force, precision, and polish that it seems cut out of red marble, with agates for eyes and spun glass for hair. It is difficult to praise too highly the care and vigour and technical skill of this work; but it is not pleasing, and it shows us only part of the man—viz., his searching, scientific genius, and this in such a blaze of "accidents" in the way of strong light, red robes, and reflections that the eye cannot dwell upon it peacefully. No part of this aggressive picture is more beautiful than the hands, which, as samples of "realistic" flesh-painting, could scarcely be excelled; they look, however, younger than the face. A very strong contrast to this too forcible work is Mr. Herkomer's portrait of Professor Ruskin (41), which does not err on the side of strength. It is gentle almost to weakness, sweet almost to insipidity, and shows little of that firm grasp of character which is so conspicuous in the same artist's portraits of Tennyson and Wagner. It gives us Mr. Ruskin's purity without his passion.

Of other portraits, Mr. Gregory's Edith Maude, Daughter of Charles J. Galloway, Esq. (125), is conspicuous for its natural ease and dexterous painting of flesh and satin dress; while

Mr. Poynter's sketch of The Lady Wenlock (74) pleases both by the graceful drawing of the figure and its perfect technical skill. Mr. John Collier sends portraits of Mrs. Alma-Tadema (11), Mr. Walter Pollock (12), and Lady Laurence (70), all good examples of his unaffected style; and his wife a very charming picture of Alice, Daughter of Frederick Pollock, Esq. (35), a sturdy, unsophisticated young lady in a wonderful frock, with violets and marsh-marigolds stuck in the broad blue sash. Sir Frederick Leighton's portrait of Mrs. Algernon Sartoris (89) is, of course, full of delicate harmonies of colour, but the complexion looks artificial. The rest we must leave till next week. COSMO MONKHOUSE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. ALMA-TADEMA, R.A., took the chair at the annual dinner of the Hogarth Club, which took place at the "Criterion" on Thursday, the 28th inst. Among the numerous members, beside the President, who attended, were Messrs. A. C. Gow, A.R.A., Hamilton Macallum, and Seymour Lucas. The French artist, M. Philipoteaux, and Mr. G. A. Storey, R.A., were among the more distinguished guests. The voice of Mr. Maybrick and the violoncello of M. Libotton contributed much to the pleasure of the evening. The arrangements for the removal of the club to Albemarle Street are nearly complete.

THE St. Stephen's Arts Society, which will open an exhibition next month, starts under the auspices of a very good committee. It includes the names of Lord Bury, Mr. H. S. Marks, R.A., Mr. George Augustus Sala, Mr. E. W. Godwin, Sir W. Drake, Sir Herbert Maxwell, Mr. Severn, and others.

MESSRS. JAMES R. OSGOOD AND CO. have issued a prospectus of a descriptive and pictorial atlas of the Cesnola collection of Cypriote antiquities, now preserved in the Metropolitan Museum of Art at New York. It is proposed that the work shall consist of three volumes, each containing 150 plates—two-thirds by the heliotype process, and one-third in colour by chromo-lithography. Each plate will be accompanied by a page of descriptive text. The first volume will treat of the objects in stone and marble; the second, bronzes, gems, &c.; the third, vases, statuettes, &c., in terra-cotta. The issue will be begun in monthly parts as soon as the necessary number of subscribers is obtained.

LAST week we noted the opening of the exhibition of Mdlle. Rosa Bonheur's two latest life-size pictures; and now we have to record the publication, in mixed etching and mezzotint, by Mr. W. H. Simmons, of the same able painter's Old Monarch, the magnificent lion presented to her two years ago, but which she found unmanageable in her establishment at Fontainebleau, and only kept long enough to make this splendid study of the head. The size of the head, which includes little more than the mane, is, we take it, life-size. The intense depth and clearness of the eyes, the strength of colour throughout, and the full rendering of the leonine expression are worthy of unreserved praise. This may be pronounced the most perfect presentation of the king of beasts ever published.

Two more new pictures by Mr. Millais are now on exhibition. One has been added to the collection of his paintings at the Fine Art Society, the other to the Graphic Gallery. The former is a splendid portrait of Mr. Alfred Tennyson, quite worthy—and higher praise could scarcely be given—to be hung side by side with his portrait of Mr. Gladstone. The poet is standing enveloped in a cloak, showing only one hand, so that there is nothing to distract the attention from the strange, strong face, which is shown full. The large, soft eyes shine clear of the curiously developed upper lids, and are full of thought. The tallness of the head is enforced by its framework of uncut hair and the narrow, long beard. The picture at the Graphic Gallery represents a little girl, dressed up in a black fur cape and muff belonging to a grown-up person, and sitting on a bank; a wonderfully painted "gingham" completes the idea of Little Mrs. Gamp. The face is chubby and sweet.

It is proposed to establish at Madras a public picture gallery, which shall contain copies of European masterpieces as well as works by Anglo-Indian and native artists.

MESSRS. DALZIEL BROS. are printing at their their Camden Press an édition de luxe of Birket Foster's Pictures of English Landscape, which will be limited to one thousand numbered copies. The pictures will be printed from the original wood-blocks, on fine India paper, mounted, and bound in parchment. The verses by Tom Taylor will be given as in the earlier editions of this popular work. It will be issued by Messrs. G. Routledge and Sons.

In the Magazine of Art for this month will be found an article entitled "The Streets as Art Galleries," in which is explained the symbolical meaning of the beautiful design Mr. Herkomer has executed as an advertisement for Messrs. Cassell and Co. Everyone must sympathise with the aim that would make pictorial advertisement a means of educating popular taste instead of degrading it, as is the case at present; and we sincerely hope that the fashion set by the ever-enterprising publishers of the Magazine of Art will not be allowed to die out, but will be followed up by themselves and by other firms, so that the sparo walls of our streets and railway stations may become in time veritable art galleries, and even the poorest of our citizens, like those of Athens of old, become judges of artistic beauty and fitness. Mr. Herkomer's noble design is well calculated to assist in such training, for it is conceived in the same lofty spirit as those mighty frescoes wherewith Raphael adorned the Vatican. It is indeed strongly reminiscent of the great masters of the Renaissance, though not a copy of any one man's style. That such a work as this should be executed, not for the purpose of being shut up in a palace, or even displayed to visitors in a public gallery, but as a poster in our streets, is a boon for which all who pass by ought to be grateful.

THE Chronique des Arts states this week that the ancient Greek cup ornamented with figures in red by Brygos, one of the greatest of the vase painters of the fifth century, was bought, at the recent sale of the Bammerville collection, by the Louvre for the sum of 11,000 frs. This price, though high, is not considered extravagant, for the cup is noted as being the chef-d'œuvre of the ancient painter.

THE current number of the Zeitschrift für bildende Kunst opens with a review, by Arthur Baignières, of Viollet-le-Duc and his work, the illustrations being taken from M. Sauvageot's interesting work, Viollet-le-Duc et son Œuvre dessiné. Dr. A. Rosenberg notices, at a somewhat late date, the art industrial exhibition held at Düsseldorf in 1880; and C. von Fabriczy continues his critique on French sculpture of the present day, noticing especially, in this number, the clever and popular French sculptor, Henri Chapu, whose monument to Regnault and his companions who fell in the war brought him so much fame. An illustration is given of his more recent monument to the writer known as Daniel Stern, which is also characterised by a youthful female figure, representing this time not Youth, but Thought.

AN interesting biographical study of Charles Daubigny, by F. Henriot, was given in L'Art last week, accompanied by a beautiful etching of a sylvan scene, called Le Berger et la Bergère—admirable in its pleasant intermingling of light and shade.

THE Japan Weekly Mail has commenced a series of articles on "The Curio Market," in which it is intended to expose the tricks of the local bric-à-brac vendors, who impose upon tourists in Japan. The "Heathen Chinese" is said to be a child to these cunning dealers, who, pretending to have obtained rare and valuable goods from some prince or daimyo, palm off inferior wares of a few years old on their credulous customers. They are represented as being almost as ignorant as their dupes, never having seen such wares as they profess to sell. The demand for curios is infinite, the supply almost nil. Purchasers (not only in Japan) may well be on their guard when they are informed that even of the staple ware of Japan, Imari, "there is not at present, and has not been for twelve months, in any shop in Tokiyo (Jeddo) a large plate or dish of genuine old Imari;" and that of Sateuma "not more than three or four genuine specimens find their way into the market each year."

THE most important papers in the April Statement of the Palestine Exploration Fund are "Sun Worship in Syria," by Lieut. Conder (a short enumeration of facts); "Notes on the Topography of the Exodus," by Greville J. Chester (in reply to Lieut. Conder); and "Life, Habits, and Customs of the Fellahin of Palestine," by Rev. F. A. Klein. This last paper is translated from the Zeitschrift of the German sister-society, and is an admirable résumé of twenty-six years' familiar intercourse with the fellahs of Palestine. A note by Mr. H. D. Rawnsley informs us that the Temple of Keades and the marble sarcophagi have been demolished to make foundations for a sugar or a cotton factory. Both temple and sarcophagi are figured and described in the first volume of the new "Memoirs" of the Fund. Mr. Birch has several topographical papers marked by his usual acuteness. He thinks Lieut. Conder radically wrong in his theories respecting Jerusalem, and maintains, in the face of Mr. Conder's opposition, that the City of David was on Ophel—i.e., on the eastern hill south of the Temple. Certainly Mr. Birch has contrived to make dry subjects interesting, whatever may be thought of his rather bold theories. Mr. Dunbar Heath's paper on "The Orders for Musical Services at Hamath" professes to apply the "Newtonian method" to the Hamath inscriptions; the results are as singular as the method. We learn from the Introduction to the Statement that the total cost of the expedition, including printing expenses, &c., will amount to about £3,500 or £4,000 a-year.

In the obituary notice of Mr. Burges last week Mr. Pullan was, by accident, named instead of Mr. Clutton, who was Mr. Burges's colleague in the preparation of the Lille Cathedral design.

THE STAGE.

"OTHELLO" AT THE LYCEUM.

THE "special performances" at the Lyceum have much stirred the curiosity of our playgoers. "Strong casts," as they are called, have become rare upon the English stage since the patent theatres lost their special privileges; and, by general consent, the conjunction of Miss Terry, Mr. Booth, and Mr. Irving in the tragedy of Othello could claim to be accounted a very exceptional sort of dramatic event. Moreover, the Desdemonia of Miss Terry and the Iago of Mr. Irving were efforts new to London; while it was clear that Mr. Booth's visit to this country must soon come to a close—that, indeed, his impersonations must be seen presently to be seen at all. It has been fully understood, therefore, on all sides, that these Lyceum representations have about them that character of an only opportunity which has invariably been found precious and attractive.

When Mr. Booth played Othello some weeks since, he suffered from the inadequacy of his surroundings, the inexpertness of his playfellows. The Princess's Theatre had lost its vogue as a home of the superior drama; a new building had been erected which knew not Shakspeare; the stage seemed set apart for the uses of "real horses," for rude plays of the lime-light and trap-door, the "sensational-effect," order of composition. At the Lyceum Mr. Booth breathes a wholesomer atmosphere; the house is endowed with valuable traditions, and under Mr. Irving's management it has risen to be the most considerable establishment of its class in London. Undoubtedly Mr. Booth's Othello benefits by transference from Oxford Street to the Strand. He is now assured, not merely of rich and handsome scenic accessories—and these have their genuine worth and significance—but also of disciplined support from all the actors, even to the most subordinate, concerned with him in the representation. His performance thus gains in steadiness, in consistency, in harmony, and even in power. He plays to a more enlightened, judicious, and appreciative audience. That his exertions wholly satisfy, or that his Othello ranks among his best exhibitions, cannot be said, however. He is a highly trained and most accomplished actor, an adroit elocutionist, skilled in the graces of gesture and bearing, picturesque of aspect, and capable at times of very vehement displays of passion and emotion. He is rather elegant and gallant of mien, perhaps, than absolutely majestic or dignified; the while his refined tenderness towards Desdemona in the earlier scenes carefully avoids the super-sentimental uxoriousness to which certain Othellos of the stage have been much too prone. It may be thought that he is insufficiently observant of the natural or realistic manner of the modern school of acting, and adheres too closely to the elder prescriptions and conventionalisms of the theatre. And, no doubt, Mr. Booth respects the idealities of performance, the exaltation pertaining to poetic impersonation; he heedfully abstains, however, from that excessive mounting upon stilts, that over-tight lacing of the buskin, that turgidity and pompousness of tone and air, which many players of the past so greatly favoured. His Othello is a living human creature, distinct and individual, and not a mere abstract figure made up of histrionic artifices. Where the actor fails is in his over-anxiety to accentuate every line of his part, to render his every utterance effective, and in his recourse to a certain redundancy of movement and action. His speech thus becomes at times too syllabically articulate, while his manner lacks impulsiveness, seems unduly oppressed with deliberation. No doubt an insufficiency of physical means lies at the foundation of these defects. To sustain Othello's frenzy at its fever-heat, to render justice to his terrible explosions of passion, demands a player endowed with rare force. Mr. Booth plays the grand third act with admirable art and power. His Othello resists as long as possible the leperous distilment of Iago's insinuations, refuses to the latest moment to distrust the honesty of Desdemona. His revulsion of feeling at the first suspicion of her guilt, his effort to dispel the horrible imagining, the sense of despair that comes over him as doubt possesses his mind—all this was very finely conceived and rendered. In the later scenes Mr. Booth was certainly less effective; the strain upon his resources was perhaps too severe. He permitted himself long pauses; monotony stole over his expressions of wrath; his efforts seemed wanting in spontaneity. It is to be observed, however, that the intellectuality of Othello declines as the play proceeds; he loses reasoning power, he is more and more at the mercy of his own violence, as the catastrophe is approached. Something of his mental fall may be traceable to that epileptic seizure usually suppressed in acting editions of the play, or may be due, as Schlegel suggests, to the mere physical force of passion dispersing in an instant all the Moor's acquired and habitual virtue, and restoring to the savage supremacy over the moral man. Mr. Booth's exertions were rewarded with extraordinary applause.

Much had been expected from the Iago of Mr. Irving; the part had been judged excellently suited to the genius of the player. Nor did disappointment ensue. Mr. Irving's Iago is one of his best Shaksperian essays—forceful, ingenious, and characteristic. Some tinge of melodrama may affect the performance; here and there Iago seemed reminiscent of Fabien dei Franchet. But the actor's personality, not less than his method of portraiture, must be allowed for. His Iago is eminently plausible; his falsity and hypocrisy are consummate. Stress is laid upon Iago's reasons for his vindictiveness: his suspicion of the conduct both of Othello and of Cassio in regard to Emilia; albeit to Shaksperian students Iago's pleadings on this account have often seemed in the nature of excuses to himself for the malignancy of his own nature, a sort of salve for his pricked conscience, a means of urging him on to further malefactions. Mr. Irving's Iago conceals his inherent vileness and depravity under a frank, soldierly, swaggering manner. His reputation for honesty becomes readily intelligible; it arises from his rude, frank air, now cynical, now convivial, yet always really malevolent and vicious. He commands his fellows, here hectoring Roderigo, there coaxing Cassio, in right of his superior intelligence. The more powerful mind asserts itself and dominates. He is a man of courage and of action. To the Moor he is cunningly deferential, still preserving his character for being outspoken and candid even to coarseness; but he is less careful to wear the mask, becomes more and more reckless in his manner of charging Desdemona, when he perceives how completely Othello has been caught in the toils and surrendered himself to ruin. The actor's Iago fairly delighted his audience; it was felt, indeed, that his success was singularly complete. By way of minor objection, it may be stated that occasionally Mr. Irving's manner seemed too deficient in repose, suffered from restlessness and too sustained a desire to be always doing something. It is Mr. Irving's way to obtain naturalness of effect by recourse to what is technically known as "business." But this expedient may be employed to excess. There is peril of the player being subordinated to the "properties" he makes play with. Mr. Irving sat or lolled upon a variety of chairs and tables, toyed with a pen, with his sword-belt and trappings, used a poniard as a tooth-pick, rumbled his hair incessantly, waved a red cloak about him bull-fighter fashion, and otherwise occupied himself, naturally enough, no doubt, yet often superfluously, the necessary questions of the play being duly regarded.

Miss Terry suffered from nervousness, apparently, and her performance lacked evenness. She fairly proved herself, however, a gentle, tender, and most pathetic Desdemona. She looked the part to perfection, was very choicely dressed, and delivered certain of her speeches with exquisite delicacy and feeling. Mr. Terriss is to be commended for his manly and intelligent performance of the part of Cassio. The other characters were well sustained, and the scenic arrangements left nothing to be desired.

DUTTON COOK.

STAGE NOTES.

MR. MARLANDE CLARKE, a well-known reciter, who got up scenes from Hamlet at the Polytechnic last year, is trying to carry out Mr. Furnivall's suggestion of playing the First and Second Quartos of Hamlet on nights next or near to one another, so that the acting qualities of the first sketch and the enlargement of Shakspeare's great play may be fairly tested. The First Quarto, of about 2,100 lines, took two hours and a-half to perform. The full play has over 3,800 lines, and cannot well take less than four hours and a-half. Shaksperian enthusiasts need not be frightened at that, though they will have but two or three minutes' rest between each act. A full performance of the two plays is the only way in which the relation of the two Quartos as acting dramas can be settled. Mr. Clarke at present proposes acting only in a small private theatre, that has about 250 seats, of which 100 will be available for students and critics. He will be glad to receive communications at 101 Hanley Road, Upper Holloway, N., from anyone interested in his plan. It is probable that the days chosen for the two performances will be June 18 and 25. In the late discussion as to whether the First Quarto represented Shakspeare's first sketch of his play or not, the opinion of Goethe, who knew something of such matters, was not mentioned. He wrote an essay on the question, and held the first-sketch view.

MUSIC.

MR. GANZ'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERT; ETC.

BERLIOZ, in his Mémoires, writing about the first performance of the Symphonie fantastique at the Conservatoire in 1830, says:—"It was sufficiently clear to enable the hearer to get a fair idea of its chief features." The same may be said of the performance of this difficult work last Saturday at St. James's Hall under the direction of Mr. Ganz. It had evidently been carefully studied and patiently rehearsed. Some of the vigorous and dramatic passages were well rendered; but other portions were lacking in delicacy, and sometimes the phrasing was not all that could be desired. Mr. Ganz, however, well deserved the cordial reception given to him at the close. The symphony occupies about an hour in performance, and it is to be regretted that the conductor added to its length by accepting an encore for the "Ball Scene." The writer of the analysis in the programme-book misrepresents Berlioz in stating that "he conceived it needful to explain [by a programme] the incidents in his instrumental drama." We stated last week that Berlioz considered the titles of the movements sufficient without the programme when the symphony was to be performed without Lelio, the sequel. Again, the writer is wrong in saying that Berlioz "was scarcely eighteen years old" when he wrote this work. It was composed in 1828—i.e., when he was twenty-five years old. Mme. Sophie Mentor, a pupil of Liszt and pianist to his Majesty the Emperor of Austria, made her first appearance in England at this concert. She played Liszt's concerto in E flat—a showy and difficult piece. It certainly ought to be entitled a "rhapsody," and not a concerto. Mme. Mentor has a brilliant technique and a refined touch; she gave a spirited performance of the work in question. We must, however, wait to hear her in some classical piece before judging of her merits as a pianist. She is announced to play Beethoven's concerto in E flat at Mr. Ganz's second concert, May 14.

Messrs. Ludwig and Daubert gave their first concert (fifth season) at the Royal Academy last Monday. One of the chief features of these excellent entertainments is the performance of Beethoven's so-called "posthumous" quartets. The one in E flat (op. 127) was chosen for the first evening; the executants were Messrs. Ludwig, Gibson, Zerbin, and Daubert. They also performed Dvorak's quartet in E flat (op. 51), recently heard at the Monday Popular Concerts. The last quartets of Beethoven are difficult to execute and difficult to understand. We could not help noticing that, in the analytical programme-book, thirty pages were devoted to the elucidation of Dvorak's quartet, and only ten to that of Beethoven's great chef-d'œuvre. We think that these last quartets would be far better understood and appreciated with the help of a clearer and more detailed analysis than that generally given. It is surely a pity that those who try to interest the public in these elaborate compositions should not also supply all possible help and information. Mr. E. Dannreuther was the pianist, and performed, with Mr. Ludwig, Grieg's sonata in G minor.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . .	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186 Strand, and Messrs. CURTICE & Co., Catherine Street, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can also be obtained every Saturday Morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. W. H. SMITH AND SONS; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

PARIS.

Copies can be obtained in Paris every Saturday morning of M. FOTHERINGHAM, 8 Rue Neuve des Capucines.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for MAY

contains: Verdi's Opera, "Simon Boccanegra," at the Scala of Milan—The Music of Il trovatore—The Great Composers: Berlioz—Mr. Pogg's Musiciana, by F. Mottl—Last Hours—Sullivan's New Opera—Monday Popular, Crystal Palace, and Bach Choir Concerts, &c.—Royal Italian Opera—Occasional Notes, Foreign and Country News, Reviews, Correspondence, &c. Price 3d.; post-free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for MAY

contains:—"The Son of God goes forth to War" ("St. Ann's Tune") by ARTHUR SULLIVAN; and "God so loved the World," Anthem, by Dr. JOHNS COSS. Price 14d.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER, & CO.

have the honour to announce that they have purchased the ENTIRE STOCK AND COPYRIGHTS of the Works hitherto published by MESSRS. NEUMEYER & CO., of Neumeyer Hall, including the whole of the Valuable Compositions of HEINRICH HOFMANN, &c., &c. London: NOVELLO, EWER, & CO., 1, Berners-street, W., and 80 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

MAP of a HUNDRED SQUARE MILES

ROUND AYLESBURY, WILTSHIRE; with a KEY to the BRITISH and ROMAN ANTIQUITIES. By the Rev. A. C. SMITH, Rector of Yatesbury, Wilts; Hon. Secretary of the Wilts Archaeological and Natural History Society.

The above work will consist of two parts:—

First, THE GREAT MAP, 78 in. by 48 in., on the scale of 36 square inches to the mile, showing all the British and Roman Earth- and Stone-Works, printed in six colours.

Second, THE KEY, in large 4to, containing the Great Map in Sections, with accompanying descriptive letterpress and References to the best authorities, Views, Plans, &c.

The work, constituting a permanent record of one of the most important archaeological districts in Europe, has been twenty-five years in preparation, and will be published and issued to subscribers by the Marlborough College Natural History Society.

For Prospectus, giving full particulars and the opinions of antiquaries who have seen the work, apply to the Rev. J. A. PRESTON, The Green, Marlborough.

ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL MEDICAL SCHOOL, ALBERT EMBANKMENT, LONDON, S.E.—The Winter Session commences on October 1, and the Summer on May 1. Students can enter at either Session. Two open entrance Scholarships of £100 and £50 for 1st Year's Students are awarded in October. In addition to ordinary prizes amounting to £200, the following Scholarships, Medals, &c., are given, viz.:—The "William Tite" Scholarship, £30; College Scholarship, 40 Guineas a year for two years; "Musgrave" Scholarship, of same value; "Solly" Medal and Prize; "Cheselden" Medal; "Mead" Medal; Treasurer's Gold Medal; "Grainger" Prize, &c. Special Classes for Matriculation, Preliminary Scientific, and 1st M.B. of University of London, and Private Classes for other Examinations. There are numerous Hospital appointments open to students without charge. For Prospectus and particulars apply to Dr. GILLESPIE, Secretary.

CATALOGUE (No. 79, MAY) of AUTOGRAPHS and HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS on SALE by F. NAYLOR, 4, Millman-street, Bedford-row.—Sent on application.

UNITARIAN AFFIRMATIONS.

Just published, in 1 vol., price 3s. 6d.

POSITIVE ASPECTS OF UNITARIAN THOUGHT and DOCTRINE: Ten Lectures recently delivered by various Ministers in St. George's Hall, London. With a Preface by the Rev. Dr. MARTINEAU.

Sent post-free for cash orders at the price named. Address Miss PHILPOT, British and Foreign Unitarian Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

Ready May 10th, 32 pp., post-free 1d.

A PREFACE TO, WITH EXTRACTS FROM,

A BOOK of the BEGINNINGS; Including a Word of Reply to the Saturday Review and the Pall Mall Gazette. By GERALD MASEY. WILLIAMS & NORRIS, 14, Henriette-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

BIBLE REVISION

THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA:

The Six Principal English Versions of the New Testament, in parallel columns, beneath the Greek Original Text. Wiclif, 1380—Tyndale, 1534—Cranmer, 1539—Geneva, 1557—Rheims, 1622—Authorised, 1611. 1 very handsome vol., 4to, £2 2s.; or Morocco, gilt edges.

"In form and substance it is an admirable present for any clergyman." Observer.

London: S. BAOSTER & SONS, 13, Paternoster-row. And sold by all Booksellers.

RARE ETCHINGS, ENGRAVINGS, and

DRAWINGS by the most esteemed OLD MASTERS may be obtained at GEORGE LOVE'S OLD PRINT SHOP, 81, BUNHILL ROW, LONDON. The Engravings, &c., are in fine condition, and have formed portions of the most celebrated collections. A Catalogue of a small portion of the Stock will be sent on receipt of two penny postage stamps.

* Established above 60 years.

Fcap. 8vo, 128 pp., price 1s. 6d.

A MEDLEY of NOTABLES: What they said and What others said of them. By G. F. S. "This little book contains on one side of each page a quotation from some well-known author, and on the other side a brief notice of this author by other authors. If we turn to Shakespeare, for instance, we find quoted Daniel Quilley's description of Falstaff's death, while there are given notices of Shakespeare by Keats, Ben Jonson, Browning, Barnfield, and by some anonymous writer who likely enough is the editor. From him we learn that 'Shakespeare went before all men, and stands in the array of humane intellect like the sun in the system, single and unapproached.'" Saturday Review.

Published at 21, Castle-street, Holborn.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s., post-free.

STUDIES in PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

The Sun; Transit of Venus; Spectrum Analysis; the Moon; the Stars and Planets; Comets and Meteors; Atmospheric Electricity; Whirlwinds; Glaciers; the Telephone. By W. J. MILLAR, C.E., Secretary to the Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders in Scotland; Author of "Principles of Mechanics," &c.

"This work consists of chapters from several sciences—astronomy, electricity, heat, light. They cover a good deal of ground, and include objects as wide apart as whirlwinds and spectrum analysis, glaciers and the telephone."—Liverpool Albion.

Published at 21, Castle-street, Holborn.

NOW READY.

In 1 vol., extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

THE DEATH of THEMISTOCLES, and other Poems.

By JOHN NICHOL, M.A., Balliol, Oxon., LL.D.,

Regius Professor of English Language and Literature in the University of Glasgow.

In 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

KANT and his ENGLISH CRITICS:

A Comparison of Critical and Empirical Philosophy.

By JOHN WATSON, M.A., LL.D.,

Professor of Moral Philosophy in Queen's University, Kingston, Canada.

In crown 8vo, price 5s.

EVOLUTION, EXPRESSION, and SENSATION.

By JOHN CLELAND, M.D., F.R.S.,

Professor of Anatomy in the University of Glasgow.

GLASGOW: JAMES MACLEHOSE, PUBLISHER TO THE UNIVERSITY.

LONDON: MACMILLAN & CO.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

TO-NIGHT will be produced

JUANA,
a new and original Play, in four acts, by W. G. WILLS.
Characters by Mesdames Modjeska, Le Thiere, Grahame, &c., and Ada Ward; Messrs. Wilson Barrett, Forbes-Robertson, Norman Forbes, Price, Parley, E. D. Norman, Butler, Doune, &c., and G. W. Anson.
Box-office now open.
Acting Manager, Mr. H. HERMAN.

DRURY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

To-night, at 8.15,

VIRGINIUS—Mr. JOHN McCULLOUGH.
VIRGINIA—Miss LYDIA COWELL.
SERVIA—Mrs. ARTHUR STIRLING.
Debutantes—Mr. John Ryder; Appius Claudius—Mr. J. H. Barnes; Numitorius—Mr. J. R. Gibson; Lucius—Mr. G. Andrews; Calus Claudius—Mr. De Lange; Iclius—Mr. Augustus Harris.
Preceded, at 7.30, by THE STORES.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.30,

HESTER'S MYSTERY.
At 8, a new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, called THE UPPER CRUST.
Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Billington, E. W. Garden, O. Shelton, and E. D. Ward; Mesdames Elsie Liston, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorne.
At 10, THE WIZARD OF THE WILDERNESS.
Mr. J. L. Toole.
Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to £3.5s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Under the direction of Mr. ALEXANDER HENDERSON.

To-night, at 8, an entirely new and original Opera Comique, in three acts, by OFFENBACH, entitled LA BOULANGERIE.

Under the immediate direction of Mr. H. B. Farnie.
New and elaborate scenery by Ryan and Hicks. Dresses, after designs by Grévin and Faustini, by Alias.
Preceded, at 7.30, by a Comedy, after Melhée and Halévy, entitled SEIZING THE FLY.
Mesdames Amadi, Mand Taylor, Turner, Dubois, Graham, Evelyn, and Wadman; Messrs. Cecil, Temple, Ashford, Mansfield, Stepan, and Paulson.
Greatly augmented chorus and orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Hillier. Ballet master, Mr. Lauri.
Box-office now open. Acting Manager, Mr. W. A. BURT.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(200 yards from the Angel.)

To-night, at 8, HIS WIFE, a new Play by H. A. JONES (Author of "A Clerical Error," &c.), founded on a Novel by Mark Hope.
Entirely new scenery and appointments.
Miss BATEMAN (Mrs. Crowe) will appear as MARGARET FIELD, the character having been written expressly for her.
The following artists will also appear—Messrs. E. H. Brooke, J. D. Beveridge, W. Young, E. F. Edgar, B. Lyons, G. Cannings, R. Lyons, &c.; Mesdames John Carter, Laura Lindon, and Kate Pattison (by kind permission of Messrs. Hare and Kendal).
Act 1. Fairdale Hall—Evening. Acts 2 and 3. Chaplain's Parlour at Tolmiston Gaol. Act 4. Dr. Billing's Private Asylum. Act 5. Fairdale Hall—Morning.
Prices from 6d. to 7s. 6d. Doors open at 6.30. Farce at 7.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. DOVILY CARTE.

To-night, at 8.30, a new Acrobatic Play, by Messrs. W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN, entitled PATIENCE.
Messrs. George Grossmith, Itanland Barrington, Richard Temple, F. Thornton, and Jurdard Lell; Mesdames Leouora Draham, Jessie Bood, Julie Gwynne, Margaret, and Alice Barrett.
Produced under the personal direction of the Author and Composer.
Conductor, Mr. F. Collier.
Preceded, at 8, by UNCLE SAMUEL, by ARTHUR LAW and GEORGE GROSSMITH.
Doors open at 7.30.

PRINCE of WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BRUCE.

To-night, at 8.40, a new Comedy, in three acts, called

THE COLONEL,
By F. C. BERNARD.
Preceded, at 7.50, by a one-act Comedy, by SYDNEY GRUNDY, in HONOUR BOUND.
Messrs. Coghlan, Flockton, W. Herbert, Eric Bayley, Rowland Buckstone, and Edgar Bruce; Mesdames Amy Roselle, Myra Holme, C. Grahame, Leigh Murray, &c.
Now scenery by Mr. Bruce Smith. Box-office open daily from 11 to 5.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WALTER GOOCH.

To-night, at 7.45, an entirely new and original romantic spectacle Drama of sensational interest, entitled BRANDED.

Written by RICHARD LEE.
Messrs. Henry Neville, Redmond, F. Archer, J. Beauchamp, F. Charles, H. C. Sidney, Allen Thomas, Hewitt, Paterson, Evans, Gardiner, Greville, W. Ayoubie, Chamberlain, Stirling, &c.; Mesdames Caroline Hill, Maud Milton, Katie Barry, Katie Neville, Huntley, and Lyons.
Produced under the direction of Mr. Harry Jackson.
New and realistic scenery by Charles Brooke. New overture and incidental music by Michael Conolly. New military costumes designed from the Army Contractors, Paris. The horses supplied by Mr. George Sanger.
Preceded, at 7, by the Farce, THE INTRIGUE.
Doors open at 6.30. Box-office open daily.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER.

To-night, at 8.15, THE MEMBER FOR SLOCOM, by G. H. SIMS.

Mesdames Kate Lawler, Harriet Covey, Rath Francis, L. Thomas, and Elsie Ward; Messrs. Arthur Williams and Frank Conolly.
Stage Manager, FRANK ROTHWAY. Actlog and General Business Manager, CECIL RALPH.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

SUMMER EXHIBITION NOW OPEN

Daily 9 to 7.

Admission, One Shilling; Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA "If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa." Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

EXTRACT "It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way." W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.

"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted." CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA. A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

(Twenty doors west of Mudie's Library.)

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Collotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.

AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Meissonier, Corot, De Neuville, Burne-Jones, Rossetti, Cave Thomas, &c., &c., &c.

Just published, in Cloth Portfolio, Six Guineas the Set.

TWELVE AUTOTYPE REPRODUCTIONS OF PAINTINGS AND DRAWINGS, by PHILIP GILBERT HAMPTON, mostly of Scottish mountain scenery, and including copies of paintings in monochrome and of sepia and charcoal drawings. The twelve subjects are mounted on uniform boards, 28½ in. by 21 in. Each Autotype can be obtained separately, price 10s. 6d.

COME UNTO THESE YELLOW SANDS, after the painting by W. FIELD, Esq., on India, two sizes, 42s. and 21s.

PICTURES CLEANED, RESTORED, FRAMED.

To adorn the walls of Home with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 531, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Ealing Deane, Middlesex.

General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWYER.

TO PROPRIETORS OF NEWSPAPERS

AND PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, Brief News, & Opinion, the Illustrated Review, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPLETE, ECONOMIC, and PUNCTUAL PRODUCTION OF PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether illustrated or plain. Estimates furnished to Proprietors of New Periodicals, for either Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—74 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

NEWSPAPERS and PERIODICALS

PRINTED BY FAST (ROTARY) MACHINERY.—MANAGER, Fleet Printing Works, 14, Whitefriars-street, E.C.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHARING CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1831.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Banks, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

1st March, 1880. FRANCIS HAVENSCROFT, Manager

SUN LIFE OFFICE, LONDON.

Established 1810.

CHIEF OFFICE, 63, THREADNEEDLE STREET.

BRANCH OFFICES, 60, CHANCING CROSS;

And Oxford-street, corner of Vere-street.

Very low premiums without participation in Profits, especially for young lives. Half Premium, Non-Forfeiture, and Endowment Assurances granted.

Prompt settlement of Claims.

The Society's newly revised Prospectus, and a greatly simplified form of Proposal, will be forwarded on application.

J. G. FRIMSTLEY, Actuary.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.
Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.
Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.
Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.
Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.
The original, best, and most liberal.
Cash prices.
No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Priced Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.
F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from 25 6s. to 50 guineas.
Drawing-room suites, from 15 9s. to 45 guineas.
Dining-room Suites, from 27 7s. to 40 guineas.

And all other goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones. Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

fluid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion, by gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, crowsy feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s 9d. and 4s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

BRAND & CO.'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS:—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

JEAN-FRANÇOIS MILLET, Peasant and Painter. Translated from the French of ALFRED SENSIER. With numerous Illustrations. Globe 4to, 16s.

ART AT HOME SERIES.—NEW VOLUME. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE LIBRARY. By Andrew Lang. With a Chapter on English Illustrated Books by AUSTIN DOBSON. With numerous Illustrations.

 Also a LIMITED EDITION, on Large Paper, printed on Hand-made Paper. Demy 8vo.

MEMORIALS of LORD BEACONSFIELD. Reprinted from the Standard. Crown 8vo. [Immediately.]

MACMILLAN'S POPULAR SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.—NEW VOLUME.

WHITE WINGS: a Yachting Romance. By William BLACK, Author of "A Princess of Thule," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NON-MIRACULOUS CHRISTIANITY, and other Sermons, preached in the Chapel of Trinity College, Dublin. By GEORGE SALMON, D.D., Chancellor of St. Patrick's Cathedral, and Regius Professor of Divinity in the University of Dublin. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW PART—XIII. (PLANCHÉ to RICHTER).

A DICTIONARY of MUSIC and MUSICIANS, A.D. 1450—1881. By Eminent Writers, English and Foreign. With Engravings and Woodcuts. Edited by GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L. In 3 vols. Vols. I. and II., 21s. each; Parts I. to XIII., 3s. 6d. each.

SYMBOLIC LOGIC. By John Venn, M.A., Fellow and Lecturer in the Moral Sciences, Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

CHARLES KINGSLEY'S WORKS. COLLECTED EDITION. Vols. XXVII., XXVIII. DISCIPLINE, and other Sermons. By Charles KINGSLEY, Canon of Westminster. Crown 8vo, 6s.

WESTMINSTER SERMONS. By Charles Kingsley, Canon of Westminster. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE NEW TESTAMENT in the ORIGINAL GREEK.

The Text Revised by B. F. WESTCOTT, D.D., Regius Professor of Divinity, Canon of Peterborough, and F. J. A. HORT, D.D., Hulsean Professor of Divinity, late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. [Next week.]

 The Introduction and Appendix will very shortly be published in a separate and uniform volume.

FIRST LESSONS in PRACTICAL BOTANY. By G. T. BETTANY, M.A., F.L.S., Lecturer in Botany at Gny's Hospital Medical School. 18mo, 1s.

KEY to GREEK PROSE COMPOSITION. Part I. By the Rev. BLOMFIELD JACKSON, M.A. 18mo, 3s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE, No. 259, for MAY. Price One Shilling.

CONTENTS OF THE NUMBER.

1. THE PORTRAIT of a LADY. By HENRY JAMES, Jun. Chapters XXIX.—XXXIV.
2. MEMORY'S SONG. By A. MATHESON.
3. OLD MYTHOLOGY in MODERN POETRY. By ANDREW C. BRADLEY.
4. LOST.
5. SIR DONALD STEWART'S MARCH from KANDAHAR to KABUL.
6. THE ENGLISH COMMUNITY in IOWA. By ROBERT BENSON.
7. A SHORT PLEA for SCIENTIFIC AGRICULTURE and for AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION.

Eversley Edition.

CHARLES KINGSLEY'S NOVELS.

Messrs. MACMILLAN & CO. are now publishing, under the above title, a NEW EDITION of the NOVELS of CHARLES KINGSLEY.

This Edition has been planned to meet the wish expressed by many admirers of Mr. Kingsley for a really beautiful edition of his novels. The EVERSLEY EDITION will, therefore, be printed from new type by Messrs. R. & R. Clark, on a paper specially manufactured for this work by Messrs. John Dickinson & Co.; the binding will be done by Messrs. James Burn & Co.; and the Publishers hope that the mechanical production will be found in every respect worthy of the books themselves.

The EVERSLEY EDITION will be comprised in ELEVEN VOLUMES, Globe 8vo, and will be published at a uniform price of FIVE SHILLINGS per volume.

A Portrait, by Mr. Lowes Dickinson, of CHARLES KINGSLEY in his STUDY at EVERSLEY, never before engraved, will appear as a Frontispiece in the First Volume.

The books will be published in the following order:—

WESTWARD HO!	-	-	-	-	-	-	2 vols., 10s.	Now ready.
TWO YEARS AGO	-	-	-	-	-	-	2 vols., 10s.	June.
HYPATIA	-	-	-	-	-	-	2 vols., 10s.	July.
YEAST	-	-	-	-	-	-	1 vol., 5s.	August.
ALTON LOCKE	-	-	-	-	-	-	2 vols., 10s.	September.
HEREWARD the WAKE	-	-	-	-	-	-	2 vols., 10s.	October.

 Subscribers' Names will be received by all Booksellers.

LONDON: MACMILLAN & CO., BEDFORD STREET.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 471.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MAY 14, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

NEW PUBLICATIONS OF SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON.

A F R I C A.

"Semper aliquid novi ex Africa."—TACITUS. "Remarkable records of travel."—Times.
"Sterling books of travel."—Athenaeum.

A SECOND EDITION is ready of

MAJOR SERPA PINTO'S HOW I
CROSSED AFRICA; from the Atlantic to the Indian Ocean, through Unknown Countries; Discovery of the Great Zambesi Affluents, &c. Translated by Professor ALFRED ELWES. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Twenty Full-Page and 118 Half-Page and smaller Illustrations, Thirteen small Maps and One large one, cloth extra, 42s.

"What the difficulties of such a journey must be, every reader of African travel can easily conceive. In the case of Major Pinto they could not well have been greater, . . . but bravely he pressed onwards, and successfully accomplished the work he undertook. THE NARRATIVE IS FULL OF INTEREST AND EXCITEMENT. The Major himself one cannot help liking."—Times.

"The latest contribution to this fascinating literature is embodied in Major Pinto's two substantial volumes, a work that abounds in information as yet sealed to the world, and episodes of the utmost interest. A book, in fact, which every one who cares to be acquainted with the secrets of Africa will have to read."—Daily Telegraph.

"The long-expected book of the season . . . has at length appeared. . . . It is racy, amusing, interesting. . . . At once a charming romance of African travel, and a useful contribution to African geography."—Pall Mall Gazette.

A SECOND EDITION is ready of

DR. EMIL HOLUB'S SEVEN YEARS IN
SOUTH AFRICA: Travels, Researches, and Hunting Adventures (1872 to 1879). Translated by ELLEN E. FREWER, Translator of Schweinfurth's "Heart of Africa," &c. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with 200 Illustrations and Map, cloth extra, 42s.

"We have read these two works of travel with the deepest interest. . . . Dr. Holub's volumes must prove a mine of wealth to the sportsman and lover of natural history."—Athenaeum.

"We must give Dr. Holub's work the highest praise, both for its readableness and its accuracy. The illustrations are in every respect admirable."—Academy.

"We have seldom read a narrative which more thoroughly impressed us with the modesty and truthfulness of the writer."—St. James's Gazette.

"Has the valuable qualities of lucidity, exactness, and simplicity. . . . We cannot conclude this insufficient sketch of a valuable and entertaining work without a word of hearty praise for the translation. It is simply so excellent that only for the betrayal of the title-page it would never be suspected."—Spectator.

A SECOND EDITION is nearly ready of

TO the CENTRAL AFRICAN LAKES and
BACK: the Narrative of the Royal Geographical Society's East Central African Expedition, 1878-80. By JOSEPH THOMSON, F.R.G.S., in Command of the Expedition. With a short Biographical Notice of the late Mr. Keith Johnston, Portraits, and a Map. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 24s.

The Times of May 6th says:—"Considering his youth and want of literary experience, Mr. Thomson tells the story of his work in Africa with wonderful ease and brightness. . . . He is a really good and exact observer, with a fund of genuine humour which will certainly amuse the reader."

THE HEAD HUNTERS of BORNEO: Up the Mahakkam and Down the Barito.

By CARL BOCK. Super royal 8vo, copiously Illustrated with Coloured Plates and Engravings from the Author's own Drawings.

Among other matters, the book describes and gives Drawings of the Fair-skinned Race inhabiting the Forests of the Island, of whom the Women at least have never previously been seen by any European Traveller.
[Will be published shortly.]

Now ready, a Revised and Cheap Edition, in 1 vol., of
THE PUBLIC LIFE of the Right Hon.
BENJAMIN DISRAELI, EARL OF BEACONSFIELD,
K.G. By FRANCIS HITCHMAN. Crown 8vo, about 600 pp., price 8s. 6d.
N.B.—This Edition contains the very fine Photographic Portrait of his Lordship, by W. & D. Downey, taken when in office as Prime Minister, in attendance on the Queen at Balmoral.

"A thoroughly faithful record."—Saturday Review.

"As a political historian he is, we believe, uniformly trustworthy and accurate."—World.

"Throughout the author has shown rare judgment. . . . He writes impartially."—Morning Post.

"The work deserves a permanent place in every political library. It is a full and convenient repertory of facts of the utmost historical interest and value."—Home News.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY STUDIES: Essays. By Francis Hitchman.

Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 16s.

CONTENTS:—Chaps. 1. John Wilkes.—2. The Founder of Methodism.—3. Charles Churchill, Parson and Poet.—4. David Garrick.—5. Richard Cumberland.—6. "The Cook's Oracle."—7. Isaac Disraeli and Bolton Corney.—8. Dr. Dibdin and the Roxburghe Club.—9. Joseph Priestley.—10. The Author of "Sandford and Merton."—11. Erasmus Darwin.

A SIXTH EDITION is NOW READY of Mr. WILLIAM BLACK'S SUNRISE: a Story of These Times. 3 vols., demy 8vo, 31s. 6d.

Now-ready, royal 8vo, cloth extra, price 24s.

VOL. VIII. of GUIZOT'S HISTORY of FRANCE. Completing the Work. Fully Illustrated.

*. The eight volumes of this most complete and splendidly illustrated History of France, by one of the greatest of modern historians, can now be had, royal 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, price 24s. each volume.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON, CROWN BUILDINGS, 188, FLEET STREET, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS RELATING TO IRELAND, by Prof. S. R. GARDINER	347
THORAU'S EARLY SPRING IN MASSACHUSETTS, by GRANT ALLEN	347
MRS. SUMNER'S OUR HOLIDAY IN THE EAST, by W. SIMPSON	348
MISS ROBINSON'S THE CROWNED HIPPOLYTUS, by the Rev. J. DAVIES	349
BOULGER'S HISTORY OF CHINA, by Prof. R. K. DOUGLAS	349
CAIRNS' UNBELIEF IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY, by the Rev. C. J. ABBEY	350
RECENT VERSE	351
NOTES AND NEWS	353
THE WANDERER: FROM THE ENGLISH OF CYNEWULF, by Miss B. H. HICKEY	355
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	355
SELECTED BOOKS	356
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The "Niobe" of Mount Sipylos , by W. Simpson; "An Ocean Free Lance," by W. Clark Russell; Swedenborgian Literature , by E. Peacock	356
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	356
TYLOR'S ANTHROPOLOGY, by F. W. RUDLER	356
SOME BOOKS ON TECTONIC PHILOLOGY, by H. SWEET	357
THE HERBERT LECTURES	358
NOTES OF TSAVEL	358
SCIENCE NOTES	359
CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE	359
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	360
THE SALON OF 1881, I., by Mrs. MARK PATTISON	360
THE GROSVENOR GALLERY, II., by COSMO MONKHOUSE	361
THE HERBERT EXHIBITION	362
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	363
THE STAGE	364
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK, & Co.	364

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, Ely-

place, St. Stephen's-green, Dublin.—Founded 1852, for preparation of Candidates for Competitive Examinations; over 1,000 Pupils have passed direct from the Academy. The Special Classes for A.I. CONSTABULARY Cadets have carried off 80 per cent. of the Cadets offered for competition last year; 1st Place, four times. Special Work for Woolwich and Knighthurst; over 320 have passed Army Exams, including 2nd, 3rd, 6th, 8th, 7th, at recent Competitions.—Apply to W. J. CHETWOOD CRAWLEY, LL.B., F.G.S., F.R.G.S., Director and Sole Proprietor.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—KENSINGTON

HOUSE, Calverley Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. R. STUBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 200 Guineas.

OWENS COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

THE COUNCIL, having decided to found a new PROFESSORSHIP of APPLIED MATHEMATICS, invite applications from Gentlemen desirous of becoming Candidates. The fixed stipend is £350 per annum, in addition to two-thirds of the Fees paid by Students. The appointment will date from the 29th September next. Further information respecting the duties of the Professor may be obtained from the PRINCIPAL of the College. Applications and testimonials, addressed to the Council, will be received up to the 30th MAY.

J. HOLME NICHOLSON, Registrar.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

The Office of PRINCIPAL will become VACANT at the end of the present Term. The Council are prepared to receive applications from Gentlemen desirous of the appointment. Candidates must be Clergymen of the Church of England in Priest's Orders, of the degree of Master of Arts at least of one of the Universities of Oxford or Cambridge. Every information may be obtained of the SECRETARY, The College, Brighton, to whom Testimonials must be sent on or before THURSDAY, the 9th of JUNE.

F. W. MADDEN, M.R.A.S., Secretary.

ARTS ASSOCIATION, NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.

THE SIXTH EXHIBITION OF PAINTINGS AND SCULPTURE by LIVING ARTISTS will be OPENED in the ASSEMBLY ROOMS, NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE, the First Week in SEPTEMBER. Agents for forwarding Works from LONDON, Mr. W. A. SMITH, 14, Charles-street, Middlesex Hospital. Artists can obtain particulars from T. R. SPENCE, Secretary.

SOCIETY of BRITISH ARTISTS.—

FIFTY-FIFTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION NOW OPEN at the SUFFOLK STREET GALLERIES, FILL HALL EAST, from 9 to 6 daily. Admission, 1s. THOMAS ROBERTS, Secretary.

NOW on EXHIBITION.—PAINTINGS

of NIAGARA FALLS, by the late WILLIAM MORRIS HUNT, Author of "Talks about Art," also other Paintings and Charcoal Drawings by the same Artist.—GALLERY, 14, GRAFTON STREET, OLD BOND STREET.

ROSA BONHEUR'S celebrated PIC-

TURES "ON THE ALERT" and "A FORAGING PARTY," which gained for the Artist the Cross of the Order of Leopold of Belgium at the Antwerp Academy, 1879; also the Complete Engraved Works of ROSA BONHEUR, including the well-known "HORSE FAIR," NOW ON EXHIBITION at L. H. LEFFEVRE'S GALLERY, 14, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S, S.W. Admission One Shilling, 10 to 5.

ST. ANDREW'S HALL, PLYMOUTH.

ART and INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION, 1881.

£200 to PRIZES.

OPENING MONDAY, MAY 23RD.

SPECIAL PRIZES.

£20 GOLD MEDAL for the best Picture painted by any Artist residing in Devon, Cornwall, Somerset, or Dorset, each Competitor being allowed to show three Pictures. 2nd Prize, SILVER MEDAL; 3rd, BRONZE.

£20 GOLD MEDAL for the best Picture exhibited. Open to all England.

£20 GOLD MEDAL for the best exhibit in the Exhibition.

N.B.—Pictures will not be eligible for this competition.

Winners of these Gold Medals will be paid in Money if preferred.

100 Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals will be given in the following Classes:—

Class 1.—Professional Workmanship.

Class 2.—Amateur Productions, made by Exhibitors who follow some other trade than that to which their articles belong.

Class 3.—Inventions and Novel Contrivances. To include both Amateur and Professional Workmanship.

Class 4.—Models, Architectural, Mechanical, Marine, and Ornamental.

Class 5.—Fine-Arts, including Oil and Water-Colour Paintings. Open to all England.

Class 6.—Oil and Water-Colour Paintings and Drawings, open to Students of any recognised School of Art or Private School.

Class 7.—Oil or Water-Colour Paintings, open to residents in Devon, Cornwall, Somerset, or Dorset. Each competitor will be allowed to exhibit three pictures.

Class 8.—Carving and Fret Work. Two Classes—Amateur & Professional.

Class 9.—Sculpture.

Class 10.—Preserved Natural Objects.

Class 11.—Ladies' Work of all kinds.

Class 12.—Musical Instruments.

Class 13.—Furniture.

Class 14.—Painters' Graining of Wood.

Class 15.—Photography.

Class 16.—Bicycles, Tricycles, and Sewing Machines.

Class 17.—China Painting.

Class 18.—Electrical Inventions.

Class 19.—Pen and Ink and Crayons by Amateurs.

Class 20.—Pottery.

Class 21.—Miscellaneous. This will include all objects not properly belonging to any of the other Classes.

Further particulars may be obtained of the Secretary, Mr. THOS. MARTIN, Plymouth.

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT

BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

Professor C. E. TURNER, will on SATURDAY NEXT, MAY 21, at 3 o'clock, begin a COURSE of FIVE LECTURES on "THE GREAT MODERN WRITERS OF RUSSIA."

Subscription to this Course, Half-a-Guinea; to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.

THE ANNIVERSARY MEETING will be held (by permission of the Chancellor and Senate) in the HALL of the UNIVERSITY of LONDON, BURLINGTON GARDENS, on MONDAY, MAY 23RD, at 2 P.M., the Right Honourable LORD ABERDARE, President, in the Chair.

THE DINNER will take place at WILLIS'S ROOMS, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S, at 7 o'clock, on the same day. The Right Honourable LORD ABERDARE, President, in the Chair.

Dinner charge, 21s., payable at the door; or Tickets may be had, and places taken, at 1, Saville-row, Burlington-gardens, up to noon on Saturday, May 21st.

The Friends of Fellows are admissible to the Dinner.

LEICESTER SCHOOL of ART,

HASTINGS STREET, LEICESTER.

In consequence of the RESIGNATION of the HEAD-MASTER of the above School on October 1st next, the Committee invite APPLICATIONS for the APPOINTMENT. Testimonials and specimens to be forwarded not later than JUNE 11TH, 1881, addressed to SAMUEL BARFIELD, Hon. Sec., School of Art, Leicester.

GRAND COMPETITION and EXHIBI-

TION OF DESIGNS for CHRISTMAS and NEW YEAR CARDS, to be held in JULY NEXT, at the EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY.—£2,000 given by Messrs. C. HILDESHIMER & Co., Fine Art Publishers, to be AWARDED IN SEVENTY PRIZES.—Conditions of Competition can be had on application to R. F. MCNAB, Manager, Egyptian Hall.

HERBERT EXHIBITION.—"THE JUDGMENT OF DANIEL." Painted for the House of Lords, and other Works by J. R. HERBERT, R.A., NOW ON VIEW at the HANOVER GALLERY, 47, NEW BOND STREET. Admission, One Shilling. From 9.30 to 6.

"SCOTLAND FOR EVER!!"—Grand

New Picture, "CHARGE of the 'GREYS' at WATERLOO," by Mrs. BUTLER, painter of the "Roll Call." ON VIEW at the EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly, from 10 A.M. till 6 P.M. Admission One Shilling. A PHOTOGRAPHURE will shortly be published by Messrs. HILDESHIMER & Co., of London, Manchester, and New York.

SHEPHERD BROTHERS, Art Com-

mission Agents and Picture Dealers, Nottingham, beg to announce that their LONDON PICTURE GALLERY is NOW OPEN, at 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W. (opposite Messrs. Christie & Manson's).—Choice Works ON VIEW by Henry Cavendish, sen., T. S. Cooper, R.A., E. J. Newman, L. J. Pott, Ernest Parton, Marcus Stone, A.R.A., Noble, Stark, Jutsum, &c.

SEND for CATALOGUE of SECOND-

HAND BOOKS:—Bibliography, Music, Travels, &c.—R. J. PARKER, 66, Castle-street, Leicester-square.

CATALOGUE (No. 27) of RARE and VALUABLE SECOND-HAND BOOKS (including a fine copy of Dugdale's Warwickshire and other County Histories) now ready, and sent to any address, on application to W. P. BENNETT (successor to R. Wilde), 3, Bull-street, Birmingham.

PARTNERSHIP in a PUBLISHING

FIRM WANTED by a LADY with Capital.—X., care of Gilbert & Field, 67, Moorgate-street, E.C.

BARTOLOZZI.—Will holders of AUTO-

GRAPH LETTERS to or from BARTOLOZZI, the eminent Engraver, kindly let me have an opportunity of inspecting them for the purposes of my book on "Bartolozzi and his Works," the first part of which is in the press? Any information and assistance will be gratefully acknowledged. Examples of his Prints would be purchased.—ANDREW W. TUCK, 20, Notting-hill-square, London, W.

$ 2, 2 0 0

PRIZES FOR DESIGNS

will be given by

WARREN, FULLER, & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

WALL PAPERS,

129, East 42nd Street, New York City,

U.S. AMERICA,

DOLS.	AS FOLLOWS:
1,000	for First Prize
500	for Second Prize
300	for Third Prize
200	for Fourth Prize
200	for Special Prize

THE EXHIBITION of DESIGNS will take place during the coming Fall at the AMERICAN ART GALLERY, MADISON SQUARE, NEW YORK, and will be under the management of Mr. R. E. MOORE.

Circulars, containing information respecting the conditions, can be had on application to ARTHUR TOOR & SONS, 5, Haymarket, London.

The following gentlemen have accepted the position of Judges:—MR. CHRISTIAN HEETER, of Messrs. Harter Brothers, New York; Mr. E. C. MOORE, of Messrs. Tiffany & Co., New York; Mr. FRANCIS LATHROP, Member and Treasurer of the Society of American Artists, New York.

All communications must be addressed to Mr. R. E. MOORE, No. 6, East 23rd Street, New York.

ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL MEDICAL

SCHOOL, ALBERT EMBANKMENT, LONDON, S.E.—The Winter Session commences on October 1, and the Summer on May 1. Students can enter at either Session. Two open entrance Scholarships of £100 and £50 for 1st Year's Students are awarded in October. In addition to ordinary prizes amounting to £200, the following Scholarships, Medals, &c. are given:—The "William Pitt" scholarship, £30; College Scholarship, £10 Guineas a-year for two years; "Musgrave" Scholarship, of same value; "Solby" Medal and Prize; "Cheseldon" Medal; "Mead" Medal; Treasurer's Gold Medal; "Granger" Prize, &c. Special Classes for Matriculation, Preliminary Scientific, and 1st M.B. of University of London, and Private Classes for other Examinations. There are numerous Hospital appointments open to Students without charge. For Prospectus and particulars apply to Dr. GILLIESPIE, Secretary.

AN ASSISTANT CATALOGUER

WANTED, of good education and with a knowledge of OLD BOOKS. Apply, by letter only, to H. S., Messrs. Sotherton & Co., Booksellers, 136, Strand.

TO BOOKBUYERS.—Now ready, Mr.

GLAISHER'S GENERAL CATALOGUE of REMAINDER BOOKS for 1881. Will be sent post-free on application.—W. GLAISHER, 255, High Holborn, London.

ENGLISH ETCHINGS: a Monthly

Publication of Original Etchings, the work of English Artists. Part I, JUNE. Price 3s. 6d.; Annual Subscription, £2 2s. A limited number of Parts, containing First Proof on Japanese Paper, price per Part one Guinea. Each Part will contain Four Etchings, which, together with descriptive Letterpress, will be contained in a handsome Portfolio, embellished with a Portrait of Rembrandt. Size: Imp. 4to (15 by 11). London: WILLIAM REEVES, Publisher, 185, Fleet-street.

LONDON LIBRARY,

12, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE.

THE FORTIETH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the MEMBERS will be held in the READING ROOM, on MONDAY, the 9th of MAY, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. By order of the Council, ROBT. HARRISON, Sec. and Librarian.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

THE NEW SEASON.—NOTICE.

The attention of all Readers of the Best Literature is respectfully requested to the List, Revised for the New Season, of the Principal Recent Books in Circulation at Mudie's Select Library. This List (postage free on application) will be found to contain an unusually large and varied Selection of Recent Works in History, Biography, Religion, Philosophy, Travel and Adventure, and the Higher Class of Fiction.

The Terms of Subscription—One Guinea per annum—are the lowest on which it is possible to furnish a constant and satisfactory supply of the leading Books of the day.

Fresh Copies of all New Books of General Interest continue to be added as the demand increases, and arrangements are made with the leading Publishers for an ample supply of all the Best Forthcoming Books as they appear.

In addition to the List of Recent Books in Circulation, a New Edition of Mudie's Catalogue of Second-hand Books is also ready for delivery. This Catalogue comprises a large selection of the best Books of the Past and Present Seasons, in good condition, with many older Works, several of which are out of print and not otherwise procurable, at the lowest current prices.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW OXFORD STREET. City Office: 2, King-street, Chespeide.

BIBLE REVISION

THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA:

The Six Principal English Versions of the New Testament, in parallel columns, beneath the Greek Original Text. Wiclif, 1380.—Tyndale, 1534.—Cranmer, 1539.—Geneva, 1537.—Rheims, 1582.—Authorized, 1611. 1 very handsome vol., 4to, £2 2s.; or morocco, gilt edges.

"In form and substance it is an admirable present for any clergyman." Observer.

London: S. HAUSER & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row.
And sold by all Booksellers.

Just published, 2s. 6d.

THE IRISH LAND QUESTION: Facts and Arguments. By CHARLES HIGGINS, F.R.S.I.

This book is having an immense sale, and is admitted by the Press and distinguished Members of Parliament to be the best work on this question.

Manchester and London: JOHN HEYWOOD.
All Booksellers and Railway Bookstalls.

Just published, crown 8vo, price 5s.

THE PROPHECIES OF ISAIAH. Translated from the Hebrew by J. M. RODWELL, M.A., Rector of St. Ethelburga, London: Translator of "The Koran," "The Book of Job," &c.

London: F. NORRIS, 7, King-street, Covent-garden.

Fourth Edition, crown 8vo, price 6s.

THE APOCRYPHAL GOSPELS, and other Documents relating to the History of Christ. Translated from the Originals in Greek, Latin, Syriac, &c. With Notes, Scriptural References, and Prolegomena. By B. HARRIS COWPER.

"Both the translation and the Introduction are most praiseworthy; and his general survey of the literature of the subject is complete without being diffuse."—Literary Churchman.

"A convenient and scholarly edition."—Spectator.

"The version is well executed, and the translator's Prolegomena proves his acquaintance with such literature. No pains has been spared by him to make his book intelligible."—Athenaeum.

London: F. NORRIS, 7, King-street, Covent-garden.

Crown 8vo, with Portrait, price 7s. 6d.

RENÉ DESCARTES: his Life and Meditations. A New Translation of "The Meditations." With Introduction, Memoir, and Commentary. By RICHARD LOWNDES, Author of "An Introduction to the Philosophy of Primary Beliefs."

"Exceedingly well adapted to introduce the student to Descartes, and through him, to the history of one main development of modern thought."

"More interesting and instructive than many a book of far greater pretensions. We consider it well adapted for a popular introduction to the historical study of philosophy."—Athenaeum.

London: F. NORRIS, 7, King-street, Covent-garden.

Fourth Edition, 8vo, price 18s., with upwards of 230 illustrations.

PREHISTORIC TIMES, as illustrated by Ancient Remains, and the Manners and Customs of Modern Savages. By Sir JOHN LEBROCK, Bart., M.P., F.R.S., &c.

"The book ranks among the noblest works of the interesting and important class to which it belongs."—Athenaeum.

"Those who desire a compact and careful review of the whole subject, well illustrated, will find it in this volume."—Ibid.

"On the subject of prehistoric archaeology it is not only a good book of reference, but the best."—Nature.

London: F. NORRIS, 7, King-street, Covent-garden.

8vo, price 12s.

THE ROMANS OF BRITAIN. By HENRY CHARLES COOTE, F.S.A.

"One of the most substantial, useful, and reliable contributions to the early history of Britain that has yet been produced."—Reliquary.

"It removes a considerable amount of the obscurity to which the epoch to which it relates has been involved."—Ibid. The book is very interesting and most ably written, and will repay a careful study."

Trans. of the Bristol and Gloucestershire Archaeological Society.

"His arguments are lucid, and supported by a vast amount of varied learning."—Archaeological Journal.

London: F. NORRIS, 7, King-street, Covent-garden.

NOTICE.—Now ready, price 3d.

THE PENNY POSTAGE SCHEME of 1837: Was it an Invention, or a Copy? By PATRICK CHALMERS, Author of "The Adhesive Stamp."

London: EFFINGHAM WILSON, Royal Exchange.

MAP of a HUNDRED SQUARE MILES ROUND AVEBURY, WILTSHIRE; with a KEY to the BRITISH and ROMAN ANTIQUITIES. By the Rev. A. C. SMITH, Rector of Yatesbury, Wilts; Hon. Secretary of the Wilts Archaeological and Natural History Society.

The above work will consist of two parts:—

First. THE GREAT MAP, 78 in. by 48 in., on the scale of 36 square inches to the mile, showing all the British and Roman Earth- and Stone-Works, printed in six colours.

Second. THE KEY, in large 4to, containing the Great Map in Sections, with accompanying descriptive letterpress and References to the best authorities, Views, Plans, &c.

The work, constituting a permanent record of one of the most important archaeological districts in Europe, has been twenty-five years in preparation, and will be published and issued to subscribers by the Marlborough College Natural History Society.

For Prospectus, giving full particulars and the opinions of antiquaries who have seen the work, apply to the Rev. J. A. PRESTON, The Green, Marlborough.

LONDON LIBRARY.

12, ST JAMES'S SQUARE.—Founded in 1841.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

PRESIDENT—THOMAS CARLYLE, Esq.

This Library contains 90,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature in various Languages. Subscription, £3 a-year, or £2 with Entrance-fee of £5: Life Membership, £50.
Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town Members.
Reading-room open from Ten to Half-past Six. Prospectus on application.
ROBERT HARRISON, Secretary and Librarian.

Now ready, in imitation panelled calf, price 7s. 6d., post-free.
CHAPTERS IN THE HISTORYOF
Old Saint Paul's.

With Two Illustrations, and a Facsimile from a Manuscript of the Twelfth Century Written in the Scriptorium of the Cathedral.

By the Rev. Dr. W. SPARROW SIMPSON, F.S.A.,
Minor Canon of St. Paul's, one of the Hon. Librarians of the Archbishop of Canterbury, Author of "Documents Illustrating the History of St. Paul's Cathedral," &c., &c.

"* A few copies have been printed on hand-made paper, and bound in Roxburghe binding, which can be had, price 9s. each, net.

London: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

Now ready, crown 8vo, uniform with the Bibliographies of Ruskin, Dickens, and Thackeray, price 6s., post-free.

THE BIBLIOGRAPHY OF

THOMAS CARLYLE.

With a Record of a large number of Uncollected Letters.

By R. HERNE SHEPHERD.

London: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

SONGS and SONNETS

OF

SPRING TIME.

By CONSTANCE W. NADEN.

London: C. KEGAN PAUL & Co., 1, Paternoster-square.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for MAY

contains:—Verdi's Opera, "Simon Boccanegra," at the Scala of Milan—The Music of Iwerak—The Great Composers: Berlioz—Mr. Pepys the Musician, by P. Hoffer—"Past Hours"—Sullivan's New Opera—Monday Popular, Crystal Palace, and Bach Choir Concerts, &c.—Royal Italian Opera—Occasional Notes, Foreign and Country News, Reviews, Correspondence, &c. Price 3d. 1 post-free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for MAY

contains:—"The Son of God goes forth to War" ("St. Ann's Tune"), by ARTHUR SULLIVAN; and "God so loved the World," Anthem, by Sir JOHN GOSS. Price 1d.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER, & CO.

have the honour to announce that they have purchased the ENTIRE STOCK and COPYRIGHTS of the Works hitherto published by MESSRS. NEUMAYER & CO., of Newmarket Hill, including the whole of the Valuable Compositions of REINHOLD BOHMANN, &c., &c.

London: NOVELLO, EWER, & Co., 1, Berners-street, W., and 80 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

Just published, in 1 vol., price 3s. 6d., post-free for cash.

Positive Aspects of Unitarian Thought and Doctrine:

Ten Lectures recently delivered by various Ministers in St. George's Hall, London.

With Preface by the Rev. JAMES MARTINEAU, D.D., &c.

To be had by order from any Bookseller, or at the Office of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, Norfolk-street, Strand, where also other Unitarian Books and Tracts may be obtained. Catalogues sent free.

Address Miss PHILPOT, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s., post-free.

STUDIES in PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

The Sun; Transit of Venus; Spectrum Analysis; the Moon; the Stars and Planets; Comets and Meteors; Atmospheric Electricity; Whirlwinds; Glaciers; the Telephone. By W. J. MILLAR, C.E., Secretary to the Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders in Scotland; Author of "Principles of Mechanics," &c.

Published at 21, Castle-street, Holborn.

TWO PROPRIETORS of NEWSPAPERS

and PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, Brief News & Opinion, the Furniture Gazette, the Review, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPLETE, ECONOMIC, and PUNCTUAL PRODUCTION of PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether illustrated or plain. Estimates furnished to Projectors of New Periodicals, for either Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—74 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

NEWSPAPERS and PERIODICALS

PRINTED BY EAST (ROTARY) MACHINERY,—MANAGER, Fleet Printing Works, 14, Whitefriars-street, E.C.

TRÜBNER & CO'S
LIST.FRANCE and the FRENCH,
in the SECOND HALF of the
NINETEENTH CENTURY.

By KARL HILLEBRAND. Translated from the Third German Edition. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. [Now ready.]

EDGAR QUINET:

HIS EARLY LIFE and WRITINGS.

By RICHARD HEATH. Post 8vo, with Portrait, Illustrations, and an Autograph Letter, cloth, 12s. 6d. [Now ready.]

PICTURES of INDIAN LIFE.

Sketched with the Pen, from 1552 to 1873. By ROBERT M. CUST, late of H.M. Indian Civil Service, and Hon. Sec. to the Royal Asiatic Society; Author of "Modern Languages of the East Indies" and "Oriental and Linguistic Essays." Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. [Now ready.]

EASTERN PROVERBS and EMBLEMS,

Illustrating Old Truths. By the Rev. J. LONG, Member of the Bengal Asiatic Society, F.R.G.S. Post 8vo, cloth. [Now ready.]

EDUCATION: Scientific and Technical;

or, How the Inductive Sciences Are Taught, and How they Ought to be Taught. By ROBERT GALLOWAY, M.R.I.A., F.C.S. Post 8vo, cloth. [Nearly ready.]

A GRAMMAR of the OLD FRIESIC LANGUAGE.

By A. H. CUMMINS, A.M. Crown 8vo, cloth. [Nearly ready.]

THE OCCULT WORLD.

By A. P. SINNETT. Crown 8vo, cloth. [Nearly ready.]

"THE MESNEVI"

(Usually known as the Mesnevi Sherif, or Holy Mesnevi) of Mevlana (our Lord), Jelali-ud-din Muhammed Er-rumi. Book the First. With a Life of the Author, his Ancestors, and Descendants. Illustrated by Anecdotes from El Fihri. Translated, and the Poetry Versified, in English, by J. W. REDHOUSE, M.R.A.S., &c. Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. "A complete treasury of occult Oriental lore."—Saturday Review.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of

MARK RUTHERFORD,

Dissenting Minister. Edited by his Friend, REUBEN SHARP-COTT. Crown 8vo, boards, 5s.

"This is a remarkable little book, and one that we strongly recommend for perusal."—St. James's Gazette.

THE HISTORY of INDIA

from the EARLIEST AGES.

By J. TALBOYS WHEELER, late Assistant Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department. Vol. IV., Part 2. MOGHUL EMPIRE—AURANGZEB. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

BRITISH ANIMALS EXTINCT

within HISTORIC TIMES;

With Some Account of British Wild White Cattle. By J. E. HARTING, F.L.S., F.Z.S. Demy 8vo, with Illustrations by Wolf, Whymper, and others, cloth, 14s.

"Mr. Harting has collected every available piece of evidence." St. James's Gazette.

DR. APPLETON:

his LIFE and LITERARY RELICS.

By J. H. APPLETON, M.A., late Vicar of St. Mark's, Staplefield Sussex; and A. H. SAYCE, M.A., Queen's College, Oxford. Post 8vo with Portrait, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"The brief story of his life is told with much feeling and simplicity." Scotsman.

BUDDHIST BIRTH STORIES;

Or, Jataka Tales. From the Jatakavannanā. Translated from the Original Pali by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS. Vol. I. Post 8vo, cloth, 18s.

"Will be of the greatest interest and importance to students." St. James's Gazette.

CONTRIBUTIONS to the HISTORY of the DEVELOPMENT of

The HUMAN RACE.

Lectures and Disquisitions. By LAZARUS GRÖBER. Translated from the German by DAVID ASHER, Ph.D. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The papers translated in this volume deal with various aspects of a very fascinating study."—St. James's Gazette.

THE CLASSICAL POETRY

of the JAPANESE.

By B. H. CHAMBERLAIN, Author of "Yeigo Henkaku Ichiran." Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"All who like interesting legends told in very readable verse should have the book."—Times.

THE ENEMIES of BOOKS.

By WILLIAM BLADES, Typograph. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, on laid paper, with Five Plates, parchment, 5s.

"His pleasant volume."—Saturday Review.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Just ready.

THE CORRESPONDENCE

OF

PRINCE TALLEYRAND

AND

LOUIS XVIII.

DURING THE CONGRESS OF VIENNA.

(Hitherto unpublished.)

From the MSS. preserved in the Archives of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs at Paris. With a Preface, Observations, and Notes by

M. G. PALLAIN.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo.

NEW NOVELS

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE CAMERONIANS. By James GRANT, Author of "The Romance of War," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo. [Immediately.]

TWO PRETTY GIRLS. By Miss M. A. LEWIS. 3 vols.

POLICY and PASSION. By Mrs. CAMPBELL PRAED. 3 vols.

"There seems to be an almost vista of interest and novelty opened up by this novel. The story is written with much mastery of the subject, power, strong earnestness, and sincerity."—Daily News.

"A remarkably good book, full of fresh and capable description, and abundantly supplied with sketches of character which show not a little power and observation."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"A novel of considerable power and of decided interest."—Athenaeum.

AN OCEAN FREE-LANCE. By W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c. 3 vols.

"This book carries the reader back to the days when he rejoiced in 'Peter Simple.'"—Academy.

"An unquestionably interesting book."—St. James's Gazette.

THE NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION OF
MISS BROUGHTON'S LATEST NOVEL,
SECOND THOUGHTS,

May now be had of all Booksellers, in crown 8vo., cloth, price 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,
NEW BURLINGTON STREET,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

Just published, Richly Illustrated.

ALFRED STEVENS, Sculptor:

A Biographical Study.

By WALTER ARMSTRONG.

This work contains illustrations of all the important works of Alfred Stevens, as well as detailed descriptions of them, and is therefore invaluable to all students and lovers of art.

Handsomely bound in white cloth, with Illustrated Cover, bevelled edges, imp. 4to, price 10s. 6d.

"Written with great warmth of feeling, and an eloquence full of sympathy and critical appreciation. The book aptly celebrates his genius, for it is in itself a work of artistic beauty."—Daily Telegraph.

NEXT WEEK.

NEW NOVEL BY CAPT. MAYNE REID.

THE FREE LANCES:

A Romance of the Mexican Valley.

By Captain MAYNE REID.

3 vols., 31s. 6d.

NEXT WEEK.

THE LETTERS of PROSPER MÉRIMÉE to PANIZZII.

Edited by LOUIS FAGAN,

Author of "The Life of Sir Anthony Panizzi."

2 vols., 25s.

LONDON:
REMINGTON & CO.,
134, NEW BOND STREET, W.

SEELEY & CO., 54, Fleet Street, London.

LIFE of ALBERT DURER. By Mrs. CHARLES HEATON. New Edition. With Portrait and sixteen illustrations. 8vo, 10s. 6d., cloth.
"The completest work we have on the subject in the English language."—Westminster Review

MICHELANGELO, LIONARDO da VINCI, and RAPHAEL. By CHARLES CLEMENT. With Eight Illustrations on Copper. 10s. 6d., crown 8vo, cloth.
"The author's clear and luminous style lends a great charm to his work."—Court Circular.

THE LIFE of TURNER. By P. G. Hamerton. With Nine Etchings after the Painter's Sketches. 8s. 6d., cloth.
"Mr. Hamerton writes with the simplicity and clearness of one who has thought out the matters with which he deals. He is entitled to our gratitude for the conscientiousness with which he has performed this task."—Edinburgh Review.

MODERN FRENCHMEN: Five Biographies. By P. G. HAMERTON. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d., cloth.
I. VICTOR JACQUEMONT. II. FRANÇOIS RUDE.
III. HENRY PERREYVE. IV. JEAN-JACQUES AMPERE.
V. HENRI REGNAULT.
"A book which deserves to be popular; a book which it is pleasant to read, and which, once read, is not likely to be forgotten."—Saturday Review.

CLERICAL REMINISCENCES. By Senex. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.
"We have read few more charming books. . . . It is a genuine specimen of the most delightful and difficult branch of literature—autobiography."—Clergyman's Magazine.

STORIES from HOMER. By the Rev. ALFRED J. CHURCH, M.A. With Twenty-four Illustrations after Flaxman. Tinted in the style of the Greek Vases. Eleventh Thousand. 5s., cloth.
"A book which ought to become an English classic."—Spectator.

STORIES from VIRGIL. By the Rev. ALFRED J. CHURCH, M.A. With Twenty-four Tinted Illustrations after Puelli. Seventh Thousand. 5s.
"Superior to his 'Stories from Homer,' good as they were."—Times.

STORIES from the GREEK TRAGEDIANS. By the Rev. A. J. CHURCH, M.A. With Twenty-four Illustrations by Flaxman and others. Fifth Thousand. 5s., cloth.
"The great old tragic tales have been told with consummate beauty and delicacy."—Literary Churchman.

STORIES of the EAST, from HERODOTUS. By the Rev. A. J. CHURCH. Fourth Thousand. With Coloured Illustrations. 5s., pr gilt edges, 6s.
"A very quaint and delightful book."—Spectator.

A TRAVELLER'S TRUE TALE: after Laclau. By the Rev. A. J. CHURCH. Third Thousand. With Eight Illustrations. 3s. 6d., cloth.
"This work ought to be popular both with old and young."—Daily Telegraph.

THE STORY of the LAST DAYS of JERUSALEM. By the Rev. A. J. CHURCH. With Coloured Illustrations. 3s. 6d.
"Mr. Church's new volume has all the charms of his former ones."—Saturday Review.

SUN, MOON, and STARS: a Book on Astronomy for Beginners. Fifth Thousand. With Coloured Illustrations. 8vo, 5s., cloth.
"This volume is one which ought to have a place in village libraries and mechanics' institutions; its general appearance, as well as contents, should also make it welcome as a prize book."—Pall Mall Gazette.

A NEST of SPARROWS: a Tale. By M. E. WINCHESTER. Crown 8vo, Frontispiece, cloth, 5s.
"The story is most genuinely pathetic without being sad."—Pall Mall Gazette.

DOROTHY'S DAUGHTERS: a Tale. By Mrs. MARSHALL. Crown 8vo, Frontispiece, 5s.

MEMORIES of TROUBLOUS TIMES: being the History of Dame Alicia Chamberlayne. By Mrs. MARSHALL. With Six Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s., cloth.

THE ROCHEMONTS: a Story of Three Homes. By Mrs. MARSHALL. Crown 8vo, 5s., cloth.

STORIES BY MRS. MARSHALL.
Job Singleton's Heir. 5s.
Lady Alice. 5s.
Joanna's Inheritance. 5s.
Life's Aftermath. 5s.
Now-a-days. 5s.
A Lily among Thorns. 5s.
Heights and Valleys. 5s.
Mrs. Maiewaring's Journal. 5s.
Brothers and Sisters. 5s.
Helen's Diary. 5s.
The Old Gateway. 5s.
Millmont Legh. 5s.
Violet Douglas. 5s.
Edward's Wife. 5s.
Christabel Kingscote. 5s.

London: SEELEY & Co., 54, Fleet-street.

SATURDAY, MAY 14, 1881.

No. 471, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Calendar of the State Papers relating to Ireland in the Reign of James I.—1615–25.
Edited by the Rev. C. M. Russell, D.D., and J. P. Prendergast, Esq. (Longmans.)

EVEN those who had no personal acquaintance with Dr. Russell cannot fail to sympathise with Mr. Prendergast in his brief, but heartfelt, reference to the sad accident which has deprived him of a "valued friend and fellow-labourer," and all who take interest in Irish history of a thoroughly efficient guide.

The volume now published, the last on the title-page of which Dr. Russell's name will appear, covers the concluding ten years of the reign of James I. It was not a period of any great achievements or of any great disasters. The reader who knows what is before him is insensibly attracted, not so much by anything that took place at the time, as by the signs of the approaching ruin which was to come sixteen years after the reign of James was over. Those signs are not wanting. The great Ulster eviction was indeed completed, and the native population there were forcibly constrained to look forward to the better days which they hoped were coming. But there were other plantations than those of Ulster. Wexford and Longford, among other districts, were being reduced to order, as order was understood in England; and, as there was less haste and violence here than there had been in the Northern settlement, it is worth while to examine these cases, in order that we may know what were the real hardships of the new system.

In the first place, we may probably take it for granted that the intention with which these plantations were ordered was really good. The opening paragraph of a letter from the King to Lord Deputy Chichester (No. 65) is thus given in the editor's abstract:—

"[He] finds no remedy for the barbarous manners of the mere Irish, which keep out the knowledge of literature and of manual trades to the lamentable impoverishment and, indeed, destruction of that people, so ready and feasible as, first, by settling a firm estate in perpetuity to such of the present inhabitants as have the best disposition to civility, who have heretofore held them but temporarily, and subject to the extortions and tyranny of their usurped chieftains; and, secondly, by intermixing among them some of the British, to serve for examples, and teach them order, and settling them in places where, by reason of the King's title, he may place them without wronging any of his subjects there."

Very likely this seemed an excellent plan from the safe distance of Whitehall. The mode adopted for carrying it out was to assign three-fourths of the divisible land to the natives and one-fourth to the new-comers. As the natives received their land in freehold, it is probable that seventy-five acres on the new system were more valuable than a hundred acres on the old. But the practical working of the plan was under the influence of the officials of the Government in Ireland, and it was notorious that these officials had a keen eye to their own fortunes. In Wexford they gave the British undertakers exactly twice as much as they ought to have had (No. 399), and this little mistake had to be rectified. Even if the plantation were carried out in the most favourable way for the natives, the amount of oppression caused by it must have been very great. The land had originally been held by the whole sept. Out of these holders the Government selected some of the most well-to-do, and made them freeholders. The rest got nothing at all. As Lord Deputy St. John and the Irish Council put it (No. 710), freeholders of less than eighty or a hundred acres were not included in the distribution "as not good for themselves." They were much shocked that some of the excluded persons went over to England to complain, and that after their return they had induced nearly two hundred others to bring their grievances to Dublin. The complainants had not possessed land enough to be made freeholders, and that was quite enough. Beside that, they had been rebels from the time of Richard II. "On the other side," according to the editor's abstract,

"when it shall be considered how those countries since the division have continued these three years in peace and quiet, no discontent appearing, no complaints of wrong or partiality ever made, the undertakers and many of the natives having erected upon their allotments many strong and good buildings, wherein they have already disbursed £8,000 or £9,000, have advanced to his Majesty a good rent of £500 per annum, and have drawn many families of English and civil men as well out of England as out of the pale here, who dwell enclosed, and manure their lands in such sort that it is now the best settled part (for so much land) in all Ireland, and envied and misliked by none but such idle and poor people as those complainants; then the King will easily judge of the unworthiness of their complaints and inflict severe punishment upon them or any the like that shall go about with unjust clamours to disturb his best and noblest works, tending so much to the reediment and happiness of this poor kingdom."

It is not very difficult to perceive through all this the true state of the case. The country was materially benefited, and some of the natives improved their position. But to the mass of the people a plantation meant expropriation, with nothing in return for the land which they had held under Irish custom. No doubt some of them might have been better off as tenants, or even as labourers, in a civilised country than they had been as landowners in an uncivilised one. But this was uncertain, and it was hardly likely that they would look forward to it with satisfaction. They had received a distinct wrong in being deprived of their holdings without compensation under a system of law which was utterly alien to them. If each Irish holder had been simply recognised as a freeholder, it is certain that the process of civilisation would have been slower than ardent reformers wished it to be. The small freeholders would have struggled hard to retain their ancient habits. But the sense of full proprietorship would have weighed with them at last; and there would have been no temptation to join in the agrarian rebellion which for a time swept English civilisation, together with the English settlers, out of the greater part of Ireland.

SAMUEL R. GARDINER.

Early Spring in Massachusetts. From the Journal of Henry Thoreau. (Boston: Houghton & Mifflin; London: Trübner.)

THOREAU kept a diary, in which he entered daily his observations of nature and his thoughts about nature in his half-scientific, half-poetical fashion. This diary was bequeathed by his sister to Mr. H. G. O. Blake, who had the happy idea of publishing some part of it in a novel form. Instead of giving the entries year by year, as they were written, Mr. Blake has arranged together all the passages under the same day of the month in different years, and so given us a regular record of Thoreau's impressions as the days went by—a solid perspective of early spring in the New England States. The present volume contains the entries from February 24 to April 11. Let us hope that it is only a first instalment, and that we shall hereafter have a similar record of Thoreau's summer, autumn, and winter in due course.

For it is a most charming, a most enticing, and a most exasperating book. No one who takes it up can lay it down till he has read it through to the last page. Set aside the exasperation for the present, and look first at the charm. Thoreau was, above all things, a lover of nature. He did not analyse very deeply, but he observed closely and accurately, and he sympathised passionately with bird, beast, insect, and flower. His minute watchfulness, his deep interest in the life of plants and animals, his care for every detail of their habits and their ways of thought, remind one sometimes of Gilbert White and sometimes of The Gamekeeper at Home. We follow him through the snow-covered fields and along the ice-bound river-side at Concord—the name, the Puritan associations, the Indian memories, all harmonise wonderfully with the man's nature—and we watch as eagerly as he does for the woodchuck's tracks, for the nuts gnawed by the flying squirrel, for the traces of geosanders in the drifts. For, of course, Thoreau's early spring is very wintry to an English eye, and its landscape is rather dreary in its monotonous whiteness; but that is America, and it must pass. What Thoreau saw in it, what life he read into that dreary waste, is the great thing. The tracks of sparrows about every little sprig of dry capsules rising, seemingly empty, above the snow suffice to show him where the birds have been seeking the last few seeds. The brightening of the osiers, growing green or reddish as the dormant sap awakens, tells him of the approach of spring.

In such a book it is dangerous to quote, for when once one begins there is no ending; and besides, one fears to do injustice to its flavour as a whole by selecting one little chosen bit as a sample, perhaps quite inadequately. Still, a quotation is absolutely necessary to give some idea of the quality; so I take the first I light upon in the earliest date, at random, as a fair specimen:—

"Went through that long swamp north-east of Boaz's meadow. Interesting and peculiar are the clumps and masses of panicle audromeda, with light-brown stems, topped uniformly with very distinct yellow-brown recent shoots, ten or twelve inches long, with minute red buds sleeping close along them. This uniformity in such masses gives a pleasing tinge to the swamp's surface. Wholesome colors which wear well. I see quite a number of emperor moths' cocoons attached to this shrub; some hung round with a loose mass of leaves as big as my two fists. What art in the red-eye to make these two adjacent maple twigs serve for the rim of its pensile basket, interweaving them. Surely it finds a place for itself in nature between the two twigs of a maple. On the side of the meadow moraine, just north of the boulder field, I see barberry bushes three inches in diameter and ten feet high. What a surprising color this wood has. It splits and splinters very much when I bend it. I cut a cane, and, shaving off the outer bark, find it of imperial yellow, as if painted—fit for a Chinese mandarin."

Close observation, poetical insight, exquisite sense of literary form, supreme command of rich, terse, and varied English—these are the great charms of the book. Written almost in the open air, with the pictures fresh in the eye, it is redolent on every page of nature and the woodlands. But perhaps the strangeness of the names, and especially the Latin titles of plants—rhodora, andromeda, and so forth (there are few English ones current in America)—will spoil the book to some extent for readers here. Clam-shell Hill and Hosmer's Farm are certainly a poor substitute for our lovely topographical nomenclature, our fells and our granges. On the other hand, to one who (like the present reviewer, if he may venture to be personal) has been brought up among the fauna and flora which Thoreau describes, all these details—nay, the very names of bluebirds and snow-buntings, mink and musquash, bullfrogs and pickerel, sumach and hemlock—bring back a rush of memories of that primaeval forest scenery which has not yet everywhere been vulgarised and degraded by obtrusive civilisation, even in Canada and the Eastern States. It is hard to judge calmly of such a poetical book, dealing with such familiar ground, and not to let the emotions get the better at times of the critical faculty. Many Englishmen, however, may perhaps fail to interest themselves sufficiently in the woodchuck and the sheldrakes. After all, even Selborne itself would be dull if we did not know all the birds and flowers ourselves beforehand.

And now for the exasperation. Beautiful as the book is, every page of it is disfigured by Thoreau's supreme self-consciousness. Gilbert White and Mr. Jefferies never obtrude themselves. Thoreau is perpetually posing before us, among the flowers and birds, as a great man and an inspired transcendentalist. The little world wags on in its foolish fashion; he knows a more excellent way. The American Association for the Advancement of Science asks him, by circular, in what branch of study he is especially interested—surely a harmless question enough. Thoreau "could state to a select few that department of human enquiry which engages him;" but he could not do it to the inferior scientists of the American Association, "inasmuch as they do not believe in a science which deals with the higher law." So he was obliged to describe to them "that poor part of me which alone they can understand." "The fact is," he remarks complacently, "I am a mystic, a transcendentalist;" and we are bound to admit that his transcendentalism sometimes resembles that of the good lady whose remarks upon the howling of the abyss so utterly astonished Martin Chuzzlewit. It is, in fact, Boston Platonism run mad. In him the culture of the older States, in revolt and reaction against the crude and gross materialism of the West and the masses, yet itself often half-educated, takes refuge in a mysticism which seems to mean much and be very grand, while in reality it is only self-conceit masquerading in Carlylesque and Emersonian fashion as an infinite superiority to common humanity. He laughs at people who "are ready to skin the animals alive to come at them," while "it is rare that we get a new suggestion;" yet he would equally have laughed down anything like a rational attempt to account for the animals themselves. His sneers are generally at those who really stood nearer to the truth than he himself did. He makes fun of the American exploring expeditions, with reports "followed by an appendix on the palaeontology of the route by a distinguished savant who was not there, the last illustrated by very finely executed engravings of some old broken shells picked up on the road." A man who talks like this is exhibiting, not the superiority, but the one-sidedness of his own nature. Goethe saw spiritual things with as keen an eye as Thoreau; but that was not the way in which Goethe followed the memorable conflict between Cuvier and Geoffroy St.-Hilaire.

However, we must not part in ill-humour with what is, when all is said, a delicious and a faithful book. One more quotation may set us straight again:—

"As it is important to consider Nature from the point of view of science, remembering the nomenclature and systems of men, and so, if possible, go a step farther in that direction, so it is equally important often to ignore or forget all that men presume that they know, and take an original and unprejudiced view of Nature, letting her make what impression she will on you, as the first men, and all children, and natural men do. For our science, so called, is always more barren and mixed with error than our sympathies are."

That is just the justification for our Thoreaus and our Ruskins, and they are a boon to humanity in their own way. Yet it is not the only, or even the highest, way.

GRANT ALLEN.

Our Holiday in the East. By Mrs. George Sumner. Edited by the Rev. George Henry Sumner. (Hurst & Blackett.)

THIS book describes a tour, made by seven persons, to Egypt, Palestine, Cyprus, Athens, Constantinople, returning to England via the Danube, the time occupied being about three months. The party made themselves very comfortable under the charge of a dragoman called "Hani," who had acted in the same capacity with "Rob Roy" (Mr. John Macgregor) in his canoe voyage to the source of the Jordan. So well did this man do his duty that, when they reached the site of Jericho, the conclusion is expressed as to the small amount of pity likely to be felt for anyone who might be sent to that place, provided he was under Hani's care. Eastern travel was all quite new to the party, and the capabilities of tent-life for almost luxurious comfort was rather a surprise to them. There is, perhaps, no condition of existence so pleasant as tent-life in the East. The constant change of scene, with places of interest in a country like Palestine appealing to the feelings as well as to the intellect, the daily movement of what has become for the time a canvas home—all is most delightful and exhilarating. Its effect tells on the mind no less than on the body, producing a most healthy result in both. This is acknowledged at the end of the long journey, when, on bidding good-bye to Hani and his attendant Arabs, the writer declares their wandering life to have been "sweet and attractive." It may be mentioned here that in India tent-life has attained a still higher condition of development; and that anyone wishing to see it in its perfection should travel in that country, and, if possible, as a guest of the Viceroy, whose camp might be described as a royal palace where all the ceremony of vice-regal state is kept up. A state dinner in St. George's Hall at Windsor does not eclipse in magnificence a similar ceremony given by the Queen's representative in Hindostan under canvas on the "Maidan" at Agra or Delhi.

Mrs. Sumner's account of tent-life in the Holy Land, and of the pleasant party they seemed to have formed, is all very delightful reading. To many, the references to the places where well-known events connected with Bible history took place, and the religious feelings manifested, will be specially attractive. No pretension is made to research or criticism. In the Preface, written by the editor, this is frankly acknowledged, and the absence of any attempt to solve the knotty questions connected with disputed holy sites is alluded to. The emotional, in the form of veneration, is so strong that most of the sites are accepted; and, in the case of Calvary, one is almost led to infer that Mrs. Sumner believes in two—that approved by Lieut. Conder, and the traditional one within the precincts of the Holy Sepulchre. Of course, she only says she could "imagine" the three crosses on the grassy knoll near the Damascus Gate, which is most probably the hill of El Heid-hemiyeh, where the Grotto of Jeremiah is. This knoll has been cut away at one time, in connexion with the defence of Jerusalem—a fact which does not necessarily interfere with Lieut. Conder's theory; but its tendency is in the negative direction. The author's statement that "the whole of modern Jerusalem is some twenty or thirty feet above the level of the ancient city" requires qualification. In many places the rock is visible, as at the Holy Sepulchre; in others Col. Warren found that as much as sixty, seventy, and even 120 feet of débris had accumulated in the valleys. The position of the Holy City on rocky heights, divided by deep valleys, will explain that the accumulation could not possibly be uniform.

The "growth of myths" is in our day a very important subject of speculation. Many illustrations can be given in the past of great names, as well as great events, absorbing the lesser elements around—Cleopatra's Needle is a well-known instance; but the all-pervading influence of the press at the present day might have led to the conclusion that such a process had ceased. The book under consideration supplies evidence that this is not so. The opening of the Suez Canal was certainly a great event in the East, and its greatness is yearly becoming more manifest. At p. 25 the author mentions a house of reception at the Great Pyramid, built for the Prince of Wales "at the time of the opening of the Suez Canal." This is no doubt what was told to the lady by the dragoman, or by the Arabs, on the spot; and it is a good illustration of the power of important names on primitive minds. The house was constructed at the time here stated, but his Royal Highness most certainly was not at the opening of the Suez Canal. Again, at p. 61, we read of a palace built at Ismailia "for the Emperor and Empress of the French when the Suez Canal was opened." The Emperor of the French was not at the opening ceremony, although the Empress was; and the palace was not erected either for her, or for the Emperor of Austria, who was also there, but for a grand ball which was given among the festivities. As the writer was himself present on the occasion, these statements are not matters of hearsay.

Mrs. Sumner had the privilege of visiting the wife of the Khedive, as well as the harem of other high officials at Cairo; and she gives an interesting account of the ladies she saw. Her description is not made objectionable, like some which have been given to the world, by speaking in a tone of sarcastic criticism of persons who did their best to be civil to her; all she says on this head is written in the best of taste.

WILLIAM SIMPSON.

The Crowned Hippolytus. Translated from Euripides. With New Poems. By A. Mary F. Robinson. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

MISS ROBINSON has carried through, with a due admixture of faithfulness and poetical fire, her clever version of one of the most elaborate dramas of Euripides, one that is interesting not less in its plot than in its poetic finish and its subtle insight into human character. The gist of the tragedy of The Crowned Hippolytus is the fate of the strait-laced worshippers of the virgin Artemis, brought about through the guilty passion of Phædra, the second wife of Theseus, for her husband's son by the Amazon Hippolyte. In the contest between the goddesses Artemis and Aphrodite, Hippolytus slights the power of the latter; while she retaliates by awakening in Phædra and revealing, through the Nurse's agency, to Hippolytus, the terrible passion which she evades by death, having first converted the love of Theseus towards his son into hate and suspicion by a charge of dis-honourable proposals towards herself. It will be seen that the field of the authoress admits of full play in the character of Phædra, preferring death to shame, and compromised only by the false charge; in the skilful drawing of the Nurse; and in the bitterness of Hippolytus towards wives and women in general. The play, which comes next in time to the Medea, is greatly akin to it in tone, though in the latter drama the passion of Medea is the chief subject of the play, in the Hippolytus the passion of Phædra is secondary to that of the virgin hero.

Out of the many passages which might be chosen to illustrate Miss Robinson, some have been indicated in brief; but in preference to the speeches of the Nurse, or the unquiet utterances of Phædra, we would take a sample, near the opening, of the hero's offering to his patron goddess, one of the loveliest gleanings from Greek descriptive poetry (verses 72-87: χαῖρέ μοι . . . ὡς περ ἡρέα μιν βίου).

"Welcome to me, O fairest
Artemis, loveliest maiden
Of them that walk on Olympus!

I bring for thee a plaited wreath of flowers
From meadow lands untrodden and unmown.
There never shepherd dares to feed his flocks,
Nor iron comes therein: only the bee
Through that unsullied meadow in the spring
Flies on and leaves it pure, and Reverence
Freshens with rivers' dew the tended flowers.
And only they whose virtue is untainted,
They that inherit purity, may pluck
Their bloom, and gather it—no baser man.
Yet, O dear mistress, from this pious hand
Take thou a garland for thy golden hair.
For I of all men only am thy friend
To share thy converse and companionship,
Hearing thy voice, whose eyes I never see—
And thus may I live till I reach the goal."

In the above passage the statue of Artemis is supposed to stand on the stage, and the words are those of Hippolytus on first greeting her. A few lines may be added to represent the argument of the Nurse in verses 464-70 (πόσους δὲ παῖσι . . . πῶς ἂν ἐκνεύσαι δοκέῃς), that illicit amours are often winked at.

"How many fathers help their sons to sin,
Accomplices of Cypris? And the wise
Set us this saw: let foul things slip the sight.
One must not look too curiously at life,
Nor carve and polish the overhanging roof;
But canst thou find no way to scape thy fate?
If, on the whole, thou hast more good than ill,
Then for a mortal thou art reckoned happy."

The authoress has rightly divined that the metaphor here is from the inexactness of carpentry, the comparison being between morals and manual art. She has studied her text with pains and clear insight—nay, not unfrequently with happy cleverness.

Of the shorter poems in the volume, "The Redelove" (after the Novella of Messer Giov. Batt. Giral di Cinthio, 1550) is the most considerable and the most pathetic. Moreover, it is not tinged with aught of that more terrible tragedy which seems to have chiefly characterised the tales of the early Italian novelist. Rather, it depicts how the loves of Antonio and Dafne, warrior's son and blind old poet's daughter, linked together in life, were past sundering in death; and how the cement that united them at last beneath the laurel trees was

"When they that buried him beside his love Found, on the shapeless dust, a blossoming clove."

Among other samples of Miss Robinson's poems, one that takes us by storm in its outrightness and blunt delineation of motive is called "Captain Ortis' Booty," a singular, but effective, ballad of the boon which that Spanish Lancer won from Alva at the taking of Antwerp—to wit, the guerdon of the prison in which lay, not merely secular criminals, but the foes of religion. The closing verses will show of what type it is.

"Yes, and I praise him, for my part,
This man, war-beaten and tough of heart.
Who, scheming a booty, no doubt planned it
More like a saint, as I think, than a bandit.
What, my friend, is too coarse for you?
Will naught less than a Galahad do?
Well; far nobler, no doubt, your sort is:
But I—I declare for brave Captain Ortis."

A word of praise is due to "Under the Trees," and another of query to what strikes us, in p. 188, as the affected archaism, "Thespian Promises." But we should say that Miss Robinson might trust herself to gather (such affectations apart) the more uncultured wreaths of Greek dramatic poetry.

JAMES DAVIES.

History of China. By Demetrius Charles Boulger. Vol. I. (W. H. Allen.)

THE present volume bears out on every page the statement made in the Preface that the task of writing it was "very congenial" to the author. Mr. Boulger's previous works on Asiatic history have shown how completely he is able to master the intricacies of Oriental politics, and to follow the workings of Eastern minds. And in the work before us these qualities are equally conspicuous. The history of China is evidently to him a long epic, in which the characters are living people and the rise and fall of dynasties are real events. Having thus realised his subject, he is in a position to write about it; and, though we disagree with some of his conclusions, and consider that he does not always take a correct view of the political situation, his book is well worthy of careful study by those to whom the history of China may as yet have been a sealed book.

Mr. Boulger begins with the beginning of Chinese history, and writes "the end" at the downfall of the Yuen Dynasty (A.D. 1368). The field covered is therefore a wide one, embracing the growth of the nation, from the first appearance of the Chinese in China as a wandering tribe to their adoption of the feudal system, and finally to their development into the subjects of an empire. Feudalism has been a first step towards empire in all history; and the circumstances of its rise and fall in Northern China are exactly what we should have expected from the universal experience of other nations. But the disintegrating forces in China were very active. As the divisions between the various States became more marked, the Chinese rulers and nobles began to fall under the influence of the languages and customs of the aboriginal peoples by whom they were surrounded. Thus little by little their separation from the central kingdom of Chow became greater, in spite of the constant endeavours of the Imperial Court to draw tightly the bonds which bound them together. Every effort was made by the adoption of a new system of writing, by constant Imperial progresses through the principalities, by the collection of dialectic vocabularies, and by the interchange of popular ballads to hold together that which was inevitably destined to fall to pieces in order to give birth to an empire.

As in all such cases, the death-throes of feudalism were accompanied by frightful bloodshed, which was by no means stanch on the establishment of the empire in 221 B.C. by Shi Hwang-ti. Of this ruler the Chinese historians say that he was wu taou, "destitute of reason;" and, as long as Chinese history lasts, it will be told of him that he planned and carried into effect, as far as he was able, the destruction of the national literature. Mr. Boulger defends this act as having been made necessary by the circumstances of the time. But, to us, it appears as both a crime and a blunder. The Chinese were then, as now, both by natural instinct and acquired habit, a literary people. To throw into the flames every book in the country was, therefore, at once to outrage their feelings as a nation, and to sever the sympathies of the people from him. That these were the results of the deed might, even if the history of his reign had not shown them to be so, be gathered from the effect produced by the opposite course which was followed by the founder of the Han Dynasty, who, on his accession to the throne fifteen years later, earned the gratitude and admiration of his subjects by his endeavours to recover the lost texts, and to revive the ancient learning which had received so severe a shock.

Gaining wisdom from these experiences, the founders of all subsequent dynasties, whether Chinese, Mongolian, or Tatar, have sought to win the affection of their subjects by becoming the patrons of scholars; and the firm hold which the reigning Manchu house has on the regard of the people was gained less by the prowess of Shun-chi than by the encouragement given to the national literature by K'ang-he and K'ien-lung, the second and fourth emperors of the line. It is noticeable, also, that in the many overthrows of dynastic thrones recounted by Mr. Boulger there is not to be found an instance in which the dispossessed Sovereign was an enlightened scholar. In every case, with a decline of Imperial qualities, the love of learning has waned also, with the invariable result of driving the scholars of the empire into the camp of the malcontents and rebels.

Students of Mr. Boulger's volume will, unless bearing this in mind, have difficulty in recognising the elements of stability which, in spite of the constant overthrow of dynasties and the successful invasions of Mongolians and Tatars, have perpetuated the empire, and have maintained intact the principles of government which were formulated by Confucius. At every few pages we are called upon to stand at the death-bed of a Sovereign, or to watch the flight of the last of a line of emperors. Such events form prominent features in Oriental history; but, happily, they present greater attractions to native annalists than to Mr. Boulger, who has wisely relieved the monotony of their recurrence by graphic descriptions of those con-temperary incidents which moulded the external fortunes of the empire.

ROBERT K. DOUGLAS.

Unbelief in the Eighteenth Century, as contrasted with its Earlier and Later History. Being the Cunningham Lectures for 1880. By John Cairns, D.D., Principal and Professor of Systematic Theology in the United Presbyterian College. (Edinburgh: A. & C. Black.)

FROM no lack of ability within their own communion, but in a spirit of liberality such as the Scottish Free Church has often shown, the Cunningham Trustees appointed for their lecturer last year the learned Principal of the United Presbyterian College. He has justified their choice in the series of lectures under review. His main subject is the history of unbelief in England, Germany, and France during the eighteenth century; but not the least interesting part of his work are the sketches which he has drawn in contrast or illustration from earlier and later phases of sceptical opinion.

A clergyman who undertakes to lecture upon the historical developments of unbelief will find the work he has set himself a severe test alike of candour and of sound judgment. If he thinks too much of the edification of his hearers, he will be suspected of suppression and reserve where they specially look to him for a clear and reliable record of past opinion. On the other hand, he cannot, and should not, forget that, as a Christian teacher addressing a Christian audience, he incurs some responsibility in laying before them a series of doubts and objections any complete answer to which is often precluded by the very conditions of human knowledge. Dr. Cairns has not failed in these requisite qualifications. His own views will bear the inspection even of keen-eyed Scottish orthodoxy; but, as they are not held back, so also they are not too much obtruded. He has not infused into his pages any of the bitterness of polemical controversy, and is always anxious neither to misrepresent nor to exaggerate. He writes as one who is well assured that the Christianity which has borne the brunt of so many fierce attacks will always be strong enough to rest simply and securely upon its own innate strength.

An acquaintance with German theology is of course indispensable to any sufficient estimate of modern Rationalism. Dr. Cairns has studied the Germans well. Indeed, in reading his pages, the thought has several times occurred that he has caught too much of the German diction for grace and vigour of style. It must be added that, perhaps from some carelessness in correcting the proofs, there are occasionally sentences which, if grammatical, are at all events scarcely intelligible. What is the meaning of the following?—

"Conybeare argued, indeed, that an inspiration might be conceived quite distinct from Tindal's alleged building on natural truths, and that even if an inspired person were shut up to receive new truth by proved agreement with old, it would thus enter" (p. 87).

Or again—

"Such a believing spirit, as we see in Germany, making literature, after Luther, run so much in one channel, and in England, where, amid a great creative period, a name like that of Bacon stands conspicuous by homage to the Bible, by-and-by gives place" (p. 37).

Yet Dr. Cairns is quite able to write good and lucid English. His style is directly affected by his matter. The Deism, for instance, of the last century has lost the greatest part of its interest. It is not that modern theology is no longer occupied with the questions then under discussion. English Deistical writers, and the distinguished divines who replied to them, were among the first to open out lines of thought which are full of interest in our own day. But there has been a thorough change, none the less real for being to a great extent intangible and undescribable, in tone and spirit and point of view. No one, whatever be his opinions, feels himself altogether in sympathy with the controversialists on either side, and their volumes grow dusty on old library shelves. If Dr. Cairns' style becomes somewhat depressed by the occasional heaviness of his subject, some indulgence may willingly be granted him. A writer will hardly keep up to his best level when he has begun to nod over the pages which he consults. Whenever the learned Principal passes from the record of bygone disputes to general reflections, or to subjects in which he, equally with the reader, feels a stronger interest, his style at once revives. We might quote, for example, some excellent remarks on the collapse of eighteenth-century Deism, from a passage which begins as follows:—

"Nor did the Deists fail through intellectual weakness alone; they wanted the elements of moral victory. They wanted a creed, a worship, a polity, a tradition. They wanted that without which success is nowhere possible in the moral field, and least of all in England—enthusiasm. The Reformation was not carried without men that would go to the stake, nor civil liberty without men that would rush to the field. No mere simplification of a belief has ever conquered, unless the half has burned more brightly than the whole" (p. 117).

Dr. Cairns' opening lecture is upon the unbelief of the first four centuries as contrasted with that of the eighteenth. Then, in regard to free thought, it was, he says, not the sceptical party, as in the later period, but the Church, that was the special champion of unfettered enquiry and emancipated reason. "Humanis juris," argued Tertullian, "et naturalis juris est, unicuique quod putaverit colere . . . nec religionis est cogere religionem." A second point of contrast is the defence by Celsus, Porphyry, and Julian of a purified polytheism, as compared with the attack of the later opponents of Christianity upon the principle of any divine revelation. His third contrast is the general authority conceded to the Scriptures by early pagan writers, but denied to them by eighteenth-century sceptics. There is much that is instructive in these comparisons; but, like most contrasts of the kind, they are too sharply cut, and are rather open to question. The early Church did, indeed, like other minorities, plead for freedom; yet it must also be remembered that it brought persecution upon itself for the very reason that it was emphatically aggressive, and could brook no rival claim and no equality of altars. It can hardly be argued that any average Churchman in the time of Athanasius would have been more tolerant in his opinions than his representative in the Georgian age. Tertullian's views of toleration, notwithstanding his words quoted above, were far more like those of such impetuous Churchmen as Hickes or Leslie than of any one of the Deists against whom they wrote. So again with the second contrast. There is undoubtedly, as Dr. Cairns observes, a very strong opposition between the mystic and visionary element which became prominent in revived Paganism, and the utter absence of any such vein in men like Toland and Bolingbroke, Hume and Gibbon. But the general contrast can only be carried out by somewhat exaggerating the Deistic unbelief in revelation. As a rule, one Deist after another protested, in terms the sincerity of which we have no right to deny, that he did not attack the principle of a revelation, but only insisted that all necessary truth, whether revealed or unrevealed, was fully accessible to human reason, and that reason, honestly used, was a sufficient guide to all men. "Nevertheless," adds Chubb—and parallel passages might be quoted from Toland, Tindal, and others—

"such is the degeneracy, and such the unhappy circumstances of a great part of our species, as renders it expedient and greatly desirable that a divine revelation should be given; and, consequently, it is exceedingly kind and good in God that he has given it" (Sufficiency of Reason, p. 65).

In fact, if we are to compare the modified acceptance of the old polytheism among Julian's contemporaries with the limited belief in revelation on the part of the Deist, we shall find the points of similarity greater than those of contrast. Setting aside the spiritualising element which the more earnest Pagans had adopted, there is a great likeness between Porphyry or Proclus rationalising into bare history or poetical allegory the ancient myths, and Collins or Woolston adapting Scripture to their views of what a rational religion should be.

At the end of this chapter there are some interesting remarks on the testimony, unintended, and therefore the more valuable, which Celsus and other representatives of early unbelief have rendered to the genuineness and authenticity of New Testament books.

A vast gap, very scantily bridged over by the remark that "the Crusades were the chief, if not the only, apologetics of many centuries," separates the first from the second lecture, which treats of unbelief in the seventeenth century. During the Reformation minds were too engrossed with the struggle that was going on to discuss any subject, however important, that had no direct bearing upon it. But many causes tended to a decay of faith during the period that followed—such as the new divisions in the Church, the demoralising influence of religious wars, and the rise of a new learning that was no longer closely allied with religion. This under-current of unbelief that was now beginning to be felt was nobly met, though from exceedingly different points of view, in two celebrated works—the De Veritate of Grotius and the Pensées of Pascal. But it gained ground, and took three principal forms—"first, the Deistic, with its two types, the one more historical, represented by Lord Herbert of Cherbury, the other more materialist, represented by Hobbes; secondly, the Pantheistic, represented by Spinoza; and, thirdly, the sceptical, represented by Bayle."

The next three lectures constitute the main body of the work, and deal respectively with eighteenth-century unbelief in England, France, and Germany. In England, Pantheism was dubiously represented by Toland only in his last work—the Pantheisticon; Deism, by a host of writers, "Collins heading the argument against prophecy, Woolston that against miracles, Tindal that against the addition to the light of nature, Shaftesbury and Chubb that against the Christian morality, and Morgan that against the Old Testament." Hume, with Gibbon and Bolingbroke, were the chief representatives of the sceptics.

The limits of a lecture are but narrow. It might, therefore, have been more interesting if the author had given rather less space to the mere record of Deistical opinion, and rather more to drawing out and illustrating its most characteristic features, its points of strength and weakness. The utter downfall of eighteenth-century Deism, and the comparative oblivion into which it sank, somewhat disguise the importance of the movement and its durable effects. As a practical form of Christianity (so far as the term "Christian" may be applied to it), Deism could not but fall. Hard, bare, negative, and coldly rational, singularly deficient in every spiritual element, a religion almost without a theology, making no appeal to the imagination and little to the devotional faculty, there was nothing to attract the heart and rouse the spirit. Moreover, there was an occasional flippancy in its criticisms, extremely repugnant to the gravity of a subject in which the deepest interests of humanity are involved—a presumptuous self-confidence, which had little perception of its own possible deficiencies and the possible strength of the cause it was attacking, and a bitterness of tone which might be excused, rather than justified, by the violence of the denunciations to which the writers were themselves subjected. Lastly, it laboured under a certain shade of disingenuousness, which hostile opinion has very commonly exaggerated, but which is not easily to be dispelled. Overt attacks on Christianity were still a legal crime; and there was far too little enthusiasm among the Deists to give them much of the martyr temper. Consequently, their warmest professions of Christian faith lie under some suspicion, which is increased by Toland's direct avowal (quoted by Dr. Cairns) of the right to hold one doctrine "in pectore et privato consensu," and another "in foro et publica concione."

Yet we think that few will rise from a candid perusal of Deistical literature without feeling that the movement was not by any means an altogether unchristian one; that its principal writers are in many cases to be credited with a genuine purpose of liberating Christianity from what they believed to be its corruptions; and that, if Deism be considered in the character, not of a religion in itself, but a form of corrective criticism through which religion had to pass, its action was ultimately beneficial. Its theology, meagre as it was, rested, at all events, upon two most solid foundations—a belief in the perfect goodness and in the perfect reasonableness of all God's dealings. In theory, all Christians would acknowledge the same two articles of faith; but the Deists, untrammelled by respect for authority or traditional thought, brought out into the fullest light, disrobed of all conventional phraseology, every doctrine and every opinion which, rightly or wrongly, they supposed would not bear to be examined by relation to these two fundamental axioms. The greater part of what was then challenged passed through the ordeal, not discredited or enfeebled, as the Deists were too apt to suppose, but stronger and on more assured grounds than ever. But on some points the Deists occupied a far more tenable position. They were able to show—and many leading Churchmen incurred at the time much opprobrium by going thus far with them—that it was difficult, if not impossible, to reconcile with the primary attributes of Deity much that was popularly held in connexion with the doctrines of retribution, predestination, and vicarious suffering. They opposed, in some instances with much force, that self-seeking and egotistical aspect of religion which was only too congenial to the temper of the age. They fought with vehemence for the right of free thought, which, with all its possible dangers, had been the leading principle of the Reformation, and is essential to the cause of truth. They compelled religious minds to realise to themselves their faith, and to seek a secure refuge from outward assaults and external difficulties in that inward evidence which, after all, is a stronger argument to each individual soul than any extrinsic proof can be. In a word, if it could have been possible that Deists should have won, their victory would have been the death-knell of vital Christianity; yet, as a losing cause, they did not labour in vain.

We have left ourselves no space for remarks upon the French Encyclopaedists and the German Rationalism, although the latter subject in particular is treated by Dr. Cairns with considerable skill and much learning. To many persons the most interesting lecture will be the last, which treats of scepticism in the nineteenth century, three great names being selected by the author to illustrate his theme—Strauss, Renan, and Mill.

C. J. ABBEY.

RECENT VERSE.

The Love Sonnets of Proteus. (C. Kegan Paul and Co.) Messrs. Kegan Paul and Co. are rapidly making their way to the head of the trade in England in the matter of producing handsome books in really good taste. The paper of these sonnets and their general get-up are excellent; and the gilt top and rough sides leave nothing to desire except, perhaps, a rather wider margin. The binding would be exceedingly pretty if it did not somehow suggest the border of a bath towel, but after all there are worse things than bath towels. Among those things we think we may include, if not the poetry of Proteus, certainly his proficiency in the art of design. He has prefixed a frontispiece to his volume in which he represents himself as leaving a grave whereon is written "Hic jacet amor æternus" in a storm of rain,

The epitaph is a pretty conceit, but not much else can be said in favour of the drawing, and the figure has an air of stealthy disreputableness which is enough to prejudice even the most fair-minded critic against him. The sonnets are numerous, and display a sublime bumptiousness. They are divided into four sections, the first headed "Manon," the second "Juliet," the third "Gods and False Gods," the fourth "Vita Nova." Proteus informs us in his Preface that those only are beyond hope of wisdom who have never dared to be fools. He is certainly in this case not beyond hope of wisdom; but perhaps he has confused the pardonable act of foolish writing with the unpardonable one of publishing the results of that folly in cold blood. We shall be kind to him, however, and only cite a sonnet where he tells what he has seen and most of his readers have not. In the majority of his pieces he tells what his readers have felt, and tells it badly.

"THE OASIS OF SIDI KHALED.

"How the earth burns! each pebble underfoot
Is as a living thing with power to wound.
The white sand quivers, and the footfall mute
Of the slow camels strikes but gives no sound
As though they walked on flame, not solid ground.

'Tis noon and the beasts' shadows even have fled
Back to their feet, and there is fire around
And fire beneath and overhead the sun.
Pitiful heaven, what is this we view?

Tall trees, a river, pools where swallows fly,
Thickets of oleander where doves coo,
Shades deep as midnight, greenness for tired eyes.

Mark how the light winds in the palm-tops sigh
Oh, this is rest. Oh, this is paradise."

Poems. By the Author of "The Growth of Love." Third Series. (Bumpus.) We heartily wish that the author of The Growth of Love, whose talent is well known to most students of poetry, and well thought of by all who know it and whose opinion is worth having, would publish his work in a less cryptic, scrappy, and generally outlandish form. As many persons who have never been formally admitted into his confidence have fully identified him, there can be no reason for concealment; and his work, presented in some sufficient and tangible bulk, would have a much better chance of recognition than in the furtive pamphlets in which it at present lurks. Poetry, at least such poetry as this, is not a crime; and there can be no reason why the perpetrator should stalk about in mask and domino. For any appearance of irritation in these remarks we can best account by professing our very high admiration for this mysterious and yet well-known author's work. It is absurd that a man should not present himself in proper form to his critics and his readers when he can write like this:—

"Thou didst delight mine eyes.
Yet who am I? Not best
Nor first, nor last to test
Thy charm, thy bloom to prize.
Nor this the only time
Thou shalt set love to rhyme."

We purposely omit the rest in hopes that some one struck by so uncommon a note and desiring to hear its completion may send for the pamphlet himself. Sonnets, however, may not be mutilated, and one of the sonnets here printed we must give:—

"My lady pleases me and I please her.
This know we both, and I besides know well
Wherefore I love her, and I love to tell
My love as all my loving songs aver.
But what on her part could the passion stir,
Though 'tis more difficult for love to spell,
Yet can I dare divine how this befell,
Nor will her lips deny it if I err.
She loves me first because I love her, then Loves me for knowing why she should be loved,

And that I love to praise her loves again.
So from her beauty both our loves are moved,
And by her beauty are sustained, nor when
The earth falls from the sun is this disproved."

For Mr.—but we were going to be indiscreet—for the author's experiments in a new prosody we do not care much, though they contain at least the elements of some fine poetry. When the new prosody is worth much, it seems to us to be reducible with advantage to the old.

The Heptalogia; or, the Seven against Senae. (Chatto and Windus.) A whole volume of parodies in unison is rather too much of a good or a bad thing; and the anonymous author of this book, whom it is not necessary to strive to identify, has, like not a few other parodists, sometimes rather overshot himself. The end of "The Higher Pantheism in a Nutshell" is, however, very good:—

"Parallels all things are; yet many of these are askew,

You are certainly I, but certainly I am not you.
Springs the rock from the plain, shoots the spring from the rock.

Cocks exist for the hen, but hens exist for the cock.

God whom we see not is, and God who is not we see.

Idle we know is diddle, and diddle we take it is dee."

The last line is certainly excellent. "John Jones" is still better; indeed, the singularities in thought, diction, and verse of "James Lee" are followed with an ingenious faithfulness which might perhaps have been better employed. Mr. Coventry Patmore lends himself so very easily to parody that "The Person of the House" is not worth much; while "The Poet and the Woodlouse" and "Last Words of a Seventh-rate Poet" are worth still less. The "Sonnet for a Picture" is poor, and the alliteration in the Swinburnian "Nephilidia" overdone. If the author is wise, he will allow but one of his seven to survive as a whole, and that will be "John Jones."

Fulgencius, and other Poems. By B. M. Rankine. (Newman.) Mr. Rankine has here published a considerable number of poems, many, if not most, of which, we are given to understand, have appeared before, either in volume form or in magazines. They display, for the most part, considerable correctness of ear, a good command of language, and a fair store of sufficiently poetical, if not very novel, imagery. Unfortunately, they also show very strongly indeed the tendency which is the curse of minor poetry, and especially of reprinted minor poetry. We can tell pretty accurately when Mr. Rankine was bewitched by Mr. Morris, when he exchanged that fascination for Mr. Swinburne's spell, when he took a bath of Mr. Dante Rossetti, &c., &c.; in fact, a clinical history of Mr. B. Montgomerie Rankine's successive poetical ailments for the last fifteen or twenty years is contained within the covers of Fulgencius. Nevertheless, not a few of the poems are pleasant enough to read, and most of them are above the level of "The Poet's Corner."

The Advocate. (Wyman.) An odd little drama, wherein, the time being the Second French Empire, the characters talk partly in prose, partly in blank verse, of this fashion:—

"I little thought so soon to meet again.
Yet, if 'twixt our last interview and this Too brief the space has been, until the next
It may prove long enough, since haply not
This side eternity," &c.

Prize Translations, &c. Reprinted from the Journal of Education. (Walker.) This little volume contains some rather clever work of its kind. A few of the parodies are excellent; notably "De Rotundis,"

The Chantry Owl, &c. By H. M. Stokes. (Longmans and Co.) This appears to be a second edition, with additions, of a book formerly published. Many better books of verse have never found their way into a second edition, but some worse ones have.

The Shakespeare Tapestry. By C. Hawkey. (Blackwood.) The author of this Shakespeare Tapestry has had one of the very funniest ideas that ever entered a human brain, and has worked it out in a way nearly as funny. Two young persons, Margaret and Ellenore, undertake a "suit," as they would perhaps have called it, of tapestry from Shakesperian subjects, and describe their work, with great store of compliments to each other, in a book of 200 pages full of octosyllabic verse. The plan is, of course, doomed to failure by its ludicrous impertinence; but the verses are, of their kind, sometimes rather better than might be expected from the initial folly of their writer.

Erin: Verses Irish and Catholic. By the Rev. Matthew Russell. (Dublin: Gill.) Of this unpretending little book of verse it is sufficient to say that its verses are Irish without containing anything offensive to Englishmen, and Catholic without containing anything offensive to Anglican or Protestant readers. They are not, as a rule, ambitious, but of their kind they are excellent; even though Mr. Russell, in his "Irish Farmer's Sunday," has invited a dangerous comparison.

Justine, and other Poems. (Simpkin, Marshall and Co.) That a verse-writer should call a Roman heroine Justine is bad, and it is worse that he should remark in a note that her name is Latine Justinia. Perhaps it is worst that he should, under any title, write verses so feeble as most of those which are to be found here.

The Bride of Albion, and other Poems. By W. H. Davis. (E. Q. Allen.) Mr. Davis, whose book is a very little one, has some most curious notions of things. He calls by the title of "The May Queen Parody" a perfectly serious version of the original, slightly altered, and (it is to be supposed) bettered in his view, which is hardly likely to be the view of anybody else. As a sample of him, this piece of mild absurdity may serve:—

"TO A TEAR.
"Stay, gentle tear, within thy fount,
Thou art not wont to flow.
Bravely life's hill we must surmount,
Where thorns and briars grow."

It is certainly true that an individual tear is not wont to flow. But literal exactness of statement hardly constitutes poetry.

One Year in his Life. By J. E. Panton. (C. Brooks and Co.) The chief poem in this book is an echo of the rapid and namby-pamby style of which it would not be fair to say that Mr. Tennyson has sometimes set the example, but for which he is indirectly responsible. The minor poems are much better, often showing feeling, and not seldom very fairly poetical imagination and expression. A set of "Sonnets to Colours" may be specified as good.

As One that Serveth. By Rev. G. A. Chadwick. (Elliot Stock.) We conceive, as we have often had occasion to say, that the business of criticism with all sacred poetry which is not exceedingly good or outrageously bad is to pass it by with a simple comparative estimate. Mr. Chadwick's verse is much better than most of its kind. It is not, indeed, good enough to come under our favourably excepted class, of which in the last fifty years there have not, perhaps, been a dozen examples in English; but it is worth the attention of those who read sacred verse.

Love's Weakness is Love's Tragedy. By Rev. A. Starkey. (Reeves and Turner.) Mr.

Starkey should not call his work a novelette en drame, because the word novelette is unknown to the French language. It contains fair verse, and exhibits a certain command of pathos. But a partly dramatised verse-tale is a difficult thing to make readable.

Sappho: a Dream. By the Author of "Ginevra." (C. Kegan Paul and Co.) The rapidity with which this author produces dramas is something to make the ghost of Lope uneasy. Sappho is a lyrical drama rather than a blank verse one, and in point of execution it is not much worse than its forerunners.

Gondaline's Lesson, &c. By Mrs. Bloomfield Moore. (C. Kegan Paul and Co.) This is a volume of not very strong and rather unequal, but, on the whole, pleasing enough, verse.

Songs of Passion and Pain. By Ernest Wilding. (Newman.) We weep for Mr. Ernest Wilding. We deeply sympathise with his condition. He is in a terrible way, as the very titles of his poems will show: "Study in White and Blood," "Improvisation in White and Gold," "Psalm to a Wayside Crucifix," "Harmony in Sea and Silver," &c., &c. His pain sometimes gets the better of his grammar ("Forgive me if I were not kind"). His passion frequently makes him add "improvisations" to the dictionary, and his tuneless numbers are apt to hobble vilely. But these things are incident to the race of bards, and Mr. Wilding may perhaps laugh as heartily some years hence over his improvisations in white and blood as his readers do now.

Foreshadowings. By Charles Room. (Elliot Stock.) Foreshadowings is a poem in four cantos, and in the Spenserian stanza. It has abundant arguments, one of which begins "Episode on the Reasons which induced the Almighty to people the Dreary Arctic Regions." This is a kind of enquiry which we do not care to pursue. But when we do take to it, we shall first investigate the reasons which induced Providence to make poets like Mr. Charles Room. To any mind which has once received a tincture of scholastic learning this is much the most attractive quaestio quodlibetalis of the two.

Grand Tours in Many Lands. By John McCosh. (Remington.) Anyone who wants to read about six thousand verses like these, relating to the luckless Shere Ali—

"He forthwith mustered them upon the lawn,
And sent his wives and babes to Turkistan"

—should read Dr. McCosh. He is a most diverting writer; and, although we do shrewdly fear that some injurious remarks as to critics are intended, among others, for our own ears, we say so boldly. If Dr. McCosh thinks the commendation ambiguous or insufficient, we are very sorry.

Raymond, Lord of Ver. (Prevost.) We have more than once had to avow the consciousness of incapacity which besets us in presence of the endless closet dramas which issue from the press. We can say little about any of them, for the best of all reasons, that there is little to say. They most of them bear testimony to a certain reading of the dramatic classics; they some of them show some familiarity with the management of blank verse; they frequently contain comic prose scenes where waiting-maids and secondary male personages bandy pseudo-Elizabethan wit. Raymond, Lord of Ver. is rather quaint than most of them, and that is all we can say.

The Cardinal Archbishop. By Col. Colomb. (C. Kegan Paul and Co.) Col. Colomb is a persevering practitioner of narrative poetry; and, though we do not know that we can pronounce him to have mastered the secret of verse-narrative as it must be presented to his own generation to make them accept it, his goodwill is considerable. There is, perhaps, no kind of verse in which fashion is so imperatively to be observed as verse-narrative. Col. Colomb has chosen the octosyllabic line, with something of Scott in it, but more of Moore. We have seen worse exemplifications of the style, but we cannot honestly say that Col. Colomb has vindicated his title to be the magician.

Marie Antoinette. (C. Kegan Paul and Co.) Here is another drama. Perhaps, in default of better, criticism of it may be given by a quotation:—

"(Enter MARAT in the dress of a groom.)

"MAR. Though servant of a prince, my eyes look round

From meanness with defiance of the fate

That makes me loathsome in the eyes of men.

What have I done to merit this their spite?

Throughout my crawling miserable life,

Steeped in contempt of man and all his pain,

I have healed no wound would it but fester more,

Bound up no sorrow in another's life,

Offered and asked no kindness and no hope,

Heeded no sickening cry, quenched no despair,

Ceded to death no tear, to woe no sigh;

O'er desolation breathed no pained prayer:

No pity have I known, mercy nor love."

These lines are a tolerably sufficient instance of the somewhat vigorous, but insufficiently clear, expression and of the undramatic conception which characterise Marie Antoinette. The proper study of the dramatist is certainly man, and we do not think that the author of Marie Antoinette has mastered the peculiarities of excessive reformers.

Mary Magdalene. By Mrs. R. Greenough. (C. Kegan Paul and Co.) Paper, print, and (with some allowance) binding may be pronounced to be wholly satisfactory in Mrs. Greenough's work. Of the quality of the text we cannot speak quite so complementarily. A blank-verse poem of a narrative kind demands in the poet certain rather unusual gifts. Mrs. Richard Greenough has not got them.

NOTES AND NEWS.

We understand that the first work to be issued by the Delogates of the Clarendon Press in the series of Anecdota Oxoniensia, some particulars of which we have already given, will be the Sanskrit text of the Sukhāvati-vyūha, the principal authority of Buddhism in Nepal, China, and Japan. It was translated twelve times into Chinese; and five of the twelve Chinese translations are still in existence, some of them dating from the third century A.D. The Sanskrit original has not yet been published, and is totally different from the small text of the Sukhāvati-vyūha lately discovered in Japan, and published by Prof. Max Müller in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, 1880. The edition will be founded on a MS. in the Bodleian Library presented by Mr. Hodgson, collated with the MSS. of the Royal Asiatic Society and the Cambridge University Library. Some other Buddhist texts will follow, such as the Vaggrakkhedika, a metaphysical treatise, of which several Chinese, Tibetan, and Mongolian translations were known, while the Sanskrit original was supposed to be lost. That Sanskrit text, however, has lately been discovered in a Japanese volume brought from Japan by Mr. Wylie, and now in the Bodleian Library. Another MS. has been sent direct from Japan; and two block-printed editions of the Sanskrit original have come to hand, one from China, the other from Tibet, sent to Oxford by the Imperial Academy of Sciences at St. Petersburg.

A NEW novel by Mr. Julian Hawthorne will begin before long in one of the leading magazines. The title is Fortune's Fool.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN has been pleased to accept a copy of the new and revised edition of Mr. Francis Hitchman's Public Life of Lord Beaconsfield.

MR. E. W. WHITE, F.Z.S., has prepared a work on the Argentine Republic, embodying his experiences as a naturalist in that remarkable country. It will be published by Mr. Van Voorst in two volumes, entitled Cameos from the Silver-land.

UNDER the title of Phases of Musical England will shortly be published a new work by Mr. Frederick J. Crowest, author of The Great Tone-Poets. In his new book Mr. Crowest will deal with some of the imperfections of English musical art, under such heads as Church Music, Women and Music, Singing and Singers, Amateurs and Professionals, Criticism, Editing, Commercialisms, Street Music, &c., &c.

MESSRS. RIVINGTON will shortly publish the lectures delivered in the Chapter Room of Winchester Cathedral by the Rev. W. H. Simcox, M.A., during Lent 1881, entitled, The Beginnings of the Christian Church: a Sketch of its Historical Development from the Day of Pentecost to the Close of the Second Century.

MR. J. MEADOWS COWPER has undertaken to compile a Concordance to the Revised New Testament. The book will be published as soon as possible.

AMONG the illustrations in the next part of Mr. Furnivall's edition of Harrison's Description of England in Shakspeare's Youth, 1577-87, for the New Shakspeare Society, will be a chromolithograph of the unique coloured drawing of the earliest genuine view in any detail of old London Bridge. This drawing is full of interest, and has never before been copied and published. Its date must be after 1576, though probably not long after, as Harrison, in his MS. Chronologie, notes that year as the one in which the tower on the drawbridge was taken down, and the traitors' heads that were wont to be put on it were shifted to the Southwark gate farther down the bridge, where they are in the drawing (Harrison's Description, ed. Furnivall, part i., p. lvi.). Reduced héliogravures of the Coronation procession of Edward VI. through the City, of a sixteenth-century view of West Chepe, and of the preaching at Paul's Cross before James I. will be also given in this part. The facsimile of Norden's map of Westminster, 1593, and the etchings and wood-cuts of genuine old Elizabethan houses that have been kindly placed at the editor's disposal, will probably be kept for part iv. of the book.

WE hear that Mr. G. F. Warner's Preface to his Catalogue of the Dulwich MSS. will contain full details of the fifteen fresh forgeries in them which he has discovered. They are, doubtless, all due to the same hand that wrote those long since made known.

THE eleventh part of the general series of facsimiles of the Palaeographical Society, now ready for distribution, contains a Greek-Palmyrene inscription of A.D. 134; specimens from the famous Viennese Greek MSS. of Dioscorides and the illustrated Genesis of the sixth century; others from MSS. of the Library of St. Gall, including that of the "Lex Salica" of A.D. 794 and the "Codex Sangallensis" of the Gospels of the tenth century; an Anglo-Saxon Psalter of the year 969; and later MSS. down to the fifteenth century, beside some fine English charters of the twelfth century. The Oriental series includes facsimiles of a Persian version of the Koran of as early a period as the twelfth century; a most interesting Phœnician inscription of B.C. 254; and Sanskrit, Arabic, Syriac, Hebrew, and Coptic MSS. of various ages. The scanty means at the disposal of the society for the development of this series have, for the present part, been generously augmented by donations from the Dean of Canterbury, Dr. MacGrigor, and Mr. David Murray.

THE Philological Society is going to print an amalgamation of all the Indexes to its Proceedings and Transactions from 1852 to 1880, compiled by Mr. S. J. Herrtage.

DR. JUSSEURAND has undertaken to write a short History of English Literature in one volume for French schools. It would be hard to find a French writer better fitted for the task.

OWENS COLLEGE, Manchester, has just received a new benefaction. A gentleman, as yet anonymous, has offered the sum of £500 a-year, in order to establish five fellowships, on the model of those at the John Hopkins University, Baltimore, to be awarded to students in any department of knowledge who shall have given evidence of their capacity and disposition to undertake original work. Owens College is also now contemplating the necessary extension to its buildings. Mr. Waterhouse has suggested plans for completing the quadrangle towards the main road—on the north side would be the new museum; in the centre of the front, perhaps, a clock-tower; and in the south-east corner the library. Adequate funds are not at present in hand, but Owens College has never yet appealed in vain to the generosity of the merchants of Manchester.

A SPECIAL general meeting of the Library Association has been summoned by the president (the Bodleian librarian) to meet at the London Institution, Finsbury Circus, on Wednesday, May 18, at three o'clock p.m., to consider the question of altering the place and time fixed for the annual meeting this year. The visit to Cambridge, which had been fixed for this year, will probably be postponed until 1882.

THE picturesque event of the week, says the Boston Literary World of April 23, was undoubtedly Walt Whitman's appearance at the Hawthorne Rooms on the evening of April 15, the anniversary of Lincoln's death, with a memorial discourse on the Martyr-President. A generous clapping of hands greeted him. At the close of the lecture, many people sought an introduction to Mr. Whitman at the hands of Mr. Howells, among them the Governor of the Commonwealth; and on Saturday, after calling on Mr. Longfellow, Mr. Whitman was entertained at the St. Botolph Club. Mr. Whitman has consented, if his health will permit, to return to Boston during the coming autumn to give selected readings from his own works.

THE Scotsman states that a local committee has been formed at Ecclefechan with the object of putting into repair the wall, &c., of the churchyard in which Carlyle was buried.

THE Weekly Mercury, published at Plymouth, has recently commenced setting apart a column or two of its pages for the purpose of encouraging local antiquarian study. Under the title "Western Antiquary" it publishes notes and queries respecting the legends, proverbs, archaeology, folk-lore, &c., &c., of the counties of Devon and Cornwall. So far the matter has been heartily taken up by the increasing number of persons interested in such studies, and it is the wish of the editor to publish the matter quarterly in book-form. Many of the subjects discussed are of more than local and passing interest.

MR. CHARLES E. TURNER, lecturer at the University of St. Petersburg, will begin a course of five lectures at the Royal Institution on "The Great Modern Writers of Russia—Pouschkin, Lermontoff, Gogol, Tourgenieff, and Nekrasoff," on Saturday, the 21st inst.

A SOCIETY has recently been founded at Calcutta for the encouragement of Bengali literature. Its managing committee includes the names of Raja Rajendra Lal Mitra, the Sanskrit scholar and archaeologist, and the Rev. K. M. Banarji, the Christian missionary.

LEOPOLD LAVATER, a descendant of the famous theologian and still more famous physiognomist of Zürich, has just died in Paris. He was a pensioned staff-officer of the French army, and an eminent engineer and mechanician. He had only lately patented a new system of printing. The French journals speak of him as the last male survivor of Lavater's family, but this is a mistake.

MR. THOMAS MASON, of Glasgow, at present one of Mr. Barrett's assistants in the Mitchell Library, has been appointed by the trustees Librarian of Stirling's Public Library, Glasgow.

At the last meeting of the Glasgow Town Council it was decided to purchase for the Mitchell Library the Burns collection of Mr. James Gibson, of Liverpool. It comprises about 600 volumes of editions of Burns and works relating to Burns; and the price given is about £200.

A HUNGARIAN translation of Miss Arnold-Forster's Life of Deák has been published by the Franklin Company, Budapest.

PROF. FELMÉRI, of the University of Koloza-vár (Transylvania), who was last year sent by the Hungarian Government on a mission to enquire into the educational system in England, has in the press a book on the subject, which will shortly appear. Especial attention is given to methods of discipline and school-games.

THE Sunday numbers of the New York Herald may fairly claim to be wonders in journalism. One now lying before us, called a septuple sheet, consists of no less than twenty-eight pages, or 168 columns; and yet the price is only five cents (2½d.). An editorial contains the characteristic and appropriate assertion that "the Herald this morning [Sunday] is as large almost as two New Testaments."

THE programme has now been issued of the International Congress of Americanists, which, as we have already announced, will meet at Madrid on September 28. The first day will be devoted to geology, and the history of America before its discovery; the second to archaeology; the third to ethnology; the fourth and last to language and palaeography.

THE Nation gives some curious statistics of the religious beliefs of the students of Harvard College. The two most numerous sects are Episcopalians (275) and Unitarians (214).

At the recent sale in New York of the Brinley Library, a copy of the Gutenberg (or so-called Mazarin) Bible, which was stated to have been bought in England in 1873, fetched 8,000 dols. (£1,600). The purchaser was Mr. Hamilton Cole, a lawyer of New York, who has devoted himself for the last ten years to the collection of scarce books and editions. Among the rarities which he has already acquired are several MS. copies of the Bible, dating between the eleventh and fourteenth centuries, and many illuminated breviaries and books of hours.

MARSHAL BENEDEK, the ill-starred commander of the Austrians at Sadowa, who recently died, is said to have prepared during his fourteen years of retirement an elaborate justification of his military career. But, at the last, he destroyed all his papers, with the remark that he was following the example of other unfortunate generals.

LESS than a month ago we announced the first volume of a collection of the popular literature of all countries, Littérature orale de la Haute-Bretagne (Paris: Maisonneuve). We now learn from the Revue Critique that the publishing-house of E. Leroux has in hand a similar collection of popular stories and songs. The first volume—Recueil de Contes populaires grecs traduits sur les Textes originaux, by M. Em. Legrand—has already appeared. The other volumes promised are Le Romancero portugais, by M. de Puymaigre; Contes populaires albanais, by M. Dozon; Contes populaires slaves, by M. Louis Leger; Contes populaires serbes, by M. Dozon; Contes populaires de la Sicile, by M. de Puymaigre; Contes bretons populaires, by M. Luzel; Les Contes de Kharagouze, Contes populaires turcs, by M. Decourdemanche; Kalila et Dimna, recueil de Contes et Apologues orientaux, by M. Carrière.

We also learn from the Revue Critique that the Society of the History of French Art has just published, under the editorship of M. Charles Henry (Paris: Baur), the Memoirs of Charles Nicolas Cochin, the celebrated French artist of the eighteenth century. The MS., bequeathed by the artist himself to the Bibliothèque du Roi, has never before been published. The contents consist chiefly of anecdotes about the Comte de Caylus, Bouchardon, and the Slodtzs.

THE sixth volume of a complete edition of Prince P. A. Viazemski's works, just issued in St. Petersburg, contains a correspondence, in the French language, hitherto unpublished, entitled Lettres d'un Vétéran russe de l'Année 1812 sur la Question d'Orient. These letters, which number thirty in all, and are explanatory of the writer's views on the events of the years 1854-55, are accompanied by a Russian translation. Some correspondence of Mr. John Bright on the same subject is reproduced in an Appendix.

ORIENTAL students will regret to learn that the al-Jawā'id of Constantinople, which is allowed to be the most ably conducted Arabic journal in the East, has been suspended by the Ottoman authorities. The order to that effect, signed by the Director of Printed Publications, is as follows:—"In consequence of the appearance of several articles in recent numbers of the al-Jawā'id of a mischievous tendency, that paper is hereby suspended from this date," April 22. The editor, in printing this mandate, remarks that the charge is so ambiguously worded, that it is useless for him to attempt any explanation. The Turkish journals of the capital attribute the censure to some statements respecting the amelioration of the finances of Egypt, but the local Messenger is of opinion that it has reference to Tunisian affairs. The editor pleads that, as regards the first supposition, seeing that he has always treated of Egypt as an integral part of Turkey, whatever encomiums he has passed upon the former redound to the credit of the empire in general; and that, as regards Tunis, he has consistently maintained the rights of the Sultan over that province as set forth in the imperial firman of 1871. But whatever the cause of the official interdict, it is to be hoped that his Imperial Majesty the Sultan will intervene, as he did on a former occasion, to remove it. The al-Jawā'id, established twenty-one years ago by the venerable Ahmad Fâris, admitted to be the most learned Arab in the East, and mainly edited of late by his worthy son, Salim Fâris, has been a most powerful medium of diffusing enlightened ideas throughout every country of the East, and enjoys the highest reputation among Oriental Sovereigns, statesmen, and juriconsults. Moreover, within the last decade upwards of a hundred original works in Arabic and Turkish have been printed at the press of the al-Jawā'id.

M. F. CASTETS has just brought out (Paris: Maisonneuve) Il Fiore, an Italian poem of the thirteenth century, in 232 sonnets, imitated from the Roman de la Rose by Durante. The text is published from a unique MS. at Montpellier, and notes are contributed by Profs. d'Ancona and Monaci.

AN amusing instance of Carlyle's plain speaking is reported by a hearer of it. An acquaintance, with strong opinions of his own, had supported them pertinaciously one evening against Carlyle's views, and was thus taken leave of at the door: "Good-night, sir! And let me tell you that you have capabilities for becoming one of the greatest bores in England."

WITH regard to Mr. Hills's note that we printed last week about the Bassano family, of whom Shakspeare may have known, we are informed that the pedigree of them will be found in the Visitation of London, just issued by the Harleian Society, at p. 54. They were of Venetian origin; and others of the same name were settled in other parts of London, in Essex, and elsewhere.

MR. R. H. SHEPHERD, whose diligence and accuracy in work of this kind has been already proved, has compiled a useful Bibliography of Carlyle. Scattered letters and trifling contributions to journals are recorded, as well as the more important works. Mr. Shepherd gives a list of errata in Carlyle's Reminiscences, which includes incorrect dates for the death of Coleridge and for the death of Sterling, unrectified by Mr. Froude. In a later issue it might be well to add American editions and translations of Carlyle. The publisher is Mr. Elliot Stock.

MR. GEORGE GOULD has published in pamphlet form Corrigenda and Explanations of the Text of Shakspeare (Virtue and Co.), notes made by him while reading the plays and poems in the text of Knight's Pictorial Shakspeare. Some of his suggestions are not new, and several will fail to find acceptance among Shakspeare students; but over and above these remain some proposals well worthy of consideration. Mr. Gould, without the equipment of a specialist, writes as an attentive, intelligent, and cultured reader of Shakspeare. We entirely agree with his remarks on the outrageous pointing, the senseless "becomming," of many Shakspeare texts.

THE WANDERER.

FROM THE ENGLISH OF CYNEWULF.

STILL the lone one and desolate waits for his Maker's ruth—
God's good mercy, albeit so long it tarry, in sooth:
Careworn and sad of heart, on the watery ways must he Plough with the hand-graspt oar—how long?—the rime-cold sea:
Tread thy paths of exile, O Fate, who art cruelty.
Thus did a wanderer speak, being heart-full of woe,
and all
Thoughts of the cruel slayings, and pleasant comrades' fall.
Morn by morn I, alone, am fain to utter my woe;
Now is there none of the living to whom I dare to show
Plainly the thought of my heart: in very sooth I know
Excellent is it in man that his breast he straitly bind,
Shut fast his thinkings in silence, whatever he have in his mind.
The man that is weary in heart, he never can fate withstand;
The man that grieves in his spirit, he finds not the helper's hand.
Therefore the glory-grasper full heavy of soul
may be.
So, far from my fatherland, and mine own good kinsmen free,
I must bind my heart in fetters, for long, ah!
long ago,
The earth's cold darkness covered my giver of gold brought low;

And I, sore stricken and humbled, and winter-saddened, went Far over the frost-bound waves to seek for the dear content
Of the hall of the giver of rings; but far nor near could I find
Who felt the love of the mead-hall, or who with comforts kind
Would comfort me, the friendless. 'Tis he alone will know,
Who knows, being desolate too, how evil a fere is woe:
For him the path of the exile, and not the twisted
gold;
For him the frost in his bosom, and not earth-riches old.
Oh, well he remembers the hall-men, the treasure
bestow'd in the hall;
The feat that his gold-giver made him, the joy at its highth, at its fall:
He knows who must be forlorn for his dear lord's counsels gone,
When sleep and sorrow together are binding the lone one;
When himthink he clasps and kisses his leader of men, and lays
His hands and head on his knee, as when, in the good yore-days,
He sat on the throne of his might, in the strength that wins and saves—
But the friendless man awakes, and he sees the yellow waves,
And the sea-birds dip to the sea, and broaden their wings to the gale,
And he sees the dreary rime, and the snow com-mingled with hail.
Oh, then are the wounds of his heart the sorer much for this,
The grief for the lov'd and lost made new by the dream of old bliss.
His kinsmen's memory comes to him as he lies asleep,
And he greets it with joy, with joy, and the heart
in his breast doth leap;
But out of his ken the shapes of his warrior-comrades swim
To the land whence seafarers bring no dear old saws for him,
Then fresh grows sorrow and new to him whose bitter part
Is to send o'er the frost-bound waves full often his weary heart.
For this do I look around this world, and cannot see Wherefore or why my heart should not grow dark in me,
When I think of the lives of the leaders, the clansmen mighty in mood;
When I think how sudden and swift they yielded the place where they stood.
So droops this mid-earth and falls, and never a man is found
Wise ere a many winters have girt his life around.
Full patient the sage must be, and he that would counsel teach
Not over-hot in his heart, nor over-swift in his speech;
Nor faint of soul nor secure, nor fain for the fight
nor afraid;
Nor ready to boast before he know himself well
array'd.
The proud-soul'd man must bide when he utters his vaunt, until
He know of the thoughts of the heart, and whitherward turn they will.
The prudent must understand how terror and awe shall be,
When the glory and weal of the world lie waste,
as now men see
On our mid-earth, many a where, the wind-swept walls arise,
And the ruin'd dwellings and void, and the rime
that on them lies.
The wine-halls crumble, bereft of joy the warriors lie,
The flower of the doughty fallen, the proud ones fair to the eye.
War took off some in death, and one did a strong bird bear
Over the deep; and one—his bones did the grey wolf share;
And one was hid in a cave by a comrade sorrowful-faced.—
Oh, thus the Shaper of men hath laid the earth all waste,

Till the works of the city-dwellers, the works of the giants of earth,
Stood empty and lorn of the burst of the mighty revellers' mirth.
Who wisely hath mused on this wallstead, and pondera this dark life well,
In his heart he hath often bethought him of slayings many and fell,
And these be the words he taketh, the thoughts of his heart to tell.—
Where is the horse and the rider? Where is the giver of gold?
Where be the seats at the banquet? Where be the hall-joys of old?
Alas for the burnisht cup!—for the byrned chief to-day!
Alas for the strength of the prince! for the time
hath past away—
Is hid 'neath the shadow of night, as it never had been at all.
Behind the dear and doughty there standeth now a wall—
A wall that is wondrous high, and with wondrous snake-work wrought.—
The strength of the spears hath fordene the earls and hath made them naught;
The weapons greedy of slaughter, and ahe, the mighty Weird;
And the tempests beat on the rocks, and the storm-wind that maketh afear—
The terrible storm that fetters the earth, the winter-hale,
When the shadow of night falls wan, and wild is the rush of the hail,
The cruel rush from the north, which maketh men to quail.
Hardship-full is the earth, o'erturned when the stark Weirds say;
Hers is the passing of riches, here friends are passing away;
And men and kinsfolk pass, and nothing and none
may stay;
And all this earth-atead here shall be empty and void one day.

E. H. HICKEY.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

Scribner's Monthly offers many attractions in the present number. There are two papers on Carlyle—one by Mr. Emerson, furnishing his impressions of the seer in 1848; the other by Mr. Saintsbury, giving a general estimate of Mr. Carlyle's literary worth. We have as yet, however, seen no article from this latter point of view upon Carlyle which we can regard as completely satisfactory, or in any way exhaustive. Mr. Saintsbury's seems to us to lack grip. We want an explanation of Carlyle's power and influence over his contemporaries, and a real analysis of his singular genius; and this remains yet to be done, though Mr. Saintsbury's paper is undoubtedly interesting. Speaking of literary men who have died of recent years, Mr. Saintsbury states that Thackeray died in 1868, and that Dickens followed him seven years later. This may be a printer's error, but it should be corrected. Thackeray died on December 24, 1863, and Dickens on June 9, 1870. We are sorry to hear what Mr. Saintsbury says, that in the Jamaica dispute nearly all the Oxford men of his time were on the side of Carlyle as against Mill. Those who wish to learn more about Jenny Lind—one of the most popular singers who ever received a welcome in London—will find a full account of her in Scribner; while many Londoners even will be astonished to discover how many places there are under their very noses immortally associated with the name and writings of Charles Dickens. These are duly set forth in a very entertaining paper, entitled "In and Out of London with Dickens." By-the-way, in another interesting sketch devoted to that quaint and original humorist, "Artemus Ward," he is constantly called Charles Farrar Brown. We had always been under the impression that his name was Farrer Browne, but of course the Americans should know best. As usual with this magazine, the illustrations are again one of its most prominent and attractive features.

THE number of the China Review for January and February is not as interesting as many of its predecessors. It would be unreasonable, however, to complain of this inequality. No editor of a Review can always command success, much less one who has to deal only with a difficult and isolated subject. The opening article, on the "Chinese Notion of Cosmogony and the Genesis of Man," is curious; but the elaborate foot-notes appended to each page suggest the thought that the writer has expended unnecessary time in studying the strange fancies relating to the origin of created things begotten by a degenerate Taoism. To the same corrupted form of the doctrines of Lao-tse is to be attributed the T'ai-hsi king, or "the respiration of the embryo," translated by Mr. Balfour. In a linguistic sense, a short article by "L. C. H.," on the Ju shêng "considered in its relation to the remaining tones," is by far the most interesting in the number. In it the writer maintains that the Ju shêng finals k, t, p are correlated to the finals ng, n, and m of the other tone classes, and he holds, in opposition to Dr. Edkins, that to all syllables which at present end with k, t, or p must be ascribed earlier terminations in ng, n, and m respectively. Following this paper, we have the missionaries' letter to Prof. Max Müller on the subject of Dr. Legge's translation of the words Shang ti in the volume of the Chinese classics published among "The Sacred Books of the East," together with the Professor's reply. The books reviewed at the end of the number are the History of Corea, by the Rev. John Ross; the Classical Poetry of the Japanese, by B. H. Chamberlain; Cursus Litteraturae Sinicae, by P. Angelo Zottoli; The Chinese Recorder and Missionary Journal; and a few minor publications.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- CHADAT, P. La Brique et la Terre cuite. Paris: V° A. Morel. 150 fr.
- FROMMANN, E. Aufsätze zur Geschichte d. Buchhandels im 16. Jahrhundert. 2. Hft. Italien. Jena: Frommann. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- LANG, A. The Library. ("Art at Home" Series.) Macmillan. 3s. 6d.
- QUATZELLES. A Coup de Fusil. Illustrations par A. de Neuville. 1^{re} Livr. Paris: Charpentier. 1 fr.
- SCHERPKOVSKI. A. Esquisses de la Poésie satirique en France du Temps de la Renaissance. Hamburg: Jenichen. 1 M. 20 Pf.
- SENIER, A. Jean-François Millet, Peasant and Painter. Macmillan. 16s.
- VON NIKOLAUS I. zu Alexander III. St. Petersburg Beiträge zur neuesten russischen Geschichte. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 8 M.

THEOLOGY.

- DORNER, J. A. System der christlichen Glaubenslehre. 2. Bd. Speciale Glaubenslehre. 2. Hälfte. Berlin: Besser. 10 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- EBMISCH, H. Studien zur Geschichte der sächsisch-böhmischen Beziehungen in den J. 1464 bis 1471. Dresden: Baensch. 3 M.
- FREY, O. Die Schicksale d. königlichen Gutes in Deutschland unter den letzten Stauern seit König Philipp. Berlin: Besser. 6 M.
- HENDENHEIMES, H. Petrus Martyr Anglerius u. sein Opus Epistolarum. Ein Beitrag zur Quellenkunde des Zeitalters der Renaissance u. der Reformation. Berlin: Schohen. 4 M. 50 Pf.
- MAS LATRIE, L. de. Traité de Paix et de Commerce: Relations des Croisés avec les Arabes de l'Afrique septentrionale au Moyen Age. Paris: Plon. 36 fr.
- PÉNOT-OUKES. Histoire des Iles de la Manche. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
- PENNINGSK, M. Die kirchliche Politik Kaiser Konrads II. Bonn: Behrendt. 1 M. 50 Pf.
- RENOUS, H. Coutumes de Clermont-Dessus, en Agerais. 1262. Paris: Larose. 2 fr.
- STEMPEL, R. Das Verhältniss d. Arelute zu Kaiser u. Reich vom Tode Friedrich I. bis zum Interregnum. Berlin: Besser. 3 M.
- WURSTENFELD, F. Geschichte der Fatimiden-Ohalifen. Nach arab. Quellen. Göttingen: Dieterich. 14 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BALDAMUS, E. Die Erscheinungen der deutschen Literatur auf dem Gebiete der Medizin u. Pharmacie 1876-80. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 3 M. 50 Pf.
- DEVILLEZ, A. Traité élémentaire de la Chaleur au Point de Vue de son Emploi comme Force motrice. T. I. Paris: Baudry. 10 fr.
- ENNEPER, A. Untersuchungen üb. die Flächen m. planen u. sphärischen Krümmungslinien. 2. Abhlg. Göttingen: Dieterich. 5 M. 80 Pf.
- FERRAZ. Nos Devoirs et nos Droits: Morale pratique. Paris: Didier. 3 fr. 50 c.
- PROWE, G. Coppernicus als Arzt. Leipzig: Engelmann. 1 M. 50 Pf.
- VAN TIEBOUM, Ph. Traité de Botanique. 2^e Fasc. Paris: Savy.
- VENN, J. Symbolic Logic. Macmillan. 10s. 6d.

PHILOGY.

- ADAM, L. Les Patois lorrains. Paris: Maisonneuve. 10 fr.
- BENFFY, Th. Behandlung d. euslautenden a in nd (wie) u. n (nicht) im Rigveda. Göttingen: Dieterich. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- FREY, K. Homer. Bern: Fiesla. 1 M. 60 Pf.
- MANN, A. Ueb. die Entstehung der italischen Sprache aus den lateinischen, griechischen, deutschen u. celtischen Elementen u. üb. die dabei wirkenden Principien u. Ursachen. Berlin: Dümmler. 1 M.
- MÉNÉKRE, C. Glossaire angevin étymologique comparé avec différentes Dialectes. Angers: Lachêre.
- SCHWENK, H. D. J. van. Epigraphie der bataafsche krijgslieden in de roemeinische legers, gevolgd van een lijst van alle geregeld- hulptroepen, tijdens het keizerrijk. Leiden: Sijthoff. 2 fr.
- TEICHMÜLLER, G. Literarische Feinden im 4. Jahrh. vor Chr. Breslau: Koebner. 8 M.
- VAHLEN, J. Ueb. die Anfänge der Heroiden d. Ovid. Berlin: Dümmler. 1 M. 50 Pf.
- WIEKELER, F. Scenische u. kritische Bemerkungen zu Euripides' Kyklops.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE "NIOBE" OF MOUNT SIPYLOS.

19 Church Road, Willesden: May 9, 1881.

On reading Mr. Ramsay's notice of Mr. Weber's book in the ACADEMY for April 30, I am led to send you a word or two on the so-called Niobe of Mount Sipylus. I have a photograph of it, as well as sketches I made on the spot in 1877; and the conclusions I formed at that time regarding the figure were of a very uncertain kind. To me it seemed to be sitting—the projection of the knees forming the lap is inconsistent with the standing position; to this might be added that I think there is a chair, or throne, indicated behind the figure. There is another impression which was produced on my mind at the time—that it is a male and not a female figure. The head is the rudest or most decayed part of the statue, and nothing remains of the features; but from the mass as it stands, were I to restore it, I could only do so by making it a head with a very full beard. The massive breadth of the shoulders would exactly suit such a restoration, and the breasts are not those of a female. The figure might be that of Zeus. The hands are clenched and pressed on each breast, but quite low enough to let the form of the pectoralis major be seen. I thought I could make out some of the fingers of the right hand, and that I could see remains of the links of a chain on the left breast as if it hung from the neck. The existence of feet or shoes did not occur to me, and I was very careful in sketching the curious groove near to where the feet ought to be.

I give the above only as impressions, for the figure is so very rude; but as Mr. Ramsay and M. Weber are both in the region, and may have a chance of inspecting it again, they might take another look at it and give their opinions.

WILLIAM SIMPSON.

"AN OCEAN FREE LANCE."

63 Westmoreland Road, Newcastle-on-Tyne: May 9, 1881.

Mr. Saintsbury, in his genial notice of An Ocean Free Lance, calls the Hornet a brig; and corrects me for speaking of her as a fifty-gun vessel. In this last he is right; but he is wrong in styling her a brig, for she was a ship-rigged sloop-of-war, very nearly the size of the Frolic, and in her action with H.B.M. Peacock (brig) she mounted eighteen 32-pound carronades and two long 9-pounders, and was manned by 170 seamen. The matter is of consequence to myself only in so far as the calibre of the Hornet justified me in making the captain of the Tigress, a schooner barely half the size of the Hornet, with a crew of ninety and carrying only twelve guns, anxious to sheer off from the big ship-rigged cruiser that looked like that Yankee vessel.

A full description of the Hornet is given in James's Naval Occurrences, 1817.

W. CLARK RUSSELL.

SWEDENBORGIAN LITERATURE.

Bottesford Manor, Brigg: May 7, 1881.

I see by a notice in your impression of to-day that Mr. J. R. Boyle, of Hull, is engaged in the compilation of a complete catalogue of the literature relating to Swedenborg. It may possibly not be known to him and some others who are interested in this subject that there is a large collection of Swedenborgian literature in English and other languages preserved in the Bibliotheca Thysiana at Leyden. This library is in the Rapenburg, very near to the library of the university, but on the other side the canal. A catalogue, including the Swedenborgian books, was printed in 1852. I believe—but of this I am not quite certain—that, though distinct from the library of the university, it is the property of that illustrious body.

EDWARD PEACOCK.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- MONDAY, May 16, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture V. "Colour Blindness and its Influence on Various Industries," by Mr. R. Bradenell Carter.
- 8 p.m. Victoria Institute: "The Rain-fall of India," by Sir Joseph Fyler; "Biblical Proper Names, Personal and Local, illustrated from Sources external to Holy Scripture," by the Rev. H. G. Tomkins.
- TUESDAY, May 17, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Non-Metallic Elements," by Prof. Dewar.
- 7.45 p.m. Statistical.
- 8 p.m. Royal Historical.
- 8 p.m. Zoological: "Additions to the Society's Menagerie during April," by Mr. P. L. Slater; "A Collection of Persian Reptiles recently added to the British Museum," by Mr. W. T. Blanford; "List of Land and Fresh-water Shells collected in Sumatra and Borneo," by Mr. Carl Bock.
- 8 p.m. Institution of Civil Engineers: "Torpedo Boats and Light Yachts for High-speed Steam Navigation," by Mr. John I. Thornycroft.
- WEDNESDAY, May 18, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Electrical Railway, and the Transmission of Power by Electricity," by Mr. Alexander Siemens.
- 8 p.m. British Archaeological: "Oak Figures discovered in Britain, Brittany, &c.," by Dr. Phené.
- THURSDAY, May 19, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Magnetism," by Prof. Tyndall.
- 4.30 p.m. Royal.
- 7 p.m. Numismatic.
- 8 p.m. Society for the Fine Arts: "The Art Decoration of Auditoria," by Mr. Frank Roland.
- 8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
- FRIDAY, May 20, 5 p.m. London Institution: "Artemus Ward," by the Rev. H. R. Haweis.
- 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Shakespeare Criticism," by Mr. W. H. Pollock.
- 8 p.m. Philological: President's Annual Address, by Mr. A. J. Ellis.
- SATURDAY, May 21, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Russian Literature—Pushkin," by Prof. C. E. Turner.

SCIENCE.

Anthropology: an Introduction to the Study of Man and Civilisation. By Edward B. Tylor, D.C.L., F.R.S. (Macmillan.)

ANTHROPOLOGY is a nascent science. It is only of late years that it has become possible to take a comprehensive view of the physical and intellectual development of man, and to shape our knowledge into a systematic form worthy to be called a science. Until geology and biology had recognised certain facts and principles which have only been accepted within the last five-and-twenty years, a system of anthropology, in the modern sense of the term, was an impossibility. Even now the claims of anthropology to take rank as a distinct science are not too freely conceded. In some quarters it is still the fashion to regard it as an incoherent assemblage of facts and fancies—amusing, in its way, but of little or no educational value. By others, again, it is thought to be a useful study for medical men, but not a subject of any general interest. Its scope and its objects are not always understood, or, if understood, not appreciated, even by professed biologists. Yet those who take a wide view of anthropology, and duly mark its bearing upon the progress of society, can hardly fail to recognise it as a science of national importance—a science which ought to make itself felt as a living power in the affairs of men.

If a student desire to commence the scientific study of Man, there is in this country no professor of anthropology at whose feet he can sit; nor has there been, hitherto, any treatise to which he could turn for a comprehensive exposition of the principles of the science. Dr. E. B. Tylor has therefore rendered a signal service to British anthropology by his recent publication of a book in which the student can find, within moderate compass, a well-defined outline of the subject, drawn with the firmness of a master-hand.

When a science is passing through its formative stages, nothing tends more to promote its development than the publication of a work laying down its principles and defining its scope. Every new science is necessarily built to a large extent upon the older sciences; and it is, therefore, obviously desirable to know its exact relation to our pre-existing knowledge. Geology, for example, has drawn heavily upon geography, mineralogy, and biology. Anthropology, in like manner, has received large contributions from ethnology and philology, from anatomy and archaeology, from psychology and sociology. If a student, for want of a special text-book, has to read separate treatises upon these subjects, he is apt to grow weary of his task, and to turn from it with dismay, if not disgust. It is not, however, necessary that anyone should master such a diversity of studies before he can take an intelligent interest in anthropological enquiries. What the beginner needs is a friendly guide to select from the component sciences such parts as every student of anthropology ought to know; and then, with this general knowledge as a basis, he can proceed to such of the special branches as may best suit his tastes.

Dr. Tylor has laid us under a heavy debt for his good offices in making such a selection as that just mentioned. It needs but a slight survey of the book to see that a very wise discretion has been exercised in this selection. Where the subject grows technical, as in the department of anatomical anthropology, he has taken care not to over-weight his pages with details. At the same time, sufficient physical anthropology is introduced for the purposes of the ordinary reader. On the other hand, where the argument is less technical, and can be readily followed by any educated man—as in those chapters which relate to the development of culture—greater latitude of treatment has been permitted. Yet it must be acknowledged that Dr. Tylor has not allowed any undue prominence to be given to those branches of the science in which he is known to be specially interested. In fact, in looking broadly at the work, one recognises that it is, on the whole, a remarkably well-balanced and well-proportioned book. It necessarily deals with a great diversity of subjects, but each is kept in its proper place; notwithstanding the temptation to place one's favourite topic in the front, no one subject is here allowed to over-shadow its neighbour: the author, in fact, reminds us of a skilful cook who, in blending a variety of ingredients, takes care that no particular flavour shall predominate.

Much may be said in favour of introducing the study of such a work as this into a liberal system of education, in the same way as physical geography is now generally taught in the advanced classes of our schools. The author has well pointed out how the science of Man and Civilisation "connects into a more manageable whole the scattered subjects of an ordinary education." There is no question that, if this book were placed in the hands of an intelligent youth, it would give point to much that is meaningless in the routine of his school duties; it would tend to freshen his work, and give zest to his study of language, of mythology, of history, perhaps even of mathematics. The chapters on the development of the industrial arts would certainly throw a new light upon many commonplace objects; while the frequent reference to survivals from a former state of things would show that an unsuspected meaning often lurks in the most insignificant of trifles. What school-boy would not be delighted with the way in which our author dissects our ceremonial dress-coat, and shows how each part—useless as it may now seem—represents a survival from an ancestral type of garment in which our forefathers rode and worked!

Dr. Tylor has handled his subject throughout not only with great skill, but with much delicacy and ingenuousness. Wherever a case occurs in which culture has degenerated, full weight is given to its meaning. Anthropologists are familiar with such cases of degradation as that of the Digger Indians of California. But, for all this, it is clear to any impartial student that the movement of civilisation has been, on the whole, a movement forwards. No one, indeed, can rise from the perusal of a work like Dr. Tylor's without feeling that the great lesson which anthropology has to teach is that of the Progress of Humanity. F. W. RUDLER.

SOME BOOKS ON TEUTONIC PHILOLOGY.

Altenglische Legenden. Neue Folge. Hrsg. von C. Horstmann. (Heilbronn: Henninger.) Dr. Horstmann has here added a third to his two former collections of Middle-English legends. In his present volume (a bulky one of considerably over six hundred pages) he prints the Northern collection of legends in MS. Harl. 4196, then Barbour's legend of St. Machor, and, lastly, a large number of miscellaneous legends of various ages. He gives a general introduction on the nature and origin of the legend, which he shows to have been a development of the reading of passages from the Acta Sanctorum as a part of the Church services, and then describes the various Middle-English collections of legends in detail. His estimate of the literary merits of the oldest Southern legends, such as the Margarete, Katherine, and Gregorius, is so enthusiastic as to awaken doubts of the soundness and balance of his judgment on literary questions generally. He asserts that they are "poems in the simplest, noblest form, full of deep feeling, full of noble and earnest sentiment, in rich, flowing, harmonious language." Those who are acquainted with Dr. Horstmann's critical estimates of several other of his favourite legends will know that this is only his way of expressing his opinion that the above legends are not such utter doggerel as the rest. But there can be no doubt that he has conferred a great boon on the linguistic student by this volume of accurately printed texts in a great variety of dialects and periods. Among them may be specially noted the Life of St. Etheldred in the Wiltshire dialect of about 1420.

Grundriss der neuisländischen Grammatik. Von William H. Carpenter. (Leipzig: Schlicke.) The author (who, in spite of his English name, is apparently a German) tells us that his work is the result of a six months' stay in Iceland. He says truly that the great difficulty in learning Modern Icelandic is the want of suitable guides, the existing grammars mixing up old and new in such a way that it is impossible to separate that which is peculiar to the modern language from that which it has in common with the old classical language. He states that the object of his grammar is not to trace the historical development of the modern language, but to describe it as it is actually spoken and written. Unfortunately, he has started with very vague notions of the relation between the spoken and the written language, which, in Iceland as elsewhere, differ very widely from one another. His grammar is a grammar not of the living spoken language, but of the artificial literary one, from which his paradigms and chrestomathy are exclusively taken, the actual modern forms being often mentioned only incidentally. Thus we have the paradigm hver, hvers, &c., with a note "hver wird in der auserprache zu hvor." What is the "pronunciation" but the word itself? After this we are quite prepared to find him unacquainted with the results of modern phonetics, and consequently unable to give a satisfactory account of the pronunciation. He directs us to pronounce ö as in German oben, when a direction to combine the o in oft with u would have guided a German to the exact sound; and tells us that h is pronounced before n, l, r, j! The grammar of the real living Icelandic—that is to say, the spoken language—still remains to be written. Meanwhile, the present work is a useful stop-gap; and, of course, for those who only want a help in reading modern books it will amply suffice.

Karl Körner: Einleitung in das Studium des Angelsächsischen. 2. Theil. Text, Uebersetzung, Anmerkungen, Glossar. (Heilbronn: Henninger.) The first part of this work, consisting of a short grammar, appeared some years ago. The present volume, which completes the work, consists of a series of texts in prose and poetry, with notes and a glossary. The texts are accompanied by a literal German translation on the opposite page, which is certainly a good idea in a book intended for self-taught students. It would, however, perhaps have been better to have placed the translation at the end of the book for occasional reference only, so that the student might not have it continually staring him in the face. The extracts are, on the whole, well chosen, so as to give a good idea of the different branches of literature and varieties of style. The glossary calls for some criticism. In the first place, no references are given; it is, of course, easy to go too far in registering the occurrence of ordinary words, but the opposite extreme of giving no references at all is equally objectionable. Thus, on the very first page of the glossary we find "ac, oc aber, sondern; und;" the advanced scholar as well as the beginner naturally asks for a reference to such a form as oc, which is certainly a very rare one in Old English, and many would be helped by a reference to the meaning "and." The author has indulged the extraordinary freak of including in his glossary all the words in Beowulf, the Elene, Orosius, Zupitza's and Brenner's Readers, and in Koch's and Mätzner's grammars! What use these words can be to the student, especially without references, it is difficult to see. The notes contain many happy observations on word-meanings, syntactical constructions, and other literary points. Körner's rejection of the derivation of astel from a hypothetical ast = German ast, and his suggestion that the word is simply the Latin astula, here used in the sense of book-cover, is undoubtedly correct. The suggestion (p. 205) that the modern thews is simply a variety of thighs, and consequently is unconnected with the Old-English þeawas, also deserves consideration. He is weaker in purely philological questions. He derives scir (p. 216) from scirian, although Zupitza has pointed out that a nominative feminine scir must have a long vowel, to which the modern shire also points; the word has nothing to do with sceran. He doubts (p. 218) the derivation of Legaceaster from castra legionum, which he apparently regards as a bold guess of Freeman's. A reference to Bede's History, ii. 2, will set him right: "Castra Legionum, quae a gente Anglorum Legacaestir, a Bretonibus autem rectius Caerlegion appellatur." In a note on the verb siglan (p. 208) he has unaccountably made the mistake of attributing the form seglan to the Lauderdale MS. of Orosius, and to Early West-Saxon generally; siglan is the regular form throughout the Lauderdale MS., and in all other Early West-Saxon MSS.

The Anglo-Saxon Metaphor: Dissertation for the Acquisition of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy from the University of Freiburg. By F. B. Gummere. (Halle.) This essay (written in English by a young American student) is mainly directed against Heinzel's theories on the relations of Old-English and Old-Norse poetical style (Ueber den stil der altgermanischen Poesie). Mr. Gummere considers that the Old-Germanic poetry was wanting in similes; and that their scanty appearance in Old-English poetry, as opposed to Old-Norse, is part of the more archaic character of the former. He defines the simile as a "developed or conscious metaphor," and examines the metaphors of Old-English poetry in detail, summing up his general results with the conclusion that the typical Old-English metaphor was originally confined mainly to one word, this general type being afterwards modified by Latin literature, resulting in extended metaphor, simile, and learned allegory, but without any material detracting from the originality of the native style. He finally points out the influence of Christianity in the use of the colours black and white to denote bad and good in a moral sense, which is common in the later poems, but not found in the national Beowulf. He has certainly completely confuted Heinzel's theories, and made an addition of some value to literary criticism.

H. SWEET.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES.

THE third lecture of this course, on "The Buddhist Scriptures," was delivered by Mr. Rhys Davids on Tuesday last. The lecturer very briefly and lucidly sketched the gradual growth of the Buddhist sacred books, omitting, of course, the chronological details connected with the subject. He showed that Buddha was the founder of an order of mendicants, and of an ecclesiastical system which, in the lifetime of its originator and chief, necessitated the drawing up of some simple code of laws for the guidance of the growing Buddhist community. Certain rites had to be performed, and various questions settled at authorised meetings of the "brethren." The words used on these occasions were important; and we are not surprised to find that, at a very early period in the history of the "Order," an ecclesiastical manual was compiled, containing the words of these votes or resolutions of the assembly, or chapter, of priests.

The name of this ritual is Kammavācā (the ecclesiastical vote being called kammavācā = the word of the act). The first chapter contains an ordination service; other chapters provided a form for the investiture of a "brother" with his three robes, and for the holding of "holy-days" (held four times a month, and fixed by the moon's changes).

On two of these uposatha, or holy days, the priests met together to hear the reading of the "precepts" (sīlas), to make confession if they had been guilty of any breach of them, and to submit to the necessary penance. The ritual that contains this canonical law is called the Pātimokkha, which is said to signify "that which should be binding." It is the earliest literary work on the Buddhist discipline, or vinaya. An explanation, or commentary, was at a later period added to it; and still later a history of the occasion which gave rise to the injunctions of the pātimokkha was worked up with the older material into the so-called "vinaya-pitaka" (= the basket of discipline). One division of the Vinaya is into sections (khandhakas), and to it belong the Mahāvagga and Cūlavagga. Another division is the Vibhanga, an extension of the pātimokkha; the third is the Parivāra-pātho, an appendix containing a résumé and index of the whole.

Mr. Davids then proceeded to speak of the Dhamma, or doctrinal portion of the scriptures, which he said was devoted to ethics and self-culture, and was of more interest than the Vinaya. The time at the disposal of the learned lecturer did not enable him to trace the growth of the Dhamma as contained in the Sutta-pitaka (or basket of discourses). He very briefly alluded to its five great divisions (nikāyas), and then went on to explain the Abhidhamma-pitaka, usually defined as the "basket of metaphysics." Mr. Davids very rightly, we think, took objection to the term metaphysical as applied to the Abhidhamma, which no more deserves this special designation than the other divisions of the sacred books.

After this account of the Buddhist sacred literature, the lecturer proceeded to illustrate Buddha's method of teaching by some interesting selections from two important discourses—namely, the Assalāyana-sutta, on the indifference of caste (edited by Dr. Pischel), and the Tevijja-sutta (translated by Mr. Davids in "The Sacred Books of the East"), which deals with "union with Brahma" (the supreme spirit of the universe).

At the conclusion of the lecture, it was announced that a "Pāli Text Society" had just been founded for the publication of the great mass of inedited Pāli MSS.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

IT is probable that Mr. Douglas W. Freshfield will succeed to the secretaryship of the Royal Geographical Society, vacant by the resignation of Mr. R. H. Major.

MR. F. C. SELOUS, whose travels in the Zambesi region we mentioned on March 27, 1880, has returned to England. Owing to illness and other causes he was prevented from making another journey to the Zambesi region during the past winter, when he intended to have pushed through the Mashulumbwe country to the Kafukwe, or Kafue, tributary of the great river, and thence to have struck across to Lake Bangweolo, and so on to Lake Nyassa. Mr. Selous is chiefly known as a successful hunter of large game, of which he has brought home some good specimens; but he has also added much to our geographical knowledge of the interior, and some of the results of his explorations were published, with a map, in the March number of the Monthly Record of Geography.

DR. FR. WIESER, of Innsbruck, has succeeded in tracing the authority which influenced Schöner when, on his globes, made in the beginning of the sixteenth century, he indicated a strait separating the southern extremity of America from a supposed Antarctic continent, thus anticipating Magelhaens' great discovery of a South-west passage. Schöner refers to this strait in a small treatise, Luculentissima quaedam terrae totius descriptio, &c., published at Nuremberg in 1513; and he derived his information from a news-sheet of the period, Copia der neuen Zeitung auss Presilg Landt, in which reference is made to a Portuguese expedition which took place in the beginning of the sixteenth century. Dr. Wieser does not believe that the Portuguese actually discovered Magelhaens' Strait, but thinks they were deceived by a gulf, such as that of St. Mathias, far to the north of it. Dr. Wieser draws attention to the fact that Schöner's globe of 1515 is the oldest printed map upon which the name "America" is to be found.

THE Bollettino of the Italian Geographical Society publishes additional information on Matteucci's and Massari's journey through Dar Fur, together with a carefully compiled map, by Signor Cora, showing the traveller's route from Khartum to the frontier of Wadai. The map, together with the erudite notes accompanying it, is likewise published in Nora's Cosmos.

WE hear with regret that Dr. Max Buchner has failed in his attempt to explore the Lower Kasai. He penetrated as far as lat. 7° 22' S., when the desertion of his porters compelled him to retrace his steps towards the coast. On February 8 he arrived at Malanje. A considerable portion of Dr. Buchner's collections was lost in the Benin, which foundered some time ago within sight of the coast of England.

MGR. COMBONI was to leave Khartum in the latter part of February for Jebel Nuba, and was expected to arrive at El Obeid by Easter. He was informed that Kordofan was suffering from drought, and that water in that province was very scarce and dear.

THE Italian traveller, Capt. Casati, is advancing to the south of the Bahr el Ghazal in the direction of the Welle, which he intends to explore.

THE Italian branch of the International African Association has resolved to join its resources with those of the Geographical Society for the maintenance of the station in Shoa, which the Marchese Antinori is expected to leave before long.

MGR. TAURIN CAHAGNE, whose expedition to the Galla country has been before mentioned, was to leave Aden with his party on March 22 for Zeila, on the African coast, so as to reach Harar before the very hot weather sets in. He has already founded a station at Berbera.

M. OSIENIN has contributed to the Bulletin of the Russian Geographical Society a paper on Karateguin and Darwaz. The former he visited in 1878 at the head of a scientific expedition, when he obtained his information regarding the latter. He started from Samarkand, and, traversing Hissar, entered Karateguin, near the sources of the Obi-harm. He then followed the Surk-ab to the eastern frontier, whence he entered Russian territory. He collected a large amount of information respecting the orography of the country, some of the peaks of which attain a height of over twenty thousand feet. He also discovered, and named after Prof. Fedchenko, a glacier some twelve miles long at the sources of the Sel-su.

A "SECTION GOTTHARD" of the Swiss Alpine Club has been formed in the canton of Uri. Thirty-two men from Altorf, Amsteg, and Wasen are the first members of the new branch.

THE Government of the Argentine Republic have sent Dr. Fontana to explore that part of the State of Corrientes which borders on the Gran Chaco, with a view to the preparation of a map of the region.

THE expedition which the Sultan of Zanzibar a short time back despatched under Mr. Beardall, to ascertain how far one of the chief tributaries of the River Rufigi, or Lufigi, could be made available as a water-route from the East Coast towards the head of Lake Nyassa, has just finished its labours. Mr. Beardall, we believe, reports against the idea, as he found that the River Urunga, for some eighty miles at any rate, was full of rocks and rapids, and, besides, flowed through a barren and almost deserted region.

THE proposed Arctic expedition in search of the Jeannette will be commanded by Lieut. R. M. Berry, of the steamer Mary and Helen, who commanded the Tigress in search of the missing members of the Polaris crew. Among the appliances added to the ship will be an observatory balloon, from which it is expected a view of thirty miles can be had if it reaches the altitude of balloons sent up in the American climate. Bombs will be used by the exploring party to give sign of their presence in the Arctic Seas.

THE Swiss are making an effort to participate worthily in the forthcoming International Geographical Exhibition at Venice. The Geneva Chamber of Commerce has taken up one branch of activity in order to ensure a good representation of the instruments of precision, measures of time and distance, and all articles used in the observation and registration of physical phenomena and processes, especially those made in Neuchâtel and Locle. Prof. Am Rhyn, as Federal commissary, has undertaken a journey of inspection through Eastern Switzerland in order to select, with leave of the authorities, a number of the most important MSS. and cartographical materials from the public libraries. The committee of the Stadtbibliothek of Bern has consented to lend any treasures under its guardianship which the commissary may select. Similar good-will has been shown at Basel. Special attention will be paid to methodology and to geographical instruction in schools, a province in which Switzerland has already earned a deserved reputation.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Geology in the Graveyard.—In order to determine the precise rate at which various rock surfaces suffer disintegration when freely exposed to the action of weather, Prof. Geikie has carefully examined a number of tombstones, principally in the graveyards of Edinburgh. It is evident that, where the date of erection is ascertainable, such observations may lead to conclusions of a very definite character. The stones used for sepulchral monuments in Edinburgh are principally marbles and limestones, sandstones and flagstones, and—in recent tombstones—granite. In the case of white marble it is curious to note the curvature which the slabs frequently assume. The effect of weathering upon an upright marble slab, when firmly inserted in a framework of sandstone, is to cause it to bulge out in the centre until the tension ultimately results in fracture. Some examples of this peculiar mode of destruction are figured in the last part of the Proceedings of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, which contains Prof. Geikie's paper. It appears that, in the atmosphere of Edinburgh, slabs of marble, save in excessively sheltered situations—are entirely destroyed in less than a century. On the other hand, well-selected siliceous sandstones are exceedingly durable. Thus, a freestone tomb in Greyfriars' Churchyard, erected about 1650, still retains with sharpness the original chisel-marks. Even the most durable of granites will probably be far surpassed in permanence by the best siliceous sandstones.

A STATION for the study of marine zoology is being undertaken by the Women's Education Society of Boston during the coming summer. The proposed site for the laboratory is at Annisquam, on the coast of Massachusetts, north of Cape Ann.

THE last addition to the series of monographs upon the History of Religion, published by Tjeenk Willink, of Haarlem, under the title of "De Voornamste Goddiensten," is a History of Indian Buddhism, by Dr. H. Kern, of Leyden, of which two parts out of ten have just appeared.

CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE.

The Fields of Great Britain. By Hugh Clements. (Crosby Lockwood and Co.) This is a small manual of agriculture, intended for students attending the advanced classes connected with the Science and Art Department. It opens with a few introductory remarks on the farming of the future from the pen of Mr. H. Kains Jackson. Then Mr. Clements describes soils, their formation, their properties, and their relations to plants. Irrigation, drainage, implements, farm-buildings, manures, and rotation of crops are handled in eight chapters. Seeds, grasses, hay, orchards, and woods are next discussed; while there are fifteen chapters devoted to food, feeding, and live stock. The whole work, from beginning to end, shows at once a considerable amount of perseverance in the collection of facts, figures, and opinions, and also an almost complete lack of power in assimilating the materials gathered. We confess that we opened the book with many misgivings, our recollection of Mr. Hugh Clements's small volume, entitled Organic Chemistry, leading us to expect a grotesquely incorrect and inadequate production. But this little book, though marred by many defects, is a decided improvement upon the author's Organic Chemistry. This, however, is, we confess, but faint praise. Although he does not tell us what authorities he has consulted, readers of recent literature in the department of agricultural chemistry will not experience much difficulty in discovering the treatises which Mr. Clements has employed in his compilation. But his reading has not been wide enough, nor his use of materials judicious enough, for it to be worth while to give a detailed criticism of the author's volume. We may content ourselves with furnishing two or three citations, justifying our condemnation of the work as inexact and inadequate. Look at the table on p. 22, where we are told that the per-centage of lime in volcanic rocks, soils, and plant ashes varies between 0 and 90! In the same table we are informed that, while phosphorus pentoxide is found in soils and plant ashes to the extent sometimes of 1.5 per cent. (no mon!), phosphorus occurs in volcanic rocks. Passing on to p. 150 the author is not able to speak more accurately concerning the potato murrain than that a fungus "must have something to do with the complaint." A few pages further on (155) we are told that by the process of malting the starch in barley is "almost doubled"! And we are further informed that malt contains "12 per cent. of a starchy cellulose nitrogenous mixture called hordein." With this quotation we close Mr. Clements' volume, trusting that we shall not have another work of similar quality to review for some time.

Scientific Industries explained. By Alexander Watt. (W. and A. K. Johnston.) Mr. Watt discourses of aniline pigments and dyes; of candles and paper; of gunpowder and glass; of inks and vinegar; of fireworks and gun-cotton. "A systematic arrangement of the subjects treated has been purposely avoided in order that the work may be regarded as a means of intellectual recreation." The different sections or papers are of unequal merit; one of the poorest is that on "Pigments;" one of the best is that on "Gilding Watch Movements;" the latter, however, is quoted entire from Roseleur's Electroplating. But it is difficult to speak favourably of a volume like the present, or to commend it to the attention of any special class of readers. There are a few interesting facts to be discovered in the book, yet students needing instruction in technology will not find the sound information they want in these pages; while general readers will probably be disappointed with the style of the author and the treatment of any subjects in which they feel an interest. Moreover, the author falls into error not infrequently during the course of his excursions over the whole field of applied science. He is under the impression (p. 49), for example, that the acrospire of the grain of barley is the plumule and may "become a perfect leaf," when in reality it is the root. His directions for making ether on p. 180 and 181 are sure to lead to disastrous results. We hope no school-boys in their next vacation will "put two pounds of rectified spirit of wine in a glass retort placed on a sandbath, then pour on two pounds of sulphuric acid and boil as quickly as possible." If these operations are carried out without a catastrophe it is to be hoped that the operator will be content, and not go on to pour one pound more spirit into the retort containing the heated oil of vitrol.

Electrotyping. By J. W. Urquhart. (Crosby, Lockwood and Co.) This is a better book than the Electroplating of the same author. In the present work, which is really a "practical manual," containing instructions derived from actual working of the processes described, we learn how to reproduce printing surfaces and works of art by means of the electro-deposition of metals. Considering the increasing employment of electro-deposits of metals in book-illustrations (as in phototyping and in steeling etched plates), Mr. Urquhart's volume appears opportunely. We can speak favourably of many sections of the work before us, particularly the chapters treating of the electro-typic copying of works in metal.

Vivisection, Scientifically and Ethically considered in Three Prize Essays. By James Macaulay, A.M., M.D.; Rev. Brewin Grant, B.A.; and Abiathar Wall, L.R.O.P. Ed. (Marshall, Japp and Co.) The most interesting part of this volume is the Preface. We are told that, a prize of two hundred guineas having been offered by an anonymous benefactor for the best essay against vivisection, seven judges, or "eminent gentlemen," were appointed to weigh the merits of the competitors and adjudge the comfortable reward to the most deserving. Three essays were selected, every one of which had two judges in its favour. The seventh judge, with scrupulous but ill-timed modesty, "did not feel warranted to decide the question, and thought it better, with the consent of all parties, to divide the award among the three authors." We do not think that the ordinary reader who will take the trouble to look through the book will experience much difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that Dr. Macaulay gives a temperate summary of the objections usually urged against the practice of vivisection, and displays a competent acquaintance with the biological literature of the last generation; that Mr. Wall stands far behind Dr. Macaulay both in his knowledge of facts, in his power of reasoning from those he has got together, and in candour; and that the production of the Rev. Brewin Grant, in gross ignorance of the elements of the subject, in studied misinterpretation, and in the abuse of italics and small capitals, equals, if it does not surpass, the comical tracts against vivisection which are distributed at suburban tea-tables by amiable but unscientific ladies.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—(Thursday, May 5.)

EDWIN FRESHFIELD, ESQ., V.-P., in the Chair.—Mr. Alfred Tylor exhibited a collection of Roman and mediæval antiquities discovered while making the foundations of a building near Newgate. The principal objects are three leaden cylindrical ossuaria, one of which contained a beautifully shaped glass vase, and was decorated with medallions with a figure of a quadriga. Another was ornamented inside with a six-pointed star, like some forms of the labarum without the loop. It is, perhaps, a Mithraic symbol. One funereal vase, of very fine shape, is carved out of green stone, resembling serpentine or Verde di Prado. Several graves formed of roof tiles were also found, and abundance of pottery, Samian and other kinds, and mediæval tiles. The coins found were principally of Nero, Vespasian, and Claudius, and none of very late emperors. The foundations of the walls which were near the remains were built of chalk and Kentish rag, and were probably of the eighth or ninth century. Mr. Tylor gave a detailed account of the geological character of the ground, and a sketch of the history of the spot, which once belonged to the Warwick family, illustrating his remarks by reference to carefully executed plans and drawings. He specially called attention to the fact that the interment shows that this spot was outside the original Roman London, and was probably near one of the main roads leading north or west.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—(Thursday, May 5.)

THE LORD TALBOT DE MALAHIDE, President, in the Chair.—In proposing a vote of sympathy with Mr. Alfred Burges on the death of his gifted son, for so many years an accomplished member of the Institute, the noble Chairman dwelt at some length upon the high ability of the late Mr. William Burges, and his thoroughness both in the practical and artistic portions of the profession of which he was so signal an ornament.—Mr. J. T. Micklethwaite read a paper upon a subject which appears to have hitherto escaped the notice of ecclesiologists, and which, for want of a better name, he called the "High Side Window." He proceeded to describe its position, which, from the evidence of the eleven examples that had come under his notice, appears to be usually near about the south side of the chancel arch. With respect to the common use of "High Side Windows," there would appear to be as much mystery as is associated with those called "Low Side;" and only in one instance, namely, at Addlethorpe, Lincolnshire, is any clue given to their primary use. In this case, tradition says that a lantern was hung in the window at night to guide travellers across the fen. Mr. Micklethwaite thought that this tradition might refer to the exhibition of a light at night towards the cemetery.—Mr. J. H. Middleton exhibited some examples of seventeenth-century Sevilla ware, Damascus tiles with and without relief, and many examples of the work of Persian potters in the Island of Rhodes, and gave a detailed account of these objects.—The Baron de Cosson sent three fourteenth-century swords, spurs, &c., and fragments of weapons from Almedinilla, near Cordova.—Mr. Hartsorn exhibited a drawing of the monument of John IV., Duke of Brittany, died 1399, which was set up in the Cathedral of Nantes by certain English "marblelers," who took it thither under the protection of a "safe-conduct" from the king. The monument was destroyed at the Revolution.—Mr. J. A. Sparvel-Bayly exhibited a very large collection of brasses from out-of-the-way places in Essex, many of them incised. These were discoursed upon at some length by Mr. J. G. Waller.—Mr. H. R. H. Gosnell exhibited some examples of Icelandic silver filigree work ("Vira Virki"), and some eighteenth-century wood-carving, which carried in its details the traditions of earlier times.—Mr. M. H. Bloxam sent a spherical object in pottery found at a great depth at Brinklow, Warwickshire; possibly a loom-weight.—The Rev. C. W. Bingham exhibited a remarkable and ornate object in bronze, apparently a stamp for forming the moulds of circular brooches.—The Rev. J. Fuller Russell sent some autograph MSS. of Dr. Isaac Watts.

CHEMICAL SOCIETY.—(Thursday, May 5.)

DR. ROSCOE, President, in the Chair.—The following papers were read:—(1) "On the Action of Humic Acid on Atmospheric Nitrogen," by Mr. E. W. Prevost. The author has repeated some of the experiments of E. Simon on the above action; he is quite unable to confirm the results of that investigator, and concludes that, under ordinary circumstances, no formation of ammonia takes place when humic acid and nitrogen are allowed to remain in contact.—(2) "On the Active and Inactive Amylamines corresponding to the Active and Inactive Alcohols of Fermentation," by Mr. R. T. Plimpton. The author has prepared and examined the mono-, di-, and tri-amyamines and some of their compounds. The active amyamines polarise strongly; their salts do not crystallise so well as those of the inactive amyamines. There is also some difference in the boiling points and specific gravities of these two classes of bodies.—(3) "On the Action of Sodium Alcoholates on Fumaric Ethers," by Mr. T. Purdie. An acid is formed which is an ethyl ester mallic acid isomeric with the monethyl malate of Desmoussier. The action of sodium isobutylate on isobutyl fumarate was also studied; an isobutyl malic acid was formed.—(4) "On the Products of the Action of Alkalies on Ethylic β Ethyl-aceto-succinates," by Mr. L. T. Thorne. An ethyl-succinic acid was obtained by the action of strong potash identical with that obtained from the α succinate; with weak potash five per cent. α -ethyl- β -aceto-propionic acid was obtained, which on boiling gave off water and formed a body $C_7H_{10}O_4$.—(5) "On Some Carbazol Compounds," by Messrs. E. H. Rennie and W. R. Hodgkinson. The authors have studied the action of potassium carbazol on ethyl chlorocarbonate; a new urethane was obtained.

FINE ART.

THE SALON OF 1881.

(First Notice.)

THE Salon of 1881 contains fewer works by a couple of thousand than that of 1880. This—and considerable increase in the scale of the entrance fees, which the younger artists attempted to force up to twenty francs for the opening day—is the sole result evident to the public of the transference of the entire management of the exhibition from the hands of the Government to the hands of the artists themselves. In all other respects there is nothing to be noted which specially distinguishes 1881 from any other year. The hangers have returned to the old system of alphabetical arrangement; the innovations of 1880, when foreigners were placed apart and native artists were separated into classes according to the degree of the honours which they had previously obtained, have been happily abandoned; and all is as it has been before throughout many, many years. Nor has the exceptional severity of the jury affected in any appreciable degree the general character of the exhibition. The average standard seems to be maintained; and the really large number of works of a high order of merit are, as usual, swamped by the enormous mass of sketches and studies not deserving the name of pictures which cover the walls. There is no great peculiarity, no new tendency, no revelation of a new master or promise of a new talent, to be registered. But the works of men already known to fame once more amply justify their reputation; and a rather severer process of selection employed as regards the contributions of minor painters might have given us a Salon infinitely more telling and creditable to the character of French art, and would have enabled us the better to study the aims and performance of the three groups which now divide the field. For, side by side with the realists, who must reckon M. Bastien Lepage as their most gifted exponent, must now be counted the "primitifs," who seem to have been called into being by M. Puvis de Chavannes; while the legitimate traditions of the national school—steadily maintained by the main body—are this year splendidly represented by M. Baudry.

M. Baudry's great canvas, Glorification de la Loi, which occupies the post of honour in the Salon Carré, is a fragment of the decoration of the great hall for hearing cases at the Court of Appeal. It is intended to fill the central compartment of the ceiling; and being calculated for that position is of course seen at a disadvantage in its present situation, for the execution, which is of a purposely transparent quality, seems, at close quarters, to lack something of sufficiency and solidity. This is especially the case in the flesh painting; and, if I remember rightly, the same was observed in M. Baudry's noble designs for the decoration of the Opera. It is, therefore, probable that the method employed, which has the lightness and transparency of true water-colour, does not lend itself to the indication of solid forms; for in the rendering of the delicate floating draperies of the "figures aériennes" the method is brilliantly successful. This is, however, a very minor point to dwell upon in speaking of a work of such capital importance as M. Baudry's Glorification de la Loi, a work which rivets our attention, whether we like it or not, by the thorough mastery which it displays in the execution of a task demanding for its successful performance the fullest measure of technical accomplishment. The general aspect is, as it should be in painting intended for ceiling decoration, extremely clear and fair in tone. The figure of Law, divinely young, robed in white enriched with gold, and seated on a lofty pedestal, occupies the centre; the white of her garments is brought into strong relief by the black cap which the figure to the right at her feet lifts from his head in reverential salutation. This last figure wears the crimson cloak and ermine collar of a President of the Court of Appeal; and the hue of the cloak is repeated and spread on the left by the scarlet tongue of the tricolor which is held aloft, somewhat in the background, by Authority, who rests her other hand on the consular fasces. In front of this figure, planted on the top of the flight of steps by which the pedestal on which Law is enthroned is approached, stands Jurisprudence, her magnificent robes of gold brocade shining out against the clear sky seen to the left of the portico which fills the remaining space of the background; while above, breaking the lines of the supporting columns, her green robes floating over the white clouds, appears Justice, who is supported on the right by her blue-robed sister Equity. The right is the darker and weightier side of the composition, which is based on a vigorously designed reclining figure of Force, armed and resting in an attitude of splendid repose upon a lion, while a sleeping child outstretched upon her knees symbolises Innocence. In these days of cabinet pictures, and prettiness, and little niceties, and soft refinements, it is unusual to come upon a work which has, like this work of M. Baudry's, an accent of unstrained nobility, and which looks as if its great field had been filled in without a tremor or a moment of hesitation. In the face of evidence of power and admirable technical accomplishment of this high order, we can indeed easily afford to pass over something of non-sensitiveness to delicacies of colour which would seem to be betrayed by the rather crude quality of the blues and greens employed in the upper part of the picture, and which has been previously remarked in other works by M. Baudry.

In the same room hangs also M. Bertrand's La Patrie, another great canvas which, in spite of the blackness and heaviness of its aspect, rewards prolonged examination. In his selection of the martial episode, which he has treated on the scale of life, M. Bertrand has wisely avoided anything which might directly connect it with the bitter experiences of 1870. The wounded standard-bearer, who is the hero of the scene, may have found his fate on other fields than those of Metz or Sedan; his death-blow may have been dealt by other than German hands. Falling backwards in his last agony, clasping the standard with arms folded on his breast, he is supported in his seat by two mounted companions to left and right; behind are seen the anxious faces of others following closely on their heels; while two dismounted soldiers, walking in front, lead his horse, he on the left advancing, drawn sword in hand, while he on the right is helping to keep his wounded comrade in the saddle. The red of the tricolor tells ominously behind the head of the central figure, which, thrown backwards, receives the strongest light in the picture; and this red is the sole relief of colour in the prevailing monotony of neutral tones. Black is the horse which, trampling wearily through the thick mud, is bearing towards us the burden of Death; chestnut and brown are those to right and left; the sky, clear for an instant immediately above the red folds against which rests the head of the dying man, tones down with dull gray splashes to the horizon; and the little red tufts of the helmets and the red of the uniforms are scarcely visible, so thickly bespattered are all the actors with the filthy stains and soils of their weary march.

The example set by M. Bertrand in this powerful work has not been followed by other French military painters, who all continue to harp upon the painful reminiscences of national defeat and disaster with a persistence which, had it been shown in the illustration of French victories and achievements, we should have set down as conclusive proof of their inordinate vanity and self-satisfaction. M. de Neuville, who proved himself, in his Le Bourget, to be the ablest of those devoted especially to work of this class, contributes two more scenes of 1870—Le Cimetière de St.-Privat, in which the last heroic effort of the French defence was made on August 18; and Un Porteur de Dépêches, an episode which might have become in less skilful hands a merely melodramatic incident, but which the painter has treated with a perfect tact. The scene is laid outside the village inn of Ste.-Marie-aux-Chênes près Metz, and the date of September 1870 is given, which looks as if the picture commemorated a well known incident, although the catalogue gives-no name, and contains only the general information that "Un émissaire découvert était immédiatement passé par les armes." The Prussian staff are finishing their dinner at a white-covered table in the open street at the foot of the double flight of stone steps leading up to the doorway of the inn on the right; they look on, as they drink their coffee, while two soldiers, backed by a mounted Uhlan, are engaged in searching a French officer—"un porteur de dépêches"—disguised in the clothes of a peasant. This officer is the central figure; and in the invention of his expression and attitude—which speak of the suppressed heat of wrath, despair, and high courage—as well as in the rendering of the various types of serious and triumphant Teutonism, M. de Neuville has shown to the full his brilliant powers of observation and sympathy. The dramatic pathos of the situation is delicately enhanced by the dumb, helpless distress and fear of the sympathising women in the doorway of the little cottage seen to the right, under the shadow of the village spire. M. Detaille, unlike M. de Neuville, has not remained constant to the field of his former successes. He has risked his reputation this year by an enormous and most official-looking representation of La Distribution des Drapeaux. In one point, the arrangement of the scene is rather happy, inasmuch as, by placing the spectator behind the backs of the officials grouped upon the platform, the heroes of the day, who face them in long line on horseback in the meadow below, are also face to face with us; but, as a whole, M. Detaille cannot be congratulated on his present work. The execution looks insufficient for the vast extent of the canvas; the colour is more unpleasant than it need be, the green of the grass especially presenting an unreal as well as a disagreeable contrast to the red hangings and draperies of the platform. In short (in spite of his impossible sky), one is inclined to prefer M. Garnier's less ambitious rendering of the same ceremony; although the clever general characterisation of M. Detaille's soldiers and the delightful amusement of picking out the portraits of M. Meissonier, M. Gambetta, and the other notabilities who surround M. Grévy invariably collect an interested crowd in front of La Distribution des Drapeaux.

The popularity of M. Joseph Blanc's Le Triomphe de Clovis—Fragments de la Frise du Panthéon, with a certain class of visitors to the Salon, seems also to be due to the delight of discovering M. Gambetta figuring in the wedding procession of Clovis attired in the flowing white robes of a high-priest. The composition itself, which is executed in colour on a ground of gold mosaic, is very carefully studied and arranged, but can scarcely boast a single simple natural movement or natural expression. Not that one can tax M. Blanc with the pretentious artificiality of M. Bouguereau or the decayed elegance of M. Cabanel (who has, by-the-way, this year a very charming portrait—the hands of which are exquisitely drawn—of a girl in white), but rather with a sort of dullness, very capable and scholarly, though lacking the heat of life and feeling. M. Blanc wants, it would seem, just that which is the strong point of M. Puvis de Chavannes' contributions to the decoration of the Pantheon. One could not say of his History of Ste.-Geneviève that it was a thoroughly capable and scholarly work; but it showed the rare qualities of an artist who is an artist by conviction. And although M. Puvis de Chavannes seems year by year to go farther and farther away from the solid ground of experience and tradition, and year by year to show an increasing neglect of all that constitutes good workmanship, yet even in his Pauvre Pêcheur of the present Salon, the general aspect of which is that of an almost impertinent eccentricity, there is the charm of strong and real feeling.

The children are so queer, especially the youngest, that it is almost impossible not to laugh. But the choice of tone in the sky and in the stretch of dirty sea, the very placing of the little bunches of white and yellow blooms on the desolate shore, are full of expression; and the attitude and look of the fisherman standing with folded arms in prayer before setting forth in his boat are impregnated with the very passion of self-abnegation and resignation. Of imitators of M. Puvis de Chavannes we have now, unfortunately, an increasing number every year; unfortunately, for that which is done by M. de Chavannes because he cannot help it seems to lack the justification of inherent necessity when attempted by his followers. La Chasse and La Pêche by his pupil M. Séon show, in curious mimicry, all the external peculiarities of his master, but want that animating heat of inner conviction and belief which forces us to remember with something like emotion even the ludicrous family of Le pauvre Pêcheur. M. Cazin, too, who has been less directly influenced by M. de Chavannes, seems to be losing ground. His fantastic Souvenir de Fête (a vision of allegorical figures promising a grand future to France in the midst of fireworks and the foliage of the Luxembourg gardens) does not realise the expectations aroused by his two paintings, Ishmael and Tobit, of last year—paintings which were rewarded, as it seemed to me, rather beyond their merits by a first-class medal. In his present work M. Cazin rivals M. de Chavannes for emptiness of modelling; shows a certain slovenliness of drawing which is all his own; while the delicate taste of the possession of which he has hitherto seemed to give sure evidence seems to have failed him. But the fashion among a certain section has now set in favour of the "primitifs;" and, as the work of a leading "primitif," M. Cazin's Souvenir de Fête is hailed by many Paris critics, and by not a few Paris painters, with breathless enthusiasm, though he it remembered that the same critics and the same painters have hitherto remained contemptuously indifferent to the charm and grace shown by him in previous works of less ambitious pretensions.

E. F. S. PATTISON.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

(Second Notice.)

IN our former notice we left still unmentioned a number of admirable portraits. Of these none is finer than Mr. Frank Holl's Viscount Holmesdale, M.P. (150), and T. H. Farrer, Esq., Secretary to the Board of Trade (77). Mrs. Kate Perugini's Violet and Muriel, Daughters of John Parsons, Esq. (48), are two sweet little girls sweetly painted; nor should the manly portraits by Messrs. Pelegrini, Partington, and Lehmann be overlooked, or the charming Mrs. Trevor Plowden, by Mr. Prinsep (117). In a carefully composed little picture, in which Mary and Cecilia Howard are represented, with a capably painted white dog relieved against a blue carpet, Mr. S. R. Hughes shows that he has inherited his father's refinement and exquisite sense of colour. Mr. Halle's portraits of Two Maids of Honour and an unmistakable likeness of Mr. Comyns Carr (154) suggest a hope that he will confine himself in future to this branch of art.

The number of powerful landscapes this year is very small, but the few are good enough to make the year memorable. Though Mr. Herkomer has painted his mountains "as they stand," and has only tried to follow Nature faithfully in the bold effect of rose-coloured cloud with beams striking through to the barren black rock, his Gloom of Idwal (149) is not only fine in composition, but nobly poetical in feeling. Technically, he has made a great advance on his previous work of this kind, which was deficient in air and space. In this great picture, though the little light is evenly diffused throughout the valley which feels the mountain's "gloom," and no palpable devices of colour are adopted to obtain the desired effect, the great elaty masses of rock stand out with full relief, and the sense of distance is completely given. It is a picture of awful solitude, crowned with awful glory. Perhaps so practised a landscape painter as Mr. Cecil Lawson can scarcely be said to have shown an increase of power; but, for us at least, he has employed his powers to greater purpose than last year. His pictures at the Grosvenor seem to us not only truer in colour, but far more perfect in tone than most of his previous work. This is especially true of his In the Valley of Desolation, Yorkshire, with its bold, low clouds sweeping swiftly between the shadowed land and the bright blue sky. The effect of the sharp white sunlight shooting here and there through the rain-clouds is given with great truth and power. The sky in the Wharfedale, Yorkshire (66), appears a little out of harmony with the landscape; but this, as well as his Wet Moon, Battersea, is a bold and successful composition. Mr. Lawson's aim at rendering truth of broad aerial effects is perhaps inconsistent with any minute definition of small objects such as leaves. It is with the manner of Constable, David Cox, and the French that his sympathy lies. He might, however, without destroying the character of his work, give us more of the beauty of tree-form and the general appearance of masses of foliage than he does at present.

Mr. C. Napier Hemy has put all his strength into a large picture of Oporto (104), with a rich sunset sky reflected in the green water, and the white and red houses glowing in the light. The contrasts of colour are somewhat too sharp and violent to be altogether pleasant, but it is impossible to doubt the truth, any more than the power, of the effect. The same manly artist has a small but strong sea view (124); and his Mill in the Gloaming is rich and noble.

One other work, despite the slightness of its subject and execution, deserves mention among the more important of the pictures whose aim is to render natural phenomena. This is Miss Clara Montalba's Dalmatian Boat, not less remarkable for the force and beauty of its colour, restricted though that be, than for the magic of its atmospheric effect. She paints with a wand.

In what may be called the minor landscapes, there is a great variety of thought and taste. Of those whose theme is the beauty of flowering spring there are several good examples, none of which is prettier than Mr. Alfred Parson's Forget-me-Nots, Orchardleigh, Surrey (21), with its meadow by the lake, or river, spotted with bright roses, marguerites, and buttercups. One has, however, to search, like his little girl, for the forget-me-nots, which are mainly represented by a few dots of blue in the nosegay which she holds in her hand. Mr. Mark Fisher's Spring (5), his largest picture, is painted with his usual sureness of hand, but the composition scarcely justifies the size of the canvas. It is not so full of interest as his smaller The Melancholy Days (128). Another very pretty spring picture is Mr. W. J. Hennessy's Jocund Spring (187), with its graceful maidens running hand-in-hand in the flower-enamelled fields.

Striking and simple in its composition, with its prominent sheaves, tree-crowned hill, and bold clouds at top, Mr. Keeley Halswelle's Wittenham Clumps (27) is cold and hard, and, though there are pictures between, suffers from its neighbourhood to one of Mr. Cecil Lawson's richly glowing pictures. Mr. P. R. Morris, A.R.A., sends a pleasant and clever landscape called Breezy England (102), Mr. Poynter, R.A.,

an exquisite little view of Wharnclyffe Chase (155), and Mr. R. Corbett's scenes from Greece are remarkable for their sweetness of colour and transparent air and soft sunniness. The contributions of Mr. G. Howard—The Curlews' Pool (6), Bamboro' from the Budle Hills (205), and others—are all marked by originality in selection of effect and poetry of feeling; and Mr. H. R. Bloomer's On the Banks of the Seine (8), with its luminous sky and moist air, is refreshing to the eyes.

The largest of the pictures not yet mentioned is Mr. Britten's The Flight of Helen (47), in which Paris is seen carrying off his prize in a vehicle the prototype of one of Pickford's vans. This is dashing through the sea at a pace quite inconsistent with the resistance of the sea to the horses' legs. They are in much deeper water than the waggon, which will evidently be swamped at the next pull. Though suggestive rather of Offenbach than Homer, the composition is original and vigorous, and is evidence of powers that might be turned to good purpose when Mr. Britten finds his true line. To be so sure of this, and to adhere to it so faithfully, is one of the secrets of Mr. Albert Moore's well-deserved fame. He need fear no rival as long as he continues to paint such charming harmonies of female form, drapery, and colour, as his Forget-me-Nots (46) and Blossoms (137). It is only to repeat well-worn epithets to praise his work and that of Mr. Boughton, who sends a charming figure of Rose Standish (24), in her "hood and sad-hued gown," walking through an autumn wood, and a breezy view on the Zuyder Zee (87), with quaint Dutch figures. Equally sure of an aim more severe and dignified is M. Legros, who sends a very quiet, but masterly, composition of An Old Woodcutter (9).

We have omitted, we think, but few works of more than ordinary achievement. One of these, however, is Mr. Matthew Hale's scene in illustration of a charming old French song, called Les Trois Princesses (88)—a delightful composition of three pretty and quaintly dressed young ladies under an apple-tree in blossom, their feet deep in daffodils and narcissus. Pretty, but naughty, is Mr. John Collier's Daughter of Eve (4), lying on the top of a wall purloining an apricot. Good in drawing and colour is Mr. W. Fisher's After the Bath (231). Mr. T. Armstrong's peculiar and refined art has never been shown to more advantage than in this exhibition. Of his three pictures, we prefer Olive-gathering at Mentone, with its beautifully drawn gray willows shown against the dim, blue hill beyond, and its little purple and red flames of anemone glowing in the foreground. In this work the absence of air and light is not felt to be such a defect as in his larger and gracefully composed Riposo (107) and Figure at a Fountain (61). Charming in a very different way is Mr. J. E. Christie's little girl, with her poor scratched hand held to her mouth for comfort, and her pinafore stained with blackberries (31); and perfect almost as her husband's work is Mrs. Alma-Tadema's Sisters (37), with its quaint, pretty figures and wonderfully painted bed-clothes. Praise should also be given to Mr. Liebmann's pathetic Last Look (109), as well as to Mr. J. O'Connor's sunny bit of Verona (118).

Of Sir Noel Paton's two pictures here we prefer The Adversary (165), a powerful study of a Miltonic Satan, resting in deep thought, and surrounded by lurid light suggestive of Blake. The other is a head of Christ weeping over Jerusalem (94), noble, but not noble enough, in its pathos. By Mr. Walter Maclaren are two very pretty and graceful compositions, the one of a girl driving (or rather being pulled along by) a pig (79), and the other of a young mother trying to coax her naked little boy to allow her to plunge him in the water (54).

Although we are not greatly taken by Mr.

Walter Crane's imaginative designs, they show abundance of ingenuity and decorative feeling, and the Europa (133) has a pearly opalescence which is beautiful. Nearly all this very versatile artist's little landscapes have a charm which is quite their own. There is so much good design, refined feeling, and exquisite execution in Miss E. Pickering's work that it is a pity to see it so completely wasted by too close an adherence to the style of Mr. Burne-Jones. The composition of the hands and arms in The Angel of Death (99), the drawing of the feet, and much of the colour, especially the dress of the girl, are lovely. Similar beauties may be found in the larger picture—(17) The Gray Sisters—but the type of feature is the same throughout both; and this, as well as the quality of the expression on all the faces, seems to be a direct imitation of her master. She sends also a little head of a girl—Miss Winifred Bulwer (156)—who seems to have been brought up in some strange imaginative land. We prefer Mr. J. Charles' healthy and pretty, if more ordinary, Miss Hall (161).

Of examples of foreign schools the gallery is unusually deficient, but there are good specimens of Heyermans (1 and 103), Blommers (301), J. Maris (275), and A. Neuhuys (277). The last three are water-colours; in which class there is at least one very noteworthy little composition. This is the Love Disconsolate of Miss Dorothy Tennant, which reminds us of Correggio. Mrs. Naftel's Old Courtyard (315) is remarkable for the beautiful drawing and painting of the flowers. Mr. Albert Goodwin sends a smaller version (284) of his Summer Sea at the Old Water-Colours, and the Hon. Mrs. Boyle (E. V. B.) two charming creations of her most graceful fancy (288). The contributions of Mr. R. Doyle are full of fun, as usual, but scarcely up to his highest level.

In sculpture, there is little worth noticing except Mr. Hamo Thornycroft's beautiful low relief—after his famous Artemis of last year—and strong head of Prof. Ella. Mr. Boehm sends a small terra-cotta after his well-known statue of Curlye, and a clever bust of Mr. Ruskin. The contributions of Miss H. E. Montalba and Signor Amendola are clever, but do not please us so much as theirs of last year; and we find it impossible to say a word in praise of Count Gleichen's bust of the late Earl of Beaconsfield.

Looking over the catalogue for the last time, we find that we have passed over with unintentional and undeserved silence Mr. R. Barrett Browning's wonderful owls (65) and scarcely less wonderful copper pan (32), Mr. J. D. Watson's Touchstone and Audrey (63), Miss Louisa Starr's portrait (82), Mr. Edgar Barclay's bright glimpses of strange lands, Mr. Parker's admirably drawn Lancashire Cockle-gatherers (175), Miss Rosa Koberwein's sweet Lent Lily (183), and Mr. T. Erat Harrison's strange and ingenious design of The Merry Mariner (193), which might be effectively worked in tapestry.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

THE HERBERT EXHIBITION.

MR. HERBERT'S work has been before the public for many years; and due respect and admiration have never been wanting for his singular refinement of feeling, his spiritual aims, and skilful execution. Instead of showing any failure of power as years have come upon him, he has slowly, perhaps, but steadily, progressed towards the attainment of his ideal. His last work, The Judgment of Daniel, is remarkable for all the qualities which he has cultivated so carefully; and in the principal character, that of the "young youth" Daniel, he has conceived a figure which is original and vigorous beyond his wont. It is a vigour which is yet peculiarly his own—the vigour of the spirit. He has conceived his young Daniel, not as a youth of imposing appearance and physical strength dominating his "elder elders" by eagle glance and lion-like mien—one palpably marked by nature with authority and early accustomed to its exercise; on the contrary, he is an ordinary stripling suddenly inspired to unusual effort, who, when the call has passed, may relapse into the ranks, but till then is strung to a commanding pitch of righteous energy and intellectual strength. This figure, in his raiment of pink and green (bright, but soft, sweet colours), is the centre of a very elaborate and original composition. On either side sit the judges, surprised and amused at the detection of Susannah's accusers; on his right stands Susannah, with hands clasped, and eyes raised in gratitude. On his left, the slanderer who testified to the holm-tree is being seized by the executioners. In the background the other slanderer, out of hearing, is seen held by two men. The steps of the gate-less and wall-less judgment-hall are crowded with varied groups of the people. Behind is seen an open court and stately buildings, for the architecture of which Mr. Herbert has, no doubt, sufficient authority. The artist has exercised all his ingenuity and knowledge to diversify these groups, among which may be mentioned a girl with a tame gazelle, with a red flower in its gentle mouth, and a hunter with an animal like a lynx, hooded and leashed, who carries a dead gazelle under his arm. Throughout the picture is felt the presence of a refined and subtle intellect, weaving with care an elaborate composition, which shall satisfy its sense of delicate harmonies of line and colour. But, though all the figures are adequate, and even more than adequate, and the general effect both dignified and beautiful, it is only in the figure of Daniel that exceptional imagination is shown.

The present collection of Mr. Herbert's works, though containing two pictures only of the first importance, affords a good opportunity for studying the characteristics of the artist. Extending over a much longer period than that of Mr. Millais, it does not reflect in anything like the same degree the fluctuations of artistic ideas in England during his life. Mr. Herbert, throughout his long career, has never seen reason to alter his artistic creed or greatly modify his method. His execution has always been careful, and the expression of sentiment his main object. His excesses have always been on the side of over-subtlety and refinement, but the subtlety has been intellectual, and the refinement that of the spirit. His Judith may not come up to our idea of the heroine physically, but it is redeemed from weakness by the strength of mental resolve with which it is inspired; his Magdalen, with her clutched hands and upturned eyes, though suggestive of the eclectic rather than the nobler periods of Italian art, has none of the lachrymose vulgarity of Guido or the ordered agony of Carlo Dolci. If he may be denied the epithet of powerful by some, it is not so much from want of power as because he has never delighted in the exhibition of strength unennobled by gentleness. His conception of Lear is a remarkable instance of how powerful he can be when the character he chooses combines both qualities; his Moses shows to what grandeur he can rise on fitting occasion; and his last picture shows that in his seventy-first year he has, like his own young Daniel, unexpected reserves of force.

While his commissions for the House of Lords gave him the opportunity for the exercise of powers higher than those exhibited in his other works—powers which possibly might have remained dormant but for such a noble field for their exercise—it is in his smaller works, such as his Sower and Good Samaritan, and his landscapes, that his refined individuality, and also his exquisite feeling for pure and delicate colour, are most plainly visible. If his epic faculty had never been developed, these painted lyrics would have assured him a place among England's artists as unique as that held by his namesake among her sacred poets. C. M.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

ADMIRERS of the art of Prof. Menzel—and these are all artists acquainted with his works—will be glad to hear that a collection of his drawings will shortly be on exhibition at the gallery of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours, of which society Prof. Menzel is an honorary member.

THE London International Exhibition Society will open an exhibition on Monday, May 16, in the United Arts Gallery in New Bond Street, of paintings, drawings, and sculpture, including the collection of water-colours recently made by Mr. Tristram Ellis during his tour in the east.

AN art and industrial exhibition will be held in St. Andrew's Hall, Plymouth, from May 23 to June 20. Prizes to the total value of £200, in the form of medals, together with one-third of the profits, are offered to exhibitors. Special encouragement will be given to the productions of artisans and amateurs. The last day for sending in exhibits is Monday, May 16.

ON Wednesday, June 1, an exhibition of French pictures, under the title of "Le Salon à Londres," will be opened in Leicester Square, in the same building as the panorama of "The Charge of Balaklava," and under the same management. Among the artists who have sent pictures are MM. Gérôme, Boulanger, Hébert, Bonnat, Henner, Jules Lefebvre, Carolus Duran, Bastien Lepage, and Luminais.

MR. ALBERT MOORE writes to the Standard to complain of the bestowal upon some of his pictures—and presumably by their owners—of names which he has never given them, and the character of which is necessarily misleading as to the intentions of his work. A Roman Lady, in Mr. McLean's Gallery, was, we believe, a case in point. There was nothing Roman in the picture, Mr. Moore being, of course, a student of line and colour, and not a professed archaeologist.

MESSRS. DICKINSON, of 114 New Bond Street, have much reason to congratulate themselves on the completion of a large portrait-picture of A Meet of the Four-in-Hand Club in Hyde Park. The difficulties of this kind of composition have seldom been so well surmounted. By the clever arrangement of the standers in front and the coaches behind, every face can be perfectly seen without too obvious an exhibition of device. Two or three children and a few ladies are very useful in breaking up the monotony of hats and trousers. The faces and attitudes are full of character, and the drawing and colouring unusually good for a picture of the kind. It contains about a hundred and fifty portraits from life, including the Prince and Princess of Wales and Prince Leopold. The Heir Apparent is on the Duke of Beaufort's coach, and Prince Leopold is being driven by Sir H. Meysey Thompson. Some of the likenesses—such as those of Sir John Astley, Mr. Lowell, Mr. G. Lane Fox, and Lord Algernon St. Maur—are very striking. Though several hands have probably been employed upon this work, it shows the governing power of one mind, and that one of no ordinary artistic taste. Mr. Frith could scarcely have planned the picture better. We do not think it would in any way detract from Messrs. Dickinson's credit if they gave the names of the gentlemen by whose skill so remarkable a result has been achieved.

FROM April 20 to April 30 the little town of Newton Abbot, in South Devon, had its first exhibition of fine arts. The leading feature was the art pottery, for which South Devon is justly famous. The Watcombe Terra-cotta Company was well represented. A collection of paintings was lent by the South Kensington Museum. Among the oil paintings, Rubens, Millais, Vanderveldt, Turner, Luny, and others were represented, The Black Brunswicker, by Millais, being conspicuous. The local firms did their best to make the exhibition of pottery, porcelain, glass, marble, and similar productions a success; while the plaque department was well supplied by amateurs, chiefly pupils of the School of Art.

THE death is announced of M. Adam Solomon, the French sculptor, best known for his busts and funeral monuments. His Génie de l'Etude and Musique are in the Louvre. In 1870 he was appointed Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. Of late years he had devoted much of his time to the serious practice of photography.

AN exhibition in the rooms of the Ladies' Decorative Art Society at New York attracted a good deal of notice during the past month. It consisted of a number of landscapes done in embroidery by Mrs. Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jun. This original effort is highly praised in the Nation, alike for the sense of colour displayed, the fertility of resource, and the recognition of the limits of the material and the process.

HERR BERCHTHOLD HALLER, of Bern, has presented his magnificent collection of engravings, known far beyond the limits of his native town, to the Art Museum. The collection is to remain in the donor's keeping until he has filled up certain gaps in it. The main characteristic of the collection is its richness in works of the Old-German school, especially of the so-called "Little Masters"—Aldegrever, Altdorfer, H. S. Beham, and G. Penck. Lukas Kranach is represented by thirty specimens, Hans Holbein by thirty-five, and Albert Dürer by no less than 200. The Netherlands school of the Rembrandt period is largely represented, and there are also some rare French and Italian specimens. A collection of three thousand sheets exhibits an almost complete history of the development of copper-plate and wood engraving.

THE amount taken at the Salon on the first day seems to have been very satisfactory. The artists in authority had fixed the price of entry at five francs instead of, as usual, at two francs before twelve a.m. and one franc afterwards, and some anxiety was felt as to the effect of this change. However, although the number of entries was, as might be expected, much smaller than last year, the receipts amounted to 18,925 frs., against 12,230 frs. last year. The crowding, which has always been an evil, was also thus prevented. The artists have decided to fix the rate of payment on Wednesdays at five francs; for the rest of the week the rule remains the same as in former years—i.e., free on Sundays, and on other days two francs before noon and one franc afterwards.

THE May number of the Art Journal would be worth more than its cost if it were only for the very faithful and brilliant reproduction of Méryon's celebrated etching of the Abside de Notre Dame. This admirable work of art illustrates, together with two tolerable wood engravings of Le Strýge and St.-Etienne-du-Mont, a paper of Hints to Collectors of Méryon's etchings, written by Mr. Frederick Wedmore in his best style. Few critics have studied the subject so carefully, and he writes with the freedom and authority which come only from full knowledge. A word of wisdom on the unnecessary size of modern English pictures is signed by the easily deciphered initials A. L. Mr. George Augustus Sala sends a note on a supposed discovery of a plagiarism by Cesario Vecellio in the Habiti Antichi e Moderne from a print in Jost Amman's Gynceacum. Mr. Herbert Marshall contributes a very instructive paper on "Rye: its Artistic Resources," and Mr. W. B. Richmond the first instalment of his admirable lecture on Composition and Decoration delivered before the University of Oxford. The other plates hors du texte are a facsimile of Sir Frederick Leighton's original sketch for his Daphnephoria, and a somewhat colourless steel engraving of Mr. Marks' Experimental Gunnery.

THE STAGE.

PERHAPS the chief event of the week at the London theatres is the change of parts which took place on Monday at the Lyceum, when Mr. Irving, having been the Iago of the previous week, became the Othello of the present, and Mr. Booth passed from the character of Othello to that of Iago. For at least one reason, however, this was a far less important event than that which was chronicled in last Saturday's ACADEMY. It gave us, indeed, a new combination of actors, but it showed us no actor in a wholly unfamiliar part. Mr. Booth's Iago was already better known and better liked than his Othello. It is not very many weeks ago that the American Iago was drawing his admirers to the Princess's. Since then he has altered nothing, and has not had occasion to alter anything. His Iago is a finished and settled performance of sustained and subtle excellence. Mr. Irving's Othello again, though it was known less familiarly and recently than the Iago of Mr. Booth, had yet been witnessed; and the only question about it was whether it would retain the characteristics of four or five years ago. It does not appear to have very materially changed. There was some room for improvement in it; for, as it is true that the actor has never been seen whose art exhibited no inequalities, so it is true that the inequalities of Mr. Irving were never seen to less advantage than in his Othello. His make-up was excellent—Mr. Irving has carried to a particular perfection the art of making-up; his stage business was of the ingenuity and generally of the reasonableness to which he has made us accustomed; but, especially in the later scenes of high passion, the actor was wanting, it seemed to us, in the exaltation necessary to the theme, and in the life-likeness which alone could move us. The nobler passages of Othello left us considerably unmoved. It is on the ground that the play of Othello, though it gives occasion for the appearance of Mr. Booth and Mr. Irving in characters of equal importance, does not afford them opportunity for appearing together in parts specially suited to each, that we have ventured to regret the choice that has been made. It is now, however, too late to repeat with any effect the expression of a hope that we may yet see these actors together in a play in which different parts would be suited excellently to each of them. Here we have two simply masterly Iagos—two insufficient Othellos.

Mr. W. G. WILLS's tragic play, Juana, has been produced at the Court Theatre. It is in verse, and contains numerous really poetical passages and some fine poetical conceptions; but its theme is probably too sombre for it to prove attractive in any but the most accomplished hands—to which objection Mr. Wills might conceivably reply that it is written for the accomplished and not for dullards, and that the newer interest in the English stage allows him to hope that it will more than once be adequately interpreted and richly understood. At the Court, Mme. Modjeska is its principal interpreter; and her performance, especially in the terrible scenes of madness, proves, not for the first time, both her mastery of habitual stage business and her personal study of character and situation from real life. But, to say truth, her accent is hopelessly against her; not, indeed, with a considerable portion of the fashionable and semi-fashionable public, which demands nothing better than to be allowed to applaud the ingenious and energetic efforts of a stranger to grapple with the difficulties of our tongue. It does, however, compel her to be permanently unsatisfying to those who have any enjoyment of the beauties and the subtleties of English speech.

By the death of Ravel, one of the most notable figures disappears from the Parisian theatrical world. It is true it is some years since this excellent and unique comic actor did anything particularly worthy of his reputation. Ravel was old. The papers have reported that he was born in 1815, but he was, we believe, much nearer seventy than sixty-six. Ravel was known familiarly to London playgoers at a time when but few French actors had come over to England. There was something in his visible bonhomie, as well as in his talent, that attracted the frequenters of the English theatres; and during the comparatively brief terms of his several engagements he was quite as successful here as in Paris. He was seen—always, of course, acting in French—at the St. James's Theatre and, later, at the Princess's Theatre, his very last appearance in London, so far as we can remember, being in that summer, about six years ago, when Desclée made her London reputation almost in a night with Frou-frou. Old M. Ravel played on that occasion the Bohemian parent of the child-like young woman, who endeavours to persuade her, when he absents himself for a while, that the distant city of Prague is really his destination. On the stage no one lied more humorously than Ravel. It was a treat to see the anxious enjoyment with which the nervous, restless little man would himself watch the effect of a more than usually audacious departure from veracity. Would it really be accepted and believed in? He hoped it would. It was in somewhat broad effects that Ravel was beheld to most advantage. Equivocal situations were the situations that fitted him the best; and—long an actor at the Palais Royal—his stage life was active and busy, and his errand was always an intrigue. Nobody was funnier in Le Chapeau de Paille d'Italie; nobody more enterprising in Un Monsieur qui suit les Femmes. The petite dame, whatever her situation might be, was sure of his sympathies; and it was she who could count most surely on his chivalry. He was by no means altogether without power to display genuine feeling in creditable circumstances. He acted excellently in Les Idées de Madame Aubrey—one of the most philosophical comedies of the younger Dumas. But, though Ravel was for a while at the Gymnase, his type was of the Palais Royal; and, did our manners ever revert to Arcadian simplicity, such an actor would have nothing to do. Deprived of the artificial life of cities, such a comedian's occupation would be gone. It might still be possible to satirise Arcadia, but it could not be done in the fashion of the Palais Royal.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

MME. SOPHIE MENTER made her first appearance at the Crystal Palace last Saturday. She played Liszt's second concerto in A, a work far more trying and difficult, though less pleasing and satisfactory, than the first in E flat, which she chose for her début the previous

Saturday at Mr. Ganz' concert. The same form and peculiar mode of procedure are to be found in both concertos; hence the title of "rhapsody" would be as suitable to the second as to the first. Some of the ideas and developments in the concerto in A are beautiful, and, consequently, pleasing; but others are commonplace, and even ugly. As the mechanical difficulties are very great, it can only be attempted by pianists of the first rank. Mme. Menter thoroughly enters into the spirit of Liszt's music. She has a powerful but refined touch, clear and faultless mechanism, and perfect command of the keyboard. It was a bold thing of her to play the concerto, but a still bolder to play Liszt's celebrated Don Giovanni fantasia. The greatest of pianists has here heaped together technical difficulties of every description; and, as Mme. Menter in her rendering of this piece achieved a brilliant and marked success, she must be considered as one of the most remarkable virtuosi of the present day. We have still to hear her in some great classical work before speaking of her playing from an intellectual and poetical point of view.

The fourth and last concert of the Borough of Hackney Choral Association last Tuesday at the Town Hall, Shoreditch, was a great success. The programme commenced with the two first parts ("Spring" and "Summer") of Haydn's Seasons. This oratorio, written in the year 1800, is really Haydn's last important composition. It is a wonderful tone-picture of rural life, and contains some of the master's best and brightest inspirations. He was not mistaken when he said, "My Creation will endure, and probably the Seasons also." The performance was very good. The solo parts were well rendered by Miss Jessie Jones, Mr. W. Shakespeare, and Mr. Frank Ward. The noble choruses were given with great spirit and also delicacy by the choir. Particularly would we mention the "Hymn of Praise" and the celebrated and dramatic "Earthquake" chorus. The second part of the programme included two songs—one for male, the other for female voices—from Beethoven's King Stephen, and the charming introduction to the first act of Guillaume Tell. The band was heard to advantage in Weber's Euryanthe overture, and the exquisite "Shawl Dance" from Auber's Le Dicu et la Bayadère. Mr. E. Prout conducted the whole of the programme with his usual ability. The committee announce four concerts next season. Among the works to be produced are Sullivan's Martyr of Antioch, Schumann's Faust, Mendelssohn's Walpuris Night, and, possibly, a new cantata by Mr. Prout.

Mr. Charles Hallé commenced, last Friday week, his twenty-first series of pianoforte recitals. The programmes of the eight concerts will include the entire series of Beethoven sonatas, except the two easy ones (op. 49). Mr. Hallé will, in addition, play all the preludes and fugues from J. S. Bach's Wohltemperirte Klavier, six at each concert. We should like to know if there is any authority for the statement in the programme-book that "Handel must have been well acquainted with this remarkable work of his most illustrious contemporary." The first recital was well attended. The first six fugues were rendered in a masterly manner by the eminent pianist.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

THE Festival Liszt at Antwerp has been definitely fixed for Thursday, the 26th inst. On Sunday, the 29th, a matinée musicale will be given at Brussels in honour of the same great musician. On both occasions Liszt will be present himself; and the two programmes consist entirely of his own compositions.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

To-night, at 8.15, a new and original Play, in four acts, by W. G. WILLS author of "Jane Shore," "Charles II.," "Olivia," &c., entitled JULIANA.

The archaeology of the play under the direction of Mr. E. W. Godwin, F.S.A. The scenery by Messrs. Wm. Beverly, Walter Mann, and Stafford Hall. The music by Mr. Carl Armbruster.

Acting Manager, Mr. H. HEDMAN.
Messdames Meljeste, G. de Ly Thiere, C. Grasham, A. Cooke, &c., and Ada Ward; Messrs. Wilson Barrett, Forbes-Robertson, Norman Forbes, E. Price, Brian Barley, E. B. Norman, E. Butler, Neville Doone, &c., and G. W. Anson.

Assistant stage Manager, Mr. W. HOLMAN.

Preceded, at 7.15, by

TWO OLD BOYS.

Doors open at 7. Carriages at 10.50. Box-office open daily from 11 till 5.

DURRY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

OTHELLO.

Mr. Augustus Harris has much pleasure in announcing that, in compliance with the numerous requests from the public desirous of seeing Mr. JOHN McCULLOUGH in another part, that gentleman will appear in his great impersonation of OTHELLO, on MAY 14th, and the following SIX NIGHTS of his engagement. The cast will be as follows:

OTHELLO—Mr. JOHN McCULLOUGH.
IAGO—Mr. HERMANN VEZIN.
DESDEMONA—Miss PATEMAN.
EMILIA—Mrs. ARTHUR STIRLING.
Brabantio—Mr. John Ryder; Cassio—Mr. J. H. Barnes; Rodrigo—Mr. Augustus Harris; Montano—Mr. A. Andrews; &c.
Box-office now open.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.30, HESTER'S MYSTERY.
At 8, a new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, calledTHE UPPER CRYPT.
Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Bellington, E. W. Garden, G. Shelton, and E. D. Ward; Messdames Effie Liston, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorne.
THE WIZARD OF THE WILDERNESS.Mr. J. L. Toole.
Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to £3 3s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Under the direction of Mr. ALEXANDER HENDERSON.

To-night, at 8, an entirely new and original Opera Comique, in three acts, by OFFENBACH, entitled

LA BOULANGERIE.
Under the immediate direction of Mr. H. H. Farnie.

New and elaborate scenery by Ryan and Hicks. Dresses, after designs by Grévin and Fantasio, by Ailas.

Preceded, at 7.30, by a Comedy, after Molière and Halévy, entitled

SEIZING LA FLEUR.
Messdames Amadi, Maud Taylor, Turner, Dubois, Graham, Evelyn, and Wadman; Messrs. Celli, Temple, Ashford, Mansfield, Stepan, and Fantasio.

Greatest augmented chorus and orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Hüder. Ballet master, Mr. Lauri.

Box-office now open. Acting Manager, Mr. W. A. BURT.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(200 yards from the Angel.)

TO-NIGHT, H. J. BYRON'S popular Drama, BLOW FOR BLOW.For ONE WEEK ONLY.
Messrs. E. H. Brooke, J. D. Beveridge, E. Lyons, &c.; Messdames Kate Patten (by kind permission of Messrs. Hare and Kendal) and Isabel Bateman.

Prices from 6d. to 7s. 6d. Doors open at 6.45. Farce at 7.15.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. B. DOVILY CARTE.

To-night, at 8.30, a new Aesthetic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN, entitled

PATIENCE.
Messrs. George Grossmith, Rutland Kyrle, Richard Temple, F. Thornton, and Durward Lell; Messdames Leonora Braham, Jessie Bond, Julia Gwynne, Fortescue, and Alice Barnett.

Produced under the personal direction of the Author and Composer. Conductor, Mr. F. Cellier.

Preceded, at 8, by UNCLE SAMUEL,
by ARTHUR LAW and GEORGE GROSSMITH.

Doors open at 7.30.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BRUCE.

To-night, at 8.40, a new Comedy, in three acts, called

THE COLODEL,
By F. C. BERNARD.Preceded, at 7.50, by a one-act Comedy, by STEDY GRUNDY,
IN HONOUR BOUND.

Messrs. Coghlan, Flockton, W. Herbert, Eric Bayley, Rowland Duckstone, and Edgar Bruce; Messdames Amy Roselle, Myra Holme, C. Grabaue, Leigh Murray, &c.

New scenery by Mr. Bruce Smith.
Doors open at 7.30. Box-office open daily from 11 to 5.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WALTER GOOCH.

To-night, at 7.45, an entirely new and original romantic spectacular Drama of sensational interest, entitled

BRANDED,
Written by RICHARD LEE.

Messrs. Henry Neville, Redmond, F. Archer, J. Beauchamp, F. Charles, H. C. Sidney, Alice Thomas, Hewitt, McCarty, Evans, Gardiner, Greville, W. Avondale, Chamberlain, Stirling, &c.; Messdames Caroline Hill, Maud Milton, Katie Barry, Katie Neville, Huntley, and Lyons.

Produced under the direction of Mr. Harry Jackson.

New and realistic scenery by Charles Brooke. New overture and incidental music by Michael Connelly. New military costumes direct from the Army Contractors, Paris. The horses supplied by Mr. George Ganger.

Preceded, at 7, by the Farce.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER.

To-night, at 8.15, THE MEMBER FOR SLOCOM,
By G. R. SIMS.

Messdames Kate Lawler, Harriet Coveney, Roth Francis, L. Thomas, and Elise Ward; Messrs. Arthur Williams and Frank Cooper.

Stage Manager, FRANK RUTSAY. Acting and General Business Manager, CECIL KALEIGH.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

SUMMER EXHIBITION
NOW OPEN

Daily 9 to 7.

Admission, One Shilling; Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S

Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA

"If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa."

Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."

W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.

"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted."

CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

EXTRACT

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

331, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

(Twenty doors west of Maud's Library.)

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Colotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.

AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Paynter, Meissonier, Corot, Le Sueur, Banno-Jones, Rossetti, Cave Thomas, &c., &c.

Just published, in Cloth Portfolio, Six Guineas the Set.
TWELVE AUTOTYPE REPRODUCTIONS OF PAINTINGS AND DRAWINGS, by PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON, mostly of Scottish mountain scenery, and including copies of paintings in monochrome and of sepia and charcoal drawings. The twelve subjects are mounted on uniform boards, 2½ in. by 21 in. Each Autotype can be obtained separately, price 10s. 6d.

COME UNTO THESE YELLOW SANDS, after the painting by W. FIELD, Esq., on India, two sizes, 42s. and 21s.

PICTURES CLEANED, RESTORED, FRAMED.

To adorn the walls of Home with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 331, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Ealing Deane, Middlesex.

General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWTEE.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

AND CHARING CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

PROVIDE AGAINST ACCIDENTS!

ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN!

A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury, may be secured by a Policy of the

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY,

The Oldest and Largest Company insuring against Accidents of all kinds.

The Rt. Hon. Lord KINNAIRD, Chairman.

SUBSCRIBED CAPITAL, £1,000,000.

PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £230,000.

MODERATE PREMIUMS.

Bonus allowed to Insurers after Five Years.

£1,630,000

HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, and West end Office, 8, Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing-cross, or

64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Banks, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

1st March, 1880. FRANCIS HAVESCROFT, Manager

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.

Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.

Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.

Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.

Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones. Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

fluid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. It gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drowsy feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much easier than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

This Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache

Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

BRAND & CO.'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS:—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

PROTECTION FROM FIRE.

BRYANT & MAY'S

PATENT SAFETY

MATCHES.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

ADVANTAGES.

Are not POISONOUS.

Are free from SMELL.

Are manufactured

Without Phosphorus.

Are perfectly harmless

To the Operatives employed

Are very DAMP PROOF.

LIGHT ONLY ON THE BOX.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

PROTECTION TO HEALTH.

THE NEW TESTAMENT.
 REVISED VERSION.
 CAMBRIDGE AND OXFORD EDITIONS
 OF THE REVISED VERSION
 OF THE NEW TESTAMENT
 WILL BE PUBLISHED
 ON THE 17TH OF MAY.
 THE REVISED VERSION OF
 THE NEW TESTAMENT
 IS THE JOINT PROPERTY OF
 THE UNIVERSITIES OF
 CAMBRIDGE AND OXFORD.
 THE VARIOUS EDITIONS OF
 THE REVISED VERSION
 PUBLISHED BY THE UNIVERSITIES
 OF
 CAMBRIDGE AND OXFORD
 ARE ALL ALIKE.
 THE TYPE IS THE SAME.
 THE PRICE IS THE SAME.
 THE STYLE IS THE SAME.
 PARALLEL COLUMN EDITIONS
 OF THE AUTHORISED VERSION
 AND THE REVISED VERSION
 OF THE NEW TESTAMENT
 ARE IN PREPARATION.
 CAMBRIDGE AND OXFORD EDITIONS
 OF THE REVISED VERSION
 ARE SOLD EVERYWHERE
 BY ALL BOOKSELLERS.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS, NEW PUBLICATIONS.

CAMBRIDGE GREEK TESTAMENT FOR SCHOOLS. THE GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. MATTHEW in GREEK.

By the Rev. A. CARR, M.A.
 With Maps, 4s. 6d.

THE HERACLEIDÆ of EURIPIDES.

With Introduction, Critical and Explanatory Notes, by E. A. BECK, M.A., Fellow of Trinity Hall.

Extra fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

M. T. CICERONIS PRO CN. PLANCIO ORATIO.

Edited by H. A. HOLDEN, LL.D., Head Master of Ipswich School.

Extra fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d.

LECTURES on TEACHING,

DELIVERED IN THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE IN THE LENT TERM, 1880.

By J. G. FITCH, Her Majesty's Inspector of Schools.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

LONDON: CAMBRIDGE WAREHOUSE, 17, PATERNOSTER ROW.

NEW WORK BY PROFESSOR RAWLINSON.

In 2 vols., 8vo, with Map and 261 illustrations, price 63s.

HISTORY OF ANCIENT EGYPT.

By GEORGE RAWLINSON, M.A.,

Camden Professor of Ancient History in the University of Oxford; Author of "The Sixth and Seventh Oriental Monarchies," &c.

LONDON: LONGMANS & CO.

MAGNIFICENT POETICO-PICTORIAL WORK BY WALTER CRANE.

"THE FIRST OF MAY." A Fairy Masque.

Illustrated by Fifty-seven Designs, printed by the Photogravure process, from Original Drawings by

M^R. WALTER CRANE.

By this process the Engravings can hardly be detected from the Drawings themselves. No description would realise the variety of the subjects, and the wide range of Mr. Crane's pencil, nor the felicity with which each of the characters, human and semi-human, is drawn and individualised. Men, women, boys, girls, fairies, demons, elves, imps, beasts, birds, and even insects, all figure before us—singing, dancing, flying, joyous or sad, in each scene of the masque. All is May and Fairyland.

The work is issued in a handsome portfolio, designed and also decorated by Mr. Crane. It is strictly limited to 500 copies on India Paper, viz.:—

200 FIRST PROOFS, on India Paper of the finest quality, size 23½ in. by 17 in. - - - - - Price £10 10s.

 As the Orders for this state have come in very readily, intending Subscribers are recommended to make application for them before the price is raised.

300 SECOND PROOFS, also on India Paper, size 18 in.
 by 15 in. - - - - - Price £6 6s.

As a guarantee that no more copies on India Paper than those now offered will be produced, each is numbered and signed by the Artist. The right is reserved to raise the prices when three-fourths of the number have been subscribed for.

 A Selection of the Original Drawings by Mr. Crane is now on view at the Publishers'.

LONDON: HENRY SOTHERAN & CO., 136, PICCADILLY.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 472.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MAY 21, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
SERPA PINTO'S HOW I CROSSED AFRICA, I., by Capt. BURTON	365
JAMES THOMSON'S ESSAYS AND PRANTASIES, by E. D. A. MORSEHEAD	367
DR. GOTCH'S FRAGMENTS OF THE COTTON GENESIS, by E. MAUNDER THOMPSON	368
FITCH'S LECTURES ON TEACHING, by the Rev. R. H. QUICK	368
NEW NOVELS, by the Rev. Dr. LITTLEDALE	369
RECENT SCHOOL BOOKS	370
SONNET: "WHERE LIES THE LAND," by T. HALL CAINE	371
NOTES AND NEWS	372
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS	373
ARCHAEOLOGICAL JOTTINGS, by the Rev. A. H. SAYCE	373
PROF. STRAKOSCH'S RECITALS	374
SELECTED BOOKS	374
CORRESPONDENCE.—
S. T. Coleridge's Poems: "Monody on the Death of Chatterton," by Prof. E. Dowden; "The Devil in Feathers at Chester," by F. J. FURNIVALL	374-5
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK
CLouston's ARABIAN PORTRY FOR ENGLISH READERS, by the Rev. Dr. BADGER	375
THE HIBBERT LECTURES	377
NOTES OF TRAVEL	377
SCIENCE NOTES	377
PHILOLOGY NOTES	377
PAL TEXT SOCIETY	378
MERTINGS OF SOCIETIES	378
WALTER CRANE'S THE FIRST OF MAY, by the Rev. C. H. MIDDLETOWN-WAKE	378
THE ROYAL ACADEMY, II., by J. COMYNS CARR	379
TURNER, GIRTIN, AND COZENS IN THE BALE COLLECTION, by FREDK. WEDMORE	380
THE INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION, by COSMO MONKHOUSE	381
AN ALLEGED PICTURE OF MICHELANGELO, by C. HEATH WILSON	381
OBITUARY	382
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	382
THE STAGE	383
RICHTER CONCERTS, &c., by J. S. SHEPLOCK	383

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL.

The Councils of University College, Liverpool, and of the Liverpool Royal Infirmary school of Medicine are prepared to appoint a PROFESSOR OF EXPERIMENTAL PHYSICS in connection with the above Institutions. The stipend of the Professor will be £400 per annum, together with a share of the fees. The holder of the Professorship will for the present be required to give instruction in Mathematics, until a separate Chair of Mathematics shall have been endowed. He will also be expected to deliver a Course of Lectures to Evening Classes.

Candidates are requested to send to their applications and testimonials not later than JUNE 25TH, 1881, directed to the undersigned.

W. J. STEWART, 25, Lord-street, Liverpool.
R. CATO, M.D., 18A, Abercromby-square, Liverpool
May 19, 1881.

OWENS COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

The COUNCIL, having decided to found a new PROFESSORSHIP OF APPLIED MATHEMATICS, invite applications from Gentlemen desirous of becoming Candidates. The fixed stipend is £350 per annum, in addition to Two-thirds of the Fees paid by students.

The appointment will date from the 29th September next. Further information respecting the duties of the Professor may be obtained from the PRINCIPAL of the College.

Applications and testimonials, addressed to the Council, will be received up to the 29TH MAY.

J. HOLME NICHOLSON, Registrar.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

The Office of PRINCIPAL will become VACANT at the end of the present Term. The Council are prepared to receive applications from Gentlemen desirous of the appointment. Candidates must be Clergyman of the Church of England in Priest's Orders, or the degree of Master of Arts at least of one of the Universities of Oxford or Cambridge. Every information may be obtained of the SECRETARY, The College, Brighton, to whom Testimonials must be sent on or before THURSDAY, the 11TH OF JUNE.

R. W. MADDEN, M.A.S.S., Secretary.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, Ely.

place, St. Stephen's-green, Dublin.—Founded 1852, for preparation of Candidates for Competitive Examinations; over 1,000 Pupils have passed direct from the Academy. The Special Classes for R.L. CONSTABULARY Cadetships have carried off 80 per cent. of the Cadetships offered for competition last year: First Place, four times. Special Work for Woolwich and Sandhurst; over 320 have passed Army Exams., including 2nd, 3rd, 6th, 6th, 7th, at recent Competitions.—Apply to W. J. CRETWOOD CRAWLEY, LL.B., F.G.S., F.R.G.S., Director and Sole Proprietor.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—KENSINGTON

HOUSE, Calverley Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. R. STERLING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to £20 Guineas.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

Professor C. E. TURNER, will THIS DAY (SATURDAY) MAY 21, at 3 o'clock, begin a COURSE OF FIVE LECTURES on "THE GREAT MODERN WRITERS OF RUSSIA." Subscription to this Course, Half-a-Guinea; to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.

The Society will meet on WEDNESDAY, MAY 25TH, at 8 P.M. precisely, when a PAPER will be read by MR. C. PFOUNDES, M.R.S.L., on "THE POPULAR LITERATURE OF OLD JAPAN." 4, St. Martin's-place, W.C., 1881. W. S. W. VAUX, Sec. R.S.L.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

ANNUARY MEETING, MONDAY, MAY 30, 4 P.M.
ANNUAL DINNER at WILLIS'S ROOMS, MAY 30, 7 P.M.
22, Albemarle-street, W. W. S. W. VAUX, Sec. R.A.S.

ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.

The ANNIVERSARY MEETING will be held (by permission of the Chancellor and Senate) in the HALL of the UNIVERSITY of LONDON, BURLINGTON GARDENS, on MONDAY, MAY 23RD, at 2 P.M., the Right Honourable LORD ABERDAIRE, President, in the Chair. The DINNER will take place at WILLIS'S ROOMS, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S, at 7 o'clock, on the same day. The Right Honourable LORD ABERDAIRE, President, in the Chair.

Dinner charge, 21s., payable at the Door; or Tickets may be had, and places taken, at 1, Saville-row, Burlington-gardens, up to noon on Saturday, May 21st.

The Friends of Fellows are admissible to the Dinner.

LEICESTER SCHOOL OF ART, HASTINGS STREET, LEICESTER.

In consequence of the RESIGNATION of the HEAD-MASTER of the above School on October 1st next, the Committee invite APPLICATIONS for the APPOINTMENT. Testimonials and Specimens to be forwarded not later than JUNE 11TH, 1881, addressed to SAMUEL BARFIELD, Hon. Sec., School of Art, Leicester.

CORPORATION of LIVERPOOL.

WALKER ART GALLERY.—The Art and Exhibition Sub-Committee at the Corporation have resolved to offer a PRIZE of TEN GUINEAS for the best Artistic Design for a FUSTEL announcing their next Autumn Exhibition of Pictures.—Terms of the Conditions and all particulars may be had on application to CHARLES DYALL, Curator, Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool.

HERBERT EXHIBITION.—"THE JUDGMENT OF DANIEL," Painted for the House of Lords, and Thirty-two other Works by J. HERBERT, R.A. NOW ON VIEW at the HANOVER GALLERY, 47, NEW BOND STREET. Admission, One shilling. 9.30 to 8.

NOW ON EXHIBITION.—PAINTINGS

of NIAGARA FALLS, by the late WILLIAM MORRIS HUNT, Author of "Talks about Art," also other Paintings and Charcoal Drawings by the Same Artist.—GALLERY, 14, GRAFTON STREET, OLD BOND STREET.

ROSA BONHEUR'S celebrated PIC-

TURES "ON THE ALERT" and "A FORAGING PARTY," which gained for the Artist the Cross of the Order of Leopold of Belgium at the Antwerp Academy, 1879; also the Complete Engraved Works of ROSA BONHEUR, including the well-known "HOUSE FAIR." NOW ON EXHIBITION at L. H. LEFEVRE'S GALLERY, 1A, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S, S.W. Admission One Shilling. 10 to 5.

DIDOT COLLECTION.—THIRD SALE (9-15 JUNE PROXIMO).

The magnificent MANUSCRIPTS to be dispersed at this Sale will be ON VIEW at 15, PICCADILLY, on MONDAY, TUESDAY, and WEDNESDAY, 23RD, 24TH, and 25TH MAY. They comprise Classical and Historical Codices, some remarkable for their age, some for their artistic beauty; early Texts of French and Italian Literature, including a "Daute," dated 1357. Amateurs who are desirous to enrich their libraries with specimens of unprecedented importance are invited to make use of this opportunity.

BERNARD QUATROUX, 15, Piccadilly.

PROF. and MRS. STEADMAN ALDIS

wish to form a READING PARTY on the Coast of NORMANDY, during the Months of July and August, for LADIES preparing for the Mathematical Tripos, Girtin, Newnham, or the London or Cambridge University Examinations.—For particulars address COLLEGE OF SCIENCE, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

TO LITERARY MEN and WOMEN.—

Correspondents at Home and Abroad are invited to CONTRIBUTE ARTICLES on ART as applied to Religion in all ages.—Address the EDITOR, Ecclesiastical Art Review, 367, Strand, London.

TO BOOKBUYERS.—Now ready, Mr.

GLAISHER'S GENERAL CATALOGUE of REMAINDER BOOKS for 1881. Will be sent post-free on application.—W. GLAISHER, 255, High Holborn, London.

CATALOGUE of CHOICE SECOND-

HAND BOOKS now ready. Free to any address.—JAMES FAWN & SON, Bristol.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.
(Twenty doors west of Mudie's Library.)

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Collotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Palatings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.

AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Meissonier, Corot, De Neuville, Burne-Jones, Rossetti, Cave Thomas, &c., &c., &c.

Just published, in Cloth Portfolio, Six Guineas the Set.

TWELVE AUTOTYPE REPRODUCTIONS of PAINTINGS and DRAWINGS, by PHILIP GILBERT HAMBTON, mostly of Scottish mountain scenery, and including copies of paintings in monochrome and of sepia and charcoal drawings. The twelve subjects are mounted on uniform boards, 25in. by 21in. Each Autotype can be obtained separately, price 10s. 6d.

COME INTO THESE YELLOW SANDS," after the painting by W. FIELD, Esq., on India, two sizes, 42s. and 21s.

PICTURES CLEANED, RESTORED, FRAMED.

To adorn the walls of Home with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 531, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Railing Done, Middlesex.
General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWTER.

SHEPHERD BROTHERS, Art Com-

mulsion Agents and Picture Dealers, Nottingham, beg to announce that their LONDON PICTURE GALLERY is NOW OPEN, at 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W. (opposite Messrs. Christie & Manson's).—Choice Works ON VIEW by Henry Dawson, sen., T. S. Cooper, R.A., E. J. Newman, L. J. Pott, Ernest Parton, Marcus Stone, A.R.A., Noble, Sterk, Jutsum, &c.

BARTOLOZZI.—Will holders of AUTO-

GRAPH LETTERS to or from BARTOLOZZI, the eminent Engraver, kindly allow me an opportunity of inspecting them for the purposes of my book on "Bartolozzi and his Works," the first part of which is in the press? Any information and assistance will be gratefully acknowledged. Examples of his Prints would be purchased.—ANDREW W. TERN, 20, Notting-hill-square, London, W.

ENGLISH ETCHINGS: a Monthly

Publication of Original Etchings, the work of English Artists. Part I, JUNE. Price 3s. 6d.; Annual Subscription, £2 2s. A limited number of Parts, containing First Proofs on Japanese Paper, price per Part One Guinea. Each Part will contain Four Etchings, which, together with descriptive Letterpress, will be contained in a handsome Portfolio, embellished with a Portrait of Rembrandt. Size: Imp. 4to (15 by 11).

London: WILLIAM REEVES, Publisher, 185, Fleet-street.

LONDON LIBRARY,

12, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE.

The FORTIETH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the MEMBERS will be held in the READING ROOM, on MONDAY, the 30TH OF MAY, at 3 o'clock in the Afternoon. By order of the Committee, ROBT. HARRISON, Sec. and Librarian.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

NEW AND CHOICE BOOKS.

All the best New Works in History, Biography, Religion, Philosophy, Travel and Adventure, and the Higher Class of Fiction are in circulation at MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, and may be had without delay by all Subscribers of One Guinea per Annum. See MUDIE'S LIBRARY CIRCULAR. New Edition, now ready, postage free.

CHEAP BOOKS.

More than One Thousand Popular Books of the Past and Present Seasons are now on SALE at MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY. See MUDIE'S CLEARANCE CATALOGUE. New Edition, now ready, postage free.

THE LONDON BOOK SOCIETY.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY Messengers call to deliver Books at the Residences of Subscribers in Every Part of London and the Immediate Neighbourhood, on a plan which has given general satisfaction for many years.

Several Thousand Families in London and the Suburbs already subscribe to this Department of the Library, and obtain a Constant Succession of the Best New Books on or soon after the day of publication.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED)

NEW OXFORD STREET and MUSEUM STREET.
City Office: 2, King-street, Cheapside.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

THE CORRESPONDENCE of PRINCE TALLEYRAND and LOUIS XVIII. During the CONGRESS of VIENNA.

(Hitherto unpublished.)

From the MSS. preserved in the Archives of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs at Paris. With a Preface, Observations, and Notes by M. G. PALLAIN. Now ready, in 2 vols., demy 8vo, 24s.

NEW AND POPULAR NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE CAMERONIANS. By James GRANT, Author of "The Romance of War." 3 vols., crown 8vo. [Just ready.]

TWO PRETTY GIRLS. By Miss M. A. LEWIS. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

AN OCEAN FREE-LANCE. By W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," "A Sailor's Sweetheart," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"An Ocean Free-Lance," in respect of variety, spirit, vivid energy, and mastery of touch, both in great effects and small details, is simply worthy of the author, who has never yet been surpassed by anyone who has written of the sea."—Graphic.

POLICY and PASSION. By Mrs. CAMPBELL PRAED. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Mrs. Praed is a vigorous writer, and she knows life. There is an abundance of exciting interest, and the scenery which envelops it is painted with a glowing brush. . . . There are many minor characters in the book not less powerful than those of the central figures." St. James's Gazette.

"There seems to be an almost endless vista of interest and novelty opened up by this novel. The story is written with much mastery of the subject, power, strong earnestness, and sincerity."—Daily News.

BENTLEY'S EDITION.

The Works of Jane Austen. THE ONLY COMPLETE EDITION.

Library Edition in Six Volumes, crown 8vo, well printed and bound in cloth, with a Memoir and Portrait of the Authoress, and Five Illustrations on Steel by Pickering, 30s. Each Volume can be had also separately, price 6s.

SENSE and SENSIBILITY.

"I have now read over again all Miss Austen's novels. Charming they are. There are in the world no compositions which approach nearer to perfection."—Macaulay's Journal.

PRIDE and PREJUDICE.

"The perfect type of a novel of common life; the story is so concisely and dramatically told, the language so simple, the shades of human character so clearly presented, and the operation of various motives so delicately traced, attest this gifted woman to have been the perfect mistress of her art."—Arnold's English Literature.

"One of the best of Miss Austen's unequalled works. How perfectly it is written!"—Spectator.

EMMA.

"Shakespeare has neither equal nor second; but among the writers who have approached nearest to the manner of the great master we have no hesitation in placing Jane Austen, a woman of whom England is justly proud."—Macaulay's Essays.

MANSFIELD PARK.

"Miss Austen has a talent for describing the involvements and feelings and characters of ordinary life which is to me the most wonderful I ever met with. Her exquisite touch, which renders commonplace things and character, interesting from the truth of the description and sentiment, is denied to me."—Sir Walter Scott.

NORTHANGER ABBEY.

"Read Dickens' 'Hard Times,' and another book of Eliza's 'Letters.' Read 'Northanger Abbey,' worth all Dickens and 'Pity' together. Yet it was the work of a girl. She was certainly not more than twenty-six. Wonderful creature!"—Macaulay's Journal.

PERSUASION.

"Miss Austen's fame will outlive the generations that did not appreciate her, and her works will be ranked with the English classics as long as the language lasts."—Atlas.

LADY SUSAN.

"If I could get materials I really would write a short life of that wonderful woman, and raise a little money to put up a monument to her in Winchester Cathedral."—Macaulay's Journal for 1858.

THE WATSONS.

With a Memoir and Portrait of the Authoress.
"Miss Austen's life, as well as her talent, seems to us unique among the lives of authoresses of fiction."—Quarterly Review.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,
NEW BURLINGTON STREET,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

RECENT POETRY.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s.

THE HOUSE of ATREUS: being the Agamemnon, Libation-Bearers, and Furies of Æschylus. Translated into English Verse by E. D. A. MORSHEAD, M.A.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE INFERNO of DANTE ALIGHIERI.
Translated by WARBURTON PIKE.

By the SAME AUTHOR.

TRANSLATIONS from DANTE,
PETRARCH, MICHAEL ANGELO, and VITTORIA COLONNA. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

BEOWULF: an Old English Poem.
Translated into Modern Rhymes by Lieutenant-Colonel H. W. LUNDEN, late Royal Artillery.

"Colonel Lumsden has certainly succeeded in producing a readable and most agreeable version of this interesting monument of our language."—Athenæum.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE CROWNED HIPPOLYTUS. Translated from Euripides. With New Poems. By A. MARY F. ROBINSON, Author of "A Handful of Honey-suckle," &c.

"Miss Robinson has carried through, with a due admixture of faithfulness and poetical fire, her clear version of one of the most elaborate dramas of Euripides."—Academy.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE GEORGICS of VIRGIL. Translated into English Verse by JAMES RHOADES, Author of "Timoleon," &c.

"This is a book which we have read—or rather studied, for it deserves and repays study—with pleasure and satisfaction. The translation is accurate, and in close keeping both with the spirit and the language of the original; and the verse is flowing, melodious, and markedly free from the painful constraint and dislocation of English idioms which so often spoil a would-be literal rendering."—Spectator.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

SONGS and SONNETS of SPRING-TIME.
By CONSTANCE W. NADEN.

Large post, parchment antique, 6s.

MARY MAGDALENE: a Poem. By Mrs. RICHARD GREENOUGH.

"Mrs. Greenough has dealt with a difficult subject well, and has given us some poetry of a high order." St. James's Gazette.

"Full of tender pathos. . . . It is a succession of word pictures of rare grace and beauty."—Scotsman.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

MARIE ANTOINETTE: a Drama.

"A powerful and highly coloured picture of scenes for which no colour can be too vivid and no passion too intense."—Manchester Examiner.

"There are also some perfect pieces of versification, with which—save in Tennyson and Swinburne—the blank verse of our day is scarcely acquainted."—Glasgow Herald.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

ANNE BOLEYN: a Tragedy, in Five Acts.
By the Author of "Palace and Prison," "Geneva," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

SONGS of STUDY. By William Wilkins, B.A., Scholar, Trinity College, Dublin.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 5s.

DOROTHY: a Country Story, in Elegiac Verse. With Preface.

"The poem is excellent reading." Illustrated London News.

"It is long since we remember to have read so noble a vindication of the dignity of labour, or so faithful a description of rural life."—Notes and Queries.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

DOLORES: a Theme with Variations. In Three Parts.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

GONDALINE'S LESSON; THE
WARDEN'S TALE: Stories for Children, and other Poems. By Mrs. BLOOMFIELD MOORE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

MY OLD PORTFOLIO: a Volume of Poems.

LONDON: C. KEGAN PAUL & CO.,
1, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO'S LIST.

A SIXTH EDITION is now ready of

MR. WILLIAM BLACK'S "SUNRISE: a Story of these Times." 3 vols., demy 8vo, 31s. 6d.

A SECOND EDITION is ready of

MAJOR SERPA PINTO'S HOW I
CROSSED AFRICA; from the Atlantic to the Indian Ocean, through Unknown Countries; Discovery of the Great Zambezi Affluents, &c. Translated by Professor ALBERT ELWES. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Twenty Full-page and 115 Half-page and smaller illustrations, Thirteen small Maps and One large one, cloth extra, 42s.

A SECOND EDITION is ready of

DR. EMIL HOLUB'S SEVEN YEARS in SOUTH AFRICA: Travels, Researches, and Hunting Adventures (1872 to 1879). Translated by ELLEN E. FAWCER, Translator of Schweinfurth's "Heart of Africa," &c. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with 200 Illustrations and Map, cloth extra, 42s.

A SECOND EDITION is nearly ready of

TO THE CENTRAL AFRICAN LAKES and
BACK: the Narrative of the Royal Geographical Society's East Central African Expedition, 1878-80, By JOSEPH THOMSON, F.R.G.S., in Command of the Expedition. With a short Biographical Notice of the late Mr. Keith Johnston, Portraits, and a Map. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

ON the INDIAN HILLS; or, Coffee Planting

in Southern India. By EDWIN LESTER ARNOLD, Author of "A Summer Holiday in Scandinavia," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s. [Shortly.]

Now ready, in 2 vols. (over 1,200 pages), demy 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, price 32s.

LIFE of VOLTAIRE. By James Parton.
With Two fine Portraits.

"The reader is probably aware that every circumstance in the history of this man, from the date of his birth to the resting-place of his bones, is matter of controversy. . . . The Voltaire of these volumes is the nearest to the true one that I have been able to gather and construct. I think the man is to be found in these pages delineated by himself." From Preface.

Now ready, royal 8vo, cloth extra, price 21s.

VOL. VIII. of GUIZOT'S HISTORY of FRANCE. Completing the Work. Fully Illustrated.

* * * The eight volumes of this most complete and splendidly illustrated History of France, by one of the greatest of modern historians, can now be had, royal 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, price 21s. each volume.

THE NEW VOLUMES IN THE SERIES ON

Foreign Countries and British Colonies,

Edited by F. S. PULLING, M.A., are:

AUSTRALIA. By J. F. Vesey Fitzgerald, late Colonial Secretary of Victoria. With Illustrations and a Map. Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d. [Ready.]

EPITOME of CONTENTS:—General Character of the Country—Climate—Flora and Fauna—The Aborigines—Geology—New South Wales—Victoria—Laws relating to Sale and Occupation of Land—The Gold Fields—Religion and Education—South Australia—Queensland—Western Australia—Appendix of Agricultural Statistics—Death Rates, &c.

DENMARK and ICELAND. By E. C. Otte,
Author of "Scandinavian History," &c. [Nearly ready.]

EGYPT. By Stanley Lane-Poole. With
Maps and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d. [Ready.]

EPITOME of CONTENTS:—The Land of Egypt—The Plain—Cairo—The Valley—The Deserts—The Modern Egyptians—The Wealth of Egypt—The Dynasty of Mohammed 'Ally—Chronological and other Tables.

SWEDEN and NORWAY. By the Rev.
F. H. Woods, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford. [Nearly ready.]

Now ready, small post 8vo, 1s.

THE TAMING of the SHREW: a Comedy in Five Acts. By WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. Arranged for Drawing-room Acting or School Theatricals. By M. B. II.

LONDON:
SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON,
Crown-buildings, 185, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, MAY 21, 1881.

No. 472, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

How I Crossed Africa. By Major Serpa Pinto. Translated from the Author's MS. by Alfred Elwes. In 2 vols. (Sampson Low.)

(First Notice.)

A QUARTER of a century ago, when the lake regions of Central Africa were first opened, Portuguese exploration, which led the van of Europe in the days of Dom Manoel, had been almost entirely abandoned to mulatto slave-dealers and Negroes pur sang, the pombeiros (head-porters) who guided caravans. There was a decline even since the end of the last century, when, as told in The Lands of the Cazembe, Dr. de Lacerda made his famous journey, and died of it and during it. The men who, like "Prôto" (Silva Porto), preceded Livingstone on the Zambeze thought only of trading and travelling, and their immense experience was not committed to writing. Geographical science in Portugal was chiefly literary. Men of the type of Visconde de Sá de Bandeira revived the past by emptying official pigeon-holes of valuable documents buried under the dust of years, and printing them in the Annaes Marítimos and similar publications. It was old age trading on its youth.

The revival of regular exploration dates from 1876, when the Geographical Society of Lisbon established its "Central Permanent Commission." That learned body resolved to utilise the national advantages in South-African exploration. From the Portuguese colonies on either flank of the Dark Continent paths radiate into its very heart; the "Mueneputo" (Lord of Oporto) is a household word among the wildest tribes of the interior; and traces of Portuguese trade were everywhere found by Dr. Livingstone during his glorious first journey (1852-56). Indeed, the celebrated missionary, all whose sympathies lay with the converted and convertible Negro, and all whose antipathies with the Moslems and Christians not of his own sect, contributed not a little to the revival, by openly advocating the annexation of Portuguese territory.

Major Alexandre de Serpa Pinto's expedition, directly resulting from the new order of things, is described in How I Crossed Africa, a title somewhat banal, and echoing other books of travel. It is, however, correct, whereas Capt. (now Col.) Grant's Walk Across Africa does not cross Africa. The work is divided into two very unequal parts—"The King's Rifle" (vol. i., and vol. ii. to p. 128) and "The Coillard Family" (vol. ii., p. 129 to end)—the names being taken from the supposed saviours of the explorer. Physically speaking, the two volumes of large octavo (pp. 377 and 388) are printed in the admirable style which the public expects from Messrs. Sampson Low. The illustrations (ninety-one in vol. i. and thirty-nine in vol. ii.) are excellent; and the resemblance of the humans and their monstrous hair-dressing to the sketches of Commander Cameron (Across Africa) vouches for their truth; and there is no difficulty about recognising the cardamom (Amomum grana paradisi) in the "atundo" (i. 269) and a silurus in the "chinguene" (i. 341). The maps and plans—eight sectional for greater detail, not including a specimen of MS. (i. 237), and one general—all by Mr. Weller—are remarkably good, and would be perfect had the letterpress been read more carefully. The conclusion, which takes the place of an appendix, contains a facsimile of the explorer's MS. (a small and delicate hand, remarkably like Cameron's), the formulæ used for calculation, and a vocabulary of Kambundo, Ganguella, and Teta-Kafir, the two latter taken from the well-known volume, O Muata Cazembe, by MM. Gamitto (not Gamito) and Monteiro. I should have relegated to the Appendix the two supplementary chapters (vol. i., pp. 216-25; and ii., 105-27): they break the continuity of the narrative, and they are better fitted for geographical and anthropological societies. My friend Guido Cora, of the Cosmos, has set an excellent example of drawing a firm line between the popular and the absolutely scientific, including all the ologies. The book ends with an Index of words, and wants a table of dates. Finally, the seventeen months' journey was made in 1877-79; the writing begun in September of the latter year; and the Preface is dated December 1880. The delay was caused by "obstinate illness;" and when we read of the fevers, the meningitis, the rheumatism, the liver attacks, the home-sickness, and the worries undermining life, we are not a little astonished that the book ever was written.

The journey may be divided into three sections of very unequal value. The first, occupying twenty days from the coast to the granite platform of Bihé, has no value, except that it corroborates and supplements Cameron's careful and conscientious work. The ethnological notices are not by an expert; they cannot compare with those of the late Ladislau Magyar, here one man split in two, and called "Ladislau, Magyar" (ii. 161). Some time ago I translated the Reisen of the energetic Hungarian who, between 1849 and 1857, settled and married in Bihé. Thinking very highly of it, as the work of a resident not a traveller, and the pioneer of the Bihé mission lately established by the English, I sent my version to the Royal Geographical Society of London. Unhappily for future travellers, the reply was that German is too commonly read to justify publishing a translation.

Major Serpa Pinto's second section is the pith of the book. It extends from the Bihé highlands some 360 direct geographical miles to the Liambai River, which, with the Cuando, forms the true Zambeze (not Zambesi). Here the formation becomes schistose, like the Pampas of South America; the surface does not show a stone. The traveller, in fact, is unwittingly crossing the great lacustrine basin suggested by the late Sir Roderick I. Murchison, and verified by Dr. Livingstone. How important will become this water-way may be judged by our explorer's views. Travelling via the Zambeze, the Liambai, and the Lungo-i-ungu, the latter heading close to the Coanza-Congo, he would cross the 1,250 miles of Southern Intertropical Africa with only 250 miles (eighteen days) on foot. In this newly opened section we find, traced with a firm hand, and carefully laid down by astronomical and hypsometrical observation, the network of dots which lies to the west and south-west of Dr. Livingstone's line from Linyanti to S. Paulo de Loanda.

The last and third part, down the Liambai and via the Transvaal to Durban, derives its scanty interest from our actual relations with the gallant Boers. Geographically speaking, it has no novelty. I am glad, however, to see the author agreeing with me that the civilisation of Africa must come from the merchant rather than the missionary; and that the centres of instruction should be among the smaller tribes, not in the powerful kingdoms, as advocated by others. Finally, the notes on the condition of missionaries (ii. 324) will be highly interesting to those few who would learn the truth. Had an Englishman ventured such opinions the only remark would have been, "Oh! but you're prejudiced." Here, however, an intelligent foreigner and outsider tells all he has seen with fresh eyes. How much the last Boer War was owing to Dr. Livingstone and to men of his cloth is only too evident to those who can read between his lines (First Journey, chap. ii.); and this statement we shall presently see distinctly confirmed by Major Serpa Pinto.

And now for the details.

After a prologue, which is long, but not too long, Major Pinto, in company with Lieut. Hermenigildo Capello (R.N.), lands at Loanda in early August 1877; and there he is joined by his third companion, Lieut. Roberto Ivens (R.N.). Had he read the books he names, we should hardly have found him complaining that "all the narratives are singularly wanting in information" concerning outfit, tools, and personal luggage; arms and ammunition; presents, merchandise, and instruments. We have all contributed our shares; and M. Paul du Chaillu was almost tediously diffuse on the subject. A sum of £1,760 covered the preliminary expenses, out of a total of £6,600 liberally assigned to the expedition.

The inevitable troubles about carriage at once began, and lasted, as usual, to the very finish. The useless trip to the Congo brought Major Pinto into contact with Mr. Henry M. Stanley, who was fresh from his memorable journey down the Congo-Zaire, and who was carried, with all his party, by the gunboat to Loanda. The older gave the younger traveller the excellent advice "never to pass the night under a native roof." Our explorer then set out for picturesque and pestiferous Benguela, whose climate, he says, has changed for the better; I am certain that nothing could be worse in 1865. There he met "the old settler, Silva Porto," the best-known European name in the South-African interior. The veteran, who was preparing his notes for publication, lent him generous assistance, with letters and advice, especially the following:—"In the heart of Africa distrust everybody and everything until repeated and irrefutable proofs will allow you to bestow your confidence" (i. 79). Put with a little more neatness, the "principle" is equally applicable to the other three quarters of the globe—at least, such is the experience of most men after the sad tenth lustre. The three companions distributed the work:—Ivens took charge of geography, Capello of meteorology, and Serpa Pinto of general management.

The expedition-caravan left Benguela town with colours flying on November 12, 1877. This was summer and the rainy season. It was to be followed by four hundred porters; and it had some fifty, including fourteen drunken ne'er-do-weels called soldiers, and not including six riding asses, headstrong brutes, like all African animals. There were, however, the ten "Benguela braves" who formed the backbone of the expedition; two of them fell in fight, four followed Capello and Ivens, one lost his senses at the Coanza, and three endured to the end.

The fertile valley of Dombe Grande and the Quillengues (Kwilenges) station were passed without adventure. At the Caconda Fort the explorers met the naturalist, José d'Anchieta. From this point Major Pinto made an excursion to the Cunene River flowing to the south-east. He had originally intended to explore this great stream, which mouths as the "Nourse River." The line still awaits inspection; and good work would be done by ascending it to the upper lakes, returning via the Swakop River to Walfisch Bay. At Caconda the party separated, and Major Pinto marched on alone. Here, too, his compatriots, settled in the interior, made all arrangements for his utter and complete failure. These obstacles will last as long as Africa is bounded by mountains and by middlemen, who buy cheap from the blacks and sell dear to the whites. I had personal experience of the prejudice against quieta movere among the traders of Zanzibar; and I know that all the troubles on the Nun, or Lower Niger, were originally brought about by the English agents in the Brass River.

The most notable point was the passage of the upper waters of the Cubango, the great artery which heads, like the Cunene, in the highlands of Bihé, receives the Cuito (Kwito) and a host of affluents, and dies of drought in the Ngami Lake. The section ended at Silva Porto's thatched cottage, Belmonte, in Bihé, mentioned by Cameron. The march up the glorious plateau, which rises to a height of 5,500 and even 8,200 feet, records little beyond fever and rheumatism; the Mucanos (avanies) of all; the insolence of chiefs; perpetual troubles with the "insubordinate rascals" who carried, robbed, and abandoned the packs; and, last but not least, African thunder-storms and tropical rain-drenchings. The only risks were from the charge of a "buffalo" (Bos caffer), from the attack on a village to recover stolen goods, and from a squabble with a bullying headman. The Bihénos are described as "profoundly vicious:" they are, however, like the Wanyamwezi, born travellers and explorers, who have covered every practicable line in the interior. Their cannibalism is sporadic, as is that of the Gaboon Mpangwe (Fans); and, like these people, they are outliers of the great anthropophagous race which occupies the vast white blot in Central Africa. If they have distributed the general "medicine-man" into three, the medico proper, the rain-maker, and the sorcerer, or rather poisoner, they are progressing—the wrong way. And here the reader will regret that Ladislaus Magyar's admirable account of the religion, manners, and customs of the Bihé people has not been consulted. Had the author done so, we should have read more about the "ghost" and less about the "soul."

The three companions met once more among the roses and oranges of Belmonte. After this Capello and Ivens fade out of the story, and set out to visit the Cuanza. There had evidently been some unpleasantness about forwarding the luggage; but the author is reserved upon the subject, and we cannot do better than imitate him.

Despite the perpetual struggle between latitude and altitude, and the alternate victories of burning suns by day and chilling winds by night, Serpa Pinto found his health and strength improve. He had a long rest, for the porters who left Benguela in November did not reach him till early May. He now formed the plucky resolution of marching upon the Upper Zambeze. His men seem to have deserted as fast as they came in; but he was aided by that José Alves who figures so unpleasantly in Cameron's book; and he won respect by flogging a white slaver. Still he had to destroy sixty-one loads: had he distributed them among the carriers these men would have wanted more; and had he left his goods among the natives other carriers would have been persuaded to desert. Thus he was reduced to a party of seventy-two.

On June 6 the camp at Bihé was broken up; and on the 9th our explorer made the beautiful Coanza affluent of the Congo-Zaire, "winding through a plain from a mile and a-half to two miles broad, enclosed on either side by gentle green slopes clothed with trees." The description of its transparent waters, flowing over unsullied white sand, reminds us of Southern Abyssinia.

Immediately east of Bihé lies the previously unexplored land of the Quimbandé tribe, watered by the Cuime, Varéa, Onda, and other head-streams of the Coanza. Here begins the new land of clayey schist and mica-slate contrasting with the plutonics of Bihé; and the traveller is now falling into the great lacustrine basin, whose rivers, flowing south, have no cataracts. The country is charming, suggesting the well-worn simile of the "English park." The "trees are perfectly splendid, and the summits of the lofty hills which border the Varéa River are very richly wooded; beyond it the wealth of vegetation is, if possible, even greater." The illustration of Lake Liguri (fig. 44) certainly bears out the enthusiasm. The local productions are sugar-cane and castor (much used for hair-oil), beans and manioc, wax and cereals. Among the latter, the massango, or pennisetum, curiously called "canary-seed," comes in for the author's hardest language: it is horrible, abominable, and almost cursed. Iron is everywhere plentiful; and among the growths we must not forget that "terrible hymenopter," the Quissonde ant (F. atrox?): coloured a light chestnut, and one-eighth of an inch long. It draws blood, and puts caravans to flight.

The Quimbandé is a clan of the great Ganguella family. Their features are sub-"Caucasian," and somewhat Jewish. Yet they are a lazy, useless race, very unlike the energetic Bihénos; and their "tendency in the direction of body-clothing" is not pronounced. The coiffure is in the usual elaborate style, which takes two days to build and lasts two months: I would suggest that it is simply an imitation of the European billycock and its congeners. The drink is capata, Quimbombo or Chimbombo beer, the pombe of Unyamwezi, made into potent "bingunde" ale by adding honey and powdered hops. East of the Quimbandé lie the Lucháze; and to the south-east of the latter are the Ambuellas, who are described as the best specimens of the race.

Crossing the Bitovo rivulet, one year after taking leave of his father, the explorer remarks that the waters are flowing to the Zambeze, and sentimentalises upon the "snapping of the tie" that united him to the Western Coast. Presently (July 10) he ascends the Cassara Caiéira Mountain, 5,298 feet high; sees a magnificent panorama, and discovers the "unpretending sources" of the mighty Cuando or river of Linyanti. They head near those of the Cuime-Coanza-Congo and the Cuito-Cubango of Ngami. The exact position is in E. long. 18° 58' and S. lat. 13° (round numbers), some 375 miles from the Western and 1,500 from the Eastern Coast. The altitude is 4,470 feet above sea-level, and the thermometer fell to 2° Cent. The marsh source, shown in the plan (i. 285), has its longer axis disposed from west-north-west to east-south-east; and the young river issues from the latter point to become "one of the largest influents of the Zambesi." The first to canoe down the Cuando was the veteran Silva Porto, who embarked his goods upon the head-water called Cuchibi, and descended safely to Linyanti, in 1849. Hence, probably, the "Chobe River"—a name, we are told, absolutely unknown to the people—applied to the Cuando by Dr. Livingstone.

The Cuando flows through a "sponge" rich in leeches, and speedily becomes navigable. Here the river-beds are of two varieties—either clean sand, or sand overspread with marsh-mud. The latter produces a luxuriant growth of aquatic plants, forming islands, floating meadows, and virgin forests of nenuphar and Victoria-regia. Here we have again Capt. Speke's bridges of water-lilies and the well-known Sadd (wall, or dam) on the Upper Nile. An instance of the clear bottom is the Cuchibi River, which flows through a dry valley, with long sweeps and without "water-gardens." The explorer reached it on July 25, after floating down the Cubanguí River in his mackintosh boat, and crossing the water-shed, a virgin forest perfumed with the delicate papilionaceous Oúco. He had now passed from the Lucháze to the Ambuellas country. Lions were heard, but no elephants had yet been seen. We are told of a feline (Leopardus jubatus), apparently purblind, which uses its ears in preference to its eyes. There are also interesting notes concerning the Quichóbi or Buzi, a ruminant apparently semi-amphibious. This antelope has some resemblance in manners to the hippopotamus; dives deep and sleeps under water. As might be expected, the meat is poor.

On the Cuchibi insubordination was abated by cracking a Pombeiro's pate. "Wounds in the head, if they do not kill at once, soon heal up." From this point the traveller made a most interesting visit to a camp of the Mucassequere people (S. lat. 13°). They are certainly the Kasekel or Mukánkala of Magyar and the "Kasekere or Bushmen" of Dr. Livingstone, who probably learned the name from Silva Porto. This forest tribe feed on honey, game (including white ants), and roots; they are abjectly miserable, ignoring huts, clothing, cultivation, and salt; and their only arms are bows and arrows. The explorer defines their relation to their Ambuella neighbours as that of savages to barbarians; and, judging from their peculiar intonation and their dirty-yellow skins, he concludes that they belong to the "Hottentot branch of the Ethiopic race." He omits, however, to notice the steatopyga, or the apron; and he is unable to offer even a sketch. The subject is most interesting. Many travellers have advanced the theory that the so-called aborigines once extended from Hottentot-land about the Cape deep into the northern country, and we shall hear more upon this subject.

Major Pinto was received well, and perhaps a little too well, by old Moene Cahu-héu-úé, chief sova (headman) of the Ambuellas, a race of canoe-men who build upon aits and river-reaches. He at once sent his two fine daughters—Opudo, the haughty, and Capéu, the languishing—whose "frankness" of hospitality was much scandalised, we are told, by his "austere life." The temptation is described as considerable; but the two likenesses (i., figs. 72, 73) seem rather to suggest that it would be easy to resist such charms. The reader is referred to the original (i. 329) for an account how the virtuous cavalry-man was saved by "little Mariana." Only fair to note that the spretæ injuriæ forma bred no bad blood in the fair black and sub-Caucasian breast, and that the explorer was not taught furens quid femina possit. His offence was great: he had preferred to all sweeter offers "a pot of Lisbon marmalade left by some Bihero trader." Yet the gallant girls accompanied him for a considerable distance in command of his carriers, and bade him a friendly adieu.

The sova's Court proved to be a kind of Capua, like Unyamwezián Kazeh when I first visited it. To prevent his little party being utterly demoralised, Major Pinto took leave on August 4, and struck eastward with southing towards the place where the Libu and the Lungo-é-ungo influents have anastomosed to form the Liambai-Zambeze. The line lay through a "desert;" that is, a depopulated country; fertile and healthy, near the western hills where the Ninda River rises; and swampy and malarious about the River

Nhengo, which is the lower course of the Ninda. Here he was approaching the very source of fever; yet the river plain is 3,320 feet above sea-level. The place abounded in lions, which shows an abundance of game; the king of beasts develops his best only in countries like the Atlas, where he can pull down as much cattle as he wants, or in South Africa, where antelopes play the part of cattle. The "buffalos" were as much dreaded as the lions; clouds of flies added discomfort; and the morasses so took energy out of the party that the explorer, who has scant trust in his luck, began to despair. He had just determined that a man must be "angel or devil" to explore Africa, when "a stranger man, followed by a woman and two lads, came from the bush, and, paying no heed to the dogs, entered the encampment, and, giving a rapid glance round, advanced and seated himself" at the explorer's feet. He proved to be Caiumbuca, the boldest of the Bihé traders, the old Pombeiro of Silva Porto, known from the Nyangwe to Lake Ngami; and strongly recommended by his previous employer. This was dawn breaking at the darkest time, and changing as by magic the condition of the camp. But it was a "false dawn." Caiumbuca was the last card played by the Portuguese settlers of Bihé; and, worse still, Major Pinto forgot his principle of universal suspicion. The conjuncture was ominous.

After killing an enormous crocodile, the explorer crossed the mighty stream, of which the boatmen used to sing half-a-century ago—

"The Liambai! nobody knows Whence it comes and whither it goes."

The explorer was received at Lialui, the capital, by Lobossi, king of the Luinas, or Barotse, with a "programme" and a display of 1200 warriors. Everything was unpleasantly civilised in Lui or Ungunga (Barotse-land), the "vast empire of South Tropical Africa." And here, with an "undefined presentiment of evil," ends (August 24, 1878) the first volume, and with it end the geographical novelties of the journey.

RICHARD F. BURTON.

Essays and Phantasies. By James Thomson, Author of "The City of Dreadful Night, and other Poems," &c. (Reeves & Turner.)

It is impossible to criticise this volume without a feeling of what Carlyle used to call "sorrowful dubiety;" first, because the extremely heterogeneous character of its contents makes it hard to appreciate as a whole; secondly, because, when a veiled and sardonic humour appears heavy, ill-sustained, and dull to the critic, he cannot but remember that Sartor Resartus also seemed so on its first appearance; lastly, because a writer so warmly commended and encouraged by "George Eliot" as Mr. Thomson has been must have spiritual qualities and insight of no common kind. She, we may feel assured, did not lightly ascribe such qualities as "distinct vision and grand utterance."

The book may be divided into three parts—(1) Prose-poetry; (2) Theology; (3) Literary Criticism. Of these, the first—as exhibited in the opening piece, called "A Lady of Sorrow"—seems to be a very able but, at the same time, a very laboured imitation of De Quincey. "A Lady of Sorrow" is a dream of bereaved solitude in London. And there is pathos and poetry, too, in the description of Sorrow, personified first as the Angel—the "image in beatitude of her who died so young"—then as the Siren, the blind and sorry impulse that drives her victim, a second Faust, through a weary round of gaudy but debasing pleasures, very happily compared to the tavern of Omar Khayyam, till the world is "laughed back into chaos;" finally, as the Shadow, the veiled goddess of Despair, the "dominant metamorphosis" of Sorrow. The style is that of De Quincey, but the voice is that of Heine or Leopardi. Whether pessimism has a sound philosophy may be a question; that it has a real poetry cannot be doubted. The only criticism I should venture to make on this part of Mr. Thomson's work is that it is dream-literature without the persuasiveness of dreams. The unforgettable charm of works like De Quincey's Dream - Fugue, or Coleridge's Kubla Khan, is that they combine the fantasticality of dreams with their apparently effortless reality; surprising as they are in our waking hours, they never surprise the dreamer. This quality is not reached by Mr. Thomson. His work reminds one rather of such works as George MacDonald's Phantastes, or Alton Locke, where dream-land is reproduced rather by eloquence and literary force than by the indefinable touch of inspired personal experience.

The second, or theological, side of the volume is mainly represented by a long essay entitled "Proposals for the Speedy Extinction of Evil and Misery." This essay is introduced by a wearisome mystification, wherein the question of the author's sanity is raised, the verdict of the critics forestalled by parodying their manner, and counsel is darkened and comprehension obscured by a tiresome indirectness. The essay itself is a long pessimistic diatribe against Christianity and most other religions, against modern politics and social arrangements, without any tangible suggestion for their amendment—unless the absurd oracle that Nature can be coerced by a threat of universal suicide on the part of Man be considered such. The ruling influence is clearly that of Swift, for whom Mr. Thomson elsewhere (pp. 281-88) expresses his profound admiration. But of that great writer's bitter sincerity, his "saeva indignatio," his intense pity for the miseries and inequalities of the human lot, there is here no trace. One power of Swift's—that of producing nausea by a single phrase—Mr. Thomson has got indeed. With apologies to the readers of the ACADEMY, I present an instance of this. The eulogies of the dead, in a certain journal, are said (p. 97) to be so "rancidly unctuous that . . . the corpse of the victim thus lubricated has turned and vomited its heart up in the grave." If this is a specimen of the invective of the kingly pessimistic man of the future, one may be allowed a satisfaction, hitherto unfelt, that one lives in the days of the journal thus assailed.

So ugly a lapse in taste and feeling might be pardoned if it stood alone. I am constrained to say that in this essay it has parallels. The very thought of certain religious doctrines—particularly that of the Trinity—seems to goad the writer to a veritable frenzy of abuse. On p. 70 this culminates in a description of that doctrine which must be called physically revolting. It is too long and too nasty for extraction. Mr. Thomson writes like a person excoriated beyond endurance by facile and popular orthodoxy, till in sheer desperation he breaks into offensiveness. But in truth, if a new temple be required, it is better to unbuild than to shatter the old one. Mr. Thomson's sketch of Christianity is just such a distempered picture as is so often and so harmfully drawn by orthodox hands and labelled Doubt, or Comtism, or Free-thinking. The picture is a hopeless daub, but the animus of the artist is provoking—then follow reprisals, and all is obscured in abusive polemics. But the victory will be to that side that comes to comprehend its opponent best, not that which abuses him most loudly. Neither can the heavy humour, which here and there gives a touch of irony to the essay, succeed in redeeming it from polemical dullness. "A committee of seven archangels" (p. 66). "Jesus Christ hauling up an editor into heaven" (p. 64). There is taste and style! "Humanity and even womanity" (p. 69). "A new Jerusalem—as if one wasn't enough!" There is humour and satire! Serious or ironical, this essay only proves to what level a writer of great power may sink if he is determined to think everything worthless which is imperfect. Mr. Leslie Stephen has recently protested against "the most important of all controversies being tainted with a flavour of vulgarity." And the protest is applicable to literature as well as to politics.

It is pleasant to turn from this kind of work to the more purely literary part of the volume. The panegyric of Spenser's poetry (pp. 177-89) shows fine critical insight, though it is hard to realise the justice of the last two pages, which seem to ascribe to Spenser a carnal, antinomian, defiant mood; no examples of which are given, nor would it, I think, be easy to find them. Very happy also is the definition of G. Meredith as "the Browning of our novelists." "A Word for Xantippe" misconceives, I think, the problem from the outset. The grievances of Xantippe, great or small, were only in a very limited degree peculiar to herself. Most Greek women were so treated, and individuals would hardly have felt themselves wronged. In the translation (p. 222) of the closing scene of Plato's Symposium, the word καταρθεῖν, rendered "awoke," means exactly the opposite. And has Mr. Thomson authority for the statement (p. 133) that Shakspeare left off literary production when he retired to Stratford? Certainly the contrary opinion is widely entertained. The influence of Dante is very traceable, particularly in the final essay, "In our Forest of the Past." It is only by a play of fancy, however, that Mr. Thomson calls him "Dante Durante, the long-enduring Giver." Dante never meant "the Giver"; the name is only an abbreviation of Durante.

In fine, the general character of Mr.

Thomson's book seems to me to be as follows:—The poetry is good, though of a somewhat laboured sombreness. The literary criticism is keen and striking. The theology, and especially the humour applied to the theology, is deplorably vulgar.

E. D. A. MORSHEAD.

A Supplement to Tischendorf's Reliquiae ex incendio ereptae Codicis celeberrimi Cottoniani. Edited by Frederic William Gotch, M.A., LL.D., President of the Baptist College, Bristol. (Williams & Norgate.)

OF all the MSS. of the Cottonian Library which the disastrous fire of 1731 destroyed, there is none whose loss is to be more regretted than that of the volume known as the Cotton Genesis. This MS. was one of the very few Greek codices adorned with paintings which have been preserved to modern times. In comparison with its fellow-codex, the fragmentary Genesis of the Imperial Library at Vienna, it was superior in every way. It was more perfect, and more ancient, being, in fact, of the fifth or sixth century; and the art of its paintings was undoubtedly of a higher order. It was brought into England in the reign of Henry VIII., to whom it is said to have been presented by two Greek bishops from Philippi. Queen Elizabeth gave it to her preceptor in Greek, Sir John Fortescue, who, in his turn, gave it to Sir Robert Cotton. That great collector was not illiberal in lending his books; and even this precious volume was made no exception. Cotton entrusted it to Thomas Earl of Arundel, so famous as the patron of art, in 1631, and the Earl never returned it. Its subsequent fate makes us wish that the borrowed book had rested quietly ever after in the Arundel Library. But this was not to be. It descended to Lord Arundel's second son, Viscount Stafford, from whose widow Sir John Cotton purchased it again, some half-century after it had left Sir Robert's hands, and replaced it on its shelf, where it met its doom. Of the original 165 leaves of which the MS. was formed, only some 150 blackened and shrunken fragments, some of them hardly an inch square, remain in the Cotton collection; and the text which survived in them is known by its publication by Tischendorf in his Monumenta Sacra Inedita. But Tischendorf's work was not perfect; he made mistakes in his readings—perhaps a pardonable fault when dealing with fragments scarcely legible; and he also omitted to include certain fragments which had found their way to the Baptist College at Bristol in 1784 along with the bequeathed library of Dr. Andrew Gifford, a Baptist minister in London and an assistant librarian in the British Museum. The presence of these fragments among Dr. Gifford's books was, no doubt, an accident. Their existence, however, was known by means of the engravings of twenty fragments of the MS., among which some of the Bristol remains appeared, in the Vetusta Monumenta, published in 1747. By comparing the Bristol fragments (which, since their arrival in the Baptist College, had passed for "pieces of the Septuagint said to have been found in the ruins of the city of Herculaneum") with the plates of the Vet. Mon., Dr. Gotch identified them as belonging to the Cottonian MS. It is the text of these fragments, together with corrections of Tischendorf's misreadings, that Dr. Gotch now publishes. By adopting the same type and the same form as Tischendorf, the editor has produced, in the most literal sense, a supplement which those who possess the Monumenta Sacra will be glad also to have.

E. MAUNDE THOMPSON.

Lectures on Teaching. Delivered in the University of Cambridge. By J. G. Fitch, M.A. (Cambridge: At the University Press.)

THIS book, though of a professional character, has in it several points of interest for the general public. It is the first-fruits of the courses of lectures which Cambridge now provides for those who think of becoming teachers. Mr. Fitch was naturally one of the first lecturers appointed; and his great success in getting and keeping an audience of over a hundred, to which each sex contributed about equally, went beyond the hopes even of the most sanguine friends of the new experiment. These lectures, which were so well received at Cambridge, are now published by the Syndics of the University Press. In giving them to the public, Mr. Fitch has made a valuable contribution to our literature in a department where it is sadly defective. No doubt the Cambridge lectures will in time do much to supply what is lacking; and we shall no longer have to turn to Germany, America, or France to find an educational literature worthy of the name. We should be fortunate indeed, if each year gave us a volume or two at all worthy to succeed this first publication.

I suppose most people, even teachers, take it for granted that a book about education, in all or any of its branches, must be a very dry book; but whoever thinks this cannot have read Rousseau's Emile or Herbert Spencer's Education, not to mention many other works of less importance than these, but no less free from the reproach of dullness. Carlyle is never tired of asserting that the sole requisite for good speech is the having something to say. "L'art de parler," sings Béranger, "est le plus sot des arts." But is it so? What is the use of having something to say if your manner of saying it is so clumsy that nobody will listen to you? Occasionally, indeed, a work like Butler's Analogy, or Campbell on the Atonement, will contain so much original thought that it will attract fit readers, if few, in spite of the gravest defects in expression. But the function of most didactic writers is not to tell us what no one thought before, but to put clearly and well what is known to the few, and thus to bring it home to the many. This is especially true of writers on professional subjects. "He is a poor workman who can't talk about his trade," says the German proverb. And no doubt there are hundreds of able schoolmasters in this country who know their business, and, after a fashion, could talk about it; but, unless I am much mistaken, there are few indeed who could talk about it as Mr. Fitch does. He has a singularly easy and pleasing style; and this has enabled him to write a book a great part of which could hardly fail to interest the general reader, and will still more interest the professional student for whom it was written.

To my thinking, the book is all the better for being a course of lectures, and, as Mr. Fitch emphatically tells us, not a "manual of method." Not being hampered with any notion of completeness, he has been able to enlarge on matters which he especially cares for and pass over others which were less attractive. This surely is the right plan after all. When the writer is not interested himself, he has no chance of interesting his readers; and whatever we take in without interest is of no use except to "satisfy the examiner."

The great value of the book, then, according to my judgment of it, arises from its being interesting. Once interest your young teacher in the theoretical side of his calling, and, instead of allowing himself to become simply a piece of the school machinery, he will be conscious of all sorts of problems to get solved, will think of new experiments to try, and will see before him the possibility of constant improvement. Head-masters often complain that young men, when they become teachers, fancy that they have nothing to learn. This is a state of mind which is pretty sure to be shaken by such lectures as Mr. Fitch's. Young teachers (and old teachers too) may learn much from this volume, but they may gain from it a still greater good than any fresh information—they may get a notion how much there is to learn.

Now that an English university is following in the wake of the universities of the Continent, and providing lectures for teachers, it is to be hoped that we shall be prepared to take the experience of the Continent into account in educational matters, and not be for ever blessing "the narrow seas that keep it off." When we insist on going our own way, we commonly have to retrace our steps, and then bring up the rear on the high road. I am sorry, therefore, to see that Mr. Fitch affects insularity even in his use of terms. He tells us that the term "secondary school" in France, Germany, and Switzerland covers all the institutions which lie between the elementary school and the university (p. vi.), and then he divides schools below the university into "primary, secondary, and high schools." This new use of the word "secondary" is not only confusing, but, as it seems to me, quite unnecessary. Schools of the intermediate grade are easily spoken of by their usual name—middle schools. In one or two other matters I observe a departure from Continental usage. It is surely a pity to make fresh demands on a word which is overtasked already; yet Mr. Fitch speaks of "what we may call the 'real' elements of a school course" (p. 45); and the meaning he then gives this too common word is not at all in harmony with its use in Germany—a use which we also find in the early English writers on education. To pass from words to things, Mr. Fitch says "It is the result of modern experience that the head teacher in every school ought to be responsible for the choice of each of his own assistants" (p. 26). In this ex cathedra announcement Mr. Fitch entirely ignores the experience of the Continent.

I have said already that teachers will find this book extremely interesting; but perhaps those who are in search of "tips," either for the examination hall or for the school-room, will be somewhat disappointed, and will complain that it is "not a good book for writing out." The constant tendency of the teacher is to settle down contentedly with some mechanical method which use makes easy to him. This book is a long warning against this tendency in all its forms. "Teaching," says Mr. Fitch, "like all other work, becomes ennobled and beautified in exact proportion to the zeal and effort, sympathy and love, we put into it." It is this firm conviction that the teacher should for life have "love and thought companions of his way," which expresses itself in these lectures even in the discussion of the common work of the school-room. The subjects of the curriculum, as recommended by Mr. Fitch, are much as usual; but he would not limit the child's thoughts to the school-room and to the mental pabulum there provided. He sees the need which all children, rich and poor alike, have of books which are not school-books. "After all," says he, "it is the main business of a primary school, and, indeed, a chief part of the business of every school, to awaken a love of reading, and to give children pleasant associations with the thought of books" (pp. 84, 85). Here is a startling educational heresy! The orthodox doctrine has, as far as I know, never been formulated; but, judging from ordinary scholastic practice, I suppose it to be something of this kind: "It is a chief part of the business of every school to produce a distaste for reading, and to give children unpleasant associations with the thought of books." Against such orthodoxy as this Cambridge will, I trust, war like another Wittenberg; and I therefore heartily welcome Mr. Fitch's recommendation that there should be a lending library attached to every primary school, and that the selection of books should not be confined "to what are technically called 'good books.'" Mr. Fitch's advice on this subject is so excellent that I cannot resist quoting it:

"Do not forget that, beyond the region of mere information about these things [i.e., general knowledge], there is the whole domain of wonderland, of fancy, of romance, of poetry, of dreams and fairy tales. Do not let us 'think scorn of that pleasant land,' or suppose that all the fruit in the garden of the Lord grows on the tree of knowledge. Wonder, curiosity, the sense of the infinite, the love of what is vast and remote, of the strange and picturesque—all these things, it is true, are not knowledge in the school sense of the word. But they are capable in due time of being transformed into knowledge—nay, into something better than knowledge—into wisdom and insight and power" (pp. 86, 87).

In a journal not intended specially for schoolmasters, I refrain from any minute criticisms of Mr. Fitch's suggestions for the school-room. I could, no doubt, find points where I do not agree with him; and on these, were I writing anonymously, I might lay down the law in a dignified and impressive manner.

But with my name no one would care for a mere announcement of divergence, and discussion is a lengthy business. I will therefore content myself with stating my firm belief that this book will contribute in no small degree to the success of the university's new undertaking, an undertaking of which the object has been so well expressed by Mr. Fitch himself—"to make the work of honest learning and of noble teaching simpler, more effective, and more delightful to the coming generations."

R. H. QUICK.

NEW NOVELS.

Two Pretty Girls. By Mary A. Lewis. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Sydney. By Georgiana M. Craik. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Autobiography of Mark Rutherford, Dissenting Minister. (Trübner.)

David Broome, Artist. By Mrs. O'Reilly. In 3 vols. (Sampson Low.)

Two Pretty Girls is a slight, but very pleasantly readable, society-novel, describing a pair of well-contrasted young ladies, remotely connected with each other, who are invited to take up their abode with a dowager viscountess, kinswoman to both, who acts as their chaperon. Maude Loder, one of the pair, is an orphan heiress, refined and cultivated; Christine Ransome, the other, is the eldest of a family of girls who, with their mother, are vulgar in thoughts and ways, and have all the disadvantages of middle-class poverty to contend with. Christine is the best of the flock, but distinctly of a lower mental and moral type than Maude, with more sensuousness of nature and more selfishness of aim, but yet having capacities for good in her. The love-affairs of both young ladies are a little troubled at first, Maude by letting herself become attached to a worthless scamp, Christine by temptation to marry a very wealthy, but intensely vulgar, cousin; but both come all right in the end. There is, in truth, little attempt at making an elaborate story; but the various characters are fairly, though lightly, sketched in. Such types as Lady Loder, a good-humoured, tolerant, liberal, outspoken, and, withal, frankly selfish woman of society; Eustace Simmonds, the hard-up man about town; and Mrs. Ransome, the fat motherly vulgarian, though presented for the thousandth time, do not fatigue the reader, because they are freshened and individualised by a few distinguishing touches. There are many shrewd remarks, too, scattered throughout the volume, sometimes as expressions of the author's own opinions, but occasionally worked into the dialogue. An instance in point is where there is a discussion of the virtues of a good hostess, and one speaker observes that she needs a couple of vices also to be quite perfect—namely, to be greedy and fond of gossip, for then she will provide good dinners and plenty of small-talk. There is some careless and slipshod writing here and there; and, in particular, the disagreeable solecism "different to" is of frequent occurrence, and the more blameably because the author, by using that phrase correctly in one place to mean "different towards," shows that she does know better.

Sydney is one of its author's less elaborated stories, and is on a well-worn theme—that of a girl compelled by family ruin to abandon the hopes she had begun to form of a love-marriage, and to accept a comparatively elderly friend, whom she had known from her childhood, as her husband, though without feeling any stronger sentiment in his favour than respect and esteem. He, on his part, has been passionately attached to her for many years before declaring himself; and his exacting affection, making incessant calls on her time and attention, and leaving her scarcely a moment to herself, irritates her naturally cold and reserved temper into something like aversion. A change is brought about, however, by the intervention of his married sister, home on furlough from India, who, being a lively, shrewd, and managing woman, luckily sees how the land lies, and counsels a little wholesome neglect to make the lady, cloyed with too much sweetness, experience the pangs of jealousy instead. Accordingly, Mrs. Walkinshaw, with the sweetest air of doing for Sydney only what she would like best, entirely monopolises Mr. Loudoun, even to the extent of assuming the rights and privileges of mistress of the house, and of breaking in upon every interview of husband and wife, to carry off the former for some quite unnecessary purpose. This regimen produces the desired effect, though at the cost of a hearty dislike which Sydney takes to her too ingenious sister-in-law; and the cure is completed by a dangerous accident which consigns Mr. Loudoun for a time to a London hospital, where his wife obtains permission to assist in nursing him, and where, indeed, he still remains at the last page in the third volume, though nearly ready for liberation. The book is almost entirely a study of two or three characters, and has but a slight thread of story to connect them; but it is written with the ease and facility of a long-practised novelist, who knows her public and can be trusted not to weary it.

Mark Rutherford is a remarkable book which could not have been written at all till within the last very few years. It professes to be the autobiography of an ex-Nonconformist minister, published by a friend after his death, when, having passed from Congregationalism to Unitarianism, and thence into Agnosticism, he succumbs, after quitting the pastorate, still comparatively young, to the attacks of consumption. The distinguishing peculiarity of the book, marking it off from many not dissimilar narratives, real and fictitious, which have been published at intervals for many years past, is that the doubter is represented as never sure of his very doubts themselves, nor at all convinced that he is in the right path in his negations any more than he had been in his affirmations. The sceptic who is perfectly convinced that what he has left behind is erroneous, and that, at any rate, in so leaving it he has done well, even though he cannot say what lies before him, is a sufficiently frequent type in fact and in literature; but the sceptic haunted by an uneasy suspicion that the right may lie with his former beliefs, and yet quite unable, intellectually and morally, to project himself backwards into them even for a moment's hypothetical re-examination, is a child of the present day alone in the annals of human thought, so far as recorded. And it is the vivid portraiture of the working of such a mind, supersensitive, somewhat narrowly logical, but capable of much paralogism through lack of breadth in its major premisses, and fitted only to think about subjects, instead of thinking through them, which constitutes the merit of the small book before us. The mere external incidents of the biography, though told with simplicity and vigour, do not set before us the image of lower-middle-class Nonconformity with any novelty of fact or wording (except in the sketch of the curious intellectual deadness of a small rural Unitarian congregation). But the workings of the ideal narrator's mind are bared for us with considerable skill; and every now and then we come upon an aphorism in which some point of morals or religion is brought into salient relief in a few terse and weighty words. The one stage of Mark Rutherford's progression which is left somewhat obscure is his passage out of Congregationalism into Unitarianism, perhaps because this process is so extremely common in all the older Calvinistic societies as to be taken for granted; but the narrative would gain in clearness and consistency if this part had been expanded. We do get the key-note, indeed, by learning that it was the pantheism of Wordsworth's "Lyrical Ballads" which first put a new set of religious ideas into the young student's mind; but more is needed to show their development. It is a highly suggestive booklet, and not in the least intended for the ordinary novel-reader.

Mrs. O'Reilly is not at her best in her new story. In the first place, she does not really carry out the promise of the title-page. The hero is, indeed, an artist by profession; and a picture of a Kentish woodland scene, which he paints early in the story, and which lays the foundation of his fortunes, is often mentioned. But, beyond this one incident, there is nothing to remind us of his calling, for he does not display anything of the artistic temperament; nor would it make the smallest difference to the plot if he had been described as a surgeon, a journalist, or a half-pay officer. His actual function in the book is to show the influence of a thoroughly religious and unworldly character over persons of a coarser and more selfish type, who are won over, first to unwilling admiration, and then to amendment. Notably is this the case with Norman Drake, a cousin who had betrayed and ruined him early in life, taking from him at one stroke his betrothed and his fortune, but not learning till many years later that his agency in the matter had been known to his victim almost from the first, without having moved him for an instant to revenge, or even to hostility. The artist consoles himself with another young lady, to whom he has borne a quasi-fatherly and tutorial relation from her childhood. But, contrary to the usual rule where this situation occurs in novels, he is quite unaware of his own affections till roused by her dangerous illness to recognise what her loss would be to him; whereas she is fully alive to her feelings on the subject, and rejects two other eligible suitors for his sake. There is an underplot of a scheme of revenge carried out against Drake by the sister of his first wife by a secret marriage; who owes him a grudge on her husband's account, and kidnaps the child of that marriage, with the view of training the boy as a thief in order to disgrace his father; but David Broome's influence brings all that right too. It seems a grave fault, however, in smoothing everything at the end, that as Lilian, the wife of the wicked cousin, is represented as a haughty woman with a passionate temper, long jarring with her husband's morbid and bitter disposition, the discovery that she had originally been sought by him for her money alone, that she had been deceived by a forged letter charging this very motive on Broome, and that Drake did not know, when he married her, nor for years after, that he was not committing bigamy, does not entirely destroy her affection by making respect impossible. On the contrary, they at once begin to live like a pair of turtle-doves—a transformation more impossible than the conversion of Ebenezer Scrooge in the Christmas Carol.

RICHARD F. LITLEDALE.

RECENT SCHOOL BOOKS.

"OBRUIMUR NUMERO" must be our excuse for delay and brevity in noticing the more important volumes of the pile now lying before us. The production of school-books is in these days so rapid that it is by no means easy for a reviewer to keep pace with it. Many, no doubt, are worthless, and may well be left unnoticed. But, unfortunately, it takes time to discover their worthlessness; and this time has to be deducted from the time which we would gladly devote to the examination of works possessing real merit. Several such have come before us lately—books which we are really sorry to dismiss with such cursory notice as it is alone possible for us to give them.

Among the recent volumes in the series of "School Class Books" (Macmillan) we notice, first, a very attractive-looking edition, by Prof. Tyrrell, of the Miles Gloriosus of Plautus. As an introduction to the study of Plautus this book should prove invaluable. The labours of Ritschl, Langen, Brix, and others are here duly recorded and utilised; and the many difficult questions of early Latin diction and prosody are discussed with quite sufficient completeness, yet within a reasonable compass. Besides all this (which, however, would of itself entitle the edition to rank among the most valuable of recent school-books), Prof. Tyrrell claims, with justice, to have supplied scholars and critics with such an adequate apparatus criticus, as has hitherto only existed in the edition of Ritschl, long since out of print.

Prof. Mayor contributes to the same series Book III. of Pliny's Letters. Advanced students will find this book only less valuable than the author's well-known editions of Juvenal. It furnishes not only a complete digest of all that is most worthy of preservation in the lengthy commentaries of many earlier editors, but also a mass of information—the result of Prof. Mayor's own extensive reading and research—on points of language and antiquities, as to which the teaching of lexicons and manuals has often been imperfect, and not seldom demonstrably untrue. Yet it is impossible to consider the volume as an ideal school-book. The commentary, though a marvel of compression, is still far too long, and, in consequence of its very compression, far too hard to be of service to the ordinary school-boy.

Less than forty pages of text to more than 200 pages of notes is, indeed, "but one halfpenny-worth of bread" to an "intolerable deal of sack." The "sack," no doubt, is excellent sack, and better, perhaps, in its kind, than the "bread" which it is intended to wash down. But, after all, not sack, but bread, should be the staple of a beginner's educational diet.

The next volume which we notice in this series, The Story of Achilles, by Messrs. Pratt and Leaf, strikes us as distinctly better in conception than in execution. It is a selection from the Iliad, comprising Books I., IX., XI., and XVI. to XXIV. inclusive, with Introduction and Notes. The melancholy circumstances under which the book has been produced (see Preface, p. viii.) make us unwilling to judge harshly of its shortcomings. But truth must be told; and, having expected much from the reputation of the authors, we are disappointed in the finish and accuracy of their work. We encounter in it small mistakes of various kinds, which a more careful revision by the surviving editor ought to have removed before the book was published. Thus, in the note on ix. 472 there is a blunder as to the position of Phoenix's θάλαμος—really, no doubt, like that of Telemachus, in the αὐλή, but placed by Messrs. Pratt and Leaf "at the other extremity of the μέγαρον"—which makes the whole narrative unintelligible. Again it is quite untrue to say (Introduction, p. xiv.) that the two clauses of i. 79, ὅς μέγα πάντων Ἀργείων κρατεῖ καὶ οἱ πεύονται Ἀχαιοί, would "in Attic Greek both be subordinated by a relative." There are a very few such instances of a doubled relative in Attic authors—we remember two in Demosth. in Phœnipp. But the rule in Attic Greek, no less than in Homeric (see Goodwin, Elem. Gr. Gr., § 186), is, not to repeat a relative, but either to understand it or to substitute for it a personal or demonstrative pronoun in the latter member of the sentence. And why should it be said that the line ix. 320 "seems quite out of place here"? "What profits valour, if it neither secures us against death, nor procures us glory?" Paraphrasing the sentence thus, we obtain an argument, which seems neither unmeaning nor inappropriate to the context. Still, in spite of a superfluity of such blemishes, there are the makings of an excellent school-book in this volume. We are reminded, by its faults and merits, of Wordsworth's criticism of The Christian Year: "It is very good, so good that, if it were mine, I would write it all over again."

Two more volumes of this series deserve a word of notice, Ovid's Fasti, by G. H. Hallam, and Xenophon's Anabasis, by Profs. Goodwin and White (of Harvard). The first is a fair useful school edition, but in no sense an advance on existing commentaries. Prefixed to it is a plan of Central Rome in the time of Ovid, in which the Regia and Temple of Vesta are strangely misplaced, so that the northern wall of the Regia follows the line of the Basilica Julia and the Temple of Castor! A reference to easily accessible photographs, or to the well-known description of the Forum in Statius (Sil. i.), to say nothing of a visit to the place, would have saved Mr. Hallam from this mistake. The Anabasis is edited with great care and completeness; but we should have been more thankful to Profs. Goodwin and White if they had chosen for annotation some part of Greek literature which has not, like the Anabasis, been over-edited already.

Such a complaint cannot be made against Mr. Taylor's Stories from Ovid: Hexameter Verse (Rivington). The Metamorphoses—a stock subject in schools a generation or two ago—have of late been somewhat unduly neglected. Certainly the hexameters of Ovid will not bear comparison with those of Vergil. Yet Mr. Taylor has constructed from them a very readable and teachable little book. Each tale is neatly analysed, and illustrated by some appropriate motto from an English classic—Shakspeare, Spenser, and so forth. The notes are very brief, but very much to the point; and the whole book shows itself clearly as the production of a tasteful scholar and an experienced teacher.

Mr. Merry's edition of the Clouds has been favourably noticed in a former number of the ACADEMY. He now follows it up with the Acharnians (Clarendon Press), and his new volume seems in all ways equal to its predecessor. A glossary (pp. 108-10) of the strange dialectic forms, Boeotian and Megarian, to be found in this play will be helpful to the beginner, and not without interest for more advanced students.

In the series of "Elementary Classics" (Macmillan) three new volumes present themselves. Mr. Kynastou's Greek Elegiac Poets seems rather out of place in a series bearing such a title. The surviving fragments of Greek elegy may, perhaps, by a stretch of language, be called "classics," but they are certainly ill-described as "elementary." The book might be used with good results in upper forms at schools, but it would be ludicrous to attempt it with beginners. On the other hand, Mr. Macaulay's Hannibalian War, and Mr. Colbeck's Caesar—Scenes from Books V. and VI., seem to us precisely to hit the mark at which this series should aim. The former of these little books is not a mere cento of extracts; it is an actual rewriting in simpler form of Livy's narrative. The experiment may be thought a bold one, but the result is, in our judgment, a complete success. Mr. Colbeck's Caesar is prefaced by a very lively and interesting Introduction, illustrated by sketches (see especially at p. xxx., "A Gaulish Horseman") which ought to rouse the dullest learner's imagination. We think that writers of very elementary school-books would do well to make more use of this simple device for interesting boys in their lessons. A picture will often teach more than pages of letterpress.

We have seen nothing in the way of plain texts of Latin authors better than the Caesar and Vergil lately issued by Messrs. Rivington. Each is beautifully printed in a clear large type on good paper, yet the price is very low, and the volumes themselves are small and portable. Kraner's edition has been chosen as the basis for the text of Caesar, Ribbeck's for that of Vergil.

Among the many Latin exercise books and elementary manuals which have reached us, we are inclined to single out Mr. Moir's Continuous Latin Prose (Edinburgh: J. Thin) as, on the whole, the best. Its plan reminds us, to some extent, of Mr. Sidgwick's well-known Greek Prose Composition (Rivingtons). The exercises are lively and seem very suitable; many of them are drawn from what we may call, briefly, the "Melvinian cycle"—i.e., the mass of adapted anecdotes, from all kinds of sources, which have been introduced into so many schools by disciples of the late Dr. Melvin. The Beginner's Latin Exercise Book, by C. Sherwill Dawe (Rivingtons), seems to us to teach very little, and to waste an unconscionable amount of time in teaching it. Nor do we think First Readings in Latin, by G. F. Sykes (Isbister), at all successful either in plan or execution. Passages of Latin are given, with numerical references to vocabularies or rules of syntax under nearly every word. We can imagine no method better calculated to encourage that mechanical style of working which makes a boy the slave of his grammar and dictionary, and leaves him helpless whenever these assistances are for the time removed. The "syntax rules" are drawn up in a slovenly manner—e.g., "the nominative is the naming case; hence, (1) the nominative marks the subject, (2) the nominative marks words that are enlargements of the subject or complements of the predicate." This is the opening sentence, and it seems to us both obscure and illogical. A boy who does not know what a nominative is will gain little by hearing that "it marks an enlargement of the subject." And from the statement that the nominative is the "naming case" (which is either an identical proposition or an unmeaning one), we can no more infer that it marks the subject than that it marks the object. The word "hence" is entirely inappropriate. Gradatim, by H. R. Heatley and H. N. Kingdon, helps boys cleverly over their first difficulties in Latin translation, but the Latin of the exercises given is more unlike that of classical authors than it need be. "Pro tua utilitate" (= "for your good") seems odd; and surely no Roman would have called a doctor's patients his "clientes." First Steps in Latin, by F. Ritchie, is written with great care, and its method is ingenious; indeed, we should be inclined to say that it is rather too ingenious, aiming by a tour de force to teach Latin as an "exact science." First Steps and Gradatim are both published by Messrs. Rivington. Dr. Schmitz's Introductory Latin Grammar (Collins) seems but a poor performance. It is startling to be told (§ 17, 4, 5) that in all declensions "the acc. sing. always ends in m, the acc. pl. always in s, preceded by a long vowel." The learner will be puzzled to reconcile this statement with the rule for neuter nouns given shortly after, or with several phenomena which will meet him in the inflection of nouns borrowed from the Greek.

We have received also two volumes of extracts for unseen translation: Meletemata (Latin only), a rather portly work by Mr. P. J. F. Gantillon (Oxford: Thornton), and Anglice Reddenda (Latin and Greek), by C. S. Jerram (Clarendon Press). From the Pitt Press we have Xenophon's Anabasis VII., by A. Pretor; from Messrs. Longmans, Græcæ Reddenda, by C. S. Jerram: "Miscellaneous Sentences for Translation into Greek Prose" is the second title, and they are very miscellaneous indeed—e.g., "33. Not all the Athenians understood the wisdom of Socrates. 34. A large black dog has bitten my right foot." Lastly, from the same publishers, comes another volume of White's grammar-school texts: Aeneid, Book X.—a very fair specimen of the series, which has been already described in a former number of the ACADEMY.

SONNET.

WHERE LIES THE LAND.—Wordsworth.

"WHERE lies the land of which thy soul would know?"

Beyond the wearied wold, the songless dell,
The purple grape and golden asphodel,
Beyond the zone where streams baptismal flow.
"Where lies the land to which thy soul would go?"
There where the unvexed senses darkling dwell,
Where never haunting, hurrying footfall fell,
Where toil is not, nor builded hope laid low.

Rest! Rest! to thy hushed realm how one by one Old Earth's tired Ages steal away and weep,
Forgotten or unknown, long duty done.

Ah God! when Death in seeming peace shall steep
Life's loud turmoil, and Time his race hath run—
Shall heart of man at length find rest and sleep?

T. HALL CAINE.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE are informed on the best authority that in a policy of assurance taken out by the late Lord Beaconsfield in the year 1824 he there described himself as born in the parish of St. Mary Axe. As the policy still exists, and the entry is in his own handwriting, this may be regarded as conclusive evidence of his real place of birth, in spite of his statement in old age to Lord Barrington.

DR. W. W. HUNTERS long-promised Imperial Gazetteer of India will be issued to the public by Messrs. Triebner in the early part of next week.

MR. HENRY SWEET is writing a new English Grammar for Schools, in which the phonology of our language is more fully dealt with than is usual in books of the class, and the subject generally is treated without many of the customary conventional notions.

DR. EMIL HOLUB's Seven Years in South Africa has proved no less a success on the Continent than in this country. In Germany it has sold to the number of 12,000 copies; the Czech edition also went off well; and a translation into Russian is now called for. Before starting on his new voyage, Dr. Holub hopes to pay a visit to London, in order to avail himself of Sir J. Hooker's offer to go through his collection of South-African plants.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN AND CO. have in the press an autobiography of Mr. William Tayler, the well-known late Commissioner of Patna, under the title of Thirty-eight Years in India, from Juganath to the Himalaya Mountains. It will be accompanied by one hundred illustrations, reproduced by Mr. Tayler from original sketches taken by himself on the spot. The first volume may be expected very shortly.

WE have been much pleased with the response which our suggestion of a cheap one-volume edition of the poet Browning's works has called forth from the provincial press and private correspondents. We have reason to hope that in due time the edition so much desired will appear.

WE hear that Mrs. Holman Hunt is writing a new story.

MESSRS. C. KEGAN PAUL AND CO. will issue immediately A Popular History of Ancient Egypt, by Mr. Erasmus Wilson. The volume will contain some chromo-lithographs and numerous wood-cuts.

MR. E. WRIGGLESWORTH will at an early date have ready for the press an important local work, entitled Beverley's Roll of Honour. It will consist of a series of carefully prepared notices of the worthies of Beverley.

MESSRS. TRÜBNER announce for publication in the beginning of next month a somewhat startling book, with the title of The Occult World, by Mr. A. P. Sinnett. This purports to be a record of personal experiences among the professors of "the occult science" in Eastern countries. The author seeks to show that the powers of these professors, though apparently miraculous, rest upon a strictly natural basis, being founded upon "a higher plane of knowledge concerning the laws of nature than that which European science has yet reached."

Love, Honour, and Obey is the title of a new story by Miss Iza Duffus Hardy, to be shortly published by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett in three volumes.

THE third Didot sale will take place in Paris on June 9 to 15. As upon the two former occasions, amateurs in London are allowed beforehand an opportunity of examining the MSS., which will be on view at 15 Piccadilly on Monday next, the 23rd inst., and the two following days. We have received from Mr. Quaritch an invitation to inspect them.

MR. J. W. SAVILL, who gives his address at "Ye Olde Booke and Herbe Shoppe," Dunmow, Essex, proposes to publish by subscription Valuable Recipes for Neat Stock, Horses, Sheep, Pigs, and Dogs, being the recipe-book of Mr. Murrell, a well-known Norfolkshire farrier, originally published in 1823.

Southwark and its Story: an Historical Sketch of the Borough and its Celebrities, by Mrs. E. Boger, will shortly appear.

MR. WILLIAM ANDREWS will contribute to an early issue of Hand and Heart a paper on Matthias Barr, the well-known author of Little Willie, and other Poems. A portrait of Mr. Barr will accompany the article.

A PAPER on Thomas Carlyle: his Life and Work, recently read by Mr. William Martin before the members of the Glasgow Carlyle Club, is now in the press, and will shortly be published by Messrs. Wilson and McCormick, of Glasgow.

MR. W. F. POOLE, of Chicago, reports that the work for the new edition of his Index to Periodical Literature is "coming on splendidly." The matter is all in, has been revised, and about 1,200 pages of the copy for the printer have been arranged. Mr. Fletcher, at Hartford, is arranging the slips, and sends the sheets to Mr. Poole for revision. After this is finished, the printing will probably take a year. The matter will make a royal octavo volume of 1,200 pages, and will be brought down to January 1880.

MR. H. S. FOXWELL, M.A., has been elected to the Chair of Political Economy in University College, in succession to Prof. Stanley Jeyons. According to the usual custom, we believe, the Senate recommended two candidates to the Council—Mr. Foxwell and Mr. F. Y. Edgeworth, M.A.

PROF. STEADMAN ALDIS, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, has in contemplation a novel undertaking, to which we wish all success. In conjunction with his wife, he proposes to form a "women's reading party" this summer at some quiet bathing-place on the coast of Normandy.

PROF. F. A. MARCH, of Lafayette College, read an interesting paper on "The Point of View in King Lear" before the American Philological Association at its last meeting, and has printed an abstract of his paper in the Society's Proceedings in "phonetic" type. He has also written an able essay on "English Orthography: what can we do about it?" in Good Literature of April 23 last. About two hundred papers, daily and weekly, in the United States have adopted spelling-reform more or less thoroughly in their issues.

DR. ALBERT BATTANDIER writes to us from Frascati that he has discovered in the library of the Cardinal Duke of York, the last recognised descendant of the Stuarts, a very beautiful vellum MS. in quarto, whose title in golden letters is: The Variation of the Armes and Badges of the Kings of England from the Tyme of Brute until this present yeare of our Lord One thousand six hundred ninety and seven. It is dedicated "to His Royal Highness James, Prince of Wales, &c.," by "James Tyrry, Athlone Herald of Arms." It contains forty-seven illuminations, picked out with that brilliant gold of which the secret was thought to be lost until recently discovered in the Benedictine Monastery of Monte Cassino.

In reference to our notice of the late Earl of Beaconsfield's connexion with the Representative a correspondent writes:—

"About forty-four years ago (1837) I was invited by Mr. Thomas Cope, 20 Buckingham Street, Strand, to see a bound volume of the Representative, who informed me, if I remember right, that he was the 'printer,' and that 'Young D'Issraeli' was the 'sub-editor.' He also stated that the 'plant' was supplied by Mr. William Clowes, of Northumberland Court, Strand, and was machined by that firm, but that the composition was got up in Great George Street, Westminster—I think he said at the residence of the late Sir Matthew Wood. My father was also engaged on the Representative; it was this circumstance that called forth the invitation."

MADAME VON GERVINUS, the widow of the great Shakspeare scholar and historian, Gervinus, has sent the photographic portrait of her late husband to Mr. Furnivall, in acknowledgment of that gentleman's dedication of his late edition of the facsimile of the Roberts Quarto (1600) of The Merchant of Venice "To the memory of Gervinus, to Delius, and all other German scholars and students who've loved and studied Shakspeare."

THE registers of St. Leonard's, Shoreditch (in which parish is "Curtain" Road, which still preserves the memory of the theatre), contain many entries which show the influence of Shakspeare's dramas—e.g.,

"Troilus Skinner, baptised 28 Aug., 1591."

"Juliet Burbege, daughter of Richard, bap. 12 Sep., 1603."

"[Richard Burbadge, player, was buried 16 March, 1618.]"

"Coriolanus Hawke, bap. 22 Oct., 1591."

"Desdemonye Bishop, buried 1609."

The name of Bassano is of common occurrence in the registers. Scipio Bassano resided at Hoxton.

PROF. G. CAVALUCCI, of the Florence Academy of Fine Arts, will shortly publish (Florence: Giovanni Cirri) a volume entitled S. Maria del Fiore, Storia documentata dall'Origine fino ai nostri Giorni.

At the public meeting of the Académie Royale de Belgique on May 11, M. Henri Conscience, as Directeur de la Classe des Lettres, delivered an address upon the History and Tendencies of Flemish Literature, which is reported at length in the Athenaeum Belge. The illustrious author, who is said never before to have spoken in public in French, finished with the following quotation:—

"Flamands, Wallons,
Ce ne sont là que des prénoms;
Belge est notre nom de famille."

Advantage was gracefully taken of the occasion by the Minister of the Interior to announce the promotion of M. Conscience to the rank of grand officer of the Order of Leopold.

L'ABBÉ FRANZ LISZT has just been elected corresponding member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts in the section of music, in the place of the late M. Gaspari. His two competitors were Johannes Brahms, of Vienna, and Arrigo Boito, of Milan.

THE quinquennial prize of the Académie Royale de Belgique in the department of moral and political science has been awarded to M. Emile de Laveleye, who is at present in Paris advocating vigorously the cause of bimetalism.

THE Rassegna Settimanale for May 8 contains a review of Prof. Sellar's Roman Poets of the Republic, and also a London letter signed H. Z., with notices of Mr. Leader's Mary Queen of Scots in Captivity and Mr. Laurence Oliphant's Land of Gilead.

M. FR. LENORMANT, we are glad to learn, has been elected a member of the French Institute.

HERR PERTHES, of Gotha, is about to bring out a German translation by Hans Tharau of Mr. Augustus C. Hare's biography of the Countess von Bunsen.

THE same publisher announces as forthcoming Johannes a Lasco: ein Beitrag zur Reformationsgeschichte Polens, Deutschlands und Englands, by Hermann Dalton; and a biography of the late Johannes Huber, by Eberhard Zirngiebl.

FROM July 1, 1879, to December 31, 1880 German theatrical companies gave 1,039 representations of plays by Shakspeare. Twenty-seven plays were put upon the stage, of which Hamlet was represented 139 times; Othello, 113; Merchant of Venice, 104; Taming of the Shrew, 95.

WE gather from the Athenaeum Belge that the work of bibliography is being busily pursued in Belgium. Six parts, each consisting of one hundred pages, have now appeared of Prof. Ferdinand Vanderhaegen's Bibliotheca Belgica, which is intended to furnish a complete list of all books printed in the Low Countries during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, and also a list of the principal books published since 1600 either in the Low Countries, or by natives of the Low Countries residing abroad, or about the Low Countries by others. There has also just appeared the fifth and last part of the Essai de Bibliographie yproise, by M. Alphonse Diegerick, the archivist and assistant librarian of the town of Ypres. This work, consisting of four hundred pages in all, has taken its industrious author eight years to complete. It gives an account of 302 publications relating to Ypres between 1750 and 1834.

A WORK on marriage ceremonies, particularly those of Russia, by N. F. Sumtsov, has just appeared at Kharkov. Besides a description of the marriage ceremonies prevalent in many parts of Russia, it contains the nuptial songs which form an interesting feature on such occasions. The marriage customs of the ancient Slavs and Germans are also compared with the modern survivals in order to explain the symbolic significance of the latter.

DR. R. BUDDENSIEG reviews favourably in the Theologisches Literaturblatt of Leipzig, April 29, Mr. F. D. Matthew's edition of Wiclif's English Works hitherto unprinted (Early-English Text Society, 1880). In the Revue des Deux-Mondes of May 1 is an article by A. Mézières maintaining the unity and Shaksperian origin of the trilogy of Henry VI., against "lo savant M. Furnivall," &c. It is a subject to be settled on English ground. A foreigner cannot appreciate, in a joint-play, the differences of style which to an Englishman mean so much.

AT the Congrès des Sociétés savantes held at the Sorbonne last month, the most interesting event was a paper read by M. Combe upon "The Interview at Bayonne," which sought to prove, from documents discovered at Simancas, that Catherine de Médicis had conceived the plan for the St. Bartholomew Massacre as early as 1565.

WE learn from the Revue Critique that père Ingold is publishing a sort of appendix to his "Bibliothèque oratorienne," under the title of "Petite Bibliothèque oratorienne." The first of the series, which has just appeared, is Les Miracles du cardinal P. de Bérulle, Instituteur des Curmélites de France, Fondateur de l'Oratoire, d'après des Documents inédits.

M. E. SENART has in the press a second and revised edition (with an Index) of his essay on the legend of Buddha.

Few books could be more welcome than the "Eversley Edition" of Charles Kingsley's novels now being issued by Messrs. Macmillan. Many names, doubtless, will live longer in English literature than that of Kingsley. He had his weaknesses and he had his faults. But by the present generation of grown men, at least, no writer of novels is regarded with warmer feelings of personal affection. Westward

Ho! though later in date than his political romances, has been deservedly chosen to lead the series. No boy's education is complete if he has not read Westward Ho! and admired it. The handsome paper and binding raise in our minds a feeling almost of regret that we cannot lend it as we would. Westward Ho!—which we may claim to have read ourselves in the old house of Burrough—ought to be well thumbed.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

WE have received the following:—The Public Life of the Earl of Beaconsfield, by Francis Hitchman, New and Revised Edition (Sampson Low); Roswell and Johnson: their Companions and Contemporaries, by J. F. Waller (Cassells); Great Citizens of France—Victor Hugo: his Life and Works, from the French of Alfred Barbou, by Francis A. Shaw (Chicago: S. C. Griggs; London: Trübner); William Morley Punshon, Preacher and Orator (F. E. Longley); Mensuration made Easy; or, the Decimal System for the Million, with its Application to the Daily Employments of the Artisan and Mechanic, by Charles Hoare, Thirteenth Edition (Biffingham Wilson); A Reasonable Faith the Want of the Age (Williams and Norgate); Church Patronage and Church Discipline: a Proposal of Reform, by the Rev. John Macnaught (James Nisbet); From the Pew to the Pulpit: Addressed to the Saints by a Sinner (Elliot Stock); Our Future Policy in the Transvaal: a Defence of the Boers, by Dr. G. B. Clark (William Ridgway); The Double Standard, by Henry H. Gibbs, with an Introduction by Henry R. Grenfell (Biffingham Wilson); Irish Grievances, by Thomas Hankey (Biffingham Wilson); Jesus of Nazareth and His Contemporaries (Williams and Norgate); The Elementary Education Code: Alterations suggested by George Gladstone (H. J. Infield); The Irish Land Bill: Speech delivered by the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone on introducing the Bill (National Press Agency); Justice of Procedure in the Free Assembly: a Reply to Mr. Taylor Innes by Sir Henry Moncreiff (Edinburgh: John MacLaren and Son); Sanitary Assurance: a Lecture at the London Institution, by Prof. F. de Chaumont (Published by the Sanitary Assurance Association); Physical Science Lectures: the Starlit Sky, by Thomas Dunman (Griffith and Farran); &c., &c.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL JOTTINGS.

Queen's College, Oxford: May 16, 1881.

The following notes, which are connected only by the common tie of archaeology, may have some interest for the readers of the ACADEMY.

Just before I left Beyrût I paid a visit to M. Perthier's collection of antiquities, principally in order to see the Babylonian cylinders and Assyrian seals which he intends to publish shortly. I found that he had recently acquired a very interesting monument discovered at Amrit, the ancient Marathus. This is a stone stele, with the figure of a warrior in relief upon it, and in a new style of Phœnician art. The art is no longer an amalgamation of Egyptian and Assyrian, but of Egyptian and Hittite, the figure, for example, standing on two hills, which are delineated in precisely the same fashion as in the sculptures of Boghaz Keui. Considering that the Hittite territory extended as far south as Homs, where their southern capital has lately been found by Lieut. Conder in Lake Kades, and that Amrit is to the north-west of this, we might have expected to find that the imitative Phœnicians in this region had come under the influence of Hittite art. The stele abundantly confirms the expectation,

Just after leaving Beyrût I was informed by Dr. Hartmann, the dragoman of the German consulate there, that a cuneiform inscription was discovered three or four years ago on the northern bank of the Dog River by the workmen employed in constructing an aqueduct. The stone containing the inscription was cut out of the rock and carried off by the 'Amir of Sidnâ' or Sednâya before it could be seen by any Assyrian scholar; and, as the 'Amir believes that it possesses magical virtues, it is now kept jealously concealed from the scrutiny of Europeans. Dr. Hartmann further informed me that, above the place where this inscription was found, another inscription containing about ten cuneiform characters still exists on the face of the cliff. I can only regret that the information came too late for me to profit by it. I may add, however, that when visiting the Dog River I discovered the remains of an Assyrian monument on the southern side of the river which had not been noticed before. It stands among the well-known Egyptian and Assyrian figures, but its dilapidated condition has prevented it from being observed previously. I fancy it must be the oldest of the Assyrian monuments in this place—perhaps a memorial of Tiglath-Pileser I.

At Smyrna, the French consul was kind enough to show me his collection of Babylonian cylinders which he had obtained at Bagdad. Two of them describe their owners as worshipping "the gods of the West," or "Phœnicia." Mr. Dennis also possesses a fine cylinder with the image of the Asiatic goddess upon it, and the legend: "Ilu-su-illat-su, the scribe, the son of Sin-rimeni, worshipper of the goddess Nin-si-anna." At Smyrna I was further shown a curious object of red stone, carved into the likeness of a griffin's head, which had come from Kappadokia. It has upon it a number of cuneiform characters which resemble those of the Protomedic syllabary, but are really undecipherable. Unless, therefore, they should turn out to belong to a hitherto unknown system of cuneiform writing used in Kappadokia, they must be regarded as an attempt to imitate cuneiform characters for the purpose of ornamentation made by someone who was unacquainted with their meaning. The latter supposition is the more probable, as the heads of the wedges in the first two lines face the opposite way to those in the second two.

Turning now to Greece, I would say a word or two about the objects in the Schliemann Museum at Athens, which I visited again in company with Dr. Schliemann and M. Kumanudes. There I was struck by the close resemblance between the "owl-headed" vases of Troy and the terra-cotta images of the goddess found at Mykenae, Tiryns, and Nauplia. It was a resemblance I had never noticed before; but when once observed it is very exact. Even the "wings" extending from the sides of the vases re-appear in the terra-cotta figures. The mouth is wanting in both; both present us with the same eyes and nose, and the same polos on the top of the head. The curved ornament in front of some of the heads of the terra-cotta images is like the horn in front of the cap or tiara on a head carved out of a shell, which was discovered at Mykenae. The tiara, it may be observed, has three folds, like the caps represented on the gems and rings. The latter have now been cleaned, so that the designs upon them can be seen much more clearly than was formerly possible. I find that the famous design upon the ring, which represents a goddess seated beneath a palm-tree, with three worshippers in front, is not so slavish an imitation of archaic Babylonian art as I had thought. It is archaic Babylonian art that has passed to Greece through Asia Minor. The double-headed (or rather quadruple-headed) axe which occupies the middle of it, and so distinctly points us to Asia Minor, is identical in shape with the axes placed between the horns of cows' heads in gold-leaf found in the tombs. The shoes worn by the figures have turned-up ends, which again indicate Asia Minor. Among the objects in gold-leaf is a sitting figure of the Asiatic goddess, which bears a striking likeness to the Niobe of Mount Sipylus. A sort of bar is represented between the legs, explaining the enigmatical groove between the legs of the Niobe. One of the most interesting results of the cleaning the metallic objects have undergone is the discovery of a lion-hunt, represented in gold inlaid upon the silver blade of a dagger discovered in the fourth tomb. An account of it is given in the Appendix to the American edition of Dr. Schliemann's Mycenae; and M. Kumanudes, the Director of the Museum, has written a memoir upon it in the Athenion. The figures of the huntsmen are, on the whole, in the Egyptian style; but their dress is that of the figures on the rings, and the last has a shield of the same shape as that portrayed on one of the rings. The shield of the first, which consists of two circles, the upper smaller than the lower, is found on one of the gems. One of the cups from the fourth tomb also turns out to be of silver inlaid with gold—an art which was of Egyptian origin. The curious ornament above the horse on the second tombstone from Mycenae reminded me much of the Hittite determinative of divinity and winged solar disk.

The objects discovered in the tholos of Menidi, which I visited in company with Dr. Schliemann, are not yet visible to the public; but as I was anxious to see them, more especially the glass plaque with two butterflies upon it (Das Kuppelgrab bei Menidi, pl. iv., 12), M. Kumanudes kindly let me have a look at them. Among them is a gem with the representation of a deer attacked by a lion, and a character below, which has the form of the Kypriote ti.

The museum further possesses a small foot and double-headed axe made of a peculiar green stone, which evidently formed part of a figure, and came from Nauplia. The axe reminds us of Zeus Labrandeus, and the foot is shod with a boot with a turned-up toe.

While I was staying at Orkhomenos with Dr. Schliemann we made excursions to Kopae (Topolia), Abae, and Khaeroneia. At Kopae we found that an inscription of the Byzantine period had been recently discovered, in the first line of which were the words πόλις Κωπαίων. Near Abae, to the south-west of the supposed remains of the Temple of Apollo, we came across an extensive necropolis, which must have belonged either to Abae or to the neighbouring town of Hyampolis, and which the peasants had begun to rifle. Fragments of vases and bronze were lying scattered on all sides; and a good many vases in a perfect state, some of them of a very peculiar shape, had been unearthed.

At Orkhomenos I amused myself with tracing the walls of the Greek acropolis, considerable remains of which still exist among the rocks on the north side; and in one of my walks I believe I discovered the site of the Temple of Heraklēs, near the springs of the Melas. Beyond the acropolis, on the northern slope of Mount Akontion, and on the way to Talanda, I came across the remains of other walls, besides the foundations of a square fortress just below the Macedonian fortress which crowns the cliff. Farther west, where a great cleft breaks the line of the mountain, I discovered an ancient wall, made of moderately sized stones, and ten feet broad, which runs from the top of the mountain to a ridge of rock that rises below it, and from this again to the edge of the cliff which overlooks the marsh. The wall was built without cement, and is of rude construction. I fancy, therefore, that it must be a work of the prae-Hellenic Minyans, and have served to defend the territory of Orkhomenos from the attacks of its enemies on the north-west.

A. H. SAYCE.

PROF. STRAKOSCH'S RECITALS.

HERR STRAKOSCH is worth hearing, and the audience (though small) which met to hear him at the Steinway Hall on the night of Friday, May 13, seemed to think so. It is a mistake to suppose that it is difficult to understand Shakspeare in German. We believe that an Englishman with a fair knowledge of the German language would find it easier to understand the great Englishman rendered into German than ordinary German conversation. The dramas of Shakspeare have become so much a part of our inner as of our national life that, if Herr Strakosch were to read through the play of Hamlet in Polish, we should almost have been able to follow him, so dramatic is his rendering. And in spite of the saying about comparisons, we trust we may remark without offence that the difference between Herr Strakosch and Mr. Brandram is the difference between the recitation of an actor and of one who has never played behind the footlights. The play of Hamlet was well chosen, both for the reader and his audience. Hamlet is a favourite play with Germans. They are proud to think themselves gifted with the philosophy, eloquence, and resolution of the unhappy Prince of Denmark, while they feel conscious that on the stage of the world's history they, unlike him, have entered and possessed the kingdom.

The extracts which were read from Hamlet showed the young Prince in his interviews with Horatio, with the ghost of his father, with Ophelia, and with his mother in the fourth scene of the third act. We have always regretted that Shakspeare has not given us an interview between Hamlet and Ophelia before the Prince learnt the secret of his father's shameful murder. It would have been somewhat different from that described in the first scene of the third act. Herr Strakosch read that difficult scene with dignity, and without exaggerating Hamlet's brutal vein. But perhaps it was in Hamlet's exostulation with his mother that the reader most deserved and received the applause of his audience. Hamlet does not address his mother in honeyed tones, but at the apparition of his father he naturally raises his voice.

"Save me! and hover o'er me with your wings,
You heavenly guards!"

We have often heard actors give these words in the same tone as the preceding ones—as if the ghost of a father were an everyday vision. Herr Strakosch made no such mistake, yet his energy never led him into mere noise. He is not only a consummate actor; he is a rhetorician. The late Mr. Buckle would have been delighted to have heard his favourite lines declaimed:—"What a piece of work is man! how noble in reason! how infinite in faculties! in form and moving how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a God!"

If we may mingle one word of criticism with the praise Herr Strakosch so richly deserves and receives, we would say that he appears to miss the pathos that underlies Hamlet's roughness to Ophelia and even to Polonius. For what can be more touching than Hamlet's reply to the old courtier when he takes his leave of him—"You cannot, sir, take from me anything that I will more willingly part withal, except my life"? For ourselves, we are glad to welcome Herr Strakosch to England, and shall be sorry when he takes his leave of us.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BERGEL, J. Der Himmel u. seine Wunder. Eine archäolog. Studie nach alten jud. Mythographen. Leipzig: Friedrich. 1 M. 80 Pf.
- BINDEL, Th. Die antiken Gräber Italiens. 1. Tl. Die Gräber der Etrusker. Berlin: Calvary. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- CART, T. Goethe en Italie: Etude biographique et littéraire. Paris: Fischbacher. 4 fr.
- CAVALUCCI, G. J. S. Maria del Fiore. Storia documentata dall' Origine fino ai nostri giorni. Turin: Loescher. 7 fr.
- DANTE'S Divine Comedy. The Inferno, translated by Warburton Pike. O. Kegan Paul & Co. 5s.
- DICKSON, W. K. Practical Organ-Building. Crosby Lockwood & Co. 5s.
- DUN, Finlay. Landlords and Tenants in Ireland. Longmans. 6s.
- FOUQUE, O. Histoire du Théâtre-Ventadour. Paris: Fischbacher. 5 fr.
- KAUFMANN, L. Albrecht Dürer. OÖln: Bachem. 1 M. 80 Pf.
- LE MARCHAND, O. Deuxième Campagne des Anglais dans l'Afghanistan (1879-80). T. 1. Paris: Dumaine. 6 fr.
- LENOIRMAN, F. La Grande Grèce: Paysages et Histoire. T. 1. Paris: A. Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
- MACLEOD, H. D. The Elements of Economics. Vol. I. Longmans. 7s. 6d.
- MULHALL, M. G. Balance-Sheet of the World for Ten Years, 1870-80. Stanford. 8s.
- PARRAN, M. Biographie et Iconographie des (Œuvres d'Honneur de Balzac. Paris: Rouquette. 10 fr.
- PITRE, G. Spettacoli e Feste popolari: Sigilliane. Napoli: Detken & Roeholl. 5 fr.
- POLEN u. die Groesmichte. Leipzig: Friedrich. 3 M.
- RACINET, A. Le Costume historique. 11^e Livr. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 12 fr.
- RODENBERG, J. Belgien u. die Belgier. Berlin: Paetel. 9 M.
- SCHWICKER, J. H. Die ungarischen Gymnasien. Geschichte, System, Statistik. Budapest: Kilian. 3 M. 50 Pf.
- SEILLOT, P. Contes populaires de la Haute-Bretagne. 2^{me} Série. Contes des Paysans et des Pêcheurs. Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.
- UPTON, K. D. Gleanings from the Desert of Arabia. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 10s. 6d.

THEOLOGY.

- ERDMANN, D. Der Brief d. Jacobus, erklärt. Berlin: Wiegandt. 5 M.
- REVISED VERSION of the New Testament. Oxford and Cambridge: University Presses.
- RÜTSCHE, K. Geschichte u. Kritik der kirchlichen Lehre von der ursprünglichen Vollkommenheit u. vom Sündenfall. Leiden: Brill. 4s. 6d.
- SALMON, G. Non-Miraculous Christianity, and other Sermons. Macmillan. 6s.

HISTORY.

- GALLAND, A. Journal d', pendant son Séjour à l'Ambassade de France à Constantinople, p.p. Ch. Scacfer. Paris: Leroux. 25 fr.
- GREFFEN, F. H. Zur Geschichte d. orientalischen Kriege 1853-56. Berlin: Paetel. 9 M.
- HOLLAEINER, A. Strassburg im Schmalkaldischen Kriege. Strassburg: Trübner. 2 M.
- NOER, F. A. von. Kaiser Akbar. Leiden: Brill. 6s.
- OESTERLEY, H. Historisch-geographisches Wörterbuch d. deutschen Mittelalters. 3. Lfg. Gotha: Perthes. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- PERROT, G. et Ch. CHIFFEZ. Histoire de l'Art dans l'Antiquité. T. 1. 1^{re} Livr. L'Egypte. Paris: Hachette. 50 c.
- TAIN, H. La Révolution. T. II. La Conquête jacobine. Paris: Hachette. 7 fr. 50 c.
- YONGE, O. M. Catharine of Aragon, and the Sources of the English Reformation. Edited from the French of Albert du Boys. Hurst & Blackett. 21s.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BERNARD, Claude. L'Œuvre de. Paris: J. B. Baillière et Fils.
- BLAVIER, E. E. Des grandeurs électriques et de leur Mesure en Unités absolues. Paris: Dunod.
- DORIA, G. e R. Gestraro. Annali del Museo civico di Storia Naturale di Genova. Vol. XVI. Milano: Hoepli. 50 fr.
- KAUKENBERG, O. F. W. Vergleichend-physiologische Studien. Experimentelle Untersuchungen. 5. Abth. Heidelberg: Winter. 4 M.
- MAINZER, J. Die kritische Epoche in der Lehre v. der Einbildungskraft, aus Humes u. Kants theoretischer Philosophie nachgewiesen. Jena: Frommann. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- MUNK, J. Physiologie d. Menschen u. der Säugethiere. Berlin: Hirschwald.
- PLANTAMOUR, E. Observations limnimétriques faites à Genève de 1806 à 1880. Basel: Georg. 3 M. 20 Pf.
- SHELLEY, G. E. Monograph of the Nectarinidae; or, Family of Sun Birds. Quarant. £12 12s.
- WILLKOMM, M. Illustrationes florae Hispaniae insularumque Balearum. 2. Lfg. Stuttgart: Schweizerbart. 12 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BORHTLINGK, O. Sanskrit-Wörterbuch in kürzerer Fassung. 2. Tl. 2. Lfg. St. Petersburg. 4s.
- GAHM, J. u. W. Deutsches Wörterbuch. 6. Bd. 7. Lfg. Leipzig: Hirzel. 2 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

S. T. COLERIDGE'S POEMS: "MONODY ON THE DEATH OF CHATTERTON."

Dublin: May 13, 1881.

It is not noticed in Pickering's last edition of Coleridge's Poetical Works, nor have I seen it noticed elsewhere, that the "Monody on the Death of Chatterton" appears in "Poems Supposed to have been Written at Bristol in the Fifteenth Century, by Thomas Rowley," edited by L. S. (L. Sharpe), whose Preface is dated "Pembroke College, July 20, 1794." The volume, which is without date on the title-page, was published at Cambridge, "Printed by B. Flower for the Editor." Coleridge's poem is introduced with the words, "The Editor thinks himself happy in the permission of an ingenious friend to insert the following Monody." The text differs in several particulars from that in Coleridge's first volume of Poems (1796), and wants the thirty-six lines from "Poor Chatterton! he sorrows for thy fate," to the end.

EDWARD DOWDEN.

THE DEVIL IN FEATHERS AT CHESTER.

3 St. George's Square, N.W.: May 14, 1881.

Can any reader of the ACADEMY give me information about the old Midsummer Show at Chester, a kind of procession of the Guilds or Trades which was held in that city till the end of the sixteenth century (and after) every year when the Miracle-Plays or Mysteries were not acted?

The authority on the subject is David Rogers, who in 1609 made out of the collections of his father, Archdeacon Rogers, a "Breauarye," digest, or history of the city, contained in Harl. MS. 1944, &c. After his chapter on the Whitsun Plays, Rogers has another on this Midsummer Show. In it he speaks of certain former improprieties at the Show, afterwards put down by a godly mayor:—"Y^e divill in his fethers before y^e butchers, a man in womans apparell, with a divill waytinge on his horse called cuppes and cans, god in stringes,* with other thinges." I have copied the passage in the hope that some antiquarian reader of it may be able to give, or refer me to, a fuller account of this Devil in Feathers, and other incidents of the outdoor life at Chester in Shakspeare's days.

F. J. FURNIVALL.

y^e midsomer "Of y^e Midsomer shows or watche showe as an- in Chester. Heare we maye note chant as y^e that y^e showe or watche, on mid-w h i t s o n s o m e r e a u e , c a l l e d ' m i d s o m e r s h o w e ,' playes, if not yearly now vsed within y^e Cittie of more anchant Chester, was vsed in y^e tyme of those whitson playes, & before, so farre as I canne vnderstande; for when y^e whitson playes were played, then y^e showe at midsomer wente
not: And when y^e whitson playes were not played, then y^e midsomer showe wente only: as many now liueinge [1609 A.D.] canne make theire owne knowledge proffe sufficient:
But since these playes at whitsuntide were put downe, and y^e midsomer showe wente only, there hath bene taken awaye some thinges, & reformed, that were not f^r decente:
wherein y^e wisdom and godly care of those magistrates that did remoue awaye thinges either sinfull or offensiuie, is to be commended, and by all religeouse magistrates there steps to be troden, inasmuch as they intende all their actiones to Gods glorye, and the rule or lyne of perfection, the which, howsoever it cannot be attaynd vnto in this life, yet it is the marke we are all to aime at. In which I commend y^e gouernment of m^r Henry Hardware, esquire, somtymes mayor of Chester [1599], whose gouernement waytinge on his horse was godly, wherein he soughte y^e when y^e midsomer showe went, then y^e whitson playes went not when y^e whitson playes went not many thinges reformed in y^e midsomer shoe before m^r H: Hardware, and in his tyme [1599] as y^e diuill in his fethers before y^e butchers, a man in womans apparell, with a diuill waytinge on his horse his horse redresse of manye abuses, as namely called cuppes in y^e midsomer showe he caused & cans, god som thinges to be reformed and in stringes [?], taken awaye, that y^e watchmen of with other our soules, or deuines, spake thinges, againste, as thinges not fit to be which were used; for which he deserved iuste were reformed commendation; howsoever the vulgar and amended sorte of people did oppose themselves againste y^e reformation of sinnes, not knowinge that aunchant synnes ought to have new reformation, and antiquitee in thinges vn-lawfull or offensiuie is no reason to mayntayne y^e same. But for y^e decencie of y^e midsomer showe as it is now [1609 A.D.] vsed, I referre it to y^e iudgement of those who are more iudiciouse."

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, May 23, 7.30 p.m. Aristotelian: "The Scotch School—Hamilton and Mansel," by Mr. S. Oliver.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture V., "Colour Blindness and its Influence on Various Industries," by Mr. R. Brudenell Carter.
8 p.m. Education Society: "The Educational Theories of Rousseau," by Mr. T. M. Williams.
TUESDAY, May 24, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Non-Metallic Elements," by Prof. Dewar.
3 p.m. Linnean: Anniversary Meeting and President's Address.
8 p.m. Anthropological Institute: "Some Bone Necklaces from the Andaman Islands," by Dr. Allen Thompson; "The Arts of the Andamanese and Nicobarese," by Mr. E. H. Man; "Some Vestiges of Girl Sacrifices, Jar Burial, and Contracted Intermarriage in India and the East," by Mr. M. J. Walsbouse.
8 p.m. Institution of Civil Engineers: "The Production of Paraffin and Paraffin Oil," by Mr. R. H. Brunton.
WEDNESDAY, May 25, 8 p.m. Geological.
8 p.m. Spelling Reform Association: Annual Meeting: Address by Prof. Sayce.
8 p.m. Society of Arts.
8 p.m. Royal Society of Literature: "The Popular Literature of Old Japan," by Mr. O. Pounder.
THURSDAY, May 26, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Magnetism," by Prof. Tyndall.
4.30 p.m. Royal.
8 p.m. Society of Arts.
8 p.m. Society of Telegraph Engineers and Electricians.
8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
FRIDAY, May 27, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Artificial Production of Indigo," by Prof. H. E. Roscoe.
8 p.m. Quakers.
SATURDAY, May 28, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Russian Literature—Lermontoff," by Prof. O. E. Turner.
3 p.m. Physical.

SCIENCE.

Arabian Poetry for English Readers.

Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by
W. A. Clouston. (Trübner.)

ENGLISH readers unacquainted with the Arabic will find in this compilation a miscellaneous collection of the poetry of the Arabs. With one or two exceptions, to be noticed anon, they are reprints of translations made by Sir W. Jones, J. D. Carlyle, and T. Hamilton, the former nearly a century and the latter sixty years ago. This simple statement conveys no slight reproach upon modern English linguists, who have allowed other countries, especially Germany and France, to outrun them in almost every department of Arabic literature. In his Introduction the editor gives a concise account of the ancient Arabs, their Seven Mu'allakât, or Suspended Prize-Poems,* the Genius of the early Arab poetry, and of Arabian Literature under the Abbaside Khalifate. His geography, or that of Sir W. Jones, is at fault on p. xix., where "Zebid" is described as "a commercial town, that lies in a large plain near the Sea of Omân." Zebid, on the contrary, is a well-known place situated forty miles to the S.S.E. of al-Hudaidah on the eastern shore of the Red Sea, and was formerly the capital of the Tihâmah. On the same page we read of "Aden, surrounded with pleasant gardens and woods." The generality of readers, and especially those who know nothing of the place, would understand the peninsula of that name, now in the hands of the British, to be here indicated. But if this, our Aden, was ever surrounded by pleasant gardens, it must have been anterior to that convulsion of nature which left it an extinct volcano. Abu'l-Fidâ helps us over this difficulty. According to him, there were two 'Adans—one called 'Adanu-Abyâna, which he describes as a place of trade, and a harbour for shipping from India, but to which water was brought (from the interior). This, doubtless, is our Aden. The other was called 'Adanu-Lâ'ah, a small town in the Jâbal Sâbir, of al-Yâman, from whence came the claimants to the Fâtimate Khalifate of Egypt. This latter, for aught that is known to the contrary, may have come up to the description of Aden given by the editor. As regards the derivation of the word it is remarkable that, whereas these two localities are written 'Adan, the phrase "Gardens of the Settled Abode," occurring eleven times in the al-Kur-ân, is Jannâtu 'Adnin, not 'Adanin, and it is therefore questionable whether "Aden" has the meaning ascribed to it in the Introduction. So also as regards "Yemen" taking its name from a word which signifies verdure and felicity. In that case the name would be Yumn, not Yâman. The only author, as far as the reviewer knows, who gives that signification to the word is al-Kazwiny, who describes al-Yâman as "an extensive territory extending from Omân to Najrân. It is called the Green, owing to the abundance of its trees." The generality of Arabian writers explain the name as indicating the country on the yâmin, or right, of the al-Kiblah of the Ghaur, or Lowlands, stating that it was so called because it is situated to the right of the sun when it rises, just as ash-Shâm (Syria) was so named because it is on the Mâsh-amat, or left, of the al-Kiblah.

* Some Arabian authors substitute the Poems of al-A'sha, and of 'Amru-'bnu-Mu'awiyah, adh-Dhaibany, surnamed an-Nabaghy, for those of Hârith and 'Antarah given in Sir W. Jones's translation of the Mu'allakât.

Turning to the Poems in this collection, there can be no doubt that the originals portray, with impassioned eloquence, the pastoral life of the early Arabs, the romance of their chivalry, their heroic exploits, their devotion to the fair sex, their love, their revenge. One wonders on reading the measured rhythm and melodious cadences of these compositions how it came to pass that at a period so remote, and when the country was completely isolated, there were men existing in Arabia capable of expressing with so much pathos and elegance the wild scenes which surrounded them and the kindling emotions of the human heart. If Muhâmmad could defy any created being to produce a work equal to the al-Kur-ân, it is not too much to say that in their day the old Arab bards might equally have thrown down the gauntlet to the world at large on the score of poetical genius. Arabic poetry, indeed, is simply music, and all English lovers of the gentle Muse will be thankful to Mr. Clouston for having placed these specimens within their reach. At the same time—for the truth should be told—these translations,

* This is the only way that a Record officer and I can read the MS.

† [Leaf 26, back.]

excellent as some of them are, come far short of conveying the verve and beauty of the Arabic, a remark which is fully borne out by the compiler's quotation that "the wrong side of tapestry will represent more truly the figures on the right, notwithstanding the floss that blurs them, than the best version the beauties of the original." Arabic poetry consists either of rhyming prose or metrical verse, and the result of rendering either into simple English prose is dry, bald, and monotonous. The poetical ideas and imagery may be preserved, but the harmony is lost. This may be illustrated by collating the prose renderings of the Muallakât, or the "Romance of 'Antar," with the poems under the head of "Arabian Anthology," made into verse by Carlyle, as given in this volume. The former will repel all but devotees of poetry; the latter have a charm which anyone can appreciate. That several of Carlyle's renderings are little better than paraphrases is evident on a comparison of his metrical version of the Lâmîyyât—l-'Ajam, pp. 156–61, with Redhouse's admirable prose translation of the same given at pp. 468–72. Yet, that defect notwithstanding, for one who can derive pleasure from the latter there are hundreds who will prefer the former. Further, there is no absolute necessity for English prose translations, seeing that our language is certainly equal to something more suitable. Rhyming prose, it may readily be admitted, is ungraceful in English; but Preston, in his translation of the Makâmât of Harîry, has adopted a style for rendering the rhyming prose of the author which occupies a middle place between prose and verse, the clauses being arranged in evenly balanced periods, while the metrical parts are given, not in the Arabic metres and rhythm, which would be almost impracticable, but in English verse, often admirable counterparts of the original, with copious annotations to satisfy the reader of the accuracy of the renderings. If our modern Arabists who are possessed of poetical genius would copy this attempt, and improve upon it, they would do much to attract English readers to the perusal and study of Arabic poetry. Another specimen of what may be done in this line is subjoined. It is a versification of the short poem beginning with Sâfir, tâjid 'iwadhan amman tufarikuhu, given in the story of Nûru'd-Dîn and his Brother, one of the tales of the Thousand and One Nights, made by the Rev. P. G. Hill, Rector of the Church of St. Edmund-the-Martyr, from a close prose translation of the Arabic submitted to him. Not one idea of the original is missed, and the English poetry is not inferior to it:—

"Go, traverse distant lands, in each you'll find
Some in the place of those you leave behind;
Some, it may chance, of more congenial hearts,—
Sympathy is life's charm—its hane ennui—
No honour lies in inactivity:—
Then quit your home, go, range in foreign parts.
The stagnant puddle foul and fetid grows.
Healthful and clear the running fountain flows:
Unless the changes of the moon on high
Revealed the future to the sage's eye,
He would not watch her aspect in the sky:
Unless he left his den, the forest-king
Would win no trophies of the sylvan war:
Unless the arrow parted from the string,
It could not hit the destined mark afar.

The Tibr,* when from its native mine cast forth
Appears as vile unprofitable earth;
The aloes-wood enjoys but slight esteem
In its own land,—mere fuel for the hearth;
Let either quit the country of its birth,
The one an ore all-coveted we deem,
The other a perfume of priceless worth."

A special interest attaches to this volume on account of the translation into English, made for the first time by J. W. Redhouse, of Ka'ab's Poem of the Mantle, now 1,300 years old, and also of al-Bûsîry's poem under the same title and written about A.D. 1260, with copious explanatory notes which leave nothing to be desired. The learned translator does not exaggerate when he says of the latter poem that "it is known everywhere in the world of Islam, and enjoys a much greater veneration than the original eulogy by K'ab, since it recites in detail most of the chief acts of Muhammad's life, and of his highest titles." There are many versions of the poem, differing more or less in words, but in the main conveying the same sense. The copy before the reviewer does not give the title Fâslun fi ta'adili-n-Nâfsi contained in the facsimile of Mr. Clouston's frontispiece; but it appears as the heading of the second of the ten chapters into which the 229 couplets of the original are divided, and is written Mân'uu hawâi Nâfsin, or the Restraint of (human) Passions. Another remark of Mr. Redhouse, that selections from al-Bûsîry's poem "are used as charms or amulets to avert evil and to secure blessings," is amply borne out by the exemplar just referred to. The margin is covered with notes, attributed to the Shaikh 'Abdu's-Salâm ibni-Idris, al-Marâkishi, setting forth the latent magical and therapeutic virtues of different sections of the composition. The following two, the first appended to the opening six couplets, and the second to the next ten, will convey an adequate idea of these prescriptions:—

(1) "If you have an unruly beast which refuses discipline write these verses on a piece of glass, then wash them off with rain-water, and give the beast the solution to drink. It will thereupon become tame and docile, and will learn whatever you wish to teach it. Or if you have a male or female slave who does not speak Arabic readily, write the same verses on parchment and attach it to the upper arm; and, by the permission of God, he [or she] will speak [Arabic] glibly." (2) "The virtue of these lines is wonderful. If you suspect [the fidelity of] a woman, write them on the leaf of a citron-tree, keeping it till she falls asleep. Then place it on her left hand and bring your ear close to her mouth, when she will utter all that she has done, whether good or bad. This has been verified."

Redhouse's translation of the poem is scholarly and admirable in every respect. It is a pity that he did not render it in rhyme; but perchance he felt the force of the adage, poeta nascitur non fit, and deemed it better to write good prose than bad verse. It does not appear clear whether the translation of the first four distichs given at the end of Mr. Clouston's Preface is by him or some other hand. In any case, it is to be regretted that the writer frequently, albeit not always nor with consistency, represents the hâmzat—l-fath and the fûth by e instead of a, a sound in these cases utterly foreign to Arabic pronunciation, and more like that of the Turks, who use the Imâlah where no Arab would use it. There is a typographical error in the word jirānin of the first line. It ought to be jirānin. It is only fair to say that in the Appendix to this volume Mr. Clouston has brought together a large collection of valuable and interesting notes illustrative of the history, language, metaphors, and imagery of the original poems.

* Unwrought gold either in dust or nuggets.

It will not be out of place to remark here that these poems are mostly referable to a period extending between the early part of the seventh and that of the thirteenth century of our era. Their production and reproduction in English may lead many to suppose that the Muse among the Arabs had fallen into an endless sleep, and that there had been no poet of note among them for six centuries. But it is not so. It is lamentably true that the destruction of the Abbasside Khalifate by the Tatars in the thirteenth century was followed by a long interval of intellectual torpor and retrogression; nevertheless, even during those dark ages there occasionally arose scholars among the Arabs who fed the flickering flame of poetry in their midst.* But it is especially within the last century that a vast change in this respect has taken place. Poets have arisen among peoples of Arab descent whose works are held by competent judges to equal in scope, genius, and sublimity, if not to transcend, the masterpieces of Arab poetry in the olden time. The following are among the Arab poets dating from the beginning of the eighteenth century to the present time:—The Diwân (Poemata) on Ethics of the Matrân (Metropolitan) Jirmânos Farhât, and a similar collection by the Khûry (Chorepiscopus) Nikûla, both printed at Bairût; the large Diwân of the Shaikh Kabâdu, at Tûnis, printed at Tunis, in two volumes; the Poems of 'Abdu'l-Bâki, including a Eulogy on the Shaikh Nâsifu'l-Yâziyy; the Diwân of Butros Karâmâh, of Aleppo, printed at Bairût; the Poems of the Shaikh Sâlih, al-Tamîmy, of Baghdâd, who disputed with the preceding on the subject of poetry; the Diwân of Francis Marrâsh, of Aleppo; of Abu-Hâsan, of Baghdâd, and of Khalîl Efendi, al-Khûry, who now holds the office of political secretary, and whose two collections of poems were printed at Bairût. Rizku'llâh Hassûu, of Aleppo, who resided for some time in London and edited an Arabic weekly newspaper, rendered the Book of the Exodus, the Song of Solomon, the Lamentations of Jeremiah, and the Book of Ecclesiastes into verse. He was also the author of an-Nafâtât, an imitation of Aesop's Fables, in verse. Most of his works have been printed and have gone through a second edition. The two Diwâns of the celebrated Nâsifu'l-Yâziyy, whom the reviewer had the pleasure of knowing thirty-five years ago. Also a poem entitled Mu'ajamu'l-Bahrain, after al-Harîry.

* The reader is referred to vol. i., pp. 63–141, of Casiri's Bibliotheca Arabico-Hispana for an admirable Catalogue raisonné of Arab poets from the earliest times down to the commencement of the sixteenth century, together with some excellent remarks on Arab poetry.

His son, the Shaikh Ibrahim, composed a Diwân, as did also his daughter, and several editions of their poems have been printed at Bairût.

The foregoing is far from being a complete list of modern Arab poets, but it is sufficiently large to show that poetry is still extensively cultivated and admired by Arabic-speaking peoples. The subjects which they discuss are not confined, as were the poems of the earlier Arab poets, to descriptions of pastoral life and its surroundings. They take a much wider range, and as indications of the Arab mind at the present day deserve the attentive study of English Arabists.

GEORGE PERCY BADGER.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES.

THE subject of Mr. Rhys Davids' fourth lecture of this course was "Gotama the Buddha." The first part of the lecture dealt with the intellectual condition of the Hindus at the period of the Buddha's advent. Allusion was made to the so-called great religious reformation said to have arisen about this time in China, Persia, and Greece, to which, as a fact in the history of religion, the lecturer did not attach much importance. It did not throw any new light upon the origin and growth of Buddhism. Then followed a slight sketch of the personal history of Gotama—his birth, spiritual struggle, years of penance, mental crisis, temptation, and final enlightenment, together with his subsequent career as a preacher and founder of a religious order.

Mr. Davids then proceeded to speak of the character of the great Indian reformer as handed down to us in the sacred books of the Buddhists, and showed how the human element was almost obscured by the divine attributes ascribed to the Buddha.

The legendary matter interwoven with the more sober facts of Gotama's history was not unlike that found in the apocryphal gospels. The followers of Gotama had in the course of time created an ideal Buddha, partly political and partly philosophical, just as the imaginative mind of the Hindus out of their political experience had formed an ideal universal (cakka-vatti) monarch, a king of kings, a possessor of the seven treasures—(1) the wheel (cakka), a sun-emblem; (2) the white elephant, a cloud-symbol; (3) the flying horse; (4) the jewel (lightning), which, on the darkest night, enabled the universal monarch to review and to see his troops within a space of seven miles; (5) a queen—a gem of a woman; (6) a treasurer or adviser; (7) a general. In addition to these, he had four qualities: he was handsome, long-lived, free from disease, beloved and popular. Buddha had all these, together with many other marks of royalty and of greatness. But he was no earthly sovereign, but a "king of righteousness," a turner of the wheel of justice. Divine beings foretold his birth as the founder of a new dispensation—a saviour of men and gods.

The influence of the political element was seen in the fact that Sâripatta, Buddha's chief disciple, was called dhamma-senâpati, commander-in-chief of the law. As a universal monarch he overcame the dominion of sin, not by arms of flesh, but by spiritual weapons. "Converting sîla (virtue) into a cloak, and jhânam (meditation) into a breast-plate, he covered mankind with the armour of dhamma (righteousness), and provided them with the most perfect panoply. Bestowing on them sati (mindfulness) as a shield and titikkhâ (forbearance) as a sceptre, he conferred dhammo on them as the sword that vanquishes all that is incompatible with sîla, investing them with tevijjâ (threefold knowledge) as an ornament, and the four phalas (or fruits of the path) as a tiara." Turnour quotes this in his Pâli Buddhist Annals. There is a similar passage in the story of Jâmusoni (Sañyutta Nikâya, part v.).

The lecturer touched upon many other points, too numerous to be noticed in an abstract of the lecture—the Buddha's before Gotama's time, the meaning of sammâ sambuddha, paccêka buddhas, Biblical and Buddhist parallels (as, for instance, Gotama's and Christ's renunciation). In conclusion, the lecturer referred to the question of the influence of Buddhist upon Christian legends. He did not think that there was any proof that the Christian myths were borrowed, but both originated independently of the other.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

THE name of Mr. H. M. Stanley's new station on the north bank of the Congo is Isangila, so called from the falls close by. He appears to have had great difficulty in reaching it, owing to the large quantity of various stores and building material that had to be transported over mountains and through dense forests. The distance from Vivi to Isangila is less than thirty miles, we believe, so that Mr. Stanley's progress is still remarkably slow.

MR. A. McCALL, of the Livingstone (Congo) Inland Mission, who has lately arrived at Manyanga on his way to Stanley Pool, originally tried to march along the north bank; but, owing to threatened opposition from the natives and the difficult character of the country, he found it advisable to take to the river itself, and he was, by latest accounts, engaged in organising a system of relays of canoes for the voyage from Manyanga to Stanley Pool.

THE Rev. T. J. Comber has failed in his last attempt to travel overland through the Makuta towns from San Salvador to Stanley Pool, and it seems most probable that he will now follow the example of Mr. Stanley and others, and adopt the line of the Congo. By last accounts he was waiting for the return of a party who had been sent to make a preliminary journey along the north bank of the river.

MISS MARIANNE NORTH, after several months of botanical sketching in Australia and New Zealand, is now working in the Sandwich Islands, and will thence return direct to England.

THE pearl fisheries on the Ceylon coast, after many years of failure, have this season yielded very large returns. The share of Government alone is estimated at £75,000, being the highest amount received since 1814. No specially fine pearls have been found; the largest was valued at £9.

NEWS has just been received by telegraph from Brisbane that the expedition recently despatched to survey the proposed route for the transcontinental railway have arrived at Point Parker, on the Gulf of Carpentaria. They give a favourable report of the country traversed, though timber was scarce. The party followed a more westerly course than had been originally intended; and, though travelling at the most unfavourable time of the year, after and during serious floods, they were able to use a waggon for the whole distance.

THE Rev. Thomas Beswick has arrived at Brisbane, and reports that four teachers, with their families, connected with the London Missionary Society had been massacred by the natives in New Guinea, without any provocation; and that consequently all the teachers employed in outlying districts have been collected at Port Moresby.

On February 23 M. Miklukho Maklai, whose explorations have been frequently alluded to in the ACADEMY, read a brief paper before the Linnaean Society of New South Wales on the results of his anthropological and anatomical researches in Melanesia and Australia.

DR. JULES CREVAUX has given the name of Rio de Lesseps to the Guyabero, or upper course of the Guaviare tributary of the Orinoco, which he and M. Lejanne discovered during their recent journey.

SCIENCE NOTES.

The Fossil Man of Nice.—Some human remains, evidently of great antiquity, were discovered a few months ago at Carabacel, near Nice, and have been reported upon by a local scientific committee, as well as examined by M. de Quatrefages. The bones had not been artificially interred, but were found embedded in a deposit of calcareous clay, at a depth of about nine feet from the surface. This deposit was irregularly stratified, and contained a mixture of Pliocene and Eocene shells, showing that it had been formed by the reconstruction of the pre-existing strata. Of the bones, the most remarkable is the lower jaw. This is sufficiently characteristic to enable de Quatrefages to refer it to the Cro-Magnon type. The fossil man of Nice, therefore, belongs to the same race as M. Rivière's skeleton from Mentone, both being probably of Palaeolithic age.

THE first new comet of the present year, discovered by Swift at Rochester, U.S.A., on the morning of May-day, in the constellation Andromeda, reached its perihelion on May 20, at a distance of six-tenths of the mean distance of the earth from the sun. The comet has already for some days been invisible in the sun's rays, but may become observable again in the Southern hemisphere.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

MR. SWEET's edition of the oldest remains of our language, for the Early-English Text Society, is half printed. The Anglo-Saxon Psalter and Charters have alone to be added. A grammar of fore-Alfredic speech will be prefixed to the book.

WE have seen the MS. of a work by Mr. John Molloy on gemination in the Irish language, in which he has brought together a large number of instances of that phenomenon culled from the Book of the Dun Cow, the Book of Rights, and other valuable Irish collections. Mr. Molloy's industry is deserving of all praise. The present is only an instalment, as he is about to treat assimilation in Irish in the same way. We hope his labours may meet with their due reward, though we cannot say that we feel very sanguine on that point at present.

THE present number of the Cymmador contains, among other very interesting articles, a most able paper on the pronunciation of the Sassareso dialect of Sardinia by H.I.H. Prince Louis-Lucien Bonaparte, and some archaic Welsh ably edited with notes by the editor. It also contains valuable and suggestive addresses by Mr. Rudler and Mr. Lewis Morris on Welsh anthropology and the present and future of Wales. Interesting information on Welsh books printed abroad in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries is embodied in a paper by Mr. H. W. Lloyd; we hope it is not to be his last contribution on this subject. We are further gratified to find that the editor is desirous of making the journal the medium of collecting information bearing on Welsh folklore in the widest sense; that would undoubtedly greatly add to its value.

PROF. ED. BÜHNER, of Strassburg, is preparing a Verzeichniss einer rhaeto-romanischen Sammlung. He is known as an expert in "Romanisch" generally, and particularly in "Rhaeto-romanisch" dialect and literature. His catalogue will consist of a list of books, pamphlets, and other works in all the idioms spoken in the canton of Graubünden, and, according to the Freie Rhätia of Chur, will be one of the most complete and perfect existing in that province.

PALI TEXT SOCIETY.

As we briefly announced last week, it is proposed to start a Pali Text Society on the model of the Early-English Text Society, in order to render accessible to students the rich stores of the earliest Buddhist literature now lying unedited and practically unused in the various MSS. scattered throughout the public and university libraries of Europe.

The society looks forward to publishing, within a no very distant period, the whole of the texts of the Pali Pitakas. Prof. Fausbøll, having completed the Dhammapada, is already far advanced with his edition of the Jataka book, the longest of the texts of the Sutta Pitaka; and Dr. Oldenburg has the Vinaya Pitaka well in hand. The remaining texts of the Sutta and Abhidhamma Pitakas lend themselves easily to distribution among various editors. The project has been most heartily welcomed by scholars throughout Europe; and Prof. Fausbøll and Dr. Oldenburg (when their present undertakings are completed), Dr. Morris, Dr. Trenckner, Dr. Thieson, Dr. Frankfurter, Dr. Hultsch, Prof. Ernst Kuhn, Prof. Pischel, Dr. Edward Müller, Prof. H. Jacobi, M. Léon Feer, M. Senart, Prof. Kern, and Mr. Rhys Davids have already pledged themselves to take part in the undertaking.

It is proposed to include in the society's series those of the more important of the earlier Jain and uncanonical Buddhist texts which may be expected to throw light on the religious movement out of which the Pitakas also arose.

Analyses in English of the published Texts, Introductions to them, Catalogues of MSS., Indices, Glossaries, and Notes and Queries on early Buddhist history will appear from time to time in the society's publications.

The subscription to the society will be one guinea a-year, or five guineas for six years, due in advance; and no charge will be made for postage.

Those who wish to join in this important undertaking should at once send their subscriptions to the hon. secretary (Mr. U. B. Brodribb, 3 Brick Court, Temple, E.C.), as the work cannot proceed until a certain sum is in hand.

The price to non-subscribers will be about double the price of the subscription. All profits from the sales to non-subscribers will be devoted to increasing the number of volumes to subscribers, who will receive each year more than the value of their subscriptions.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—(Thursday, May 12.)

LORD CARNARVON, President, in the Chair.—Mr. Cheales exhibited tracings of some wall-paintings at Friskney church in Lincolnshire; and a paper descriptive of them, written by him, was read by Mr. Keyser. That a Norman church once existed on the site is proved by carvings and coffin-lids found during the restoration of the building. To this an Early-English church succeeded. In the fifteenth century the clerestory was enlarged, and a chancel in the early perpendicular style was added subsequently. The paintings, which are executed in fresco secco, are situated in the clerestory between the windows. Their probable date is the reign of Henry VI. The three subjects now visible are the Assumption of the Virgin, on the north clerestory wall next to the rood-loft, the Stable at Bethlehem, and the Last Supper. In the first, the Virgin is represented in a vesica, borne by angels, and received by God the Father under the figure of an old man. The Nativity includes the angelic message to the Shepherds, and the visits both of the Shepherds and the Magi to the Infant Christ. In the Supper, Judas is represented sitting on the opposite side of the table to Christ, and is not "nimbed" as the other apostles are. At the bottom of the picture, in the spandrel, is a figure of a servant drawing wine from a caak. There are other apices which formerly contained similar paintings, one of which was probably the Resurrection. The Last Supper is not of frequent occurrence in church paintings; but there are instances at Barton Segrave, Maids Morton, Stanton-Harcourt, St. Martin's Dover, Horsham, Preston, and Slapham in Sussex, and one in Montgomeryshire. The same subject also occurs on a reredos at Cury in Cornwall.—Mr. Park Harrison exhibited a slate tablet, found in a shingle house at Towyn among other ancient remains, covered with scribbles, which appear to represent urns, hatchets, baskets, and other utensils, and, Mr. Harrison suggested, might be the inventory of someone's property.—Mr. Clement Markham exhibited a silver tazza from Arlington church.

FOLK-LORE SOCIETY.—(Friday, May 13.)

EARL BEAUCHAMP, President, in the Chair.—Mr. H. B. Wheatley read two papers. The first was on "The Superstitions of Peppas and his Times," stating that we seem to know Peppas personally, so vividly does he stand out before us from the pages of the diary. Mr. Wheatley said that the value of noting the superstitions of Peppas consisted in the fact that Peppas was far from being a superstitious man, and that, therefore, the credulities he gave way to belonged to the age rather than to the man. Mr. Wheatley pointed out some of the amusing parts of the diary about dreams, apparitions, vows, fortune-telling, and the like.—Lord Beauchamp, in the discussion which followed, observed that Archbishop Laud believed in the omens to be derived from dreams.—The second paper was "A Note on English Fairies." Its object was to throw some light upon the influence which literature had exercised upon popular traditions. Thus, down to Chaucer's time, the notion of fairies was mixed up with the old Greek and Latin mythology, Pluto, for instance, being styled by Chaucer the "King of the Fairies." The divines seemed to relegate the whole of the fairy world to the regions of the devil world. What was not of God was necessarily of the devil. But Shakspere introduced something altogether different—more pure and more true. His fairies were the fairies of the people. He simply transferred to his pages for all time what he had heard himself and had believed in himself down in his Warwickshire home. From his time, therefore, the literary knowledge of English fairies has been nearer the true popular tradition, though, again, a modern writer has introduced the Dame-Durden kind of fairy into the realms of literature.—The President, in commenting upon the interest and value of Mr. Wheatley's paper, pointed out how the names of places and fields had been influenced by fairy lore, and gave some instances from Madresfield, Worcestershire.

FINE ART.

The First of May: a Fairy Masque. Presented in a Series of Fifty-two Designs by Walter Crane. (Sotheman & Co.)

ALTHOUGH it is not so stated on the title-page, we believe that the letterpress of this "Fairy Masque" is by Mr. J. R. Wise, whom we have best known as the able author of a standard History of the New Forest, which, appearing in 1863, was illustrated by the pencil of a then unknown artist, Mr. Walter Crane. Among the little pictures in that volume, en vignette and otherwise, are some charming studies of forest scenery; and, although some portion of the merit of work of this kind must be shared with the skilful engraver, W. J. Linton, to whom the drawings were entrusted, there is evidence of considerable promise, and it might fairly have been predicted that the artist would at some future time attain an honourable reputation as a painter of foliage and landscape. But surely no one, not even Mr. Crane himself, could then have supposed that in these sketches he betrayed any, even the slightest, indication of the wealth of design and the fullness of imagination for which as a decorative artist he has now become famous. And even less possible would it have been to discover the latent signs of his present power under the full-page illustrations to children's books which shortly succeeded. In fact, several of those illustrations, varying in merit and often full of feeling, are in most amusing contrast to some of his later and more ambitious work. Who, for instance, could have supposed that The Sleeping Beauty in last winter's Grosvenor was designed by the hand which drew the simple, yet so touchingly expressive, figure of The Widow Margaret; or have believed that from the same easel could descend the Miss Lawrence in the Dull Sunday, so staid, so well-intentioned, yet so angular and unsympathetic, and those startling dancing Sirens, in 1879, from whom Ulysses had the good fortune to escape?

It was not until the children's toy-books appeared, in and after 1874, that the peculiar bent of Mr. Walter Crane's powers began to show itself, or at least became generally known. Our children, indeed, owe him a debt of gratitude; surely no one ever more successfully realised for them the ideal of the dreadful "Three Bears" and the lovely "Silverlocks," or of "Mother Hubbard" and her dog, so difficult to please; or has given more telling lessons in colour than in the Princess Belle Etoile, or more comically jumbled Eastern costumes and features than in Aladdin. In those delightful quartos, which have afforded such infinite gratification, and of which we hope the plates may never perish, we recognise his hand as we now know it; but in them, and still more in Mrs. Mundi's At Home, which appeared in 1879, there are, we venture to think, qualities somewhat wanting in the Portfolio of Sketches now lying upon our table.

The plot of The First of May, pleasantly written in flowing verse, is of the slightest. The innocent happiness of two lovers, Florio and Lilian, the May Queen, excites the splenetic temper of Marjory (unkindly, we think, pictured in clerical attire) and the venomous hatred of Mandrake, an evil spirit, whose villanous attendants, Adderstone Canker and others, are among the cleverest designs in the Portfolio. A treacherous scheme is devised by which the lovers for a while are parted; but, by the happy intervention of the Fairy Queen, Angelica, they are in the end re-united, and Beauty and Goodness triumph, as they ought to do.

The Masque, thus briefly summarised, forms but a chain to whose links the artist has appended his illustrations; they border the text as in panel or frieze, never departing from the character of decorative work, but in reality forming a series of pictures which, in some respects, it is impossible to praise too highly. In all decorative art more or less conventionality of treatment is inevitable—in its simplest form the rules which regulate the parts and proportions are necessarily rigid, and curves and lines bear a compulsory relationship; and the more nearly this is accomplished without degenerating into stiffness and formality, the greater is our gratification. It is only a master-hand that can dispense with or vary the rules which, if too sternly enforced, result in tameness and disappointing uniformity; and we may well be content to learn from these designs, and admire the skill and freedom with which these rules are treated, while their prevailing canons are never disregarded. What compositions, for instance, could be happier, or more effective, than those on the sheets numbered xxvii. and xl.? In all this we do not think we exaggerate when we say that our artist is perhaps unrivalled.

But, when we examine the details of the designs, we cannot say that we altogether regard them with the same unmixed satisfaction. For some reason there can be no doubt that his figures in the nude are not nearly so successful as are the draped; the contrast, in some instances, is sufficiently marked to suggest the enquiry whether he has not in that most difficult of all drawing—the accurate representation of the human figure—trusted too much to his imagination or to his memory. There is nothing in which faulty or careless outline is so manifest or so aggressive; drapery may be disposed in a thousand folds; elves and sprites, and birds and flowers, and such quaintly intelligent animals as those to which he has treated us, may be permitted numberless eccentricities of form or feature. But a departure from accuracy of outline, or the assumption of a strained or impossible position, is fatal to the beauty of the human form, and, if excessive, is rudely termed deformity. An inferior or unpractised artist is well aware of this; he knows that for one who can detect a false effect of light and shade, or criticise mis-shapen flower or foliage, a hundred will remark an error in torso or limb, and so he wisely refrains from challenging adverse criticism; but from Walter Crane we may demand better things, and we think he has not, in his larger figures, attained the success which we might have expected. It is, perhaps, “crumpling the rose leaf” to write a word that is not of praise in regard to work so full of tender feeling, and so perfect in composition; but we could wish that the Fairy Queen and her attendants had deserved the same commendation which we can so readily bestow on the other parts of his pictures. His smaller figures, his children, are delightful; what could be prettier than the little group around the Maypole, No. iii., or the busy elves making “the Spring’s green wave break o’er the fields”? And how successful, too, he is in his delineation of the half-animal, half-human creatures which, though somewhat sparingly, he has introduced; two groups on sheet xxxviii. are not unworthy of Wilhelm von Kaulbach, or of Grandville.

As a whole, we must regard The First of May as a success, though we do not esteem it so complete a success as we may yet expect to see.

It has evidently been throughout a labour of love, and shows on every page the intensity of care that no part shall be unequal. The text is not printed, but written by the artist’s own hand; the spaces left by variation of line are not left blank, but are cunningly sown with bees or birds or stars, scattered in apparent carelessness, yet invariably falling in their fittest place; the groups of fairies, or elves, or children are arranged along the loveliest curves, and all are fitly enclosed within a pretty, simple, decorative border. The reproductions, entrusted to Messrs. Goupil, have been executed by their now well-known Photogravure process; but seldom has it been employed with happier result. Each sheet, and even the outside of the Portfolio, is copied with such microscopic precision that even the smallest line and mark have been preserved; and the possessor of this luxurious work may feel that, if he has not the original, he has at least its absolute and perfect facsimile.

C. H. MIDDLETON-WAKE.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

(Second Notice.)

PICTURES which depend for their success upon the highest qualities of design are singularly rare in the present exhibition. With the exception of a small composition of a single figure by Mr. Albert Moore, Sir Frederick Leighton stands almost alone in his endeavour to present the grace and dignity of the human form. There are, of course, plenty of subject-pictures, and many of them crowded with figures; but it is easy in most cases to mark the distinction which serves to place such works in a different category. Sometimes, as in the case of the large canvas by Mr. Long, the accidental employment of antique costume may serve to suggest a higher standard of style than the artist has intended to employ. It is necessary, therefore, to be on one’s guard against doing an unconscious act of injustice to performances of this kind. In the presence of a modern subject like that which Mr. Herkomer has chosen to illustrate, there is less danger of misunderstanding the scope and limits of the design, for here the attention of the spectator, undisturbed by strangeness of dress or surroundings, fixes itself at once upon the dramatic motive of the picture. But when the scene is transferred to an earlier period in the world’s history, and more particularly when it is set amid classic surroundings, there is always a temptation to measure the result by reference to the severe principles of classic style. In their essence these two pictures are more nearly related than might at first appear. Mr. Long, no less than Mr. Herkomer, has concentrated his energies upon the realisation of a pathetic incident. His method reveals more of artifice and theatrical effect, for the reason that he is dealing with unfamiliar material, and is so far pre-occupied by archaeological details as to be not altogether free to devote himself to the purely human elements of his subject. The measure of emotional truth which the work contains nevertheless constitutes its principal claim to admiration; nor would it be fair to the artist to look beyond this dramatic impression, and to demand in excess the highest qualities of beauty. From a purely artistic standpoint, Mr. Long’s invention is not of the first order: it deals with forms that are often wanting in dignity, and it is content with types of face which serve well enough for the utterance of passing moods of feeling, but are constantly deficient in permanent force of character. Bereft of the interest which attaches to its subject, the picture would sink into comparative insignificance; and in this respect it is certainly inferior to the modern scene depicted by Mr. Herkomer, where many of the faces have the interest that belongs to faithful and accurate portraiture. These two pictures may be said to mark the extreme limits within which most of the painters of our school exercise their invention. Mr. Long’s work presents, in its most imposing form, the result that may be achieved by the combination of modern sentiment with historic costume; Mr. Herkomer, on the other hand, urges the claims of contemporary life, and seeks to record not merely the emotions, but the outward realities of the world about him. He undertakes in some respects the more arduous task, for he is bound by a number of trivial facts that are indispensable to a complete image of contemporary manners without being always helpful to the art of the painter. If Mr. Herkomer has succeeded less completely in the picture of this year than in the now celebrated Chelsea Pensioners, it is partly because he has had greater mechanical difficulties to deal with, and partly also because the subject is one which painting cannot so perfectly master. A simple phase of life, unperplexed by strongly marked individual sentiment, may always find its corresponding image in art; the fact which has powerfully impressed us in reality needs only to be translated with due fidelity and fine perception of character in order to become enduringly attractive as a picture. These qualities of keen observation and of vigorous technical power Mr. Herkomer could already command when he painted the Chelsea Pensioners. What he has now attempted touches a different order of artistic ideas, and begets difficulties of a kind that even the highest artistic gifts cannot combat with absolute certainty of success. The scene of excited feeling which he has sought to represent carries both the artist and the spectator on to less familiar ground; it is only by an effort of invention involving of necessity a certain degree of artifice that it can be made to fit with the requirements of picturesque expression, and we are no longer permitted to feel that the painter is dealing with an aspect of beauty that is actually existent. And yet even the measure of success which Mr. Herkomer has here achieved demands the exercise of qualities which betoken in some sense a more cultivated skill than was required for the execution of the Chelsea Pensioners. There are difficulties of composition and arrangement to be encountered which did not belong to the earlier performance; and, whatever praise may be awarded to the result, it is impossible not to acknowledge the power and study that have been brought to the experiment. Judged merely according to the dramatic effect of his work, Mr. Herkomer may be said to have fairly carried out his intention; but, having regard to the sacrifice of higher artistic qualities which the effort has involved, it remains more than doubtful whether he has chosen the most appropriate material for the display of his talent. If the purpose of painting is to present an image of life, it must be confessed that this dramatic incident, with all its careful elaboration of emotional suffering, is less impressive, and even less pathetic, than the simple group of old soldiers bearing in their worn faces the record of past trial and experience. But if Mr. Herkomer has not been altogether successful, there is at least to be granted to his work a stronger vitality and a fuller sympathy with human sentiment than have gone to the making of half the costume-pictures in the exhibition. These elaborately dressed-up representations of the events of history are among the most depressing products of modern painting. If a painter has no higher purpose than to emphasise the points of human comedy or drama, it is certainly to be desired that he should treat of the manners of his own time, so that his work may have the full measure of reality that is possible to it. There is really no excuse for costume unless it assists the expression of a kind of beauty which most of these professed students of the past persistently ignore. For it would be idle to assume that the representations of historical scenes can have any serious historical value. They must stand or fall according to the value they possess as works of art, and their success in this relation is certainly not to be measured by any degree of archaeological accuracy. Indeed, it may plausibly be argued that the attention which the modern artist has given to the matter of clothing has greatly retarded his perception of a deeper and worthier kind of beauty. The most powerful impulses towards the renewed study of the human form has in modern times been supplied by a race of artists who have thrown over costume altogether, and have set themselves to observe with attention the simple occupations of pastoral life. Mr. R. W. Macbeth is among the few English painters who pursue this course of study with conviction. In too many instances the rendering of peasant character to which Walker and Mason gave the charm of dignified reality has already declined into prettinesses of style which will not bear the test of literal truth. Mr. Macbeth's picture of The Ferry (1407) stands upon a different footing. It is marked by familiar knowledge of the life that it affects to represent, and by a refinement of perception that takes nothing from the vigour of its method. It is to be wished that the painter should make trial of his powers on a larger scale, and that he should give greater prominence to the figures in his design. His landscape, though marked by freshness of impression, is scarcely the strongest element of his work; and such qualities as he can command in this direction would be exhibited with better effect if the background were more distinctly subordinated to the higher interest attaching to the study of human form.

Mention has already been made of the contributions of Sir Frederick Leighton; and, in respect of the elevated ideas in art which they are intended to illustrate, they hold a place of unquestioned distinction in the gallery. No painter of our time maintains a firmer or more constant adherence to those severe principles of design which have received the sanction of great example in the past. Sir Frederick Leighton has never lowered the standard of his work in deference to any popular demand, and for this persistent devotion to his own highest ideals he deserves well of all who share his faith in the power of beauty. But it must be confessed that the particular examples of the present year do not display in the happiest manner the cultivated resources of the artist, and it may even be said that they give unfortunate prominence to the defects and limitations of his style. The sense of vitality, both spiritual and physical, which is an essential ingredient in all great design, is almost painfully deficient in the large composition of The Idyll (197). Even the most abstract image of human life which deliberately avoids all problems of human sentiment must nevertheless possess the stamp of individual character to animate the grace of outward form. Faces that display no momentous feeling should at least exhibit possibilities of suffering or pleasure, and carry the conviction that beneath the calm repose there dwell the fullest capabilities of passion. But in the languor of this graceful design there is no hint of a vigorous life. The colouring, no less than the draughtsmanship, and the forms as well as the faces, are oppressed by the sense of a failing energy and power. That this effect is in some degree the result of deliberate purpose may be judged by the superior animation which is to be found in the President's portrait of himself. Here the colouring has greater strength, and owns a nearer correspondence to nature, and the rendering of points of individual character is remarkably successful. J. COMYNS CARR.

TURNER, GIRTIN, AND COZENS IN THE BALE COLLECTION.

THE great collection formed during some sixty years by Mr. Bale—who died last winter at the age of about eighty-six—has, up to the time of this present writing, been found chiefly remarkable for its rare display of drawings by the earlier English masters; not so much by those intelligent craftsmen who used the medium of water-colour timidly for the purposes of topography, as by those "path-breaking" artists who first applied it to work in which conscious sentiment and studied composition had a part. On Friday and Saturday last we saw sold, at Christie's, many of the finest existing drawings by John Cozens, by Girtin, and by Turner, not to speak of Flaxman's faultless suggestions of designs and of certain completely realised drawings by Peter Dewint, which, by their absolute and equal accomplishment, are allied at all events with the endeavours, if not always with the success, of our actual school of Water-colour.

It is surprising how very little John Cozens is known, and how little he is appreciated even where he is known. The low prices fetched by his drawings in the Bale collection established both facts, or at all events one of them. There exist by him, no doubt, more important isolated drawings than any of his that lay in the portfolios of Mr. Bale, but a more beautiful and representative series of his drawings can hardly have been brought together. What are the reasons for his lack of anything that even remotely approaches popularity? His habitual choice of foreign subjects (he lived chiefly in Rome) can hardly be one of them, for no drawings of Turner are more popular than those which record his vision of Swiss mountains and Italian lakes. But, if the accident of Cozens's choice of outland scenes is not reckoned against him, there is probably reckoned against him his particular selection of themes in lands whose special characteristics are even yet not too familiar to English travellers; and there is certainly reckoned against him his restricted use of his material. Turner, on the Continent, dealt fearlessly, of course, and generally by preference, with natural scenery, and only rarely dealt—as in Arona and the Isola Bella and certain illustrations to Rogers, and in his View from the Boboli Gardens of this very Bale collection—with scenes which have become artistic before ever the hand of the painter has touched them. But Cozens was best inspired, and he was chiefly inspired, by an order of landscape that owes much to the gardener and something to the architect. The appeal of such landscape—in which, when it is transferred to Painting, one art refines upon another—the art of the draughtsman and the colourist upon the art of designer, sculptor, or builder—is necessarily limited. Done in our own day, with the full resources of the palette at the disposal of those few who grapple with it, this landscape—most beautiful when it is most artificial—has some chance of acceptance; but Cozens addressed himself to it with no sense and no command of the completed glory of colour. The Redgraves have rightly described his works as "little more than tinted chiaroscuro"—thinly washed with delicate hues. The large public has no appreciation of these things.

Even when, as in our own day, very noble colour plays its part in them, they are compounded of art alone. And thus we saw lovely drawings like a View in the Ludovici Gardens going at the Bale sale for ten guineas, Temples at Paestum for twenty-seven guineas, and a View in the Gardens of a Palace, Rome, for seventeen.

Girtin comes nearer to the limits of popular understanding, and Mr. Bale's array of Girtins was unexampled—finer, I must think, on the whole, than Mr. Henderson's. And in Girtin, perhaps more than in any other artist—certainly more than in any other artist who worked during so short a while—we see the change gradually coming over the aims and the accomplishments of English water-colour. He began with topography almost—and at the same moment as Turner. He ended, as the wonderful Morpeth Bridge of the Bale collection sufficiently evidences, with what was not topography at all. Atmospheric effect, the breaking-out of sunshine and the hurry of storm, had begun to interest him who had already been interested in the problems of composition, and had solved them, as his exquisite little Durham shows, with learned simplicity. Among Mr. Bale's treasures the Plymouth Harbour showed Girtin at his most topographical—certainly it is topography made clever and pleasant. Morpeth showed him at his most advanced, and, apart from its other virtues, displayed most completely the emancipation which he effected just before his very premature death. Girtin's work, as we saw it in the Bale sketches, is a most quiet marvel of subtle colour and delicate draughtsmanship; the tone subdued and only rightly conventional; the composition studied, yet rarely studied too obviously. His means were larger than Cozens's—another octave had been added to the instrument he played upon—yet even his means, in respect of colour especially, remained short of the fullest, and his greatest art consisted in his performing so much while arousing so little in us the suspicion of the reserve yet laid upon him.

It was Turner, of course, who, when the comrade and the fellow-traveller of his early time had long been dead, threw aside the reserve most absolutely. But of Mr. Bale's Turners, many were sketches executed at a period when the earlier limitations were still confessed, and the work loyally done in subordination to rule. The large group of Turner drawings, daintily outlined and delicately washed, which Mr. Agnew bought on Saturday for sums that seemed curiously low—for prices ranging from fourteen to five-and-forty pounds—suffered, with the large public, even more than the disadvantage which has been spoken of as affecting the drawings of Cozens. The charm of colour—the charm even of vivid effect—was greatly denied them, and there would be a certain amount of affectation in under-estimating the value of such charms. These things were, in some sense, rather preparations for the exercise of Turner's genius than actual efforts of his genius and proofs of it. Exquisitely delicate eye and hand are, however, evidenced in some among them, as where, in the Lago di Como or in the Chiavenna, a flush of timid colour is seen on the mountains, breaking subtly in upon the general grayness. To me, if such drawings are inferior to many in their power to stir, they seem superior in artistic value to the more laboured topographical and architectural ones. There is more of significance and of suggestion in their fewer strokes and their more limited washes.

But interesting as these drawings are, from a certain point of view, Mr. Bale's possession of them would never have made his group of Turners so famous as it was. His most noticeable Turners were certain drawings, long celebrated and historical—all of them engraved, and all engraved skilfully—and some of them felt at once actually to gain in the engraving. The Distant View of Ingleborough from Hornby Castle was the first and the chiefest of these great drawings. Not only was the sum it realised (over two thousand three hundred pounds) a surprise to its spectators—the drawing itself was a surprise. A composition apparently so one-sided, a disposition of country seemingly simple yet in reality so intricate, would have baffled any genius but Turner's. No one else could have rendered such gradations of distance—a country of meadow and river receding, as it were, step by step into a remote space. What was apparent was therefore not the suddenness, but the subtlety, of the change; and—not to speak of the wonderful delicacy of the middle distance, and the perfect proportions of its objects, which the engraver (with the somewhat largish sheep of his central meadows) has perhaps scarcely retained—the manner in which the objects which are high in the foreground assist the composition, and give the key to its scale, is a thing to be noted. Perfectly studied and considered, for instance, are the angles taken by the battlements of Hornby Castle, in their turn now to left and now to right. Nor will the observer of Turner's works, remembering how in the Isis (to quote one example only) Turner has employed the lines of the body of a great bird—its curves only second in subtlety to those of the nude figure—forget to understand that the long trailing tail of the peacock on Hornby wall is not there by chance or by carelessness. Admirable in a hundred points, and uniting so many beauties, this Ingleborough drawing shows, perhaps, the most exquisite of its points in the delicate passage of gray and opal river covered only with soft and transparent shadow. The engraver (C. Heath) has wonderfully rendered this; and indeed his print, both as regards engraving and as regards subject, is among the very best of the masterpieces of the Richmondshire set. In theme, it has the advantage of being less monotonously woodland than are some of that series.

To say nothing of that magnificent drawing of Hastings from the Sea, whose defects, if defects they were, of composition did not prevent its selling for eleven hundred pounds, one must pass on to the two drawings of the Tees and to the drawings done for the Southern Coast. The Tees drawings are companions or pendants. Mr. Bale had long possessed The Fall of the Tees (the subject engraved by Goodall in the England and Wales), and he acquired only three years before his death that Chain Bridge over the Tees which he had long waited for. His earlier possession was the finer drawing, though his later had made, or had had the good fortune to furnish, the most impressive and the most accomplished engraving—a difference which it may be possible to account for by the presence, in the middle distance of the Chain Bridge drawing, of a certain passage of most potent blue, whose seemingly superfluous vigour the engraver has made no effort to convey. If, as I am informed, this blue is somewhat self-assertive—tends to be intensified while all that is around it tends to fade—its presence where it is may well detract a little from the force of the foreground. But, in the engraving, the relations between foreground and middle distance are duly and exquisitely observed.

The highly and fully coloured drawings for the Southern Coast, so far as they were seen in the Bale collection, suggest, for all their consummate qualities, a yet greater perfection in the engraving. Colour, if it is perceived to be in any way unconventional and unnatural, fails to satisfy us as fully as work in black and white, which is confessedly conventional or rather suggestive—which only attempts to translate, while the other seeks to actually imitate. And I cannot help thinking that the sky and sea of the Weymouth drawing, with their sky-blue and their peacock-blue in close juxtaposition, satisfy less completely than the sky and sea of the Weymouth engraving, which in a fine impression are so marvellously charged with sunshine and light. Of the Lyme Regis drawing of the same series (the Southern Coast) much might be written, and so also of the Rye. But if I, for my part, began about them here, it would only be with the result of wrongly conveying some fancy of mine as to their deficiencies or defects, while I should perforce leave unexpressed my sense of their accomplished power. It is better then to stop.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

THE INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

At the United Arts Gallery, three well-lighted rooms just opened in New Bond Street, is now to be seen the first exhibition of the London International Exhibition Society. It is somewhat small for its title; and, of the goodly names which swell the list of the honorary members of the society, a great many of the best-known artists do not contribute to the exhibition. There is, notwithstanding, a very pleasant and interesting assemblage of pictures; and one of the members—Mr. Tristram Ellis—does much to atone for the absence of some of his colleagues by the unusual number, beauty, and variety of his drawings, taken during a recent tour through Northern Syria and Kurdistan, by the Tigris to Mosul and Baghdad, and back across the Desert by the Euphrates and Palmyra to Damascus over the Anti-Lebanon to Baalbek and Beyrout.

Perhaps the most masterly of the pictures are those of M. Gussow. As to that in the first room, in which An Architect, spectacles on nose, is somewhat inconveniently examining some designs, our admiration for its expression and clever execution is somewhat marred by the impertinence of the flaming background of bright yellow. Nothing, however, interferes with our appreciation of his pictures in the next room. The Old Folks at Home is a delightful piece of pure sentiment; and Bygone Days, though not so interesting, is of the three perhaps the most remarkable for the force and skill of the painting. Another masterpiece, but of more reserved art, is M. D. A. C. Artz's The Orphanage of Katwyk, Holland. Whether it be the want of parents, or the depressing effect of sewing, we do not know; but these orphans seem to be having a sad time of it. Intentionally or not, it is a pathetic picture, and one, moreover, admirable technically. More inspiring is M. G. B. Quadroni's Return from Hunting, in which the hunters are devouring with gusto their apparently not very sumptuous repast. A contrast, and not a very pleasant one, is M. Schultz-Briesen's A Dainty Morsel, a very clever picture, in which a terrible gourmet is cutting with uctuous pleasure a tit-bit from a roast bird, surrounded by an admiring audience. Hunger is certainly optimum condimentum in a moral as well as a physical sense. In Checkmated, M. Chiorici shows us a boy making a frightful face at a cat while he is feeding and protecting the chickens. It is painted with his usual skill and finish.

M. Antonio Casanova's well-known picture of The Hero of the Fête is here, with its humorous pas de deux between an old monk and a tall young lady in white satin, with her small head and long arms. It is rich in humour and gay in colour—a chef-d'œuvre of the Fortuny school. Another picture excellent for character is M. Ch. Cederstrom's Checkmate (127); and there are many more pictures which we should wish to characterise at greater length than space allows. Among these we may mention M. Nicola Massic's Night Journey in Russia (216),

F. König's A May Morning (201), H. Flugge's A Christmas Eve, Ferdinand Keller's The Last Sou (180), Henri Pison's In the Bois de la Cambre (166), Alfred Seifert's The Rose (137), E. Wauter's Muleteers of Toledo (107)—a very strong and honest piece of work—and A. Schill's clever little humorous scenes (136, 139, &c.). The names of Munthé, Seignac, Bource, Richter, Olafson, Heffner, Schultze, and many more we could give are sufficient guarantees of the generally high quality of the oil pictures.

This level is sustained in the water-colour room, which contains an exceptionally fine drawing by H. Valkenburg, The Evening Meal in a Dutch Homestead (272). The chief attraction of this room is, however, Mr. Tristram Ellis's collection of drawings to which we have already alluded. Though almost without an exception executed "on the spot," they have all the care and finish of studio work, and are one and all distinguished no less by their pure beauty of colour than their sense of composition, so that the slightest of them is a picture as well as a study. Whether it be a large composition of camels in the Desert, a distant view of white Damascus tinged with greenery and crowned with blue sky, the brilliant desolation of the Dead Sea, a Mosul girl in her robe of beautiful gray blue, the gaily tiled and mosaicked entry of the Consulate of Damascus, the gaudy domes of Baghdad, the liquid blues of the Mediterranean, or the more sober waves and skies of our own colder clime, Mr. Tristram Ellis is equally at home, and, as it seems to us, never at fault.

When we think of other artists who have made similar sketching tours, such as David Roberts or Muller, we can remember none who has shown such a variety of well-trained skill, so little mannerism, and such taste in selection as Mr. Tristram Ellis; none who has enabled us to see so plainly so much of what he has seen just as he saw it with his artist's eye. There are not wanting traces of humour, as in The Country Cousin; and in holding the mirror up to the varied aspects of Nature he has caught her poetry as well as her facts; but we are grateful to him that he has allowed no personal sentiment of either kind, no favourite trick of execution, no impatience of difficulty, to come between us and the things which he saw.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

AN ALLEGED PICTURE OF MICHEL-ANGELO.

A PICTURE has lately been seen in Florence which enjoyed the reputation during a long period of being a true work of Michelangelo. Vasari relates, as is well known, that the youthful Buonarroti, when in the studio of Ghirlandaio, copied a print of "Martino Tedesco" with extraordinary skill, the subject represented being St. Anthony beaten by devils. Having drawn it with the pen he painted it with colours, and the better to execute the fish-like demons he purchased fish in the market that he might study their forms and scales. It is added that this picture brought him reputation. In the Le Monnier edition of Vasari's works there is a note, quoting Carlo Bianconi, to the effect that he saw at Bologna in 1802 the copy which Michelangelo made of the print of Martin Schöngauer which he had painted "with great diligence and skill;" and Gaetano Giovellani, who saw it in 1840, describes it as a "fine thing," and gives its size as about twice and a-half that of the original print.

This picture has come into the market; and, owing to the general impression of its interest and value, the Italian Government decided that before permission could be given for its exportation it must be examined by the Commissioners, who are at present engaged reviewing the numerous works of art which have been stored in the Magazines of the Uffizi; and it has been brought to Florence with that object.

I have long desired to see this picture, and, having made application, was courteously permitted to do so. It is very difficult to understand how it is that such extraordinary statements in favour of the truthfulness and importance of really bad works of art are transmitted from generation to generation by writers of repute. The difficulty is exemplified in a very remarkable way by this miserable daub, painted in oil-colour at a comparatively late period, abominably drawn, and possessed of no single quality referable to the period of Michelangelo or to his hand. It is so bad in every respect that it is wonderful how anyone, however ignorant of old art, could be for a moment misled. The exercise of a very ordinary amount of common-sense and observation ought to have prevented so absurd an error of judgment. Having expressed my opinion and regret, I left, and the picture was placed before the Commissioners, who were quite unanimous in their judgment of its worthlessness. Thus one more traditional work erroneously connected with the great name of Michelangelo is disposed of.

It occurred to me from certain appearances that it might possibly be the production of one of those infamous restorers who have destroyed such an enormous number of fine pictures in Italy, and that perhaps the original exists beneath the visible scarecrow. But from Vasari's description it may be fairly inferred that Michelangelo's youthful work was in reality the same size as the engraving, whereas this is considerably larger; it is also painted on walnut, which is not the wood used for picture-panels in the fifteenth century. This argument need not, however, be urged, the late period at which this thing has been produced being sufficiently evident. I have heard that there are duplicates in various places. If such is the case it shows that the picture by Michelangelo was known, and that its fame led to the multiplication of copies in the usual way. The subject is not one which any painter would be likely spontaneously to select, and the celebrity of the original alone could have led to repetitions. That original is now lost, and the picture which for so long a time has usurped its place remains an example of credulity and error.

C. HEATH WILSON.

OBITUARY.

MR. HENRY HUME, who died of a fever on the 25th ult., was a young artist of great promise. Though but twenty-three years of age, he had exhibited at the Royal Academy about five years ago; and this year also he has a picture hung. Chiefly a landscape painter, he had lately turned with success to figure and portrait painting, showing a rich and refined feeling for colour.

THE well-known art-writer and art-editor, M. Paul Chéron, died on May 5. He was one of the oldest and most constant contributors to the Gazette des Beaux-Arts; and the Chronique des Arts consecrates a long notice this week to his memory.

THE death is announced of F. Sans, director of the museum at Madrid, and one of the chief of modern Spanish painters.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

A MEETING was held on the 11th inst. at the Mansion House, Dublin, the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor taking the chair, to inaugurate the "Art Association of Ireland." The association proposes to acquire by purchase suitable examples of modern British and Continental pictures and sculptures for a permanent gallery in Dublin; to provide and organise in Dublin and other suitable localities exhibitions of loan collections of works of art; and to afford lovers of art an opportunity of presenting or bequeathing examples of modern art to the nation through the medium of the association. The association is supported by voluntary contributions.

AN exhibition of art needlework has been held in Dublin, the use of St. Patrick's Hall having been kindly granted for the purpose of the exhibition by their Excellencies the Lord-Lieutenant and the Countess Cowper.

THE following artists have accepted the invitation of the Arts Committee of the Liverpool Corporation to assist them in selecting and hanging the pictures for the ensuing Autumn Exhibition at the Walker Art Gallery, viz.:—Messrs. H. T. Wells, R.A., W. F. Yeames, R.A., R. T. Minshull, and W. J. J. C. Bond.

THE Melbourne International has extended the fame of British artists, as well as of British manufacturers. While Mr. Seymour Lucas' picture of The Gordon Riots, as we announced some time ago, has been purchased for the Colonial Gallery at Melbourne itself, we now hear that Mr. Colin Hunter's Salmon Fishers has been acquired by the Sydney Gallery.

AT Messrs. Colnaghi's (Pall Mall) is now to be seen the late George Mason's beautiful picture of Evening, which is about to be etched by M. C. Waltner. It will be a task of no usual difficulty to render in black and white the sentiment and tone of this lovely work; but M. Waltner, in his interpretations of many masters, modern and old, has shown so complete a sympathy with works of the most varied kind that success is almost assured. The same publishers have recently issued an etching by the same hand of Gainsborough's famous portrait of Mrs. Graham, which, while it reproduces the free sure touch of the artist in the dress and background, gives the finished contours of the face with surprising roundness and delicacy. It forms an admirable pendant to M. Waltner's splendid etching of The Blue Boy. A little etching after a miniature by Cosway, and called Evelina, also by M. Waltner, shows that this art is capable of rivaling the most delicate engraving by Bartolozzi. It is also published by Messrs. Colnaghi.

AT the Librairie de l'Art, 134 New Bond Street, is a small exhibition of pictures and water-colour drawings by French and other foreign artists, two of which at least have already been etched. These are L'Attente, a group of women on the shore watching a gray sea rolling in beneath the mist, by M. Ulysse Butin; and Sur la Falaise, a very modern young lady perched on a cliff, painted by M. E. Duez. The collection includes some clever drawings by MM. Antonio Casanova, E. Dantan, Maurice Poirson, P. de Tommasi, M. Ramirez, C. Destrem, Edouard Detaille, Jean Beraud, J. F. Rafaelli, C. Lapostollet, and others.

THE Metropolitan Museum of Fine Art at New York is said to be without any collection of casts or books; the Astor Library is also signally deficient in works relating to the arts.

DR. ALFRED WIEDEMANN, of Leipzig, who is an Egyptological pupil of Prof. Ebers, has spent the winter and early spring in Egypt, and is said to have brought back some very important results.

PROF. G. MASPERO has returned from a tour of archaeological inspection in Upper Egypt.

DR. CHARLES WALDSTEIN, who has been engaged for some time as Lecturer on Classical Art under the auspices of the Cambridge University Board of Classical Studies, will commence a short course of lectures on Greek Sculpture at King's College on Tuesday, the 31st inst., at 3.15 p.m., to be continued on the three following Tuesdays, and Fridays, June 10 and 17. The lectures will have special reference to the classical monuments in the British Museum, and two will be given at the Museum. The lecturer will treat the subject in an elementary manner, and it is hoped that the class will be recruited from the higher forms of the schools in or near London.

THE Council of Fine Arts have decided that, although the Salon has passed out of the jurisdiction of the Government, the Prix de Salon shall not be withdrawn. This prize, it will be remembered, was instituted a few years ago for enabling a young artist of merit to study in Italy or the Netherlands during a period of three years. The period has now been limited to two years, but the prix has been retained; and, besides, a sum has been voted for giving what are called bourses de voyage to promising young artists to assist them in developing their talent by means of foreign travel.

STUDENTS and historians of the French Revolution will find a vast amount of curious material now collected at the Hôtel Carnavalet, where has lately been formed a Musée de l'Époque révolutionnaire, consisting of various collections of arms, books, engravings, faïence, coins, &c., all having relation to the Revolution. The greater part of the objects exhibited are the gift of M. de Liesville to the city of Paris; but the city has besides purchased different collections, and has formed altogether a very interesting historical museum.

THE beautiful exhibition of ancient works of art and manufacture opened by the Donatello Society in the Refectory of Sta. Croce must soon close. This exhibition, on a small scale, contained many rare treasures of art, and deserved close inspection; but, like the exhibition of modern paintings opened by the same society, it has been financially a total failure. The payment of a franc demanded at the door is quite sufficient to deter the penurious Florentines from visiting any exhibition of works of art, however beautiful these may be. There can be no doubt that this people, once so famous in art, has become indifferent to its works, except as objects of merchandise. Experience has shown that it is utterly useless for foreign artists to send their works to Florence.

A GRATUITOUS course of lessons in photography is now being given at the Musée Royal de l'Industrie at Brussels, with special reference to the applications of photography to industry, education, science, and art.

WE have received the second part of the Jahrbuch of the Royal Prussian art collections. These Jahrbücher contain not merely the official report of all the additions and alterations made in the various departments, but likewise long and valuable studies by competent writers on the objects of most interest recently added. Thus we have in the present number a learned treatise by Dr. W. Bode on the "Italian Sculpture of the Renaissance," dealing especially with the statue of the youthful John the Baptist with which formerly Donatello was accredited, though most authorities now agree in restoring it to Michelangelo. Dr. W. Bode thinks that there is no doubt of its being one of his youthful works. The picture generally known by the name of Neptune and Amphitrite, by Rubens, receives most careful examination from Dr. Julius Meyer, who is of opinion that the female figure is not Amphitrite, but Libya, and that the subject is meant to represent the union of Poseidon and Libya, the daughter of Memphis. Other critical articles are to be found in this big Jahrbuch, but space will not allow us to do more than mention one on "Italian Satirical Coins of the Fifteenth Century," by Julius Friedländer. This is illustrated by five sheets of photographic reproductions of these coins, some of which possess considerable interest in relation to the history of culture.

THE publishing house of Hachette announce an important work, entitled Histoire de l'Art dans l'Antiquité, by MM. Georges Perrot and Charles Chipiez, the former the well-known member of the Institute, the latter an architect whose treatise upon the origin of the Greek orders of architecture was most favourably received. Taking Greek art as the centre of their subject, the joint-authors will go backwards to Egypt, Assyria, and Asia Minor, and forwards to Etruria and Rome. The numerous illustrations have been prepared with great care and expense. Those exhibiting ancient paintings will be appropriately coloured. The work will be published in parts, issued weekly, about three hundred in all; and it is expected to make finally five or six volumes.

THE Revue Critique states that its contributor, M. Spyr. Lambros, has discovered upon many of the ancient monuments at Athens inscriptions, almost illegible, which throw light upon the history of the city in the Middle Ages and under Turkish rule.

DR. K. FÖRSTER, the President of the Society of Antiquaries at Dresden, has found in the castle of Count Rothenburg a complete pack of German playing-cards, thirty-six in number, engraved on silver plates, and enamelled in gold. From the monogram they are identified as the workmanship of G. H. Blech, a famous goldsmith and engraver at Nuremberg in the middle of the seventeenth century.

AMONG the many art-productions that have appeared in Germany to commemorate the completion last year of Cologne Cathedral, perhaps the finest is an etching, by B. Mannfeld, just published by E. Richter, of Dresden. It shows the cathedral from the south, altogether free from the wooden structure round the two spires which is only now in course of being removed. At the foot is printed a view of the building as it stood in 1824. This etching is now being exhibited in the rooms of the Royal Academy on the Brühlische Terrasse, at Dresden, where it attracts great and deserved admiration. No less an authority than Prof. W. Lübke has called it "one of the grandest and most brilliant productions of the etching needle." It is published in five editions, ranging in price from eighty to fifteen marks.

THE STAGE.

ALMOST the only thing upon the stage about which it is not dangerous to prophesy is a new piece at the Criterion. It is pretty sure to be called a comedy, and it is pretty sure to prove an agreeable farce. Its principal character will be a "butterfly husband," who is tired of domesticity, but is to the last degree energetic in the pursuit of intrigue. Mr. Charles Wyndham will appear in it. In the course of a couple of hours everybody on the stage will have made an awkward mistake leading to terrible consequences, and nearly all of the Ten Commandments will have been broken with a light heart. The Criterion is the Palais Royal of London, but, though its incidents are sometimes risky, the acting is never coarse. Indeed, the proceedings of humanity at the Criterion are wrongly judged when they are judged by ordinary standards of conduct. The licence of farce must in fairness be extended to them. The new piece at the Criterion, produced on Tuesday night, does not differ very materially from the others to which we have been accustomed. It is called Butterfly Fever and is skilfully adapted by Mr. James Mortimer from Le Papillon, a light comedy which, though it happened to be produced at the Gymnase, really savours more of the Palais Royal. Mr. Wyndham bustles adroitly through the part of one Montague Leyton, the butterfly husband. Mr. Standing appears as a ferocious soldier, and Miss Eastlake is always a graceful and a refined heroine.

OF light pieces lately acted at our theatres, La Boulangère at the Globe is certainly one of the brightest and most amusing. That it takes three hours to play instead of two is indeed its misfortune, and that of those who see it, for the very simple reason that the light opera was never yet invented which can interest people completely during three hours, the interest of close and definite story being entirely essential to a three-hours' play, and there being no story at all that is worth following in any comic opera. But, this objection apart, La Boulangère is very funny, pretty, and successful. The truly comic element, to begin with, is more prominent than in most light operas; and its prominence is due not so much to the author of the music or of the words as to the comic capacity of three actors, Mr. Paulton, Mr. Ashford, and the extraordinary mimic who acts two characters at the same time, and makes them quarrel both in Italian and in German—that is, in notes that come from the back of the throat and in notes that come from the depths of the chest. Mr. Paulton's serious and almost sad fashion of saying humorous things with unmoved and heavy countenance is exceedingly effective. He would make an excellent Dogberry. Indeed, it is the character of Dogberry with his fussiness that underlies every modern part that Mr. Paulton plays. And, if Mr. Paulton is the Dogberry of Much Ado, Mr. Ashford—his feeble servant in the comic opera now under notice—is the typical Slender of The Merry Wives. The women's parts do not strike us generally as so well done. If M^{de} Amadi and Miss Maud Taylor may be pronounced just adequate to their parts, that is certainly all that may be said. Miss Wadman is graceful, and almost caline—the quality is rare in English-women; rare, indeed, outside of France. Miss Evelyn walks gracefully through a part which is possibly wanting in the opportunity for vivacity. The music itself is of the most agreeable after-dinner sort. The scenery and costumes, and even the sufficiently agreeable personages of the chorus and ballet, realise fairly enough the period at which the opera is placed—that of the minority of Louis Quinze, the brilliant days of the Regency. Of ballet proper there is none; but a writer of a suggestive article in the Cornhill Magazine, a while ago, on the subject of the dance, would have been pleased with what there is in the place of it. Graceful persons, robed in long gowns and Watteau sacques, move slowly to old-world tunes. As for the satire upon the aesthetes with which the play at the Globe concludes, that is dragged in by the head and shoulders, and has no business to be there at all. The ordered art of Louis Quinze is not to be disturbed by the incursion of modern "aestheticism." There was plenty of art in the period of Louis Quinze. In the period of Louis Quinze one could be "dado-less," and yet not wholly contemptible. The satire is pointless, but it comes at the end of a very pretty piece.

MUSIC.

RICHTER CONCERTS, ETC.

HERR RICHTER is unquestionably one of the greatest of living conductors, and full well did he merit the enthusiastic reception given to him both by public and performers at the first Richter Concert of the present season (May 9). A good beginning has been made: the choral symphony, the triumph of last year, was repeated; and the splendid performance of Schumann's noble symphony in C at the second concert (last Monday) gave another brilliant proof of Herr Richter's marvellous ability and talent as a chef-d'orchestre. He conducts everything without music, and for this we ought scarcely to praise him, for it is a bad and dangerous example. Yet there is no doubt that in his case the absence of a score is an advantage. He remembers all the music down to the minutest details, and can, therefore, devote his undivided attention to the orchestra. The magic influence of this immediate and constant supervision is certainly felt by all the performers; and the end, we think, justifies the means. The programmes of the two first concerts contained but two novelties. First, a concerto by Bach—or, rather, the principal violin part of an unknown sonata by that composer, with a five-part accompaniment for strings added by Herr Hellmesberger, of Vienna. The work is not in any way remarkable, and must have been chosen to show off the excellent qualities of the stringed band. The second novelty was by Liszt. It is entitled Mephisto Walzer (from Zwei Episoden aus Lenau's Faust). The second of these two episodes, and the one chosen for performance, is known as "Der Tanz in der Dorfschenke" ("The Dance in the Tavern"), taken from Faust, a dramatic poem by Lenau, an Hungarian poet born in 1802, and musically illustrated by Liszt. It is a wild and unsatisfactory piece of programme-music, and we cannot think that the cause of this genre of music will be advanced by such an unaesthetic specimen. The second concert included Brahms' clover Academic Festival overture, constructed on German student-songs, first performed in England at Mr. Manns' benefit concert on April 30, and Wagner's Siegfried Idyll. We would particularly mention the moderate length of the programmes—both concerts, commencing at eight o'clock, were over before ten. The attendance on each occasion was very good.

A noteworthy feature at the second Special Crystal Palace Concert last week was the performance of Joachim Raff's symphony in C, No. 2 (op. 140). This prolific composer has already published nine, and of these the second and fourth are certainly the finest. It is curious that only these two may be regarded as "absolute" music; all the others have programmes or inscriptions. The analyst of the second symphony, however, truly remarks that, though the composer has not in this case furnished us with any explanation, it by no means follows that it does not rest upon a poetical basis. Raff's latest symphonies, the eighth and ninth, have recently been heard at the Palace, but the fourth has only been played there once, and the second for the first time last Saturday. The form of the work throughout is clear and concise, the themes are simple and melodious, and the orchestration pleasing and effective. Mr. Prout has justly observed in an article on Raff's first six symphonies that "since Beethoven nobody has equalled him in the absolute mastery of thematic treatment;" and in this second symphony, particularly in the first and last movements, Raff's powers of development are seen at their best. Portions of the themes combined in the most ingenious manner, clever canonic imitations, and contrapuntal devices of all kinds serve to excite the interest of the attentive listener, and to call forth the admiration of musicians. The rendering of the work conducted by Mr. Manns was extremely good. M. Carl Heymann made his first appearance in England at this concert, and played Chopin's concerto in E (op. 11). He has a delicate touch and excellent mechanism, but his interpretation of the concerto was not good; his manner and general style of playing were very peculiar, so that the performance was rather amusing than profitable.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

13, Great Marlborough-street.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

CATHARINE of ARAGON, and

the SOURCES of the ENGLISH REFORMATION. Edited from the French of ALBERT DU BOIS, with Notes, by CHARLOTTE M. YONOR, Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe," &c. 2 vols., 21s.

LIFE in WESTERN INDIA. By

Mrs. GUTHRIE, Author of "Through Russia," "My Year in an Indian Fort," &c. 2 vols., with Illustrations, 21s.

PLAYS, PLAYERS, and PLAY-

HOUSES, at HOME and ABROAD; with Anecdotes of the Drama and the Stage. By LORD WILLIAM PITT LENOX. 2 vols., 21s.

OUR HOLIDAY in the EAST.

By Mrs. GEORGE SUMNER. Edited by the Rev. G. H. SUMNER, Hon. Canon of Winchester. 8vo, with Illustrations, 15s.
"Mrs. Sumner's account of tent-life in the Holy Land is very delightful reading."—Academy.

LODGE'S PEERAGE and

BARONETAGE for 1881. Under the Especial Patronage of HER MAJESTY. Corrected by the Nobility. Fifth Edition. 1 vol., with the Arms beautifully engraved, 31s. 6d., bound, gilt edges.

THE NEW NOVELS.

THE FUTURE MARQUIS. By

CATHARINE CHILDAR. 3 vols.

SYDNEY. By Georgiana M. Craik,

Author of "Dorcas," "Anne Warwick," &c. 3 vols.

HARRY JOSCELYN. By Mrs.

OLIPHANT, Author of "Chronicles of Carlingford," &c. 3 vols.
"This book is very clever and entertaining. The characters are good, and every page abounds in those little touches of true and subtle observation in which Mrs. Oliphant excels."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"There are chapters in 'Harry Joscelyn' that may rank with some of the best from Mrs. Oliphant's pen. The portraits of Joan and Ralph Joscelyn are admirable."—St. James's Gazette.
"Mrs. Oliphant presents in these volumes a succession of studies, worked out with great care, and evidencing her own peculiar skill."—Sat. Rev.

LOVE-KNOTS. By the Author of

"URSULA'S LOVE STORY," &c. 3 vols.
"There is a good deal of interest in these cleverly knitted 'Love-knots.'"—Athenaeum.
"A pleasant, healthy novel, full of life and spirit."—Sunday Times.

BESIDE the RIVER. By Mrs.

MACQUOID, Author of "Patty," &c. 3 vols.
"We are inclined to rank this as the best of Mrs. Macquoid's novels; her stories are always entertaining."—Academy.

HIS LITTLE MOTHER. By the AUTHOR of "JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN." 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

"A book that will be read with interest, and that cannot be lightly forgotten."—St. James's Gazette.

AMONG the HILLS. By E. Frances

POYNTER, Author of "My Little Lady," &c. 2 vols. [Next week.]

CHEAP EDITIONS.

Each Work complete in 1 vol., price 5s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by Sir J. GILBERT MILLAIS, HUNT, LEECH, POYNTER, FOSTER, TENNIEL, SANDYS, E. HUGHES, SAMBOURNE, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S

STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS OF POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

- | | |
|--|---|
| Sam Slick's Nature and Human Nature. | Sam Slick's American Humour. |
| John Halifax, Gentleman. | Barbara's History. By Amelia B. Edwards. |
| The Crescent and the Cross. By Eliot Warburton. | Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant. |
| Nathalie. By Miss Kavanagh. | No Church. |
| A Woman's Thoughts about Women. By the Author of 'John Halifax.' | Christian's Mistake. By the Author of 'John Halifax.' |
| Adam Greaves. By Mrs. Oliphant. | Alec Forbes. By George MacDonald, LL.D. |
| Sam Slick's Wise Sayings. | Agnes. By Mrs. Oliphant. |
| Cardinal Wiseman's Pope. | A Noble Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.' |
| A Life for a Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.' | Dixon's New America. |
| Leigh Hunt's Old Court Suburb. | Robert Falconer. By George MacDonald, LL.D. |
| Margaret and her Bridesmaids. | The Woman's Kingdom. By the Author of 'John Halifax.' |
| Sam Slick's Old Judge. | Annals of an Eventful Life. By G. W. Dasent, D.C.L. |
| Barbican. By Eliot Warburton. | David Elphinstone. By George MacDonald, LL.D. |
| Sir B. Burke's Family Romance. | A Brave Lady. By the Author of 'John Halifax.' |
| The Laird of Norlaw. By Mrs. Oliphant. | Hannah. By the Author of 'John Halifax.' |
| The Englishwoman in Italy. | Sam Slick's Americans at Home. |
| Nothing New. By the Author of 'John Halifax.' | The Unkind Word. By the Author of 'John Halifax.' |
| Freer's Life of Jeanne d'Albret. | A Rose in June. By Mrs. Oliphant. |
| The Valley of a Hundred Fires. | My Little Lady. By E. Frances Poynter. |
| Burke's Romance of the Forum. | Phoebe Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant. |
| Adèle. By Miss Kavanagh. | Life of Marie Antoinette. By Professor C. D. Yonge. |
| Studies from Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.' | Sir Glibbie. By George MacDonald, LL.D. |
| Grandmother's Money. | Young Mrs. Jardine. By the Author of 'John Halifax.' |
| Jenkinson's Book about Doctors. | |
| Mistress and Maid. By the Author of 'John Halifax.' | |
| Les Misérables. By Victor Hugo. | |
| St. Olave's. | |
| Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton. | |

THE NEW VOLUME (NOW READY)

CONTAINS

LORD BRACKENBURY.

By AMELIA B. EDWARDS,
Author of "Barbara's History," &c.

On or about the 1st of June will be published,

Post 8vo, 192 pp., cloth, price 5s.

THE OCCULT WORLD.

By A. P. SINNETT.

A Remarkable Record of Experiences and Research in connexion with the Occult Science of the East.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

BIBLE REVISION.

Just published, 8vo, roan, 4s. 6d.

THE HOLY BIBLE. Translated by SAMUEL SHARPE. Being a Revision of the Authorised English Version. Fourth Edition of the Old Testament, Eighth Edition of the New Testament. 8vo, roan, price 4s. 6d.

Also, Fourteenth Thousand, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

THE NEW TESTAMENT. Translated from Griesbach's Text by S. SHARPE, Author of "The History of Egypt." WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 29, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

Sent post-free by the (Edinburgh) Publishers.

THE REVISED NEW TESTAMENT

anticipated in its Chief Renderings by YOUNG'S "LITERAL TRANSLATION of the BIBLE," in passages selected (by Prof. ROBERTS) to show the Character of the "REVISED" Version.
SPECIMENS of YOUNG'S "LITERAL TRANSLATION of the BIBLE." Second Edition, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 12s., sewed, 12s., free by post. With Recommendations of Professors, Clergymen, and Reviewers of all Evangelical Bodies. Also of the "ANALYTICAL CONCORDANCE to the BIBLE," 4to, 36s. to 63s., according to Contents and Binding.

Edinburgh: G. A. YOUNG & CO., 18, Nicolson-street; London: HODDER & STOUGHTON; and all Booksellers.

Now ready, 8vo, 18s.

THE ANNUAL REGISTER: a Review of Public Events at Home and Abroad for the Year 1880. New Series. London: RIVINGTONS, Waterloo-place, Pall Mall; And the other Proprietors.

Just published, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

INDOORS and OUT: Poems. By E. WORDSWORTH. London: HATCHARDS, 187, Piccadilly.

Just published, price 5s.

ST. GILES' LECTURES—FIRST SERIES.

THE SCOTTISH CHURCH, From the Earliest Times to 1881. WITH HISTORY OF ST. GILES' CATHEDRAL.

Edinburgh and London: W. & R. CHAMBERS.

BIBLE REVISION

THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA:

The Six Principal English Versions of the New Testament, in parallel columns, beneath the Greek Original Text. Wiclif, 1380.—Tyndale, 1534.—Crammer, 1539.—Geneva, 1557.—Bishops, 1582.—Authorised, 1611. 1 very handsome vol., 4to, 22 2s.; or Morocco, gilt edges.

"In form and substance it is an admirable present for any clergyman."—Observer.

London: S. BAOSTON & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row. And sold by all Booksellers.

MAP of a HUNDRED SQUARE MILES

ROUND AVEBURY, WILTSHIRE; with a KEY to the BRITISH and ROMAN ANTIQUITIES. By the Rev. A. C. SMITH, Rector of Yatesbury, Wilts; Hon. Secretary of the Wilts Archaeological and Natural History Society.

The above work will consist of two parts:—

First, THE GREAT MAP, 78 in. by 48 in., on the scale of 36 square inches to the mile, showing all the British and Roman Earth- and Stone-Works, printed in six colours.

Second, THE KEY, in large 4to, containing the Great Map in Sections, with accompanying descriptive letterpress and References to the best authorities, Views, Plans, &c.

The work, constituting a permanent record of one of the most important Archaeological districts in Europe, has been twenty-five years in preparation, and will be published and issued to subscribers by the Marlborough College Natural History Society.

For Prospectus, giving full particulars and the opinions of antiquaries who have seen the work, apply to the Rev. J. A. FRESTON, The Green, Marlborough.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for MAY contains—Verdi's Opera, "Simon Boccanegra," at the Scala di Milan—The Music of Iworsk—The Great Composers: Berlioz—Mr. Pears the Musician, by F. Huffer—"Fast Hours"—Sullivan's New Opera—Monday Popular, Crystal Palace, and Bach Choir Concerts, &c.—Royal Italian Opera—Occasional Notes, Foreign and Country News, Reviews, Correspondence, &c. Price 3d.; post-free, 4d. Annual subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for MAY

contains—"The Son of God goes forth to War" ("St. Ann's Tune"), by ARTHUR STUBBS, and "God so loved the World," Anthem, by Sir JOHN GOSWOLD. Price 1d. London: NOVELLO, EWER, & CO., 1, Berners-street, W., and 80 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

NOW READY.

1 vol., cloth, price 6s.

THE MARRIAGE OF TIME:

A RHYMED STORY.

BY

AMBOFILIIUS.

PROEM.

Walk in, fair Reader, and peruse my lines,
Be patient when you light on what's amiss,
And don't forget, when my poor Muse declines,
Pacile consilia damus aliis.

London: TINSLEY BROTHERS, 8, Catherine-street, Strand.

DE LA RUE & CO.'S ANNOUNCE-

MENTS.—BUNHILL ROW, LONDON, E.C.

Just out, demy 8vo, cloth, extra gilt, price 21s., with a Portrait, and Map of the Country.

COLONEL GORDON in CENTRAL

AFRICA, 1874-1879. From Original Letters and Documents. Edited by GEORGE HERBERT HILL, D.C.L., Author of "The Life of Sir Rowland Hill, K.C.B.," &c.

In 2 handsome vols., demy 8vo, price 32s., with a Portrait by Paul Hagon, and other Illustrations.

THE LIFE of SIR ROWLAND HILL, K.C.B., and the HISTORY of PENNY POSTAGE. By Sir ROWLAND HILL, and his Nephew, GEORGE HERBERT HILL, D.C.L., &c.

With Maps and numerous Original Etchings on Stone.

THE SHORES and CITIES of the BODEN

SEE. By S. J. CAPPER. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 16s.

* Forms an Excellent Guide Book to the District.

Just out, crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

HISTORY of GERMANY: Political,

Social, and Literary, brought down to the Present Day. By the Rev. Dr. E. COUGHAN BREWER, Trinity Hall, Cambridge; Author of "History of France," "Guide to Science," &c., &c.

Just out, Thirteenth Edition, 8vo, cloth, gilt extra, price 5s.

THE LAWS and PRINCIPLES of WHIST:

the Standard Work on Whist. By "CAVENISH." Greatly Enlarged and Revised throughout.

New and Cheaper Edition, crown 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

BILLIARDS. By J. BENNETT (Champion). Edited by "CAVENISH." With upwards of 200 Illustrations.

A New and Improved Edition, cap. 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

LAWS of SHORT WHIST, and a TREATISE on the GAME.

By JAMES CLAY.

RARE ETCHINGS, ENGRAVINGS, and

DRAWINGS by the most esteemed OLD MASTERS may be obtained at GEORGE LOVE'S OLD PRINT SHOP, 81, DUNHILL ROW, LONDON. The Engravings, &c., are in fine condition, and have formed portions of the most celebrated collections. A Catalogue of a small portion of the Stock will be sent on receipt of two penny postage stamps.

* Established above 60 years.

TO PROPRIETORS of NEWSPAPERS

and PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, Brief News & Opinion, the Furniture Gazette, the Review, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPLETE, ECONOMIC, and PUNCTUAL PRODUCTION of PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether illustrated or plain. Estimates furnished to Proprietors of New Periodicals, for either Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—74 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

NEWSPAPERS and PERIODICALS

PRINTED by FAST (ROTARY) MACHINERY,—MANAGER, Fleet Printing Works, 14, Whitechapel-street, E.C.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

TO-NIGHT, ADRIENNE LECOUREUR, in which Madame MODRESKA will appear, will be reproduced for SEVEN NIGHTS ONLY. LAST NIGHT of Madame MODRESKA at this Theatre. Mr. Barrett has the pleasure to announce that he has arranged for the appearance, at this Theatre, of the popular artist, Miss MARIE LITTON, and the whole of her company, in a series of performances of Old English Comedies, commencing on MONDAY, JUNE 6TH, with

THE BUSKIDY.

Preceded by ONE TOUCH OF NATURE.

Sets can be booked, both at the Court and Princess's Theatre box-offices, and at all the Libraries.

DURRY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

O THE LLO.

TO-NIGHT, the LAST NIGHT of Mr. JOHN McCULLOUGH'S engagement. OTHELLO—Mr. JOHN McCULLOUGH. IAGO—Mr. HERMANN VEZIN. DESDEMONA—Miss BELLA PATEMAN. EMILIA—Mrs. ARTHUR STIRLING.

Prabauth—Mr. John Hyder; Cassio—Mr. J. H. Barnes; Roderigo—Mr. Augustus Harris; Montano—Mr. A. Andrews.

THE MEININGEN COURT COMPANY will, under the gracious patronage of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, appear at this Theatre for SIX WEEKS, commencing MONDAY, MAY 30TH, on which night JULIUS CAESAR will be produced, under the direction of HER CHORON.

TUESDAY, MAY 31ST, TWELFTH NIGHT.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 1ST, JULIUS CAESAR.

Box-office now open.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.30. HESTER'S MYSTERY.

At 8, a new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, called THE UPPER CRUST.

Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Hillington, E. W. Garden, G. Shelton, and E. D. Ward; Messdames Edie Liston, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorne.

TO-NIGHT, at 10. WELSH RABBITS.

A musical and dramatic absurdity, by Messrs. R. REECE and KNIGHT SUMMERS, will be produced for the first time, with new scenery, dresses, and appointments.

Messrs. J. L. Toole and E. W. Garden; Messdames Emily Thorne, Eliza Johnstone, Merton, Mellon, Taylor, Douglas, Coombs, Wallis, Placit, and Palmer.

Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to £3 3s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THE OPERA SEASON

Under the direction of Mr. ALEXANDER HENDERSON.

To-night, at 8, an entirely new and original Opera Comique, in three acts, by OFFENBACH, entitled LA BOULANGERIE.

Under the immediate direction of Mr. H. B. Farnie. New and elaborate scenery by Ryan and Hicks. Dresses, after designs by Grévin and Faustin, by Atlas.

Preceded, at 7.30, by a Comedy, after Molière and Halévy, entitled SEEING THROUGH.

Messdames Amadi, Mand Taylor, Turner, Dubois, Graham, Evelyn, and Wadman; Messrs. Celli, Temple, Ashford, Mansfield, Stepan, and Paulton. Greatly augmented chorus and orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Hillier. Ballet-master, Mr. Lauri.

Box-offices now open. Acting Manager, Mr. W. A. BURT.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(200 yards from the Angel.)

To-night, H. J. BYRON'S popular Drama, BLOW FOR BLOW.

For a few nights only.

Messrs. E. H. Brooke, J. D. Beveridge, E. Lyons, &c.; Messdames Kato Patison (by kind permission of Messrs. Hare and Kendal) and Isabel Bateman.

Prices from 6d. to 7s. 6d. Doors open at 6.45. Farce at 7.15.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. D'OLY CARTE.

To-night, at 8.30, a new Aesthetic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN, entitled PATIENCE.

Messrs. George Grossmith, Rutland Harrison, Richard Temple, F. Thornton, and Burnand; Ladies, Messdames Leocadia Braham, Jessie Bond, Julia Gwynne, Portesque, and Alice Barnett.

Produced under the personal direction of the Author and Composer. Conductor, Mr. F. Cellier.

Preceded, at 8, by UNCLE SAMUEL.

by ARTHUR LAW and GEORGE GROSSMITH.

Doors open at 7.30.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDOAR BRUCE.

To-night, at 8.40, a new Comedy, in three acts, called THE COLONEL.

By F. C. BURNAND.

Preceded, at 7.50, by a one-act Comedy, by SYDNEY GRUNDY, IN HONOUR BOUND.

Messrs. Coghlan, Fleckton, W. Herbert, Eric Bayley, Rowland Buckstone, and Edgar Bruce; Messdames Amy Roselle, Myra Holmes, C. Grahame, Leigh Murray, &c.

New scenery by Mr. Bruce Smith.

Doors open at 7.30. Box-offices open daily from 11 to 5.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WALTER GOOCH.

To-night (LAST FIVE NIGHTS), at 7, an entirely new and original romantic spectacular Drama of sensational interest, entitled BIANDELL.

Written by RICHARD LEE.

Realistic scenery, grand military parade, and Lancers' band. The horses supplied by Mr. George Sanger.

At 9, WATTS PHILLIPS' exciting Drama, CAMILLA'S HUSBAND.

New scenery and effects.

Doors open at 6.30. Box-offices open daily.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER.

To-night, at 7.30, ROSALIE.

At 8.15, THE MEMBER FOR SLOCOM.

At 9.30, DON JUAN JUNIOR.

Messdames Kate Lawler, Harriet Covey, Ruth Francis, Florence Lavenander, F. Clithero, Elise Ward, and Annie Lawler; Messrs. Arthur Williams, Frank Wyatt, S. Dallas, H. Martell, and Frank Cooper.

Stage Manager, FRANK MORTSHAW. Acting Manager, CECIL RALEIGH.

Doors open at 7.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

SUMMER EXHIBITION NOW OPEN

Daily 9 to 7.

Admission, One Shilling; Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION. 1878.

FRY'S Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA "If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa." Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way." W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.

"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted." CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

EXTRACT Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA. A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

SUN LIFE OFFICE, LONDON.

Established 1810.

CHIEF OFFICE, 63, THE ADNEEDLE STREET.

BRANCH OFFICES, 60, CHANCERY CROSS;

And Oxford-street, corner of Vere-street.

Very low premiums without participation in Profits, especially for young lives. Half Premium, Non-Forfeiture, and Endowment Assurances granted.

Prompt settlement of Claims. The Society's newly revised Prospectus, and a greatly simplified form of Proposal, will be forwarded on application.

J. G. PRIESTLEY, Actuary.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHANCERY CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BLOOMFIELD, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued. A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

1st March, 1880. FRANCIS HAVENSCROFT, Manager

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.

Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.

Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.

Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.

Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal.

Cash prices.

No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Priced Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free. F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morrell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious ware-houses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from £6 6s. to 50 guineas. Drawing-room Suites, from £9 9s. to 45 guineas. Dining-room Suites, from £7 7s. to 40 guineas.

And all other goods in great variety. F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21 Morrell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottle, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones. Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

fluid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. By gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drowsy feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 1s. 9d. and 1s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

B. BRAND & CO.'S OWN SAUCE,

S. SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

P. POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

E. ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

T. TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

S. SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS:—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

YATES & ALEXANDER,

PRINTERS OF

Books, Pamphlets, Magazines, Newspapers, and Periodicals.

Catalogues, Posters, Price Currents, Circulars, Notices, and all General Commercial Work.

Parliamentary, Law, and General Printing.

Contracts entered into with Public Companies, Bankers, Insurance Offices, Auctioneers, Manufacturers, Merchants and Traders, &c

PRINTING WORKS:

LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE

(OPPOSITE THE CHANCERY LANE POST-OFFICE).

W. H. SMITH & SON'S

SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY,

186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the RAILWAY BOOKSTALLS.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON'S numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their books. There are 500 Bookstall available for this purpose. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or 186, Strand, London.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in charge a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

I.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A LONDON TERMINUS, OR 186, STRAND—

	6 Months.	12 Months.
£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
For One Volume at a time ...	0 12 0	1 1 0
For Two Volumes " (Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)	0 17 6	1 11 6
For Four " " (Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Eight " " ...	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Fifteen " " ...	3 0 0	5 5 0

II.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A COUNTRY BOOKSTALL—

	6 Months.	12 Months.
£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
For One Volume at a time ...	0 12 0	1 1 0
For Two Volumes " (Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)	0 17 6	1 11 6
For Three " " (Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Four " " ...	1 8 0	2 10 0
For Six " " ...	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Twelve " " ...	3 0 0	5 5 0

III.—FOR COUNTRY BOOK CLUBS, READING SOCIETIES, &c.

For Twenty-four Volumes at a time ...	5 5 0	9 9 0
For Thirty-six " " ...	8 0 0	14 2 6
For Forty-eight " " ...	10 10 0	18 16 0
For Sixty " " ...	13 0 0	23 9 0
For Seventy-two " " ...	15 10 0	28 2 0
For Eighty-four " " ...	18 0 0	32 15 0

For every additional Twelve Volumes, £4 12s. 6d.

TERMS FOR SPECIAL TRAVELLING SUBSCRIPTIONS, Lists of Books in circulation, or any other information can be obtained at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or at 186, Strand, London.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings for Gentlemen's Libraries.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 473.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO.'S LIST.

AFRICAN TRAVEL.

 Messrs. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO. beg to inform all interested in African Travel that Second Editions are now ready of Major PINTO'S "HOW I CROSSED AFRICA," 2 vols., demy 8vo, 42s.; Dr. EMIL HOLUB'S "SEVEN YEARS IN SOUTH AFRICA," demy 8vo, 2 vols., 42s.; and Mr. JOSEPH THOMSON'S "TO the CENTRAL AFRICAN LAKES and BACK," 2 vols., crown 8vo, 24s. All these works are well supplied with Maps; the two first are fully illustrated; they treat for the most part of fresh ground; and for opinions as to their great value and interest it is only necessary to point to the many long, carefully written, and unanimously favourable reviews of them which have appeared within the last few weeks in all the principal journals.*

N.B.—There should be no difficulty whatever in now obtaining copies of these works from any respectable Library.

ON the INDIAN HILLS; or, Coffee Planting in Southern India. By Edward Lester

ARNOLD, Author of "A Summer Holiday in Scandinavia," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 24s.

[Shortly.]

Now ready, in 2 vols. (over 1,200 pages), demy 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, price 32s.

LIFE of VOLTAIRE. By James Parton. With Two fine Portraits.

"The reader is probably aware that every circumstance in the history of this man, from the date of his birth to the resting-place of his bones, is matter of controversy. . . . The Voltaire of these volumes is the nearest to the true one that I have been able to gather and construct. I think the man is to be found in these pages delineated by himself."—From Preface.

Now ready, royal 8vo, cloth extra, price 24s., VOL. VIII. of GUIZOT'S HISTORY of FRANCE. Completing the Work. Fully Illustrated.

 The eight volumes of this complete and splendidly illustrated History of France, by one of the greatest of modern historians, can now be had, royal 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, price 24s. each volume.*

AUSTRALIA. By J. F. Vesey Fitzgerald, late Colonial Secretary of Victoria.

With Illustrations and a Map.

EPITOME OF CONTENTS:—General Character of the Country—Climate—Flora and Fauna—The Aborigines—Geology—New South Wales—Victoria—Laws relating to Sale and Occupation of Land—The Gold Fields—Religion and Education—South Australia—Queensland—Western Australia—Appendix of Agricultural Statistics—Death Rates, &c.

Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

[Ready.]

EGYPT. By Stanley Lane-Poole. With Maps and Illustrations.

EPITOME OF CONTENTS:—The Land of Egypt—The Plain—Cairo—The Valley—The Deserts—The Modern Egyptians—The Wealth of Egypt—The Dynasty of Mohammad 'Ali—Chronological and other Tables.

Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

[Ready.]

NEW NOVELS.

Now ready, crown 8vo, 3 vols., price 31s. 6d.

DAVID BROOME, Artist. By Mrs. Robert O'Reilly, Author of "Phœbe's Fortunes," "Sussex Stories," &c.

Just ready, 2 vols., price 21s.

JAMES WOODFORD, Carpenter and Chartist. By Henry Solly.

BOOKS FOR SUMMER READING.

LOW'S STANDARD NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s. each.

THREE FEATHERS. By WILLIAM BLACK.
A DAUGHTER of HETH. Thirteenth Edition. By W. BLACK. With Frontispiece by F. Walker, A.R.A.
KILMENY: a Novel. By W. BLACK.
IN SILK ATTIRE. By W. BLACK.
LADY SILVERDALE'S SWEETHEART. By W. BLACK.
ALICE LORRAINE. By R. D. BLACKMORE.
LORNA DOONE. By R. D. BLACKMORE. Eighth Edition.
MARY ANERLEY: a Yorkshire Story. By R. D. BLACKMORE.
EREMA; or, My Father's Sin. By R. D. BLACKMORE.
CRADOCK NOWELL. By R. D. BLACKMORE.
CLARA VAUGHAN. By R. D. BLACKMORE.
CRIPPS the CARRIER. By R. D. BLACKMORE.
JOHN HOLDSWORTH, CHIEF MATE. By W. CLARK RUSSELL.
THE WRECK of the GROSVENOR. By W. CLARK RUSSELL.
BEN HUR: a Tale of the Christ. By L. WALLACE.
THE DAGONNADES; or, Asylum Christi. By EDWARD GILLIAT, M.A.

A GOLDEN SORROW. By Mrs. CASHEL HOEV.
THE HISTORY of a CRIME. By VICTOR HUGO.
NINETY-THREE. By VICTOR HUGO. Numerous Illustrations.
THE AFGHAN KNIFE. By R. A. STEINDALE.
MY LADY GREENSLEEVES. By HELEN MATHERS.
ELINOR DRYDEN. By Mrs. MACQUOID.
DIANE. By Mrs. MACQUOID.
POGANUC PEOPLE, THEIR LOVES and LIVES. By Mrs. BEECHER STOWE.
A FRENCH HEIRESS in HER OWN CHATEAU. By the Author of "One Only," "Constantia," &c. Six Illustrations.
MISTRESS JUDITH: a Cambridgeshire Story. By C. C. FRASER-TYTLER.
NEVER AGAIN. By W. S. MAYO, Author of "Kaloolah."
OLD TOWN FOLK. By Mrs. BEECHER STOWE.
MY WIFE and I. By Mrs. BEECHER STOWE.
INNOCENT. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. Eight Illustrations.
WORK: a Story of Experience. By LOUISA M. ALCOTT. Illustrations.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON, CROWN BUILDINGS, 188, FLEET STREET, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

THE TALLEYRAND CORRESPONDENCE, by Sir TRAVERS TWISS	385
COLONEL GORDON IN CENTRAL AFRICA, by D. C. BOULGER	386
PHIL ROBINSON'S UNDER THE PUNKAH, by W. W. HUNTER	387
PRELATO'S HISTORY OF THE SPANISH HERETICS, by the Rev. W. WRESTER	388
NICOLSON'S GAELIC PROVERBS, by D. FITZGERALD	388
MISS EVANS' POEMS AND MUSIC, by G. SAINTSBURY	389
CURRENT LITERATURE	390
NOTES AND NEWS	391
A DEVONSHIRE DIALECT POEM, by EDWARD CAPERN	392
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	392
PROF. STEPHENS' LECTURES ON THE ORIGIN OF NORSE MYTHOLOGY	393
CURIOUS BUNDBERS IN SEVERAL EDITIONS OF POLYCARP, by the Rev. J. H. BACKHOUSE	394
SELECTED BOOKS	395
CORRESPONDENCE:—
S. T. Coleridge's "France: an Ode," by Prof. F. Dowden; "The Meaning of "Estel," by Prof. J. Zupitza; A Correction, by Walter Crane; Occurrence of Neolithic Implements at Acton, by Spencer Geo. Porcoveal	395-6
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	396
THE STEAM-ENGINE AND ITS INVENTORS, by Dr. W. POLE	396
THE HIBBERT LECTURES	397
OBITUARY	397
NOTES OF TRAVEL	397
SCIENCE NOTES	398
PHILOLOGY NOTES	398
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	398
THE ROYAL ACADEMY, III., by J. COMYNS CARR	398
THE SALON OF 1881, II., by Mrs. MARK PATTISON	399
THE GUARDIAN GALLERY, by Cosmo MONTEHOUSE	400
PAINTINGS ON CHINA	401
ART SALES	402
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	402
THE STAGE	403
RIGHTER AND CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	403

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL.

Two Councils of University College, Liverpool, and of the Liverpool Royal Infirmary School of Medicine are prepared to appoint a PROFESSOR of EXPERIMENTAL PHYSICS in connection with the above institutions. The stipend of the Professor will be £400 per annum, together with a share of the Fees. The Professorship will be for the present be required to give instruction in Mathematics, until a separate Chair of Mathematics shall have been endowed. He will also be expected to deliver a Course of Lectures to Evening Classes.

Candidates are requested to send in their applications and testimonials not later than JUNE 26TH, 1881, to either of the undersigned.
W. J. STEWART, 25, Lord-street, Liverpool.
R. CATON, M.D., 18A, Abercromby-square, Liverpool

May 18, 1881.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

The Office of PRINCIPAL will become VACANT at the end of the present Term. The Council are prepared to receive applications from Gentlemen desirous of the appointment. Candidates must be Clergymen of the Church of England or Priests of the Orders, of the degree of Master of Arts at least of one of the Universities of Oxford or Cambridge. Every information may be obtained of the SECRETARY, The College, Brighton, to whom Testimonials must be sent on or before THURSDAY, the 9TH of JUNE.

F. W. MADSEN, M.R.A.S., Secretary.

OWENS COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

The Senate propose to APPOINT a DEMONSTRATOR in the PHYSICAL LABORATORY who would be required to enter on his duties on the 29TH SEPTEMBER NEXT.

Full particulars may be obtained from the REGISTRAR. Applications should be made not later than the 14TH JUNE.

J. HOLME NICHOLSON, Registrar.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, Ely-

place, St. Stephen's-green, Dublin.—Founded 1852, for preparation of Candidates for Competitive Examinations; over 1,000 Pupils have passed direct from the Academy. The special Classes for R.I. CONSTITUTIONAL Cadetships have carried off 80 per cent. of the Cadetships offered for competition last year; First Place, four times. Special Work for Woolwich and Sandhurst; over 350 have passed Army Exams, including 2nd, 3rd, 6th, 6th, 7th, at recent competitions.—Apply to W. J. CHETWODE CRAWLEY, LL.B., F.O.S., F.R.G.S., Director and Sole Proprietor.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—KENSINGTON

HOUSE, Clarendon Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. L. STEBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 200 Guineas.

LEICESTER SCHOOL of ART, HASTINGS STREET, LEICESTER.

In consequence of the RESIGNATION of the HEAD-MASTER of the above School on October 1st next, the Committee invite APPLICATIONS for the APPOINTMENT. Testimonials and Specimens to be forwarded not later than JUNE 17TH, 1881, addressed to SAMUEL HARTFIELD, Hon. Sec., School of Art, Leicester.

PROF. and MRS. STEADMAN ALDIS

wish to form a READING PARTY on the Coast of NORMANDY, during the Months of July and August, for LADIES preparing for the Mathematical Tripos, Girton, Newnham, or the London or Cambridge University Examinations.—For particulars address COLLEGE OF SCIENCE, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

MR. G. SAINTSBURY, having undertaken the EDITING of a New Issue of SCOTT'S "DRYDEN," for Mr. Paterson, of Edinburgh, will be much obliged if all persons interested in literature, who possess either UNPUBLISHED LETTERS of the POET or other matter which they think should find a place in a complete edition, will communicate with him at 12, Edith-road, West Kensington.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.
(Twenty doors west of Mudie's Library.)

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Collotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Philoepigraphical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.

AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Meissonier, Corot, De Neuville, Burne-Jones, Rossetti, Cave Thomas, &c., &c., &c.

MUSEO DEL PRADO, MADRID.

Subscription Issue of 397 Autotype reproductions of Paintings in this Celebrated Gallery (executed by Braun & Cie, Durnach) under the superintendence of the Director of the Gallery. The work contains 34 examples of Murillo, 48 Vasquez, 1 Raphael, 22 Titian, 10 Verdyck, 32 Rubens, &c., and will be complete in Eight bi-Monthly Issues. For particulars and terms of subscription, apply to the MANAGER, The Autotype Company, 531, Oxford-street.

PICTURES CLEANED, RESTORED, FRAMED.

To adorn the walls of Home with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 531, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Ealing Dean, Middlesex.

General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWTER.

HERBERT EXHIBITION.—"THE

JUDGMENT OF DANIEL." Painted for the House of Lords, and Thirty-five other Works by J. R. HERBERT, R.A., NOW ON VIEW at the HANOVER GALLERY, 47, NEW BOND STREET. Admission, One Shilling. 9.30 to 6.

NOW on EXHIBITION.—PAINTINGS

OF NIAGARA FALLS, by the late WILLIAM MORRIS HUNT, Author of "Talk about Art," also other Paintings and Chisel Drawings by the same Artist.—GALLERY, 14, GRAFTON STREET, OLD BOND STREET.

ROSA BONIEUR'S celebrated PIC-

TURES "ON THE ALERT" and "A FORAGING PARTY," which gained for the Artist the Cross of the Order of Leopold of Belgium at the Antwerp Academy, 1879; also the Complete Engraved Works of ROSA BONIEUR, including the well-known "HORSE FAIR,"—NOW ON EXHIBITION at L. H. LEFEBVRE'S GALLERY, 1A, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S, S.W. Admission One Shilling. 1 to 5.

LA SOCIETE des AQUARELLISTES

FRANCAIS.—NOW ON VIEW, an EXHIBITION of WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS by the Members of the above Society, at GOULI & CO'S GALLERIES, 25, BEDFORD STREET, COVENT GARDEN. Admission, One Shilling. An illustrated Catalogue has been published.

TO ANGLING-BOOK COLLECTORS.—

"THE COMPLETEST ANGLING BOOKS." Second Edition of 150 Copies, with additional Illustrations. Plates destroyed. (See Westwood's "Bibliotheca Piscatoria.")—For particulars, apply the Author, JOSEPH CHAWWALL, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

FRENCH LANGUAGE.—Monsieur

PINGRON, M.C.P., ATTENDS SCHOOLS and FAMILIES and COACHES PUPILS for PUBLIC EXAMINATIONS. Great experience in teaching French. Highest references.—21, Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square, W.

TO NEWSPAPER PROPRIETORS.—

Good Publishing Premises in the best district and facilities for Printing and Publishing the best class of Journal, Illustrated or otherwise. Rooms for Editor and Staff. Advertiser, the Proprietor of high-class and established Journals, has room to publish another, by commission, or is willing to Purchase an Established London Property.—Address R. W. W., care of Messrs. G. Street & Co., 39, Cornhill, E.C.

TO BOOKBUYERS.—Now ready, Mr.

GLAISHER'S GENERAL CATALOGUE of REMAINDER BOOKS for 1881. Will be sent post-free on application.—W. GLAISHER, 255, High Holborn, London.

CATALOGUE of CHOICE SECOND-

HAND BOOKS now ready. Free to any address.—JAMES FAWN & SON, Bristol.

NEWSPAPERS and PERIODICALS

PRINTED by EAST (ROTARY) MACHINERY.—MANAGER, Fleet Printing Works, 14, Whitefriars-street, E.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

NEW AND CHOICE BOOKS.

SEE MUDIE'S LIBRARY CIRCULAR FOR JUNE.

Ready on Monday next. Postage free on application.

CHEAP AND SCARCE BOOKS.

SEE MUDIE'S CLEARANCE CATALOGUE FOR JUNE.

Ready on Monday next. Postage free on application.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW OXFORD STREET.

City Office: 2, King-street, Cheapside.

FRASER'S MAGAZINE.

JUNE, 1881. No. 618. NEW SERIES, No. CXXXVIII. Price 2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

IN TRUST: the Story of a Lady and Her Lover. Chap. XIII.—Heathcote Mountford. XIV.—The Spectator's View. XV.—Tampering with a Lawyer.

THE REVISED VERSION OF THE ENGLISH NEW TESTAMENT. By the Rev. Dr. ALEX. ROBERTS.

A JAPANESE BRIDE. By Miss M. BETHAM-EDWARDS.

OUR WINTER STORMS. By J. K. LAUGHTON.

CONSOLATIONS.

MALPRACTICES at ELECTIONS. By W. M. TORRENS, M.P.

IN UMBRIA: a Study of Aristocratic Personality. By VERNON LEE.

SONNET. By W. A. SIM.

A PILGRIMAGE to CYPRUS in 1395-6. By J. THEODORE BENT.

CONSERVATIVE TACTICS.

London: LONGMANS & CO.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR JUNE.

1. THE ORIGIN of RELIGION considered in the LIGHT of the UNITY of NATURE. By the DUKE of ARGYLL. (Concluded.)

2. "BOYCOTTED." By W. BENGE JONES.

3. ON SOME NATIONAL CHARACTERISTICS of EUROPEAN SOCIETY. By Dr. KARL HILLEBRAND.

4. CONVERSATIONS with CARLYLE. By W. KNIGHTON, LL.D.

5. FERDINAND LASSALLE and GERMAN SOCIALISM. By JOHN BAE

6. THE PRINCIPLES of '89. By W. S. LILLY.

7. A LAST WORD on DISRAELI. By SHIRLEY.

8. LORD BEACONSFIELD, By the Rev. MALCOLM MACCULL.

9. AT HIS GRAVE. By ALFRED AUSTIN.

London: STRAID & CO. (LIMITED), 34, Paternoster-row.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

For JUNE, 1881. No. DCCLXXXVIII. Price 2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

THE LAND OF KUEML.—PART I.—THE ARABIAN NOME.

MATTIE: THE HISTORY of an EVENING.

THE FOUNTAIN of YOUTH.

THE PRIVATE SECRETARY.—PART VIII.

NORWEGIAN SONNETS. By J. LOGIE ROBERTSON.

BEOLIO AND THE "COMMEDIA DELL' ARTE."

THE CRUISE of the COYA.

A TALK ABOUT ODES.

THE SECOND STAGE of THE LAND BILL.

Edinburgh and London: WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 260. For JUNE. Price 1s.

CONTENTS OF THE NUMBER.

1. THE PORTRAIT of a LADY. By HENRY JAMES, Junr. Chapters XXXV.—XXXVIII.

2. SUBSCRIPTION from ANOTHER POINT of VIEW. By Dr. VANCE SMITH.

3. THE RUSSIAN CLERGY. By the Rev. MORITZ KAUFMANN.

4. TIMOLEON. By the ARCHBISHOP of DUBLIN.

5. THE IRISH LAND BILL. By W. BENGE JONES.

6. THE WIT and HUMOUR of LORD BEACONSFIELD. By WALTER STEDMAN NICHOL.

7. THE REVISION of the NEW TESTAMENT. By THEODORE WALBROND, C.B.

London: MACMILLAN & CO.

Price 7d.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL

For JUNE 1.

Our Competing Cousins.

Reminiscences of Bismarck.

My Unfortunate Patient.

What is a Molecule?

Olds and Ends about Sonnets.

Insect Life in Burmah.

The Use of Oil at Sea.

The Frank Spinkland Memorial Fund.

Indian Robbers.

The Electric Light in Medicine.

A Night in the Fore-Top.

How Simon Peveritt got Married at Last.

Discipline.

Sells. In Two Parts. Part I.

Business and Matrimony.

The Strange Story of Eugenia.

A Word or Two about Ross-Iloes.

A Talk with a Detective.

Safety Appliances for Swimmers.

Sparrowdom. By W. Chambers.

"Sentry-Go" in France.

Sketches of Scottish Life and Character.

The Month: Science and Arts.

Occasional Notes.

Three Poetical Pieces.

THE FORTUNES of BERTHAM OAKLEY.

By J. H. HARWOOD. Chapters XXII.—XXV.

London and Edinburgh: W. & R. CHAMBERS.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JUNE

contains—Clement Marot and the Huguenot Psalter.—The Great Composers: Berlioz—Mr. Peppas the Musician, by F. Huddell.—Why the Greeks made no Advance in Harmony.—Stella: Lyrical Drama by Autier.—Mancoschi.—The Operas—Hichter and Crystal Palace Concerts—Mr. C. Hallé's Recitals.—Festival Services at St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey, &c.—Wagner's "Nibelungen" at Berlin.—Occasional Notes, Foreign and Country News, Reviews, Correspondence, &c. Price 3d.; post-free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JUNE

contains—"Cradle Song." Part Song, by OLIVER KINO. Price, separately, 1d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER, & CO., 1, Berners-street, W., and 60 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

Now ready, price One Shilling; post-free, 1s. 2d.

FUN'S ACADEMY SKITS, 1881.

Skitched by GORDON THOMSON.

With Vagaries in Verse and Extra Notes by "NESTOR."

LONDON: FUN OFFICE, 153, FLEET STREET, E.C.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

SUMMER EXHIBITION NOW OPEN

Daily 9 to 7.

Admission, One Shilling; Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA "If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa."
Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.
"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."
W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.
"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted."
CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

EXTRACT Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

Sent post-free by the (Edinburgh) Publishers.

THE REVISED NEW TESTAMENT

anticipated in its Chief Renderings by YOUNG'S "LITERAL TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE," in passages selected (by Prof. ROBERTS) to show the Character of the "REVISED" Version.
SPECIMENS OF YOUNG'S "LITERAL TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE," Second Edition, mission type, 8vo, cloth, 15s.; sewed, 12s., free by post. With Recommendations of Professors, Clergymen, and Reviewers of all Evangelical Bodies. Also of the "ANALYTICAL CONCORDANCE to the Bible," 4to, 36s. to 63s., according to Contents and Binding.

Edinburgh: G. A. YOUNG & CO., 18, Nicolson-street;
London: HODDER & STOUGHTON; and all Booksellers.

BIBLE REVISION

THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA:

The Six Principal English Versions of the New Testament, in parallel columns, beneath the Greek Original Text. Wiclif, 1380.—Tyndale, 1534.—Crammer, 1539.—Geneva, 1557.—Rhems, 1582.—Authorised, 1611. 1 very handsome vol., 4to, £2 2s.; or Morocco, gilt edges.

"In form and substance it is an admirable present for any clergyman."
Observer.

London: S. BAGSTER & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row.
And sold by all Booksellers.

MAP of a HUNDRED SQUARE MILES

ROUND AVEBURY, WILTSHIRE: with a KEY to the BRITISH and ROMAN ANTIQUITIES. By the Rev. A. C. SMITH, Rector of Yatesbury, Wilts; Hon. Secretary of the Wilts Archaeological and Natural History Society.

The above work will consist of two parts:—

First, THE GREAT MAP, 75 in. by 48 in., on the scale of 36 square inches to the mile, showing all the British and Roman Earth- and Stone-Works, printed in six colours.

Second, THE KEY, in large 4to, containing the Great Map in Sections, with accompanying descriptive Interpress and References to the best authorities, Views, Plans, &c.

The work, constituting a permanent record of one of the most important archaeological districts in Europe, has been twenty-five years in preparation, and will be published and issued to subscribers by the Marlborough College Natural History Society.

For Prospectus, giving full particulars and the opinions of antiquaries who have seen the work, apply to the Rev. J. A. FRESTON, The Green, Marlborough.

ENGLISH ETCHINGS: a Monthly

Publication of Original Etchings, the work of English Artists. Part I., JUNE. Price 3s. 6d.; Annual Subscription, £2 2s. A limited number of Parts, containing First Proofs on Japanese Paper, price per Part One Guinea. Each Part will contain Four Etchings, which, together with descriptive Letterpress, will be contained in a handsome Portfolio, embellished with a Portrait of Rembrandt. Size: Imp. 4to (15 by 11).

London: WILLIAM REEVES, Publisher, 165, Fleet-street.

Now ready, 8vo, 18s.

THE ANNUAL REGISTER: a Review of Public Events at Home and Abroad for the Year 1880. New Series.

London: RIVINGTONS, Waterloo-place, Pall Mall;
And the other Proprietors.

NOTICE.—Now ready, price 3d.

THE PENNY POSTAGE SCHEME of 1837: Was it an Invention, or a Copy? By PATRICK CHALMERS, Author of "The Adhesive Stamp."

London: EFFINGHAM WILSON, Royal Exchange.

LONDON LIBRARY.

12, ST JAMES'S SQUARE.—Founded in 1841.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

PRESIDENT—THOMAS CARLYLE, Esq.

This Library contains 99,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature in various Languages. Subscription, £3 a-year, or £2 with Entrance-fee of £6; Life Membership, £20.

Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town, Members. Reading-room open from Ten to Half-past Six. Prospectus on application. ROBERT HARRISON, Secretary and Librarian.

TO PROPRIETORS OF NEWSPAPERS

and PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, Brief News & Opinion, the Furniture Gazette, the Review, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPLETE, ECONOMIC, and PUNCTUAL PRODUCTION OF PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether Illustrated or Plain. Estimates furnished to Projectors of New Periodicals, for either Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—71 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHARING CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts. The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuable; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

1st March, 1880.

FRANCIS HAYENSCROFT, Manager

PROVIDE AGAINST ACCIDENTS!

ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN!

A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury, may be secured by a Policy of the
RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY,
The Oldest and Largest Company insuring against Accidents of all kinds.
The Rt. Hon. Lord KINNAIRD, Chairman.
SUBSCRIBED CAPITAL, £1,000,000.
PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £230,000.
MODERATE PREMIUMS.
Bonuses allowed to Insurers after Five Years.
£1,630,000
HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.
Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, and West End Office, 8, Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing-cross, or 64, CORNHILL, LONDON.
WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on
MOEDER'S FIRE SYSTEM.
The original, best, and most liberal.
Cash prices.
No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Priced Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.
F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from £5 6s. to 50 guineas.
Drawing-room Suites, from £9 9s. to 45 guineas.
Dining-room Suites, from £7 7s. to 40 guineas.

And all other goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21 Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones. Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.
Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.
Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.
Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.
Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

BRAND & CO.'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

PROTECTION FROM FIRE. BRYANT & MAY'S

PATENT SAFETY

MATCHES.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.
ADVANTAGES.

Are not POISONOUS
Are free from SMELL
Are manufactured
Without Phosphorus
Are perfectly harmless
To the Operatives employed
Are very DAMP PROOF

LIGHT ONLY ON THE BOX.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

PROTECTION TO HEALTH.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S NEW WORKS.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE. CONTENTS FOR JUNE, 1881.

- I. KITH and KIN. By JESSIE FOTHERGILL. (Continued.)
 - II. PERSONAL REMINISCENCES OF LORD STRATFORD and the CRIMEAN WAR.
 - III. THE FIRST of MAY.
 - IV. LORD BROUGHAM'S ECCENTRICITIES.
 - V. THE GROAN of a PHILISTINE.
 - VI. ARAB HUMOUR. II. Wine-Bibbing and Witticisms.
 - VII. MERE CHATTER.
 - VIII. RICHELIEU.
 - IX. COME and GONE.
 - X. TWO RIVAL TRAGEDY QUEENS.
 - XI. THE FRERES. By MRS. ALEXANDER. (Continued.)
- * Cases for binding the volumes of "TEMPLE BAR" can be obtained at all Booksellers', price One Shilling each.

THE CORRESPONDENCE of PRINCE TALLEYRAND and LOUIS XVIII.

During the CONGRESS of VIENNA.

With a Preface, Observations, and Notes by
M. G. PALLAIN.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 2ls.

"This remarkable correspondence,"—Times.
"Talleyrand was never dry and never effuse, and appears, in writing to Louis XVIII., to have used a free pen. His reports of interviews and conversations, his sketches of the august and illustrious men he had to deal with, his satirical observations and mighty reflections, will place him in the highest rank of letter-writers."—Daily News.
"As the memoirs of the celebrated diplomatist will not be published for some years, the present volumes will be perused with especial interest as throwing a vivid light on the great events which culminated in the memorable Congress of 1815. . . . Altogether, the volumes are of peculiar interest and undoubted historical value."—Daily Telegraph.

IMMEDIATELY.

THE DAY AFTER DEATH; Or, the Future Life Revealed by Science.

By LOUIS FIGUIER,

Author of "The World before the Deluge."

A New Edition. In crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

NEW AND POPULAR EDITION.

In a few days, in crown 8vo, price 6s.

THE WELLFIELDS.

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL,

Author of "Probation" and "The First Violin."

Also, recently published.

THE POPULAR EDITION OF

JOHNNY LUDLOW. (Second Series.)

By Mrs. HENRY WOOD,

Author of "East Lynne," &c.

In crown 8vo, price 6s.

FOUR POPULAR NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE ROMANCE OF WAR."

THE CAMERONIANS.

By JAMES GRANT,

Author of "The Romance of War."

3 vols., crown 8vo.

TWO PRETTY GIRLS. By Miss M. A. LEWIS. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

AN OCEAN FREE-LANCE. By W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," "A Sailor's Sweetheart," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"An Ocean Free-Lance" in respect of variety, spirit, vivid energy, and mastery of touch, both in great effects and small details, is simply worthy of the author, who has never yet been surpassed by anyone who has written of the sea."—Graphic.

POLICY and PASSION. By Mrs. CAMPBELL PRAED. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"There seems to be an almost endless vista of interest and novelty opened up by this novel. The story is written with much mastery of the subject, power, strong earnestness, and sincerity."—Daily News.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,
NEW BURLINGTON STREET,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

SMITH, ELDER, & CO'S NEW BOOKS.

MR. BRANDRAM'S SHAKESPEARE FOR THE YOUNG.

Large crown 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE.

Certain Selected Plays abridged for the Use of the Young.

By SAMUEL BRANDRAM, M.A. Oxon.

"Mr. Brandram, whose emphatic readings have done so much towards an intelligent appreciation of 'Shakespeare' has added another claim on our gratitude by his publication of 'Selected Plays, Abridged for the Use of the Young.'"—Guardian.

"Mr. Brandram has done his work of arrangement and commentary very carefully and well, and I should think that the publication will prove useful and popular in no mean degree."—Truth.

NEW VOLUME BY MISS THACKERAY (MRS.
RICHMOND RITCHIE).

With Four Illustrations, crown 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

MISS WILLIAMSON'S DIVAGATIONS.

By MISS THACKERAY (MRS. RICHMOND RITCHIE).

Reprinted from the Cornhill Magazine, &c.

"Miss Thackeray has, as a writer of fiction, such a special gift that we gladly welcome her re-appearance in volume form. No novelist of the present day has anything approaching to her two powers—of making little things tell in description by simply adjusting them properly to their surroundings, and of a gently sarcastic rather than cynical humour out of the most ordinary circumstances. These powers come out especially in the first and last stories in this volume."—Academy.

"There is a charm about her stories, a repose and refinement, which ensure not only our admiration while we are perusing them, but create a craving for more by the same hand."—Court Journal.

"A thoroughly practical book."—Graphic.

FARMING IN A SMALL WAY.

By JAMES LONG,

Author of "Poultry for Prizes and Profit," "The Goat," &c.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"We heartily recommend all who are interested in farming in a small way to secure it while there is yet time."—Gardener's Magazine.

"Mr. Long writes clearly and concisely, and has the knack of putting a great deal in a little room."—Leader.

"A comprehensive volume of husbandry."—Daily Telegraph.

In his address at the London University on Presentation Day, EARL GRANVILLE said: "I am also greatly pleased that a Deaf and Dumb gentleman trained by the Rev. Thomas Arnold, of Northampton, has passed the matriculation examination."

Now ready, crown 4to, price 15s.

A METHOD of TEACHING the DEAF and DUMB SPEECH, LIP-READING, and LANGUAGE.

With Illustrations and Exercises.

By THOMAS ARNOLD.

MR. J. A. SYMONDS' "RENAISSANCE IN ITALY."

Nearly ready, 2 vols., demy 8vo, with a Portrait of the Author, price 32s.

RENAISSANCE in ITALY: Italian Literature.

By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS, M.A.,

Author of "Studies of the Greek Poets," "Sketches in Italy and Greece," &c.

Being Vols. IV. and V. of "Renaissance in Italy," and concluding the Work.

NEW NOVELS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MOLLY BAWN."

MRS. GEOFFREY. By the Author of "Molly Bawn," "Phyllis," "Beauty's Daughters," &c. 3 vols.,
post 8vo. [Ready this day.]

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE GWILLIAMS."

FOUR CROTCHETS to a BAR. By the Author of "The Gwilliams." 3 vols., post 8vo. [Shortly.]

CLIFFORD GRAY: a Romance of Modern Life. By W. M. HARDISOE. 1 vol., post 8vo. [In the press.]

Now ready (One Shilling), No. 253.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For JUNE.

With Illustrations by GEORGE DU MAURIER and W. SMALL.

CONTENTS.

LOVE the DEBT. (With an Illustration.) Chap. XVI.—Miss Tubbe's Poet. XVII.—George's Confession. XVIII.—Fenton Folk. XIX.—Friends in Council.

SPRING WANDERINGS. Ana-Capri.—From Capri to Ischia.—La Piccola Scutella.—Ischia and Forio.—Monte Epomeo.—From Ischia to Naples.—Night at Pompei.—San Germano.

AUTHORS for HIRE.

THE ROMANCE of a WAYSIDE WEED.

AMONG the DICTIONARIES.

LOVE and PAIN. By UNA TAYLOR.

A GRAPE from a THORN. By JAMES PATR. (With an Illustration.) Chap. XXIII.—The Widow's Ring. XXIV.—A Change of Views. XXV.—In Quarantine. XXVI.—A Change of Patients.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & Co., 15, Waterloo-place.

TRÜBNER & CO'S LIST.

FRANCE and the FRENCH, in the SECOND HALF of the NINETEENTH CENTURY.

By KARL HILLENBRAND. Translated from the Third German Edition. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

EDGAR QUINET:

HIS EARLY LIFE and WRITINGS.

By RICHARD HEATH. Post 8vo, with Portrait, Illustrations, and an Autograph Letter, cloth, 12s. 6d.

PICTURES of INDIAN LIFE.

Sketches with the Pen, from 1852 to 1875. By R. N. CUST, late of H.M. Indian Civil Service, and Hon. Sec. to the Royal Asiatic Society. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

EASTERN PROVERBS and EMBLEMS, ILLUSTRATING OLD TRUTHS.

By the Rev. J. LONG, Member of the Beugali Asiatic Society, F.R.G.S. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

HINDU PHILOSOPHY.

The Saikhya Karika of Iswara Krishna. An Exposition of the Systems of Kapila. With an Appendix on the Nyaya and Vaisheshika Systems. By JOHN DAVIES, M.A. (Cantab.), M.R.A.S. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

EDUCATION: Scientific and Technical;

or, How the Inductive Sciences Are Taught, and How they Ought to be Taught. By ROBERT GALLOWAY, M.R.I.A., F.C.S. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

A GRAMMAR of the OLD FRIESIC LANGUAGE.

By A. H. CUMMINS, A.M. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

INDIAN POETRY.

By EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I., M.A., &c., Author of "The Light of Asia." Containing a New Edition of "The Indian Song of Songs," from the Sanskrit of the Gita Govinda of Jayadeva; Two Books from the Iliad of India (Mahabharata), and Proverbial Wisdom from the Shikhas of the Hitopadesa, and others. Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE OCCULT WORLD.

By A. P. SINNETT. A remarkable Record of Experiences and Research in connexion with the Occult Science of the East. Crown 8vo, cloth. [Nearly ready.]

"THE MESNEVI"

(Usually known as the Mesnevi of Rumi, or Holy Mesnevi) of Mevlana (our Lord), Jalal-ud-din Rumi, the Great Mystic. Book the First. With a Life of the Author, his Ancestors, and Descendants. Illustrated by Anecdotes from El-Bakhi. Translated, and the Poetry Versified, in English, by J. W. REDHOUSE, M.R.A.S., &c. Post 8vo, cloth, 21s. "A complete treasury of occult Oriental lore."—Saturday Review.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of

MARK RUTHERFORD,

Disseminating Minister. Edited by his Friend, RUBEN SHARPOFF.

Crown 8vo, boards.

"This is a remarkable little book, and one that we strongly recommend for personal."—St. James's Gazette.

"A remarkable book, which could not have been written at all till within the last very few years."—Academy.

THE HISTORY of INDIA

from the EARLIEST AGES.

By J. TALBOYS WHISTLER, late Assistant Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department. Vol. IV., Part 2. MOGHUL EMPIRE—AURANGZEB. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

BRITISH ANIMALS EXTINCT

within HISTORIC TIMES;

With Some Account of British Wild White Cattle. By J. E. HARTING, F.L.S., F.Z.S. Demy 8vo, with Illustrations by Wolf, Whymper, and others, cloth, 14s.

"Mr. Harting has collected every available piece of evidence."—St. James's Gazette.

DR. APPLETON:

his LIFE and LITERARY RELICS.

By J. H. APPLETON, M.A., late Vicar of St. Mark's, Staplefield, Sussex; and A. H. SAYCE, M.A., Queen's College, Oxford. Post 8vo, with Portrait, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"The brief story of his life is told with much feeling and simplicity."—Scotsman.

BUDDHIST BIRTH STORIES;

Or, JATAKA TALES.

From the Jatakavannana. Translated from the Original Pali by T. W. IRVING DAVIDS. Vol. I. Post 8vo, cloth, 18s.

"Will be of the greatest interest and importance to students."—St. James's Gazette.

CONTRIBUTIONS to the HISTORY of the DEVELOPMENT of The HUMAN RACE.

Lectures and Dissertations. By LAZARUS GEIGER. Translated from the German by DAVID ASHER, Ph.D. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The papers translated in this volume deal with various aspects of a very fascinating study."—St. James's Gazette.

THE CLASSICAL POETRY

of THE JAPANESE.

By R. H. CHAMBERLAIN, Author of "Yeigo Henkaku Ichiran." Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"All who like interesting legends told in very readable verse should have the book."—Times.

THE ENEMIES of BOOKS.

By WILLIAM BLADES. Typograph. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, on laid paper, with five Plates, parchment, 5s.

"His pleasant volume."—Saturday Review.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1881.

No. 473, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Correspondence of Prince Talleyrand and King Louis XVIII. during the Congress of Vienna. Translated from MSS. in the Archives of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs at Paris. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

ANOTHER valuable contribution has been made to the diplomatic literature of the Napoleonic era. The archives of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, to which M. Thiers had access as a special privilege while preparing his history of the Consulate and the Empire, have been courteously thrown open to the editor of the present work, with permission to make public the contents of an important MS. which contains the correspondence of Prince Talleyrand with King Louis XVIII. during the Congress of Vienna. It is, however, a fact beyond dispute that the true history of that famous Congress will remain unwritten, as long as the correspondence of Lord Castlereagh and the other British plenipotentiaries remains unpublished. Prince Metternich used to say that the Austrian archives, as the Austrian plenipotentiaries wrote no despatches, contained little more than the results of each day's deliberations; while the despatches of Lord Castlereagh to his Government ought to contain a full account of the deliberations themselves, which led up to those results. The time has arrived, we think, which should enable us to determine whether Prince Metternich's view was correct; for the present correspondence represents the conduct of Lord Castlereagh in an important matter in a false light, from which an accident, to which we shall presently allude, happily relieves it. Meanwhile, M. Pallain, the editor of the present work, suggests, with a certain naïveté, that the reader is enabled to take Prince Talleyrand by surprise, when he is allowed to read his correspondence with Louis XVIII. We incline to a different opinion, for the correspondence appears to us to be a masterpiece of art, in which the Prince has not merely diplomatized with his new Sovereign, but has been careful to arrange the conditions of perspective, under which he would choose to be viewed by more vulgar eyes. Nevertheless, the part which Prince Talleyrand played at the Congress, apart from his own narrative, was a noble part, worthy of the great nation which he represented, and was of much advantage to the future peace of Europe.

Prince Metternich had made the acquaintance of Prince Talleyrand in 1806, when Talleyrand was Minister of Foreign Affairs in Paris and Metternich was ambassador at the Court of Napoleon. Napoleon's estimate of Talleyrand was communicated to the Austrian ambassador in these words:—"If I want a thing done I do not employ the Prince of Benevento; I turn to him when I want a thing not to be done, which I wish to appear to want." It would almost seem as if the spirit of Napoleon had inspired Louis XVIII. in his choice of a representative of the restored Bourbon dynasty at Vienna, whither Talleyrand was sent to put a spoke into the wheel of the triumphal chariot of the four allied Powers. An amusing caricature of the period had represented the earlier Congress at Paris under the figure of a huge travelling carriage, of which the Emperor Alexander was the coachman and the King of Prussia the chasseur, while the Emperor of Austria was an inside passenger, and Napoleon was running after the carriage crying out, "Father-in-law, they have put me out;" while his father-in-law looks out of the window and answers, "And me they have put in." There was no place in this caricature for Talleyrand; but, if the carriage had represented the Congress of Vienna, Talleyrand would have been fitly introduced as locking its hind-wheels.

Talleyrand's account of his admission to the preliminary conference of the Powers, which is contained in his third letter, is most amusing, and discloses at once the part which he intended to play. To appreciate the correspondence the reader must bear in mind that there was a comic vein in Prince Talleyrand's character which, combined as it was with a strong spirit of adventure, formed one of the secrets of his diplomatic success. He could not lose his temper; and therefore he was not angry at finding that the four Powers still regarded themselves as allies, and the two Powers which had not been parties to the Grand Alliance—namely, France and Spain—as outsiders. But he at once declined to take a seat at the council-table on any terms but those of perfect equality, and asked with some drollery "whether peace had not been made, and whether there was any quarrel, and with whom," as he could not understand why the four Powers still spoke of themselves as allies, seeing that there was no enemy for them to combat. If Talleyrand has not over-coloured his account of this preliminary conference in his own favour, he showed himself thoroughly conversant with the weapon of ridicule, and knew how to use it with a delicacy which afforded no pretext for open resentment. Further, he broke ground at once on the subject of the King of Naples (Murat), to compass whose expulsion and the restoration of the Bourbon dynasty at Naples was one main object of his mission. To achieve this object he recoined the word "legitimate," or, according to the view of M. Thiers, he created that word in the sense of expressing "dynastic right as opposed to the right of conquest." How Talleyrand rode his "hobby-horse" to death he omits to tell us; but we shall recount an anecdote on this head in its proper place.

Meanwhile, on the day following the preliminary conference, Prince Talleyrand addressed a signed note to the five other Powers, Spain being included, and afterwards set out for a private audience with the Emperor Alexander. He had acquired, to a certain degree, the ear of that monarch at Paris. The romantic character of the Emperor Alexander is well known; and after he had abandoned at Langres his favourite scheme, of which Prince Metternich gives an account in his Memoirs, of placing his ancient tutor, La Harpe, at the head of a Directory in Paris, which should succeed Napoleon's Government and create a new social edifice in France, he arrived in Paris without a plan. Under these circumstances it seems to have been a consolation to the Emperor that he could take Prince Talleyrand into his counsel; and upon his advice the Emperor decided to accept the proposal of the Prince Regent and the Emperor Francis to proclaim the restoration of the Bourbons. Talleyrand gives a graphic account of his interview on October 1, 1814, with the Emperor Alexander at Vienna. The Emperor did not receive him as affably as he expected; and, while he reports his opinion that the Emperor was evidently playing a part, he narrates to Louis XVIII. a piece of acting on his own side which he thinks was not without effect upon the Emperor. This letter (No. iii.) is an excellent sample of the general tone of the correspondence. The reader, however, must not forget that there are two sides of the medal; and that Talleyrand, in his letters to the King, is not merely blowing his own trumpet, but is making everything as pleasant as he can to his new master.

We pass over the intermediate correspondence which precedes letter xx., of which the date should evidently be not September but November 17, 1814. This letter is one of the most important documents in the collection. It is the first letter with which Louis XVIII. declares himself to be satisfied; but, he adds (vol. i., p. 172), "not but that I have always been satisfied with your conduct and your manner of rendering me an account of the state of affairs, but because I perceive that for the first time ideas of justice are rising to the surface." This letter is very damaging to Lord Castlereagh, who had thought it right to transmit a confidential note to Prince Hardenberg consenting, under certain conditions, to give up the whole of Saxony to Prussia. It appears that a copy of this note had been somehow or other procured by Talleyrand, under a promise of profound secrecy, and "therefore," he says, "I address it directly to your Majesty. I am told," he adds,

"that Lord Castlereagh tried hard to induce the Prussians to return it to him. The note confirms all that I have had the honour to convey to your Majesty during the last six weeks, and even reveals things which I should not have believed did it not afford so undeniable a proof of them."

M. Pallain has published an extract from Lord Castlereagh's note (p. 156) in illustration of Talleyrand's letter. Whether M. Pallain is personally responsible for the extract does not appear further than from the title-page of the work, which states that the Preface, observations, and notes are by M. Pallain. If M. Pallain is responsible for the extract, he has been guilty of great injustice to Lord Castlereagh in not publishing the note in extenso. We believe him only to have been guilty of an inadvertence; but here we have a striking illustration of our position that the time has arrived, when the correspondence of the British plenipotentiaries at the Congress should be made accessible to the public in the collection of State papers published under the authority of her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. Fortunately, in the present case the whole text of Lord Castlereagh's confidential note is accessible, having been printed among the Supplemental Despatches of the Duke of Wellington (vol. ix., p. 339). The reader of the entire note will probably feel puzzled, like a countryman gazing on a fly in amber, to account for the presence of such a document among the Duke's despatches; but there it has fortunately found a place, and the context of the note places Lord Castlereagh's proposal in a totally different light from that in which Talleyrand's letter presents it to the anxious mind of Louis XVIII. The Prince's letter had, however, the effect which he intended it to produce upon the mind of his new master, who, in his reply (letter xxiii.), says, "You have said all that I could have said about Lord Castlereagh's note."

There was, however, independently of any misrepresentation in this letter, a fundamental difference in the policy of Prince Talleyrand and Lord Castlereagh, which accounts for Talleyrand's hostile representation of Lord Castlereagh's views. The important proviso in Lord Castlereagh's note—which M. Pallain has omitted—was to the effect that "Prussia should not lend herself to Russian aggrandisement in Poland." It would seem to have been the opinion of the British Government that the aggrandisement of Prussia was less dangerous to British interests than the aggrandisement of Russia, whereas Prince Talleyrand thought that the absorption of the whole of Saxony by Prussia would be fraught with more danger to the repose of France, as disturbing the equilibrium of Germany, than the absorption of the greater part of Poland by Russia. Thus there was an evident conflict of principle between the views of the French and of the British plenipotentiaries. It was ultimately found impossible to rescue Poland from the grasp of Russia, but it was still possible to rescue a part of Saxony from Prussia, and in this latter enterprise Austria was even more interested than France. Hence arose the Triple Alliance of January 8, 1815, between France, Austria, and Great Britain, which saved to the King of Saxony a part of his hereditary dominions. So far, however, from subsequent events confirming Prince Talleyrand's interpretation of the confidential note of Lord Castlereagh, they appear to us to support a totally contrary view of it, and to suggest that Talleyrand's powers of discernment were at fault on this occasion. He failed to discover in the confidential note of Lord Castlereagh a shifting of his previous attitude, and in the proviso of it, which M. Pallain has inadvertently omitted, a conditional occupation of a new position, which enabled him, as soon as Great Britain had concluded peace with the United States, to accede to the Triple Alliance without any breach of faith towards Prussia.

The limits of our space warn us to bring our notice of this interesting correspondence to a close, and to fulfil our promise to recount the anecdote of Prince Talleyrand's riding his "hobby-horse" of legitimacy to an untimely end. We repeat the story on the authority of the late Prince Metternich. Talleyrand retarded for thirty-six hours the signature of the Principal Act of the Congress of Vienna by insisting on the insertion of the title of "Roi Légitime de France" as the description of his Sovereign. He was at last induced to abandon his "crotchet" by Prince Metternich's observation that he could not consent to Louis XVIII. alone being so designated, as it would imply that he alone had a title of dynastic right to his crown, whereas to add the epithet of "Légitime" after every Sovereign's name would be a diplomatic absurdity and a solecism.

TRAVERS TWISS.

Colonel Gordon in Central Africa, 1874-79.

With a Portrait and Map. From Original Letters and Documents. Edited by Dr. Birkbeck Hill, D.C.L., Author of "The Life of Rowland Hill." (T. De La Rue & Co.)

THIS work would be highly interesting merely as the description of a little-known region, and as the record of a great undertaking successfully performed; but its principal attraction above all other will be held to be the bright, clear light it throws on one of the most marked individualities of our time. For twenty years the name of "Chinese Gordon" has been a household word among us, and during that period we have repeatedly beheld him triumphing over an accumulation of difficulties—from the time when he suppressed a rebellion in the Far East to the other day when he stamped out, so far as lay in his power, a slave trade in the fetid regions of the Upper Nile. The tasks which have been imposed upon him, and generally when other agents have proved incapable, were Herculean, but the confidence felt in his ability never permitted doubt as to the result. While enjoying this reputation—unique among Englishmen—Col. Gordon has been almost a myth to his countrymen. Several writers have, indeed, before now written about his exploits, but in this volume Col. Gordon speaks for the first time in his own words. Without intending any disparagement to them, it may be said that the terse vigour and descriptive power of Col. Gordon's narrative are unapproached by any of his previous chroniclers. Not the least valuable proof of the judicious manner in which Dr. Birkbeck Hill has performed the part of editor under difficult circumstances is that furnished by his having left Col. Gordon to tell his own story.

In the early months of 1874 Col. Gordon was appointed by the Khedive to the Governorship of the Provinces of the Equator. The letters, which constitute the greater part of this volume, open in Cairo, where the writer began to experience the difficulty of the work that lay before him. On the very threshold of the enterprise, it seemed at one moment as if the whole arrangement might fall through, in consequence of the apathy of the Government; but at length Col. Gordon set out for his destination, having in this interval succeeded in showing the Cairo Pashas that he at least thought "the thing real and not a sham." From February 1874 until November 1876 Col. Gordon was actively engaged in pushing the Khedive's authority up the Nile to the Lakes Albert and Victoria, and to the dominions of King Mtesa. He was also instrumental in testing the navigability of the great river, which promises to afford one of the principal means of reclaiming Africa. After a hurried visit to England in the winter of 1876-77, Col. Gordon consented, at the pressing request of the Khedive, to return to the scene of his former exploits, but on this occasion with much wider powers as Governor-General of the vast province of the Soudan. He held this post until the end of 1879. To give an adequate idea of the work he performed during these six years of almost incessant labour could only be done by copious quotations from Col. Gordon's own narrative, which justice to both the author and the reader would forbid. Just as in the earlier charge he practically solved the questions connected with the Upper Nile, and spread the reputation and authority of the Khedive's Government among the native tribes by his justice and forbearance, so in the later and more important post he averted a fresh outbreak of war with King John of Abyssinia, which at several times seemed imminent, and in which Egypt had already been the sufferer. As Governor-General of the Soudan, he also inflicted a rude blow upon that slave trade which was, and still is, fostered by the local Pashas and minor officials. It would be difficult, indeed, to overpraise the valuable services which Col. Gordon rendered to humanity as the lieutenant of a corrupt and, in these matters, unscrupulous administration. Often and often the evident hollowness of its friendly protestations, and the partial nature of the assistance rendered him on emergency, gave rise to the wish that the task had never been attempted, or to the desire to bring it to a summary conclusion by resignation. The resolve to do good in a region where the openings for benefiting a large number of human beings were abundant proved stronger than mere personal inclinations; and it was very fortunate for the Khedive and his Government that it was so.

There can be no doubt that Col. Gordon saved Egypt from a grave peril by his firm but skillful treatment of the Abyssinian ruler, whose natural impetuosity had been inflamed by recent successes in the field. The question was further complicated by the presence of an independent chief, Walad el Michael, who had long maintained a brigand power on the Abyssinian borders. The Pashas, before Gordon's appearance, had found this individual useful in their relations with King John; and his alliance had been sought and obtained in the hope of its contributing to the overthrow of that ruler. These expectations were never realised, and in the summer of 1879 Walad el Michael was fain to surrender himself to King John. Col. Gordon at this point summed up his views on the situation as follows:—

"I have steadfastly kept one policy in view for the whole time I have been in Abyssinia—viz., to get rid, either with or without Johannis's help, of Walad el Michael and his men, and then to come to terms with Johannis. Now Johannis will not give me his help for nothing when I persist in keeping what we have stolen from him. I do not mean physical help, but moral help—i.e., that he should offer a pardon—that is, an asylum to which Walad el Michael's men can go when they leave Bogos."

This object had been practically effected when, in the month of September, Col. Gordon had his first interview with Aloula, the Abyssinian general. It was then discovered that King John himself could alone conduct the negotiations with any prospect of success, and Col. Gordon at once came to the conclusion that his best plan would be to pay him a visit at his capital. Aloula gave a formal promise not to molest Egyptian territory during his absence, and Col. Gordon set out on his twelve days' journey to King John, at Debra Tabor, near Gondar. For his interviews with this half-savage potentate the reader must be referred to the pages of the work. Suffice it to say that they greatly qualify the favourable impression produced by M. de Cosson's account of his visit to the Court of King John. A very few weeks after Col. Gordon's return from Gondar he resigned his post in the service of the Khedive. The condition of his health was such that he could only have remained at the peril of his life.

In this brief and imperfect sketch of the contents of this interesting volume it would be impossible to convey an adequate idea of its merits as an entertaining narrative. In the letters, which were never intended for publication, and which are the outpourings of a man accustomed to regard current events with the rapid insight of one who might claim to direct or control them, we are taken into the author's complete confidence. We find him a simple-minded and God-fearing man, struggling against almost inconceivable difficulties, and triumphing over them by the display of the sterling qualities of courage, justice, vigilance, and energy. He shows himself singularly sceptical of the value of other men's praise, which it is evidently irksome to him to receive. What he would like best would be to be permitted to go on through life without being disturbed by popular notoriety or personal praise, doing the thing that his hand found for him to do. If there needs anything more to be said to substantiate this view it is furnished by the simple and expressive fact that, when Col. Gordon has finished some of the great tasks entrusted to him, and received the honours and thanks of foreign potentates, he returns to his country to sink without an effort into the crowd of other officers of his service. A mandarin of the highest rank in China, a marshal in the Egyptian army, decorated with the orders which Peking and Cairo have reserved for their own favoured subjects, Col. Gordon, the instant he comes back to England, is not to be distinguished from any other officer of the same rank in the Royal Engineers, save by the achievements which have taken their place in the history of realms remote from this island. In conclusion, it need only be said that this book is in every sense worthy of the man.

D. C. BOULGER.

Under the Punkah. By Phil Robinson.
(Sampson Low.)

THIS is an unequal work by a very clever man. Mr. Robinson's previous book, In my Indian Garden, disclosed him as one of the few Englishmen who have eyes for the beauty and pathos of Anglo-Indian life. Humour is a delicate plant which rarely takes root to the south of the Temperate zone. In Mr. Robinson's works we find that plant acclimatised in the Tropics, and throwing out foliage of a novel and luxuriant growth. Mr. Robinson is a humorist in partibus. It has been reserved for him to discover the subtle iniquities of jays and parrots, to take a deep view of the morality of monkeys, and to give to the Indian crow his true and final position as the chief of the criminal classes.

Mr. Robinson would seem to have spent his Indian years chiefly among the animal creation. He enters into the feeling of sport with which the often-chased rooster of the dāk bungalow regards the efforts at his capture; and the quiet wink of his eye, as he sits safe on the top of the thatched roof, having for the hundredth time eluded his pursuers. For the final end of this veteran Mr. Robinson does not lack a manly tear. The easily caught hen excites his reprobation and contempt. The frog is his familiar friend. Beetles and ants are the councillors of his graver hours; butterflies, the companions of his leisure moments. In reading his loving diatribes against his furred and feathered acquaintances, one cannot help remembering that India has always been the home of the Beast Story. But, since the Sanskrit Hitopadesa was put together, we question whether any writer has given us such pictures of the floating population of lotus-covered tanks, and the domestic life that goes on in the great Indian trees. To Mr. Robinson, every pipal or mango tree is a many-storied house; each branch is as full of vitality and intrigue as an étage of a Parisian mansion. Snakes and toads live in a small way on the ground floor until the arrival of the mongoose with his writ of ejectment; lizards lead a rickety bachelor existence in the entresol; prosperous parrots occupy suites au premier. Jays, with a taste for extravagant colours, may be taken as Mr. Robinson's demi-monde of birds; tree cats and gray squirrels are for ever skipping up or down the stairs. The higher stories are the modest abodes of the small artistic world, vocalists, bulbuls, and dramatic mainas rehearsing their parts. The garrets and top-most perches are peopled with poor predatory kites or vultures, from whom the light-fingered and more deeply criminal crow pilfers, not without a chuckle, their clumsily stolen supper.

Mr. Robinson is the Columbus of the banyan-tree. He sails away into its recesses and discovers new worlds. Its stiff and ungainly trunks, portrayed on the title-page of the Asiatic Society's Journal and on the labels of pickle jars, with the motto Quot rami tot arbores, are found to be swarming continents, divided into commonwealths, and dotted with centres of population. It would be unfair to judge of the humour of these essays by passages isolated from the setting in which they are presented. But some of the descriptions of beasts and birds, trees, flowers, mountains, jungles, and the historic cities of India, leave a vivid impression on the mind. Our author is very steady in his aversions. Even amid the cool beauties of the Himalayas, he cannot resist throwing out a word at the "braggart parrot, with his yellow tail, that can never leave a tree without telling the world of it;" or against "that ubiquitous philosopher, the crow, his vile voice viler by the sore throat he seems to have caught in the hills." Admirable is his picture of the deserted plague-smitten village, which "now belongs, by right of sole possession, to the adjutant birds, who stand, economising one leg, upon its grassy walls or parade with a severe solemnity up and down its court-yards." "The tattoo," or little Indian post-horse, has, according to Mr. Robinson,

"been Hinduised by generations of monotonous ignorance into a solemn obstructiveness. He has no objection to carry, as did his fathers before him, great loads of merchandise, field produce, or fat traders, from morning to night and day after day. But he must do it at his own pace—a pensive walk. He resents our galloping legislation. He is, he says, being civilised too fast; he is not a Hansom horse yet, but his descendants will develop in time. 'Wait,' cries the tattoo, 'we are a great nation that has been slumbering for centuries, contented with the memories of our primeval Arabian splendour. Let us wake up by degrees.' But our century has no patience; and so we insist, with our mail-carts, horns, and long-thonged whips, in riding behind small tattoos at Hansom pace."

Not less humorous are Mr. Robinson's sympathies with plant-life. In his essay on "The Man-Eating Tree" he describes his approach to that huge cannibal of the forest. "The vegetable first discovered my presence at about fifty yards. I became aware of a stealthy motion among the thick-lipped leaves. Each separate leaf was agitated and hungry." The half-English flora of the Himalayas seems to have been to Mr. Robinson a peculiar refreshment and delight. "The mountains," he says,

"are heaped together, wall behind wall, of living green, with great ramparts of rock, and smooth grassy bastions disposed in orderly disorder, and for moats long valleys filled with white mist—a grand system of fortifications guarding the approaches to the snows. The path mounts upwards; on either hand lies a great slope of pine and oak, boulders panelled and festooned with moss and fern, the green landscape relieved here by a mass of yellow mullein, there by the crimson leaves of the creepers fading among the pines. On the sunny patches, or where a gorge, suddenly opening, shows a great triangle of mountain-side sloping down to a valley in which the trees look like shrubs, and from which rises up the pleasant sound of rushing water, flit insects of shapes and tints strange to the new-comer. Great velvet beads, banded with orange and gold; the flame-coloured Sirex and a myriad of butterflies—Sarpedon on his wings reflecting in broad bars the blue of the sky above; Polyctor gorgeous in purple and green and gold; Paris with, on either wing, a great splash of sapphire; the Gonepteryx and Colias, wandering sun-flashes; and the fritillaries, on whose underwings lie silver sparkles caught, in flitting over, from some glittering cascade."

The essay on "Gamins" is perhaps the most finished piece of this volume. In another lucubration the philosophy of Stone-throwing is developed with admirable fooling. Mr. Robinson has studied the ways of the Indian village boy; and his road-side family groups, with their brown babies and miscellaneous burdens of country stuff, are touched off with tenderness and truth. Excellent also, in a different vein, is the English sketch entitled "My Wife's Birds." Mr. Robinson here gives us, with happy ingenuity, the diary of a bullfinch, and a true page from the journal of a cage-canary. The inequalities of the book come out in paragraphs of superfluous generalisation, and in the tedious lists of prices which the author inflicts on us whenever he visits a bazaar. But Mr. Robinson has only to do justice to his artistic perceptions and to his fine vein of humour in order to create for himself a unique place among the essayists of our day. "You cannot," he says, "moralise currente calamo, for twaddle is only to be avoided with labour." W. W. HUNTER.

PELAYO'S "HISTORY OF THE SPANISH HERETICS."

Historia de los Heterodoxos españoles. Por M. Menendez Pelayo. Tomo II. (Madrid.)

IN a notice of the first volume (ACADEMY, No. 431) we said that this work is an indispensable complement of every Church History of Spain. The second volume shows it to be almost equally necessary for the history of the Spanish Renaissance.

The first portion is occupied with a biography of the Spanish Erasmists—that is, of those Churchmen who, in their zeal for classical learning and in their admiration of the writings of the great Dutchman, followed him to a greater or less extent in his views on ecclesiastical reform. It is curious to notice the vacillation of the Inquisition on this head. At one time all writings in opposition to Erasmus were forbidden; but the course of events soon compelled these decrees to be rescinded, and an opposite course of action to be entered upon. In the chapters on Protestantism in Spain, which form the bulk of the present volume, Dr. Pelayo has not only made use of the latest printed authorities of Boehmer and Wiffen, but has had access to the MSS. collected by Usoz. Alfonso de Castro also placed at his disposal all the materials used in his Historia de los Protestantes españoles, and everything that he has collected since. Shorter chapters on the Mystic, Jewish, and Morisco heresies follow, with one on magic and superstitions. Throughout the volume full and careful bibliographical notes are given, detailing not only the actual work, but the various editions of the whole writings of the author whom he is citing. An Epilogue unexpectedly reveals to us the singular weakness of the logical faculty of our author as compared with his marvellous literary power. To us it appears that the statements by which he endeavours to support his conclusions really tell against them.

We quite agree that we have had enough, and almost more than enough, "picturesque" histories of Spain, and that a really serious history has yet to be written. But we are also persuaded that, if written, the result would be very different from that which Dr.

Pelayo contemplates. It would be that the Inquisition was "unconstitutional," as far as that term can be applied to mediaeval institutions—i.e., that it was utterly opposed to the spirit of the early liberties of Spain. It would also show that the Court of the Castilian Sovereigns of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries was eminently tolerant, and that intolerance came in the first instance from Crusading foreigners, both laymen and ecclesiastics. The astuteness of Ferdinand and of Charles V. perceived how easily this spirit could be turned to the profit of the Crown, and used it accordingly. We are aware of the reaction which has seized so many literary men in Spain against the opinions current after the Revolution in 1868; but it is startling to be called upon to "admire the moderation and mercy of the Church, which only excludes the heretic from her bosom after a first and second admonition, and does not even then stain her hands with blood, but only delivers him over to the secular power." Can the author really suppose that this fact at all lessened the agony of the bloodless tortures of the Inquisition, or the long horrors of the autos de fé to the unhappy victims? The argument that the Inquisition cannot have been hostile to science and literature, because its first centuries coincide with the golden period of literature in Spain, has been repeated by our author in his "Discurso" before the Spanish Academy; but it is refuted by the facts which he cites to prove it. He says that no author was burnt because of his literary demerits; but if the effect of mere delation was to make men fly the country and become professors at the Sorbonne, it shows how terrible the fear of trial must have been. In the same way the Inquisition is argued to have been not hostile to the study of the Scriptures; but the fact is cited "that even the current books of devotion in which portions of the Gospels and Epistles were translated were collected and destroyed" by Valdés, though afterwards the milder rule of the Council of Trent prevailed.

The book is full of matter for further notice; the thorough honesty of the writer and his vast research are apparent throughout. It is well worth perusal by all interested in the subject. In our judgment Dr. Pelayo has made it clear that, if the Reformation failed in Spain, it was not from any unwonted disinclination of the people, and especially of the religious, to receive its doctrines, but simply because Spain possessed in the Inquisition an unrivalled engine for quenching the fire before it had time to spread.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

Gaelic Proverbs and Familiar Phrases. Based on Macintosh's Collection. Edited by Alexander Nicolson, M.A., LL.D. (Edinburgh: MacLachlan & Stewart.)

THIS book, as will be seen from its title-page, is based in part upon another book; but it contains, the editor informs us, about three times as many proverbs as the first edition of Macintosh. Like other collections, this offers many proverbial sayings to be found in the mouths of men speaking the most diverse tongues. We need not occupy space by dwelling on these verbal counters common to almost all nations, but may briefly refer to some which, coming from a Celtic land, have the Celtic flavour about them. What is this Celtic spirit? the reader asks. Not easy, perhaps, to define; but it may be recognisable in examples. Here is a Welsh specimen, borrowed from Roscoe:—

"In Mawddwy black three things remain,
False men, blue earth, and ceaseless rain:
Of these they'd gladly riddance gain."

Or this—

"The gule,* the Gordon, and the hoodie crow
Are the three worst things that Moray ever saw."

Or this—not, however, proverbial:—

"Thrice he breathed St. Odhran's rhyme,
And thrice St. Fillan's powerful prayer,
Then turned him to the eastern clime,
And sternly shook his coal-black hair."

Or the Irish "Heavy rain is a sign of blood;" "Power will have his day;" or the elliptical triad, which we heard in Clare a few years ago, "Deireadh chapail, drann a mhadraidh, gáire Shassonaig"—"The rear of a mare, a dog's grin, the laugh of an Englishman."

Sheriff Nicolson offers us many proverbial sayings that have this unmistakeable Celtic stamp.

"Thrice dog's age, age of horse;
Thrice horse's age, age of man;
Thrice man's age, age of deer;
Thrice deer's age, age of eagle;
Thrice eagle's age, age of oak"—(371).

A Welsh parallel bears the name of the bard Iolo Goch. Here is one of the Irish versions, as rendered by Mr. De Vere, whom we quote from memory:—

"Three lives of an eagle, the old song saith,
Make the life of a black yew tree;
Three lives of a yew tree the furrow's path
Men trace grass grown on the lea;
Two furrows they last till the time be past
God willeth the world to be:
For a furrow's time hath MacCarthy stood fast,
MacCarthy in Carbery."†

Many of these proverbs illustrate Celtic superstitions. "The forest-bull fell on them" (369), explained of a dark and ominous cloud appearing on New Year's Eve; the Cailleach Bhearra's saying (144); "The black horse [?] on you!" a phrase of unknown origin employed by the victors in certain singing competitions at weddings (145) which recal classical parallels; "the Clann-Mhic-Codruim as seals" (150); "I went over a plant" (135), which puzzles the editor, but is said of sudden seizures wrought by the Good People, and connected with superstitious fears respecting the plucking of or treading on foxglove, vervain, mugwort, &c.; "Whatever you see or hear, keep the cat turning" (192), an allusion to a terrible superstition described by Donald Macpherson in the Notes to his Melodies, &c. (Edinburgh, 1824), under the name Taigh-ghoirm.

These proverbs, like everything else that is distinctively Celtic in Scotland—beginning with its name—plainly stand in the most intimate relation to the older and purer traditions and bardic lore of Ireland. Although Ireland is no doubt generally more decelticised now than the Scottish Highlands, nevertheless there alone, among the Celtic countries, has a really ancient and valuable MS. literature survived the wreck of time. There alone are found copious relics of an old Celtic mythological system; a Celtic epic, and a cycle of ancient heroic legend of which only the echoes are heard elsewhere: there only a body of really primitive Celtic law. Asked to place, as sporting men say, the Celtic races in the order of the importance of their surviving traditions, and omitting the dead and buried Gauls, we should be bound to offer some such list as the following:—(1) The Irish, (2) the Irish, (3) the Irish; then the Welsh, the Scottish Highlanders, the Bretons, the Manxmen, in such order as they might agree upon. The relation, maternal and filial, between the Irish and Scottish traditions was seen clearly enough by some Scottish antiquaries—Chalmers, for example. It is less clearly recognised by the editor of the book before us, who advances the opinion that “the whole story and poetry of Fionn and the Feinne have been more deeply implanted, and better preserved, . . . among the Scottish than among the Irish Gael” (xxx.); and hence always in the body of the book he writes “Fingal” for the ante-Macphersonian Fionn of his text. The occurrence of Cu-Chulaind and Corroi mab Dayry (= Curoi mac Dáiri) in the Book of Taliessin; of King Brian Bóroimhe and his son Murchadh as subjects of one West Highland tale (Campbell, ii. 195); and the reproduction, with Irish personal and place names, of Gerald Griffin’s Caol-Riabhach in another (ibid., i. 289), the poems by “Gerroyd erle” (Garrett, Earl of Desmond) in the Dean of Lismore’s Book, are significant instances of the influence of Irish tradition in other Celtic lands.*

* A sort of weed.

† But there is an old Latin version where the series is Man, Crow, Deer, Raven, Phoenix, Hamadryad.

Returning to our proverbs, Brighid bán, on whose day the cats bring home the firewood (296), is not “fair,” but “white,” Brigit; and the explanation is found in Ireland, where the name is understood as alluding to the snow at her festival. “Arthur’s journey to you” (never to return) (348) is a curious parallel to the Irish “That you may go like the Goose-of-the-Island.” We cannot wholly accept the chivalric character claimed for the Celts as expressed in their sayings about women (xxvii.). The Bretons own to three faults, and one of the triad is, they are despisers of women. The Irish say, “A woman is bolder than a pig, and a pig is bolder than the Devil;” “Love your wife and children without letting them know it.” The language here is often very corrupt Gaidhelic (gràineil, 145; Pàra = Páthraic, 302; seanar, for seanathair, 298; Eathan for Eóin, John). The Islay Child (341) is the Irish Gárlach Cuileáin. “Better a good retreat than a bad waiting” (250) is old in Ireland:—

“And in that occidental place
Their proverb says ’tis less disgrace
To save yourself by nimble flight
Than still to stand and faintly fight.”

(Hesperinesographia, canto vii.). The Cailleach Bhéarra (144) is mentioned in the Book of Leinster.

* Cf. still more the tale of Conall, where we encounter Medb of Cruachan, Goibhniu Gobha, the Glas Goibhneon, and Lugaid Lagna (Campbell, ii. 137).

If much of what we have said savours of dissent or fault-finding, let us not omit to add that this is a very attractive and well-written book all the same. It breathes of peat fires in lonely cots on broad moors; of solemn mountains and still lakes; of men and women, simple, plain, strong of speech as of nature, strangers at least to mock intensities and simulated enthusiasms. The parallels to the proverbs are useful; and occasionally we have more interesting illustrative matter, as the excellent Celtic legends of the Brave Tailor of Beaulieu (136), the Water-Horse and the Girl (306), the Smith and the Changeling (298), or the Fiann enchanted; but in our eyes the best feature in the book is the sympathy, plainly unaffected, of the editor with his subject, and with the people who speak these proverbs.

Let us, in conclusion, re-echo his wish, that the Irish collection which, in 1868, Canon Bourke had been ten years engaged upon, and which should therefore be large by this time, may shortly see the light.

DAVID FITZGERALD.

Anne Evans. Poems and Music. Edited by Anne Thackeray Ritchie. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

EVERYBODY knows a certain axiom—uncomplimentary to the married state—about bons mariages and mariages délicieux. Things are not quite so bad with books; but it may safely be said that, for every three books which may fairly be called good, there is not more than one at the outside which is delightful. In this little volume of remains, Miss Thackeray has given one of the rarer class to all who are capable of receiving the gift. The charming little memoir which she has prefixed to the collection of poems and music gives the perfect picture of a sort of woman of which most people have been fortunate enough to know examples at some time or other in their lives, though few such examples are likely to have come so near perfection as the late Miss Evans. The very best kind of old maid—that is to say, a woman combining all the pleasantest features of matronliness with an entire absence of the petty concentration on household and domestic cares, or the sour repining at such cares which too often accompany matronhood—that is the definition of the type. There are no more delightful letter-writers than ladies of this kind, and we must say that Miss Thackeray’s extracts from a few of her friend’s epistles make us wish very decidedly for more. Other extracts, also given from papers unpublished and not intended for publication, confirm the estimate of her as a woman of very unusual, though very unobtrusive, intellectual power. Here are some selections from a paper of definitions, some of which need only a little literary polishing to make them worthy of Chamfort or Joubert.

“A privileged person. One who is so much a savage when thwarted that civilised persons avoid thwarting him.”

“A liberal-minded man. One who disdains to prefer right to wrong.”

“Radicals. Men who maintain the supposed right of each of us to help ruin all.”

“Liberals. Men who flatter Radicals.”

“Conservatives. Men who give way to Radicals.”

(This is a coup de griffe all round with a vengeance!)

“A domestic woman. A woman like a domestic.”

Her definition of humour, “thinking in fun while we feel in earnest,” is as near success as anything can possibly be. Very delightful, too, is her miniature disquisition on what she calls “the pebble-test”—that is to say, a classification of her friends according to the way in which they regarded certain cornelians and other such-like things which she had picked up. We should like to quote this as a whole, but it is much better to refer our readers to the book.

The remains themselves consist of two parts—poems of a very miscellaneous kind, and music some of which is setting for some of the poems. The merits of the former are very much what might be expected. They do not possess a great freshness of manner, though, on the other hand, there is absolutely nothing that can properly be called imitation in them. In the sonnet Miss Evans succeeds very well; and, when one remembers the excellence of some of Dr. Sebastian Evans’ compositions of this kind, it would seem that the “narrow plot of ground” had a peculiar attraction for the family. Most of Miss Evans’ sonnets are of a philosophical and meditative cast, the utterances of a schöne seele, without either affectation or cant or maudlin sentiment marring it, as all three have marred so many of its sisters. Here, however, is one which partakes more of the nature of a conceit, and, as we delight in conceits, we shall give it. No one who knows the scenes described will deny its remarkable felicity and truth to the suggestions of the subject.

“FEVENSEY AND HURSTMONCEUX.

“I looked upon two corpses in one day,
Two noble corpses, lying by the shore.
First, one who on his large proportions bore
The stamp of heathen warrior where he lay
Harmless and helpless in his disarray.
The mild autumnal cheer was clouded o’er
By uncouth shades that haunt him evermore,
Dark horrors of his harsh rule past away.
Then a fair lady, barbarously slain,
O stately pleasantness, untimely cold;
There might one grieve till sad night should enfold
The appealing form, and gaze and gaze again,
As though through longing one might yet behold
The vanished life. Ah! longing all in vain.”

The songs are still better; and here the second division of the book helps us to explain and understand their excellence. Although Miss Evans has wickedly defined a musical woman as “one who has strength enough to make much noise and obtuseness enough not to mind it,” she herself was a musical woman in the best sense, and a score or so of specimens of her compositions are given here, some merely for instruments, some intended as settings for her own words. It is easy to understand from these compositions her brother’s statement that she had no very striking powers of execution. Striking powers of composition she certainly had, though it is possible that severe music-maniacs of the type to whom M. de Laprade not long ago addressed a counterblast might think her style too literary,

Music to sing to and music to dance to form the greater part of her compositions; and the severe persons before alluded to will find it hard to show that singing and dancing are not the historical causes of the genesis of music. Many of the specimens, however, here given of Miss Evans' music are of the kind of which it may be justly said, "That's for thoughts." We may select as specially attractive two waltzes (which carry out the principles of the famous "invitation"), three or four short untitled pieces, and a most charming song, "I walked through my garden," in which words and music could hardly be better married or make a more delightful couple. GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

The Great Explorers of the Nineteenth Century. By Jules Verne. Translated by N. D'Anvers. (Sampson Low.) In spite of the manifest incompleteness of the record it contains, this is a capital book. It forms the third volume of the series entitled "Celebrated Travels and Travellers," its predecessors having been The Exploration of the World and The Great Navigators of the Eighteenth Century. The subject-matter of the present volume is treated in two parts, in the former of which M. Verne first sketches the earliest geographical work of the century, and then devotes two long chapters to the exploration and colonisation of Africa and the Oriental scientific movement and American discoveries. The second part is occupied with voyages round the world, the labours of French circumnavigators, and Arctic exploration. The subject is too vast to be adequately dealt with in one volume, large as that volume is; and it would be easy to point out many omissions. But for these and the almost inconceivable carelessness of not furnishing an index, M. Verne's book would have been very useful for purposes of reference, for it contains much information respecting travellers the accounts of whose work are not readily accessible. In a prefatory note the translator thanks a gentleman "for his untiring aid in the verification of disputed spellings," &c. What is particularly referred to in this sentence we do not, of course, know, but we can say that great want of knowledge how to deal with the French mode of spelling foreign names is manifest throughout the book. Why, for example, should we have Foota-Djallon and Fouta Djallon, when Futa-Jallon is the recognised and ordinary English way of writing the name of this highland region of West Africa? The illustrations which are scattered with a lavish hand throughout the volume are an attractive feature, and will no doubt act as an inducement to the young to turn also to the letter-press. They are stated to consist of fifty-one original drawings by Léon Bonett and fifty-seven facsimiles from early MSS., together with several maps by Matthis and Morien. The frontispiece is a very appropriate one, being a map of the world on Mercator's projection, on which is shown the work that had to be done in the nineteenth century.

My Start in Life. By a Young "Middy." (Sampson Low.) This little volume contains the letters addressed by a young midshipman to his father and a certain "Cousin Emily" from various parts of the world and at ages varying from about sixteen to twenty. The fond parent, presumably considering his son to be a phenomenon, has somewhat injudiciously thought fit to publish these letters, which might very well have been printed for private circulation if it was absolutely necessary to preserve them. The last sentence of the Preface shows with how little consideration the father has given his boy's letters to, we fear, an unappreciative public. "Some passages have been omitted, but not a word has been altered or added." We have nothing much to say against the letters per se, for they are, on the whole, well enough written for a boy; but the pruning knife should undoubtedly have been used with a much more unsparing hand. With regard to the other statement, the father, in one instance at any rate, has got himself on to the horns of a dilemma, and either he cannot read his son's writing or his son has made an odd mistake. As a large part of the volume is devoted to the China station, we have looked more particularly at these letters, and especially the account of an excursion from Peking to the inner Great Wall (pp. 137-43). Throughout, the editorial parent persists in printing as Hankon, instead of Nankow, the name of the well-known village at the southern end of the pass which this spur of the Great Wall crosses. Owing to the dissimilarity in the sounds, we do not see how the son could possibly have fallen into such an error, and we must, therefore, lay it at the door of the father. Again, the paternal arithmetic is by no means strong, for although we are first told that the letters come from a boy whose age varies from about sixteen to twenty, we are afterwards informed that the same letters cover a "period of about seven years." We confess ourselves unable to do the sum.

Tales of the Castle Guard. By Col. Eden. (Newman.) The Castle Guard, it may be well to premise, is a viceregal guard over the official residence of the Queen's representative at Dublin; and this volume contains a number of stories which are supposed to have been told by the officers thereof after the mess dinner. The anecdotes and recollections, of course, refer to various phases of military life in different parts of the world, and will be much appreciated by young people. Towards the end of the collection is a chapter entitled "Number One Good Piecey Pigeon," which relates some incidents of the last China War, and shows that the writer does not know much about the names of places; one or two, indeed, look as if they had been taken from French sources. The book contains five illustrations, and the one accompanying the chapter just referred to gives an odd representation of Chinese soldiers.

Stories of the City of London. By Mrs. Newton Crosland. (W. H. Allen and Co.) Mrs. Crosland has done youthful readers a service by retelling in a somewhat concise form stories connected with Old London, which include a large amount of really valuable information. When we say that she writes of London Bridge (as it was), the Tower, the Plague, the Great Fire, the Thames Tunnel, &c., it will be seen that she has chosen subjects in which the rising generation can hardly fail to take a lively interest, and with which, indeed, it behoves them to be acquainted. The book contains some illustrations which, though perhaps not exactly what one could wish in the matter of execution and finish, will no doubt prove attractive to boys.

Tourist's Guide through London; comprising Historical Summary and Notices of the Principal Objects of Interest which may be visited during a Few Days' Residence. By W. J. Loftie, B.A., F.S.A. (Stanford.) This is a very useful little book, with a considerable amount of valuable information packed into its hundred and twenty pages. The arrangement, which is good, consists of a plan of routes, followed by an alphabet of the most important places. The information is largely original, and the account of the City under C in the alphabet is an excellent summary. We are not prepared to agree with all the points brought forward, such as the statement that Newgate is older than Aldgate, or that the School Board building on the Embankment is pretty. These criticisms, however, are only by the way, for the book is one we can confidently recommend, not only to the tourist, but also to the resident, as both useful and interesting.

The King's English. By G. Washington Moon. (Hatchards.) Mr. Washington Moon has done such good service to the study of English, and the latter part of this little book is so well worth reading, that we can only express our unfeigned sorrow that he should have written the first half of it. This contains little else than a string of erroneous statements which would have been out of date a century ago. We cannot conscientiously recommend a volume which says that "the English language is derived chiefly from the Aryan, through the Sanskrit, and thence through the Celtic, Italic, and Teutonic;" which supposes the Book of Job "to be the most ancient written document extant;" and which exhibits the most stolid ignorance about the derivation of the Phœnician from the Egyptian alphabet, first established on a solid basis by de Rouge, whom Mr. Moon calls de Rouge. For the future we would advise him to confine himself to subjects with which he is acquainted, and, if he wanders into other fields, to discover first who are the best and safest guides to follow.

MAX DUNCKER'S History of Antiquity. Translated by Evelyn Abbott. (Bentley.) Another volume of the English translation of Prof. Max Duncker's admirable work has appeared, characterised by all the excellences which the preceding volumes have led us to expect. Attractive in style, abounding in learning and research, and brought up to the level of the latest knowledge, the work has found a worthy translator. The volume just issued deals with the ancient history of India, and on that account should possess a special interest for the English reader. The first part describes the Aryan conquest of Northern India, and sets before us a picture of Hindu life and religion as it is presented in the Veda. The second half is occupied with the rise and character of Buddhism, the reforms it brought about in Brahmanism, and the history of Asoka. The story is admirably told; and though, in a subject like Buddhism, there must be many points on which all scholars will not agree with the opinion adopted by the author, he has had recourse to the best accessible authorities, and has always clothed his statements in clear and plausible language. We hope the book will be widely known and read.

Old Yorkshire. Edited by William Smith. (Longmans.) The title of this volume is appropriate enough when one learns what it means, for which recourse must be had to the Preface, whence it will be found that the contents are an olla podrida from the columns of "Local Notes and Queries" printed weekly in the Leeds Mercury. The subjects have a wide range; and it would be unjust to say that there is a single article which does not possess considerable interest, while many of them have a permanent value. The book will be especially acceptable to Yorkshiremen all the world over, and is not unworthy a place in almost any library. The editor has made his selections with good taste and discrimination; while the portraits and other illustrations are judicious and add greatly to the value of the really handsome volume, which may be readily consulted by means of its exhaustive indexes, a feature for which Mr. Smith deserves special credit.

Elementary Chess Problems. By J. Paul Taylor. (G. C. Heywood.) A collection of fifty-two move problems by one of the most successful English composers in this peculiar branch of the art. Many players take pleasure in such positions who will not be at the trouble to attempt the solution of longer, and consequently more intricate, puzzles. The young chess-player must not, however, be misled by the title which Mr. Taylor has adopted. The problems are not elementary in the sense of being adapted solely for young players. Many of them are as intricate and difficult as is possible in connexion with such brevity, and could not be solved at sight by the strongest player. Mr. Taylor gives some unnecessary hints to young composers as a prelude to his collection. We would give one to young solvers, that the most unlikely move on the board is probably the right one. Notable instances in point are problems 2, 17, 19, 29, 33, and 39 of this collection. Some of the positions show great elegance in construction, among which we would point out Nos. 1, 11, 25, and 28. The problems appear correctly printed, and, as most of them have already undergone the ordeal of publication, are probably sound; but this is not the case with the solutions, in which several palpable errors occur that must provoke and puzzle young players more than the puzzles which they fail to solve.

Mother Molly. By Frances M. Peard. (George Bell and Sons.) Mother Molly is a charming story, either for children or their elders, written with that peculiar grace and literary skill which have made Miss Peard's former stories so delightful. The scene is laid at Plymouth and in the surrounding country, in the year 1779; and the plot is woven from the threatened invasion of England by the French. The story of the French spy, and how nearly childish indiscretion contributed to fulfil his mission, is most cleverly told, and will hold children entranced. It only seems a pity that the plot was not extended to the end of the book, for, beautiful as is the description of the Devonshire moors, it falls flatly after the tragic dénouement in the middle of the story.

Kind Hearts. By Mrs. J. B. Firth. (Griffith and Farran.) A somewhat commonplace love-story, to show that "kind hearts are more than coronets," but written in a simple and unassuming style which will find readers for it.

Duties and Duties. By Agnes Giberne. (Seeley and Jackson.) This is an admirable story, reprinted from a family magazine, showing that parochial "duties" which are performed at the expense of social affection are questionable.

FROM the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge we have received Bernard Hamilton, by May Shipley, a prolix chronicle of the small talk and small doings of a country town in which the curate is the chief object of interest to everyone.

Wrecked Lives; or, Men who have Failed, by W. H. Davenport Adams. (S. P. C. K.) Two volumes of Lives of well-known men—which would have been pleasanter reading if they had not had such a title. For it may be an open question to some people, when they find such men as Heinrich Heine and Robert Burns given as examples of "men who have failed," what failure means. The first volume contains, under this gloomy title, interesting sketches of Rienzi, Wolsey, Swift, Richard Savage, and Chatterton; and the second of Robespierre, Burns, Haydon, Heine, E. A. Poe, and Kosciuszko. We cannot think that the selection is a happy one in accordance with the view which the author puts forward in the Preface. "The true success is that which, in its far consequences, reaches beyond the limit of our 'little lives'; the true failure is that of the man whose success is based wholly upon material conditions." And, were it not for the earnestness with which the weaknesses of the characters mentioned are expiated upon, we might imagine the name of the book a grim jest. To have the facts and outlines of such lives gathered into a readable form is something, but to have their blemishes brought into undue prominence is little less than distortion; and neither Mr. Davenport Adams nor the society for which he writes seems to us to have sufficient means of knowledge to pronounce the sentence of wreck and failure as dogmatically or as freely as is here done.

A MUCH pleasanter book, published by the same society, is Women of Christendom, by the author of The Schönberg-Cotta Family—a series of sketches written at the desire of an Indian missionary for the purpose of setting before Indian women the freedom given by Christianity to their sex. The stories of Prascovia Loupouloff, of Mdme. Elizabeth, and of Mr. Fry are specially well told; and the whole book is written with a painstaking and loving zeal. The writer, throwing the light of her own sympathy with what is best and highest upon the lives which she is sketching, brings out many beautiful traits which will be new to some of her readers.

Grandpapa's Verses and Pictures. By T. P. M. This is a very nice book for children, full of beautifully executed engravings of animals, accompanied by pleasant verses. Those on Titmice are particularly good, and we wish we had space to quote the lines which describe the dainties which titmice cater for their children's dinner. It includes tickly-wigs, fat cocktails, tic-sics, crawly-mites, and blighties. The next best thing to being a young titmouse is to be a little boy or girl who can read about them in T. P. M.'s book, and see Mr. Morris' picture of their snug little home.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE first six volumes of Dr. Hunter's Imperial Gazetteer of India—"Abar" to "Mysore"—are now in course of issue. The article on "India" in vol. iv., written by Dr. Hunter himself, consists of 516 pages, and is deserving of publication in a separate form.

THE Delegates of the Clarendon Press will publish shortly, in the "Anecdota Oxoniensia" series, the Passio et Miracula Beati Olavi, edited, with an Introduction and notes, from a vellum in the library of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, by the Rev. Frederick Metcalf, Fellow of Lincoln College, and author of The Englishman and the Scandinavian. This MS. is a contemporaneous transcript of the Latin twelfth-century original, and contains all the Latin of the fragments published by the Bollandist Fathers, and all the matter of the Old-Norse Homily on St. Olaf published by Prof. Unger at Christiania, and hitherto supposed to be a complete work. Besides this, it contains several additional sections, which prove the author to have been Eysteinn or Augustinus, second Archbishop of Trondjem (1161-88), the builder of Trondjem Cathedral, who lived for three years in banishment in England. Last autumn a conjectural restoration of the original Latin work was published by Prof. Gustav Storm in his Monumenta Historica Norwegiæ, printed at the expense of the Norwegian Government; but he was then unaware of the existence of the MS. brought to light by Mr. Metcalf. The forthcoming publication, therefore, which will contain some twenty-seven sections more than Storm's scholarly reproduction, will rank as the editio princeps of the entire work. It may be added that the MS. was formerly the property of Fountains Abbey, which had a colony of monks in Norway, established in the monastery of the "Valley of Light," on a fiord near Bergen. It is bound in sealskin, and it has been surmised that it was sent from the Valley of Light to Fountains. But more probably it was a present from the Archbishop during his stay in England.

MR. PATERSON, of Princes Street, Edinburgh, is about to publish a re-issue of Scott's Dryden, under the editorship of Mr. George Saintsbury. Scott's work will be reproduced without alteration or omission; but all necessary corrections and additions will be made in the shape of notes and appendices, and the text will be carefully revised and collated throughout with the original editions. The collection of Dryden's letters will be, as far as may be practicable, completed, and some dubious works added. The book will, like the original, be in eighteen volumes octavo, and will be printed by Messrs. Constable with type and paper specially prepared for it. The first volume may be expected in the autumn. Mr. Saintsbury will be glad to receive communications from any persons who may happen to possess letters by the poet, or other original materials.

A NEW work entitled A Visit to Abyssinia: an Account of Travel in Modern Ethiopia, by W. Winstanley, late 4th (Queen's Own) Hussars, will shortly be published in two volumes by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett.

My Garden Wild, and What I Grew There, is the title of a new volume by Mr. Francis George Heath, to be published very soon by Messrs. Chatto and Windus. It will include descriptions of upwards of two hundred British wild flowers and ferns, and explain their position and arrangement in the "wild" garden whose establishment and history form the subject of Mr. Heath's forthcoming book, the especial object of which is to show how much pleasure and what a delightful occupation may be afforded by the growth in our gardens of the "commonest" of our wild flowers and ferns.

MESSRS. SAMPSON Low announce the forthcoming publication of James Woodford, Carpenter and Chartist, by the Rev. Henry Solly, being recollections of the Chartist agitation from 1837 to 1848, with a working-man's experiences—private, social, and political—during that period. The writer's long and intimate acquaintance with the habits, wants, and views of the working-classes renders him a trustworthy witness in regard to all such questions.

As we briefly announced a short while ago, Mr. Ebsworth has got on well with the printing of parts x. and xi. of the new series of the Roxburghe Ballads, which will make in all about three hundred pages. It is only the slow process of reproducing in facsimile the large number of wood-cuts that prevents immediate publication. The work will illustrate a really important episode of English history, as it goes over the time of anti-Papal agitation from 1674 to 1689, with a postscript on 1711. Mr. Ebsworth's work has been heavy. He has undertaken, single-handed, to search, transcribe, collate, as well as annotate, the vast mass of materials treating of this subject which are garnered in the British Museum and have never yet been chronologically arranged. He has also himself drawn and engraved the wood-cuts. He hopes to see his work finally through the press before the autumn.

MESSRS. BATFORD will shortly publish Charitable and Parochial Establishments, by Mr. H. Saxon Snell, written from the point of view of the architect, and illustrated with many lithographic plans and views of public buildings, among which the new St. Marylebone Infirmary will be conspicuous.

MESSRS. HURST AND BLACKETT will issue in June a new novel by Mrs. Randolph, called Rescued, in three volumes.

A NOVEL by Mr. G. Barnett Smith, entitled

Mercy Deane, will appear in the weekly edition of the Manchester Examiner, beginning on June 18.

THE City, like the West End, has now a subscription library of old as well as new books. The circulating library of the London Institution, Finsbury Circus, has been increased by the addition of some sixty thousand volumes formerly not allowed to circulate among its members; and the very large advantages now accorded have, we find from the committee's annual Report, given a marked impetus to the prosperity of the Institution.

THE Girl's Own Paper for June contains the opening chapters of a new story by Sarah Doudney, entitled "Michaelmas Daisy."

MR. E. D. BUTLER, of the British Museum, author of the article "Hungary" in the newly published volume of the Encyclopædia Britannica, was on May 20 elected a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, in recognition of his services in furthering a knowledge of the Magyar language and literature in England. It will be remembered that this honour was conferred also on Mr. Thomas Watts, late Keeper of the Printed Books Department in the British Museum.

THE Victoria University is now in a position to announce its first Preliminary Examination, which will be held at Owens College on June 20. Candidates must previously have gone through the form of matriculation, for which it is necessary that they should be already students of "one of the colleges of the university"—i.e., of Owens College. Further particulars may be learned from the Registrar, Prof. Adamson.

MR. JOHN F. MACLENNAN delivered at Edinburgh on May 20 the first of a course of six lectures upon "Contract Law: its Origin and Early History." This course is the first-fruits of a "Law Fellowship" which has recently been founded in the University of Edinburgh by a body called the Endowment Association.

THERE will be sold in a few weeks, by Messrs. Sotheby and Wilkinson, the famous historical collection of books made by Mr. Henry Stevens, a well-known American bibliophile. The Franklin department alone comprises nearly three thousand MSS., which, with books the earliest and rarest known, will be offered in one lot at £7,000.

WE hear that Dr. Caulfield, Librarian of Queen's College, Cork, has been elected a corresponding member of the Royal Academy of History, Madrid.

THE Scotsman publishes an appeal from the minister of Kinloch Rannoch for subscriptions to maintain, in its present condition, the cottage in which Dugald Buchanan, schoolmaster, evangelist, and Gaelic poet, lived from 1754 to 1768.

MESSRS. PUTNAM'S SONS, of New York, announce an analytical essay on Mr. Browning's Sordello by F. M. Holland.

WE learn from the first number of the Harvard University Bulletin, the successor of the Harvard Register, that the books bequeathed by Carlyle to the Harvard Library number about 325 volumes, by far the larger portion of which are concerned with Frederick the Great.

THERE is now being published in Vienna, in periodical parts, The Oriental Travels of the Crown Prince Rudolph. The work is profusely illustrated with original sketches by the royal author, and it is favourably spoken of by German critics.

Le Livre states that a large number of inedited letters of Card. Richelieu will shortly be published at the instance of the Minister of Public Instruction.

It appears that Oxford men are just now in demand for Scotch dominies. The Rev. Wilfred Richmond, tutor of Keble, has been appointed Warden of Trinity College, Glenalmond; and Mr. Elliot, formerly scholar of Queen's, has been appointed a master of the Edinburgh Academy, on the retirement of Mr. Weir.

MM. J. B. BAILLIÈRE ET FILS, the well-known scientific publishers, announce a condensation of the Philosophie Positive, undertaken by M. Jules Rig, and authorised by Comte's executors.

MESSRS. HACHETTE have brought out the authorised translation of the late Lord Beaconsfield's Endymion, by M. J. Girardin.

THE same firm have issued an Index volume, compiled by M. Paul Guérin, to the edition of the Memoirs of Saint-Simon by MM. Chéruel and Ad. Regnier fils.

M. LOUIS BLANC has just published (Paris: Calmann Lévy) the tenth and last volume of his Dix Ans de l'Histoire d'Angleterre, which treats of the important events that took place in 1870, and also contains some interesting sketches of English social life.

ONE of the chief events of literary interest in Paris just now is the course of lectures which M. Emile Deschanel, the restored Professor of Belles-Lettres, is delivering to crowded audiences at the Collège de France. M. Deschanel has also just published (Germer Baillière) a profession of his historical and political faith, under the title of Le Peuple et la Bourgeoisie, the motto of which is "La démocratie véritable est l'ascension continue au peuple par l'intelligence et la travail."

THE archives of the Kestner family have been examined by Herr Herbst in the preparation of his interesting account of Goethe's four months in Wetzlar, 1772—Goethe in Wetzlar (Gotha: Porthes). A portrait of Kestner, the aggrieved Albert of Werther, is given, and a facsimile of Lotte's silhouette, which hung by Goethe's bed in Frankfurt, and under which he wrote the words, possibly on the completion of his Werther, "Lotte gute Nacht am 17 Juli 1774."

THE Hungarian Academy celebrated last Sunday, May 22, the fiftieth anniversary of its establishment, and has determined, by way of memorial of its jubilee, to publish a history of the sciences in Hungary. A short summary was distributed at the festival.

DR. J. J. JUSSERAND has just brought out a second edition of his excellent little history of "Le Théâtre en Angleterre depuis la Conquête jusqu'aux Prédécesseurs immédiates de Shakspeare." He has corrected a few slips in his text, and added fifty pages of notes, in one of which he controverts Prof. A. W. Ward's assertion that the "Vice" in our old Moralities is purely English, and that the French Moralities have no like character. On the contrary, says Dr. Jusserand, the early French Badin corresponds to the English "Vice," and, as Rabelais says, was played "par le plus pèrit et parfaict de leur compaignie" (livre iii., ch. 37). In confirmation whereof we may quote Cotgrave in 1611:—"Badin enfuriné . . . a notable coxcombe, an asse in graine; also, a fool, or Vice in a play."

PFARRER SCHRÖTER, of Rheinfelden, at the end of his school report for that district 1880-81, publishes an interesting historical sketch on two remarkable "Volkslieder" of the old city. The first, known as "das Schwedenlied," originated during the twenty-one weeks' siege of Rheinfelden, from March 27 to September 18, 1634, by the Rheingraf Otto Ludwig. It was first printed, in an incomplete form, in 1673, but continued to be sung as a "folk-song" until quite recently. It has nineteen verses.

The second "Lied" is communicated by Prof. F. Vetter, of Bern. It arose during the siege of Rheinfelden by the French Marshal Cregui, from July 9 to 20, 1678. Its subject is the conflict on the right bank of the Rhine and the destruction of Säckingen. The song was printed at Basel in the same year. It contains thirty-nine verses.

PROF. SCHIPPER, of Vienna, has nearly finished printing his new book on English metres.

THE last work issued by the Société des Bibliophiles français is Vie de Charles-Henry, comte de Hoya, Ambassadeur de Saxe-Pologne en France et célèbre Amateur de Livres, 1694-1736, in two volumes, edited by baron Jérôme Pichon.

M. ROUFF, publisher of Mémoires de Monsieur Claude, Chef de la Police de Sureté sous le Second Empire, announces that the first edition of vol. i., consisting of 10,000 copies, was completely exhausted within two days of publication.

THE Vegetarian Society of France is publishing a monthly journal entitled La Réforme alimentaire.

A Midsummer Night's Dream has been added to plays of Shakspeare in the excellent "Rugby Edition." The editor, from whom Mr. Furness frequently quotes in his Variorum Hamlet and King Lear, is the Rev. Charles E. Moberly.

In the sixth line of the Rev. A. H. Sayce's article in the ACADEMY last week (p. 373), for "M. Perthier" read "M. Pèritier."

A DEVONSHIRE DIALECT POEM.

THE following dialect poem by "the rural postman of Bideford" has been sent to us by Mr. Follett Pasmore. It commemorates Mr. H. Baird, well known as "Nathan Hogg" by his contributions to the Western Times. Mr. Baird recently died in London; but we hear that it is proposed to remove his remains to his native county, Devonshire.

IN MEMORIAM HENRY BAIRD.

Aw ! massy, zooc ; of ahl us du ?
Poor Nathan Hogg is daid.
He waz za vond uv me and yu,
Let'a tuck en in ez baid.

An let en ha a leetle stone,
A Mite 'll du vur he ;
Tu zay ha mnaen lie alone,
Wayout a tear d' zee.

Twiz he thit zing'd thick purty sung :
"Tha daysy tap tha grave ;"
An had a laugh apin ez tung,
An made tha timid brave.

Poor blid ! no doubt he had ez vaults —
Who hathen em, I zay !
Where ez tha wan thit niver halts
Apin life's ritty way !

Zo, vur tha kindness uv ez heart
An gud thit he did du
Poor Harry Baird mau nat daypart
Unwept, vrend, ot zay yu ?

EDWARD CAPERN.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE last number of La Nouvelle Revue contains an article of great interest on the Basques, by the Rev. W. Webster. The writer has contrived to pack into a short space an immense amount of learning and information without losing his hold on the reader's attention or ceasing to be clear. Mr. Webster sides with Wilhelm von Humboldt and others in thinking that some of the local names of Northern Spain recorded by the classical authors can be explained from the Basque vocabulary, and so bear witness to the former extension of a Basque population over this part of the peninsula, but he draws attention, at the same time, to the changes a language must undergo in the course of centuries, and the complaint of Strabo and Mela that Greeks and Romans could not pronounce correctly the names of Iberian geography. He further shows that the small black race of Northern Europe has no right to be called Iberian, if by Iberian we are to understand Basque, since the genuine Basque type is really tall and fair. A MS. lately discovered at Santiago, which contains the oldest existing list of Basque words, actually states: "Bascli facie candidiores Navarris approbantur." Mr. Webster dwells upon the curious Pastorales or improvised dramas, the subject of which is generally taken from the Bible, which the Basques have been in the habit of representing for generations. The most noticeable feature of these dramas is the chorus of "Satan," who occupy the chief place in them. A full account is also given of the fueros, or special laws and privileges for which the Basques have contended so long and strenuously. Mr. Webster shows how, under these laws, the Basques have formed a virtual republic, enjoying all the rights of self-government, and carrying out the principles of free trade long before the days of Adam Smith. He explains how it has come about that a people so devoted to freedom should yet have been the supporters of Carlist absolutism; and he notices that Ignatius Loyola and Xavier were not only Basques, but men of a thoroughly Basque type. It is curious to remember that we owe Jesuitism to the survivors of a race which inhabited Europe before the arrival of the Aryans, and has found its last refuge in the fastnesses of the Western Pyrenees.

Le Livre for May opens with a short account, from the pen of M. Maurice Tourneux, of a vast bibliographical dictionary, planned, and partly carried out, at the beginning of the century by a forgotten person of the name of Fleischer, committed by the famous bookseller Panckoucke to MM. Barbier and Beuchot to finish, but for one reason or another shirked by them, and still remaining in MS. in the National Library. This is followed by the conclusion of M. Baschet's excellent series of articles on Casanova. The only other original article (to adopt a rather arbitrary distinction) is a review by M. Burty of the curious book just put forth by M. de Goncourt, La Maison d'un Artiste, which contains, as those who have seen it know, a catalogue of the furniture and embellishments of the author's own residence. In the ephemeral part of the number it is to be noted that Mr. Joseph Knight has taken up the mantle of the late Mr. O'Shaughnessy, and gives account of English literature. Mr. Knight devotes considerable space to a description of the English book-clubs, and especially the Spenser Society and the Hunterian. But what does he mean by telling French readers that Drayton and Daniel, Carew and Suckling, are omitted from the standard collections of the English poets? We can only say that all the four certainly figure in our copy of Chalmers. The illustration of the number is a very striking frontispiece (in fact, two such), intended for Young's Night Thoughts, by Gabriel de St.-Aubin, from the Goncourt collection.

THE Revista Contemporanea of April 30 opens with a review of the "Anales de las Ordenanzas de Correos de España" from the thirteenth century to the present time by the honorary postman who writes under the pseudonym of Dr. Thebussem, and who here indicates certain omissions in what is otherwise a great work. Next, Tinajero y Martínez discusses in "Poly-storia" the merits of Italian historians, especially of the seventeenth century. Then follow some careful political and social studies on the people of Morocco by Olivo Canales. "La Juventud Dorada" of Señor Mentaberry is a classical historical novel of the time of Nero. From the bibliographical section we learn that Fernandez y Gonzales has published the first volume of a work on "Jewish Juridical Institutions in the Different Kingdoms of the Iberian Peninsula," and that Menendez Pelayo is printing the lectures on Calderon which he is delivering in Madrid. Should the former of these books at all equal the Mudejares en Castilla by the same author it will be a most valuable work.

THE Theologisch Tijdschrift for May continues its uncompromising examination of religious ideas and religious history. Dr. Slotemaker points out some difficulties attending the justification of faith as a moral postulate; Dr. Cramer gives an essay, based on Dr. Bavinck's researches, on Zwingli and Zwinglianism; and Dr. Oort, a short paper on the cultus of the dead among the Israelites.

THE ORIGIN OF NORSE MYTHOLOGY.

PROF. STEPHENS has recently been delivering in the University of Copenhagen a course of eight lectures in reply to the novel theory propounded by Prof. Bugge, that the Northern mythology is, in great part, borrowed from classical and Christian traditions, brought home by the Vikings in the ninth and tenth centuries.

Prof. Stephens does not deny the possibility that the Northern mythology may contain elements borrowed from classical or Christian sources, but he contends that there is no reason to refer such borrowing to any date nearly so late as that assigned by Prof. Bugge. From 500 B.C. to 500 A.D. there was constant commercial and other intercourse between the Scandinavians and the civilised peoples of the South. The Runes, and the classical peculiarities in the Scandinavian ornament of the early Iron period, were derived from the Greek colonists in Scythia. With regard to later times, it is certain, from modern discoveries, that Romans, whether merchants or others, lived in Scandinavia, and that many of them were buried there. A long time is thus afforded for the operation both of Pagan and Christian influences on the mythology of the North.

Prof. Stephens does not, however, believe that the debt of Norse mythology to Christianity can possibly be of large amount. Although a new religion always borrows elements from the older creed which it displaces, we find no historical example of the contrary process, that an old and decaying faith should enrich itself by borrowing from a new religion destined eventually to supersede it. On the theory of Prof. Bugge, however, this reversal of the usual order of things took place at the precise time when its improbability becomes greatest—viz., at the moment when the older religion was on the point of expiring. Nor were the Vikings a class of men at all likely to have had so important a share in the diffusion of new mythologies as Prof. Bugge's theory assigns to them. Moreover, in the tenth century the Norse mythology had already become well known all over Scandinavia, and had assumed a consistency of form which must have been the result of centuries of development.

Considerable stress is laid by Prof. Bugge on the alleged occurrence in the Edda of many foreign words, which can only have been brought by the Vikings from England and Ireland. Among the words cited as borrowed from the Anglo-Saxon, are vikingr itself, drekka, sæging (from sæccing), fljüð, a woman (from fled as an ending in English female names). All these derivations Prof. Stephens stigmatises as utterly unscientific—a censure which he applies with still greater emphasis to Prof. Bugge's fanciful comparisons of proper names, such as that of Tyr with Tydides, and Loki with Lucifer.

In the fourth lecture, Prof. Stephens commenced the discussion of Prof. Bugge's explanation of the myth of Baldr. According to Prof. Bugge, Baldr is Christ, and the blind Hödr, by whom the god is unwittingly slain, is the blind Longinus, who plunged the spear into the Saviour's side. Prof. Stephens shows that the blindness of Longinus is quite unknown to early legend. Loki, who gives the mistletoe arrow to Hödr, is made out to be Judas, with the help of a reference to the Toledo Jeshu. This absurd book, however, is only of the thirteenth century, and, after all, does not speak of a "mistletoe arrow," but of a cabbage stalk which was made into the cross! Prof. Stephens points out in several other instances the unsubstantial character of the resemblances which Prof. Bugge finds between the story of Baldr and that of Christ, and suggests that it would be more plausible to identify Baldr with St. Sebastian or St. Edmund, King of the East Angles.

Prof. Bugge makes Loki represent not only Judas, but also Satan; and in Loki's blind brother he sees an allusion to the belief that the devil was blind. To prove that such a belief existed, he quotes only a single passage from the Anglo-Saxon prose legend of St. Andrew, which, as Prof. Stephens contends, he has completely misinterpreted.

To the assertion that the chaining of Loki is derived from the chaining of Satan, Prof. Stephens replies that the representation of the devil as chained is of quite late origin, and is found first in Northern countries; it seems, therefore, to have been borrowed from the myth of Loki.

The testimony of the Ruthwell and Bewcastle crosses to the antiquity of the Baldr myth is dismissed by Prof. Bugge with the statement that the ornamentation of the crosses refers them to the year 1000. Prof. Stephens complains that Prof. Bugge has neglected to examine correct copies of the inscriptions, the language and characters of which clearly belong to the seventh century.

In reply to Prof. Bugge's argument, that the "Carlovingian" type of ornament found on the Ruthwell cross was not introduced into England till about A.D. 1000, Prof. Stephens showed that a special style of art had very early been developed in Northumbria through imitation of Roman models, and that Charles the Great imported artists from England. The "Carlovingian" ornament, therefore, existed earlier in England than on the Continent. The words in the Ruthwell inscription, "I was pierced with arrows," were regarded by Prof. Bugge as indicating the existence of an otherwise unknown Christian legend, which had been imitated by the framers of the Baldr myth. This, Prof. Stephens showed, was a mistake; the supposed speaker was not Christ, but the cross itself, as was clear from the whole context. The proof that the Ruthwell cross belonged to the seventh century carried with it the conclusion that the story of Baldr had been known in England long before that period. Prof. Stephens then referred to numerous early inscriptions in widely separated parts of Scandinavia containing allusions to various portions of the Norse mythology. In several cases these allusions were in the form of kenn-ingar, or poetical circumlocutions, which could only have been understood by readers to whom the myths were matter of familiar knowledge.

In conclusion, Prof. Stephens said that he had now followed Prof. Bugge over the whole ground traversed in the portion of his work hitherto published. He should not have leisure to discuss in the same manner the succeeding portions, nor would it be necessary to do so, as he had already sufficiently proved that the assumptions on which the new theory rested were erroneous. The result of the whole enquiry was that for at least one thousand years before the ninth century the Northern peoples had been in possession of a developed religious system, presenting many points of coincidence with the Christian faith. There was nothing to regret in this conclusion; his hearers should, on the contrary, rejoice that their far-off heathen ancestors had possessed a faith which had in it so much that was sublime and ennobling, and should strive to hold fast the truth which that ancient faith enshrined.

The lectures will shortly be published entire, both in English and Danish.

CURIOUS BLUNDERS IN SEVERAL EDITIONS OF POLYCARP.

Laverton Rectory, Bath.

You lately inserted a letter of mine in which I pointed out some remarkable errors in connexion with a forgotten edition of Ignatius. I now send an account of some still more extraordinary blunders in several editions of Polycarp's Epistle. The account will furnish a curious illustration of the truth of Horace's words—"In vitium ducit culpæ fuga, si carot arte."

The blunders are connected with two passages in the Epistle, and have arisen from a serious miscorrection in Le Clerc's 1724 edition of Cotelierius' Patres Apostolici of a slight error (the misplacing of a reference) in the previous edition of 1698. Strangely enough, this mis-correction, though made more than a hundred and fifty years ago, has apparently never yet been pointed out; and, which is still more surprising, the original error, or its mis-correction, or both, have seriously misled at least four subsequent editors of Polycarp's Epistle—namely, Russel (in 1746), the late venerable Dr. Routh, Bishop Jacobson, and Zahn—though not all precisely in the same way, as will hereafter appear.

The two passages with which the mistakes are connected come near together, in the third and fourth chapters respectively.

In the third chapter occur the words "ἡς ἐστὶ μὴτηρ πάντων ἡμῶν," taken probably from Gal. iv. 26. But, in the old editions of Polycarp, there is a variation in respect of the last word. The editio princeps of the Greek text, published by Halloix in 1633, has ἡμῶν, the reading (as it now appears) of all the MSS., and, therefore, universally adopted by modern editors. But Ussher, in his edition (1644, p. 16), changed ἡμῶν into ὑμῶν, changing also, in the old Latin version, "nostrum," the reading of all the former editions of that version, into "vestrum." Evidently (though this was apparently not perceived by Zahn, whose strangely blundering note shall be quoted hereafter) Ussher's reason for making these changes was because ὑμῶν and "vestrum" seem to be required by the context, rather than ἡμῶν and "nostrum." Apparently, Ussher considered the correctness of his readings so obvious that he did not think it worth while to notice the other readings, either in his margin,* or in his notes at the end, nor did Patrick Young (Junius) do so in his brief notes, appended by Ussher to his own.* From Ussher's edition ὑμῶν and "vestrum" were adopted in several subsequent ones.

In chap. iv. (p. 17 of Ussher's edition) occur the words "τὰς γυναικας ὑμῶν," as read in all editions. In this passage, however, Young suggested a correction in the following brief note:—"Pag. 17, lin. 3, ὑμῶν fort. ἡμῶν." No reason was given for the suggestion, but it was evidently made because in this passage ἡμῶν seems to agree better with the context than ὑμῶν. The conjecture, however, has not been adopted by any subsequent editor. As Zahn and Funk remark, the use of ὑμῶν in this passage, where we should have expected ἡμῶν, strongly points to the conclusion that Polycarp was unmarried. If this was the case, Young's conjecture is, of course, deprived of all probability.

I now come to the error in Le Clerc's 1698 edition of Cotelierius, and its mis-correction in that of 1724.

In chap. iii., Cotelierius in his edition (1672) adopted, without even a note upon the point, Halloix's reading ἡμῶν, translating it in his own Latin version by "nostrum," and giving the same in his text of the old Latin version. Accordingly, those readings were reproduced in Le Clerc's 1698 edition, in which, however, was added in a foot-note Young's brief note—"ὑμῶν fort. ἡμῶν." Unfortunately (probably by a mere printer's error), this note was stupidly attached to ἡμῶν in chap. iii. instead of ὑμῶν in chap. iv., in spite of the evident incongruity of the note when so appended. In the 1724 edition the incongruity was removed, not, however, as it ought to have been, by altering the position of the reference, and thus attaching the note to ὑμῶν in chap. iv., but by changing the ἡμῶν of chap. iii. into ὑμῶν, it being strangely overlooked that by this alteration a serious inconsistency was introduced between Cotelierius' Greek text (as now exhibited) and his Latin version "nostrum," which was still retained in the parallel column. It may be well to add that this change in Cotelierius' text was apparently quite unconnected with the fact that ὑμῶν was the reading of Ussher's and several other editions, as already mentioned.

It shall now be shown how the four editors above named have been misled, either by the original error, or its mis-correction, or both.

(a) Russel (Patres Apostolici, 1746, vol. ii., pp. 234, 235) was led into two errors—(1) of reading ὑμῶν in chap. iii., in spite of his giving "nostrum" both in the old Latin version and in that of Cotelierius; (2) of attaching Young's note to this ὑμῶν, instead of ὑμῶν in chap. iv. If Russel had referred to Ussher's edition, he might have seen that by the reference, "Pag. 17, lin. 3," Young's note is plainly attached to the second ὑμῶν, and not to the first (as read by Ussher), which occurs (as we have seen) on p. 16 of Ussher's edition. Moreover, in the second passage there is (as has been said) an obvious reason for the suggested correction, whereas, in the first, the contrary is the case.

(b) Routh also (Opuscula, vol. i., p. 23, line 17, ed. 1858) and Zahn (p. 114, critical note on line 14†) have virtually fallen into the till after the printing of his text of Polycarp, though this is nowhere stated by Ussher himself, and has never before been pointed out) from Isaac Voss.

* The view here propounded (apparently for the first time) seems strongly confirmed by the circumstance that Aldrich, in his edition (1708), while he reads ἡμῶν in the text (and "nostrum" in that of the old Latin version), inserts ὑμῶν in the margin as a conjecture, without assigning any reason for the proposed correction.

† The errors in this note are so curious, that it second error. But, in their case, the error is the more astonishing for the two following additional reasons, which do not apply to Russel:—

(1) They knew (which Russel apparently did not) that Halloix's reading is ἡμῶν, which Ussher must therefore have purposely changed into ὑμῶν, his reason for doing so being no doubt known to Young. It is strange that it did not occur to them that, under these circumstances, Young would never have suggested ἡμῶν as a conjectural emendation, and that, moreover, without assigning any reason for doing so. (2) They both mention this same note of Young's in its right place in chap. iv. It is most strange that they did not see that one note could not possibly have been intended by its writer for two passages quite unconnected with each other.

(c) Routh (as above referred to) and Jacobson (p. 510, ed. 1847, note on ἡμῶν) imply that Cotelierius' reading in chap. iii. is ὑμῶν, whereas it is ἡμῶν, without even any mention being made of the other reading. Apparently they did not refer either to the original edition of 1672 or to that of 1698, and overlooked the inconsistency (pointed out above) in the 1724 edition between the Greek text and Cotelierius' Latin version in the parallel column.*

It may be added that the mistake respecting Young's note is probably partly due to the circumstance that Smith in his edition (1709), while he has no note upon the second passage, gives in the first (in which he reads ὑμῶν with Ussher)—both in his foot-note on p. 56 and in that on p. 110—precisely the same note as Young had given on the second passage. Smith gives this as his own note, but it seems probable that he took it from Young, attaching it, however, to the wrong passage, either by a mistake of his own or through his being misled by Le Clerc's 1698 edition. It is curious that Jacobson, though he gives Young's note in its right place in chap. iv., mentions in connexion with it Smith's and Routh's notes on chap. iii., saying that those editors approve of Young's conjecture, whereas the former is silent about it, and the latter expressly disapproves of it.

Curiously enough, a similar (but still more inexcusable) error, and a similar mis-correction, have occurred in connexion with two other passages near the end of Polycarp's Epistle. A similar note of Young's (in which, however, he gives two reasons for his suggested correction), which belongs to ὑμῶν near the beginning of chap. xiii. (the Greek text of which is supplied from Eusebius) was, in Le Clerc's 1698 edition, attached to ἡμῶν near the end of chap. ix., in spite of the same incongruity in its being so attached, and in spite of Young's reasons being thereby rendered perfectly unintelligible. And in the 1724 edition the incongruity was removed in the same way as before, not by transferring the note to its right place, but by altering the shall be quoted in full. It is as follows:—"ἡμῶν c. [i.e., cum] b. cs. v. o. f. p. Hx. [i.e., Halloix]: ὑμῶν U. [i.e., Usserius] (quam lectionem neque inter corrigenda emend[avit], neque in notis d[en]dit, immo vero Junii conjecturam, 'f. [i.e., forte] ἡμῶν' imprimi caravit)."

With respect to the first part of this note, it has been already stated that Ussher's reason for not defending his reading evidently was because he thought that its correctness was obvious from the context. The last part of the note is (as shown above) a simple blunder.

I have the less scruple in pointing out these errors, because Zahn is himself so severe (sometimes most unjustly) in his strictures upon our own Bishop Jacobson.

* There are other extraordinary errors in Routh's and Jacobson's notes on this passage besides that of Routh pointed out in (b). But as these other errors are in no way connected with those in Le Clerc's two editions, they are not here particularised,

* But in his own printed copy, still preserved in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, there is written in the margin, in Ussher's own hand, the following brief note:—"ἡμῶν (MS.)." For this information I am indebted to Dr. Ingram, the present learned and courteous librarian. It may be desirable to explain that by "MS." is here meant Salmasius' transcript of Polycarp and Barnabas, which Ussher obtained (not, however, ἡμῶν into ὑμῶν, the same inconsistency being thus introduced between Cotelierius' Greek text (as now exhibited) and his Latin version in the parallel column, and Young's two reasons being applied to a passage for which they were not intended, and to which (even as miscorrected) they are (as might be expected) not altogether suitable. Fortunately, in this instance, the error and its miscorrection do not seem to have misled any subsequent editor except Russell, though Zahn's remarkable omission of any reference to Young's note may, perhaps, be due to his having been perplexed by them. Routh (p. 29, line 41)—who is also quoted by Jacobson (p. 528)—refers to the note in its right place in chap. xiii., having probably obtained his knowledge of it direct from Ussher's edition and not from Le Clerc's.

The miscorrection seems, however, to have caused another curious error in the 1724 edition itself. For in that edition, not merely is ἡμῶν wrongly changed to ὑμῶν, but the next word ἀποθανόντα is changed to ὑποθανόντα!! Apparently the printer found ὁ written in the margin, and not content with changing ἡ of ἡμῶν into ὁ (which was all that was intended by the would-be corrector), changed also ἂ of ἀποθανόντα into the same letter. Dressel in his note (p. 387, ed. 1857) mentions both these peculiarities in the 1724 edition, but was evidently ignorant of their origin, and does not even speak of them as errors.*

With respect to the readings in chap. iii., it may be added that Zahn, while with all other modern editors he gives ἡμῶν in the Greek text, differs from all other modern editors in giving "vestrum" (with Ussher and the Codex Petavianus) in the old Latin version. Apparently he thought that the translator, in spite of his finding ἡμῶν in the Greek text, gave "vestrum" in his version on account of the apparent requirements of the context. If he did think this, it is all the more strange that it did not occur to him that Ussher was probably influenced by the same consideration in adopting both ὑμῶν and "vestrum."

J. H. BACKHOUSE.

PS.—It may be useful to students of Polycarp's Epistle to have it pointed out that the mistakes mentioned above are not the only ones which have occurred in connexion with Young's few and brief notes. At the end of four of these, Ussher made additions of his own, which, in his edition, are shown to be such by being enclosed in square brackets. Unfortunately, Le Clerc retained these brackets, and attached "Jun." (or "Ibid." for "Jun.") at the end of each composite note, instead of omitting the brackets, and putting "Jun." at the end of the

* From Dressel's note (p. 380) on chap. iii., it is plain that in that passage he overlooked the variation (pointed out above) between the 1698 and 1724 editions. It is still more surprising that he makes no reference to the fact that Ussher, and from him several other editors, read ὑμῶν and "vestrum" in that passage.

† Ussher (as he himself tells us on the second page of the Preface to his Notes) obtained a collation of this MS. through Clandius Sarravius. But there is reason to believe (though the circumstance has never hitherto been pointed out) that this was after the printing of his text of Polycarp. If so, he cannot, of course, have been influenced by this MS. in adopting the reading "vestrum." With respect to the two Oxford MSS. which he used in preparing his text, the Balliol one has "nostrum," the Magdalen one "vestrum," which is also (see Zahn's critical note) the reading of two MSS. unknown to Ussher. I am informed by Dr. Ingram that Ussher has no manuscript note upon the point in his own printed copy.

For my information respecting the readings of the two Oxford MSS. I am indebted to my friend Mr. Madan, sub-librarian of the Bodleian, who has kindly examined them at my request.

first part of the note, and "Usser." at the end of the second. Apparently he thought that the portions bracketed in Ussher's edition were additions subsequently made by Young himself. In the case of the first of these composite notes (chap. ii.), even so learned a man as Hemsterhuys (no doubt misled by Le Clerc's edition) evidently fell into this mistake—see his note on Lucian, quoted by Jacobson and referred to by Routh. So also Routh and (apparently) Jacobson attribute the second part of the note to Young instead of Ussher. Smith—whose note is repeated by Russell—quotes it as "cujusdam [] viri doctissimi scholion," evidently in ignorance that this "vir doctissimus" was Ussher himself. In the case of the second composite note (chap. vi.) Russell and Jacobson distinctly ascribe the whole note to Young; Smith and Routh make no direct reference to it. What makes the errors still more remarkable is the circumstance that not one of these four editors falls into a similar mistake in the case of the third and fourth composite notes (chaps. vii. and viii.).

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- ABINOLEI, P. Roma nell'età di Mezzo. T. 1. Torino: Bocca. 8 L.
DORR, E. Die Calderon-Literatur in Deutschland. Leipzig: Friedrich. 1 M. 20 Pf.
FLEURY, E. Origines et Développements de l'Art théâtral dans la Province ecclésiastique de Reims. Laon: Imp. Cortillot.
KLETSCHAK, H. W. Als Eskime unter den Eskimos. Wien: Hartleben. 6 M.
MEURER, M. Italienische Majolica-Fliesen aus dem Ende d. 15. und Anfang d. 16. Jahrhunderts. 2. u. 3. Lfg. Berlin: Wasmuth. 32 M.
MICHEL, E. Étude biographique sur les Tischbein, Peintres allemands du 18^e Siècle. Basel: Georg. 12 fr.
PASTON, J. Life of Voltaire. Sampson Low & Co. 82s.
PROELSS, R. Geschichte d. neueren Dramas. 2 Bd. 1. Hälfte. Das neuere Drama in Frankreich. Leipzig: Schöcke. 13 M. 50 Pf.
SCAZZAZINI, G. A. Dante in Germania. Storia letteraria e bibliografia dantesca alemanna. Parte I. Milano: Hoepli. 10 L.
STREUBER, W. Lyrisches im Shakspeare. München: Ackermann. 3 M.
WIEBE, L. Le Sipylos et ses Monuments (ancienne Smyrne). Paris: Duche. 6 fr.
WIEBER, F. Magalhães-Strasse u. Austral-Continent auf den Globen d. Johannes Schöner. Innsbruck: Wagner. 5 M.

THEOLOGY.

- BRUSTON, Ch. Histoire critique de la Littérature prophétique des Hébreux depuis les Origines jusqu'à la Mort d'Esaié. Paris: Fischbacher. 5 fr.
WOUVE, L. Histoire de la Bible et de l'Exégèse biblique jusqu'à nos Jours. Paris: Fischbacher. 12 fr.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BOUCHÉ-LÉCLERCQ, A. Histoire de la Divination dans l'Antiquité. T. 3. Paris: Leroux.
DAUDET, E. Histoire des Conspirations royalistes du Midi sous la Révolution (1790-94). Paris: Hachette. 3 fr. 50 c.
DIONISOTTI, C. Storia della Magistratura piemontese. Vol. I. Napoli: Margheri. 6 L.
FELTZGUG, D. Prinz Eugen v. Savoyen. 1. Serie. 7. Bd. Feldzug 1705. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 30 M.
FRÉVILLÉ, Ch. Documents inédits sur Philippe de Commines. Paris: Champion.
HANSERESSE von 1477-1530. Bearb. v. D. Schäfer. 1. Bd. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 20 M.
HOPMANN-WELLENHOF, P. v. Michael Denis. Ein Beitrag zur deutsch-österreich. Literaturgeschichte d. 13. Jahrh. Innsbruck: Wagner. 6 M. 40 Pf.
JUNG, J. Die romanischen Landschaften d. römischen Reiches. Studien üb. die inneren Entwicklgn. in der Kaiserzeit. Innsbruck: Wagner. 12 M.
KONST- u. GERSCHTITS-DENKMALE, die, der Prov. Westfalen. 1. Stück: Kreis Hamm. Leipzig: Seemann. 12 M.
LINDT, K. Beiträge zur Geschichte d. deutschen Kriegerwesens in der ständischen Zeit, im Anschluss an die Kämpfe zwischen Philipp v. Schwaben u. Otto IV. Freiburg-i-B.: Mohr. 1 M. 50 Pf.
LUPP, A. Der Feldzug am Mittelrhein von Mitte August bis Ende Dezember 1793. Freiburg-i-B.: Mohr. 8 M.
NOTICES et Extraits des Manuscrits de la Bibliothèque nationale et autres Bibliothèques, publiés par l'Institut national de la France. T. 25. Paris: Imp. Nat.
RAULENBROCK, Ch. Metz et Thionville sous Charles Quint. Paris: Fischbacher. 6 fr.
UASUNZEN-ROSENEN, liv., est-, u. curländische, bis zum J. 1800. Gesammelt u. hrsg. von F. G. v. Bunge. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 6 M.
VINCENTO, P. Catalogo dei Manoscritti relativi alla Storia di Roma che si conservano nella Biblioteca vaticana. T. 3. Torino: Bocca. 15 L.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BLERCHER et FAUDER. Matériaux pour une Étude préhistorique de l'Alsace. II. Colmar: Barth. 2 M. 80 Pf.

- HOMBERGER, E. F. v. Ornithologische Briefe. Berlin: Grieben. 6 M.
JANKA, V. de. Sphenolarineae Europaeae analytice elaboratae. Berlin: Friedländer. 2 M.
PENNETIER, G. Leçons sur les Matières premières organiques. Paris: Masson. 18 fr.
PERUZZA, A. Elenco dei Pesci dell' Adriatico. Milano: Hoepli. 10 L.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- ADAM, L., et V. HENRY. Arts y Vocabulaire de la Linea chiquita, sacados de Manuscritos inéditos del Siglo XVIII. Paris: Maisonneuve.
BONORI, R. Dialoghi di Platone. T. II. Torino: Bocca. 6 L.
BREKKA, A. v. Untersuchungen üb. die Quellen d. Polybios im 3. Buche. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M. 60 Pf.
DIETRICH, F. Arabisch-deutsches Handwörterbuch zum Koran u. Thier u. Mensch. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 5 M. 50 Pf.
DISSERTATIONES, ex. variis argumenti variorum antorum. Festschrift zu Prof. D. Ch. E. Luthard's 25 jähr. Professoren-Jubiläum. Leipzig: Dörfling & Franke. 5 M.
HUEHNER, E. Ueb. mechanische Copieen v. Inschriften. Berlin: Weidmann. 20 Pf.
KLINGENBERG, J. De Euripideorum prologorum artis et interpolatione. Bonn: Marcus. 2 M.
LEWIN, H. Das mittenglische Poema morale. Im krit. Text, nach den 6 vorhandenen Handschriften zum 1. Male hrsg. Halle: Niemeyer. 2 M.
MAERKEL, P. Platos Ideal-Staat. Dargestellt u. m. besond. Rücksicht auf die moderne Zeit beurteilt. Berlin: Weidmann. 2 M.
MORLLER, W. Ueb. die Religion Plutarchs. Kiel: Universitäts-Buchhandlung. 1 M.
MUELLER, R. u. H. HOEPF. Ullrich. Evangelium Marci grammatisch erläutert. Berlin: Grieben. 1 M. 50 Pf.
STREP, J. Thukydideische Studien. 1. Hft. Freiburg-i-B.: Mohr. 2 M. 40 Pf.
ZIMMER, H. Glossae Hibernicae e codicibus Wirzburgensi Carolinensiensis aliis. Berlin: Weidmann. 8 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

S. T. COLERIDGE'S "FRANCE: AN ODE."

Dublin: May 23, 1881.

There seems to be danger that an erroneous reading may come to be accepted as part of the received text in Coleridge's great ode, "France." In the collected edition of Coleridge's poems, 1828, and subsequent editions until that of 1877, in Archbishop Trench's Household Book of English Poetry, in Mr. Gosse's English Odes, in Mr. Swinburne's Selections from Coleridge's Poems, we find

"When, insupportably advancing,
Her [France's] arm made mockery of the warrior's tramp."

The editor of Pickering's edition, 1877, notes the corruption of tramp for ramp, and states that ramp is the reading of the two newspaper versions (1798, 1802), of the original quarto edition (1798), and of Sibylline Leaves. It has not, I think, been noticed that ramp comes from the passage of Samson Agonistes, in which Coleridge found his insupportably advancing. This puts the correctness of the earlier text beyond a doubt.

"But safest he who stood aloof
When, insupportably his foot advanced,
In scorn of their proud arms and warlike tools,
Spurned them to death by troops. The bold
Ascalonite
Fled from his lion ramp."

(Samson Agonistes, II. 135-39.)
EDWARD DOWDEN.

THE MEANING OF "ÆSTEL."

Berlin, S.W., Kleinbeerenstrasse 7: May 20, 1881.

I doubt whether Körner's suggestion that King Alfred's æstel means "book-cover" is really so undoubtedly correct as Mr. Sweet calls it in your issue of the 14th inst. I am of opinion that the explanation given by Lye (cf. Sweet's edition of the Pastoral Care) is fully confirmed by a twelfth-century gloss in the margin of the Corpus MS. of the work (indicatorium æstel festuca), and by indicatorium æstel in Ælfric's Glossary (p. 314, l. 5, of my edition).
J. ZUPITZA.

A CORRECTION.

Beaumont Lodge, Shepherd's Bush, W: May 22, 1881.

In the review of The First of May, which appears in the ACADEMY of May 21, I am credited with two works of which I have no knowledge whatever—The Widow Margaret, and "Miss Lawrence" in the Dull Sunday.

I have one other correction to make. Mrs. Mundi at Home appeared at Christmas, 1875, not in 1879. WALTER CRANE.

OCCURRENCE OF NEOLITHIC IMPLEMENTS AT ACTON.

21 Notting Hill Square, W.: May 20, 1881.

It may interest your readers to know that I discovered last week on the surface of a field south of the Priory at Acton an abundance of Neolithic implements precisely similar as regards form, type, size, and material to those which occur in the neighbourhood of Beer and Sidmouth, in Devonshire. They occur also on a large field on the hill at Acton, west of the Willesden Railway, and are formed of gray and black chalk flints, which—or the implements—have been imported. On a field south of the Priory I found a flat, circular, gray quartzite, beach pebble, derived possibly from the conglomerate of South Devon, similar to those of the Dorsetshire and Devonshire coasts. Such pebbles are of frequent occurrence on the surface of the fields in the Neolithic districts of Beer and Sidmouth, and have been used as hammer-stones and missiles. The association of this pebble with implements so like in every respect to those of South-east Devonshire is very remarkable.

The occurrence of Palaeolithic implements in the drift of Acton has been known for some years. They occur in remarkable abundance in the high-level gravels, as well as in the low-level gravels of Hammersmith; and one cannot fail to find in newly spread gravel examples of the minor implements, such as flakes, scrapers, drills, &c., and occasionally larger implements. A series of the Neolithic implements of Acton I purpose depositing in the Jermyn Street Museum. Their discovery at this locality confirms the conjecture I had formed that Neolithic implements might occur in the Thames Valley, from having found implements of Neolithic type in the drift, into which they may have got washed. SPENCER GEO. PERCEVAL.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, May 30, 3 p.m. Education Society: "English Literature to Young Boys," by Mr. H. O. Bowen.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture V., "Colour Blindness and its Influence on Various Industries," by Mr. R. Brudenell Carter.
TUESDAY, May 31, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Non-Metallic Elements," by Prof. Dawar.
8 p.m. Society of Arts.
8 p.m. Institution of Civil Engineers: "The Production of Paraffin and Paraffin Oil," by Mr. R. H. Brunton.
WEDNESDAY, June 1, 7 p.m. Entomological.
8 p.m. British Archaeological: "Mermaids," by Mr. H. Syer Cuming; "Articles found in London," by the Rev. S. M. Mayhew.
THURSDAY, June 2, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Magnetism," by Prof. Tyndall.
4.30 p.m. Royal.
8 p.m. Archaeological Institute: "Incised Figures upon Slate, and other Remains from Towyn, Merionethshire," by Mr. J. Park Harrison; "Recent Discoveries among the Pyramids," by the Rev. W. J. Loftis; "Britanno-Roman Inscriptions discovered in 1880," by Mr. W. Thompson Watkin.
8 p.m. Society for the Fine Arts: A Musical Lecture, by Mr. A. Gilbert.
8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
FRIDAY, June 3, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Magnetic Disturbance, Aurorae, and Earth Currents," by Prof. W. G. Adams.
8 p.m. Philological: "Sum Points in English Grammar," by Mr. H. Sweet.
SATURDAY, June 4, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Russian Literature—Gogol," by Prof. O. E. Turner.

SCIENCE.

The Steam-Engine and its Inventors: a Historical Sketch. By Robert L. Gallo-way, Mining Engineer. (Macmillan.)

IF a number of well-educated persons were asked, "Who was the inventor of the steam-engine?" probably those who thought themselves able to answer the question at all would name many different persons as entitled to the honour. Hero of Alexandria, the Marquis of Worcester, Solomon de Caus, Papin, Savery, Newcomen, Watt, Stephenson, and others might be mentioned. This discrepancy would not arise so much from ignorance of the facts as from uncertainty or difference of opinion as to the comparative degree of credit due to each inventor for his share in the matter. The fact is, that the question is too general, and, in such a simple form, admits of no proper answer. There has been no "inventor of the steam-engine;" such an achievement as the production of this mighty instrument cannot have been the work of any one human being. We might as well ask who invented language or mathematics or painting. The question, before it can be answered, must be altered in shape, or, rather, it must be expanded into several subdivisions, to be determined by the complex nature of the thing it refers to.

The steam-engine may be said to involve two great principles of action—the expansive force, and the condensibility of steam—the engine itself being a mechanical apparatus by which these principles are made serviceable for the production of power. We ought, therefore, to enquire, first, who discovered the two principles of action, and, next, who devised the machine by which they are utilised. Let us look a little at each of these points.

First, as to the expansive force of steam. No doubt, from the earliest ages, when the two common elements of fire and water came together, the force produced by evaporation must have made itself sensible. The aeolipile was an early mode of exemplifying the fact; and, before the Christian era, Hero of Alexandria had actually applied this to produce mechanical power. Many later inventors, as Blasco de Garay (1543), de Caus (1615), the Marquis of Worcester (1663), and others, followed in the same direction. Hence it is difficult to name any one person as the discoverer of the first great principle involved in the steam-engine.

The second principle is of a different character. It embodies the fact that, when a volume of steam is cooled to a proper degree, it will return to its former condition of water, leaving a space nearly vacuous, into which the surrounding air has a tendency to rush with considerable force. This mode of producing power is much less obvious than the former, and must have been the result of observation and study. It could only have been properly understood after the discovery of the pressure of the atmosphere by Torricelli in 1643. This discovery had led to the inference that, if a vacuum could be easily obtained, mechanical power might be produced by the rush of air into it; and various attempts were made to get this vacuum, chiefly by burning gunpowder. The first person to propose the use of steam for this purpose was Denis Papin, who described the principle clearly in the Leipzig Acta Eruditorum for 1690, a few years after which date it was carried into successful application by Savery and Newcomen.

So much for the principles made use of for the production of steam-power. But these principles, in order to be available, must be applied through the medium of some apparatus or machine properly calculated to develop in a practical form the power that can be obtained. Here, therefore, we come to consider the steam-engine, properly so called—i.e., the machine by which steam is used.

It is a matter of notoriety, to all who are accustomed to mechanics, that the steam-engine exists in a great number of different forms; we have the pumping-engine, the rotating beam-engine, the side lever-engine, the direct-acting engine, the oscillating engine, the compound engine, the single- or double-acting engine, the atmospheric engine, the high- or low-pressure engine, the condensing or non-condensing engine; the locomotive engine, and so on, in great variety. When, however, the construction of all these varieties is looked at from a broad point of view, it is easy to see that the differences are more apparent than real; the chief features of each variety presenting a remarkable similarity. The steam-engine, however modified its form, consists essentially of a single fundamental apparatus, namely, a cylinder and piston. A solid disk is made to travel in a closed case with smooth and parallel sides, the elastic fluid is admitted into one end of the case, and its pressure causes the disk to move. This is the whole essence of the steam-engine; all the differences in form are only variations in the details of construction, chiefly in the mode of transmitting the motion of the disk to the working-point of the machine.

This simplifies the matter immensely; and under this simplification we may more reasonably enquire as to the history of the invention. The cylinder and piston, or its equivalent, must have been known at a very early period; at any rate, it is embodied in the pump, the invention of which is attributed to Ctesibius of Alexandria a century or two before the Christian era. The more pertinent enquiry here will be—When, and by whom, was this device first used as a mode of developing power by the pressure of elastic fluids, and particularly by the use of steam?

So far as refers to elastic fluids generally, this appears to have been first done by the celebrated astronomer and philosopher, Huyghens. Soon after the discovery of the pressure of the air, proposals were made by several inventors for forming a vacuum by the combustion of gunpowder, and taking advantage of the force with which the air would rush into the space thus left void. Huyghens was one of these inventors; but he improved on the plans of his predecessors by burning the gunpowder under the piston of a cylinder, and an apparatus of this kind was constructed by him at Paris in 1678 or 1679. The remaining step, the use of steam, was contributed by Denis Papin a few years later. He had been formerly assistant to Huyghens, but had removed to London in 1674, and from thence to Marburg in 1687. Immediately after this latter date he discovered, as has been already stated, the principle of producing a vacuum by the condensation of steam, which he at once proposed to render available by the cylinder and piston used by Huyghens ten years before. It does not appear that Papin actually made the engine, but his description of 1790 is so clear and explicit as to put the invention beyond all doubt or cavil; for any one who could make a cylinder and piston at all could not fail to produce Papin's proposed machine. This machine was essentially the steam-engine of Newcomen and Smeaton; and hence probably Denis Papin has, strictly speaking, more claim than any other single person to be called the inventor of the steam-engine, seeing that he not only discovered one of the main physical principles on which it depends, but was the first to apply this principle through a mechanical arrangement identical with the essential feature of all modern steam-engines.

The further history may be passed over in a few sentences. Shortly after Papin's publication Savery made effective use of the force of steam for raising water, but he did not adopt the cylinder and piston. This was first brought into use by Newcomen, whose "atmospheric engine," so successfully worked until the era of Watt, was nothing but the efficient practical carrying out of Papin's idea. Newcomen only applied the condensing principle, but the expansive force was not neglected. We find in Leupold's Theatrum Machinarum, published in 1725, a description of a cylinder-and-piston machine in which the expansive principle alone was made use of, so that at this date both the high-pressure and the condensing forms of steam-engine were in practical existence.

About the middle of the century came Watt, who, though he introduced no new principle, and no essentially new form of machine, so vastly improved what he found as to have done more towards spreading the advantages of steam-power than all former inventors and discoverers put together. The most salient features of his improvements were condensation in a separate vessel, the use of the expansive force of steam in conjunction with condensation, the adaptation of the engine to rotatory motion, and an infinitely better system of mechanical construction generally. No one with any mechanical knowledge can fail to appreciate these advantages; but still, as a matter of history, we must not forget that the steam-engine was in actual use, in a rough phase of its present form, before Watt came into the world.

Since Watt's time the most important advances have been the introduction, by Trevithick and Woolf, of steam of higher pressure, with consequent further expansion and increased economy; the great extension of the compound form of engine originally invented by Hornblower; the application to navigation by Symington, Fulton, and Bell; and the application to locomotive land engines by Trevithick, George Stephenson, and others. And so we arrive at the magnificent results of the present day.

The little book mentioned at the head of this article has for its object to state, in a compendious form, the history of which the above is a bare outline. It is an unassuming, meritorious essay, well arranged, readable, and trustworthy. The author has taken pains to examine his authorities, to which he gives full references; and he has thus imparted to the book a value beyond that apparently due to its size.

W. POLE.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES.

ON Tuesday last Mr. Rhys Davids delivered the fifth lecture of this course, on the Saṅgha, or religious Order founded by Gotama. In the time of the Buddha there were brahmins devoted to laborious study, austerity, self-denial, meditation, and contemplation; there were in those days teachers and different schools of religious thought, ethics, and metaphysics; there were ascetics, too, who begged their daily bread from door to door; there were self-elected teachers to be found who gathered followers and disciples around them. The brahmins and their pupils belonged to a particular class; but Buddha acknowledged no distinctions of caste; all classes, from the highest to the lowest, were received into his Order. Gotama was not satisfied with the existing condition of things. He looked at them very much in the same way that Hume regarded the philosophies of his day; but he was a far greater man, with far more resemblance to Socrates than to Hume. Buddha propounded a scheme of his own to replace the current teaching of his time—a scheme that embraced inward culture and the practical duties of life. The Order he established was distinguished by peculiarities of dress, manners, and habits, which could, however, be laid aside at pleasure; and, doubtless, in the early Saṅgha there would be much entering and leaving the Order. The presence of the teacher has determined often the success of other Orders; but Buddha's system of self-culture was independent of time and place; his disciples were not compelled to live with their master; hence, many were admitted to the Order without reference to Gotama. This tended to secure the stability and continuance of his followers, and thus the Saṅgha became an Order that exists to this day.

Before Gotama's time the monastic system had not been tried, and its dangers were not seen. In those days men did perceive unreality in wealth and sorrow in family life. They saw the fleeting character of all earthly things, and they tried to find a way of escape from these evils. An eager longing after peace made men desirous of giving up the pleasures of life. "Blessed Buddha," said the elder Kassapa, "the state of Nirvāṇa is one of rest, but it cannot be found as long as we live under the sway of the senses and passions. That rest excludes existence, birth, old age, and death; the great mental attainments alone lead thereto. I know and see that happy state; I long for it."

Here the lecturer quoted the words of the late W. F. Robertson:—

"The deep want of man is not happiness, but peace. The state of peace in the Buddha system was not to be gained merely by renouncing the pleasures of the world, but by getting rid of lusts and cravings (taṇhā)—the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life"

—a state in which the craving for future existence no longer disturbed the calmness of the mind.

Buddha taught that he had found such a state—that he came to call others to it and to lead them to it. It was only to be gained by withdrawal from the world, so that in retirement the "brother" might learn to control and master his sinful passions, make reason the lord of sense, eradicate all affection for the things of this life, and devote himself to that self-culture necessary for the attainment of these objects. Hence, life in the Order is often spoken of in the sacred books as the clear, calm, and blissful state of existence.

The lecturer touched briefly upon the personal influence of the Buddha, which reached far and wide, and endeared his memory to all, and left an abiding influence not only upon his immediate followers, but upon all who came under the influence of his teaching. Some passages of great interest were read from the Mahā-parinibbāna-sutta, containing the master's instructions to the members of the Order. In one of his conversations with Ānanda, Gotama alludes to his approaching death, and exhorts each "brother" to be a lamp and refuge to himself, holding fast to the truth as a lamp and holding fast as a refuge to the truth. "When I am gone, let the truths and rules of the Order which I have set forth be your Teacher."

OBITUARY.

A FEW months ago the Royal College of Surgeons acquired the most extensive private collection of crania in this country. It was a collection which had been made, during a long life, by Dr. Joseph Barnard Davis, of Shelton, near Hanley, in the Staffordshire Potteries. This eminent craniologist—a man of European reputation—has recently passed away at the ripe age of eighty. Dr. Davis traced his love of craniology to the early teaching of the great anatomist, Joshua Brookes, and to the lectures of Sir William Lawrence. In 1848, Dr. Davis purchased his first skull; and his collection grew so rapidly that, when he prepared his great catalogue, he found it necessary to take with his own hands more than 25,000 minute and careful measurements. This catalogue was published under the title of Thesaurus Craniorum. In conjunction with the late Dr. Thurnam, he produced the magnificent Crania Britannica; and he was also the author of numerous valuable papers on physical anthropology, several of which were published at Haarlem. Dr. Davis was a fellow of a large number of Continental societies, as well as of the Royal Society of London.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

THE fifty-first anniversary meeting of the Royal Geographical Society was held on Monday, when Lord Aberdare was re-elected President, Mr. Major was elected a Vice-President, and the following Members of the Council:—Lord Cottesloe, Sir F. J. O. Evans, Sir Bartle Frere, Col. J. A. Grant, Mr. S. P. Low, Gen. Pitt-Rivers, Lord A. Russell, and Col. Yule. Mr. D. W. Freshfield was elected a secretary in the place of Mr. Major, and Lord Reay, foreign secretary, in succession to Lord A. Russell. The Royal (Founder's and Patron's) Medals, awarded to Major Serpa Pinto and Mr. Leigh Smith, were received for them by Capt. de Fonseca Vaz and Mr. Clements R. Markham. The two gold and two silver medals annually given for competition among public schools were also presented to the four boys who had passed the best examinations in physical and political geography. Lord Aberdare afterwards delivered an address, reviewing the progress of geography during the past year.

DOCUMENTS are said to have been recently discovered in Venice showing that Marco Polo's house stood where the Malibran Theatre now is. An inscription to that effect is to be placed on the building.

AFTER his journey to Kordofan, to which we referred on May 14, Mgr. Comboni proposes to visit Jebel Goltan, after which he will return to Khartum. He will then proceed, in company with Rasef Pasha, to explore the Bahr-el-Ghazal and the Albert Nyanza, where he intends to found a mission-station.

The third Algerian missionary expedition to East Central Africa, which started from Algiers last October, had by last accounts arrived at Mdaburu, about half way between the coast and Lake Tanganyika. Here they have been well received by the new chief of the district, and are about to build a house for a permanent station, for which they have been allowed to choose a site very advantageously situated in a fertile locality.

The members of the earlier Algerian expedition, who have made their head-quarters at Rumongué, in Urundi, near the north end of Lake Tanganyika, are engaged in teaching the native children the Swahili language, and in making enquiries as to the best route to the Mwata Yanvo's country, to which a party is ordered to proceed shortly. The road thither, they learn, lies through Katanga, the famous copper country, situated between the Upper Luabala and Lufira rivers, which form the Kamorondo. It is said to be two months' journey from Ujiji to Katanga, and nearly the same distance thence to the Mwata Yanvo's capital.

At the recent meeting of the French Association at Algiers, Col. R. L. Playfair, our consul-general, read a paper in the geographical section on a visit which he had paid to the Kroumir country, in the Regency of Tunis. Col. Playfair and his companion are said to have been the first Europeans to visit the interior of this now celebrated region. It has been arranged that next year's meeting of the association is to take place at Rochelle, under the presidency of M. Janssen, Director of the Meudon Observatory.

INTELLIGENCE has been received of the arrival of Dr. Gouldsbury's expedition at Sierra Leone from Timbo on April 20, having accomplished the whole journey from Bathurst, on the Gambia, in three months. The practicability of the route he followed having been thus proved, it may be expected that a trade-route will shortly be opened to the important mart of Timbo. Dr. Gouldsbury is said to have been well received by the natives of all the districts traversed, but no account of the details of his journey has as yet come to hand.

AMONG recent French geographical works we notice Deux Ans au Sc-Tchouan, by the abbé L. Vigneron; and Le second Voyage de Vasco da Gama à Calicut, published in Flemish about 1504, and reproduced with a translation and Introduction by J. Ph. Berjeau.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Determination of the Moon's Diameter from Observed Occultations of the Pleiades.—If the places of an occulted star and of the moon at the moment of occultation are correctly known, the deduction of a value of the moon's apparent semi-diameter is a very simple process. The moon's diameter has thus been determined from hundreds of occultations, the corrections of the moon's tabular places being assumed from the nearest available meridional or alt-azimuth observations. But it is just this assumption which furnishes the chief objection to the validity of the results obtained. For the corrections of the moon's computed places cannot be found from observations with fixed instruments without a knowledge of the apparent semi-diameter as shown by these instruments, and any error or defect in this knowledge affects directly the value of the diameter resulting from the observed occultation. In case, however, a well-determined group of stars, like that of the Pleiades, is occulted, so that the errors of the moon's tabular places are the same for all the observations of the group, it is feasible to determine these errors, together with the semi-diameter, from the observed occultations themselves; and the value of the semi-diameter thus found will have far greater weight than that deduced from an equal number of isolated occultations. Several attempts have been made to utilise some observed occultations of the Pleiades in this way, the latest and most comprehensive of which is to be found in a Strassburg dissertation by Dr. F. Küstner, in which he discusses nine occultations observed in the years 1839, 1841, 1857-60, and 1876. This number may appear rather small when it is considered that in every period of nineteen years, in which the node of the lunar orbit makes a revolution, the moon passes across a portion of the Pleiades at least a dozen times for any given place on the earth's surface. The whole number of observed disappearances and re-appearances which have been taken into account is 540, of which ninety-four disappearances and thirty-five re-appearances were observed on the moon's bright limb. Of the thirty observatories which have supplied the observations, Pulcowa, Leiden, Dorpat, and Berlin are the largest contributors. The 540 equations of condition derived from the data contain twenty-eight unknown quantities—namely, the three corrections of the moon's assumed right ascension, declination and parallax for each of the nine occultations, and the correction of the assumed semi-diameter. The corrections of the parallaxes, however, which may be deduced from them are very uncertain, owing to the unfavourable grouping of the actual places of observing and the want of co-operation on the part of better-placed observatories. Moreover, it is a question whether the observations made at the moon's illuminated limb, especially the re-appearances, are not better disregarded, or what weight is to be allowed to them. Küstner's results are only given conditionally. If half-weight is allowed to the observations at the bright limb, his last result for the apparent semi-diameter at the mean distance is $15' 32.84''$, giving 0.272591 as the proportion of the moon's diameter to that of the earth's equator. In all these deductions the irregularities of the moon's limbs are treated as occasioning only fortuitous errors. But these irregularities, or, at least, the more conspicuous mountains and depressions, ought to be ascertained for all states of the moon's libration, so that apparent errors occasioned by their presence may be ascribed to the right cause, and guarded against.

The Anthropological Society of Washington.—This society was founded, about two years ago, for the purpose of promoting the study of the natural history of man, with special reference to America. Under the presidency of Prof. J. W. Powell, a great deal of useful work has already been accomplished, as testified by the Abstracts of Transactions recently issued as the first of the society's publications. The society is divided into four sections, devoted to archaeology, to somatology, to ethnology, and to philology. To each of these sections interesting contributions have been made, mainly with reference to the Indians of North America. The President publishes two very suggestive addresses, in one of which he reviews the work of the society during its two years' life, and offers remarks thereon; while in the other he treats of the evolution of language, as exhibited in the specialisation of the grammatic processes, the differentiation of the parts of speech, and the integration of the sentence, the whole of his arguments being based upon a study of Indian languages.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

We understand that Messrs. Macmillan and Co. have in preparation a work which will no doubt be highly welcome to scholars. This is a Latin Etymological Dictionary, by Prof. J. P. Postgate and Mr. C. A. Vince, Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. It will embody in an intelligible form the results of the most recent research, and will be preceded by an Introduction giving a succinct account of the laws of Latin derivation.

WE mentioned last week a MS. by Mr. John Molloy on gemination in the Irish language. We understand that several copies of this have been taken by the now common private press, and may be had of the author, 7 Askew Crescent, Shepherd's Bush. If Mr. Molloy's work is found to stand the scrutiny of other Irish scholars as to accuracy, we have in him a rare enthusiast of whom we hope the country will make use.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—(Thursday, May 19). W. C. BORLASE, Esq., M.P. in the Chair.—Lord Arundel of Wardour exhibited a charter of William de Briwere, in the reign of King John, bearing a seal with a design of a merwoman suckling a mer-child.—Mr. Rivett Carnac exhibited a collection of spindle-whorls and votive seals found in Buddhist ruins in North-west India.—Mr. R. S. Ferguson exhibited a fine specimen of a British bronze torque found at Carlisle.—Mr. Middleton read a paper upon the Coptic churches in Old Cairo, illustrated by plans of the church of Abou Serget; and various ecclesiastical implements, including a Spanish glass goblet, used as a chalice, an earthenware paten, a silver flabellum, spoons, a wooden super altare, &c.

FINE ART.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

(Third Notice.)

OF all the painters of our school who study effects of pathos and sentiment Mr. Briton Rivière has, in some sense, the strongest hold upon the sympathies of his countrymen. His powers as an artist win admiration from those who care little for the intellectual qualities of his design. There are others again who find the keenest delight in his skilful contrasts of human and animal character; and there is yet a third class which is powerfully attracted by the purely dramatic qualities of his art. The most important of several works contributed by him to the present exhibition combines in fair measure all these separate gifts. It is entitled A Roman Holiday (155), and depicts with considerable force the finish of a combat in the arena between a condemned Christian and tigers. One of two animals lies dead or dying beside the gladiator, who is himself so grievously wounded as to leave small room for doubt as to the final result of the contest. A stronger impression of reality might unquestionably have been given to the principal group. In the treatment of the human form the artist has bestowed too much attention upon the religious and sentimental aspect of his subject, and has failed altogether to suggest the vigorous physical qualities needed for such an encounter, or the exhaustion by which it would be succeeded. The dramatic intensity of the situation is more completely indicated in the stealthy movement and ferocious gaze of the surviving tiger as it marches round the extreme limit of the arena, impatient for vengeance, and yet stricken into momentary fear by the fate of its companion. Looking merely to the beauty of the painting, this is, perhaps, the most powerful work which the artist has yet achieved. There is an admirable effect of warm colour, produced by the combination of the brilliant tints of the tigers' skin, relieved against the broad expanse of sunlit yellow sand; and, although the whole scene is in full light, the sense of space and air is very successfully rendered. A more popular illustration of Mr. Rivière's talent will be found in the Hope Deferred (419), a girl with a terrier dog under her arm, looking out upon a stormy sea; or in the group of A Sleeping Labourer and his Bull-dog (402), where there is a lurking satire in the contrast or resemblance between the two faces. But the picture in which his love and knowledge of animal life are displayed with greatest simplicity presents a company of dogs of various breeds leaping up around the knees of a girl who is fondling a pug in her arms. Mr. Heywood Hardy has hit upon a fine subject for an animal painter in the Arab legend of Sidi Ahmed ben Aruda and the Holy Lion (213), and he has treated a simple composition with quiet dignity and force. I may further mention in this class the Cheetah Hunt (16), by Mr. Nettleship, a picture of delicate colour and very spirited design; and the portrait of a dog (77), called In the Lap of Lucury, by Mr. Noble.

The paintings of genre are, as usual, both numerous and varied. The pathos of home life is eagerly studied by a crowd of English painters, and the results, it must be acknowledged, are always welcome to the public. And yet there is often a very moderate leaven of true artistic power in such work; and, it sometimes happens that a subject that would be pronounced wholly insufficient in literature is displayed on canvas with the full assurance that it possesses a superior claim upon our admiration. It seems to be constantly forgotten that, if an artist chooses to employ all his force in the telling of a story, he should at least have some story to tell; or that, if the incident is in itself trivial and insignificant, there must be a more vivid and complete rendering of character than literature has the power to afford. The painter who attempts to do no more than can be done by written words must inevitably effect much less, for the resources of the two arts, when thus brought into competition, are by no means equal. But painting, it may be readily acknowledged, enjoys exclusive rights and privileges of its own, even in the interpretation of the common aspects of modern life. There is ample scope for the student of contemporary manners to rival the work produced by the genre painters of Holland. But to attain success in this kind it is not at all necessary to cast about for strongly defined points of drama or pathos; and still less is it admissible to assume that any emphasis of emotional truth will compensate for the lack of fine perception in respect of those less obtrusive, but significant, indications of character which come obviously within the range of pictorial art. It would be easy to multiply examples in the Academy where all those finer triumphs possible to painting are wholly neglected in the pursuit of commonplace effect; and there are two pictures by men of equal reputation in which the distinction is very decisively marked. The first is the For Better for Worse (14) of Mr. Frith, who has produced—no doubt at infinite pains to himself—an intellectual effect which a clever newspaper correspondent could easily rival, and even surpass. A column of description, aptly worded, would enforce with far greater power than Mr. Frith can command whatever of pathos or satire may be thought to lurk in the tawdry circumstances of a bourgeois wedding. The contrast afforded by the group of poverty-stricken creatures who shrink away behind the carriage belongs to the tarnished stock-in-trade of provincial melodrama; and it is fairly open to question whether a practised writer would not hesitate to make use of such outworn material. With so much that is commonplace in the intellectual motive of the work it might be expected that the painting at least would be of undeniable mastery; but, in point of fact, Mr. Frith's observation as an artist has not in any particular gone beyond the poor limits of his idea. The individual faces would seem to have been imagined with just strength and meaning enough to support the parts severally allotted to them in the trivial little drama that is going forward. Neither here, nor in the treatment of the forms, nor in the arrangement of the groups is there to be found any sign of that wider observation of life which can furnish even the most commonplace subject with interest and fascination; and when we turn from the design to the colouring of the picture, the result is found to be equally lacking in the evidence of minute and careful study of reality. It will be observed that no attempt has been made here to demand from Mr. Frith the kind of beauty that belongs to higher forms of art. His work has been tested merely by the standard which it supplies in itself; and if it is condemned, it is because it does not possess the modest charm that may belong to the most uncompromising realism. The second picture, by Mr. Faed (187), is inspired by a widely different sentiment, and is marked by finer qualities of art. The artist does not neglect those of his admirers who require that their sympathies should be aroused by a touch of pathos. The little domestic drama that gives its title to the picture is clearly enough expressed for those who care to seek it; but Mr. Faed's conception of his art does not stop short at this barren result. He has produced an image of domestic life the interest of which is dependent much less upon the successful illustration of a particular incident than upon a complete and refined understanding of permanent truths of character as these are expressed in minute and subtle realities of gesture and expression. As in all work of true artistic value, the painter has proved himself superior to his subject, and has passed beyond the mere text of his discourse to give an accurate study of manners.

In the work of younger men is to be found a more deliberate attempt to secure beauty both of colour and composition in the treatment of modern themes. There is a growing recognition of the fact that painting has claims of its own which should take precedence of other qualities that may be fitly introduced into a picture; and, as a consequence of this feeling, the little bit of drama or pathos is no longer regarded as an indispensable ingredient, to be introduced at all hazards, and at whatever sacrifice of effect. Mr. Leslie has always infused a certain grace into his quaint and charming representations of English life, and he has rarely displayed any great fondness for the scenes of poverty and squalor which are assumed to possess such a superior claim upon the attention of the public. The group of merry school-girls playing upon a well-trimmed English lawn is a sufficiently characteristic example of his talent, though it would have been clearly possible, with such a subject, to have employed finer qualities of draughtsmanship with an effect of greater vivacity and sense of movement. There is, however, a delightful quality of subdued and softened colour in the picture, avoiding the extremes of strong light and deep shadow, and yet yielding a pleasant impression of warmth and sunshine. Refinement of colour is likewise the marked characteristic of Mr. Boughton's several contributions, especially noticeable in the view of Scheveningen (346) and in A Dead City of the Zuyder Zee (374). Venice with its picturesque life attracts, as usual, a number of students, foremost among whom must be ranked Mr. Van Haanen, who sends a small, but very highly finished, study of washerwomen standing upon a flight of steps leading to the Canal. Mr. Woods has attempted a broader transcript of Venetian life in a clever view taken at the foot of the Rialto. There is here a marked advance of technical power over the work of last year, though the execution of the figures is scarcely yet equal to the artist's rendering of the things of still-life.

J. COMYNS CARR.

THE SALON OF 1881.

(Second Notice.)

BASTIEN LEPAGE has presented Albert Wolff, of the Figaro, with his portrait. This portrait is now exhibited, and turns out to be a "Greek" gift. It is an admirable work of art and a biting satire! M. Wolff, whose physical peculiarities have been mercilessly accentuated, is seen in his own room; numbers of the Figaro are lying on the table near which he sits; and on all sides he is surrounded by the contributions which have been laid at his feet by unfortunate artists moved by the fear of blame or the hope of flattery in its columns. Of this nineteenth-century, highly civilised form of brigandage M. Wolff is rendered by M. Bastien Lepage's pencil the type and scapegoat. Yet M. Wolff is probably no better and no worse than his fellow-critics in Paris—for Paris is the headquarters in which this traffic is carried on with the most unblushing effrontery—though he has been gibbeted as a specimen and an example by the wily painter. And, if outsiders may judge by the valuable bronzes, original drawings, statuettes, paintings, &c.—M. Lepage has cleverly suggested the existence of an unlimited collection by only indicating the baseline of the frames of a third or fourth row overhead—in the centre of which the French art critic weaves his web, the spoils of the pen; if wisely employed now in a great city, may rival the collections made by a freebooting baron at the point of the sword in the Middle Ages. The figure of M. Wolff himself is studied, as M. Lepage studies every human type which really interests him. We are made conscious of the little bit of pose, of the slight pretence of the dress—the red leather high boots, brown coat, and full blue trousers—through which is suggested a something of deformity in the proportions of body, to which the immense length of the jaw and the depression of the head respond. But, though we are conscious of these things, we are, above all, impressed by the lightning vivacity of the eyes, and by the power, the self-confidence, the self-assurance which animates their piercing look. It is, perhaps, not quite a kindly rendering of M. Albert Wolff and his peculiarities—a work of justice in a melting mood, such as M. Lepage's portrait of Mlle. Bernhardt—but it may rank with the marvellous half-length study of M. Andrieux as one of the best of his portraits of men. In a second work, Un Mendiant, M. Bastien Lepage has expended the full force of his exquisite talent on a subject the interest of which is hardly up to the size and importance which he has given to it. "Un mendiant" is an old man, life-size, turning away from an open door, stooping forward and shifting his staff as he stows away in his wallet the roll of bread which he has just received from the little blue-eyed, blue-frocked girl who peeps after him through the crack behind. The face of the old man, the movement of his hands, the action of the whole figure, and the wistful curiosity of the little alms-giver are finely studied. The shadow of the doorway, in which they stand, lit with the browns and yellows of the painted door, makes a shaft of dark in the centre of the background; to the left a bit of whitewashed wall, in front of which is a stool bearing a red geranium, gives a contrast of brilliant light. This is balanced on the opposite right by the strip of wall seen on the other side, into which is worked a marvellous variety of harmonious neutral tones—got out of water-marks and other traces of weather and time—which are made to repeat and spread the different browns and grays and yellows which, heightened with just a suggestion of red, make up the full strength of the central subject. In another room M. Bastien Lepage has a third work, which does not appear in the catalogue—the portrait of a little peasant child, with a slow, grave look in her face. She is dressed in brown, and stands, feet pressed together in their wooden shoes, and hands, full of heath blooms, lightly resting above her knees, her little figure deep set in a furze thicket, with just a line of light and far-off sky showing where her dull-blue cap strikes against the edge.

The other representatives of the various branches of "la modernité" make no great mark in the Salon of 1881. M. Duez, who made so deep an impression last year with his triptych of St. Cuthbert, has done himself no justice this time, for his portrait of M. de Neuville looks hard and coarse rather than powerful. Le Soir is a better specimen of his work, in spite of the unnatural looking depth of the vivid green carpet of weed or grass, on which sits an old fisherman smoking his pipe, and leisurely watching the sun setting over the sea as an angry red ball. M. Lerolle, in Au Bord de la Rivière, has given us, in one corner of a very large canvas, two very well-grouped and charmingly conceived figures—two peasant girls, one of whom bears a baby in her arms, while the other, stooping forward under the burden she carries on her shoulders, attracts its notice with an air of loving caress. Behind their heads the bend of the road shows a sweep of river; above, the painting is filled in with a vast expanse of sky, just cut up by the trunks of a group of tall trees, beneath which, on the left, at the distant turn of the road, some cows are seen moving past with a herdsman. This use of the trunks of trees to space a composition was admirably exemplified in M. Puvis de Chavannes' treatment of his designs for the Panthéon; and in these they had a special office to fulfil in the breaking up and portioning off a surface which thus obtained something of the character of architectural symmetry and proportion. But M. Lerolle has not been happy in his application of the system to his present subject; his canvas looks rather empty, and conveys the impression that he was not quite sure as to whether his figures were the ornament of his landscape or his landscape but the background of his figures.

Nor is M. Gervex making way. He contributes an immense decorative painting destined for the "Mairie du XIX^e arrondissement," depicting the ceremony of "Le Mariage civil." In this we have the same exquisitely just appreciation of values of light, and of the appearance of each matter in light, that M. Gervex has shown in all his works of old. But when you come to looking at the people—at the self-conscious bride, not specially youthful and decidedly not virginal; at the bridegroom in his stiff shirt collar; at the dull functionaries; at the dolls, big and little, who make up the unsympathetic crowd—not one seems to be really there—it is as if we recognised a great variety of purely surface impressions received with perfect justness of sight, and rendered with equal justness of hand, so that the eye is caught (as in M. Gervex's portrait of M. de G. . . .) by the striking truth of the general aspect, but not rewarded, if tempted to further and close inspection, by the revelation of the underlying treasures which can be amassed only by long experience and patient observation. There is much more to be found beneath the surface of the Belgian painter, M. Verhas' Revue des Ecoles, a work which obtained an immense success and popularity last year at Brussels, and now receives much attention from the habitués of the Salon. In these troops of white-robed children, who, marshalled by their gray-clad teachers, come sweeping, like a flood, past the palace—from the steps of which the king and queen are watching—each little girl is individualised and studied with a zeal and care which make the monotony of their ranks interesting; and, although experts are not quite easy as to whether the laws of perspective have been obeyed with irreproachable precision, the atmospheric relations of distance, both in value and tone, are observed with tact so perfect that everything seems exactly where it should be.

M. Benjamin Constant has shown marvellous dexterity, in this respect, in treating his Passe-temps d'un Kalife, an interior at Seville in the thirteenth century. Trained perfection of eye, and manipulative skill can scarcely be carried farther than in this piece of a master's workmanship. In the centre of the hall, on the broad expanse of a dark-blue carpet, with dull red centre and border, a slave serpent-charmer lies on all fours, in front of whom a snake uncoils and raises his head as two stealthy tigers, watched anxiously by their keeper, approach with open jaws. Beyond, in the middle distance, a magnificent screen—golden in hue and patterned and friezed in exquisitely delicate arabesque—is raised on white marble columns; through the central space of the chief arch is seen a dim entrance-chamber, with vaulted roof and distant outlet into a sunlit garden of flowers. Grouped on the floor, squatting both in front of and within the marble screen, are the lookers-on, forming, by their many hued garments, a broad band of colour in which hot tones predominate. But the main depth and strength are reserved for the centre. The predominant deep blue of the foreground is brought to a point, as it were, by the black carpet spread under the middle screen; and the flash of sunlight which glides past the golden wall at the distant doorway, gives splendid effect to the tremulous heat in the depth of the vault, which is seen against and through the centre arch; while another carpet—flung over the balustrade of a gallery above—breaks the too formal architectural lines, and carries heat and depth of tone and colour across the pale delicacy of the walls. In his second contribution, Herodiade, M. Constant again gives proof of that power as a colourist of which he makes a capricious use, sometimes flinging in our teeth the most acrid effects, and sometimes, as in Herodiade, giving us a wealth of hues as delicate and choice as they are rich. Herodias herself—sitting on her tawny furs, her chin sulkily propped on her right hand, elbow on knee, and the left hand hanging lazily by her side—is not a specially interesting nor original type; but there is a fascination in the variety and charm of the hues of red passing from the faded rose (showing dull green arabesques) of the carpet at her feet, the white-gleaming pink of her garment, the rose-red lining just seen of her tawny furs, into the deep crimson panel of the background, which is set in a narrow but sharply marked frame of black, which gives intensity to the broad gold band which surrounds it on the outer edge, the gleaming of the gold being repeated with bravura-like dash in a strange ornament worked upon her knee, and then dying delicately in the border across her breast and the faint half-traced lines which thread the hem of her gown; finally, as if to bring all these brilliances into strange harmony with a dissonance, a vivid flash of silver plays upon the head.

A study of reds of very different quality, very differently treated, is to be found in M. Laurens' portrait of a woman wearing a stone-coloured plush with silver lights, set in the heart of a very fire of red—rose-red the chair on which she sits and tawny-rose the cushions, a deep ruby colour gleams in the footstool, the background is ochreous-red, and the table at her side, on which stands a golden bronze statuette, is covered with a cloth of true vermillion. The face of M. Laurens' sitter looks hard and harsh, or, I should rather say, has been harshly and hardly handled. The head sticks to the background, too; but the painting of the rest of the work is so strong and admirable that one is the more sensible that all is not as it should be in his treatment of the lady herself, whom he shows to us wearing draperies designed and drawn with greater taste and grace than is displayed, perhaps, in any other portrait of this year. And there are some very good portraits. Carolus Duran's full length of a lady in black, wrapped in a heavy-furred cloak, holding out a closed red fan in her right hand, is detached on a vivid blue-green curtain of the coldest quality; but the head—though injured somewhat in effect by the cruel iridescence of the hues behind—holds its own with surprising vigour, and is modelled with a strength and certainty of hand which almost rivals the masterly work of Bonnat, whose portrait of Madame la comtesse Potocka is certainly one of his greatest achievements in this line. As was the case when he painted Madame Pasta, Bonnat has been fortunate in his model. The lighter part of the picture—as is the case with most of the portraits of the year—is at the base, where the tail of the elaborate white gown spreads itself, detached by the cast shadow of the figure from the unpleasant, ravelled-out sort of ground which M. Bonnat generally affects. Above comes the dark plush mantle, out of which the hands, cased in tan gloves, appear lightly crossed; half open, towards the throat, the mantle shows a flash of white at the breast, on which the head—with vigorous flesh tints brought into full value by the strength of the black hair, and detached by a dash of blue from the background—is poised with telling effect. Something ought to be said, too, of M. Bonnat's fine half-length of Léon Cogniet, and of the fine and expressive drawing and modelling of the hands; and of a group of children by M. Verhas, in which, also, the background is darkest at the top. After dark walls and tapestry comes the light floor, tawny furs, and fawn tints of a plush chair, on which a little girl, with blonde, long hair, dressed in white and fawn and blue, strives to place the screaming brother whom she clutches in her arms, and whose scarlet sash makes the central point of brilliance and colour.

E. F. S. PATTISON.

THE GUARDI GALLERY.

MR. COLNAGHI'S little rooms are crowded as usual with finely picked specimens of Continental artists. There are some good Tills, a Munthe, a very clever Jettel, some capital donkeys by De Haas, a crowd of sheep by Braith (like Landseer in the quality of its gray tones, but with more life), a particularly good Blommers, a Bischopp rivalling the greatest of the ancient masters of his school in broad solid painting of silver and glass, two cool bright Sadées, a clever Pavy, a finely finished and humorous little Chevreillard, with a padre meeting a wolf, a more beautiful Quadroni, and characteristic works by Roybet, Casanova, the late Friedbichler, Schgoer, Windmeyer, and others too numerous to mention; and yet the collection, as a whole, is somewhat cast into the shade by the glorious colour of a few pictures by one young man of Munich—Hermann Philips.

The few pictures which have been seen in England by this young giant among modern painters, such as the famous Red Lady (which is here in the upper room), have sufficiently announced the existence of a really great colorist, one of the few living who recall the glowing harmonies of the old Venetians. But here his performance outbids his great promise even as a colorist and draughtsman; while it gives evidence of an imaginative faculty which was hitherto but a matter of faith. Without making odious comparisons with living artists, Philips' Temptation of St. Anthony is a great picture, both in conception and execution. The subject has never perhaps been treated by any artist, old or modern, with the same force and nobleness. We say nobleness advisedly, for, though the female tempter of the saint is frank in the exhibition of her charms, she is no harlot, but a beautiful, strong devil, who might well tempt a noble man proof against the incitements of vulgar passion. It is in this powerful conception, raising the temptation completely beyond the sphere of common life, that its morality as well as its strength lies. It is St. Anthony only who is tempted with those dreadful charms. Nor is the figure of St. Anthony, with averted hidden face and clutched hands, less powerfully conceived or less boldly painted. The strong drawing and masterly painting of the hands recall Rubens, and not at his worst. Turning now to the long, narrow composition by the same artist, called Maidens at a Well, we see another and not less poetical phase of this strong young painter. Set in a landscape of surprising strength, variety, and richness of colour, there are three young maidens round a well; another is stooping on the right. This is a picture as difficult to describe in words as a movement by a great musician. The truth of analogy between music and colour is here felt by all who are sensitive to both. The chord is full—purple, red, and orange of the deepest and richest, passing through rich greens and golden browns. The figures, though still and noble in attitude, are not "introduced" or idle. They are woven in the texture of the conception, and pursue their business and thoughts unconsciously. One whose profile is seen is beautiful; but the light and interest centre on the maiden in loose white bodice and greenish skirt, who, with her loosely tied dark-gold hair glistening in the sun, turns her back upon you. Another large picture, called The Souvenir of Venice, a composition of two figures, is superb in drawing and colour, as are several other single figures; but these, though they show how swiftly Philips has attained maturity, progress, so to speak, along the same road as that taken in his earlier pictures. Among other remarkable qualities of these masterly works is that inner light which glows even in the faces seen in half-light, and the dexterous power of imitation which can give the whole effect of (for instance) a garnet necklace, colour, degree of transparency, and cut of the stone, with a few indefinite touches.

Mr. Colnaghi has done wisely in showing his collection of the clever young Spanish painter, Benlliure, in the upper room. This artist belongs to a very different school, a school of Southern genre—a mixture of Meissonier and Fortuny, with a distinct and very strong note of his own. His first inclination seems to have been to that style which seeks its effect in patches of bright colour, applied without any regard to their tonic value, a trick which gives the works of Casanova and others much of the tinsel glitter of a mountebank. Indeed, mountebanks and bal masqués are favourite subjects with this class of painters, and the taste of the jackdaw with peacock's feathers seems to have entered into their soul. Of this, which (not to take too degrading an epithet) we may call the Carnival school, Benlliure still shows some traces; but he is rapidly shaking himself free from it, and developing into a straightforward, but still very brilliant, painter—with a true feeling for tone. Of his fantastic vein, the terrible Danse Macabre and The Dream are instances, and it may be contended that some garish and startling effects of unpleasant colour are not out of place in such compositions. In these powerful works, though he does not entirely escape from the stage and its limelight, and his devils are conceived rather in the spirit of Wiertz than of Michelangelo, there is imagination of no trivial kind. The hideous imps, the vivified skulls, are not mere clever compounds of fancy, but have that distinct character which shows clear imaginative vision.

Of the charming little pieces of natural comedy by Benlliure—groups in the market-place, drinkers at cabarets, and guard-rooms, and musicians—there is little to be said except in praise. A little vicious colour and some chalkiness are apparent here and there; but on all there is the stamp of a true and original artist. The expression of the figures is unhackneyed, and even in the smallest subsidiary groups there is character and perfect drawing; while in the Place San Marc, with its wonderful clusters of fluttering pigeons, his Many a Slip 'twixt the Cup and the Lip, and one or two others, he shows an originality and variety of power, and a strength as well as delicacy of execution, which promise a distinguished future.

Among many pictures in this room which should not be passed by are Charlemont's magnificent Guard of the Alhambra, and others by Troyon, Roybet, Bischoff, and Domingo.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

PAINTINGS ON CHINA.

MESSRS. HOWELL AND JAMES have opened in their charming new galleries the largest and best exhibition of paintings on china yet seen. The number is over two thousand, and few of them fall below a level which would have been high a few years ago. The majority show highly skilled and beautiful work; and the best, whether amateur or professional, exhibit technical perfection combined with much originality and artistic taste.

The first prize for lady amateurs (the badge presented by the Crown Princess of Germany) has been awarded to Miss Lucy Whitaker for a Panel of Conventional Wild Roses, and that for professionals (given by the same Princess) to Miss Florence Lewis for some exquisite pieces of flower-painting. This will surprise nobody who is acquainted with her oft-proved skill. The remaining prizes for amateurs have been awarded as follow:—The "Princess Alice" (presented by the Grand Duke of Hesse) to Viscountess Hood; the "Princess Christian" to Miss Everett Green; the "Prince Leopold" to Mrs. E. J. Smith; the "Mecklenburg Strelitz" to Miss Marion Gemmell; the "Princess Mary" to Miss E. J. Barber; the "Countess of Flanders" to Mrs. Swain. The prize given by the proprietor of the Queen newspaper has fallen to Miss Crombie; the "Art Journal" to Miss Kirkman; the "Judges'" prize to Miss Wright; the "Founders'" to Miss Farnall; an extra prize for mirror frames to Miss Vigers; a special prize for door-plates to Mrs. George Purdie; and the "Studio" prize to Miss F. M. Minns for the best work by any lady who has attended a course of ten lessons in the art-pottery studio of Messrs. Howell and James. The other prizes for professionals have been taken by Miss Charlotte Spiers, Miss Rebecca Coleman, Miss Ellen Welby, Miss Linnie Watt, M. Grenet, M^{me}. Merkel-Heine, Mrs. Grace, M. Clair, Albert Hill, and Miss C. E. Howard. When we add that over two hundred diplomas of merit have been besides awarded by such admirable "judges" as Frederick Goodall, R.A., and H. Stacey Marks, R.A., it will be seen that it is quite impossible to mention more than a few of the most striking works.

One of these is Miss Everett Green's Harmony in Blue and Green, with its original and bold design and beautiful drawing; and another is Miss Marion Gemmell's charming Clytie. Miss A. M. Harrison's Conventional Pyrrhous suggests also a special word if only on account of the rarity of decorative talent of this order. The rest of the prize-takers we must leave now to their well-deserved honours.

Among the amateur work not rewarded even by a diploma are two very good panels of rushes by Miss A. E. Blunt (230), some beautifully painted Roses (244) by Miss A. E. Goodwin, and very good conventional arrangements of Christmas Roses and Anemone Japonica by Miss E. Ellis (290 and 319). Misses J. E. Buckland, M. Robinson, A. E. Tiffin, Van Ady, and many more have also sent paintings which must have run a very close race with others which are commended. Miss Morton's delicately painted Cupids (or little girls) (407 and 429) are worth looking at.

Among the more or less highly commended may be mentioned the bold and finely painted leaves called Autumn Tints (247) by Miss A. Meakins, a head with the same title by Lady Nicholson (282), Mrs. Gibson's Vera (236), and Miss Fagel d'Argent's charming monochrome head called Spring Blossoms (287); Miss F. A. Charleley's panel of River Plants (293) and Miss Ada Beard's still finer panels of Narcissus (406 and 426); Miss Liberty's Pear Blossoms (435) and Miss Edith Powell's Gloire de Dijon Roses (437). All will agree that the praise signified by V. H. C. has been deservedly earned by the Countess of Flanders' Spring after Kaulbach (457).

Mr. Percy Anderson's Helen (489) is a noble head, and there is another fine work of his here. We do not quite understand why he should choose to work upon china. We have not, however, the same difficulty in accounting for the presence of a portrait by Mr. Herkomer. An artist who tries everything was not likely to let an opportunity slip of painting Mr. J. Carter with his own brushes and colours.

Of things new to the art and of technical triumphs, this exhibition is not barren. The accomplished brothers in art, Messrs. Leonce and Mallet, have invented a new "palette." The colours are not enamel, but, by being mixed with a proportion of vitrifiable matter, glaze themselves in the process of baking. The results produced by this "palette" are unprecedented. For vividness of effect, perhaps nothing has ever been done to surpass M. Mallet's view of water-swans (1421); even M. Grenet's powerful landscapes do not equal it in this quality. The latter clever artist also shows his talent as a decorator in a splendid set of tiles. To Mr. Albert Hill must also be ascribed an invention of great beauty, by which much of the effect of Japanese metal work is produced in pottery; and when we have called attention to Mr. Thomas J. Botts' exquisite painting, with slight modelling, in the style of Limoges enamel (2042), we have not exhausted the curiosities or novelties of this remarkable exhibition. Worth the attention of artists in black and white is the process of drawing in charcoal on the biscuit, which is afterwards glazed. Some fine specimens of this, by Schuller and P. Marchant, are exhibited here. The only fault we have to find with them is that the surface is smooth and uninteresting. This defect, however, has been prevented in some other clever landscapes by the former artist, by means of a slight roughness or waviness in the biscuit, giving much the same result as the use of rough paper in water-colours. In ceramic sculpture, Mr. MacDowell shows two clever terra-cotta sketches of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

C. M.

ART SALES.

THE oil pictures in the collection of Mr. C. S. Bale, sold very recently at Christie's, were generally less important and interesting than the drawings on which a special article appeared in our last week's issue. They were, however, quite of a kind to demand notice, many of them being particularly good examples of the masters represented. Thus there was one of the finest coast-pieces of W. Collins—Cromer Sands. It had been exhibited at Burlington House, and came originally from a well-known collection. Its price at the sale at Christie's was 250 guineas. By Croswick, there was A Road Scene, with Gipsies, which sold for £204 (Vokins); a fine Venice by James Holland, famous for his pictures of Venetian architecture, £556 10s. (Agnew); Sir Thomas Lawrence's engraved portrait of Lord Whitworth, which went for £367. Of the examples of Sir Joshua Reynolds, many persons considered the portrait of Mrs. Mayne, a golden picture of a very genial subject, more attractive than that of Mrs. Otway, which fetched the higher price. Mrs. Mayne—which was admirably engraved not long ago for Mrs. Noseda—fell to the bid of £525 (Vokins); while Mrs. Otway reached the sum of £1,260 (Agnew). An Italian Landscape, by Berchem, sold for £472. There were two important pictures attributed to Claude; one of them Mercury tulling Argus to Sleep with the Music of his Pipe, the appearance being that of a fine clear morning. The picture is said to be engraved in the Choiseul Gallery, and it is described in Smith's catalogue raisonné, which is, perhaps, a greater authority with the dealer than it deserves to be. This picture sold for £640 (Vokins). The companion Claude, which was in some respects more beautiful—the appearance being that of a golden evening—fell to Lord Carysfort's bid of £420. The bringing of genuine Claudes into the auction-room is an event of the rarest occurrence; and from the comparatively low prices realised by these two agreeable pictures, which the late owner is said to have highly esteemed, it may be concluded that the opinions of connoisseurs were divided either as to the genuineness of the pictures or as to their importance. A good example of Adrian van Ostade—A Lawyer in his Study—sold for £682 (Philpot); and a much finer one, the Interior of a Cabaret—certainly among the more characteristic works of the prolific master—realised £1,008 (Norton). A Gentle Breeze, by William van der Velde—engraved by Canot it was stated—reached £483; a Hilly Sandbank, by Philips Wouverman, which had won the easily acquired praise of the German Dr. Waagen, fell for £315; a Velasquez from the collection of Col. Hugh Baillie, exhibited at Manchester in 1857—Don Baltazar, Infante of Spain, in a black dress ornamented with gold—reached the sum of £571 (Penmain). A Virgin and Child, by Fra Angelico, from the collection of Samuel Rogers, and exhibited at one of the earlier of our winter exhibitions, fell to the bid of £378 (Robinson). Mr. Martin Colnaghi bought a Guardi for a hundred guineas. A perfect, though small, example of Poelemborg, Nymphs Bathing, exquisite both in composition and in lighting, fell for £33 (Thompson). Nearly £22,000 was realised by the day's sale, which attracted many connoisseurs and dealers from a distance.

The Standard states that the portrait of Lord Whitworth, by Sir Thomas Lawrence, was bought by the authorities of the Louvre, and that it will be one of the few English pictures exhibited in the French National Gallery.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. MILLAIS, it is reported, is about to receive sittings from Cardinal Newman for his portrait.

MR. BELT, whose fine bust of the late Earl of Beaconsfield for the Junior Carlton Club is, or was, to be seen at the Hanover Gallery, has been directed by the Queen to design a monument to the late Earl for Hughenden Church.

THE fourth meeting of the Committee for the Special Loan Exhibition of Spanish and Portuguese Ornamental Art was held at the South Kensington Museum on Saturday. Prince Leopold presided, and both the Spanish and Portuguese ambassadors were present.

THE exhibition of works of art which is to open at Cardiff in the month of August will, it is hoped, be one of the most interesting held west of the metropolis. An influential committee has been formed, and valuable loans have already been promised. Oil pictures, water-colour drawings, engravings, etchings, and miscellaneous precious objects will, it is announced, be the chief features of the show. The town of Cardiff is a somewhat specially suitable place in which to hold a popular exhibition, since not only is it the centre of a very populous district, but it is itself a place which of late years has become conspicuous for wealth and enterprise, the recent census showing its own population to be not very far short of a hundred thousand, of whom probably not more than half are natives of the town. This gives it that cosmopolitan character which it shares, more or less, with Liverpool and Trieste.

MR. CHARLES MERCIER has been commissioned to paint a life-size, full-length portrait of Dr. Evans Pierce, the much-respected coroner for Denbighshire. This picture is the result of a public subscription, and is to hang in the County Hall, Denbigh, which town already possesses a monument of Dr. Pierce.

THERE is now exhibiting at the Edinburgh Museum of Science and Art a valuable loan collection of about three hundred pieces of Chinese porcelain, mostly of that kind which shows flower or figure decoration painted on a white ground.

THE Builder states that the Norman minster at Wimborne is to be restored at an estimated total cost of £3,000. The repairs to the central tower are to be proceeded with first.

AT the monthly meeting of the Archaeological Institute on June 2, Mr. J. Park Harrison will read a paper upon "Incised Figures upon Slate, and other Remains from Towyn, Merionethshire;" the Rev. W. J. Loftie will read a paper on "Recent Discoveries among the Pyramids;" and Mr. W. Thompson Watkin will contribute a paper on "Britanno-Roman Inscriptions discovered in 1880."

WE have received Mr. Henry Blackburn's Academy Notes and Grosvenor Notes for the present season. Though the illustrations are unequal, they are, as a whole, improvements upon earlier issues; and when it is understood that they make no claim to render the effects of the pictures, but merely to assist the memory by a record of their composition, the success with which they achieve their aim is generally unquestionable. Perhaps the best proof of their genuine serviceableness lies in the fact that they have now been excellently imitated in Paris. Dumas' Salon is a larger book, and costs more, but it is not better.

AT the Albert Hall an Exhibition is now open of Art Workmanship, or, in the peculiar wording of the catalogue, of Works of Art applied to Furniture. Some of the leading London firms—Gillow and Co., Jackson and Graham, Crace and Son, Morant, Boyd and Blanford, Holland and Sons, Howard and Sons, Wright and Mansfield, Collinson and Lock, Gregory and Co., Shoolbred and Co., and Johnstone, Jeanes, and Co.—have furnished improvised apartments, or rather filled them with furniture of various kinds and styles, without much regard to general effect. The cabinets, mantel-pieces, &c., are decorated with choice pieces of china, ivory carvings, bronzes, &c.; and elegant chandeliers hang from the ceilings. If the exhibition is a protest against the new Aesthetic Decorative Societies, from whose prospectuses one would imagine that true taste and good workmanship are not to be found in the show-rooms of high-class firms, we sympathise, to a certain extent, with it. But there is little to be seen here which justifies a special exhibition on other grounds. That these well-known firms, with their accomplished workmen, can turn out articles of the finest finish in almost any style, from cinq cent to Adams, is a fact with which we, at least, were well acquainted; nor is it necessary to ascend to the top of the Albert Hall to see Mr. de Morgan's magnificent lustre ware or Doulton's vases. We must, however, admit special admiration for the bold and beautiful design in gut thread upon the velvet curtains which hide Messrs. Gillow's fireplace, and Messrs. Howard's decoration for a ceiling; and the reproductions by Mr. P. Fargeter in their original material (viz., carved glass) of the Barberini and Milton vases are wonderful examples of skill and patience. As we look at them, at the elaborate cinq-cento cabinet of Messrs. Crace, at Messrs. Gillow's skilfully inlaid "Oriental Greek" chimney-piece, and at Messrs. Wright and Mansfield's "Louise Quinze" pianoforte, with exquisite marqueterie of the period, we tire of the endless, if beautiful, imitation which seems to be the special note of the last quarter of the nineteenth century. Perhaps the character of the present time is most plainly stamped on the many beautiful cabinets, vitrines, and other articles designed for the exhibition of articles of vertu. Some very simple, but pretty and ingenious, cabinets are shown by Messrs. Gregory; and these, we are assured by the catalogue, belong to the "modern English school"—as well as the tables and chairs exhibited by the same firm. We wish the exhibition showed a larger number of examples of this school.

THE Portfolio this month contains less of note than usual. Perhaps the most generally interesting article is that on Mantegna, by W. C. Lefroy. An etching by L. J. Steele, from a painting by Orchardson, representing a fine gentleman of the French Revolution period, forms the frontispiece of the number.

L'Art began last week, in a rich double number, its usual series of articles on the Paris Salon. For those who are not able to attend the great French show, L'Art offers the best compensation that can be had, making us acquainted with many of the pictures through etchings by the best etchers of the day, and with numerous others by means of artist's sketches of a size to render the design thoroughly intelligible. In last week's number the especial attraction, however, was not a work from the Salon, but a fine etching by C. E. Wilson of Constable's delightful picture of Dedham Mills, Essex.

AN exhibition of original designs for Punch, by Du Maurier, Kean, and others, is now open at the galleries of L'Art in Paris. The humour and fun of our national comic journal seem to be fully appreciated by our French neighbours, though most Englishmen are unable to appreciate the less-refined wit of the French Charivari.

THE exhibition of water-colour drawings illustrative of the Fables of La Fontaine, of which we have before given some account, is now open in Paris, and has met with a very decided success. "Il y avait longtemps," writes the critic of the Chronique des Arts, "qu'un ensemble aussi intéressant et aussi choisi d'œuvres modernes n'avait sollicité l'attention du public."

THE STAGE.

OF Mr. H. J. Byron's new comedy at the Vaudeville Theatre we shall be able to speak next week. It was only produced on Thursday night; consequently, too late for notice in the present issue.

The Member for Slocum, the extravagant comedy adapted by Mr. George R. Sims from a French piece of some years ago, is played nightly at the Royalty Theatre, and is deserving of more notice, and of more favourable notice, than it has received. It makes no claims to serious interest, or, if it does make any, they cannot be allowed; but it is one of the most entertaining pieces recently seen upon the stage. It is neatly constructed, wittily written, and, on the whole, excellently acted. For the effective interpretation of one of the young women's parts something may be wanting; though there is nothing whatever that is offensive, or even obviously deficient. But the general performance is distinctly good, and in the character of the livelier of the two heroines Miss Kate Lawler reveals herself as a singularly capable and spirited actress. The story is concerned with the disagreements existing between two couples, one of whom are already separated on account of the wife's too exclusive devotion to the Women's Rights question. The other couple consist of a young member of Parliament, who, in the House, is made the mouthpiece of his mother-in-law, and of a young woman who will not believe in her husband's absorption in political duties. The couple who are separated really love each other; and the wife makes use of a very harmless, very noisy flirtation with the Radical member to excite the jealousy of her lord, and to lead to a renewal of love. The separated lady and the Radical member are both of them members of "The Bustle Club;" but their meetings are not confined to the apartments of the club, and the situations once or twice would be distinctly equivocal if one had to seriously believe in them. All that passes, however, passes in a wild world of satire and caricature; and the strict adherence to probability which one has a right to demand of serious comedy would remove the entertainment and the merit of such a piece as the present. Good as the play is, its first act is weak, and the occurrence of three "sets"—three distinct changes involving waits—is too great a strain on a thread of interest hardly strong enough to bear it. In the second and the third acts, however, there is not a dull moment. Miss Harriet Coveney acts sufficiently well the exacting mother-in-law, who is a tradition on the stage. Mr. Arthur Williams is appropriately grotesque as the Radical member who has been betrayed into the most inconvenient indiscretions; Mr. Frank Cooper is very hearty and funny as his friend and the husband of the coquetish wife; and the coquetish wife herself is played by Miss Kate Lawler. This lady was, we believe, for a while at the Gaiety, and was there remarked by some judges; but she is, perhaps, not likely to have greatly distinguished herself there, as her line is too completely that of Miss Nelly Farren for her to have had full scope on the same boards as that actress. We should say, however, that Miss Lawler is more varied than Miss Farren—that as an actress and an artist she bids fair to be superior to that popular favourite. We may very likely not expect from her greater things, or things in a different order from those which she gives us in The Member for Slocum; her strong point will probably always lie in extravagant comedy; but it is something to have extravagant comedy played with such appreciation of its possibilities, with such intelligence, vigour, and spirit.

MRS. BANCROFT is taking a few days' rest preparatory to playing her old part in Society, which is very shortly to be revived at the Haymarket.

MISS ISABEL BATEMAN has been giving some interesting performances of Blow for Blow at Sadler's Wells, playing the character originally played by Miss Lydia Foote.

MUSIC.

RICHTER AND CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

Penthesilea, an overture by Goldmark, was the only novelty at the third Richter concert, on Thursday, May 19. It is intended as a prelude to Heinrich von Kleist's tragedy of the same name, and is an overture in the "Gluck" sense of the word, for it "heralds the substance of the piece." A résumé of the story was given in the analytical book for the benefit of those unacquainted with the von Kleist version; the tragic history of the Queen of the Amazons certainly requires to be known in order to discuss the merits of the work as programme-music. It contains some clever and characteristic writing; the harmonic progressions are bold and original, and the orchestration is effective. There is, however, a lack of power and originality; and, as abstract music, it does not, as far as we can judge from a first hearing, produce the desired effect. Mr. Walter Bache played in his best style Chopin's concerto in F minor, with the orchestral accompaniment as re-scored by Karl Klindworth. We may mention that this interesting version had already been brought to a hearing by Mr. Bache at one of his concerts in 1877. The programme included a portion of Mendelssohn's music to A Midsummer Night's Dream and Mr. Cowen's "Scandinavian" symphony.

At the fourth concert, on Monday, May 23, there was again only one absolute novelty—a capriccio for orchestra by H. Grädener, son of the well-known composer, Karl C. E. P. Grädener. This small piece contains some fluent and clever writing, but we think Herr Richter might have chosen something else of greater value and interest. After this came Brahms' tragic overture in D minor (op. 81), heard for the first time in England at Mr. Mann's benefit concert on April 30 last. Any new work from the pen of the great German composer commands attention, and excites the curiosity of musicians. The overture contains some fine thoughts, and, as might be expected, some interesting and elaborate developments; but there is effort rather than spontaneity, and intellectual exertion rather than inspiration. Such at least was the effect produced on us after a first hearing of this composition. The concert concluded with a magnificent performance of Beethoven's C minor symphony.

Herr Rubinstein's "Russian" symphony was played for the first time in England last Saturday at the Crystal Palace. The themes are trivial, and even ugly; and with such material the best workmanship is powerless to create, much less to sustain, interest for three-quarters of an hour, the time occupied in the performance of the work. Mr. Franz Rummel gave a fine rendering of Grieg's concerto in A minor, one of his most pleasing and original compositions. It was announced as "the first time in England;" but it was played at the Crystal Palace in 1874 by Mr. E. Dannreuther, and also, we believe, at one of the Philharmonic Concerts in the same year.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

To-night, at 8.15, LAST NIGHT OF MODJESKA, as ARIENNE LECOQVEUR. Mr. Barrett has the pleasure to announce that he has arranged for the appearance, at this Theatre, of the popular artist, Miss MAIRIE LITTON, and the whole of her company, in a series of performances of Old English Comedies, commencing on MONDAY, JUNE 5TH, with THE BUSYBODY. Preceded by ONE TOUCH OF NATURE. Seats can be booked, both at the Court and Princess's Theatre box-offices, and at all the Libraries.

DURRY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

MONDAY, MAY 30TH. JULIUS CAESAR. Julius Caesar—Herr Richard; Marcus Antonius—Herr Barnay; Brutus—Herr Nesper; Cassius—Herr Seiler; Casca—Herr Kober; Calphurnia—Frau Berg; Portia—Frl. Haverland; Ein Diener des Octavius Caesar—Frl. v. Moser-Spinner. The whole produced by the celebrated Hof Intendant, Herr Ludwig Chroch. TUESDAY, MAY 31ST, and THURSDAY, JUNE 2ND, SHAKS-PERE'S TWELVE NIGHT (WAS IHR WOLLE). Pronounced by the German press to be the most perfect comedy performance ever placed on the stage. Important Notice.—The stalls having been sold out for every performance of the MEININGEN COMPANY, Five Extra Rows have been added. An early application should be made for same. Prices—Boxes, £1 1s. to 46 6s.; stalls, 12s. 6d.; dress circle, 6s.; first circle, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; pit, 2s. 6d.; amphitheatre, 2s.; gallery, 1s.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.30, HESTER'S MYSTERY. At 8, a new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, called THE UPPER CRUST. Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Billington, E. W. Gardou, G. Shelton, and E. D. Ward; Mesdames Elsie Liston, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorne. At 10, WELSH RABBITS, a musical and dramatic absurdity, by Messrs. R. REECH and KNIGHT STUMPKES, will be produced, with new scenery, dresses, and appointments. Messrs. J. L. Toole and E. W. Gardou; Mesdames Emily Thorne, Eliza Johnston, Morton, Mellou, Taylor, Douglas, Coombs, Wallis, Pincit, and Palmer. Box-offices open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to £3 3s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THE OPERA SEASON Under the direction of Mr. ALEXANDER HENKINSON.

To-night, at 8, an entirely new and original Opera Comique, in three acts, by OFFENBACH, entitled LA BOULANGERE. Under the immediate direction of Mr. H. B. Farnie. New and elaborate scenery by Ryan and Hicks. Dresses, after designs by Grévin and Faustin, by Ains. Preceded, at 7.30, by a Comedy, after Méhée and Halévy, entitled SÉJOUR FROU-FROU. Mesdames Amadi, Maud Taylor, Turner, Dubois, Graham, Evelyn, and Wadman; Messrs. Celli, Temple, Ashford, Mansfield, Stepan, and Paulton. Greatly augmented chorus and orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Hicher. Ballet master, Mr. Lauri. Box-offices now open. Acting Manager, Mr. W. A. DURT.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(200 yards from the Angel.)

TO-NIGHT, for ONE WEEK ONLY, TOM TAYLOR'S celebrated Drama, PLUT AND PASSION. Prices from 6d. to 7s. 6d. Doors open at 6.45. Farce at 7.15.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. D'GILY CARTE.

To-night, at 8.30, a new Aesthetic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. GILBER and ARTHUR SULLIVAN, entitled PATIENCE. Messrs. George Grossmith, Rutland Barrington, Richard Temple, Thornton, and Edward Lell; Mesdames Leo-cora Brühm, Jessie Julia Gwynne, Fortescue, and Alice Brant. Produced under the personal direction of the Author and Comp. Conductor, Mr. F. Collier. Preceded, at 8, by UNCLE SAMUEL, by ARTHUR LAW and GEORGE GROSSMITH. Doors open at 7.30.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BRUCE.

To-night, at 8.40, a new Comedy, in three acts, called THE COLONEL. By F. C. LURNAND. Preceded, at 7.30, by the one-act Drama, by G. C. HERBERT, OUR BITTEREST FOE. Under the control of Mr. MILLER. Doors open at 7.30. Box-office open daily from 11 to 5.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WALTER GOOCH.

TO-NIGHT (MR. HARRY JACKSON'S ANNUAL BENEFIT), THE WONDERFUL WOMAN AND THE FACTORY GIRL. On SATURDAY, JUNE 2ND, this Theatre will be opened under the sole management of Mr. WILSON BARRETT, who will transfer there Madame MODJESKA and his Court Theatre Company. On SATURDAY, JUNE 3RD, at 8, the famous Play, FROU-FROU, will be performed (in English). Characters by Mesdames Helena Modjeska, M. A. Giffard, Eugénie Edwards, Dora Vivian, A. Cooke, &c., and Ada Ward; Messrs. Wilson Barrett, Forbes-Robertson, E. Price, Norman Forbes, Brian Darley, Layard, &c., and G. W. Aston. Preceded, at 7, by TURN HIM OUT. Seats booked at the Princess's and Court Theatres, and at all the Libraries. Stage Manager, Mr. HARRY JACKSON. Acting Manager, Mr. H. HEIMAN.

ROYALTY THEATRE

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER.

To-night, at 7.30, ROSALIE. At 8.15, THE MEMBER FOR SLOCUM. At 8.30, DON JUAN JUNIOR. Mesdames Kate Lawler, Harriet Coveney, Ruth Francis, Florence Laven-der, F. Clitheroe, Edie Ward, and Annie Lawler; Messrs. Arthur Williams, Frank Wyatt, S. Dallas, H. Martell, and Frank Cooper. Stage Manager, FRANK ROTHWAY. Acting Manager, CECIL RALPH. Doors open at 7.

Collectanea Genealogica :

A MONTHLY JOURNAL FOR THE GENEALOGIST.

Each Part 128 pp.; issued to Subscribers only.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, THREE GUINEAS,
Post-free.

EDITED BY

JOSEPH FOSTER,

Author of the "Peerage and Baronetage," and other Works.

CONTENTS, PART I., NOW READY.

1. COLLECTANEA.

Introduction—Reg. v. Ulster King of Arms, or the Infringement of the Royal Prerogative in Coat Armour and Baronetries—Rachel, Lady Kingston—Pedigrees—Disraeli—Pennington of Philadelphia and Burnaby of Leicestershire, with Royal Descent—Notes and Queries—The Carnwath Peerage, &c.

Mr. FOSTER begs to draw the attention of the Nobility and Gentry to the following important Works of Reference which are being published in his New Serial:—

2. AN ALPHABETICAL LIST of the MEMBERS of PARLIAMENT.

These Lists are reprinted in alphabetical sequence from the Blue-Book; details of their services, and short Biographical Notices added to those names which can be readily identified; Chart Pedigrees are also given, showing at a glance the blood relationship between the various members of the principal governing families. England, Scotland, and Ireland are treated as separate works.

3. THE MARRIAGES of the NOBILITY and GENTRY, Alphabetically Arranged, from 1655 to 1880.

This remarkable Series commences (by permission of Col. CHESTER) with the Westminster Abbey Registers, and is continued from the Historical Register and Gentleman's Magazine. The concluding Marriages, from 1865 to 1880, are extracted, by permission, from the unique Index to this portion of the Times in the Private Collection of Sir ALBERT WOODS, Garter King of Arms. The importance of this immense work cannot be over-estimated.

4. MUSGRAVE'S OBITUARY.

The Deaths of the Nobility and Gentry of Great Britain and Ireland prior to 1800, compiled originally by Sir WILLIAM MUSGRAVE, Bart., from printed works; with which is incorporated (by permission) the Westminster Abbey Registers, recently edited by Col. CHESTER.

5. FUNERAL CERTIFICATES of the NOBILITY and GENTRY of IRELAND, 1607 to 1729.

These are reprinted from the British Museum copy of the Office Book in Ulster's Office, Dublin Castle, and are accompanied by Tabular Pedigrees and copious Annotations.

6. SIMS' INDEX to HERALDS' VISITATIONS, &c.

An Alphabetical List of Families whose Pedigrees are recorded in the Heralds' Visitations and other MSS. in the British Museum, including Additions from the Collections of Sir GEORGE NAYLOR, Garter King of Arms, and Sir WILLIAM BETHAM, Ulster King of Arms, relating to Families in Ireland and Scotland.

This will be the first general Index to these Visitation Pedigrees which has been printed in alphabetical order.

N.B.—Each of the above subjects will have an independent pagination, so that each may be bound separately on completion. Prospectuses and Specimen Pages on application. Subscribers' Names should be sent to the Editor,

Mr. FOSTER,
21, Boundary-road, Finchley-road,
London, N.W.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY,

186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the Railway Bookstalls,

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON'S numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their Books. There are 500 Bookstalls available for this purpose. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or 186, Strand, London.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in charge a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

I.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A LONDON TERMINUS, OR 186, STRAND—

		6 Months.	12 Months.
		£ s. d.	£ s. d.
For One Volume at a time	0 12 0	1 1 0
(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Two Volumes	0 17 6	1 11 6
(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Four	"	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Eight	"	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Fifteen	"	3 0 0	5 5 0

II.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A COUNTRY BOOKSTALL—

For One Volume at a time	0 12 0	1 1 0
(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Two Volumes	0 17 6	1 11 6
(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Three	"	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Four	"	1 8 0	2 10 0
For Six	"	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Twelve	"	3 0 0	5 5 0

III.—FOR COUNTRY BOOK CLUBS, READING SOCIETIES, &c.

For Twenty-four Volumes at a time	5 5 0	9 9 0
For Thirty-six	"	8 0 0	14 2 6
For Forty-eight	"	10 10 0	18 16 0
For Sixty	"	13 0 0	23 9 0
For Seventy-two	"	15 10 0	28 2 0
For Eighty-four	"	18 0 0	32 15 0

For every additional Twelve Volumes, £4 12s. 6d.

TERMS FOR SPECIAL TRAVELLING SUBSCRIPTIONS, Lists of Books in circulation, or any other information can be obtained at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or at 186, Strand, London.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings for Gentlemen's Libraries.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 474.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JUNE 4, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
THE REVISED VERSION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT, by the Rev. R. B. DRUMMOND	405
MRS. DOUGLAS' LIFE OF DR. WHEWELL, by OSCAR BROWNING	407
ANDREW LANG'S LIBRARY, by FREDK. WEDMORE	408
FITZGERALD'S AUSTRALIA, by W. WICKHAM	409
KEANE'S SIX MONTHS IN MECCA, by ANDREW WILSON	409
SOME MODERN-GREEK BOOKS	410
NOTES AND NEWS	410
A TREBAY HYMN, by MISS A. MARY F. ROBINSON	412
OBITUARY: JACOB BERNAYS, by I. BYWATER, &c.	412
THE FIRST PRINTED BOOK KNOWN, by W. M. CONWAY	413
DURHAM CATHEDRAL	414
SELECTED BOOKS	414
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Keltiberian Coins , by the Rev. W. Webster; The Meaning of "Astel," by H. Sweet; "The Fields of Great Britain," by Hugh Clements, and by the Reviewer	415
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	415
ENGLISH PHILOSOPHERS, by F. T. RICHARDS	415
HAUPT'S ACCADIAN AND SUMERIAN TEXTS, by the Rev. A. H. SAYCE	416
THE HIBBERT LECTURES	416
NOTES OF TRAVEL	417
SCIENCE NOTES	417
PHILOLOGY NOTES	418
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	418
THE SALON OF 1881, III., by MRS. MARK PATTISON	418
LA SOCIÉTÉ DES AQUARELLISTES, by COSMO MONKHOUSE	420
OBITUARY	420
ART SALES	420
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	420
THE ACTORS FROM MEININGEN	421
MR. BYRON'S NEW COMEDY	422
STAGE NOTE	422
LISZT FESTIVALS AT ANTWERP AND BRUSSELS	422
PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY'S AND MR. GANZ'S CONCERTS	423

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL.

The Councils of University College, Liverpool, and of the Liverpool Royal Infirmary School of Medicine are prepared to appoint a PROFESSOR of EXPERIMENTAL PHYSICS in connection with the above Institutions. The stipend of the Professor will be £100 per annum, together with a share of the Fees. The holder of the Professorship will for the present be required to give instruction in Mathematics, until a separate Chair of Mathematics shall have been endowed. He will also be expected to deliver a Course of Lectures to Evening Classes. Candidates are requested to send in their applications and testimonials not later than JUNE 20TH, 1881, to either of the undersigned.

W. J. STEWART, 25, Lord-street, Liverpool.
R. CATON, M.D., 18A, Abercromby-square, Liverpool

May 18, 1881.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

The Office of PRINCIPAL will become VACANT at the end of the present Term. The Council are prepared to receive applications from Gentlemen desirous of the appointment. Candidates must be Clergymen of the Church of England in Priest's Orders, of the degree of Master of Arts at least of one of the Universities of Oxford or Cambridge. Every information may be obtained of the SECRETARY, The College, Brighton, to whom Testimonials must be sent on or before THURSDAY, the 9TH OF JUNE.

F. W. MADDEN, M.R.A.S., Secretary.

OWENS COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

The Senate propose to APPOINT a DEMONSTRATOR in the PHYSICAL LABORATORY who would be required to enter on his duties on the 29TH SEPTEMBER NEXT.

Full particulars may be obtained from the REGISTRAR. Applications should be made not later than the 14TH JUNE.

J. HOLME NICHOLSON, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

The PROFESSORSHIP OF ARCHITECTURE will be VACANT at the Close of the Session. Applications for the Appointment will be received on or before JUNE 20TH.

TALFOURD ELY, M.A., Secretary.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, Ely-

place, St. Stephen's-green, Dublin.—Founded 1852, for preparation of Candidates for Competitive Examinations; over 1,000 Pupils have passed direct from the Academy. The Special Classes for R.I. CONSTABULARY Cadetships have carried off 80 per cent. of the Cadetships offered for competition last year. First Place, four times. Special Work for Woolwich and Sandhurst; over 320 have passed Army Exams, including 2nd, 3rd, 6th, 6th, 7th, at recent Competitions.—Apply to W. J. CHETWODE CRAWLEY, LL.B., F.G.S., F.R.G.S., Director and Sole Proprietor.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—KENSINGTON

HOUSE, Calverley Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. R. STEBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 200 Guineas.

GLASGOW INSTITUTE of the FINE

ARTS.—The AUTUMN EXHIBITION of WORKS in BLACK and WHITE will OPEN on 6TH SEPTEMBER, 1881. Last Receiving day in London, at Mr. BOULET'S, 17, Nassau-street, Middlesex Hospital, 11TH AUGUST. For Advice Notes, &c., apply to ROBERT WALKER, Acting Secretary, Galleries of the Institute, Glasgow.

SIR JOHN SOANE'S MUSEUM,

13, LINCOLN'S INN FIELDS.

OPEN FREE, from 11 to 5, on TUESDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, THURSDAYS, and SATURDAYS in JUNE, JULY, and AUGUST. Cards for Private Days and for Students to be obtained of the CURATOR, at the Museum.

PROF. and MRS. STEADMAN ALDIS

wish to form a READING PARTY on the Coast of NORMANDY, during the Months of July and August, for LADIES preparing for the Mathematical Tripos, Girton, Newnham, or the London or Cambridge University Examinations.—For particulars address COLLEGE OF SCIENCE, Newnham-upon-Tyne.

FRENCH LANGUAGE.—Monsieur

PINGEON, M.C.P. ATTENDS SCHOOLS and FAMILIES and COACHES PUPILS for PUBLIC EXAMINATIONS. Great experience in teaching French. Highest references.—24, Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square, W.

HERBERT EXHIBITION.—"THE

JUDGMENT OF DANIEL." Painted for the House of Lords, and Thirty-five other Works by J. R. HERBERT, R.A., NOW ON VIEW at the HANOVER GALLERY, 47, NEW BOND STREET. Admission, One Shilling. 9.30 to 6.

ROSA BONHEUR'S celebrated PIC-

TURES "ON THE ALERT" and "A FORAGING PARTY," which gained for the Artist the Cross of the Order of Leopold of Belgium at the Antwerp Academy, 1879; also the Complete Engraved Works of ROSA BONHEUR, including the well-known "HOUSE FAIR," NOW ON EXHIBITION at J. H. LEFEVRE'S GALLERY, 1A, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S, S.W. Admission One Shilling. 10 to 5.

LA SOCIÉTÉ des AQUARELLISTES

FRANCAIS.—NOW ON VIEW, an EXHIBITION of WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS by the Members of the above Society, at GOUPIL & CO'S GALLERIES, 25, REGENT STREET, COVENT GARDEN. Admission, One Shilling. An illustrated Catalogue has been published.

MR. MARTIN COLNAGHI (GUARDI

ALLERY, 11, HAYMARKET) begs to inform the Lovers of Art that his FIFTH SUMMER EXHIBITION contains Works by the great colourist Hermann Philips, others by Domingo and Charlemont, and by the young Spanish painter José Benlliure. Open daily from 10 till dusk.

ENGLISH ETCHINGS: a Monthly

Publication of Original Etchings, the work of English Artists. Part I., JUNE. Price 3s. 6d.; Japanese Proof parts, 1s. 1s.

CONTENTS OF PART I. (JUNE).

STONE QUARRY, LUDLOW: TWILIGHT, by S. H. BAKER.

LOCH BARN, by R. CURRIE.

A SHEER BULK, by GEORGE STEVENSON.

IN CHANCERY, by OLIVIER BAKER.

London: WILLIAM REEVES, Publisher, 185, Fleet-street.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

331, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

(Twenty doors west of Mudie's Library.)

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Colliotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facilities of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Palatings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.

AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD

MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Meissonier, Corot, De Neuville, Burne-Jones, Rossetti, Caye Thomas, &c., &c., &c.

MUSEO DEL PRADO, MADRID.

Subscription Issue of 357 Autotype reproductions of Paintings in this Celebrated Gallery (executed by Braun & Cie., Dornach) under the superintendence of the Director of the Gallery. The work contains 34 examples of Murillo, 48 Velasquez, 1 Raphael, 25 Titian, 10 Van Dyck, 32 Rubens, &c. and will be complete in eight 10-monthly Issues. For particulars and terms of subscription, apply to the MANAGER, The Autotype Company, 331, Oxford-street.

PICTURES CLEANED, RESTORED, FRAMED.

To adorn the walls of Home with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 331, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Ealing Road, Middlesex.

General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWYER.

THE SUNDERLAND LIBRARY.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON are favoured with instructions to SELL by AUCTION (unless previously disposed of by Private Contract), at their House, 47, LEICESTER SQUARE, W.C., in separate portions, the first portion commencing on the 1ST day of DECEMBER NEXT, and continuing throughout the Nine following days, at ten minutes past 1 precisely each day, the CELEBRATED LIBRARY formed by CHARLES THIRD EARL OF SUNDERLAND, during the reigns of Queen Anne and George I. It consists of some 30,000 Volumes, and is celebrated for its large collection of early editions of the Greek and Latin Classics. It includes also the first and rare editions of the great Italian authors; a superb collection of early printed Bibles in various languages (including a copy on vellum of the first Latin Bible with a date); many extremely rare works relating to America; a series of Spanish and Portuguese Chronicles; valuable English County Histories; first and early editions of the chief French Poets and Prose writers; a series of French and English works relating to the Reformation and the Political Events of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries; a large number of early printed and rare French Chroniques and Memoirs; Books of Prints; a few Ancient Manuscripts, Collections of Councils, Histories, Lives of Saints, Bodies of Laws, &c. A number of the books are printed on vellum, and many are extremely fine large-paper copies; they are chiefly in the old morocco bindings, and the Library is generally in splendid condition. Catalogues, when ready, may be had, price 6s. each part.

LIBRARY of the LATE J. A. SYMONDS.

Esq., M.D., F.R.C.P., &c., removed from Clifton Hill House. CATALOGUES ARE NOW READY.

SPECIALITIES.—Ancient Sculpture and Painting, Fine Arts in Italy, Egyptology, Antiquities, Greek and Latin Classics, Miltoniana, Philosophy, Shakespeareana; Brief Memoir of Dr. Symonds. 52 pp., demy 8vo, by post for Two Stamps.—WILLIAM GEORGE, XXVI, Park-street, Bristol.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY HERALD.

MAY 28, contains:—Articles on Art in Oxford and elsewhere, No. 5.—Letter from John Ruskin to the Editor.—Sermons preached before the University—&c., &c. Price 2d., post-free.

JUNE 4:—Article on Art, No. 6, and Sermon by Bishop of Peterboro'.

The Articles on Art commenced April 30. Back numbers, 4d.

TO PROPRIETORS of NEWSPAPERS

and PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, Brief News & Opinion, the Furniture Gazette, the Review, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPLETE, ECONOMIC, and PUNCTUAL PRODUCTION of PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether illustrated or plain. Estimates furnished to Proprietors of New Periodicals, for either Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—74 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

LONDON LIBRARY.

12, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE.—Founded in 1841.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

PRESIDENT—THOMAS CARLYLE, Esq.

This Library contains 90,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature in various Languages. Subscription, £3 a-year, or £2 with Entrance-fee of 25; Life Membership, £25.

Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town, Members. Reading-room open from Ten to Half-past Six. Prospectus on application.

ROBERT HARRISON, Secretary and Librarian.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

NEW AND CHOICE BOOKS.

All the best Books of the Season and of the past Thirty Years are in circulation at MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, and may be had without delay by all Subscribers of One Guinea per Annum.

CHEAP BOOKS.

More than One Thousand Popular Books of the Past and Present Seasons are now on SALE at MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY. See MUDIE'S CLEARANCE CATALOGUE for JUNE. New Edition, now ready.

THE LONDON BOOK SOCIETY.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY MESSENGERS call to deliver Books at the Residences of Subscribers in Every Part of London and the Immediate Neighbourhood, on a plan which has given general satisfaction for many years.

Several Thousand Families in London and the Suburb already subscribe to this Department of the Library, and obtain a Constant Succession of the Best New Books on or soon after the day of publication.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED),
NEW OXFORD STREET.

City Office: 2, King-street, Cheapside.

BENTLEYS' BURLINGTON LIBRARY.

each Volume to be had separately, with few exceptions, in crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

ASHLEY'S LIFE of LORD PALMERSTON.
2 vols. 12s.

STEPHEN'S LIFE of DEAN HOOK. 6s.

THE PARISH SERMONS of DEAN HOOK. 6s.

THE LIFE of the REV. R. H. BARHAM.
("Thomas Ingoldsby.") 6s.

JONES'S HISTORY of PRECIOUS STONES. 6s.

SIR E. CREASY'S HISTORY of the OTTOMAN TURKS. 6s.

SIR E. CREASY'S FIFTEEN DECISIVE BATTLES. 6s.

BARHAM'S LIFE of THEODORE HOOK. 6s.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES of CELEBRATED VIOLINISTS. 6s.

THE DEAD CITIES of the ZUYDER ZEE. 6s.

GUIZOT'S LIFE of OLIVER CROMWELL. 6s.

MIGNET'S LIFE of MARY QUEEN of SCOTS. 6s.

DR. MC CAUSLAND'S SERMONS in STONES. 6s.

DR. MC CAUSLAND'S ADAM and the ADAMITE. 6s.

DR. MC CAUSLAND'S BUILDERS of BABEL. 6s.

LORD DALLING AND BULWER'S HISTORICAL CHARACTERS. 6s.

TIMBS' LIVES of PAINTERS. 6s.

TIMBS' LIVES of STATESMEN. 6s.

TIMBS' WITS and HUMOURISTS. 2 vols. 12s.

TIMBS' LATER WITS and HUMOURISTS. 2 vols. 12s.

TIMBS' DOCTORS and PATIENTS. 6s.

THE BENTLEY BALLADS. 6s.

SOUTH SEA BUBBLES. By the EARL and the DOCTOR. 6s.

GUILLEMIN'S THE SUN. 6s.

THE WIT and WISDOM of LORD CHES-TERFIELD. 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,
NEW BURLINGTON STREET,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MILLAIS' GREAT PICTURE, "THE FLOOD," is now for the first time engraved, by the kind permission of C. P. Matthews, Esq., and will appear in the JUNE PART of The MAGAZINE of ART.

ARTEMIS (Sculpture), by H. Thornycroft, A.R.A., exhibited at the Royal Academy of 1880, has been exquisitely engraved, and will form the Frontispiece to the JUNE PART of The MAGAZINE of ART.

ORIGINAL SKETCHES of OXFORD, by GEORGE L. SEYMOUR, illustrating Picturesque Points in its Architecture, will form a Series of beautiful Engravings in the JUNE PART of The MAGAZINE of ART.

THE MAGAZINE of ART For JUNE,

Price 1s., contains:—

Artemis. From the Statue by HANS THORNYCROFT, A.R.A., exhibited at the Royal Academy for 1880. Frontispiece. Pictures of the Year. With Four Engravings. Porcino. With Two Illustrations. The Place of Pictures in the Decoration of a Room. With Four Illustrations of Decorative Art. "The First Trouble of a Young Artist." From the Painting by EUGENE STIELER. Hints for a Sketching Club. Our Living Artists: Hans Thornycroft, A.R.A. With Portrait and Engraving of "Head of Lot's Wife." Treasure-House of Art: the Collection of Mr. C. P. Matthews. With Engravings of J. F. LEWIS'S "An Eastern School," RUBENS'S "Victims," Hook's "From Under the Sea," and MILLAIS'S "Flood." An Exhibition of Old Masters at the Hague. Famous Equestrian Statues. With Two Illustrations. The Dudley Gallery. Lady Art-Student in Munich. With Engraving. How Oxford was Built. Art Notes.

NOTICE.—The MAGAZINE of ART for MAY. The greatly increased demand for this Part (which contains the Engraving and Article descriptive of Mr. HERKOMER'S large Design for a PICTORIAL ADVERTISEMENT) has necessitated the production of several Thousand extra copies. This part, therefore, can still be procured by order from any Bookseller in Town or Country. The ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS pronounces this Part "the most striking which has yet been issued."

NEW WORK by THE AUTHOR of "THE GAME-KEEPER AT HOME."

NOW READY, in 2 vols., price 21s.

WOOD MAGIC: a Fable.

By RICHARD JEFFERIES,

Author of "The Gamekeeper at Home," "The Amateur Poacher," "Round About a Great Estate," &c.
CASSELL, PETER, GALPIN, & Co., Ludgate-hill, London.

Now ready, complete in Five Handsome Quarto Volumes.

Professor MORLEY'S LIBRARY of ENGLISH LITERATURE.

Selected, Edited, and Arranged by HENRY MORLEY, Professor of English Literature at University College, London. With Illustrations from Original MSS. and other authentic sources, consisting of copies of trustworthy Portraits, Sketches of Places, Contemporary Illustrations of Manners and Customs, &c.

Vol. 1.—SHORTER ENGLISH POEMS. 12s. 6d.

Vol. 2.—ILLUSTRATIONS of ENGLISH RELIGION. 11s. 6d.

Vol. 3.—ENGLISH PLAYS. 11s. 6d.

Vol. 4.—SHORTER WORKS in ENGLISH PROSE. 11s. 6d.

Vol. 5.—LONGER WORKS in ENGLISH VERSE and PROSE. 11s. 6d.

CASSELL, PETER, GALPIN, & Co., Ludgate-hill, London.

CASSELL'S MONTHLY SHILLING LIBRARY

Of New and Original Works by well-known Writers, issued Monthly, price One Shilling.

Vol. 4.—The Rev. Rowland Hill, Preacher and Wit. By E. BROOME. With Introduction by the Rev. J. STOUGHTON, D.D. [Now ready.]

Vol. 3.—Boswell and Johnson: their Companions and Contemporaries. By J. F. WALLER, LL.D. Second Edition. 1s.

Vol. 2.—The Scottish Covenanters. By the Rev. J. TAYLOR, D.D., F.A.S.E. Second Edition. 1s.

Vol. 1.—History of the Free-Trade Movement in England. By A. MONGREDIEN. Fourth Edition. 20th Thousand. 1s.

CASSELL, PETER, GALPIN, & CO.,
LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO'S LIST.

ON the INDIAN HILLS; or, Coffee Planting in Southern India. By EDWIN LESTER ARYOLD, Author of "A Summer Holiday in Scandinavia," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s. [Shortly.]

Now ready, royal 8vo, cloth extra, price 21s., VOL. VIII. of GUIZOT'S HISTORY of FRANCE. Completing the Work. Fully Illustrated.

*. The eight volumes of this most complete and splendidly illustrated History of France, by one of the greatest of modern historians, can now be had, royal 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, price 21s. each volume.

AUSTRALIA. By J. F. Vesey Fitzgerald, late Colonial Secretary of Victoria. With Illustrations and a Map.

EPITOME of CONTENTS:—General Character of the Country—Climate—Flora and Fauna—The Aborigines—Geology—New South Wales—Victoria—The Valley—The Deserts—The Modern Egyptians—The Wealth of Egypt—The Dynasty of Mohammed Ali—Chronological and other Tables.

Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d. [Ready.]

EGYPT. By Stanley Lane-Poole. With Maps and Illustrations.

EPITOME of CONTENTS:—The Land of Egypt—The Plain—Cairo—The Valley—The Deserts—The Modern Egyptians—The Wealth of Egypt—The Dynasty of Mohammed Ali—Chronological and other Tables.

Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d. [Ready.]

NEW NOVELS.

Now ready, crown 8vo, 3 vols., price 31s. 6d.

DAVID BROOME, Artist. By Mrs. Robert O'REILLY, Author of "Phoebe's Fortunes," "Sussex Stories," &c.

Now ready, 2 vols., price 21s.

JAMES WOODFORD, Carpenter and Chartist. By HENRY SOLLY.

HARPER for JUNE. Now ready, price 1s.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE for JUNE.—This Number contains some of the most charming Engravings of Scenery ever published.

MR. HARDY'S NEW NOVEL, "A LAODICEAN," illustrated by Da Maurier, is continued in "HARPER" for June. Price 1s.

Ask to see "HARPER" at the Bookstalls.

AN ARTICLE on EDWIN BOOTH, with a very fine Portrait, appears in the June Number of "HARPER." Price 1s.

Sold Everywhere. Price 1s., royal 8vo.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE for JUNE. Its Contents are extremely varied, and the Illustrations very numerous and exceptionally fine.

See HARPER for JUNE. Price 1s.

A NEW POEM by Will Carleton (Author of "Farm Ballads") entitled "THE FIRST SETTLER'S STORY"—one of the most sweetly pathetic Backwoods poems ever written—appears in "HARPER" for June. It is admirably adapted for recitation.

[Now ready, royal 8vo, cloth extra, price 8s. 6d.]

THE HALF-YEARLY VOLUME of HARPER'S MAGAZINE. With over 400 Illustrations.

LOW'S STANDARD NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s. each.

MARY ANERLEY: a Yorkshire Story. By B. D. BLACKMORE.

ALICE LORRAINE. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

LOENA DOONE. By R. D. BLACKMORE. Seventeenth Edition.

CRADOCK NOWELL. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

CHARA VAUGHAN. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

CHRIS the CARPENTER. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

FRIMA: or, MY FATHER'S SIN. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

MY LADY GREENSLEEVES. By HELEN MATHERS, Authoress of "Conia" through the lye, "Cherry Ripe," &c.

THREE FEATHERS. By WILLIAM BLACK.

A DAUGHTER of BETH. Seventeenth Edition. By W. BLACK. With Frontispiece by F. WALKER, A.R.A.

KILMERY: a Novel. By W. BLACK.

IN SILK ATTIRE. By W. BLACK.

LADY SILVERDALE'S SWEETHEART. By W. BLACK.

WRECK of the GROSVENOR. By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

JOHN HOLDSWORTH (CHIEF MATE). By W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor."

HISTORY of a CHIME: the Story of the Coup d'Etat. By VICTOR HUGO.

INNOCENT. By JOHN OLIPHANT. Eight Illustrations.

WORK: a Story of Experience. By LOUISA M. ALCOCK. Illustrations.

THE ARCHAN KNIFE. By R. A. STERNDALE, Author of "Reveries."

A FRENCH HEIRESS in her own CHATEAU. By the Author of "One Only," "Constantia," &c. Six Illustrations.

NINETY-THREE. By VICTOR HUGO. Numerous Illustrations.

MY WIFE and I. By Mrs. BECHER STOWE.

ELNOR DUYDEN. By Mrs. MACQUOID.

DIANE. By Mrs. MACQUOID.

POGANUC PEOPLE: their Loves and Lives. By Mrs. BECHER STOWE.

A GOLDEN SORROW. By Mrs. CASSEL HOREY.

A STORY of the DRAGONNADES; or, Asylum Christi. By EDWARD CHILCAT, M.A.

BEN HUR: a Tale of the Christ. By L. WALLACE.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON,
Crown-buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 4, 1881.

No. 474, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

THE REVISED VERSION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

The New Testament of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ translated out of the Greek: being the Version set forth A.D. 1611 compared with the Most Ancient Authorities and Revised A.D. 1881. (Printed for the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge.)

H KAINH ΔΙΑΘΗΚΗ: the Greek Testament, with the Readings adopted by the Revisers of the Authorised Version. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

The New Testament in the Original Greek according to the Text followed in the Authorised Version, together with the Variations adopted in the Revised Version. By F. H. A. Scrivener, M.A., D.C.L., LL.D. (Cambridge University Press.)

THE 17th of May 1881 will be a day long memorable in the annals of English literature as that on which the Revised Version of the New Testament was at length, after the lapse of eleven years since the appointment of the joint committee for the revision of the Scriptures, put into the hands of the public. The time actually spent on the work, we are informed, was ten years and a-half—a longer period, probably, than any single scholar, with adequate inducement to finish his task quickly, would demand for the translation of so small a book as the New Testament; a much longer period than that occupied by the companies entrusted with the Authorised Version, whose labours were completed in about two years and three-quarters, or, as they themselves put it, “in twice seven times seventy two days and more;” yet assuredly not unreasonably long, considering the peculiar difficulties of the work, the responsibilities of the Revisers, and the magnitude and importance of the object attained. For it was desired to produce a version which, without showing partiality for any particular school of criticism, should fairly and fully represent and embody the ripest scholarship of the day; which should reconcile, if that might be possible, different opinions and yet emphasise none; which, while retaining the colour and flavour of the old translation, should leave none of its errors unrectified and none of its obscurities unrelieved; which, in the alterations it might introduce, should flatter no prejudices and, if possible, offend none; and which, in short, should be worthy to take the place of the present Authorised Version as the standard English New Testament, and to retain it until either its language should become obsolete or new discoveries should throw more light on the original text. And from the twenty-seven most accomplished New Testament scholars that could be found in this kingdom it was not unreasonable to expect that such a version would be forthcoming. In comparing, moreover, the labours of the present Revisers with those of their predecessors at the beginning of the seventeenth century, it is but right to remember that their task has been one of much greater difficulty. The latter were called on to revise the translation only, the state of criticism at the time scarcely inviting them to anything more—if they exercised any judgment in regard to the text it was only in the selection of readings among the different printed editions and the Vulgate; the former would have left the more important half of their duty undone if they had not revised the text also. Finally, it was necessary that the public mind should be prepared for a version which could not but seem to the unlearned to be, in some respects, a different New Testament from that with which they had been familiar from their childhood, and whose every word they had been accustomed to regard with veneration. On this ground alone it will probably be admitted that the time which has been suffered to elapse since the new translation was first taken in hand till its publication has not been excessively protracted.

The question now comes whether the work just published fulfils the expectations that have been entertained regarding it. To say that it does not might seem to be, on the part of any individual, a little presumptuous. For it would be but a single voice against the collective judgment of a body of scholars the best that could be assembled anywhere. No alteration, it is understood, was made in the existing version but after mature deliberation and discussion, or allowed to stand without being more than once reconsidered. That there were differences of opinion to the last among the Revisers may indeed be taken for granted. The marginal readings can hardly in every case fully represent the opinion of the minority; still, the work comes before the public with a weight of authority which alone is almost sufficient to silence criticism. Encouragement, however, may be taken from the modest admission of the Revisers themselves that “there must be defects in a work so long and arduous” as theirs. “Blemishes and imperfections there are in the noble translation which we have been called on to revise; blemishes and imperfections will assuredly be found in our own revision.” That the Revisers have accomplished their important task with great care, skill, and conscientiousness, and, on the whole, with good taste and sound judgment, may indeed be confidently and gratefully asserted. That they have removed many blemishes and corrected numerous errors in the Authorised Version may also be unhesitatingly affirmed. But it will certainly be unfortunate if it shall be found that, while correcting the errors of their predecessors, they have introduced new blemishes of their own; and, to some extent at least, it must be feared this will prove to be the case.

The first thing that will strike the ordinary reader on opening the Revised Version will undoubtedly be the absence of the usual divisions into chapters and verses, and the arrangement of the text in paragraphs instead. This was a change which was absolutely indispensable. The division into chapters and verses, however convenient, is of no authority, and sometimes it tends to obscure the sense. Its convenience is provided for by the retention of the customary numerals in the margin. Probably few will question the wisdom of the Revisers in determining to omit the headings to the chapters and pages. The revision of these was indeed a part of the task assigned them; but seeing that it “would have involved so much of indirect, and indeed frequently of direct, interpretation,” they judged it best to omit them altogether. The titles of the different books, on the other hand, they have retained as they stand in the Authorised Version. This I must venture to think unfortunate. The American Revisers would have adopted a bolder course. They strike out “S.” from the titles of the Gospels—not that that is of any great consequence; but, what is much more important, they omit the words “of Paul the Apostle.” from the title of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

In regard to the text, it might have been expected that the Revisers would be content to follow one or more of the great critical authorities; but they took another view of their duty, and preferred to weigh the evidence in each case for themselves. The result of their labours in this direction is now before the world in two forms. Oxford gives us, in a beautiful type, that “continuous and complete Greek text” which the Revisers did not esteem it within their province to construct—that is to say, it gives us a text (that of the third edition of Stephanus) embodying the Revisers’ readings, with the readings which they displace in the margin; while Cambridge, on the other hand, gives us the text followed in the Authorised Version, with the Revisers’ readings in the margin. One or both of these will be found indispensable to any minute study of the new Version.

In their handling of the Greek text, if it would be too much to say that the Revisers have never been influenced by theological prepossessions, it may at least be admitted that they have, on the whole, shown not only sound judgment and scholarship, but also no lack of courage. Thus, they include in brackets the passage in John referring to the woman taken in adultery, noting in the margin that “most of the ancient authorities omit John vii. 53–viii. 11. Those which contain it vary much from each other.” They space off the last twelve verses of Mark, with a note that they are omitted in the two oldest Greek MSS. and some other authorities. They simply drop, without any notice whatever, as was right they should, the notorious interpolation, 1 John v. 7; indeed, in this case, they even disregard their own rule of indicating in the margin every deviation from the text followed in the Authorised Version. They read “Os and translate “He who” in the well-known passage, 1 Tim. iii. 16. They omit the doxology at the end of the Lord’s Prayer in Matt. vi. 14, and give the same prayer in a still more abbreviated form in the corresponding passage in Luke. They omit the confession of the eunuch—indeed, the whole of verse 37 in Acts viii.—and the words “that ye should not obey the truth” in Gal. iii. 1. Here and there similar changes were expected as a matter of course by everyone who knows anything of New Testament criticism, and not to have made them would have entirely destroyed the value of the Revisers’ work. But it is certain, nevertheless, that they will try the faith, or at any rate hurt the feelings, of numbers who have been accustomed to believe that they had in the Authorised Version the authentic and unadulterated Word of God. It is therefore all the more creditable to those who took in hand this important work that they have had the wisdom and the courage to let the truth be known.

On the other hand, there are cases in which a deviation from the vulgar text might have been looked for, but the Revisers have apparently allowed prescriptive right to decide in favour of the established readings. Thus, in a well-known passage in Acts xx. 28, they retain the reading “God” when some of the leading critical editions read Κυρίου. In this it is possible they are right. They have in their favour the authority of the Sinaitic and Vatican MSS.; and it is quite as likely that the original reading was Θεοῦ, which some copyist, offended by the harsh expression, “blood of God,” altered to Κυρίου, as that an original Κυρίου was a change to Θεοῦ. But in John i. 18 the Revisers have also adhered to the received text notwithstanding the amount of authority, including the same two MSS., for the reading μονογενὴς θεός. Certainly it will not be regretted that they have felt justified in relegating this reading to the margin with the note that “Many very ancient authorities read God only begotten.” Drs. Westcott and Hort, however, who read θεοῦ in the first passage, read also μονογενὴς θεός in the second.

To pass now from the text to the translation, the first rule laid down by the Committee of Convocation for the guidance of the Revisers was “to introduce as few alterations as possible into the text of the Authorised Version consistently with faithfulness,” and the second “to limit, as far as possible, the expression of such alterations to the language of the Authorised and earlier English Versions.” Whether these rules were altogether wise, and whether the Revisers would not have done well to use a little more latitude in getting rid of obsolete words and phrases—such as “charger” for “dish,” “whether of the twain,” “bewareth,” “wist,” “wot,” &c., and of expressions such as “for to see” (corrected in Luke iv. 16, but left standing in Matt. xi. 8)—may at least be a question. But by this their own standard it will be fair to judge their work. And if in its deviations from the Authorised text it shall be found sometimes only to mar its beauties, for the sake of no compensatory advantage except perhaps to make way for some small pedantry, or by an excessive straining after literal accuracy in places where idiomatic differences do not admit of it, to give renderings which only by courtesy can be called English, it must, to that extent, be pronounced a failure.

That there are—happily not often, but now and then—alterations of this kind is only too true. On the other hand, it is hardly necessary to say that, by attention to minute points of grammar, and especially the use of the article, and by consistency in the rendering of the same word in different places, the Revisers have, in numberless instances, improved the sense and thrown light on many dark passages of Scripture. It is hardly necessary to say this, because, with the learning they brought to their task, it could not possibly have been otherwise.

It is well known that the old translators made no scruple, if the same Greek word occurred two or three times in the same sentence, of representing it by two or three different English words, and indeed rather prided themselves on so doing. Thus, when Paul wrote, “εἰ τις τὸν ναὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ φθείρει, φθερεῖ τοῦτον ὁ Θεός” (1 Cor. iii. 17), they made use of the two verbs “defile” and “destroy.” By such liberties they sometimes snatched a grace which otherwise would have been wanting; and it cannot be denied that the exquisite chapter in praise of charity loses something of its charm in the new version. Thus, when we have been accustomed to read, “Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophecies they shall fail, whether there be tongues they shall cease, whether there be knowledge it shall vanish away; for we know in part and we prophecy in part, but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away,” we have now in this short passage the one word “shall be done away” thrice repeated to represent Paul’s threefold καταργηθῶσι, καταργηθῶσι, καταργηθῶσι. Such changes as these, however, are perhaps inevitable, and we consent to them with a sigh. What we want is undoubtedly as nearly as possible the English equivalent of what Paul wrote in Greek, not any modern improvement upon it; but then we do want also a genuinely English book such as the Authorised Version pre-eminently is—one which will speak to the people in their own tongue. It will now be necessary accordingly to give a few examples of renderings which are, to say the least, no improvement on those which they displace.

In Matt. v. 22, &c., where we have been accustomed to the homely phrase “hell fire,” we are expected henceforth to read “the hell of fire.” The objection to this is that it is not English. The Revisers ought either to have put “the Gehenna of fire”—the reading of the margin—which is half Greek, or rather half Hebrew, and a little pedantic, or to have stuck to the old emphatic form of speech. Matt. vi. 26: “The birds of heaven” is a possible English phrase, but here we have “the birds of the heaven.” Surely “the birds of the air” is the most appropriate English for τὰ πετεινὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ. It would not, it must be confessed, be an easy matter to give a perfectly satisfactory rendering of Ὁ ὀπίσω μου ἐρχόμενος ἔμπροσθέν μου γέγονεν (John i. 15); but the authorised rendering, if not so literally exact, is in all other respects infinitely preferable to that of the Revisers—“He that cometh after me is become before me”—which is intolerable. It is singular that anyone with the slightest feeling for harmony should wish to substitute “work” for “labour” in John vi. 27. Is anything gained by reading “who loved me and gave himself up for me” in Gal. ii. 20? There is a very small gain in literal accuracy, but a great loss in the rhythm which the Revisers profess themselves anxious to preserve. Who would accept such a feeble expression as “a working of error” in exchange for “a strong delusion,” even though it be a more literal rendering of ἐνέργειαν πλάνης, in 2 Thess. ii. 11? In 1 Tim. i. 17 we must henceforth read “Now unto the King eternal, incorruptible, invisible, the only God.” This is not even literally exact. It ought to be, “Now unto the eternal King (or King of the ages), the incorruptible, invisible, only God.” This arrangement would have had the advantage of preserving the rhythm of the sentence; but “immortal” is not objectionable as a rendering of ἀθάνατος. In the same way for ἀφθαρσία (2 Tim. i. 10) we have “incorruptibility” where “immortality” answers every purpose, save that of a pedantic literalness, much better. It would be difficult to conceive, and, I think, impossible to find, a happier rendering of πρὸ χρόνων αἰώνων (2 Tim. i. 9, &c.) than that of the old translators, “before the world began;” yet our present Revisers invite us to substitute for it the wholly unmeaning phrase “before times eternal.” In Titus i. 9, the old translators have at least made sense of ἀντεχόμενον τοῦ κατὰ τὴν διδαχὴν πιστοῦ λόγου; but, whatever be the exact meaning, the revised rendering, “holding to the faithful word which is according to the teaching,” does not make it any clearer. In verse 12, why “idle gluttons” for “slow bellies”? In the same epistle, ii. 13, there is a reading which will startle some, though it may please many—“our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ,” instead of “the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ,” as is read now. Here, indeed, as well as in Matt. vi. 13, where the novel reading “deliver us from the evil one” has not unnaturally attracted much attention; it is probable the Revisers are right. Still, seeing that the alternative renderings are admissible and supported by competent authority, it might be wished that in these cases, and especially in the latter case, they had so far deferred to established usage as to leave us the old familiar words.

These are examples of what the Revisers have done in the way of spoiling “the noble translation” with which they had to deal; but it would certainly be unfortunate if such defects were permitted to hide the great merit of their work. In adhering, as they have done, to the language and forms of speech of the old version, they have, on the whole, shown excellent taste and sound judgment, though, as has been already hinted, they have carried this principle to an extreme. They have abandoned the old use of “let” for “hinder;” and for “prevent” in the sense of “anticipate” they have substituted in 1 Thess. iv. 15, “precede,” and in Matt. xvii. 25, “spake first;” but they have preserved many other expressions which have quite passed out of use. They have retained the old spelling of the word “cloke;” but why have they revived that of “judgement," which is not so printed in any of the modern editions of the Authorised Version? It is satisfactory to observe that, in the case of words which have no English equivalent, they have avoided the pedantry of introducing the Greek words into their text. Thus we still have "penny" for δηνάριον, farthing for κοδράντης, "piece of silver" for δραχμή, &c. To this rule, however, there is at least one exception in the case of Hades. Assuredly no one will find fault with the Revisers for rejecting the word "hell," which is altogether inappropriate as a rendering of the Greek ᾗδης; but some other more suitable phrase might have been found. People of education will not, it is true, find any difficulty with Hades; but "the world below," or "the unseen world," would convey a distinctive meaning to the unlearned. It would be an interesting study to catalogue the new words and phrases that have found their way into the new version, though these are, of course, far fewer than if the Revisers had not fettered themselves by the second of the two rules quoted above. Among others may be mentioned "explain" (Matt. xiii. 36), "apparition" (Ib. xiv. 26), "its" (passim), "indulgence" (Acts xxiv. 23), "Emperor" (Ib. xxv. 25), "vessel" for ship (Ib. xxvii. 41), "beach" and "bay" (Ib. 39), &c. It cannot certainly be said that the Revisers have done much to enrich the language of the English Bible, or that they have exhibited the full power of our noble English tongue.

Great, then, as was the need for a revision of the New Testament, and great and valuable as are the improvements effected by that which has now been completed, it can hardly be desired that the new version should at once, and without further modification, take the place of the old. Is it impossible that it may itself undergo revision before its use becomes general, or it is invested with any authority? It is at present, it cannot be doubted, a far more accurate, a purer, and more trustworthy reproduction of what the authors of the New Testament actually wrote than has ever before appeared under such high auspices, or with anything like the same prospect of universal acceptance. It would not, perhaps, be very difficult to make it a wholly worthy successor of that volume which has fed the spiritual life, sustained the hopes, and consoled the sorrows of so many generations of English-speaking men—that volume on which it is based and whose perfections it inherits.

ROBERT B. DRUMMOND.

The Life, and Selections from the Correspondence, of William Whewell, D.D., late Master of Trinity College, Cambridge. By Mrs. Stair Douglas. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

THE fate of Dr. Whewell's memoirs reminds us of the fate of the monument of Julius II. When that combative Pontiff died, it was felt that so imperious a nature should have no common memorial. Michelangelo sketched a design in which prophets and sibyls, moral and theological virtues, fettered captives, and enslaved vices, surrounded the lofty sarcophagus of the Pope. But the plan was on too large a scale for execution. The horned Moses glares down the aisle of St. Peter in chains, but the burial-place of Julius II. is marked by a simple stone. So it has been with Dr. Whewell. He appeared so large to his contemporaries, his omniscience was so appalling, that no single man had the courage to undertake the history of so colossal a mind. Cambridge could not even produce a literary Michelangelo to sketch out the work. So it was decided that he was not to have one biographer, but three. Mr. Todhunter was to give an account of his scientific writings and correspondence—a task which he performed with characteristic pains and accuracy. Some member of his family was to paint for us the man as he lived, and as he was known to his relations and friends; and some member of the great college over which he ruled was to describe his academical career. The second instalment of the task is now before us; the third remains, and probably will remain, unattempted. This is a great pity. In whatever sphere Dr. Whewell was great, he was greatest at the university. Graduates of twenty or thirty years' standing will never forget that majestic stature, that massive brow, that commanding look, as its possessor paced the ante-chapel of his college, or took his seat of presidency among the skulls of Golgotha. On the hand, the Whewell Professor of International Law derives a very small portion of his income from the sale of Dr. Whewell's writings, and the merely personal life of a college don is not calculated to excite permanent interest. An academical biography would have told the story of the university during fifty years of steady progress and momentous change. As it is, we have no Life of Dr. Whewell which corresponds in value either to Stanley's Life of Arnold or Monk's Life of Bentley.

With these drawbacks in view, Mrs. Stair Douglas is to be congratulated on the manner in which she has performed her task. It is always a delicate duty to make selections from private correspondence. But Mrs. Douglas has shown unexceptionable taste. She has allowed her uncle, as far as possible, to speak for himself; and she has produced a book which can be read through without weariness—indeed, by a Cambridge man, with considerable interest.

Dr. Whewell's whole life was spent at Cambridge in university and college work. Born of humble parentage, he came to the university at the age of eighteen, was second wrangler, fellow of Trinity, lecturer, tutor, and finally master, and died in that position in full vigour and activity at the age of seventy-one. During his twenty years' labour as a college teacher Dr. Whewell must have taken his full share in developing the resources of his college so as to bring it to the position of unrivalled superiority which it now occupies. He was indeed fortunate in his fellow-labourers. Peacock, Thirlwall, Hare, and Blakesley are names which are known far beyond Cambridge. The main task which he set before himself was the extinction of private tuition by rendering it unnecessary. He argued that a college ought to supply all the teaching requisite to enable its pupils to obtain high honours. Dr. Whewell did much in this direction. Far more has been done since his time; and the main object of the latest reform of the university has been to carry this principle still farther, and to extend it by making teaching independent even of the limits of a college. Still, after fifty years, the citadel of mathematics remains impregnable, while other studies have yielded to the assault.

These letters throw light upon a college question in which Dr. Whewell's conduct has often been misunderstood. In 1834, Thirlwall, being lecturer of Trinity College, had published a letter to Prof. Turton, in which he questioned the policy of enforcing attendance at college chapel on all persons in statu pupillari. Dr. Whewell had written two pamphlets in defence of the practice. In consequence of this, but probably also as a punishment for his well-known liberal opinions, Thirlwall was dismissed from his lectureship by the master, Dr. Wordsworth. This arbitrary and despotic act, probably illegal, and happily almost without example in the temperate atmosphere of Cambridge, created great excitement in the university. It has been supposed that Dr. Whewell did not at the time exert himself as he should have done to save his colleague. This is disproved by the correspondence. Dr. Whewell writes to Prof. Sedgwick dissenting strongly from Thirlwall's principles, which, he says, "appear to me to be inconsistent with any college management, and with any religious establishment."

But he adds,

"The master's request to him to resign the tuition I entirely disapprove of, and expressed my opinion against it to the master as strongly as I could."

In 1840 Dr. Whewell began to think of taking a college living.

"My inducements to stay in college diminish. Friends depart, or become separated from me by change of habits. I do not make new intimacies easily—hardly at all. College rooms are no home for declining years."

Happily, in Archdeacon Hare he had a friend who would tell him the truth.

"I have never been able to think with satisfaction of your undertaking a parochial cure. I can neither fancy that you would suit it nor that it would suit you. It hardly seems to me right to enter upon such a curio unless one does so with the purpose of making it the primary object of one's thoughts and interests."

This is a very gentle way of putting the matter. Thus Dr. Whewell was dissuaded from making what would have been a fatal mistake. His agitation of mind ended far more prosperously in marriage. From 1841 to his death he found in his wife's society, and in that of his family, an opportunity for pouring out his passionate heart, which his isolation in the university otherwise denied him. Certainly, no man was better fitted for domestic life—but of this it is needless to speak, as the book we are reviewing is so full of it on every page.

Of more public interest is the position of Dr. Whewell as a university reformer. There can be no doubt that he was sincerely anxious to widen the field of study at Cambridge. Appointed Professor of Moral Philosophy in 1839, he made the work of his chair effective and fruitful by his lectures. He gave philosophy an important position in the examination for Trinity fellowships—an examination which has done much to secure their supremacy over the other fellowships of the university. It was complained that if he left Trinity there would be no one to examine for fellowships in his place. He took a large share in establishing the moral sciences tripos, the parent of the present moral science and history triposes; but it is too generally forgotten that the first impulse to the establishment of this examination was due to the Prince Consort. During Dr. Whewell's lifetime he provided for the creation of a Professorship and for Scholarships of International Law, with the obvious intention of connecting the university with the higher services of the State, and of realising the original plan of the Georgian Professorship of Modern History and Modern Languages. It is, perhaps, to be regretted that he did not choose for his benefaction some more hopeful study than international law—political science, for instance, or even history at large. But, by his direct action, as well as by his books, he may be regarded as one of the chief forerunners of that enlargement of academical studies at Cambridge which has progressed so mightily since his death. Unfortunately, his temper led him, at the close of his life, to take no hopeful view of the future which he had done so much to bring about. He had little sympathy with a younger generation, and no confidence in their wisdom. Triumphant in the result of his own reforms and in the memory of his own struggles, he was unwilling to launch into a wider sea of reconstruction, or to commit to a number of willing hands trained in his school the work which, as a man of combat, he wished to battle for alone. So we find him in unhappy antagonism with the best influences of his college, defeated in divisions, risking the character of an obstructive, but in all differences of opinion commanding respect by his impressive personality.

No one can study Dr. Whewell's life without asking, when he was so great, why was he not greater?—why has he left so little that is permanent? This book gives the answer. He was deficient in sympathy, he could lead but not follow; and, still worse, he was deficient in insight and subtlety. His mind was strong and powerful, but commonplace. It is the combination of character and intellect which so impressed his contemporaries that justifies the place he holds in the Walhalla of Trinity heroes by the side of Bacon and Newton, Barrow and Macaulay.

OSCAR BROWNING.

The Library. By Andrew Lang. With a Chapter on Illustrated Books by Austin Dobson. (Macmillan.)

THOUGH the little volume now on the table is by no means the most serious contribution to our book-shelves which we are looking for from an engaging writer who owes it to himself to become a substantial critic, it is so adroitly put together that it will serve two purposes. The thousands of people who only know of a "library" as a storehouse of literature will be most pleasantly informed by it that a library may likewise be a storehouse of rarities and bindings. The daintier folk whose refined love for Aldines and for Elzevirs impels them to carry their amiable mania tolerably far, and

"In torrid heats of late July,
In March, beneath the bitter bise,
To book-hunt while the loungers fly,—
To book-hunt, though December freeze," will have the satisfaction of knowing that, if it did not lie within the scope of Mr. Lang's enterprise to tell them much that was new to them, their pleasant "fad" has at least been treated sympathetically. Moreover, there are really a great many persons—the writer of these words is distinctly one of them—who have much to learn, in the way of absolute fact, from such a book as this, which (to say at the beginning what it is more customary to keep to the end) is indeed all that such a book may fairly be expected to be. For does it not set the would-be collector on the right track, and furnish him who does not aspire to collect with just the knowledge that allows him to be not wholly unintelligent and wholly unresponsive when he examines the book-case—or must it now be the exquisite little cabinet—of the more favoured brother? The collector is always fond of illustrative stories; the writer on liblio-mania—la douce manie—from Dibdin to M. Octave Uzanne—takes kindly to anecdote; the love is common to all, but the best method peculiar to some. For our part, we like Mr. Lang's method. He is not oppressed with the gravity of the incidents he records. The twinkle of humour—the humour that freshens and sweetens things, and saves the collector from being a drystick and, sometimes, the scholar from being a pedant—is discerned very often.

What does Mr. Lang tell us? His work is divided into three chapters—the first of which is "An Apology for the Book-Hunter." In this, after mentioning the obligations which his own book lies under to many writers of research in France, where the theme is best understood, he expounds to us the advantages of collecting—the actual service to literature done by the cherishing of those rare first thoughts, an author's first editions; the amusement of the chase, which he likens to that of the angler; the tastefulness and intrinsic beauty of much that is sought for; the fact that human associations lie round these precious volumes that have belonged in the past, we may hope, to the fair, or, we may hope, to the wise; lastly, the undoubted advantage, to the educated poor, that the objects of the search do not lose their pecuniary value when once they have been acquired, but may, on the collector's death, put money in the purses of his children. But on this last matter, in which some have gone wrong, as it seems to us, Mr. Lang is excellently healthy. He does not reckon as a collector the collector who buys for speculation. Hill-Burton, in the Book Hunter, is quite on his side. "Where money is the object, let a man speculate or become a miser," writes that authority, perhaps even a shade too rigidly. And Mr. Lang says:

"It is one thing for the collector to be able to reflect that the money he expends on books is not lost, and that his family may find themselves richer, not poorer, because he indulged his tastes; it is quite another thing to buy books as a speculator buys shares, meaning to sell again at a profit as soon as occasion offers."

Our writer's second chapter is on "The Library." He passes under review the changed conditions of the collector—how the collector of old perhaps lived in the country, and in the many rooms of a manor-house amassed his congregation of folios; and how the collector of to-day lives in a suburban villa, or in the smallest rooms of a West End or Bloomsbury street, adding, if he is lucky enough to be able to do so, Elzevir to Elzevir. The writer discourses on bindings, and two pretty plates illustrate some of his remarks. He urges appropriateness, quoting in this connexion the artistic fancies of a French bibliophile, who—recognising that full bindings have already their share of attention, from Derome to Trautz-Bauzonnet—has bestowed thought upon what greater variety and charm half-bindings are capable of, and has suggested "un cartonnage Pompadour," a "dead fair lady's train" as a coat for a Crébillion; leathers of China and Japan for books of fantasy. Then, having left the library itself, with "receipts, not infallible, for cleaning books," Mr. Lang—aided first by Mr. Loftie on "early printed books"—brings himself to the books of the collector, tells of the changes of fashion, of the abandonment of one printer for another risen to notice, sketches briefly what it is well to have in the particular field in which the collector finds his sport. We have nothing to regret in this, except its perhaps inevitable slightness; nothing to point out as of seeming inaccuracy except the statement that "the dress of the middle of the eighteenth century, of the age of Watteau, was precisely suited to the gay and graceful pencils of Gravelot, Moreau, Eisen, Beucher, Cochin, Marillier, and Choffard." Watteau's work-time was the first twenty years of the eighteenth century, not "the middle" of it—he died in 1721; but if Mr. Lang would wish to say that the whole century was Watteau's age because his influence lived, and directed and inspired everything until there came the romantic classicism of Prudhon and the severer antiquity of David, then we entirely agree with him.

Mr. Austin Dobson has thought that among illustrated books it was sufficient for the purpose of the volume to treat only of English books. Probably he was right; but either his choice, or his manner of treatment when the choice was once made, has resulted in creating a certain disparity between Mr. Lang's portion of the volume and his own. For while Mr. Lang does not profess to tell us—as, indeed, how could he?—every book to collect, Mr. Dobson, whatever he professes or intends, does actually tell us of nearly every book to collect within the more limited sphere of his own enquiry. And so much the better, of course—at all events, in one respect. The information is useful; but the very fullness of it, in the sense of the almost entire absence of sins of omission, compels the writer to be particularly, and sometimes irritatingly, brief on the merits or qualities of special volumes on which we would have had so delicate a critic, so fin a gourmet, characteristically dilate. Mr. Austin Dobson lays down very carefully all the lines upon which, in his restricted subject, it would be possible to write. Now, having got Mr. Dobson's lines, what we want is Mr. Dobson's writing—some fullness of comment on the matters brought up to be dismissed. This criticism, however, does not apply all through. There are occasions on which the writer relaxes—dwells lovingly on the quality of the thing he names, and then there is given to us a new enjoyment of that thing, the art of the critic who has watched and received having refined upon the art of the inventor who did perhaps but rapidly produce. Excellent, as an instance of Mr. Dobson's faculty, are his remarks upon Hogarth and Bewick. In these he is descriptive and analytical, while he remains terse. It is thoughts, not only facts, that he expresses—but he expresses them pointedly; and with admirable brevity he succeeds in characterising much of the work upon which the diffuseness of brethren who cannot be literary, but who may do honest drudge work for the literary, has been expended in vain. The temptation in books like these is to the neglect of style—manner—by which alone worthy matter can be rightly set forth. But Mr. Dobson and Mr. Lang, at their best, have escaped that temptation; nor should the temptation have been so very hard a one to the writer of The Story of Rosina or the writer of A Ballade of Autumn. At their best, in this little book, their writing is Literature—that is, it is a branch of Art—a thing akin to that with which it chances expressly to deal.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

Australia. By John Foster Vesey Fitzgerald (late Colonial Secretary of Victoria). With Illustrations and Map. (Sampson Low.)

THIS is one of the series of small volumes descriptive of the principal countries of the world issued by Messrs. Sampson Low and edited by Mr. Pulling. The idea of this series is a good one, but it is manifest that the volumes must greatly vary in interest. Unfortunately, Australia does not make the most attractive or readable book. It is impossible to treat as a whole a country divided into six distinct colonies; and, when these are taken separately, the reader is likely to confuse one with another. Present prosperity does not necessarily provide materials for a book. The Australian colonies have no past; and their present condition is for the most part described by a multitude of figures which no one can carry in his head, and which, however useful to refer to when wanted, cannot, according to the scheme of this series, be interesting to the general reader. In saying this, we are not finding fault with the author, though we think that he might with advantage have enlarged the chapters on the character and the flora and fauna of the whole country of Australia, even at the expense of the history and constitution of each independent colony. We should have preferred to have had more of the animals and plants which are of so special and peculiar a character, and less of the governors of the six colonies, who are not very different from governors elsewhere. Nothing is said about black swans; and the curious dugong, with its valuable oil, and the bêche-de-mer fisheries are not even mentioned. Mr. FitzGerald acknowledges his obligations to Sir J. Hooker's Flora of Australia and Mr. Wallace's book on Australasia. We cannot but wish he had borrowed more from them.

The truth is that the whole subject is too vast for one little volume. Such questions as those of the Government lands, Chinese and Polynesian labour, and Protection ought to be treated fully if at all; it is useless to devote a few pages to any one of them. No doubt Democracy and Protection will advance hand in hand together. But it is difficult to conceive of anything more truly absurd than the establishment of protective duties between the Australian colonies. We learn that Queensland sugar is excluded from New South Wales and Victoria by a duty of £5 per ton; and the protective tariff of Victoria shuts out the produce of Tasmania from its best and nearest market.

Mr. FitzGerald's description of Tasmania is most inviting; "there are few places," he says, "where living is cheaper, where the moderate enjoyments of life may be more easily gratified, and where life can be passed more agreeably." How comes it that, with all these advantages, and, in addition, those of scenery, climate, and salubrity, the population increases but slowly? Is it that these advantages are but little known, or that the class which would naturally value and seek them is indisposed to emigrate? One cannot but feel how vast the gain would be to numbers whose life here is one long struggle how to make two ends meet, could they be moved to such a country as Tasmania.

We trust the author is more correct in his prose than his poetical quotations; he misquotes thus from the Elegy:—

"In their narrow cells, for ever laid."

This is hard on Gray, and on the reader.

WILLIAM WICKHAM.

Six Months in Meccah: an Account of the Mohammedan Pilgrimage to Meccah.
By T. F. Keane. (Tinsley Bros.)

IT is a wonder that, in this age of imitations, no European traveller has before now, with the exception of the Hon. Mr. Stanley, followed Capt. Burton's great exploit of visiting Mecca during the orgies of the pilgrimage. Not much was to be gained by doing so, except a certain éclat. Burton, through his visit, exposed the whole subject. By his art of disguise, and by his almost supernatural knowledge and powers of observation, he afforded to European students of his time, and, it is to be hoped, of all time, a sufficient account of what the Haj really is. His exploit was something quite unique in the whole history of travel.

At last we have Mr. T. F. Keane in the field—whereby the longo intervallo obtains a new illustration. Apparently, Mr. Keane was in a position little elevated above that which is known in India as the position of a European loafer; and he managed to go to Mecca among the followers of what he calls "a youthful Hindi Amér" from Hyderabad, in the Nizam's dominions. We are not informed who this Amér was; and, though the Preface tells us that the pilgrimage was performed "during the season" 1877-78, further dates are dispensed with—except in one instance—owing to the writer, shortly after reaching Mecca, being laid up with an attack of fever, which caused him to "lose count of time." This is unfortunate, because, when travellers perform unusual feats, an incredulous public naturally wants to know exactly who they are, when they did so, where they started from, who accompanied them, and what were the dates of the ceremonies which they profess to describe. Nor is this an unreasonable demand. There is a certain amount of information about himself and his movements which a traveller is bound to give us—not at all to satisfy curiosity, but, as the newspapers say when requiring the names of their correspondents, as a guarantee of good faith. No doubt a visit to Mecca must be a much easier and safer thing now than it was in Burton's time, before the Crimean War. And it is not inconceivable that a European loafer might manage to get in there now easily enough in the train of an Indian Prince, if he had become a convert to Mohammedanism; or, even without that, if he had such experience of Mohammedan customs as some few of that class of persons have probably obtained. All we say is that Mr. Keane would have chosen well to have given us some means of testing the truth of his narrative.

This is rendered all the more necessary by the character of the book itself. In p. 92 we are told that, at Mecca,

"Imams, muezzins, and nearly all posts [sic] of religious and civil authority, from the High Sherif downwards, are held by Arabs. With them, however, I had no intercourse, nor had I any anxiety to make their acquaintance."

Yet, on the very next page we read that "Many Hindis are in official employ, and hold lucrative, and even important, posts under the Government. There are also a number of wealthy and independent Hindis permanently settled in Meccah, some from religious motives, and a few for political reasons. They occupy also the following positions: readers of the Koran, professors of the law, agents for pilgrims, &c."

By Hindis our author means natives of India as distinguished from the Arabs; and it so certainly new information that they are to be found settled at Mecca in such numbers. It is also difficult to understand how the author escaped all acquaintance with the Arab authorities when we read a long story of his having been publicly stoned in Mecca itself as a Christian; and when he himself says that anyone found to be a Christian would be at once torn to pieces, and that there are many zealators, "many jealous and inquisitive watchers, self-constituted spies, who would soon seal the fate of anyone suspected of insincerity." After such things, it is not surprising to learn that the High Sherif rode, in one of the holiest ceremonies, on an English pig's skin saddle; that a desert Arab produced a dagger, exclaiming "Rodgers!" and that Mr. Keane came upon a hack-street in Mecca, with a large black signboard, on which was written "Lodgings" in yellow letters, and in English. Mr. Keane betook himself to opium at one time, and forthwith experienced those delicious sensations which have been so often described, but which usually follow only from a prolonged use of the drug. He also discovered in Mecca a supposed English lady, whom he calls "the Lady Venus;" and the book ends with what purports to be a semi-official letter about this lady from an Indian magistrate "to the English Foreign Office authorities."

In respects such as these, Mr. Keane's book does add to our knowledge of Mecca; otherwise it does not add to the information afforded by Burckhardt and Burton, and that to be found in the interesting letters which appeared in the Scotsman from Prof. Robertson Smith, who travelled recently in the neighbourhood of Mecca, though he did not attempt the holy city itself. ANDREW WILSON.

SOME MODERN-GREEK BOOKS.

UNDER the title of Popular Meteorological Fables (Δηλώδεις Μετεωρολογικοί Μύθοι), Mr. N. G. Polites, of Athens, who is well known for his researches in folk-lore, has published an essay on the subject of the Greek myths relating to the phenomena of the atmosphere—a branch of the subject which has hitherto received but little attention. In this we find ample illustration of a point to which Mr. Ralston, in his Songs and Tales of the Russian People, has drawn attention as existing in Russia—viz., the connexion of the Prophet Elias in the popular belief with thunder and lightning. This idea originated in the Scriptural statements with regard to his chariot of fire and his calling down fire from heaven. In the Middle Ages in Greece it was believed that, when it thundered, the Prophet was chasing a dragon through the sky; while at the present day the reverberations are supposed to be the rolling of his chariot-wheels. There is also a common belief that lightning chases snakes, which seems to be connected with one part of the legend. The authorities for these statements are given, and evidence to show the existence of similar superstitions among the Bulgarians and Servians. Valuable information is also furnished with regard to the names of the various winds, both those of Italian origin, which are mostly used by sailors, and the native names, which have come down from antiquity. The forecasts of weather drawn from the rainbow in Greece seem to be the opposite of ours, for when it is seen at night it is regarded as portending foul, when in the morning, fair, weather. With respect to waterspouts, we are told that the Greeks who inhabit the southern shore of the Black Sea, when one of these appears, make the sign of the cross with a knife, repeating at the same time certain passages of Scripture, by which means they believe that they cut or break it. In like manner thunderbolts, St. Elmo's fire, rain, storms, and whirlwinds are treated in connexion with the popular fables, and these subjects are illustrated with much learning from the mythology of other peoples. All this will be found interesting by students of folk-lore; but one point may be noticed as of more general interest. The author tells us that his countrymen believe that "donkeys fighting portend rain;" and consequently, by a sensible application of this proverbial saying, when two persons are quarrelling without cause, the bystanders are apt to remark, "There's rain coming!"

THOSE who are interested in translations of Homer, of which so large a crop, in very various forms and styles, has lately appeared in England, will be glad to make the acquaintance of a version of the Odyssey in Modern Greek, by Mr. James Polylas, the first part of which was published at Athens in 1875, and which has been completed this year. The metre that the translator has employed is the long

"political" verse, which is the heroic measure of mediæval and Modern-Greek poetry. In this respect his version may be compared to Prof. Blackie's translation of the Iliad, and to Mr. Morris's of Virgil's Aeneid, in both of which a corresponding metre is used. The diction is that of the old Romaic language, such as is commonly found in the modern ballads; and the use of this, with its half-antiquated and sometimes dialectic forms, has the same effect of imparting a poetic flavour as the employment of rare and obsolete English words in our poetic diction, or as the introduction of epic expressions and Doric and other forms in the choruses of Greek plays. Though perhaps this is a point concerning which it is difficult for one who is not a native to speak with certainty, owing to the rapidity with which the change has passed over the modern language in its transition to the Neo-Hellenic of the present day, so that it is hard to say what words or expressions are really felt to be antiquated. Mr. Polylas deserves all praise for the way in which he has accomplished his task, for his translation is rhythmical, spirited, and well sustained, so that it is very agreeable reading; and it represents the original well—indeed, it follows it as nearly as may be line for line throughout. No doubt in this, as in the English translations mentioned above, the easy run and discursive style of the ballad metre renders it an inadequate representative of the majesty of the hexameter; but the character of the Odyssey causes this to be less felt here than is the case with some other epics. And, after all, the question still remains, What other satisfactory equivalent can be found?

M. MARTINELE, of Corfu, has lately published in that place an ode in Modern Greek on the death of Kanaris, the hero of the Greek War of Independence, and late Prime Minister of Greece (ᾠδὴ εἰς τὸν θάνατον τοῦ Κανάρη), which was composed shortly after the veteran's death in 1877. Judging from the metre, and in part also from the treatment of the subject, we should suppose that the author, in writing it, took for his model Manzoni's Ode on the Death of Napoleon; and he could hardly have done better. The present poem, which consists of sixteen stanzas, is a composition of unusual excellence, and rises to the level of its subject; it bears comparison with Aytoun's fine epitaph for Kanaris (from the German of Wilhelm Müller), which was published nearly thirty years before the death of him whom it proposed to commemorate.

It would appear that historical study is now very active in Greece. From a single number of the Revue Critique we take the following notes:—M. Epam. Stamatiadis will shortly commence the publication of a history of Samos in four volumes, the first dealing with ancient history, the second with modern history from 1475, the third with popular legends, the fourth with law. M. Chadri-Joannu has just published at Salonica, under the title of ἱστογραφία Θεσσαλονίκης, a work giving a full account of the place from the points of view of history, topography, and statistics. M. Romanos, a professor at Corfu, who is engaged upon an elaborate history of the occupation of Corfu by the Angevin kings of Naples, is preparing for publication some important documents from the Neapolitan archives, which throw much light upon the history both of Corfu and of Epirus in the fourteenth century. M. Const. N. Papa-michalopoulos has just published a history of the Areopagus.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. SAYCE's pamphlet on the ancient Hebrew inscription recently discovered at the Pool of Siloam, which is being published by the Palestine Exploration Fund, will appear in a few days. It will contain his copy and translation of the text, together with Introduction and notes. On both palæographical and geographical grounds, the inscription may be dated as early as the age of Solomon; and the topographical notices in it are of great value for determining the early topography of Jerusalem. One of them appears to throw light on the origin of the names of Moriah and Jerusalem. Supporters of de Rouge's derivation of the Phœnician alphabet from that of the Egyptians will find a confirmation of their views in the forms of the characters presented by the inscription.

THE translation of Thucydides by Prof. Jowett is on the point of publication by the Clarendon Press. It is contained in two handsome volumes, of about 1,350 pages in all. Vol. i. comprises the English text, with a marginal analysis, and vol. ii. the notes, to which are prefixed a long and elaborate essay on inscriptions of the age of Thucydides, and some shorter dissertations. Both volumes are supplied with full and well-arranged Indices. The book is intended for the English reader as well as for the scholar. The translator has aimed at presenting his author in a clear and intelligible form. He seems to have thought that obscurity in the Greek should be no excuse for obscurity in the English. It has been often repeated that "translation is a compromise between two languages;" another school is rather inclined to maintain that no translation can be adequate in which the English idiom is in any degree sacrificed to another language, and that this principle is equally true whether the book translated be the New Testament or a Greek classic. The notes are chiefly explanatory, discussing at length the various difficulties of text and interpretation. In balancing different opinions, Prof. Jowett leaves no doubt which of them is preferred by him. The various interpretations of the same passage are carefully rendered by English equivalents; the rendering adopted in the translation is marked by an asterisk. The genuineness of book iii., chap. 84, is stoutly maintained against Dr. Arnold and others; and the suspicion which has sometimes been supposed to attach to book viii. is unhesitatingly rejected. In the essay on inscriptions the writer has endeavoured to show that, while not much can be added from this source to Greek history in the time of the Peloponnesian War, yet a considerable interest attaches to such enquiries as confirming the narrative of Thucydides, and as supplying a curious record of the private life of the ancients. The work is dedicated to Viscount Sherbrooke.

WE understand that Messrs. Macmillan will bring out a new translation of Kant's Critik der reinen Vernunft in honour of the centenary of that work. It will be the first English translation of the original text (Riga, 1781), and the changes and additions of the later editions will be given in the form of supplements. The translation has been entrusted to Prof. Max Müller, and there will be an historical Introduction by Prof. Noire.

THE last two volumes of Mr. J. A. Symonds' Renaissance in Italy have been some time printed, and will shortly appear. They consist of a review of Italian literature from its origin to the middle of the sixteenth century, treated with special reference to the development of national culture in the period to which the whole work is dedicated. The last volume will contain a copious Index to the completed book.

IN his valuable Report on the progress of the Ordnance Survey, which has just been issued, the Director General, Col. Cooke, states that the reproduction of ancient MSS. by photozincography, commenced in 1861, has been continued. A second volume of Anglo-Saxon MSS., including the collections preserved at Westminster Abbey, and at Exeter and Wells Cathedrals, with about twenty other MSS. from other cathedrals and public and private libraries, is now in progress. It will be published with a transcript and translation, made by Mr. W. Basevi Sanders, of the Public Record Office.

WE hear that Mr. Theo. G. Pinches, of the British Museum, is preparing a series of plates of unpublished texts in the cuneiform character. The work will contain bilingual tablets in the Babylonian, Sumerian, and Akkadian languages, as well as many other records of interest and value. It is to be issued from the offices of the Society of Biblical Archaeology.

MESSRS. LONGMAN AND Co. have nearly ready a new work on rural life, entitled Country Pleasures: the Chronicle of a Year, chiefly in a Garden, by Mr. G. Milner. They also have in the press The Marriages of the Bonapartes, by the Hon. D. A. Bingham, author of The Siege of Paris.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH AND FARRAN are preparing to issue in a uniform series, entitled "The Boy's Own Favourite Library of Story, Travel, and Adventure," a number of the best-known books for boys, written by their favourite authors, such as the late W. H. G. Kingston, Mr. G. A. Henty, the Rev. H. C. Adams, M. Jules Verne, and others. The books will be well printed in crown octavo size on good paper, and strongly and elegantly bound. It is proposed to publish one volume a fortnight. The first, which will be ready very shortly, will be Mark Swarthworth, by the late W. H. G. Kingston.

A THIRD edition of Mr. Sydney Buxton's Handbook to Political Questions will shortly be issued. The following new subjects are treated of:—The Three F's, Local Self-government, Business of the House of Commons, Disfranchisement, and London Municipal Reform.

WE learn from the Japan Weekly Mail that the long-expected Handbook for Central and Northern Japan, by Messrs. Satow and Hawes, has made its appearance.

THE last chair vacant at the Mason College, Birmingham, has been filled by the election of Mr. Edward Arber (hon. Fellow of King's College and Assistant Professor of English Literature in University College, London) to the Professorship of English Languages and Literature.

WE understand that two new serial stories will be commenced in the July part of Little Folks' Magazine. The one is a story for girls, entitled "Margaret's Enemy," by the author of "Brave Little Heart," &c.; and the other a tale for boys and girls, by the author of "Roses from Thorns," entitled "The Cuckoo in the Robin's Nest."

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for immediate publication a new work on Waltham Abbey, copiously illustrated with engravings.

THE cathedral church of Cloyne has no memorial of any kind of its great bishop, Berkeley. A project is now on foot, and has already received influential support, to remove this reproach. It is proposed provisionally that a new organ screen should be placed in the cathedral, with a statue of the bishop as its prominent feature. Among the names already on the committee are those of Viscount Middleton, the Bishop of Cork, the Dean of Cloyne, and Prof. Fraser. Subscriptions in aid of the memorial will be gladly received by Dr. Caulfield, librarian of Queen's College, Cork, who is one of four honorary secretaries. A project of this kind ought to find support, not only in Ireland and Great Britain, but also from beyond the Atlantic.

THE month of December has been fixed for the sale of the celebrated Sunderland Library, which consists of the collection formed by Charles third Earl of Sunderland, in the early part of the eighteenth century. The total number of volumes is about 30,000, most of them being in fine old morocco bindings, and many printed on vellum. Among the chief rarities are first and early editions of the Greek and Latin classics and of the great Italian and French authors; a superb collection of early printed Bibles in various languages, including a copy on vellum of the first Latin Bible with a date; many extremely scarce works relating to America; a series of Spanish and Portuguese chronicles; a series of English and French works relating to the political and religious events of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries; &c., &c.

THE new part of our able contemporary, the Anglia, contains, beside several reviews of Chaucer, Shakspeare, English phonetic, and other works, a list of the books and papers on English history, antiquities, literature, grammar, lexicography, &c., published during the years 1877-79. The list is compiled by Prof. Trautmann, one of the editors of the Anglia. As a hint to English authors and publishers who desire publicity for their works in Germany and America, we suggest that they should send copies to Prof. Trautmann, either direct to Bonn, or through Max Niemeyer, Halle-a.-S. Every such work would be mentioned twice, first in the part of the Anglia published next after its receipt, and then in the general two-yearly list, besides having a chance of review in the critical portion of the journal.

WE are glad to learn from the Oswestry Advertiser that the second volume of the Hengwrt MS., left unfinished by the lamented death of Canon Williams, will not improbably be taken up and completed by his friend the Rev. D. Silvan Evans.

M. ALEXIS VESELOVSKY, the author of an exhaustive essay, published in Russia the year before last, on Molière's Tartuffe, has now produced an equally full and conscientious study, also in Russian, of the Misanthrope. Commencing with a psychological analysis of misanthropy, he describes the various haters of mankind whom the world knew before Molière's time, then devotes himself to a discussion of the character of Alceste, and finally chronicles "the literary posterity of the Misanthrope." To Western readers, the most interesting chapter of the work is that which deals with the influence of Molière's drama on the writings of various Russian imitators, and the parallel which is drawn between the parts played by Alceste and Tchatsky in the Misanthrope and Griboyedof's Gore at Uma, or "Wit's Woes."

DR. TANGER, of Berlin, is now in London copying the Cotton MS. of Lydgate's verse englishing of Deguileville's Pèlerinage de la Vie humaine for publication in Germany. Mr. Furnivall has had a copy ready for the press for some ten years for the Early-English Text Society, but ten years more may go by before funds are forthcoming for its printing. In 1871 he quoted from it, in his Trial-Forewords to Chaucer's Minor Poems, the interesting passage in which Lydgate says that "the noble poete off Brytayne, my mayster Chaucer," englished the "noble Orysoun," or "A. B. C." of Deguileville, "in worshipec and in reuerence" of the Virgin Mary. Mr. Hertridge's copy of the Northern prose version of the full treatise is also ready for press.

THE latest news about Hamlet is from Nebraska, where a critic has been proving that Shakspeare's hero must have been a woman!

M. EUGÈNE HALPHEN has recently printed seventeen inedited letters written by Henry IV. in 1605 to the Chancelier de Bellièvre. The impression is limited to six copies! "N'est-ce pas le cas de dire," says a critic in Polybiblion, "à tout ardent bibliophile: Pends-toi Crillon?"

VICTOR HUGO's unpublished work, Les quatre Vents de l'Esprit, will be issued immediately, in two volumes, by the two firms of Hetzel and Quantin. Vol. i. is divided into "Le Livre satirique," and "Le Livre dramatique;" and vol. ii. into "Le Livre lyrique" and "Le Livre épique." They will form vols. xiv. and xv. of the ne varietur edition of the complete works.

A CATALOGUE has just been completed, but unfortunately not put into type, of the additions made to the Bibliothèque Nationale in the department of French local history. This supplement, which covers the period from 1863 to 1877, contains about twelve thousand titles, arranged in the alphabetical order of the places.

THE Revue Critique states that the great undertaking of the Academy of Science at Munich—viz., the compilation of a history of all the sciences in Germany in modern times—is now within a measurable distance of completion. Von Stintzing, of Bonn, has just issued the first volume of his History of German Jurisprudence. His second volume he promises for next year, when also are due History itself and Geology. Classical Philology will come later; and the Science of War, which has been entrusted to Major Max Jaehns, ought to be ready by 1884.

PROF. BLACKIE's little work on Self-Culture has been translated into French by M. F. Pécaut, Inspector-General of Primary Education, and published by Messrs. Hachette.

L'ABBÉ DANCOISNE, who has just published a French translation of The English College of Douai during the French Revolution, is preparing for publication a History of the Religious Establishments of Douai, French and British, which were in existence before the Revolution.

IT is stated that Marshal Macmahon has been putting together his papers with a view to the preparation of an autobiographical memoir, entitled Histoire de ma Présidence, to be edited by one of his former aides-de-camp.

M. HENRI TAINÉ's great work upon the origines of contemporary France consists of two parts. The first part was comprised in one volume, L'ancien Régime. Of the second part, two volumes have already appeared, L'Anarchie and La Conquête jacobine. In his Preface to the latter, M. Taine promises a fourth and last volume, Le Gouvernement révolutionnaire.

WE learn from Polybiblion that M. Lamy, professor in the University of Louvain, is engaged on a critical edition of the inedited works of St. Ephrem, based on MSS. in the National Library at Paris and in the British Museum. The text will be accompanied by a translation and commentary.

M. DE BEAUCOURT has sent to press the first two volumes of his History of Charles VII., ending with the Treaty of Arras.

M. J. LEMONNYER, of Rouen and Paris, is reprinting the finest illustrated French works of the eighteenth century. He has commenced the series with vol. i. of the facsimile reproduction of the Choix de Chansons mis en Musique, par M. de Laborde, first violet-de-chambre to the King and Governor of the Louvre, published at Paris in 1773, with engravings by Moreau, Le Barbier, Le Bouteux, and Saint-Quentin.

AMONG recent Italian publications we notice:—Vol. x. of G. Carcano's translation of Shakepere, containing "Le donne Allegre di Windsor," "La Notte dell' Epifania, o quel che volete," "Commedia d' Equivoci," and "Molto romore per Nulla"; Elegie pompejane, by Prof. S. A. Trillini; an Italian translation of Baron de Beaumont's work on Gino Capponi and his Age; Monete imperiali romane inedite della Collezione Fr. Gnechi di Milano, containing 459 hitherto unknown specimens; Letture di Archeologia indiana, by Prof. A. Gubernatis; Saggi di Economia politica, by Dr. E. Nazzari; La Grammatica ed il Lessico del Dialecto teramano, by G. Savini; and Canti del Popolo Reggino, by M. Mandalari.

THE sixteenth Shakespeare-Jahrbuch contains two contributions by Delius—a lecture on "the Monologu in Shakspeare's Dramas," and a study of "Brooke's Epic, and Shakspeare's Dramatic Poem of Romeo and Juliet;" an article by Oechelhäuser on "Topers and Drunken Folk in Shakspeare;" a lengthy study of "Shakspeare's Medical Knowledge," by Dr. R. Sigismund; exegetical-critical notes by Karl Elze, some of these exhibiting the value of the First Quarto of Hamlet as a source of the text; on "Churchmen in Shakspeare," by Thümmel; on "The Dark Beauty of the Sonnets," by Krause, supporting Massey's view that Lady Rich is the subject of these poems—poems written possibly with an ironical reference to "Astrophel and Stella;" on "Hamlet's Family," by Hermann Isaac—the elder Hamlet being the elder Essex, supposed to have been poisoned by Leicester (Claudius), Gertrude being Lady Essex, afterwards wife of Leicester, and the younger Hamlet having traits in common with Robert Essex (the theory is not new); an interesting article by Frenzel on "Actors of Hamlet;" and a notice by Leo, accompanied by photo-lithographs, of "Shakspeare's Ovid in the Bodleian Library," the signature, Wm. Sh., on the title-page of which Leo believes to be genuine.

Grandpapa's Verses and Pictures, by T. P. M., which was briefly noticed in the ACADEMY last week as "a very nice book for children," is published by Messrs. Griffith and Farran. The illustrations are from the pencil of Mr. R. H. Moore.

A THEBAN HYMN.

(Antigone, 1115-54.)

STROPHE A.

O DELIGHT of the Theban bride! O many titled Child of him who thunders above!
O Lord of famous Italy,
Ruling the rites of Deo
Held in valleys friendly to all!
Thou Bacchus, which art god;
Thou who rol'st Thebae, mother of thy Bacchantes,
Thou a dweller beside
Our full-flood Iamian streams
And fields of armed harvest!

ANTISTROPHE A.

As it burn'd on the twy-topped mount, the shining vapour
Saw thee where the Nymphs of the cave,
The frenzied choir of Bacchanals,
Wander upon Parnassus.
From the ivied Nysian hills.
Rough crag spurs leaf-crown'd.
From fresh green shores clustering with ripe grapevines,
Reels thy triumph along,
Brings thee home with songs, with "Evoé,"
To keep the ways of Thebae.

STROPHE B.

And Thebae, of all towns,
Is most thine own, and is held
Dear to her the thunder slew.
Now the peopled city
To a man lies sick, held within a terrible grip;
O come with healing feet o'er the cleft mountain-slopes,
Or come crossing thundering gulfs Euboean!

ANTISTROPHE B.

O hail, Leader! thron'd first
In the flame-breath choir of the stars!
The voices of the nightly songs,
Son of god, obey thee.
O appear, thou King, Lord of the city, and lead
The rout of Maenads, mad in the dance, all the night,
To shout rousing revel and song to Iacchus!

A. MARY F. ROBINSON.

OBITUARY.

JACOB BERNAYS'S.

BY the death of Prof. Jacob Bernays, of Bonn, Europe loses one who held a unique position among men of letters—a great scholar, a great critic, an intellect of rare fineness and distinction, and a striking and singularly interesting personality. It might be possible to trace a certain resemblance between him and some of the heroes of Greek learning in the sixteenth century; but the parallel would be misleading, for Bernays was essentially a man of the nineteenth century, and indeed seemed to sum up in himself in a remarkable degree all the culture and intellectual experience of our age. What made him at the same time so wholly unlike the men of this age, at any rate in Germany, was his profound religious feeling, a sentiment which often gave a direction to his studies, and imparted an under-current of ethical interest to subjects which in other hands would have been matter for merely erudite research. The son of a Rabbi of Hamburg, he was brought up in the faith of his fathers; and, notwithstanding the worldly disadvantages attending the position, he remained steadfast to the end, "touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless." But, though he was uncompromising in practice, his natural sympathy with whatever is good and noble, and the catholic range of his culture, saved him from any suspicion of moral or intellectual narrowness. He understood better than any of us the religious aspects of ancient Greek life; he delighted to trace the spiritual forces at work in the Greek world to prepare it for Christianity; in his Scaliger he showed that he felt the full meaning of the Huguenot movement; in one of his latest writings he dwelt with timely emphasis on the religious element in Voltaire's character. What he had no sympathy with was a purely negative attitude in matters of religion; the cheap indifference, the anti-religious bias, of the cultivated classes in modern Germany shocked his sensibilities, and combined, with other causes of uneasiness, to make him take a pessimist view of the future of his country. In the Judenhetze, for instance, he saw a sign of a general recrudescence of religious animosities, and of the spirit of intolerance from which his race had so long suffered. His soul revolted at the idea of a "blood-and-iron" policy; the social condition of Germany disquieted him; and he realised, as so few Germans do, the dangers likely to arise from the ever-widening antithesis between the culture of the few and the want of culture of those outside the academical circle, from the politicians at Berlin downwards. It was from a conviction of this peril that he sought to show by actual experiment the possibility of writing learned books which could also be read by any man of fair education. An accomplished translator, he rarely printed a Greek text or extract without a translation side by side for the benefit of the general reader. And instead of neglecting to sacrifice to the Graces, as is the case with so many men of learning, he paid the most scrupulous attention to style, working up whatever he wrote with an elegance of form and finish which a littérateur by profession might have envied. Rightly or wrongly, he was somewhat more hopeful about England than about other European countries. A lively interest in English politics made him a constant reader of our newspapers and Reviews; his familiarity with English literature was astonishing, and he was one of the very few foreigners who are able to understand the charm of Shelley's poetry.

The story of his life is soon told. He was educated first at the Johanneum, the famous grammar-school of his native city, and afterwards at the University of Bonn, then illustrious by the presence of Brandis, Welcker, and Ritschl among its professors. To Ritschl, Bernays, in common with others, owed much; and he was never weary of testifying his sense of obligation to the most eminent classical teacher of our century. On leaving Bonn, he became for a short time Bunsen's secretary and literary coadjutor. In 1853 he was appointed to a post in the Jewish seminary at Breslau; and in 1866 he became extraordinary professor and Oberbibliothekar at Bonn—where he died on May 26, at the early age of fifty-seven. Condemned as he was to spend the best years of his life in a provincial town, in a subordinate academical position, Bernays lived for literature, seeing little of the world except when strangers, more especially Englishmen, made a pilgrimage to the simple apartment in the Franciskanerstrasse to pass an Attic evening in his society. As he was an excellent talker, full of curiosity as well as of information, an evening in his company was a thing to remember. The thought that forces itself on a reader of the writings he has left us is that no man but Bernays could have written them. Other scholars, though assuredly not many, have rivalled him in extent of erudition, and in strictly technical knowledge of Greek he has had superiors; but of Bernays one may say with literal truth that whatever he wrote bears on it the plain stamp of genius—the mark of a strong and creative individuality. His monograph on the Aristotelian theory of Tragedy, produced before he was thirty-three, placed him at once as a literary critic on a level with Lessing. In his Theophrastus on Piety (as also in his Dialogues of Aristotle) he did for a work of literature what a very great archaeologist may do for a work of art—out of the fragments that remain he reconstructed with the sure hand of a master the main outline of a lost original. In his Lucian and the Cynics he gave us a forgotten chapter of ancient religious history; and in his Heracleitean Letters he was able to show that even the epistles fathered by some sorry forger on Heracitus may be made to cast a new light on the moral and religious condition of society in the first century. Bernays, in fact, was a scholar, and also something more—an historian of ancient morals and religion, and, above all, an artist. His aim was to recover and re-create the higher forms of Greek life and thought, and interpret them worthily to the modern world.

I. BYWATER.

WE regret to observe the death at Oxford, by drowning, on June 1 of Mr. J. L. Postgate, Eglesfield Exhibitioner of Queen's College. Mr. Postgate, who was a brother of the newly elected professor at University College, London, had already won the Boden Scholarship for Sanskrit, and a first-class in Classical Moderns. Apart from such honours, he gave promise of becoming a real student in comparative philology.

WE are sorry to notice the death of Mr. Thomas Constable, of Edinburgh, the head of the celebrated printing firm. Mr. Constable, who was in the sixty-ninth year of his age, was the author of the Life of his father, Sir Walter Scott's friend and publisher. An interesting obituary notice of him may be found in the Scotsman of May 28.

THE FIRST PRINTED BOOK KNOWN.

In the Forest of Soignies, in Brabant, there were in the fifteenth century three priories occupied by Canons Regular of the rule of St. Augustin. Of these, history from time to time makes mention—history of art more frequently. It was, for example, to one of them that the famous painter Hugo van der Goes, over whose life and works there hangs so thick a cloud, retired. Here it was that he spent his last days among the kindly friars, who by their singing soothed the hours when the darkness settled down upon his mind. Here, too, as we learn, the great Roger van der Weyden more than once came to stay; and the priory of Groenendaal possessed at all events one picture by the master's hand. Curiously enough it was in a manual made for the use of the novices in this house that the inscriptions written under Roger's famous pictures for the Brussels town hall were preserved, which have since enabled students to identify as copies of them the beautiful tapestries won by the Swiss from Charles the Bold, and hanging to-day in the cathedral at Bern.

The traditions of this society were to some extent artistic, and Roger and Hugo do not seem to have been the only artists who retired into or visited their cloisters. Hence it will not be surprising if future investigation enables us to refer to them some of the productions of the early school of wood-cutters and engravers. The Forest of Soignies lay near to the populous towns of Brussels and Louvain. Religious houses situated in it were used as resting-places by the great men who had to journey past them. They were thus well suited to be centres from which new ideas might radiate.

The Canons Regular devoted themselves not only to religion, but, like the Fratres vite communis, to the spread of learning also. They contained among their number not a few authors famous in their day. Such were Ruysbroeck, John of Schoonhoven, Arnold Gheynloven, and Mark Mastelyn. The last mentioned of these left behind him a book, entitled Necrologium Viridis Vallis, which in the year 1630 a Brussels printer found it worth while to publish. Among other persons mentioned is one Henricus ex Pomerio or Van den Bogaert, in his day Prior of Groenendaal. It is to this man that the reader's attention is more especially directed.*

The principal events of his life may be shortly told. He was born at Louvain in the year 1382 in troublous times; he studied at the university of his native town; and, after earning his degree, he went off to Brussels, and there opened a school. After some time he returned to Louvain, bringing his school with him, and there in due course he rose to a prominent position among his fellow-townsmen, becoming even town secretary. At the age of thirty, however, he appears to have wearied of the turbulence of civic life, and, following the example of many a man desirous of quiet, if not for prayer, at all events for study, he retired from the world and took refuge in the priory of Groenendaal. In 1421 we find him sent as Prior to the neighbouring Convent of Sept-Fontaines, which belonged to the same Order. Ten years later he was raised to the dignity of Prior of Groenendaal, but shortly afterwards was selected to preside over the nuns of St. Barbara at Tirlemont—a position which he held for thirteen years. At length, at the age of seventy-two, and much against his own inclination, he was again elected Prior of Groenendaal. He held the office for the shortest period allowable, and then retired to the solitude and peace of his own cell. He died in the year 1469.

So much for the man. With his numerous works, his controversies with jealous rivals, how he was accused to the Pope, how he defended himself and was acquitted—with all this we have nothing to do. The reader's attention, however, must be called to the names of two books which appear in the list of his writings. They are Explanatio figuralis super Pater noster descriptio and Spiritualc Pomerium, cum figuris. Recent investigation has shown that copies of these books are to this day in existence; and not only so, but that they are the earliest books printed from engraved blocks of wood to which a date can be assigned among those which are known to have come down to us. So far our work has been somewhat dull; but let the reader take heart, for before leaving him we hope to be able to discover a fact not unimportant.

The Explanatio figuralis proves, as we shall hereafter show, to be identical with a block-book known as the Exercitium Super Pater Noster, the only copy of which, in its original state, is preserved in the Public Library at Mons. It was included among the early books recently brought together in the Gallery of Retrospective Art in the Exhibition at Brussels. Unfortunately, the last two leaves are wanting—the remainder of the book is in the most perfect state of preservation.

It is a folio volume of the same dimensions as the rest of the block-books, and when complete it consisted of five sheets. These are only printed on one side; the other side remains blank. The sheets are not gathered up into a quire, one inside another, but sewn one by one into the cover, so that in turning over the leaves the first page is blank, the second and third contain printed matter, the fourth and fifth are blank, and so on. In books printed in this fashion it was not uncommon to paste the blank sides together two by two, and then the volume resembled one printed in the later manner on both sides of the paper.

The impressions were taken, not from a forme composed of type, but from engraved blocks of wood, the whole of a single sheet being taken from one block. For the printing of the book, five such blocks were required, each containing the matter of two consecutive pages.

The contents of the pages are all similar. In a compartment across the top of each are four or five lines of wood-cut Latin text,* commencing with a sentence from the Lord's Prayer, and then proceeding to point out three points worthy of attention in connexion with it. The centre of the page is occupied by a wood-cut illustrative of these three points, below which, in another compartment, are some Flemish verses freely translated from the Latin lines above.

All the cuts in the book present certain features in common. The first shows us the brother—the author of the book—seated on a bank outside the priory, in the midst of the forest. A stag is seen among the trees behind. The brother is engaged in meditation, and, a scroll falling from his lap, shows us the direction of his thoughts; it bears the words, "Domine, doce me orare." To him there comes an angel in white robes, with a small tablet on his arm; he says: "Veni, docebo te pater noster." The figure of the angel is graceful, and his robes are light; his hair hangs in rich curls about his head; his face is mild, and, in some degree, even beautiful. The brother looks up at him with more expression than we usually find in faces in early wood-cuts. His attitude is for the rest both natural and easy; there is a certain dignity in the flow of his garments, and an air of quiet and repose breathes about him.

These two figures—the brother and the angel of prayer—appear in each of the ten cuts. The angel shows to his companion groups or incidents illustrative of the clauses of the Lord's Prayer, and explains them to him, indicating the three points especially worthy of remark.

It was long ago known that the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris possessed a copy of a MS. entitled Exercitium super Pater Noster, and illustrated with wood-cuts. This was, not without reason, considered to be the writing of Henrick van den Bogaert. More recent investigation has shown that such may not be the case. The prints which are pasted into the MS. are impressions from the very same blocks as those from which the Mons block-book—the real work of Henrick—was printed; but the blocks are in a later state. The portions of them on which the Flemish verses were carved have been cut off before these impressions were taken. The Paris MS., therefore, represents the same cuts in a second state.

But there is a more noticeable difference still between the block-book and the prints in the MS. in the manner in which the impressions are taken. The reader will probably know that in the very earliest days of printing, long before the invention of moveable types, impressions from a wood-cut block were taken, not by means of a press, but by rubbing the back of the sheet of paper while it was in contact with the block. The block was, first of all, thoroughly wetted with some form of watery ink, and then the sheet of paper, well damped, was placed in contact with it and held down, while the operator carefully rubbed the back of it either with his hand, with a brush, or with some kind of burnisher. The ink employed for this purpose was always of a light brown tint. Owing to the wetness of the paper and the amount of rubbing which was necessary to produce a clear impression, the back of the paper often bears almost as clear an image of the block as the front; and the lines of ink lie in deep furrows, which, in many cases, remain clear when the ink itself has faded.*

But the discovery of printers' ink, an ink the vehicle of which was a greasy substance, and the possibility of thereby taking impressions by simple pressure, created a complete revolution in the methods of printing. It led to the immediate introduction of the printing-press, and thenceforward systems of rubbing, brushing, or burnishing were laid aside. The invention of printing-ink bears the same relation to the history of printing which that of oil-colours does to the history of painting. It does so in this manner. When once a printer had had experience of the use of the more advanced method, he would be quite certain never to recur to the old one. On the other hand, it is not to be supposed that the new invention would spread like an electric flash over the whole country at once, though it may be assumed that it would not be long in becoming generally known.

Now, whereas the Mons block-book is printed in light brown water-colour ink by means of rubbing, the prints in the Paris MS. are taken in black ink, and give, so far as I could see, no

* A MS. in the Bibliothèque Royale at Brussels, (No. 11974), entitled Gazophylacium Sognianum sive historio sacra nemoris Sogniae, gives a full list of twenty-eight of Bogaert's writings. It was from this volume that Sanderns took his information. See for this and for other facts connected with Bogaert, M. Ruelens' learned monograph on the Pomerium Spirituale in the Documents iconographiques et typographiques de la Bibliothèque Royale de Belgique.

* For example, the text above the fifth cut is:—"Fiat voluntas tua sicut in celo et in terra. Hic nota in seculo tres vivorum defectiones. Primo habencium voluntates adhuc fractas quales sunt infideles. Secundo habencium perversas, quales sunt mali christiani. Tercio habencium imperfectas quales sunt boni. Et quia voluntates in celo sunt omnes integre, recte et perfecte ideo ut sic in terra fiat ora ut supra et ce."

* It will be seen that it was impossible to print on both sides of a sheet of paper by this method.

indications of having been rubbed, but rather pressed or rolled against the wood block. Owing to their being pasted down at the corners, it is not easy to be certain of this; but, so far as can be seen, they give every evidence of the use of some sort of printing-press.

As we shall hereafter see, the MS. must have been produced before 1440, and hence we find the date, resting upon certain evidence instead of conjecture, for the group of block-books to be before 1440.

So far we have spoken only of the Exercitium; but the Pomerium Spirituale mentioned among the works of Henrick van den Bogaert has also come down to us in a mutilated form, and it is by means of it that we discover the very valuable date for these volumes. It exists in the form of a MS. illustrated by cuts preserved in the Bibliothèque Roysale at Brussels, and in all respects similar to that of the Exercitium found at Paris. Each volume consists of a single six-sheet quire in folio. In both cases one side of a sheet is occupied by a wood-cut, printed in black ink, while the opposite page is filled with MS. text. The writing is nothing but a somewhat verbose amplification in Latin of the short wood-cut legends which appear on the cuts. In the case of the Pomerium the writer of the MS. seems also to have been its author, probably some Groenendaal monk who took the Prior's little book as his text, and proceeded to write a commentary on it; or possibly he may have been the Prior himself. The Paris Exercitium is equally obviously a copy by the hand of a scribe taken line for line from a volume written by someone else. This is shown clearly enough in one case, where the copyist has turned over two leaves of the volume he was copying instead of one, and has therefore written the wrong lines opposite to a certain cut. He has found out his mistake after a word or two and corrected it, drawing his pen through them and starting afresh.

The two MSS., therefore, are twins, as abundant confirmatory evidence might be adduced to prove. The style of the design of the cuts, of the execution, of the wood-cut letters, of the treatment of the subjects, and of the MS. is the same in both; they are the work of the same hands—author, wood-cutter, printer, commentator—and they must belong to the same date.

By carefully measuring the prints in the Pomerium MS., and making allowance for compartments containing Flemish text, such as those we saw were cut off in the case of the Exercitium, we find that the blocks of the former were exactly half the size of those of the latter, and that the original block-book edition of the Pomerium must have formed a quarto volume. Such a volume I have nowhere been able to discover, but that it has existed there is ample evidence. We are therefore quite prepared to credit the statement of Dumortier* that he had seen the Pomerium cuts united in a small volume unaccompanied by MS.

The subject of the Pomerium Spirituale is, as its name implies, allegorical. A maiden, representing one of the twelve virtues, is discovered kneeling at the foot of one of the twelve trees of the spiritual orchard—the symbols of the Divine attributes—receiving the fruits of the tree. The twelve maidens form subjects for meditation for the twelve hours of the day. In connexion with each of the maidens is represented and described one of the incidents of the sacred history, past or future, serving to exemplify that attribute which is the real subject of the picture. Each print is similar in its general design to all the rest. The little maid kneels, sits, or stands, as the case may be, under a tree on the left, among the branches of which, on a scroll, is the name of the attribute. Three apples, the fruits of the tree, lie on the ground beside her. Behind her is a scroll containing the words which she addresses to her heavenly Spouse. Other inscriptions, in different places, explain the scene. The right and centre of the cut are occupied by the event from sacred history. The names of the three fruits are engraved in three lines in a compartment at the foot of the cut.

Lastly, the MS. text of the Pomerium distinctly informs us twice over that the author of the book was Henricus ex Pomerio, a canon regular of the monastery of the Blessed Virgin of Groenendaal. Twice over we are told that the book was finished in the year 1440.* To this year, therefore, we must refer both MSS., though that of the Exercitium may have been produced a year or two earlier or later. Both the block-books must be dated before 1440.

We cannot finally quit this subject without casting a passing glance at the style of the execution of the wood-cuts. It is the same in both books; they are obviously the work of one hand, and may be treated together. The most marked feature is the constant employment of long pointed lines, placed closely side by side, to shade large spaces, especially as a sort of relieving shadow to detach the figures from the ground. The shade is for the most part unpleasantly flat. The faces and features are very similar in style to those which appear in that most finished of all the early wood-cut books—the Ars Moriendi. But such is not the case with the hair, which is much less carefully arranged by the Groenendaal artist. The head, however, of the kneeling maiden is sometimes very pretty, with its pointed forehead, simple attitude, and quiet look, the hair being wavy and light. The real fault of the cuts lies in the masses of gridiron shade, which spoil their effect and add nothing to their meaning. Considering, however, their early date, and the difficulties with which the artist must have had to contend, it must be allowed that he has attained an excellence of finish in the arrangement and shaping of his lines of no low order.

To sum up, then. The conclusions which an examination of these volumes enables us to assert are as follows:—Some time before the year 1440, Henrick van den Bogaert wrote a little work entitled Spirituale Pomerium. He employed some artist living in the neighbourhood of the priory of Groenendaal, and possibly one of the brothers themselves, to engrave it upon blocks of wood with accompanying illustrations, from which impressions might be taken by the recently introduced process of printing. Nor was this the only work of his so treated, but about the same period there appeared, in a similar but larger form, the Exercitium super Pater Noster by the same author and artist. At a later time, in the year 1440, the former, and probably both books, were taken in hand again, it may well have been by the author himself—the blocks were trimmed by the removal of the Flemish portions of the text, now no longer required, and impressions were taken from them by a more advanced process of printing. The prints thus made were pasted into a volume of blank paper, pages being left plain for the addition of a MS. commentary of a more extensive kind than that admitted by the limited space available on the cuts themselves.

* The author's name occurs in red at the end of the Preface. Further on we read, "Editum est hoc spirituale pomerium per fratrem Henricum ex pomerio canonicum regularem professum in monasterio beate Marie viridis vallis." On the last page is written, "Explicit spirituale pomerium editum anno domini m^occ^oxl^o;" then follows a prayer of eight lines; and then, "Explicit est sup. spirituale pomerium editum et completum, Anno domini m^occ^oxl^o deo gratias."

The earliest printing-press, therefore, to which both a date and a locality can at present be assigned was used near Groenendaal, in the forest of Soignies, in the province of Brabant, before the year 1440. While it is to be hoped that further investigations may enable us to group together other block-books as the productions of the same press, it is quite possible that they may reveal to us the existence of other centres of printing activity at dates considerably earlier.

W. M. CONWAY.

DURHAM CATHEDRAL.

WE quote the following from the presidential address delivered by Canon Greenwell at the annual meeting of the Archaeological and Architectural Society of Durham:—

"There was another subject of very great importance which they, as an architectural society, had to do with. They were in danger of losing their cathedral. He did not mean to say it would be blown up by dynamite, or destroyed by any means so sudden; but the work of destruction was quite as effective and quite as certain in the end. The cathedral was gradually crumbling away. He had observed that many of the mouldings had lost now their sharpness by this crumbling process, and anyone could scrape off much of the surface of the stones with his hands. This destruction was going on over the whole of the cathedral; and unless it was stopped, and no measures had as yet been taken to do so, it would in the course of years prove destructive to great portions of the building. This was very much to be deplored, and they might naturally ask what was the cause of it. It was by exposing the surface of the stone to the action of the atmosphere. The stones had been covered for many centuries with whitewash, and when this was removed some sort of wash ought again to have been applied. A wash of lime of a better quality than the ordinary whitewash might have been used. At present the stone was liable to two destructive actions—one from the stoves and the other from the gas. There could be no question whatever that the stoves and the gas were working in a very injurious manner upon the stones deprived of their protection of whitewash. Under these agencies the stone was constantly being disintegrated; and, unless that action was stopped, before long the building would be seriously damaged. This was a subject of the very deepest importance. He did not know that they had any power to do anything; but he trusted that the subject would be brought before the attention of the cathedral authorities, and that they might take such steps as persons might be qualified to form an opinion about it. There was another form of destruction taking place in the cathedral, and that was the formation of a salt upon the surface of the stone. This had been going on for a great number of years in the Dean and Chapter Library, and by this action the mouldings put in about twenty-six or twenty-eight years ago were decaying away. He took it for granted that what was taking place in the library would also take place in the cathedral itself. He had seen it himself, small crystals of a sort of salt upon the surface of the stone."

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- ARNOLD, E. L. On the Indian Hills; or, Coffee-planting in Southern India. Sampson Low & Co. 21s.
 ARNOLD, T. A Method of Teaching the Deaf and Dumb Speech, Lip-reading, and Language. Smith, Elder & Co. 15s.
 AVENARIUS, T. Historischer Festzug, veranstaltet bei der Feier der Vollendung d. Kölner Domes am 16. Octbr. 1880. 1. Lfg. Leipzig: Koehler. 10 M.
 BROCKHAUS, H. E. F. A. Brockhaus, sein Leben u. Wirken. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 10 M.
 CHAMPIER, V. L'Année artistique. 1880-81. Paris: Quantin. 7 fr. 50 c.
 CHIROL, M. V. 'Twixt Greek and Turk. Blackwood.
 CREIZENACH, W. D. Bühnengeschichte d. Goethe'schen Faust. Frankfurt-a-M.: Later. Anstalt. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 CUST, R. N. Pictures of Indian Life. Trillicker. 7s. 6d.
 DESJOURS, L. Le Château de Versailles: Histoire et Description. Paris: Bernard. 25 fr.
 EDWARDS, H. Sutherland. The Lyrical Drama. W. H. Allen & Co. 21s.
 FITZGERALD, J. F. V. Australia. Sampson Low & Co. 3s. 6d.

* Dumortier—"Notes sur l'imprimerie" in the Bulletins de l'Académie royale de Belgique, tome viii., 1841.

- GARNIER, C. Le Nouvel Opéra de Paris. Texte. Vol. II. Paris: Ducher.
- LANG, A. The Library. Macmillan. 3s. 6d.
- LEGOUT, A. Le Suicide ancien et moderne. Paris: Drouin. 5 fr.
- LISTA, Ramon. Mis Exploraciones y Descubrimientos en la Patagonia 1877-80. Buenos Aires. 10s. 6d.
- LONG, J. Eastern Problems and Emblems, illustrating Old Truths. Trilbner. 6s.
- MIGNATT, M. A. Le Corrège, sa Vie et son Œuvre. Paris: Fischbacher.
- RECURIL des Discours, Rapports et Pibces diverses lus dans les Séances publiques et particulières de l'Académie française 1870-79. 2^e Partie. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 12 fr.
- ROCHEFORT, H. Les Naufrageurs. Paris: Rouff. 3 fr.
- ROLLETT, H. Die Goethe-Bildnisse, biographisch kunstgeschichtlich dargestellt. 1. Lfg. Wien: Braumüller. 8 M.
- SHEPHERD, R. H. Bibliography of Thomas Carlyle. Elliot Stock. 6s.
- STATISTIK, schweizerische. Die Bewegung der Bevölkerung in der Schweiz im J. 1879. Zürich: Orell, Füssli & Co. 4 M.
- URTON, R. D. Gleanings from the Desert of Arabia. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 10s. 6d.
- VILLAIN, A. Restauration du Temple de Marc-Aurèle (le temple de Neptune). Paris: Firmin-Didot. 70 fr.
- VIRGILI, A. Francesco Berni. Napoli: Detken & Rocholl. 7 fr. 50 c.
- WILMOT-BUXTON, H. J. German, Flemish, and Dutch Painting. Sampson Low & Co. 5s.

THEOLOGY.

- CALDERWOOD, H. The Relations of Science and Religion. Macmillan. 5s.
- MILLIGAN, W. The Resurrection of Our Land. Macmillan. 9s.

HISTORY.

- DROYSSEN, J. G. Friedrich der Grosse. 3. Bd. 10 M. 80 Pf. Geschichte der preussischen Politik. 5. Thl. 3. Bd. 10 M. 80 Pf. Leipzig: V. v. T.
- DUCLOS, H. Histoire des Ariégeois. Paris: Didier.
- DUMICHEN, J. Die kalendarischen Osterfest-Listen im Tempel v. Medinet-Habu. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 30 M.
- EMIGRATION et Chouannerie: Mémoires du Gén. Bernard de la Frégétière. Paris: Lib. des Bibliophiles. 10 fr.
- JAFFE, Ph. Regesta pontificum Romanorum. Ed. 2. Cura-verunt S. Loewenfeld, F. Kaltenbrunner, P. Ewald. Fasc. 1. Leipzig: V. v. T. 6 M.
- LASCAR, M. de. Mémoires sur les Assemblées parlementaires de la Révolution. T. 2. Convention. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 3 fr. 50 c.
- NIEDNER, F. Das deutsche Turnier im 12. u. 13. Jahrh. Berlin: Weidmann. 2 M.
- PAJOT, Le Comte. Les Guerres sous Louis XV. T. 1 (1715-39). Paris: Firmin-Didot. 12 fr.
- SAALFELD, G. A. C. Julius Cäsar. Sein Verfahren gegen die gallischen Stämme vom Standpunkte der Ethik u. Politik. Hannover: Hahn. 80 Pf.
- SAIGO, G. Les Juifs du Languedoc antérieurement au XIV^e Siècle. Paris: Picard.
- SIMPSON, W. S. Chapters in the History of Old St. Paul's. Elliot Stock. 7s. 6d.
- SOUVENIRS de la Flandre wallonne, Recherches historiques et choix de Documents relatifs à Douai et aux anciennes Provinces du Nord de la France. Paris: Dumoulin. 4 fr.
- STEINROFF, E. Jahrbücher d. Deutschen Reichs unter Heinrich III. 2. Bd. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 12 M.
- THIRIAS, M. Discours parlementaires de p. p. M. Calmon. T. 10 et 11. Paris: C. Lévy. 15 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BREFFELD, O. Botanische Untersuchungen ü. Schimmelpilze. Untersuchungen aus dem Gesamtgebiete der Mykologie. 4. Hft. Leipzig: Felix. 20 M.
- CUMMINS, A. H. A Grammar of the Old Friesic Language. Trübner. 3s. 6d.
- DAVIES, J. Hindu Philosophy. Trübner. 6s.
- GRAHAM, W. The Creed of Science, Religious, Moral, and Social. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 12s.
- SCHULZING, W. BAKUNIN, H. V. Die Regenverhältnisse in Indien, nebst dem indischen Archipel. u. in Hochasien. 1. Thl. München: Franz. 2 M. 80 Pf.
- SCHMITZ-DUMONT, O. Die Einheit der Naturkräfte u. die Deutung ihrer gemeinsamen Formeln. Berlin: C. Duncker. 4 M.
- SULLY, Jas. Illusions: a Psychological Study. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 5s.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- EURIPIDES' Medes, ed. A. W. Verrall. Macmillan. 7s. 6d.
- KOBAN, der, nach dem arab. Orig.-Mscr. v. Ali Abkafi geschrieben v. Hafiz Osman (im J. 1094 der Hedschra). Phototypograf. Reproduction. München: Franz. 30 M.
- POLAK, H. J. Ad Oxyseam eiusque scholasticas. Fasc. I. Leiden: Brill. 6s.
- RUTHERFORD, W. G. The New Phrynichus. Macmillan. 18s.
- UNTERSUCHUNGEN, philologische. 2. Hft. Zu Augusteischen Dichtern. Berlin: Weidmann. 2 M. 40 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

KELTIBERIAN COINS.

St.-Jean-de-Luz: May 30, 1881.

Señor Sanpere y Miguel, editor of the Revista de Ciencias Históricas, writes to me that there is a proposal afloat to invite "numismators" to a conference on Keltiberian and other coins of ancient Spain, to be held in Madrid in the autumn. It seems to me that something might really be done with the Keltiberian inscriptions by a congress of experts discussing the several theories and methods of interpretation. Any wishing to promote the scheme may write to Señor Sanpere y Miguel, Asalto 42, Barcelona.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

THE MEANING OF "ÆSTEL."

London: May 25, 1881.

I agree with Prof. Zupitza that Ælfric's gloss indicatorium fully confirms Lye's (or, rather, Junius') explanation, as he will see in the forthcoming edition of my Reader, where I have referred to the gloss in question, although the difficulty of the size and weight of the æstel still remains. It may also be added that if æstel meant "cover," it would have to be in the plural. My expression of approval was meant to apply to Körner's connecting the word with astula, and his rejection of the derivation from Germanic ast.

H. SWEET.

"THE FIELDS OF GREAT BRITAIN."

In the review of this work in your issue of 14th inst., the statement, that the per-centage of lime in volcanic rocks, soils, and plant ashes varies between 0 and 90, should be that this per-centage occurs in the soil alone. As the per-centages given on p. 22 evidently relate to the soil only, a similar mis-statement is made in the next quotation.

HUGH CLEMENTS.

Mr. Clements' protest does not improve his position. He should have consulted some chemical friend before writing such a note as the above. His table of the constituents of "volcanic rocks, soil, and plant ash" (p. 22) is so constructed that the words and figures under "Per Cent." necessarily refer to all three subjects of analysis. Three lines quoted from his remarkable table will prove this assertion:—

"Volcanic Rocks. Soil. Per Cent. Plant Ash.
Lime Lime .. from 0 to 90 0 Lime.
Phosphorus P₂O₅ ... , 0 to 15 P₂O₅."

Mr. Clements even now does not perceive that no rock or soil could contain as much as 90 per cent. of lime, white statuary marble not giving more than 56 per cent. Ho puts here, though not always elsewhere in his book, lime for carbonate of lime, while in the same table he employs magnesia for the base itself, not for its carbonate.

THE REVIEWER.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- MONDAY, June 6, 5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.
- 7.30 p.m. Education Society: Discussion, "Science Teachings in Intermediate Schools."
- 8 p.m. Aristotelian: "Comte and Spencer," by the Rev. F. G. Fleay.
- TUESDAY, June 7, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Thomas Carlyle," by Prof. H. Morley.
- 8 p.m. Society of Biblical Archaeology: "Recent Discoveries of Mr. Rassam at Abu-habba," by Mr. T. G. Pinches; "The Recently Discovered Pyramid of Pepi at Sakkarah, VI. Dynasty," by Dr. Birch; "Description of Mentuhot," by Prof. E. L. Lushington; "Was Phankhia Synonym for Sebakt?" by Mr. H. H. Howorth.
- 8.30 p.m. Zoological: "Development of the Skeleton of the Elasmobranchs," by Mr. E. M. Balfour; "Notes on a Collection of Persian Reptiles recently added to the British Museum," by Mr. W. T. Blanford; "A New Spider of the Family Theraphoridae," by the Rev. O. P. Cambridge; "The Structure of the Pharynx, Larynx, and Hyoid-Bones in the Epmophori," by Mr. G. E. Dobson.
- WEDNESDAY, June 8, 8 p.m. Geological: "The Reptile Fauna of the Gosau Formation," by Prof. H. G. Seeley; "The Basement-beds of the Cambrian in Anglesey," by Prof. T. McK. Hughes; "Description and Correlation of the Bournemouth Beds, Part II. Lower or Freshwater Series," by Mr. J. S. Gardner; "Description of a New Species of Coral from the Middle Lias of Oxfordshire," by Mr. E. Tomes.
- 8 p.m. Microscopical: "Some Unusual Developments of the Axial Canals of Sponge Spicules and their Meaning," by Prof. F. Martin Duncan.
- THURSDAY, June 9, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Tourgenieff," by Prof. C. E. Turner.
- 4.30 p.m. Royal.

8 p.m. Mathematical: "The Gaussian Theory of Surfaces," by Prof. Cayley; "A System of Co-ordinates, disclosing an Extension of all Non-metrical Properties of Conics to Circular Cubics and Biquadratic Quartics with Collinear Foci," by Prof. Genese; "A Theorem in the Calculus of Operations," by Mr. J. J. Walker; "Certain Symbolic Operations," by Mr. J. W. L. Glaisher.

8.30 p.m. Antiquarian.

FRIDAY, June 10, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Origin and Identity of Spectra," by Prof. Dewar.

8 p.m. Quckett.

8 p.m. New Shakespeare.

SATURDAY, June 11, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Nekrasoff," by Prof. C. E. Turner.

8 p.m. Physical: "The Hardening of Steel," by Prof. W. Chandler Roberts; "Curves of Electro-Magnetic Induction," by Mr. W. Grant.

SCIENCE.

"ENGLISH PHILOSOPHERS."

Bacon. By Thomas Fowler. Hartley and James Mill. By G. S. Bower. (Sampson Low.)

PROF. FOWLER'S name is a sufficient guarantee that the brief account of Bacon given in this series will not suffer from any want of painstaking. It may be said that it is not well for men who are capable of serious work to spend time and trouble on primers and popularisations. But the question is, in a certain sense, decided by the demand for elementary works when they are written by well-known authorities; and this little volume (pp. 202) seems to have had as much trouble bestowed on it as if it were of five times the size. The view of Bacon is a complete one, in that every aspect of his philosophical writings gets due recognition—his moral philosophy, for instance, no less than his reforms in method.

But the defects inseparable from brevity come out strongly in the sketch of Bacon's life. It is too short and dry; it does not make us feel at all that we know the man. This is the more to be regretted, because the plan of Prof. Fowler's large edition of the Novum Organum precluded an account of the life there. Nevertheless, Prof. Fowler has decided opinions upon the vexed questions of that life. Following Mr. Spedding's version of the facts, he thinks that Bacon's conduct to Essex may be justified; he extenuates, without excusing, his taking of gifts from suitors; and his summing-up is as follows:—

"I cannot refrain from expressing an opinion that his memory has most unfortunately and unjustly suffered from the apparent contrast between his life and his works having so easily lent itself to the artifices of epigram. . . . The story of his life, it must be confessed, is not altogether what the reader of his works would have desired, but the contrast has been so exaggerated as to amount to a serious and injurious misrepresentation" (pp. 26, 28).

Prof. Fowler refutes, also, by quoting many very non-Machiavellian sayings, the notion of Dr. Abbott that Bacon derived his opinions on polity and morality from Machiavelli (pp. 41-45).

It is easier to impart some idea of a system, especially of a logical system, than to give the picture of a character or of a life, within a short space; and the account of Bacon's survey of the sciences and of his reform of scientific method, occupying the greater part of the book, seems likely to be of considerable service to those who will not, or cannot, read the author himself. The only point we have noticed as not perfectly clear is the use of the term "demonstration" in one or two places.

It is employed on p. 98 to translate a well-known passage of the Novum Organum, Book i., Aphorism 69:—"Demonstrations, indeed, are potentially systems of philosophy and science." That this is Prof. Fowler's deliberately chosen rendering appears from the notes on Aphorisms 61 and 69 in his edition of the Novum Organum itself; but we cannot help thinking that something like "methods of proof" would more exactly express what Bacon meant. The English meanings of demonstration are many and loose; but it ought in strictness to signify something like ἀποδείξεις, and the context in Aphorism 69 alone shows how far Bacon was from that meaning. We feel the same slight sense of incongruity in reading, on p. 112, of "carrying up an effect to its cause . . . by a chain of demonstrative reasoning."

The present generation seems to be getting every year more out of sympathy with the philosophical views of Hume and of Hartley as developed by James Mill and others. Nevertheless, the philosophy of that school is by no means dead yet; and, when the laws of the evolution of phenomena cease to be attacked by writers ignorant of natural history and of the physical sciences, perhaps the metaphysics of evolution may begin to be called in question by followers of Hume. But whether as a reminder to a forgetful age, or as an incentive to a necessary criticism, a hand-book of the association psychology is welcome; and this, or something very like it, is the most appropriate description of Mr. Bower's volume. His plan is to analyse fully the views of his authors, with a running criticism which contains a good deal of his own matter, and is by no means merely that of the 1869 edition of James Mill compressed. If the student must use such aids at all, he can hardly do better than read Mr. Bower. Still, he will want something else; for Mr. Bower, though he keeps his head wonderfully in the intricacies of the subjects discussed, has not the faculty of drawing a bold and firm outline or giving a general view.

His bibliographical appendix of elucidatory and other works deserves honourable mention, although we miss both there and in the body of the work any account of Hartley's and Mill's relation to Hume. The historical place of Hartley is given thus:—

"The vibration theory was suggested, as Hartley tells us, by Newton's hints as to the relation between motion and sensation, just as, on the intellectual side, the association theory was suggested by Locke and Gay; and, as a medical man and student of physical science, Hartley saw no reason why an ingenious combination of the two should not be effected. It is easy now to see why such an hypothesis in his time could be nothing but the merest guess-work, since, even at the present day, its lineal successor, the doctrine of "neural tremors" and groupings, under the auspices of such able exponents as G. H. Lewes and Dr. Maudsley, does not advance the association theory much, which is far better left to stand on its own legs as the expression of an ultimate psychological law" (p. 27).

Mr. Herbert Spencer's theory of the propagation of molecular disturbance along nerve-matter (Principles of Biology, § 302) deserves notice here quite as much as the "neural tremors," as being an attempt to affiliate psychological upon physiological laws.

Mr. Bower has a keen eye for difficulties, and, though most of his topics are well worn, contrives to present them in a fresh light. He points out clearly that great difficulty in the way of Hartley's school, presented by the interlacing of memory and the consciousness of self, which Prof. Edward Caird, too, dwelt on when Mr. J. S. Mill first republished his father's work (ACADEMY, November 13, 1869). But, if Mr. Bower is keen-sighted, he is assuredly not sympathetic towards Hartley and Bentham and Mill. The raising of objections is indeed a public service; but, to speak of their terminology as barbarous and slovenly is perhaps unnecessary, and lays Mr. Bower open to some sharp retorts. The chapter on the aesthetic doctrines of Hartley and Mill is left incomplete by the passing over of that interesting theory of poetry found in James Mill's Analysis, chap. vii., to which Mr. Bower makes only the most fleeting allusion in another place. Lastly, we fully believe that he is not justified in his repeated sneers (pp. 22, 206) at the education which the elder Mill gave his son. It was not "lamentably deficient in physical training," if we may trust the very detailed accounts published by Prof. Bain in Mind, vol. iv.

FRANKLIN T. RICHARDS.

Akkadische und Sumerische Keilschrifttexte. By Paul Haupt. (Leipzig: Hinrichs.)

DR. HAUPT is one of the ablest of the scholars who have applied themselves to the decipherment of the Assyrian texts. Trained in the school of Curtius and Brugman, he has had the advantage of making himself acquainted with the method of comparative philology, as well as with the newest results obtained in the field of Indo-European research. His first work on Assyrian—published in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society—showed a rare combination of acuteness and learning, and formed a valuable contribution to comparative Semitic grammar. Since then he has principally devoted himself to the study of the Accadian texts; and we owe to him the elaboration of the important discovery that these texts contain two entirely separate, though closely related, dialects—that of the Accadians of Northern Babylonia, and that of the Sumerians of the South. In conjunction with his teacher, Prof. Friedrich Delitzsch, he has now undertaken the publication of an "Assyriological Library," the two first volumes of which are at the head of this review. They consist of a series of bilingual Assyrian and Accadian and Sumerian texts carefully copied from the originals in the British Museum, where Dr. Haupt spent a large part of last year, together with explanatory notes and a list of the principal cuneiform characters, as well as their usual values. The most important part of the first volume is a list of the characters, compiled from various fragmentary syllabaries now in the British Museum. In this there is a good deal that is new, besides corrections of errors in the copies of the texts previously published. The second volume is confined to Accadian texts and their Assyrian translations; this, I presume, will be followed by a volume of Sumerian texts. The text in it most interesting to me is a hymn to the god Nineb, or Adar—the Assyrian pronunciation of his name is altogether doubtful—which is here published for the first time.

The texts are edited throughout with scrupulous exactness, and are therefore of high value to the student who is beginning the study of the Accado-Sumerian language, or is unable to consult the originals for himself. They are to be soon followed by a periodical devoted to Assyriology and entitled Beiträge zur Assyriologie, the first two numbers of which are already far advanced towards publication. It is high time that Assyrian should have an organ of its own; but it is only in Germany—where the importance of the new study has been recognised by the foundation of two chairs, and where at Leipzig Prof. Delitzsch has gathered round him a band of zealous workers—that it could well be expected to appear. English scholarship, it is true, was the first in the field of decipherment; English enterprise has mainly opened the buried libraries of Assyria and Babylonia; and it is in England that the greater part of Assyrian literature is to be found. But having done thus much, we are content to do nothing further. Oxford will give no encouragement to Assyrian research; and it is accordingly to Germany and France, and not here, that we have to look for a flourishing school of Assyrian scholars, and for fresh discoveries in the history, the religion, the culture, and the languages of the ancient East.

A. H. SAYCE.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES.

THE last lecture of this course was delivered on May 31 by Mr. Rhys Davids. The lecturer did not announce the title of his subject. He evidently intended the lecture as a kind of supplement to the others, and touched upon several interesting topics not noticed in his previous discourses. He remarked that five lectures had only enabled him to approach the fringe of a great subject; that he had, by reason of the comparative aim of the lectures, only taken up a few of the many interesting points connected with his subject; that he had left unsaid things far more important than what had been said. How little could be done to trace the growth of Christianity in six lectures! The progress of Buddhism was no less difficult to treat of in a limited course. Christianity, it has been said, remains unchanged; this could be true only of the mere words and forms of words; the sense that was attached to them was ever changing. Buddhism, too, as far as regards its order and discipline, is still the same. Its sacred texts containing the word of Buddha are unaltered:—

"As a clod cast into the air doth surely fall to the ground,
As the death of all mortals is sure and constant,
As the rising of the sun is certain when night has faded,
So the word of the glorious Buddha is sure and everlasting."

The study of later Buddhism, to which scholars like Bigandet, Hardy, Beal, and others have given much attention, was second only in importance to early Buddhism. Many modern writers unfortunately derived their ideas of the early creed of Gotama from the later development of it—about as absurd as going to the works of St. Augustine or Calvin for the original teaching of the founder of Christianity. The lecturer then compared one phase of later Christianity with Lamaism, one of the modern forms of Buddhism as seen at the present day in Thibet. The older sangha had there developed into a sacerdotal Order, with its pope, abbots, inferior clergy, ritual, idols and relics, shrines, pilgrims, &c. It was a mistake to take a contemptuous view of either of these later developments; both had been instrumental in the work of civilisation.

Mr. Davids then touched upon works illustrating the history of Northern Buddhism. He attached very little importance to the assertion that the Lalita Vistara was admitted into the Buddhist canon at Kanisha's council 350 years after that of Asoka. The Thibetan version edited and translated by Foucaux existed in the sixth century B.C. How much more ancient the Sanskrit original may be is altogether uncertain. It presents only a later form of Buddhism. There are four Chinese works about a century earlier that have titles similar in meaning to the Lalita Vistara; hence, it is argued that the Lalita Vistara is earlier than these so-called translations, which are not, however, proved to be such. Mr. Beal has translated a Chinese work with titles of chapters similar to those in the Pāli Dhammapadu (verses about the Dhamma). Misled by this apparent likeness, he calls the Chinese work "Dhammapada." In spite of names, the two works are altogether different. The Northern work omits the great bulk of the verses found in the Pāli one. To call them one is as great a blunder as it would be for a publisher to call a new hymn-book Hymns Ancient and Modern, because his work contained some few selections from this earlier collection. No Chinese book had as yet been found to be a translation from any Sanskrit work.

Mr. Davids then turned back to primitive Buddhism, and remarked that its founder laid down a practical rule of life falling into three great divisions:—(1) a system of lower morals (pañcasiḷa) binding on every Buddhist (laity and clergy); (2) a system of higher morality binding upon the mendicants of the Order: it included the first; (3) a system of self-culture, including and going beyond the first and second, and leading to arahatship and to Nirvāṇa. What we call morality was included for the most part in the lower morality.

The lecturer then touched upon the Noble Eightfold Path, reckoned as one of the "jewels of the law" and included in the magga-bhāvaṇā. Connected with this Path were fetters, veils, and hindrances that were to be removed and to be overcome. This led to a consideration of Nirvāṇa, which meant the extinction, not of desires, but of sinful cravings; it involved the cultivation of right desires. Arahatship, said the lecturer, was a kind of insight of which there were seven kinds. The most important of all these was the knowledge (1) of impermanency, (2) of inherent pain, (3) of the absence of an individuality or self in the confections or component things. Mr. Davids compared this belief in impermanency, &c., with the doctrine of "justification by faith." He showed that, in the Upanishads, belief in union with Brahma came before rites and ceremonies—that is to say, faith was put before works. The Buddhist system did not hold the upanishad doctrine of union with any supreme spirit: men and gods—all existing things—conformed to the law of impermanency; nothing was abiding.

The lecturer concluded with some few remarks upon the moral tendency of this belief. He did not think it was destructive of real hope and true unselfishness.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

THE Council of the Royal Geographical Society have determined to cause an entirely new and revised edition to be prepared of their useful manual, entitled Hints to Travellers, the fourth edition of which is almost exhausted. They have recently appointed an editing committee to superintend the work, consisting of Mr. Douglas W. Freshfield, Col. Godwin-Austin, and Mr. J. K. Laughton. The General Index to the fourth set of ten volumes of the Society's Journal, announced in the ACADEMY of April 30, is now published; and the second supplementary catalogue of the library is in the printer's hands.

COL. C. E. STEWART, who has lately returned from Tejed, has brought with him much valuable information respecting that part of Central Asia, as well as material for the construction of a map. It may be hoped that the obstructive traditions of the India Office will not interfere with his enlightening the public on the subject of this almost unknown region.

Two young Baptist missionaries have just accomplished a notable feat of exploration on the Congo. When Mr. Comber made his last and unsuccessful attempt to reach Stanley Pool from San Salvador by way of the Makuta towns, two of his comrades, Mr. Crudgington and Mr. Bentley, started for the same destination along the north bank of the Congo. As their journey was only of a preliminary nature, they were in light marching order, and had with them very few carriers and stores. After about three weeks' hard travelling, they arrived at Stanley Pool, which Mr. Comber had vainly endeavoured for some eighteen months to reach by the other route. Want of provisions, of course, prevented a lengthy sojourn; and after examining both banks of the river and visiting M. de Brazza's station, they returned to Vivi. Mr. Stanley's station below the Yellala Falls, where they arrived early in March.

MR. O. CATTLEY is actively engaged in organising a service of vessels in this country to trade with the Ob and the Yenisei Rivers. It is not likely, however, that this project will be in working order before next summer, as it is necessary to provide suitable barges to bring the wheat, &c., down the rivers from the interior. A Danish company has also been formed for trading with the same region through the Kara Sea.

CAPT. CAMBIER, who founded the first station of the International African Association at Karema on the east side of Lake Tanganyika, has lately returned to Belgium, and has been presented by the Geographical Society there with a gold medal in recognition of his services to geography in East Central Africa.

CAPT. GALLIENI, whose surveying expedition from the Senegal to the Niger we have before alluded to, was detained for many months near Segou-Sikoro on the latter river by the Sultan Ahmadu; but he has at length been allowed to leave, and arrived on April 10 at Medina, a French post on the Senegal. After its various misfortunes, his expedition has been very successful on the whole, as he has not only surveyed and added largely to our knowledge of the region traversed, but has secured important and exclusive commercial advantages for the French on the Upper Niger.

PÈRE DELORME, who went with M. de Brazza up the Ogowé at the end of last year, on his return journey made an excursion up the Ngunié affluent, where he found many eligible positions for stations. In his recent letters from the Gaboon, giving details of this journey, he sends some useful information respecting the various tribes on the banks of the Ogowé, from the sea to the upper course above the falls.

THE death is announced of M. Stahl, a botanist, who had lately gone up the Ogowé with M. Mizon to take charge of one of M. de Brazza's stations in Western Equatorial Africa.

The Statistical Atlas of England, Scotland, and Ireland. By G. Phillips Bevan. To be Completed in Fifteen Parts. Parts I. to V. (W. and A. K. Johnston.) The maps of this atlas published up to the present time deal with the religious condition of the people, education, industries, criminal statistics, and pauperism. As an example of the manner in which the author has dealt with his subject, we may take the map "illustrating the criminal condition of the people." Here various symbols are employed to show convict prisons, industrial schools for boys and girls, reformatories, industrial school-ships, prisons, assize towns, petty sessional divisions, and boroughs having separate quarter sessions or commissions of the peace. In addition are given the number of the police, of persons committed for trial, of known thieves, and of prisoners in convict prisons. These figures are absolute, and not proportionate to the population; and hence we conceive that the author fails to illustrate the criminal condition of the people. His map ought to have shown at a glance those parts of the United Kingdom in which criminal offences are most frequent, and where they are least so; and his letterpress ought to have furnished an explanation of the phenomena thus conveyed by him in a graphical manner. Still, although this atlas does not come up to our ideal of what a statistical work of this kind ought to be, it contains a considerable amount of useful information.

M. J. KÖRÖSI, Director of the Municipal Statistical Office of Pest, explains, in a pamphlet (Plan du Dépouillement du Recensement de la Ville de Budapest), in what manner it is proposed to publish the facts ascertained in the course of the last Hungarian census. The information collected on that occasion is far more comprehensive than that obtained through our own census, and the authorities at Somerset House would do well to pay some attention to what is being done in foreign countries.

THE June number of Good Words contains a first paper on Tunis by Mr. Ralli Stenning, which is very acceptable just now. We hope that a subsequent instalment may deal with the port of Bizerta, to which so much attention has lately been called.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH AND FARRAN are about to add another volume to their "Geographical Readers," by J. R. Blakiston, entitled Early Glimpses, introductory to Glimpses of the Globe. It is intended to bridge over the gap between the object lessons of infant classes and the elementary geography of more advanced classes, and to assist teachers in training children to habits of observation and enquiry—the earlier chapters being arranged with a view to implant a taste for physical, the later for commercial, geography.

SCIENCE NOTES.

The Smithsonian Institution.—Anthropology always forms an important feature in the work of this Institution. The Report for 1879, which we have recently received from Washington, contains several valuable papers on this subject, collected in the shape of a "General Appendix," which follows the Report of the secretary, Prof. Spencer F. Baird. One of the most notable features in this Appendix is an anthropological bibliography for the year 1879, carefully compiled by Prof. Otis T. Mason. The papers are classified under the heads of anthropogeny; prehistoric, biological, and psychological anthropology; ethnology; linguistic and industrial anthropology; sociology proper; and the science of religion. Under these several heads, about 550 papers are registered; and, in addition to this list, there are eighty-eight publications catalogued under the title of "The Instrumentalities of Research." It is obvious that, if such a record can be kept up year after year, it will prove indispensable to students engaged in working out anthropological problems.

M. OCTAVE DOIN has just published the first livraison of a Dictionnaire des Sciences anthropologiques, which numbers among its contributors many of the first Continental savants in anthropology and the allied branches of science.

AN important addition to surgical literature is announced under the title of The International Encyclopedia of Surgery, of which Messrs. Macmillan and Co. will be the English publishers. The editor-in-chief is Dr. John Ashhurst, Professor of Clinical Surgery in the University of Pennsylvania, and among his coadjutors are some of the most distinguished surgeons of France, Germany, Austria, America, and England. The work will be complete in six large volumes, the first of which may be expected in October, and it is intended to issue the succeeding volumes at as nearly as possible regular intervals of three months. Vol. i. will contain contributions from Drs. Verneuil, of Paris; Stricker, of Vienna; Kraske and Volkmann, of Halle; Johnston, of Baltimore; Lyman, of Chicago; Delafield, Lewis Smith, and Van Buren, of New York; Agnew, Brinton, Gross, Hunt, Hunter, and Stillé, of Philadelphia; Wales, of the United States Navy; Mr. Butlin and Dr. Mansell-Monller, of London; and the editor.

AMONG their forthcoming scientific works, Messrs. Longmans and Co. have nearly ready Essays on the Floating Matter of the Air, in Relation to Putrefaction and Infection, by Prof. Tyndall; and a fourth edition of Webb's Celestial Objects, revised and adapted to the present state of sidereal astronomical science. The same publishers announce as preparing for publication an important work on the Marine Steam-Engine, by Mr. Richard Sennett, Chief Engineer, R.N.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

AT a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, M. Bréal read observations upon the etymology of some Latin words. "Imperium" he derived from in and a verb paro, meaning "to buy," connected with the Greek πράσσω, but to be distinguished from paro, "to appear." "Annona" is originally the name of a goddess, derived from annus, as Pomona from pomum, and Bellona from bellum. "Sponte" is the ablative of a forgotten noun, spons, connected with the Greek σπένδω, the change of thought being shown in the following lines of Vergil (Aen. iv. 340, 341):—

"Me si fata meis paterentur ducere vitam Auspiciis, et sponte mea componere curas."

"Sedulus," "proportio," and "proprius" are all three compounded of a preposition governing a substantive, "sedulus" being se-i.e., sine-dolo; "proportio" being pro portione, as the French, like ourselves, have formed a new word out of prorata and pervert: "proprius" being pro privo. "Splendeo," which with its derivatives is the only word in Latin (except splen—"the spleen") beginning with spl, M. Bréal would derive from splen, the order of ideas being seen in Horace's expression—splendida bilis.

DR. CARL JEURICH, of Halberstadt, has published a dissertation on "Die Mundart des münchener Brut."

THE last quarterly number of the Revue de Linguistique is occupied chiefly with the Basque. Prof. Vinson prints some inedited fragmentary, but valuable, remains of a work on Basque grammar by Sylvain Pourreau, in 1660. He next republishes, with copious and excellent comments, the letters on the Early Basque vocabulary which appeared in the ACADEMY in August last. M. Luchaire follows with a careful paper on Basque names in Latin mediæval charters. The Bohemian war-song of Jean Ziska is given, with a French version and notes, by A. Dubois; and Prof. Vinson translates a specimen of a modern poetical legend from the Tamul. Lastly, P. Sébillot discourses pleasantly on sea-fish in folk-lore.

THE Oriental Academy of Belgium is about to commence the publication of a Revue Critique Internationale, to be edited by Mgr. de Harlez.

O. LOTH, Professor of Arabic at the University of Leipzig, who died recently at the age of thirty-seven, has left behind him an edition of that portion of the Tabari which contains the Life of Muhammad. For this edition he had collated himself the MS. of the Tabari at Constantinople. We learn from the Revue Critique that it will now be published, being passed through the press by Dr. von Jong.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—(Tuesday, May 24.)

MAJOR-GEN. A. PITT-RIVERS, F.R.S., President, in the Chair.—Mr. E. H. Man read a paper on "The Arts of the Andamanese and Nicobarese." After exhibiting and describing the new objects from the Andaman and Nicobar Islands comprised in the second collection recently presented by him to Gen. Pitt-Rivers, he gave a slight sketch of the aborigines of the former group. He stated that they are divided into at least nine tribes, linguistically distinguished, and in most, if not all, of these there are two distinct sections—viz., inland and coast men. In confirmation of this statement, Mr. Man read a translation he had made of an account obtained in 1876 from a member of the inland branch of the Awko-jūwai tribe, inhabiting a portion of Middle Andaman, regarding their habits and mode of life, the details of which had since been fully corroborated. In many mental characteristics affinity to the Papuans would appear to exist; and the standard in social and marital relations is shown to be far higher than could be expected from a race so entirely outside the pale of civilisation. The previous accounts of their laxity in this respect are now proved to be erroneous. They have no forms of religion, or ideas of worship; and, though they have faith in a Supreme Being, the Creator, their belief in the Powers of Evil is much more strongly developed. The habitations of the eight tribes of Great Andaman are of three varieties, partaking almost invariably of the nature of a simple lean-to; while those of the remaining tribe, Jarawa-(da), are somewhat similar in form to the huts erected by the Nicobarese. The rights of private property are recognised and respected; there also appears to be a fair division of labour, and perfect equality between the sexes in their social intercourse.—Dr. Allen Thomson, F.R.S., read a paper on "Some Bone Necklaces from the Andaman Islands." Several of the specimens exhibited were constructed entirely of human bones, while some were composed of bones of various animals, and others were partly made up of pieces of coral.—Mr. J. Park Harrison, M.A., exhibited an incised slate tablet and other objects from Towyn. The figures upon the slate appeared to represent celts, urns, &c.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.—(Wednesday, May 25.)

CHARLES CLARK, Esq., Q.C., in the Chair.—Mr. C. Pfoundes read a paper on "The Popular Literature of Old Japan," in which he gave an account of the ancient classical, poetical, middle-age, and modern literature of Japan, with the romances, folk-lore, and dramas, &c., current in that country. Several specimens of Japanese compositions were read in the vernacular, and translated; and the Chinese written character, as used in Japan, was explained. A number of specimens of Japanese books and drawings were exhibited, as well as photographs, in illustration of various Japanese customs.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.—(Anniversary Meeting, Monday, May 30.)

MAJOR-GEN. SIR H. C. RAWLINSON, K.C.B., President, in the Chair.—The council and officers for the ensuing year were elected:—President, Sir T. Edward Colebrooke, Bart., M.P.; Director, Sir H. C. Rawlinson; Vice-Presidents, Sir E. C. Bayley, Sir H. C. Rawlinson, Sir Richard Temple, Bart., Col. Yule; Council, E. L. Branderth, Sir Barrow Elliot, James Fergusson, Sir Bartle Frere, Bart., Col. Keatinge, V.C., Lieut.-Col. T. H. Lewin, Gen. MacLagan, J. W. McCrindle, Major Mockler, H. Morris, Col. Sir Lewis Pelly, Maj.-Gen. Sir Arthur Phayre, the Lord Stanley of Alderley, Lieut.-Gen. Sir H. E. Thüillier; Treasurer, E. Thomas; Secretaries, W. S. W. Vaux, H. F. W. Holt; Hon. Secretary, R. N. Cust.

FINE ART.

THE SALON OF 1881.

(Third Notice.)

IT is hardly necessary to say that La Source—by M. Henner—is a single figure of a woman, detached on a dark brown and green background, with a rift of blue sky showing through the thick branches above her head and reflected in the little pool of water at her feet; nor is it necessary to add that the painting of the flesh—both in this work and in the study of an aged and bearded man lying on his back, which M. Henner has christened Saint-Gérôme—is of the same masterly quality, and that the modelling shows the same habit of abstract calculation—one had almost said the same mannerisms—as of old. For habits do tend to become mannerisms—even the habit of making, as does M. Henner, a highly scientific summary of the facts of Nature, when the said summary never includes any new facts, but only formulates afresh—with, perhaps, some slight differences of relative position—those which it has already presented to our admiration. And thus we grow ungrateful to M. Henner, even for the splendid tone, which is ever of the same quality, and obtained by the same calculations; ungrateful even for the plenitude and vigour of his flesh painting, the beauty and certainty of his modelling; we grow fretted by the trick of repetition, and weary of a skill, consummate in its way, which holds no surprises in reserve. Yet those who love paint for paint's sake will always be able to forget in the play of M. Henner's brush his indifference to definite excellence of line, and his curious incapacity for composition, and will be able to take a sincere, if limited, pleasure in the perfection of his art. Admirable painting, too, is to be found in M. Morot's La Tentation de Saint-Antoine—a subject susceptible of infinite variety of treatment; handled frankly by the vagabond fancy of Callot, although illustrated by the coarsest incidents, the result is less indecent than M. Morot's offensively suggestive version. The strong hand which gave us last year Le bon Samaritain here again shows its power; and perhaps there is no better piece of work in the Salon in its way than the figure of the woman who is—not seducing St. Anthony. The pretty reflections and carnations of the flesh-painting are as noteworthy as they were in M. Morot's previous work, and infinitely more appropriate. The helpless distress of the Saint on his paillason is touched with real, if vulgar, humour; and the whole is clever, comic, and canaille to the last degree. In the same room with the work of M. Cabanel's able pupil, hangs M. Henri Martin's Peinture décorative. M. Jean-Paul Laurens has evidently found in M. Martin a nature peculiarly susceptible to his influence, and yet M. Martin's work seems to promise a distinctly individual talent. It looks as if he appreciated the force, gravity, and sobriety of his master's genius to the full; while, at the same time, tempted by a strain of poetic aspiration to try a class of subject less material and positive in aspect than those which are habitually chosen by M. Laurens, and to seek for means of appeal to the imagination which he has always steadily renounced. Yet no page ever unfolded before us by "le peintre des morts" could be more austere in character than that in which his pupil shows Death refusing the embrace of desperate Youth—youth for whom life has in store its most precious gifts, which are seen in a golden vision beyond the skies. The story is so well told that we do not need the verse from de Musset inscribed upon the frame to explain it and reveal the identity of the "affreuse ghoulé," the terrible lady of death who, draped in long garments of mourning, issues from the thicket on the right in answer to the passionate appeal of the lad, who kneels with arms wide outstretched to receive her. M. Martin's execution shows, also, that he has learnt much from his master; he has, of course, much yet to learn. His chief merit is, perhaps, that of promise; and it is rather because I think the promise which he gives is of a decidedly personal character than because his picture is in itself exceedingly remarkable that I have noticed it at length.

M. Maigron has chosen, as the attractive theme of his this year's contribution, the lovely lines in which Dante describes his meeting with Matilda, the "lady beautiful," set in prodigal variety of the "tender maybloom, flush'd through many a hue," who appeared to the wondering eyes of Dante and his guide as they passed through the forest of the terrestrial Paradise. The deep violet and strong russet robes of the two men—who pause in reverent admiration of the woman, whose looks are "warmed with Love's own beam"—tell in the darker half of the picture, as they stand in the foreground to the left. Behind them, above their heads, under a clear sky, we see the little winding path by which they have come; at their feet, the little brook, whose rippling waters bend the grass. Standing on the rocks at its brink, as on a pedestal, is seen the white-robed figure of Matilda, and all about her is a rosy cloud of blossom. The moment which M. Maigron has chosen is not that in which Dante first catches sight of her as she "went alone singing and gathering her flowers," but that in which she turns and listens to his appeal, and approaches the stream which divides them, that he may hear her song, as Carey's version has it:—

"Upon the opposite bank she stood and smil'd;
As through her graceful fingers shifted still
The intermingling dyes, which without sed
That lofty land unbosoms. By the stream
Three paces only were we sunder'd."

But what has M. Maigron done with Statius? When Dante and Vergil met Matilda they had a third in their company—Statius, who joined them as they quitted the purgatory of the avaricious, and who, being cleansed and on his way to Paradise, remained with Dante even after Vergil had left his charge in the hands of Beatrice. The suppression of his figure in the group to which Matilda appears casts an air of unlikelihood over the whole scene, and makes it almost unrecognisable in the eyes of those to whom the Divina Commedia is familiar, and who would otherwise be charmed by M. Maigron's graceful presentation of the lovely dame whom the Lord had made glad. While M. Maigron dwells on the spiritual and mystic aspect of passion, M. Ferrier, in Printemps—Panneau décoratif—gives us a frank exposition of Ronsard's verses:—

"Tandis que votre âge fleuronne,
En sa plus verte nouveauté.
Cueillez, cueillez votre jeunesse;
Comme à ceste fleur la vieillesse
Fera ternir votre beauté."

M. Ferrier's wonderful dexterity of manipulation lends itself happily to work of this description. His troop of girls come curving down the road, their hands full of flowers, their fluttering draperies of pale yellow, and blue, and rose passing into pale rose and white, and telling near the russet and gray robes of the last to issue from the little thicket above, which makes a mystery of foliage in the right-hand corner. The movement of the girl in gray, who turns, as she comes forward, to call on her unseen companions, has something very graceful and almost noble in its character; and graceful is the leading figure of the band—at whose side presses a much younger little maiden, and who offers a flower with half-compassion, half-coquetry, to the old Academy model, sitting lazily in the foreground, and regarding her gift with a nonchalant air of comic deprecation. The bright sky seen through the branches of the left is a pretty relief to the light, gay hues which predominate throughout. But the general effect is a little marred—in spite of M. Ferrier's great skill in combinations of this character—by the crudity of certain passages of colour; as, for instance, the blue which is contrasted with the yellow draperies of the principal figure, with the ugly green of the bramble branches in the foreground. The use of this particular green—as may be recollected in Mr. Dicksee's Harmony—is, of course, a trick by means of which great brilliancy of effect is obtained at a given distance; but it is never very satisfactory, as, except at the particular point of view for which it is calculated, this hue invariably tells false. M. Ferrier's second contribution, the portrait of M. Claudius Popelin, hanging in the Salon d'Honneur, is also noteworthy, as showing the brilliant dexterity of M. Ferrier's brush. The little bit of coloured design for an enamel on the table contrasts with equal justness and force against the leaves of the book in M. Popelin's hand; and, if the painter's interpretation of his subject misses the deeper signs of life, he gives us, at any rate, a marvelously sure surface reading.

M. Boulanger's clever pupil, M. Bompard, seems to have been studying M. Munkacsy in his Début à l'Atelier, and thus challenges a comparison which cannot be to his advantage, for it is easier to imitate the simple scheme of colour which M. Munkacsy affects than to command the experience and skill which put life and nature on the canvas. There is a want of simplicity, a certain amount of pose, about M. Bompard's personnages which prevents one from feeling—as one ought to feel—that the scene which he depicts happened exactly as he depicts it. The owner of the atelier in which the début in question takes place is seated, with his back to us, in front of his easel; he is about to paint a Japanese picture. One model—a young girl in full costume of purple spotted red, and a broad yellow sash—is stretched on a couch covered with a Persian carpet in the centre; in the shadow, to the left, is seated a middle-aged woman. She has brought for inspection another and younger girl, who undresses with an awkward and unpleasant air of consciousness. The whole ground of the subject is made up of warm tones—tapestry on the walls, tawny felt and tigerskin on the floor; but the blues in the Persian carpet break up the monotony of these tints, and are repeated in the trousers of the painter, whose brown coat has great importance in the arrangement, telling, as it does in the foreground, against the gay hues of the Japanese dress of the girl on the couch. The stuffs, throughout, are better executed than the nude; and the work, taken as a whole, gives an impression of solidity and strength which evidences the possession of considerable power, if of a second-rate quality. M. Löwe's Pythouisse is also a work showing great power, but of a wholly different order. The Pythoness, exhausted by a fit of inspiration, lies back outstretched in a great gray marble chair; her deep purplish-gray draperies have escaped from the golden belt about her waist, and slip to the ground, winding in a sinuous coil about her limbs. The background is clear golden above her head, and the rose-tinted marble columns on the right give much beauty and value to the prevailing grays and purples. The execution, if not carried very far, is extremely vigorous and effective, and shows much of the strength and breadth of handling proper to the work of M. Löwe's able master, M. Luminais. La Charmeuse, by M. Trouillebert, is attractive at first look. There is something fresh and suggestive about the quality of the paint, and the way in which the flesh tints of the charmeuse—who is exercising her powers upon a very vicious-looking snake—are relieved against the white-washed wall, beneath which she has spread her seat with yellow furs. This white is ingeniously broken up by patches of red brick, telling in convenient points where the wash has been rubbed off; but the figure of the charmeuse herself looks to me an insufficient piece of work.

There are many well-known names which, even in this brief notice, must not be forgotten. Adrien Moreau has forsaken his usual beribboned smartness to paint Bohemians encamped under a ridge of heath and rocks above, which shows the crescent moon. The red kerchief on the head of a wild girl, who sings and plays to the swarthy band grouped on the ground before her, tells against the sky, the sole spot of colour—repeated only in the cap of one of the men—in the dull neutral tints of the picture. M. Chelmonski has sent a study on a vast scale—a study of an immense void plain in which a single thistle breaks the barren monotony; to the right there is just a glimpse of water—one recalls the shores of the Balaton See; in the centre, thundering down upon us, are four horses driven onwards by a mau wearing white, which is made conspicuous by the darker garb of his companion. This work lacks the variety and interest of his smaller subjects; it is too big for its emptiness, but, as a study, is a remarkable piece of work. M. Loir also sends a larger work than usual; and the sky of his Giboulées is well worth attention, so full of air it is, and so much does it enhance the truth of the general aspect. It is in just those qualities of light and air that the sky of M. Billel's Glaceuses is deficient; there are some charming things in the figures, but the horrible heaviness of the clouds prevents the naturalness of outdoor effect, and seems to deprive the conspicuous cast shadows of the glaceuses of their proper quality. Jules Breton, who still stands chief of all those who deal with this class of subject, sends this year only a single half-length study, L'homme de l'Artois; the head is modelled in open-air light and relieved against the sky; the drawing of the mouth, which is full of mobility, is remarkably skillful. There is a charming sketch of fisher-girls, too, by Feytaud-Perrin, La Pêche à Pied, Souvenir de Cancale; and the figure which he has christened Astarté shows a pretty movement, prettily thought. M.

Feyen-Perrin has, indeed, a great deal of taste, and his work is invariably fresh, only, when looking at it, one is always inclined to ask if it is not easy to be fresh in a sketch. Now, there is a small painting, Les Orphelins, by Mr. Hawkins—a new name in the Salon—which has much of the freshness which attracts at first sight, but which also bears examination. His subject—orphans visiting a newly made grave—is just one which requires the finest sense and feeling in its treatment if it is to appear neither sentimental nor melodramatic. It is a great thing that Mr. Hawkins has been proof against these weaknesses; and his strong and quiet execution, which is in perfect harmony with the directness and gravity of his conception, has enabled him to render the situation with the touching charm of perfect simplicity and truth.

E. F. S. PATTISON.

LA SOCIÉTÉ DES AQUARELLISTES.

MESSRS. GOUPIIL'S pleasant rooms change as a kaleidoscope. It seems but the other day since the Gloom of Idwal and the rest of Mr. Herkomer's brilliant harvest of the year covered the walls now hidden by the first exhibition in England of the French Society of Painters in Water-Colour. Meanwhile, a charming collection of Dutch water-colours have come and gone. One of these—a sweet, sad figure of a girl watching the sea—we pass as we enter the changed rooms, where Blommers has given way to Heilbuth, and Bisschop to Leloir. It is a change generally from gray skies to blue, from grave to gay, from the world of every-day to that of fancy, from sentiment to wit.

As water-colourists, Frenchmen are but making a début; but it is the début of skilful artists in oils and in black and white. Such technical practice as has been necessary to make them expert did not need a long novitiate; and a Chevallier and a Doré working in water colour instead of oil produces the same effects with more transparent colours. There is, perhaps, another difference in the colours—that of purity. There is a brightness and freshness of tint about these aquarelles which is often wanting in French work. Judged with English water-colour exhibitions, the superiority in the drawing of the figure and the limited range of the landscapes are, perhaps, equally palpable.

It is to Maurice Leloir that the chief honours are due. By him are the dainty card of invitation and the clever group overlooking a portfolio which forms an appropriate decoration to the title-page of the luxurious catalogue. One of the many perfect photogravures with which Messrs. Goupil have enriched this beautiful volume is taken from the same artist's Enlisting—a masterly group of two old soldiers plying a recruit with liquor before a village inn. This is perhaps the most notable work here; but the palm is disputed by two works of Louis Leloir—one called Retreating, also engraved in the catalogue, and the other Without Mercy, in which a beautiful woman is pleading her cause before a stern officer, who, with one eye shut, is regarding her with cold-blooded apathy. On either side of her stands a soldier, as pitiless as their commander, who, with his lieutenant, is seated at a table piled with large gold pieces. The cruel story is admirably told. Heilbuth has some of his admirable compositions of quiet landscape and picturesque figures; and Gustave Doré some mountain scenes marked by his usual sense of immensity and striking effects of light. For intensity of colour, and for the completeness with which the unattractive individuality of each is worked out, J. G. Vibert's Executioner and Spanish Dancer are remarkable; and his power of more elaborate composition and discrimination of character is shown in Rouge et Noir. There are so few drawings here that do not merit distinctive praise that it is impossible to do more than mention generally the works of other artists. Among these, the exquisite painting and pleasant humour of Chevallier, the fine studies of Détaille, L. E. Lambert's kittens, and C. O. de Penne's dogs. Jules Worms' brilliant scenes from Spain, Linder's charming studies of piquante beauty, de Beaumont's pretty fancies and frivolities, and Jacquet's dashing sketches will be sure to meet with just admiration. Nor can the strong but unattractive realism of E. Duez, the studies of Maxime Claude in Hyde Park and Trouville, the graceful and brilliant groups of flowers and fair ladies by Mdlle. Lemaire, the bold bright views in Venice by Mme. la baronne Nathaniel de Rothschild, or the classical compositions of V. Pellet be passed without recognition of their merit. A portrait of Miss Samary by Bastion-Lepage will shortly be added to this exhibition, to the pleasures of which J. L. Brown, E. Ciceri, Henri Dupray, E. Yon, and E. Lami also contribute.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

OBITUARY.

WE regret to record the death of the highly esteemed landscape painter Samuel Palmer, which occurred a few days since at his home in Surrey at the age of seventy-five years. Samuel Palmer belonged, not only by his years, but likewise by his method in art, to another generation than ours. His landscape was far more imaginative than imitative. It is said that of late years he looked but seldom at nature; and it is certain that the traditions of his school, to which he remained faithful, made far more of the virtues of composition than of fidelity to fact. Samuel Palmer, who in his youth knew Blake, and who was allied for many years with Finch—a landscape painter of quite the old school—was above all things poetical. Among landscape painters he was, if not peculiar, at all events to some extent exceptional, in being inspired very much by works of literature. Milton was his favourite poet, and the Penseroso and the Allegro his favourite poems. Palmer retained his faculty to the last, or, if during some years there had been some little decline, his recovery this year was incontestable; one or two of the noblest drawings he has ever produced adorn the present exhibition of the Old Society of Painters in Water-Colours. Palmer was likewise an impressive etcher. It is true that there was much in his etchings that did not answer to what has been of late years put forward by some etchers as the especial aim of etching; his work was quite unlike brilliant sketching. It was elaborate, finished, poetical, sometimes even artificial as his water-colour drawings.

THE death is announced at Stockholm of F. Scholander, the first of Swedish architects. Born 1816, he studied at Paris under Lebas, where he had for fellow-pupils MM. Ballu and Garnier. The city of Stockholm owes to him most of its modern monuments, and also the restoration of its old buildings. Besides being an architect, he also wrote poems, which he illustrated with his own pencil. But his best-known work is upon art in Egypt, Persia, and India. At the time of his death, he was Director of the School of Fine Art at Stockholm and a corresponding member of the French Institute.

GÉRARD FLATZ, a pupil and follower of the great German painter, Peter von Cornelius, has recently died at Bregenz, at the age of eighty-one.

ART SALES.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON, AND WOODS held last Saturday a sale of modern pictures which proved remarkable for the merit of the works and the prices obtained. The Woodcutters, a landscape by John Linnell, was knocked down to Mr. Agnew for 490 guineas; the Trent Side, one of the most important landscapes ever painted by Creswick, sold for 2,000 guineas (Thomas); one of the late Paul Falconer Poole's most striking designs, illustrating the arrival of the messenger to Job announcing the death of his servants, went for 700 guineas. But these prices were as nothing compared with those realised by one or two of the reputed masterpieces of Sir Edwin Landseer, whose humorous picture, Well-bred Sitters, who never say they are bored—a title it is difficult to imagine Sir Edwin can himself have given to the work—was knocked down for 5,000 guineas (Agnew); while the same painter's God proposes, Man disposes, fetched £6,300 (Thomas), and his Stag pursued by a Greyhound, 5,000 guineas (Saunders). Miss Thompson's engraved picture of Quatre Bras fell for 710 guineas; Mr. Millais' Princes in the Tower, 2,800 guineas. Upwards of £45,000 was realised by the day's sale, which was the most important sale of modern pictures which has been chronicled during the present year.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE exhibition of French paintings in Leicester Square, called Le Salon à Londres, will open to the public on Monday next. The private view is to-day, June 4. We hear that M. Gérôme has taken a personal interest in this exhibition, to the extent of coming over from Paris and London to help with his advice.

WE understand that Mr. Thomas Hayter Lewis has resigned the Professorship of Architecture in University College, London, which he has held for the past sixteen years.

FOLLOWING an example set last year, Messrs. Hildesheimer announce a prize exhibition of designs for Christmas and New Year cards, to be held shortly in the Egyptian Hall. A total sum of two thousand pounds will be awarded in prizes for the best seventy sets of original designs. Mr. G. D. Leslie, R.A., Mr. Briton-Rivière, R.A., and Mr. W. Hagelberg, of Berlin, have consented to act as judges.

THE second Japanese National Exhibition was opened at Tokiyo on March 1. The number of exhibitors is upwards of 31,000—very nearly double that of those of the first exhibition in 1878. Complaints are made of the dearth of the articles, and still more of the impossibility of getting anything choice, every desirable article having been snapped up directly, and most of them by the officials before the exhibition was opened.

AMONG a few new pictures which have varied without greatly strengthening the Exhibition of Swiss Art at 168 Bond Street is a fine work by the late Ch. Humbert called The Wengernalp in an Approaching Storm. There is a beautiful case of miniatures here by Swiss artists old and modern. Of Petitot there is a good, but not particularly interesting, example; but by Thouron there are very beautiful portraits of Necker and his wife, and an admirable one of himself. Of the modern enamels there are exquisite pieces of work by Glardon, and a dainty clock decorated with Limousin enamels, brilliant and delicate, by Marc Dufaux, Director of the Société d'Emmailleur genevoise. The subjects are scenes of the Protestant persecution in France.

THE second article on "The Curio Market" in the Japan Weekly Mail is even more interesting than the first. The writer, whose knowledge of articles of vertu is evidently not confined to those of Japan, gives some hints about the old "blue and white" of Hirado, and a great deal of valuable information respecting the imitation of old bronze work. These imitations appear to be made by the finest artists, and are therefore difficult to detect. The best worker of all, Zoroku of Kioto, though imitating the signs of age, sets his name honestly to his elaborate and beautiful work. The writer speaks of Dr. Dresser's statement, that no two pieces exactly alike are ever produced, as an "extraordinary delusion."

THE circumstance of a work of wood-engraving having been admitted into the Royal Academy this year for the first time is commented upon in the Chronique des Arts this week, it being pointed out, as a strange anomaly, that the country which above all others has excelled in wood-cutting should so long have kept her Academy hermetically closed against this mode of illustration. The work now admitted (No. 1227) is by a Frenchman (M. Albert Bellanger), and reproduces Sir Frederick Leighton's picture of The Music Lesson. M. Bellanger's wood-cut is exhibited also in the Salon this summer.

THE medals of honour of the Paris Salon were awarded last week by the artists who are exhibitors, conformably to the new règlement. M. Paul Baudry carried off the prix d'honneur for painting, by a large majority of votes, for his grand work, already described, representing The Glorification of Law. For sculpture, the prix d'honneur was not awarded, on account of no competitor obtaining a sufficient majority of votes, the new règlement having provided that the agreement of one-third of the votes was necessary. The greatest number of voters (seventy) were obtained by M. Allar for his marble group, The Death of Alcestis. In architecture, M. Formigé carried off the prize; and in engraving, M. Théophile Chauvel. The remainder of the medals will be awarded next week, the Salon remaining closed on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday for that purpose.

A VALUABLE painting by Gentile de Fabriano has been discovered hidden in the belfry of one of the old churches in Florence.

FROM the Report of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, presented at the annual meeting of trustees last month, we take the following:—The city of New York has expended £113,000 on the building in Central Park, and about £3,000 annually for maintenance. The other receipts are trifling, being derived only from fees of members and payments on admission. The total number of visitors during the year was over 1,200,000. The chief gifts acknowledged are a collection of original drawings, 690 in number, by old masters of the Italian, French, Spanish, and Dutch schools, presented by Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt; a large collection of casts of works of art, ancient and modern, presented by Mr. Hunt; and a sum of £10,000, from an anonymous benefactor, to form a permanent endowment for schools of technical art. The president of the trustees is Mr. John Taylor Johnston.

THE photographs in the May number of The Great Historic Galleries are from Mrs. Hope's Terburgh (or, as the name is now spelt, Ter Borch)—An Officer writing Orders—which will be remembered at the last Winter Exhibition at Burlington House; Frank Hals' fine portrait of Admiral de Ruijter from Althorp; and three miniatures from Windsor Castle, one of which is Isaac Oliver's large (for a miniature) Prince Henry Frederick, the eldest son of James I., who died in 1612.

THE May number commences a second volume of the Revue des Arts décoratifs, which is appropriately opened by a letter from the Marquis de Cheunvières to the Duke de Chaulnes, giving a congratulatory account of the experience of the six months of union between the Société du Musée and the Société de l'Union Centrale, and a clear exposition of objects sought to be obtained by the Museum in the future. It is to be the Luxembourg of decorative art and a South Kensington in one, and, above all, a place for study by the artisan. Such aims as these are worthy and sure of complete success.

THE illustrations in the second number of Pompeii (an illustrated art periodical published at Naples), though somewhat rough, show a distinct improvement on the first. The number contains an article on the seventeenth exhibition of the "Promotrice" at Naples, and the first of a series on the exhibition at Milan. Both are illustrated by wood-cuts of works exhibited, drawn by the artists themselves; and we are promised a large number of such illustrations of the Milan Exhibition. In the ancient section is an interesting account of the pretty little drinking fountain of the Siren at Naples, built by Don Pierre de Toledo, Viceroy of Naples under Charles V.

THE Zeitschrift für bildende Kunst has for frontispiece this month an etching by Fritz Werner from his amusing picture exhibited six years ago called Eine Conversation. It represents five old Rottsdam Grenadiers leaning over the railings of Sans Souci and joking with a couple of nurse-maids carrying babies. The laughter on all faces is so full of fun that it is impossible not to join in it. The first article of the number deals with the newly found statue of the Athene of the Parthenon, which is described and commented on by C. von Lutzow. The question as to whether Perugino or Raphael was the author of a drawing in the Berlin Print Room is discussed by Ivan Lermoloeff; and the composition of Raphael's Spasimo di Sicilia and its predecessors is treated with considerable knowledge by G. Dehio.

THE first parts of Peintres et Sculpteurs deal with Henri Regnault and Meissonier. M. J. Claretie contributes the text, and the portraits are engraved by M. L. Massard. This series forms a pendant to that of Comédiens et Comédiennes, with which our readers are familiar.

AN Album Mariano Fortuny, containing upwards of eighty reproductions of works by the deceased master, is in course of publication. The text is in Spanish, and is from the pen of Don Salvador Sanpere y Miguel.

UBICO HOEPLI, publisher at Milan, will shortly issue Artisti lombardi a Roma nei Secoli XV., XVI., e XVII., by A. Bertolotti.

THE Basselland Landschäftler reports that the frescoes on the façade of the Rathaus of Liestal, the capital of the half-canton, which date from the year 1590, are to be "restored" during the present summer by the competent painter, K. Jauslin, of Muttenz. The Rathaus was rebuilt in 1568, according to a date upon the façade. The subject of the chief picture is significant of the period, as it is neither Biblical, hagiological, nor local, but taken from classical antiquity. It represents the story of King Zaleukos, who instituted blinding as the punishment for adultery. When his only son committed this crime, the king rigidly upheld the law; but, as the criminal was his own son, he had one of his own eyes put out and only one of his son's.

THE STAGE.

THE ACTORS FROM MEININGEN.

THE very special note of the performances at the Theatre at Meiningen is the acting of the supernumeraries (they are mostly soldiers from the neighbouring barracks) who make up the crowds. Very great care is bestowed on their training, so that the theatre is almost unique in its manner of presenting pieces in which the acting of masses—as opposed to that of individuals—is of importance. In the trial of Hermione in Winter's Tale—to take an instance—the idea of independence in well-considered gesture and facial expression among the sympathising crowd is so well carried through the whole scene, that the spectator may look in the face of every supernumerary by turn without having his stage illusion destroyed; while the effect of this massive portrayal of emotion can be likened to nothing to be seen on any other stage, unless, indeed, on the stage of Rotterdam. Another feature—fortunately not peculiar, among German theatres, to the one at Meiningen—is ease, smoothness, absence of anything to jar on the auditor, such as the hopelessly vulgar pronunciation or the physique hideously unsuited to the part that we so often have to shudder at in our own theatres. The company "embraces in all," we are told, "a total exceeding eighty persons" (and any one of these, we venture to say, would put to shame by mere modesty and reserve in acting, if by no more positive merits, many of those who take the parts of second importance at our London theatres); but then follow the words—"in addition to the hundreds of supernumeraries." Now, of course, these are not the Meiningen "statisten"—the men picked as successful out of those who have been first chosen as most fit for Herr Chronengh's careful training. Whenever the company goes from home it has to depend on the help of new supernumeraries. Can these be taught, in a few weeks, to act? As far as we may judge by the test of Julius Cæsar—almost a crucial one—the Ducal Intendant, although he has done wonders in making his Drury Lane crowd what it is, has failed to make it the life-like thing which those who have been to Meiningen look for. To be recognised in the crowds, on Monday night, were several of the company proper; but, among those who were supernumerary, there was no spontaneity, no individuality, their acting in unison was sometimes ridiculous, and when on Antony's uncovering the corse of Cæsar the women began to sob in chorus, a slight titter went through the house, and, for a moment, there was danger of the tragedy being marred by an outbreak of merriment. There is no fault on the part of Herr Chronengh in this—he has had time only to drill his supernumeraries, he has not had time to train them. The acting of the ordinary members of the company—especially when several were on the stage together—provided a lesson that London managers would do well to lay to heart. The assassination of Cæsar was almost perfect—might have been quite perfect were it not that the supernumeraries again failed fully to realise what was required of them. While the role of each Roman citizen is filled with quiet dignity, there is not the least attempt on the part of those entrusted with very small parts to thrust themselves forward.

It is when we come to the very important parts that we are again not quite satisfied. The company which acts at Meiningen is without a great actor, certainly without a great actress. With commendable diffidence it has been strengthened for a visit to a city which has been invited to compare it with the Comédie française. Thus we have for Antony a former Meiningen, Herr Barnay, who has long left the little residenz town for a larger field of renown; and another guest of our guests, Fräulein Anna Haverland, gave a fuller and more generous rendering of the part of Portia than it would have received from any member of the company, for the very care bestowed on education sometimes stiffens acting into correct, soulless, metallic technique. We cannot help regretting, however, that so little confidence is shown by the manager in the younger members of his school that—according to the published castes of the plays to be performed here—the most promising of the Meiningen ingénues will appear only once, and then only as the page in Fiesco.

So much has been said of the scenery that was to be furnished that it is right to record its mediocrity. The coming on of the storm in the first act of Cæsar was—so far as the scenery was concerned—miserably ill-managed. We have wondered how the Meiningen scenery could possibly be used for a stage so much larger than that for which it was made—a stage so unusual to the Meiningers that it is only the patience in training that has prevented them from being embarrassed even on their first appearance.

We do not know in what sense the advertisements which heralded its approach have spoken of this as the “model company.” In its manner of training, its selection and continual studying of new plays, its thoroughness, it may be well so-called; and, if a body of artists-born, informed with the literary spirit, could on this model form themselves into a body of actors, their performances would be as valuable, perhaps, to Shakspeare students as another series of Commentaries by Gervinus. But, while the Meiningers can teach us very much, they have to learn that acting is an art and not a science, and that there is no great acting without great artists.

MR. BYRON'S NEW COMEDY.

THE discovery of a resemblance between Charles Dickens and Mr. H. J. Byron has been made rather lately; and it has been made, we imagine, à propos of the smart, yet pathetic, new comedy at the Vaudeville, into whose acquests somebody must have been allowed to peer. There is certainly much in Mr. Byron's Punch to suggest the resemblance; and the likeness is not one of the kind that may be produced by conscious imitation, nor is it, to tell the truth, any nearer likeness than may sometimes be traced between undeniable genius and highly cultivated talent. Punch resembles a story of Dickens's in that it sets forth the virtues of the lowly, displays something of Dickens's own wonderful sympathy with a lower middle class or a Bohemian career, and something of his sense of the genuine pathos with which such a career may be charged. “Professor” Mistletoe—that trick is likewise Dickens's, of making the Bohemian delight to assume a Philistine dignity of title—Professor Mistletoe, the proprietor of a puppet-show, is at bottom much such a man as Dr. Marigold, and his part is one that Dickens himself would assuredly have been delighted to act. He is an honest and hard-working fellow, whom his one servant-girl, “Lizer,” rightly assumes to be “warm”—that is, comfortable as to his pocket. He is able to put his one adopted child to a school of the kind that may be relied upon for transforming a girl into “a lady.” And he is able, in the nick of time, to do a good turn to his once yet more prosperous brother—a self-made man, who aspires to the honours of a bank directorship and of the county bench. “Professor” Mistletoe is, of course, the central character of the story; sometimes, indeed, he does not seem to exist for the sake of the drama—the drama rather exists for him.

Mr. David James makes of this character all that it is possible to make. The play is a genre picture, and Mr. James's is the best figure in it. It has humour, pathos, continual truth to Human Nature, as Human Nature is to be studied in the Westminster Road. To begin with, the “make-up” is excellent—the worn, seamed face, grizzled hair, and tuft of beard at the chin. The gait and gesture are as good; and the voice—hearty and full of feeling, though uncultivated. Mr. James presents capably the joy that the Professor feels in his adopted daughter, and his sorrow when she goes out to be a lady's companion—an office this shrewd observer of the world does not hold in high respect; but Mr. James's acting, satisfactory everywhere, is most individual and most strongly marked in the scene in which he agrees to befriend and conceal his brother—the bank director for whom a warrant has been issued, and who is wanted by the police and the public prosecutor. The self-made man has been very indifferent to the prosperity of the proprietor of Punch; he has not behaved with complete discretion in the matter of the adopted daughter; but “Professor” Mistletoe is not revengeful. And it is a really fine scene—a piece of natural, realistic acting of the highest kind—the scene in which Mr. James portrays Mistletoe's hesitation as to what it is his duty to do, and then the suddenness and the heartiness with which he acts when it is clear to him what line he must take. “We are brothers, after all,” says the erring director, who had of old been less impressed with the fact of the relationship. “Not after all—before all,” says the “Professor,” with tears in his voice, and with that heartiness of conviction which Mr. James is, perhaps, better able to convey than anybody else upon the stage. The character may not be exquisite enough for the over-dainty—who prefer a study of the manners of drawing-rooms and of the elegant vices of society; but we have no hesitation in saying that, while it is healthily conceived, the fashion in which it is acted is one that could not possibly be improved.

Though the play shows signs of having been, if not actually written for Mr. David James, at least adapted to the manifestation of his peculiar skill, it is not, properly speaking, a one-part piece. Considerable study is made of the “self-made” brother, both in his prosperity and in his adversity, and Mr. William Farrer seems to carry out very well Mr. Byron's conception of this part. He is pompous, yet continually oppressed by his deficiencies of education; really tender-hearted to those to whom he is near, though contentedly enough neglectful of his absent relative. There is a vivid sketch of his wife, an over-dressed woman, who would still be a coquette if occasion offered, and whose only redeeming point amid her general vulgarity is an affection for her spouse, which yet does not prevent her from employing a superannuated detective to watch his more suspected pursuits. The honourable young man of the piece—Arthur Dalton—owes nearly everything to the masculine grace and chivalry of his representative, Mr. Graham, who is here seen at his best, and as a jeune premier he is indeed infinitely preferable to the band-box jeune premier of former days. There are yet two other male characters of some importance. One of them is a physician, the announcement of whose dinner-hour strikes awe into the breasts of the inhabitants of the Westminster Road; though, as he is continually found to be “passing” and “looking in” in that locality, his practice would appear to be chiefly suburban, and his aristocratic habits to be confined to the hours of his meals. He is, in truth, a somewhat shadowy being, and is less a character than a piece of machinery necessary to the conduct of the story. The other personage is one “Chirpey,” the “Professor's” male pupil and successor. He takes that melancholy view of the world which has been taken by the comedian from Molière to Rich, and so downwards. By the ladies, not much is done; nor is much demanded of them. Miss Bishop is invariably a discreet actress; Miss Larkin is individual; and Miss Cicely Richards gives people pleasure by her assumption of a certain good-natured shrewdness which belongs, it is supposed, to useful young women of the class she spends her life in representing so well.

STAGE NOTE.

THE arrangements for performances of the First and Second Quartos of Hamlet within a few nights of one another, as suggested by Mr. Furnivall, have now been completed by Mr. Marlande Clarke. The plays will be acted on Saturday, July 2, and Saturday, July 7, at the Montefiore Literary and Art Club, Tavistock Place, at the south-east corner of Tavistock Square, W.C.; and about eighty places will be reserved for the public, at the price of 5s. 6d. each for the two performances. Mr. Marlande Clarke will act Hamlet; his wife, Ophelia; Mr. W. Poel, Polonius; and the other characters will be taken by professional or amateur actors. Mr. Furnivall has written some “Introductory Remarks” on the purpose of the acting, in order to do away with the extraordinary misconceptions that prevailed about the former performance of the First Quarto.

MUSIC.

LISZT FESTIVALS AT ANTWERP AND BRUSSELS.

A GRAND festival was held last week at Antwerp in honour of the celebrated Abbé Liszt, organised by the Société de Musique of that city, under the direction of M. Pierre Benoit, himself a composer of some distinction. This society has already acquired considerable renown by the festivals given in 1876, 1877, and 1879, and the one just concluded will certainly add to its already well-deserved reputation. Franz Liszt—born in 1811, and therefore now in his seventieth year—up to 1847 was principally known as a virtuoso; since then he has devoted himself almost exclusively to composition, and has produced a number of works which certainly entitle him to rank among the chief musicians of the nineteenth century. In 1849 he settled down in Weimar, where he remained for the space of twelve years; and during that period he wrote his twelve celebrated symphonic poems, his Dante and Faust symphonies, and some sacred works of considerable importance. For the knowledge of his music in England we are principally indebted to his pupil and friend, Mr. Walter Bache, who, at his annual concerts, invariably produces one of his master's important works. Last year Liszt received and accepted an invitation from the Antwerp Society to be present at the festival. He came, but only, to quote his own words, “en simple auditeur;” he declined to conduct any of the music. He arrived in Antwerp in time for the public rehearsal held on Wednesday evening, May 25. On entering the hall (both at the rehearsal and at the concert), he was received with a roll of drums and a flourish of trumpets, followed by loud and enthusiastic cheering, which lasted for some considerable time. At the concert he was repeatedly called to the platform; and, after the first part of the programme, he received some magnificent bouquets, and was also deluged with smaller ones thrown by the ladies of the choir. A few simple and touching words were addressed to him by the burgomaster, M. de Wael, and the golden book of the city of Antwerp was placed before him to receive his signature.

The programme of the festival consisted entirely of Liszt's compositions. First, the Solemn Mass, written about twenty-five years ago for the inauguration of the basilica of Gran, in Hungary; hence known as the Graner Mass. It is for full orchestra, soli and chorus, and an obligato organ part. The Kyrie is a solemn and stately movement opening in the key of D; a change is soon made to B flat, and a short and beautiful phrase of four bars is given out by the orchestra and afterwards taken up by solo voices and chorus to the words "Christe eleison." A return is made to the original key and the first part resumed, but in condensed form. The Gloria opens pianissimo: the principal theme is allotted to the brass, accompanied by divided strings in tremolo; the chorus enters at the fifth bar, and voices and instruments are gradually worked up to a fortissimo on the words "in excelsis Deo." Throughout the phrases introduced in the course of the movement illustrating the various sentences of the text, the opening theme is constantly heard, now by strings, now by wind, and thus a certain unity is imparted to the whole of this section. Another mode of procedure adopted by the composer connects and binds together in a striking, effective, and logical manner the various portions of the Mass. For example, the "Qui tollis" of the Gloria is sung to the "Christe eleison" theme above mentioned; the Gloria theme accompanies the words "Et resurrexit" in the Credo and the "Hosanna in excelsis" of the Sanctus. Again, the "Benedictus" is based on the "Christe eleison" theme; in the last movement, the words "dona nobis pacem" are sung to the "et in terra pax" phrase taken from the Gloria, and the final "Amen" is accompanied by the principal theme of the Credo. We mention these only by way of illustration, not as an exhaustive list. The Gloria and Credo contain many points of interest, but space prevents us entering into any detailed analysis. Some of the music can scarcely be styled sacred; and, amid passages of great beauty and strength, we meet with others lacking in depth and meaning. Of all the portions of the Mass, we consider the Credo, notwithstanding its many merits, the most unequal and unsatisfactory. The Sanctus, the Benedictus, and the Agnus Dei are comparatively short movements; they contain some very charming and delicate music, though here again we feel at times a want of dignity and solemnity. The orchestration throughout is extremely interesting. The solo parts were taken by Mdlle. Kufferath from Brussels, Mdlle. Anna Schauenburg, M. von zur Muhlen, and M. Em. Blauwaert. The chorus consisted of about three hundred members, and it is impossible to speak too highly of their fine voices, pure intonation, firmness of attack, and careful observance of the various marks of expression. M. Pierre Benoît is an able and energetic conductor. He is, however, more successful in loud and vigorous passages than in those requiring care and delicacy.

It is scarcely possible to imagine an uglier or a more difficult piece of music than a Danse Macabre sur le Thème grégorien du "Dies Irae," performed by M. de Zarembski, professor of the Conservatoire de Bruxelles, in a manner which showed that difficulties have ceased to exist for him. His playing, though very wonderful, appeared to me, however, cold and lacking in charm. Some beautiful songs, Mignon, &c., were given with much taste by Mdlle. Kufferath and Mdlle. Schauenburg. Les Préludes, the third of the symphonic poems, concluded the programme.

The immense hall of the Société Royale d'Harmonie was crammed both at the rehearsal and at the festival. The Musical Society of Antwerp may well be proud of the success, both artistic and financial, of this important and interesting festival.

On Sunday, May 29, a matinée musicale was given in honour of Liszt at Brussels, in the Salle du Palais des Académies, by his disciples, M. Franz Servais and M. and Mme. Jules Zarembski. The programme commenced with one of the finest of his symphonic poems, Tasso (lamento e trionfo). The composer has taken as the theme of his musical poem the melody to which, three hundred years after the poet's death, he heard the gondoliers of Venice sing upon her waters the opening lines of his Seriusano:

"Canto l'armi pietosi e l'Capitano Che l'gran Sepolcro liberò di Cristo."

Out of this plaintive theme he has constructed a work full of charm, beauty, and variety. The orchestration is lovely, and the work abounds in delightful contrasts. M. and Mme. Zarembski performed his grand concerto pathétique for two pianos. The piece abounds in brilliant and showy passages, and was magnificently played. Mme. Zarembski, like her husband, possesses a wonderful technique, but a more refined and delicate touch. Mme. Kufferath sang Liszt's Lorelei with orchestral accompaniment with great taste and expression, and well deserved the enthusiastic reception given to her. The Faust symphony concluded the programme. We need not enter into detail respecting this work, having noticed it on the occasion of its production in England by Mr. Walter Bache. The Tasso and the Faust were conducted in a most able and intelligent manner by M. Servais.

The Queen of the Belgians was present at the concert, and applauded all the pieces with great enthusiasm. Three medals in bronze, silver, and gold were presented to the illustrious composer in the name of the Association des Artistes-musiciens by M. Gevaert, the head of the Conservatoire de Bruxelles. The enthusiasm displayed by the public was quite as great as at Antwerp.

One brief word in conclusion respecting Liszt as a composer. Whatever may be the position finally assigned to him, we do not hesitate to declare that the writer of the Graner Mass, the Tasso, and the Faust has something to say, and knows how to say it. J. S. SHEDLOCK.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY'S AND MR. GANZ'S CONCERTS.

THE Philharmonic Society has now given the sixth and last concert of its sixty-ninth season. The speciality attaching to it was the appearance of Mme. Sophie Menter as the exponent of Beethoven's concerto, No. 5, in E flat, for pianoforte and orchestra. On two recent occasions when this lady was heard in two of Liszt's concertos and in two of his fantasias, the universally expressed opinion was to the effect that as a bravura player she is unrivalled. But, in qualification of this, it was generally added: "Let us hear her in a more classical work—e.g., a concerto by Beethoven—before offering a decided opinion as to her merits." This has now been vouchsafed. Nor has hope been disappointed. Mme. Menter's rendering of this monumental work was technically perfect; and at the same time replete with warmth of expression and feeling, without being over-demonstrative. Endowed, as she evidently is in the highest degree, with self-control, self-forgetfulness, and reverence for the intentions of the master whom she undertakes to interpret—three inestimable virtues—she, very properly, seemed fully alive to the fact that, in such a work, the pianoforte, though it has a prominent and important part to sustain, forms but one of the several factors which together constitute an organic whole. Thus, though the pianoforte was always well to the fore, it never became obtrusive. With Liszt's

Don Juan fantasia she created the same fuore as on the former occasion of her playing it at the Crystal Palace. The orchestral scheme included two overtures—viz., Mendelssohn's Isles of Fingal and Beethoven's Leonora (No. 3)—and Schumann's symphony, No. 1, in B flat. "Perfunctory" seems to be the mildest term applicable to the general manner in which they were executed. In the case of the last-named work, it might be alleged in excuse for the conductor, Mr. Cusins, that Schumann, like Chopin, though the beauty of his subject-matter has not been surpassed, never attained to the art of laying out his works in the most practical and effective manner for the orchestra. Like the works of Schubert and Mendelssohn, they do not (so to speak) "play themselves," but require a tender treatment on the part of their conductor, who should not only feel a deep sympathy for Schumann, but also possess a sufficient knowledge of instrumentation to enable him to regulate in some passages the dynamic force of certain instruments by giving prominence to some and repressing others. By such a process only, as has been repeatedly demonstrated, especially by Mr. Manns, can Schumann's intentions be fully brought to light. The vocalists were Mme. Albani and Mr. Herbert Reeves. The lady was heard at her best in the Italianised version of "Elizabeth's Gobet," from Tannhäuser, and in the cavatina, "Sovvenir de' miei prim' anni," from Hérold's Le Pré aux Clercs, in which the important obligato violin part was ably sustained by Herr Straus. The reverse was the case with the gentleman, who was evidently still suffering from the effects of a cold.

The main attraction of Mr. Ganz's concert was the opportunity accorded of a further hearing of Berlioz's symphonie dramatique, Roméo et Juliette, which, it will be remembered, excited wide attention on two recent occasions when it was performed in its entirety by the Philharmonic Society. Its latter portion was then felt by so many to be redundant that Mr. Ganz acted wisely in omitting all that follows the "Queen Mab" scherzo, as Berlioz himself did when he conducted a performance of it for the New Philharmonic Society in 1852. This remarkable work has recently been so fully discussed that it seems sufficient to state now that Mr. Ganz, who had evidently profited by the experience gained and the criticism evoked, succeeded in attaining by far the best of the three performances. Proverbially odious as comparisons are, it is due to him to assert this. And not only was it the best of the three; but, if the chorus had been as well at home with their part as the principal vocalists (Miss Orridge and Mr. Faulkner Leigh) and the band, there would have been little more to desire. Space fails to add more than that Herr Ernst Loewenberg, a pupil of M. Rubinstein, by his performance of his master's concerto (No. 4, in D minor) and Liszt's fantasia on The Ruins of Athens, gave ample proof, on this his first appearance, of his claims to be classed as a pianist of first-rate ability; and that the performance of Mendelssohn's overture, The Hebrides, by the band, was exceptionally fine. C. A. BARRY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION TO THE ACADEMY. (PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON,
186 Strand, and Messrs. CURTICE & Co.,
Catherine Street, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can also be obtained every Saturday Morning in EDINBURGH of
Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. W. H.
SMITH AND SONS; in MANCHESTER of Mr.
J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P.
PUTNAM'S SONS.

PARIS.

Copies can be obtained in Paris every Saturday morning of M. FOTHERINGHAM, 8 Rue Neuve des Capucines.

Fcap. 8vo, 128 pp., price 1s. 6d.

A MEDLEY of NOTABLES: What they said and What others said of them. By G. F. S.

"This little book contains on one side of each page a quotation from some well-known author, and on the other side a brief notice of this author by other authors. If we turn to Shakespeare, for instance, we find quoted Dame Quickly's description of Falstaff's death, while there are given notices of Shakespeare by Keats, Ben Jonson, Browning, Barnfield, and by some anonymous writer who likely enough is the editor. From him we learn that 'Shakespeare went before all men, and stands in the array of human intellect like the sun in the system, single and unappropriated.'—Saturday Review.

Published at 21, Castle-street, Holborn.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s., post-free.

STUDIES in PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

The Sun; Transit of Venus (Spectrum Analysis); the Moon; the Stars and Planets; Comets and Meteors; Atmospheric Electricity; Whirlwinds; Glaciers; the Telephone. By W. J. MILLAR, C.E., Secretary to the Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders in Scotland; Author of "Principles of Mechanics," &c.

"This work consists of chapters from several sciences—astronomy, electricity, heat, light, &c. They cover a good deal of ground, and include objects as wide apart as whirlwinds and spectrum analysis, glaciers and the telephone."—Liverpool Albion.

Published at 21, Castle-street, Holborn.

BIBLE REVISION

THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA:

The Six Principal English Versions of the New Testament, in parallel columns, beneath the Greek Original Text. Wiclif, 1380.—Tyndale, 1534.—Crammer, 1539.—Geneva, 1557.—Rheims, 1582.—Authorized, 1611. A very handsome vol., 4to, 42 2s.; or morocco, gilt edges.

"In form and substance it is an admirable present for any clergyman."—Observer.

London: S. BAOSTER & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row.

And sold by all Booksellers.

Sent post-free by the (Edinburgh) Publishers.

THE REVISED NEW TESTAMENT

anticipated in its Chief Renderings by YOUNG'S "LITERAL TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE," in passages selected (by Prof. ROBERTS) to show the Character of the "REVISED" Version.

SPECIMENS OF YOUNG'S "LITERAL TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE," Second Edition, minio type, 8vo, cloth, 15s.; sewed, 12s., free by post. With Recommendations of Professors, Clergymen, and Reviewers of all Evangelical Bodies. Also of the "ANALYTICAL CONCORDANCE to the BIBLE," 4to, 36s. to 63s., according to Contents and Binding.

Edinburgh: G. A. YOUNG & CO., 18, Nicolson-street;

London: HODDER & STOUGHTON; and all Booksellers.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JUNE

contains—Clement Marot and the Huguenot Psalter—The Great Composers: Berlioz—Mr. Poppy the Musician, by F. Hueffer—Why the Greeks made no Advance in Harmony—Stella: Lyrical Drama by Antoni-Manzocchi—The Opera—Richter and Crystal Palace Concerts—Mr. C. Hallé's Recitals—Festival Services at St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey, &c.—Wagner's "Nibelungen" at Berlin—Occasional Notes, Foreign and Country News, Reviews, Correspondence, &c. Price 3d.; post-free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JUNE

contains—"Cradle Song," Part Song, by OLIVER KINO. Price, separately, 14d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER, & CO., 1, Berners-street, W., and 80 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

NOW READY.

Vols. I. to VI. ("ABAR" to "MYSORE"), 8vo, half-morocco, price £2 2s.

THE

IMPERIAL GAZETTEER OF INDIA,

By W. W. HUNTER, C.I.E., LL.D.,

Director-General of Statistics to the Government of India.

Published by Command of the Secretary of State for India.

"It is a treasury from which the politician and economist may draw countless stores of valuable information, and into which the general reader can dip with the certainty of always finding something both to interest and instruct him."—Times.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

Now ready, demy 8vo, cloth, extra gilt, price 21s., with a Portrait and Map of the Country.

COLONEL GORDON in CENTRAL AFRICA.

1874—1879. From Original Letters and Documents. Edited by GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L., Author of "The Life of Sir Rowland Hill, K.C.B.," &c.

"There are probably few living Englishmen of whose deeds the world has heard much, but of whom personally it knows so little, as of the distinguished officer known as 'Chinese Gordon.' A man who put down a rebellion which was dissolving the Chinese Empire; who ruled for five years an African Province, which extended more than half the length of the Nile; and whose name is known and feared over a great part of Asia and Africa, is one of whom most of his countrymen would like to hear. Mr. Birkbeck Hill has ministered to this natural curiosity in a handsome volume just published."—Daily News.

"... throws a flood of new light on the character and the career of one of the most extraordinary Scotsmen of the present century."—North British Daily Mail.

"Col. Gordon's letters will be read with melancholy interest by all—and their number is large—who watched his efforts for the regeneration of a portion of Central Africa. . . . They reveal to us, perhaps, more fully than a compilation would have done, the springs of action and the idiosyncrasies of a man who, had a wider field been granted him, would have left a broad and not a merely episodic mark upon the world's history."—Athenaeum.

LONDON: THOS. DE LA RUE & CO.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 250. For JUNE. Price 1s.

CONTENTS OF THE NUMBER.

1. THE PORTRAIT of a LADY. By HENRY JAMES, Jun. Chapters XXXV.—XXXVIII.
2. SUBSCRIPTION from ANOTHER POINT OF VIEW. By Dr. VANCE SMITH.
3. THE RUSSIAN CLERGY. By the Rev. MORITZ KAUFMANN.
4. TIMOLEON. By the ARCHBISHOP of DUBLIN.
5. THE IRISH LAND BILL. By W. BENGE JONES.
6. THE WIT and HUMOUR of LORD BEACONSFIELD. By WALTER SYDNEY SICILL.
7. THE REVISION of the NEW TESTAMENT. By THEODORE WALETON, C.B.

London: MACMILLAN & CO.

Now ready (One Shilling), No. 250.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For JUNE.

With Illustrations by GEORGE DU MAURIER and W. SMALL.

CONTENTS.

- LOVE THE DEBT. (With an Illustration.) Chap. XVI.—Miss Tabbs' Pets. XVII.—George's Confession. XVIII.—Fenton Folk. XIX.—Friends in Council.
- SPRING WANDERINGS. Ana-Capri—From Capri to Ischia—La Piccola Sentinella—Ischia and Forio—Monte Epomeo—From Ischia to Naples—Night at Pompeii—San Germano.
- AUTHORS for HIRE.
- THE ROMANCE of a WAYSIDE WEED.
- AMONG the DICTIONARIES.
- LOVE and PAIN. By UNA TATLOR.
- A GRAPE from a THORN. By JAMES TAYN. (With an Illustration.) Chap. XXIII.—The Widow's Ring. XXIV.—A Change of Views. XXV.—In Quarantine. XXVI.—A Change of Patients.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterloo-place.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY

For JUNE, 1881. Price 2s. 6d.

- A CIVILIAN'S ANSWER to SIR GARNET WOLSELEY. By H. O. ARNOLD FORSTER.
- A REVISER on the NEW REVISION. By the Rev. G. VANCE SMITH.
- WHAT IS a POUND? By HENRY R. GREENFELL.
- ERNEST HENAN. By F. W. H. MYERS.
- PAWN-BROKING ABROAD and at HOME. By W. WALTER EDWARDS.
- THE INTELLIGENCE of ANTS. By GEORGE J. ROMANES.
- CARLYLE'S "REMINISCENCES." By Sir HENRY TAYLOR.
- IRELAND:
- (1.) THE INCOMPATIBLES. (Concluded.) By MATTHEW ARNOLD.
 - (2.) THE DUKE of ARGYLL and the LAND BILL. By the Right Hon. GEORGE SHAW LEFEBVRE, M.P.
- LETTER to EDITOR from SIR H. SPENCER ROBINSON.

London: C. KEOGAN PAUL & CO.

THE WORKS OF THE LATE MRS. MACKARNESS.

"There are few writers since Miss Edgeworth's time who have been so successful as Mrs. Mackarness in pointing out the value of domestic virtues."—Athenaeum, May 28, 1881.

A TRAP to CATCH a SUNBEAM. Forty-first Edition. 9d., cloth; 6d., sewed.

"Aide-toi, et le ciel t'aidera, is the moral of this pleasant and interesting story, to which we assign in this Gazette a place immediately after Charles Dickens, as its due, for many passages not unworthy of him, and for a scheme quite in unison with his best feelings towards the lowly and depressed."—Literary Gazette.

"* A Cheap Edition of the above popular story has been prepared for distribution. Sold only in packets, price 1s., containing Twelve Copies. Also, by the same Author, each cloth lettered, price 9d.; or in Coloured Wrapper, 6d.

MARRIED and SETTLED.
"COMING HOME."
OLD JOLLIFFE: not a Goblin Story.
THE HOUSE on the ROCK.

"ONLY: a Tale for Young and Old.
AMY'S KITCHEN: a Village Romance.
"A MERRY CHRISTMAS."

SIBERT'S WORLD; or, Cross Purposes.

Cloth limp, 2s.

Also in a collected form, as follows:—

SUNBEAM STORIES: a Selection of the Tales by the Author of "A Trap to Catch a Sunbeam," &c. Illustrated by Absolon and Anelay. First Series. Contents: A Trap to Catch a Sunbeam—Old Joliffe—Sequel to Old Joliffe—The Star in the Desert—"Only"—"A Merry Christmas." Fcap., 3s. 6d., cloth elegant.

SUNBEAM STORIES. Second Series.

Illustrated by Absolon and Anelay. Contents: The Cloud with the Silver Lining—Coming Home—Amy's Kitchen—The House on the Rock. Fcap., 3s. 6d., cloth elegant.

SUNBEAM STORIES. Third Series.

Illustrated by James Godwin, &c. Contents: The Dream Chintz—Sibert's World; or, Cross Purposes. Fcap., 3s. 6d., cloth elegant.

SUNBEAM STORIES. Fourth Series.

Contents: Minnie's Love; and the New Tale, Married and Settled. Illustrated with Four Full-page Engravings. Fcap., 3s. 6d., cloth elegant.

"* No Village Library ought to be without a Set of the above extraordinarily Popular Stories, of which the aggregate sale has reached hundreds of thousands.

LITTLE SUNSHINE: a Tale to be Read to Very Young Children. By the Author of "A Trap to Catch a Sunbeam." In square fimo, Coloured Borders, Engraved Frontispiece and Vignette, 2s., cloth board.

"Just the thing to rivet the attention of children."—Stamford Mercury.
"As pleasing a child's book as we recollect seeing."—Plymouth Herald.

London: CROSBY LOCKWOOD & CO., 7, Stationers' Hall-court, E.C.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

Mr. Barrett has the pleasure to announce that he has arranged for the appearance, at this Theatre, of the popular artiste, Miss MARIE LITTON, and the whole of her company, in a series of performances of Old English Comedies, commencing on MONDAY, JUNE 6TH, with

THE BUNYBODY.

Preceded by ONE TOUCH OF NATURE.
Seats booked, both at the Court and Princess's Theatres, and at the Libraries.

DURRY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

The MRININGEN COURT COMPANY of his Serene Highness the GRAND DUKE OF SAXE MEININGEN, under the gracious patronage of H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

TO-NIGHT, JULIUS CAESAR.

MONDAY, JUNE 6TH, WILHELM TELL.

Prices—Boxes, £1 1s. to £6 6s.; stalls, 12s. 6d.; dress circle, 6s.; first circle, 3s.; balcony, 3s.; pit, 2s. 6d.; amphitheatre, 2s.; gallery, 1s.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.30, HESTER'S MYSTERY.
A new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, called THE UPPER CRUST.

Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Billington, E. W. Garden, G. Shelton, and E. D. Ward; Mesdames Effie Liston, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorne.

At 10, WELSH HABITS, a musical and dramatic absurdity, by Messrs. R. REECE and KNIGHT SUMMERS, will be produced, with new scenery, dresses, and appointments. Messrs. J. L. Toole and E. W. Garden; Mesdames Emily Thorne, Eliza Johnstone, Merton, Mellon, Taylor, Douglas, Coombs, Wallis, Placit, and Palmer.

Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to £3 3s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THE OPERA SEASON
Under the direction of Mr. ALEXANDER HENDERSON.

To-night, at 8, an entirely new and original Opera Comique, in three acts, by OFFERACHE, entitled LA BOULANGERIE.

Under the immediate direction of Mr. H. B. Farnie. New and elaborate scenery by Ryan and Hicks. Dresses, after designs by Grévin and Faustin, by Atlas.

Preceded, at 7.30, by a Comedy, after Mélicand and Halévy, entitled SEEING FROU-FROU.

Mesdames Amadi, Mand Taylor, Turner, Dubois, Graham, Evelyn, and Wadman; Messrs. Celli, Temple, Ashford, Mansfield, Stepan, and Faustin. Greatly augmented chorus and orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Hiller. Ballet master, Mr. Lauri.

Box-office now open. Acting Manager, Mr. W. A. BURT.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(300 yards from the Angel.)

To-night, PLOT AND PASSION,
TOM TAYLOR'S famous Drama.

Messrs. J. D. Beveridge, F. H. Macklin, E. Lyons, W. Younge, &c.; Miss Isabel Bateman.

Doors open at 6.45. Farce at 7.15.

DELILAH.

By JAMES WILLING, for SIX NIGHTS ONLY.
Miss Bateman begs to announce that she has arranged for the production of this successful Drama, with the original cast, on MONDAY, JUNE 6TH.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. D'OYLEY CARTE.

To-night, at 8.30, a new Aesthetic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN, entitled PATIENCE.

Messrs. George Grossmith, Rutland Barrington, Richard Temple, F. Thornton, and Durward Lell; Mesdames Leocora Braham, Jessie Boud, Julia Gwynne, Fortescue, and Alice Barnett.

Produced under the personal direction of the Author and Composer.

Conductor, Mr. F. Cellier.

Preceded, at 8, by UNCLE SAMUEL,

by ARTHUR LAW and GEORGE GROSSMITH.

Doors open at 7.30.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BRUCE.

To-night, at 8.40, a new Comedy, in three acts, called THE COLONEL.

By P. C. BURNAND.
Preceded, at 7.50, by the one-act Drama, by G. C. HERBERT, "OUR BITTEREST FOE."

Under the control of Mr. MILLER.

Doors open at 7.30. Box-office open daily from 11 to 5.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

TO-NIGHT, SATURDAY, JUNE 4TH, this Theatre will be opened under the SOLE MANAGEMENT of Mr. WILSON BARRETT, who will transfer there Madame MODJESKA and his Court Theatre Company.

At 8, the famous Play, FROU-FROU, will be performed (in English).

Preceded, at 7, by TURN HIM OUT.

Characters by Mesdames Helena Modjeska, M. A. Giffard, Eugénie Edwards, Dora Vivian, A. Cooke, &c., and Ada Ward; Messrs. Wilson Barrett, Forbes-Robertson, E. Price, Norman Forbes, Brian Darley, Layard, &c., and G. W. Anson.

Seats booked at the Princess's and Court Theatres, and at all the Libraries.

Stage Manager, Mr. HARRY JACKSON. Acting Manager, Mr. H. HERMAN.

ROYALTY THEATRE

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER.

To-night, at 7.30, ROSALIE,
THE MEMBER FOR SLOCUM.

At 8.15, DON JUAN JUNIOR.
Mesdames Kate Lawler, Harriet Coveney, Ruth Francis, Florence Laven-der, F. Clitheroe, Elise Ward, and Anna Lawler; Messrs. Arthur Williams, Frank Wyatt, S. Dillias, H. Martell, and Frank Cooper.

Stage Manager, FRANK ROTHBAY. Acting Manager, CECIL RALPHON.

Doors open at 7.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

SUMMER EXHIBITION
NOW OPEN

Daily 9 to 7.

Admission, One Shilling; Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S

Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA

"If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa."
Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."
W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.

"Pure Cocoon, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted."
CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

EXTRACT

Try also FRY'S GARACAS COCOA.
A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHARING CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

1st March, 1880. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

PROVIDE AGAINST ACCIDENTS!
ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN!

A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of injury, may be secured by a Policy of the

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY,

The Oldest and Largest Company insuring against Accidents of all kinds

The Rt. Hon. LORD KINNARD, Chairman.

SUBSCRIBED CAPITAL, £1,000,000.

PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £230,000.

MODERATE PREMIUMS.

Bonus allowed to Insurers after Five Years.

£1,630,000

HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, and West end Office, 8, Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing-cross, or 64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

PEPPER'S QUININE AND IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.

Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.

Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.

Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.

Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

BRAND & CO.'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE OF BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal.

Cash prices.

No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Priced Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21,

Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from £6 6s. to 50 guineas.

Drawing-room Suites, from £9 9s. to 45 guineas.

Dining-room Suites, from £7 7s. to 40 guineas.

And all other goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21

Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

Fluid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. By gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drowsy feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPE, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s 9d. and 4s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones. Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache

Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

YATES & ALEXANDER,

PRINTERS OF

Books, Pamphlets, Magazines, Newspapers, and Periodicals.

Catalogues, Posters, Price Currents, Circulars,

Notices, and all General Commercial Work.

Parliamentary, Law, and General Printing.

Contracts entered into with Public Companies,

Bankers, Insurance Offices, Auctioneers

Manufacturers, Merchants and Traders, &c

PRINTING WORKS:

LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE

(OPPOSITE THE CHANCERY LANE POST-OFFICE).

13, Great Marlborough-street.

HURST & BLACKETT'S NEW WORKS.

LIFE in WESTERN INDIA. By

Mrs. GUTHRIE, Author of "Through Russia," &c. "My Year in an Indian Fort," &c. 2 vols., with Illustrations, 21s.
"Mrs. Guthrie's 'Life in Western India' is worthy the pen of this accomplished writer. Her familiarity with Indian life enables her to portray in faithful and vivid hues the character of the Hindoo and Mohammedan tribes; noting the peculiarities of their social and religious traditions, and representing their personal habits and manners with picturesque fidelity."—Daily Telegraph.

CATHARINE of ARAGON, and

the SOURCES of the ENGLISH REFORMATION. Edited from the French of ALBERT DU BOIS, with Notes, by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE, Author of "The Hilt of Redclyffe," &c. 2 vols., 21s.
"This book is valuable as an able compendium of documents about Catharine, and also as a statement of the causes which led to the English Reformation. It should be read by all who want to take a comprehensive view of the period. Miss Yonge's work is thoroughly and conscientiously done."—Graphic.

A VISIT to ABYSSINIA: an Account of Travel in Modern Ethiopia. By W. WINSTANLEY, late of 4th (Queen's Own) Hussars. 2 vols., 21s. (Just ready.)

PLAYS, PLAYERS, and PLAY-

HOUSES, at HOME and ABROAD; with Anecdotes of the Drama and the Stage. By LORD WILLIAM PITT LEWIS. 2 vols., 21s.

LODGE'S PEERAGE and

BARONETAGE for 1881. Under the Especial Patronage of HER MAJESTY. Corrected by the New Edition. 1 vol., with the Arms beautifully engraved, 31s. 6d., bound, gilt edges.

CHEAP EDITION of LORD

BRACKENBURY. By AMELIA B. EDWARDS, Author of "Barbara's History," &c. Forming the New Volume of "Hurst & Blackett's Standard Library." 5s., bound, and illustrated.

THE NEW NOVELS.

AMONG the HILLS. By E. Frances

POYNTER, Author of "My Little Lady," &c. 3 vols.

THE FUTURE MARQUIS. By

CATHARINE CHILDAE. 3 vols.

SYDNEY. By Georgiana M. Craik,

Author of "Dorcas," "Anna Warwick," &c. 3 vols.

HARRY JOSCELYN. By Mrs.

OLIPHANT, Author of "Chronicles of Carlingford," &c. 3 vols.

"Mrs. Oliphant has great versatility of imagination and a happy power of drawing on her memory for details in painting both people and places after nature. In 'Harry Joscelyn' she makes judicious use of sharp and telling contrasts. Nothing can be better than her pictures of the bleak Cumberland fells and their rough inhabitants, except her clever sketches of Anglo-Italian life in Leghorn. Harry himself is a clever and interesting study."—Times.

LOVE-KNOTS. By the Author of

"URSULA'S LOVE STORY," &c. 3 vols.
"There is a good deal of interest in these cleverly knitted 'Love-knots.'"—Athenaeum.

HIS LITTLE MOTHER. By the AUTHOR of "JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN." 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

"A book that cannot be lightly forgotten."—St. James's Gazette.

LOVE, HONOUR, and OBEY. By

ISA DUFFUS HARDY. 3 vols. (Next week.)

CHEAP EDITIONS.

Each Work complete in 1 vol., price 5s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by Sir J. GLIMMIE, MILLAIS, HUNT, LEECH, POYNTER, FOSTER, TENNIEL, SANDYS, E. HUGHES, SAMBOURNE, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S

STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS of POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

Sam Slick's Nature and Human Nature. By Mrs. Oliphant.
John Halifax, Gentleman. By Elliot Warburton.
The Crescent and the Cross. By Elliot Warburton.
Nathalie. By Miss Kavanagh.
A Woman's Thoughts about Women. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Adam Oremoe. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Sam Slick's Wise Saw. Cardinal Wiseman's Popes.
A Life for a Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Lough Hurst's Old Court Suburb. Margaret and her Bridesmaids.
Sam Slick's Old Judge.
Darien. By Elliot Warburton.
Sir B. Burke's Family Romance.
The Laird of Norlaw. By Mrs. Oliphant.
The Englishwoman in Italy. Nothing New. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Frederick's Life of Jeanne d'Albret.
The Valley of a Hundred Fires.
Burke's Romance of the Forum.
Adèle. By Miss Kavanagh.
Studies from Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Grandmother's Moony.
Jefferson's Book about Doctors.
Mistress and Maid. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Les Misérables. By Victor Hugo.
St. Clare's.
Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.
Sam Slick's American Humour.
Barbara's History. By Amelia B. Edwards.
Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant.
No Church.
Christian's Mistake. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Alice Forbes. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
Agnes. By Mrs. Oliphant.
A Noble Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Dixon's New America.
Robert Falconer. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
The Woman's Kingdom. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Annals of an Eventful Life. By G. W. Dasent, D.C.L.
Bevid Eignbrod. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
A Brave Lady. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Hanaah. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Sam Slick's Americans at Home.
The Unkind Word. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
A Rose in June. By Mrs. Oliphant.
My Little Lady. By E. Frances Pater.
Phoebe Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Life of Marie Antoinette. By Professor C. D. Yonge.
Sir Gibbie. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
Young Mrs. Jarlaco. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Lord Brackenbury. By Amelia B. Edwards.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.

THUCYDIDES. Translated into English, with Introduction, Marginal

Analysis, Notes, and Indices, by B. JOWETT, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Oxford, Doctor in Theology of the University of Leyden. In 2 Vols., royal 8vo, cloth, 32s.

TOY AΓΙΟΥ ΑΘΑΝΑΣΙΟΥ

ISTOPIKOI ΛΟΓΟΙ. HISTORICAL WRITINGS of ST. ATHANASIUS according to the BENEDICTINE TEXT. With an Introduction by WILLIAM BRIGHT, D.D., Canon of Christ Church, Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History. Crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

SOPHOCLES. Edited, with English Notes and Introductions, by LEWIS CAMPBELL, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Greek in the University of St. Andrews. In 2 vols. Vol. II.—AJAX, ELECTRA, TRACHINIAE, PHILOCTETES, FRAGMENTS. 8vo, price 16s.

LOCUS LIBRO VERITATUM: Passages selected from Gascoigne's

Theological Dictionary, Illustrating the Condition of Church and State, 1403—1458. With an Introduction by JAS. E. THOROLD ROGERS, M.P. The only Work giving Contemporaneous Evidence on the Condition of English Society in the Fifteenth Century. 4to, cloth, 10s. 6d.

CICERO DE ORATORE. With Introduction and Notes by Augustus

S. WILKINS, M.A., Owens College, Manchester; Professor of Latin in the Victoria University. Book II. Demy 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE SACRED BOOKS of the EAST. Translated by various Oriental Scholars, and Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER.

Vol. X. Part 1. The DHAMMAPADA. Translated from the Pāli by F. MAX MÜLLER. Part 2.

The SUTTA NIPATA. Translated from the Pāli by FAUSBÖLL. Being Canonical Books of the Buddhists. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

Vol. VI. BUDDHIST SUTTAS. Translated by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS. Part 1, containing:—

1. The Mahā-parinibbāna Suttanta.—2. The Dhamma-kakka-pavattana Sutta.—3. The Terigga Suttanta.—4. The Akankheyya Sutta.—5. The Ketkhila Sutta.—6. The Mahā-sudassana Suttanta.—7. The Suttāsava Sutta. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

A CYCLE of CELESTIAL OBJECTS Observed, Reduced, and Discussed by Admiral WM. H. F. SMITH, R.N., K.S.F., D.C.L. Revised, Condensed, and greatly Enlarged by GEORGE F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S., Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 21s.

MODERN GERMAN READER: a Graduated Collection of Prose

Extracts from Modern German Writers. Edited by C. A. BUCHHEIM, Phil. Doc., F.C.P., Professor of the German Language and Literature in King's College, London; sometime Examiner to the University of London. Part I. With English Notes, a Grammatical Appendix, and a Complete Vocabulary. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

BY THE SAME EDITOR.

GOETHE'S EGMONT. With a Life of Goethe, &c. Second Edition.

Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s.

SCHILLER'S WILHELM TELL. With a Life of Schiller; an Historical and Critical Introduction, Arguments, and a Complete Commentary. Fifth Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

LESSING'S MINNA von BARNHELM: a Comedy. With a Life of Lessing, Critical Analysis, Complete Commentary, &c. Third Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

SCHILLER'S HISTORISCHE SKIZZEN: Egmonts Leben und Tod, and Belagerung von Antwerpen. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

GOETHE'S IPHIGENIE auf TAURUS: a Drama. With a Critical

Introduction and Notes. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s.

London: HENRY FROWDE, Clarendon Press Warehouse, 7, Paternoster-row.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 475.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
MAJOR SERPA PINTO'S HOW I CROSSED AFRICA, II., by Capt. BURTON	425
PROF. THOMAS ROOGER'S EDITION OF GASCOIGNE'S THEOLOGICAL DICTIONARY, by JAMES GAIRNER	427
THORNTON'S FOREIGN SECRETARIES OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY, by W. P. COURTNEY	428
STUBBS'S MYTH OF LIFE, by the Rev. C. J. ROBINSON	428
RHODES'S GEORGICS, by the Rev. J. DAVIES	429
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH	429
CURRENT LITERATURE	430
NOTES AND NEWS	431
OBITUARY: MAXIMILIEN-PAUL-EMILE LITTRÉ, by GEO. SAINTSBURY	433
OXFORD LETTER, by the Rev. A. H. SAYCE	433
THE CALDERON CELEBRATION	434
THE "ORDIPUS TYRANNUS" AT HARVARD, by T. S. PERRY	435
SELECTED BOOKS	435
CORRESPONDENCE:— The Revised Version of the New Testament, by the Rev. R. B. DRUMMOND; Editions of Polycarp and Barnabas, by the Rev. J. H. BACKHOUSE; On the Use of Trochaic Pentameter by Shakspeare and others, by Miss E. H. HICKEY	435-6
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	436
PETERS'S NICOMACHEAN ETHICS OF ARISTOTLE, by H. RICHARDS	436
PROF. MARTIN DUNCAN'S ECHINODERMATA OF THE ARCTIC SEA, by H. N. MOSELEY	437
SOME TRAVEL BOOKS	437
NOTES OF TRAVEL	438
SCIENCE NOTES	438
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	438
THE SALON OF 1881, IV., by Mrs. MARK PATTISON	439
THE DECORATIVE ART EXHIBITION, by COSMO MONKHOUSE	440
PROF. MENZEL'S DRAWINGS	441
THE FLORENCE UFFIZI EXHIBITION, by C. HEATH WILSON	441
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	441
THE GYMNASIUM COMPANY AT THE GAIRTY THEATRE	442
STAGE NOTES	443
HERR ANTON RUBINSTEIN'S PIANOFORTE RECITAL, &c., by J. S. SHEPLOCK	443

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL.

The Councils of University College, Liverpool, and of the Liverpool Royal Infirmary School of Medicine are prepared to appoint a PROFESSOR OF EXPERIMENTAL PHYSICS in connexion with the above Institutions. The stipend of the Professor will be £400 per annum, together with a share of the Fees. The holder of the Professorship will for the present be required to give instruction in Mathematics, until a separate Chair of Mathematics shall have been endowed. He will also be expected to deliver a Course of Lectures to Evening Classes. Candidates are requested to send in their applications and testimonials not later than JUNE 20TH, 1881, to either of the undersigned. Students and others desirous of information may obtain copies on application to the Registrar, W. J. STEWART, 25, Lord-street, Liverpool.

May 18, 1881.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY, MANCHESTER.

The STATUTES and REGULATIONS regarding DEGREES, EXAMINATIONS, and COURSES of STUDY are now published. Students and others desirous of information may obtain copies on application to the Registrar, R. ADAMSON, Registrar.

OWENS COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

The Senate propose to APPOINT a DEMONSTRATOR in the PHYSICAL LABORATORY who would be required to enter on his duties on the 29TH SEPTEMBER NEXT. Full particulars may be obtained from the REGISTRAR. Applications should be made not later than the 14TH JUNE.

J. HOLME NICHOLSON, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

The PROFESSORSHIP of ARCHITECTURE will be VACANT at the Close of the Session. Applications for the Appointment will be received on or before JUNE 20TH.

TALFOURD ELY, M.A., Secretary.

MALVERN COLLEGE.

EXAMINATION for SCHOLARSHIPS and EXHIBITIONS, DECEMBER 22ND and 23RD.—Apply to the SECRETARY.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—KENSINGTON

HOUSE, Culverley Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. R. STEBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 200 Guineas.

FRENCH LANGUAGE.—Monsieur FINGRON, M.C.P., ATTENDS SCHOOLS and FAMILIES and COACHES PUPILS for PUBLIC EXAMINATIONS. Great experience in teaching French. Highest references.—24, Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square, W.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, Ely-

place, St. Stephen's-green, Dublin.—Founded 1832, for preparation of Candidates for Competitive Examinations; over 1,000 Pupils have passed direct from the Academy. The Special Classes for R.I. CUNSTABLEARY Cadetships have carried off 80 per cent. of the Cadetships offered for competition last year: First Place, four times. Special Work for Woolwich and Sandhurst; over 320 have passed Army Exams, including 2nd, 3rd, 6th, 6th, 7th, at recent Competitions.—Apply to W. J. CHETWOOD CRAWLEY, LL.B., F.R.S., F.R.C.S., Director and Sole Proprietor.

ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL MEDICAL

SCHOOL, ALBERT EMBANKMENT, LONDON, S.E.—The Winter Session commences on October 1, and the Summer on May 1. Students can enter at either Session. Two open entrance Science Scholarships of £100 and £50 for 1st Year's Students are awarded in October. In addition to ordinary prizes amounting to £200, the following Scholarships, Medals, &c., are given, viz.—The "William Tinsley" Scholarship, £30; College Scholarship, 40 Guineas a-year for two years; "Musgrove" Scholarship, of same value; "Solly" Medal and Prize; "Cheesden" Medal; "Mead" Medal; Treasurer's Gold Medal; "Grainger" Prize, &c. Special Classes for Matriculation, Preliminary Scientific, and 1st M.B. of University of London, and Private Classes for other Examinations. There are numerous Hospital appointments open to Students without charge. For Prospectus and particulars apply to Dr. GILLESPIE, Secretary.

HULL and EAST RIDING COLLEGE.

WANTED, a HEAD-MASTER; must be a Graduate in Honours of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Durham, Dublin, or Edinburgh. The School will accommodate about 200 Scholars.—For further particulars apply to ROBERT JAMISON, J.P., Hull, Chairman; or J. SAKER, Jun., J.P., Hull, Hon. Sec.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT of SCIENCE, 22, Albemarle-street, London, W.

The next ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING will be held at YORK, commencing on WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 31.

President-Elect—

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK, BART., M.P., D.C.L., F.R.S.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS OF MEMOIRS.

Meetings of the Organising Committees for the several Sections will be held shortly, and Authors are requested to give notice of their intention to offer Papers.

O. GRIFFITH, Acting Secretary, Harrow, Middlesex.

CORPORATION of LIVERPOOL.

AUTUMN EXHIBITION of MODERN PICTURES in OIL and WATER-COLOURS, 1881.

NOTICE to EXHIBITORS.

The above EXHIBITION will OPEN in the WALKER ART GALLERY on MONDAY, 27TH SEPTEMBER. The days for receiving Pictures are from the 1st to the 13th of August, both inclusive. Forms, Cards of Particulars, and all information may be obtained on application to Mr. CHARLES DYALL, Curator, Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool, to whom all Works of Art intended for Exhibition should be addressed. London Agent: Mr. JAMES BOURLET, 17, Nassau-street, Middlesex Hospital.

JOSEPH RAYNER, Town Clerk, Honorary Secretary.

THE SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.

THE EXHIBITION now includes a Collection of Works by Prof. MENZEL, 5, Pall Mall East. Open from 10 to 6. Admittance, 1s.; Catalogue, 6d.

ALFRED D. FRIPP, Secretary.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

MONDAY, JUNE 20, 4 P.M.

PAPERS will be read by MR. R. B. E. BAILLIE, M.R.A.S., on "THE DUTY MUHAMMADANS, IN BRITISH INDIA, OWING to the PRINCIPLES of their own LAW, to the GOVERNMENT of the COUNTRY;" by MR. ALBERT GRAY, M.R.A.S., "EXTRACTS from Mr. C. F. BELL'S REPORT on the MALDIVE ISLANDS;" and by M. DE LA COUPERIE, M.R.A.S., on "THE SINICO-INDIAN ORIGIN of the LAT ALPHABET."

W. S. W. VAUX, Sec. R.A.S.

ARUNDEL SOCIETY.—NEW OCCASIONAL PUBLICATIONS.

The following Chromo-lithographs by Messrs. Storch & Kramer have just been brought out by the Society for separate sale:—1. "THE VISION of S. CATHERINE," from the Fresco by Bazzi (Sodoma) in S. Domenico, Siena. Price to Members, 21s.; to Strangers, 27s. 6d.

2. SEPULCHRAL MONUMENT of CAN GRANDE DELLA SCALA, at Verona. Price to Members, 10s.; to Strangers, 12s. 6d.

3. Ditto of COUNT CASTELBARCO, at Verona. Same price.

A Prospectus, with descriptions and reduced Engravings of these three subjects, may be obtained gratis on application to the Secretary.

ARUNDEL SOCIETY.—FORMER PUBLICATIONS.

Classified Lists of all the former Publications of the Society, including Chromo-lithographs from the Works of the greatest Painters of the early Italian, Flemish, and German Schools, with Prices of those still on Sale to Members and Strangers, at from 10s. to 45s., may be obtained by application to the Secretary.

Frames and Portfolios for the Society's Publications are also sold at the Office. F. LANGE PRICE, Sec.

21, Old Bond-street, W.

MISS INA LÉON CASSILIS (Pupil of Miss Louise Willes) is prepared to give RECITATIONS at Institutions and other Entertainments. Repertoire extensive and varied.—1, Westbury-terrace, Westbourne-square, London, W.

ROSA BONHEUR'S celebrated PIC-

TURES "ON THE ALERT" and "A FORAGING PARTY," which gained for the Artist the Cross of the Order of Leopold of Belgium at the Antwerp Academy, 1873; also the Complete Engraved Works of ROSA BONHEUR, including the well-known "HORSE FAIR,"—NOW ON EXHIBITION at L. H. LEFEVRE'S GALLERY, 1A, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S, S.W. Admission One Shilling. 10 to 5.

LA SOCIETE DES AQUARELLISTES

FRANCAIS.—NOW ON VIEW, an EXHIBITION of WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS by the Members of the above Society, at GOUPEL & CO.'S GALLERIES, 25, BEDFORD STREET, COVENT GARDEN. Admission, One Shilling. An illustrated Catalogue has been published.

MR. MARTIN COLNAGHI (GUARDI

GALLERY, 11, HAYMARKET) begs to inform the Lovers of Art that his FIFTH SUMMER EXHIBITION contains Works by the great colourist Hermann Philips, others by Domingo and Charlemont, and by the young Spanish painter José Benlliure. Open daily from 10 till dusk.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.G.

(Twenty doors west of Made's Library.)

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Colletype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Palaeographs, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.

AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Meissonier, Corot, Daubigny, Burne-Jones, Rossetti, Cave Thomas, &c., &c.

MUSEO DEL PRADO, MADRID.

Subscription Issue of 397 Autotype reproductions of Paintings in this Celebrated Gallery (executed by Braun & Cie, Dornach) under the superintendence of the Director of the Gallery. The work contains 34 examples of Murillo, 48 Velasquez, 11 Raphael, 15 Titian, 16 Vanduyck, 32 Rubens, &c., and will be complete in Eight bi-Monthly Issues. For particulars and terms of subscription, apply to the MANAGER, The Autotype Company, 531, Oxford-street.

PICTURES CLEANED, RESTORED, FRAMED.

To adorn the walls of Home with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 531, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Ealing Lane, Middlesex.

General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWYER.

TO NUMISMATISTS.—I have a Rare

CHARLES II. TURNER or HALF-TURNER in my possession which I wish to PART WITH.—Offers addressed "No. 246," Keith & Co., Edinburgh.

HOUSE and STUDIO to be LET, Furnished, on CAMPDEN HILL; Studio measuring 25 by 30 feet, with entrance from back through spacious garden and by side of house.—Enquire at 46, Bedford-gardens, Campden-hill.

RARE ETCHINGS, ENGRAVINGS, and

DRAWINGS by the most esteemed OLD MASTERS may be obtained at GEORGE LOVES OLD PINT SHOP, 81, BUNHILL ROW, LONDON. The Engravings, &c., are in the condition, and have formed portions of the most celebrated collections. A Catalogue of a small portion of the Stock will be sent on receipt of two penny postage stamps.

* Established above 60 years.

ENGLISH ETCHINGS: a Monthly

Publication of Original Etchings, the work of English Artists. Part I., JUNE. Price 3s. 6d.; Annual Subscription, £2 2s. A limited number of Parts, containing First Proofs on Japanese Paper, price per Part One Guinea. Each Part will contain Four Etchings, which, together with descriptive letterpress, will be contained in a handsome Portfolio, embellished with a Portrait of Rembrandt. Size: Imp. 4to (15 by 11).

London: WILLIAM REEVES, Publisher, 165, Fleet-street.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

SPECIAL NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Subscribers to MUDIE'S LIBRARY are respectfully recommended to make early application for Carlyle's Reminiscences; Trollope's Life of Cicero; Stirling's Old Drury Lane; Miss Bird's Japan; Burbidge's Borneo; Across Patagonia, by Lady Florence Dixie; Miss Williamson's Divagations, by Miss Thackeray; and Seeborn's Siberia; as the Surplus Copies will be withdrawn as soon as the present demand has subsided.

Revised Lists of Books recently added to the Library, and of Surplus Copies on Sale at greatly reduced prices, are now ready, and will be forwarded postage free on application.

NEW OXFORD STREET, June 11th.

SOME STANDARD WORKS

PUBLISHED BY

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON.

DUNCKER'S HISTORY of ANTIQUITY.

From the German. By EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., LL.D., of Balliol College, Oxford. The first 4 vols. are now published in demy 8vo, 21s. each.

MOMMSEN'S HISTORY of ROME.

From the German. By the Rev. W. P. DICKSON. With an Introduction by Dr. SCHMITZ. The Library Edition, 4 vols., demy 8vo, 75s.; or the Popular Edition, 4 vols., crown 8vo, 40s. 6d.

CURTIUS' HISTORY of GREECE.

From the German of ERNST CURTIUS. By A. W. WARD, M.A. 5 vols., demy 8vo, price 18s. each.

CREASY'S FIFTEEN DECISIVE

BATTLES of the WORLD; from Marathon to Waterloo. By Sir EDWARD CREASY, late Chief Justice of Ceylon. Twenty-sixth Edition. With Plans. In crown 8vo, 6s.

Also a LIBRARY EDITION, in 8vo, with Plans, price 10s. 6d.

CREASY'S HISTORY of the OTTOMAN

TURKS; from the Beginning of their Empire to the Present Time, 1250—1870. By Sir EDWARD CREASY, late Chief Justice of Ceylon. In crown 8vo, 6s.

CREASY'S RISE and PROGRESS of the ENGLISH CONSTITUTION. By Sir EDWARD CREASY, late Chief Justice of Ceylon. Twelfth Edition. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

JAMES' NAVAL HISTORY of GREAT BRITAIN, from the DECLARATION of WAR by FRANCE, in 1703, to the ACCESSION of GEORGE IV. With a Continuation of the History down to the Battle of Navarino, by Captain CHAMIRA. 6 vols., crown 8vo, 36s.

THIERS' HISTORY of the GREAT

FRENCH REVOLUTION, 1789—1801. Translated by FREDERICK SHORER. 5 vols., small crown 8vo, with Forty-one fine Engravings and Portraits of the most eminent Personages engaged in the Revolution, engraved by W. Greatbach, price 30s.

[New Edition in the press.]

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,

NEW BURLINGTON STREET,

Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

TRÜBNER & CO.'S LIST.

Vols. I. to VI. ("ARAB" to "MYSORE"), 8vo, half-morocco, price £2 2s.

THE

IMPERIAL GAZETTEER OF INDIA.

By W. W. HUNTER, C.I.E., LL.D.,

Director-General of Statistics to the Government of India.

Published by Command of the Secretary of State for India.

"It is a treasury from which the politician and economist may draw countless stores of valuable information, and into which the general reader can dip with the certainty of always finding something both to interest and instruct him."—Times.

* The three remaining volumes will be issued in July.

FRANCE and the FRENCH, in the SECOND HALF of the NINETEENTH CENTURY.

By KARL HILLERBRAND. Translated from the Third German Edition. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE OCCULT WORLD.

By A. P. SINNETT. A remarkable Record of Experiences and Research in connexion with the Occult Science of the East. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s.

EDGAR QUINET:

HIS EARLY LIFE and WRITINGS.

By RICHARD HEATH. Post 8vo, with Portrait, Illustrations, and an Autograph Letter, cloth, 12s. 6d.

PICTURES of INDIAN LIFE.

Sketched with the Pen, from 1652 to 1878. By B. N. CUST, late of H.M. Indian Civil Service, and Hon. Sec. to the Royal Asiatic Society. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

EASTERN PROVERBS and EMBLEMS ILLUSTRATING OLD TRUTHS.

By the Rev. J. LONO, Member of the Bengal Asiatic Society, F.R.G.S. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

HINDU PHILOSOPHY.

The Sankhya Karika of Iswara Krishna. An Exposition of the System of Kapila. With an Appendix on the Nyaya and Vaisheshika Systems. By JOHN DAVIES, M.A. (Cantab.), M.R.A.S. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

EDUCATION: Scientific and Technical;

or, How the Inductive Sciences Are Taught, and How they Ought to be Taught. By ROBERT GALLOWAY, M.R.I.A., F.R.S. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

A GRAMMAR of the OLD FRIESIC LANGUAGE.

By A. H. CUMMINS, A.M. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

INDIAN POETRY.

By EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I., M.A., &c., Author of "The Light of Asia," Containing a new Edition of "The Indian Song of Songs," from the Sanskrit of the Gita Govinda of Jayadeva; Two Books from the Iliad of India (Mahabharata), and Proverbial Wisdom from the Shlokas of the Hitopadesa, and others. Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of MARK RUTHERFORD, Dissenting Minister. Edited by his Friend, REUBEN FRAYCOTT. Crown 8vo, boards, 5s.

"This is a remarkable little book, and one that we strongly recommend for perusal."—St. James's Gazette.
"A remarkable book, which could not have been written at all till within the last very few years."—Academy.

DR. APPLETON: his LIFE and LITERARY RELICS.

By J. H. APPLETON, M.A., late Vicar of St. Mark's, Staplefield, Sussex; and A. H. SAYCE, M.A., Queen's College, Oxford. Post 8vo, with Portrait, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"The brief story of his life is told with much feeling and simplicity."—Scotsman.

BUDDHIST BIRTH STORIES; Or, JATAKA TALES.

From the Jatakkathavannana. Translated from the Original Pali by T. W. RHYE DAVIDS. Vol. I. Post 8vo, cloth, 18s.

"Will be of the greatest interest and importance to students."—St. James's Gazette.

THE ENEMIES of BOOKS.

By WILLIAM BLADES, Typographer. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, on laid paper, with Five Plates, parchment, 5s.

"His pleasant volume."—Saturday Review.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO.'S LIST.

England from an American Point of View.

ENGLAND: WITHOUT AND WITHIN.

By RICHARD GRANT WHITE.

Now ready, 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d.

EPITOME OF CONTENTS.

A "Yankee's" View of English Society—English Skies—Eating and Drinking—England on the Rails—British Railways, their Excellence and Comfort—Manners of Railway Officials—London Streets—Trustfulness of Traders—London Omnibuses and Conductors—Beggars—Living in London—A Sunday on the Thames—A Day at Windsor—Eton Boys—A Little Prig—Rural England—Farmers—Cottages—English Villages—English Men—Superiority of Sex—English Women: Distinctive Traits, Types of Beauty, Dress, Intelligence, Tone—English Manners—Some Habits of English Life—"Nobility and Gentry"—Sports—Parks and Palaces—The Language of the English—John Bull—Oxford and Cambridge—Drink—The English Shires—Shakespeare—Random Recollections—British Philistinism—Greatness and Glory of England.

ON the INDIAN HILLS; or, Coffee Planting

in Southern India. By EDWIN LESTER ARNOLD, Author of "A Summer Holiday in Scandinavia," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 24s. [Ready.]

Now ready, in 2 vols. (over 1,200 pages), demy 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, price 32s.

LIFE of VOLTAIRE. By James Parton.

With Two fine Portraits.

Now ready, royal 8vo, cloth extra, price 24s.

VOLUME VIII. of

GUIZOT'S HISTORY of FRANCE.

Completing the Work. Fully Illustrated.

* The eight volumes of this most complete and splendidly illustrated History of France, by one of the greatest of modern historians, can now be had, royal 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, price 24s. each volume.

AUSTRALIA. By J. F. Vesey Fitzgerald, late Colonial Secretary of Victoria. With Illustrations and a Map.

EPITOME OF CONTENTS:—General Character of the Country—Climate—Flora and Fauna—The Aborigines—Geology—New South Wales—Victoria—Laws relating to Sale and Occupation of Land—The Gold Fields—Religion and Education—South Australia—Queensland—Western Australia—Appendix of Agricultural Statistics—Death Rates, &c.

Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d. [Ready.]

EGYPT. By Stanley Lane-Poole. With Maps and Illustrations.

EPITOME OF CONTENTS:—The Land of Egypt—The Plain—Cairo—The Valley—The Deserts—The Modern Egyptians—The Wealth of Egypt—The Dynasty of Mohammed 'Ali—Chronological and other Tables.

Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d. [Ready.]

Now ready, price 8s. 6d.

THE HALF-YEARLY VOLUME of HARPER'S MAGAZINE. With over 400 Illustrations. Royal 8vo, cloth extra, price 8s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS.

Now ready, 3 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

SURRENDER: a Novel. By Leslie Keith, Author of "A Simple Maiden," &c.

Now ready, crown 8vo, 3 vols., price 31s. 6d.

DAVID BROOME, Artist. By Mrs. Robert O'Reilly, Author of "Phoebe's Fortunes," "Sussex Stories," &c.

Now ready, 2 vols., price 21s.

JAMES WOODFORD, Carpenter and Chartist. By HENRY SOLLY.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON, Crown-buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1881.

No. 475, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

How I Crossed Africa. By Major Serpa Pinto. Translated from the Author's MS. by Alfred Elwes. In 2 vols. (Sampson Low.)

(Second Notice.)

THE second volume opens with August 25, 1878, and becomes far more sensational. Let all those who are disposed to prefer the Pagan before the Moslem African turn over these pages and see what a sink of iniquity, a scene of abominations, of licentiousness, and of brutal drunkenness a Negro Court is. It is some satisfaction to know that all the actors who figure in the villanous drama submitted to the public have been killed off, except, perhaps, one Mashauána, head-boatman to the Munari (missionary?) Livingstone, who is shown in one of his illustrations (p. 498) taking a frog-like header when a hippopotamus capsized the canoe. Our explorer briefly fills up (chap. ix.) the gap between the conquest of Lui by Chibatano, or Sebituane, and his Basuto, who became "Ma-Kololo," a mixed multitude. He shows King Libossi, a fat lad, in billycock hat, overalls, socks of Scotch thread, and patent leather shoes. The billet-doux found in the pocket of a Portuguese uniform worn by one of the princes is suggestive. Lastly, we have a profile likeness of Gambella, Prime Minister and murderous villain, who has charge of the "War Office" and the "Foreign Office." These are wild beasts in human shape, apeing civilised man.

The first step was to forbid, under pretext of a civil war in which Muzungos (Wazungu, or whites) were aiding the enemy, Major Pinto from marching east upon the Zambeze. This line, via Cainco, on the River Loengwe, and through the Chuculumbé country, would have shortened the journey by a third. The explorer was invited to act against the Europeans, who proved to be Mr. Selous, an English antelope-hunter lately returned home. He refused; accordingly, his party was reduced by desertion to fifty-eight men, and a felon attempt was made to assegai him. As the attack was checked by the revolver, his camp was fired on September 6; two of his "braves" were killed, and the scene is described as follows:—

"It was like a glimpse of the infernal regions to behold these stalwart Negroes, by the light of the lurid flames, darting hither and thither, screaming in unearthly accents, and ever advancing nearer, beneath the cover of their shields, while they brandished in the air and then cast their murderous assegais. It was a fearful struggle, but wherein the breech-loading rifles, by their sustained fire, still kept at bay that horde of howling savages."

Nitro-glycerine won the day; and the murderers, a hundred to one, fled from the explosive balls.

King Lobossi denied all complicity in the attempt, and proceeded to starve out the explorer. Serpa Pinto retired to a neighbouring village, Catongo, where he could find fish. Then the last card was played. The traitor, Caiumbuca, "second in command," who had disappeared during the attack, came into camp, made an excuse which was accepted, and superintended the desertion of the whole party, except eight, of whom two were women. Major Pinto was again in despair; "it must be in some such state of mind as the one in which I was then plunged that men commit suicide." Yet he had by his side the brave Augusto, the politic Verissimo, and the faithful Camutombo. The fugitives had walked off with the ammunition; but they left "the King's Rifle" and thirty cartridges, which were eked out by making others. And again things had come to the worst. The explorer was informed that a Macúa (English) missionary had applied for leave to enter Lui, and resolved to march upon his station, Patamatenga Kraal, distant 375 miles. He honestly tells us that he would have preferred a Frenchman (ii. 98); and a sub-acid flavour runs through his book when speaking of England and the English who treated him so hospitably. Such is Portuguese feeling in our day. National benefits are so far contrary to the "quality of mercy" that they curse those who give and those who take.

When African "kings" fail to murder you, they become, after a fashion, subject. Lobossi was told to his face that he was a "crafty knave, a robber, and an assassin;" consequently, he supplied three canoes, he gave the truth-teller a "tusk of ivory," and they "parted the best of friends."

On February 24 the expedition started down the Liambai; but as the three craft would carry only three men, the rest marched along the bank, including Cora, the goat. She met with the fate of most pets; but Calungo, the parrot, who travelled on his master's shoulder, reached Lisbon. There is little to say of the voyage. The Itufa house (ii. 77) explains the Numidian "Magalia": the cats must have been brought there by some trader. The shooting of game (a lion and an elephant) and of rapids is described picturesquely. The Liambai, which runs through the great salt plain of Lui, lacustrine in ancient days, is broken in the lower bed by a succession of rapids and cataracts. The "gigantic Gonha" is forty-nine feet high; and the last bar, called "Cattina-Morira" (fire-extinguisher), reminds one of the Cachoeira Tira-calcoens (off with your trowsers!) on the Brazilian São Francisco.

These features make pretty pictures; snowy foam sparkling and dashing over coal-black rocks; emerald vegetation on the hilly banks and various gem-like aits; clear air, in which the mirage shows herds of animals with hoofs turned skywards; and no noise, the trees acting as mufflers. These features are caused by the fall of the country eastwards, and by walls of eruptive basalt crossing the stream.

The same is the case with the "largest cataract in the world," the Mosi-wá-tunya Falls on the true Zambeze, composed of the Liambai and the Cuando. Major Pinto would call the upper Zambeze the river from its sources to the Main Falls; the middle course from these to the Kebrabassa Rapids; and the lower to the Indian Ocean. I should prefer the terms Liambai-Zambeze, upper Zambeze, and lower Zambeze. He visited this "wonder of the Zambeze," and erroneously translates it "the Great Water." The words Mosi (smoke, spray) wá-tunyá (does thunder)—i.e., "Thundering Spray"—form the Sisuto (Basuto) name fairly rendered by Dr. Livingstone; it may be "cumbrous," but it is picturesque and appropriate. The explorer took immense trouble with his sextant, and ran some risk. It is to be hoped that a geologist will presently visit the country and determine the centre of eruption whence the basaltic dykes originally flowed. Like the extinct craters of Auvergne, the volcano must have been upon the border of a great lake.

"The Coillard Family" (the second part of the book) opens with meeting two white men, Dr. Benjamin F. Bradshaw (zoologist) and his assistant, Mr. A. Walsh. Presently appeared the Rev. François Coillard, ex-director of the Leribe station, and one of the French missionaries who have overspread Basutoland. This gentleman settled an unpleasant and even serious "palaver" with the greedy and treacherous natives, and went northwards on business. Major Pinto travelled south-east to Luchuma, where he found "two guardian angels," Mdme. and Mdle. Elise Coillard, who poured hot tears over "cheeks that were parched and cracked with fever."

Good nursing, chloral, and laudanum enabled the traveller to visit the grand "Thundering Spray." On this trip he again describes those mighty storms which all African travellers have encountered and which none can forget. They dwarf the petty meteors of Europe. In Unyamwezi I was able to read small print by the electric light, which was continuous as that of the Aurora Borealis in the Far North; and the roar of the thunder was an incessant bass, varied, but not broken, by the rattling treble when the "bolt" is supposed to fall. On Camarones Mountain I saw the "Roman-candle"-like display described by Major Pinto. The fireballs in the blazing air separated near the ground into two, three, four, and even five, which darted along horizontally and struck as many different points—I made my men lie down under their blankets. The Africo-Portuguese explain these meteors by the universal presence of iron in the soil. Their violence must be due to electrical conditions which call for scientific investigation.

As provisions fell short at Patamatenga Kraal and Daga, the missionary family, fifteen souls, including Major Pinto and his men, in four waggons set out (December 2) for "thirty days in the desert." They skirted the Eastern edge of the "Sahara of the South, the terrible Kalabári," a counterpoise of the great North-African waste; the two lie south and north of the regular Tropical rains, and taught both ancients and moderns the stock phrase "desert in Central Africa." The vast Kalabári sands intersecting the stiff clays swallow up the huge streams fed by the highlands nearer the Equator, and hence the enormous salinas. The typical "pan" called Masaricare is an elliptical depression 9 to 16 feet deep, and measuring 120 to 150 by 80 to 100 miles in length and breadth. The double flow of the Zouga or Botletle River, the lowest course of the Cubango, is confirmed and well explained by Major Pinto. He has named the great tract between the Zambeze and the Kalahári "Baines Desert;" and that energetic explorer, so harshly treated during life, well deserves the posthumous honour.

On the last day of 1878 the party entered unwholesome Shoshong, the capital of Khama, convert and king of the widespread Bamangwato tribe, the "most notable nation of South Africa." Shoshong is a big bee-hive of 15,000 souls; the native cells are mud-and-thatch huts; the missionaries and merchants prefer brick, roofed with galvanised iron. The explorer was well treated by the hard-riding king and the English settlers; it is again a wonder that "beefsteaks, potatoes and ham, tea and cigars," did not kill him. Mr. Taylor supplied him with "Fly," a "horse of the desert," that had been "salted"—why call it salé?—and a loan of £200. This enabled him to hire a travelling waggon, in wretched condition, from a poor devil of a Transvaal-Englishman, called Stanley, and on January 14, 1879, to set out for Pretoria.

After losing the way, our explorer crossed the Limpopo, Oori, or Crocodile River, and entered the Transvaal, a name which has come to smell strong in the British nostril. The journey produced nothing but a few sporting episodes with antelope and ostrich, leopard and lion. Presently he reached a Boer camp, and was hospitably received, "because Portuguese, not English." He has no illusions about these Afrianders; he tells us openly that, "though Europeans in colour and professing the faith of Christ, they are the veriest barbarians in customs and behaviour" (i. 355). Yet most pathetic, as he tells it, is the tale of these unfortunates, whose treatment by the weakness of the Colonial Office and by the rapaciousness of the English colonist is a scandal to our history. Their wanderings for liberty and conscience' sake, their successive expulsion from the Cape to the Orange River, from the Orange to the Vaal River, from the Vaal to the Transvaal, and from the Transvaal to the drouthy desert, is a commentary on the Jewish exodus as told by the Jews. We may remark that Major Pinto gives no specimens of Boer "barbarism;" he was everywhere well treated by them. Nor can he now complain that "so little has been written about the Boers." One of his sentences sounds quasi-prophetic. "It is devoutly to be wished that they may not one day be goaded into proving their valour on the heads of those who so systematically slander them" (ii. 305).

Major Pinto, "speaking with greater frankness than usual," declares that the sin of discrediting the Boers lies with the missionaries. He is in no wise anti-missionary; but he paints in vivid colours the practice of pitting the African against the European. "To tell the ignorant savage that he is the equal of the civilised man is a falsehood; it is to preach revolt; it is a crime. It is to be wanting in all those duties which were imposed upon the teacher when he set out for Africa. It is to be a traitor to his sacred mission." These brave words deserve to be read between Sierra Leone and Cape Town.

At "Soul's Port" mission-house took place the last death in Major Pinto's reduced party; here he buried Marcolina, the wife of the brave Augusto. The survivor reached Pretoria on February 12, 1879. The miserable Zulu War then raging prevented his making Lourenço Marques. After enjoying society, and not enjoying the impertinence of a booby lieutenant who could not see a gentleman under an old coat, he travelled to Durban by a dog-cart and the railway. Here he embarked (April 19), touched at various African ports, and crossed Egypt to Lisbon. He carried with him the "remnant of the expedition," reduced to seven, and photographed in memoriam.

We have now crossed Africa from sea to sea with Major Pinto. His book has one great merit—it makes us thoroughly acquainted with the author, body and mind; while the consensus of reviews pronounces him an uncommonly good fellow. His sentimentalism comes naturally from a Southron; in the case of an Englishman we should think of that sleeve-wearing of the heart that attracts daws. Hence he prefers the sugared insipidities of Dom Jayme, the "blossoms of the soul," to the glorious song of Camoens. A "man of feeling," he is subject to fits of anger, of despair, of excitement; he even believes in the unluckiness of the thirteenth day, and storms affect him with the horrors. He is energetic as Dr. Livingstone in freeing slaves by main force; and he is not rebuffed even when the slaves assure him that they do not want his freedom. He testifies to the change worked in inner Africa by the suppression of the export trade, and his testimony encourages us to hope for the best. Slavery, cannibalism, and polygamy were universal, prevailing at different times in all regions; and the former did good work by saving life and by laying the first feeble foundations of human society. But now they have ended their task; they are looked upon as abominations, like other effete things, by civilised society. And civilised society is right; only it ought to recognise the reason of its abomination—the injury done to the slave and the evil effects upon the slave-master. Finally, he suffers from "terrible attacks of spleen and home-sickness;" and it is "hard lines" for a man to be delayed for months by runaway porters when a young wife and a fair child are awaiting his return. The song tells us that

"Married men should stay away
From the hunting of the bear."

Perhaps Benedict, when young, could do better things than explore inner Africa.

Physically speaking, Major Pinto is not made for a life in Africa, where the weak must go to the wall. Dr. Livingstone advised the embryo elephant-hunter to test his nerve by standing in front of a railway train and jumping aside before it can touch him. I prefer two trials; how my novice enjoys a beefsteak and onions on waking at four a.m., and how he can spend a week under a tree with the minimum of occupation. Major Pinto's emotional nature makes him, like a French Alpiniste, a traveller malgré lui; and his outer man is not tough enough. He sleeps in sheets; he uses spectacles; he wants salt with his meat—the condiment may be necessary with eggs, cereals, and vegetables, but a flesh diet contains sufficient salt to feed the blood. He yearns for bread; his eyes grow misty with tears at the sight of a loaf harder travellers have not eaten bread for years, and hardly care to eat it again. He hates the "unholy chorus of jackals and hyenas;" to my ear few sounds are more pleasantly exciting than the music of the "golden dog." Lastly, he must carry a bath, make a toilette, and use perfumery; and he seems never to have tried the wholesome native practice of greasing the skin.

Prof. Elwes has done his work well; his translation appears Portuguese in the spirit only, not in the letter. Of course there are minor lapses. Why should the well-known M. Antoine d'Abbadie (i. 10) be called Antonio; or "Caffre-clicks," cliques (ii. 189); or a Kruboy, Keruboy (i. 18)? "Hystrix Africano" (i. 48), Fetus Arboreos (for Filix arborea, Cyathea dregei? i. 245), "infusory animalcula" (in the plural, i. 252), Numida meleagris, a guinea-fowl turned into a partridge (ii. 81), and Penicetum for Pennisetum (ii. 117) call for correction; while "Audacia Fortuna juvat" (i. 93) was certainly not a watchword of the Romans. "Kiosque," "wigwam," and "tomahawk" are used in the usual loose, vague way; sycamore is the vulgar English spelling for aycomore; gingerba (i. 244) is a misprint for jinguba, a ground-nut; malanco (i. 353 and ii. 84) stands for the mpalanca (Hippotragus equinus); and Calahári (in two places, ii. 225 and 323) for Kalahári; while tsee-tsee is better written tsetze; and Betania should be "Bethany." Scorpions sting but do not bite (i. 330); and a man never lies perdue. Here and there we have awkward English, like "the residences of white ants" for termite-hills (i. 248); "the spot was an arid one;" "the re-appearance [emersion] of a satellite;" "caustics" used for blisters (ii. 272); a "lot more requests;" a "convocation to war," and "consumed the remainder" for "ate the rest." We are puzzled to understand "In April 1878 the remains of the Swede, Oswald Dagger, were likewise consigned to the earth, and whose body lies in Luchuma" (ii. 172). The Portuguese remedio is better rendered "medicine" (a charm) than remedy; cobra should be translated generically, snake or serpent, not left to suggest a species; and Negro is not a "nigger;" the latter word, which occurs thrice in three pages, means, not a black man, but a black slave.

To conclude this long notice, which I have vainly attempted to shorten. Thanks to pen and pencil, to author and translator, to artist and publisher, How I Crossed Africa gives a peculiarly vivid and life-like idea of the country and its people; indeed, I know no other that in this point excels it.

RICHARD F. BURTON.

Loci e Libro Veritatum: Passages selected from "Gascoigne's Theological Dictionary," illustrating the Condition of Church and State, 1403-58. With an Introduction by James E. Thorold Rogers, M.P. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

To those interested in the social and religious history of England prior to the Reformation, the publication of this book supplies a great desideratum. "Gascoigne's Theological Dictionary," as it is called, has been quoted by a few historians and antiquaries in relation to some special subjects; but the original MS. is not accessible without a journey to Oxford, and a seventeenth-century transcript in the Cottonian Library was so much injured by the fire at Ashburnham House that the text is considerably mutilated. Yet if MS. copies of the work had abounded in every public library, they could not have afforded the means of studying it attentively, as we may very well perceive by the fact that it was referred to by both Anthony Wood and Hearne, but neither of these zealous antiquaries made further use of it than to transcribe a few notices relative to the University of Oxford. Most people will probably agree with Mr. Rogers that, if Hearne, at least, had known what else was to be found in it, he could hardly have forborne to publish some more important extracts.

The author, Thomas Gascoigne, a man of good connexions, with two sisters married into noble families, was a native of Hunslet, a hamlet now absorbed in the suburbs of Leeds. He himself incidentally tells us that the year of his birth was 1403; and Mr. Rogers shows that he must have gone to Oxford not later than 1416, when he was only thirteen years old. Such early attendance at the universities was quite usual in that age. He seems to have resided at Oxford almost continually from that date to his death in 1458. He was made Doctor of Divinity in 1434, and the same year he was Chancellor of the University—a dignity to which he appears to have been several times re-elected in later years. His thoughts were much devoted to theology, and very little apparently to sound principles of grammar. His writing is the most careless that could well be imagined, full of redundancies and endless repetitions, besides being characterised by occasional solecisms in the use of the inflections which we should hardly have looked for in one who was in his own day eminent for learning. But, with all this, the matter of his comments is frequently of the very highest interest in connexion with the moral, religious, and intellectual struggles of the fifteenth century. Other writers of the time give us the details of civil war. Gascoigne is absolutely alone in showing us how the heart of the nation was stirred in matters affecting social and religious life.

His Liber Veritatum, commonly called his "Theological Dictionary," is a transcript made in accordance with directions contained in his will of a number of papers which he wrote and bequeathed to Sion Abbey, the whole being arranged under headings in alphabetical order. Eight or ten transcribers, Mr. Rogers informs us, must have been engaged upon the work; and the cost of copying could not have been less than £50 in money of the time. Evidently the worthy doctor did not undervalue his own performances when he made costly bequests to have them grouped and classified and transcribed in this manner. The case is somewhat like that of Zachary Boyd and his metrical version of the Bible; except that Gascoigne, who lived before printing was introduced into England, fortunately did not insist on the publication of an edition every year. Nor does he write such balderdash as the benefactor of Glasgow University, but his literary style is not a whit more polished. And though possibly he was not so much moved by mere vainglory as by a sincere desire to preserve the memory of some important facts, the fate which has overtaken his work has been pretty much what might have been expected when a man thinks a good deal of what he has done himself. It has slept for four centuries in MS., all but universally forgotten.

Nevertheless, as we have said, from an historical point of view there is matter in this book of very high interest indeed. Nor can we do more than indicate briefly the sort of revelations to be met with in its perusal. Occasionally, but it is comparatively seldom, there are crumbs of information even on political history. For instance, it is something to know, if Gascoigne is right about the matter, that Jack Cade's assumption of the name of Mortimer was not absolutely unwarranted, as he was descended from a bastard branch of that family. This we are told as a positive fact (p. 190); and it really, perhaps, makes the story of his insurrection a little more intelligible. It is added, but only as a rumour, that he was betrayed by one of his servants, when he was wounded and brought dead to London. But the main interest of the whole book centres in the state of the Church in the days when Gascoigne wrote; and what he has to tell us in this respect is certainly not a little remarkable.

What with schisms in the Papacy and a number of other abuses, the Court of Rome had already lost much of the respect that had been in old times paid to it. It was believed, Gascoigne informs us, that a Pope who should attempt to reform the Court of Rome would incur great danger of being poisoned or slain. That Court was the fountain from which flowed indulgences for sin and illegal "provisions" to benefices. Rome levied the first-fruits of newly elected bishops, and took care not to confirm their appointments until the tax was paid. It was an abuse that somewhat smacked of simony, and Bishop Pecock no doubt scandalised other good people besides Gascoigne by defending it. The venality of Rome had been publicly denounced in Rome itself by Friar Thomas de Calva, but he fell a martyr to the resentment of two of the cardinals, who caused him to be burnt as a heretic. Yet such was his reputed sanctity, and so numerous were the miracles ascribed to him, that we are told he would have been afterwards canonised by Pope Nicholas V. but for the opposition of the College.

In fact, it was precisely at its centre of government that the Church was most corrupt; and it was generally the higher benefices in every kingdom that were the most unworthily filled. There was a shameless traffic in these at Rome; and fat English livings were occasionally held by Italians, like Prosper Colonna, who, even after being deprived by Papal authority, when his archdeaconry of Canterbury was given away by Archbishop Chichele, addressed any Englishmen he met at Rome with the demand, "You English, give me back my benefice!" In a state of such utter laxity it is not wonderful to hear that boys were promoted to bishoprics and fools got preferment, while old divines and scholars were neglected. Gascoigne himself feels a little personal soreness on this point, contrasting his own case with that of an empty-headed fellow who was Archdeacon of Oxford, and held twelve prebends besides, without ever having been ordained. This man never visited any of his benefices; he was utterly illiterate, and was in the habit of getting drunk daily. Many of the bishops, too, were absentees attending on the Court; for the Courts of princes did not exercise a much more favourable influence on the Church than did that of Rome. Even the pious and well-meaning Henry VI. made things worse rather than better by selecting bishops as his confessors contrary to the practice of former kings, who merely chose good divines and left the bishops free to attend to their dioceses.

Unfortunately, the one bishop who appears to have been the ablest, and who was probably the best of his time, was looked upon by Gascoigne, and many others as the special enemy of the Church. Bishop Pecock does not seem to have been one who neglected his episcopal duties; but he maintained, in opposition to the Puritan feeling of the day, that preaching was no necessary part of a bishop's functions. The main object of Pecock's writings was to stem the tide of Lollardy by argument, and vindicate ecclesiastical institutions and usages against the constant objection that there was no sufficient warrant for them in Scripture. But the remedy was considered worse than the disease, for Pecock seemed to disparage the authority of Scripture itself, and adopt something of a rationalistic tone. This gave deep offence to the religious prejudices of the vulgar, and Pecock was compelled to abjure before men who were certainly far from his equals in theology. But Gascoigne is particularly bitter against him for putting forth the doctrines that bishops were not bound to preach, and that they did not sin in paying first-fruits to Rome for their bishoprics. It was these declarations, he seems to think, that gave birth to the tumults and insurrections that preceded the civil war.

It is impossible to do justice within the limits of an article like this to the many subjects of interest contained in the book before us. Prefixed to it is a very interesting and well-written historical Introduction by the editor, which the reader will find of considerable service. It is rather astounding, however, to meet with such a statement as at p. xxii., that the despotism of Henry VIII. made England, till the time of Cromwell, a third-rate Power in Europe. This is certainly a new view of history.

Mr. Rogers tells us that he has read the whole of Gascoigne's MS. through, and that there is little matter of interest in the purely theological part of the work. But has he omitted nothing else that is of value? I copied a few years ago some extracts from Dr. James's transcript in Vitellius C. ix., which he seems to have omitted; and, among others, under the heading "Rex," I find the following relating to Henry VI., which surely is of some importance:—

"Item, idem Rex debet quinquies centena millia librarum aliis, et non habet unde vivat honeste, nec unde debita sua solvere poterit; et tamen consiliarii ejusdem Regis quos fecit dominos de garcionibus instanter consulunt Regi quod non resumatur redditus regios quos ipse consiliariis et aliis dedit; et non permittunt petitionem parliamenti audiri quod instanter petiit Regem resumere illa quae a seipso alienavit et a suis successoribus; quae resumptio esset juridica autoritate totius parliamenti. Et tamen idem Rex ad hoc non concessit; eo quod praedicti mali consilarii dixerunt ei quod hoc esset dedecus Regi; et tamen majus dedecus et majus malum sequitur ex hoc quod non facit sicut parliamentum suum petiit fieri, eo quod Rex illius regni nec habuit unde viveret nec unde debita sua excessiva solveret nisi de collectis factis per totum regnum suum. Item idem Rex, quantumcumque irascitur cum servo suo probato falso, in crastino ejusdem irae obliviscitur, et applaudit et favet eidem falso consiliario ac si nunquam peccasset idem falsus consiliarius contra Regem suum."

Apart from the account here given of Henry VI., I am astonished that a passage so interesting for the feeling it expresses touching parliamentary government should have escaped the notice of such a student of constitutional history as Mr. Rogers.

JAMES GAIRDNER.

Foreign Secretaries of the Nineteenth Century to 1834. By Percy M. Thornton. In 2 vols. (W. H. Allen.)

MR. THORNTON is, we are afraid, doomed to a great disappointment. He has set his heart upon accomplishing the impossible, and there can be but one end to his labours. The wave of public opinion is flowing in a channel which he dreads, and he has undertaken the duty of diverting its course. In these evil days there are politicians who can even regard with equanimity "a Lord Mayor's show degraded to such a commonplace level that the good citizens of London do not care to walk across the street to behold what is fast becoming the shadow of its former splendour;" and such persons Mr. Thornton recoils from with horror. Mr. Canning, "we may be quite sure, would not have been found endeavouring to deprive us" of the pleasure which attends that ennobling spectacle. That was a great merit in Mr. Canning's character; but unfortunately there existed side by side with this virtue defects which prevented him from rising to the proud position occupied by his rival in the House of Commons. Lord Castlereagh is the statesman whom "with pride we designate our hero," and this feeling leads the enthusiastic biographer into some very strange conclusions. The cries of exultation which burst from the lips of many of the bystanders at the burial of Lord Castlereagh in Westminster Abbey could not, fierce as was then the struggle for supremacy in the Senate, have sounded with pleasure in the ears of his political opponents; but such a scene should at least make the historian hesitate before he describes the funeral of Lord Castlereagh in that national mausoleum as the tribute of a grateful nation. The peace which was framed at Vienna is the test of the foreign policy of Lord Castlereagh, and that must decide whether his views for the settlement of Europe were good or bad. Mr. Thornton contemplates the provisions of the peace, and pronounces them very good. One part of Poland has been annexed to Austria, and another has been absorbed by Russia. The minor States of Italy and Germany have ceased to possess a separate existence, and are merged in greater kingdoms. Holland and Belgium have long since been dis severed from the unequal yoke which bound together two nations of opposite tastes and opinions. "Turkey in Europe," in the forcible language of Mr. Thornton, "has shrivelled up, and Greece become a kingdom, while Austria has lost the leading position in Germany." All this he recognises, but still exclaims that "the general tenor" of the provisions of the peace remains unaltered. Mr. Thornton may, perhaps, desire to change his eulogy of the work of Lord Castlereagh for the plea that at all events it was in accordance with the views of his supporters; but even that defence cannot be accepted as correct. There were politicians—Southey is one of them—of the same party as the Foreign Secretary of 1815 who ardently longed for the creation at that time of a great power in the North of Germany and for the formation of a United Italy.

The author of these Lives of the Foreign Secretaries of 1800 to 1834 has evidently come to his task with strong opinions as to the course of action which the rulers of England should adopt in reference to the other Powers of Europe; but it is only fair to acknowledge that for the most part he holds his opinions well in check. If, in referring to a well-known literary Review, he speaks—somewhat incorrectly, by-the-by, as to fact—of "the sober pages edited by the refined and eloquent Croker," there is, fortunately for the happiness of his readers, little trace in the chapters of this work of the peculiar sobriety which distinguishes Mr. Croker's essays on politics or literature. The views of Mr. Thornton place him in antagonism to both the great political parties in the State; and it is, perhaps, for this reason that he has forborne from bringing his own theories more frequently under the notice of his readers. To a sympathiser with the "forward" school of foreign policy, the sentiments on the great struggles of the European Powers with the forces of Napoleon which were expressed by Mr. Fox and Lord Grenville must seem utterly opposed to the true interests of his country. Even a strong Liberal, little as he could sympathise with the longings of Mr. Thornton, could not feel much surprise if he condemned the speeches of the prominent Whigs of that period. But Mr. Thornton, instead of yielding to the temptations which beset his path at this part of his labours, has endeavoured to show that there were both justice and moderation in the arguments of Mr. Fox and his colleague in the Upper House.

There is, it must be confessed, a delightful feeling of good temper about these pages; their author regards all the Foreign Secretaries of this century with admiration, and lauds them all to the skies. If his testimony can be accepted as conclusive, the world has allowed the recollection of some of the most eloquent speeches which ever fell from the lips of English orators to perish. Even the late Lord Harrowby, whose name is only remembered because, at the time of the first Reform Bill, he exerted himself to secure its passing through an unwilling House, is described "as essentially an eloquent man;" and "a great speech of his at an early meeting of the Bible Society" is revived from the obscurity of sixty years since. When Lord Dudley took his seat in the House of Lords, in 1825, he discharged the time-honoured task of moving the address "in a world-renowned speech," which had the good fortune to combine "ingenuity and precision of thought" with "elegance of style." Mr. Thornton is perhaps the only man in England who could, without a smile, bring himself to put on record the sentence that, "as an orator, Lord Castlereagh cannot aspire to the highest rank."

One piece of good fortune has fallen to the lot of Mr. Thornton. He has been allowed, through the liberality of their present owner, to examine the papers of the first Lord Bexley, and to reproduce in facsimile a few of the letters which that forgotten Chancellor of the Exchequer received from his colleagues in public life. No politician of the present century has dropped out of the knowledge of mankind more completely than the fortunate Minister who for nearly twelve years had the care of England's finances. But the importance of the times in which he lived, and the prominence of the statesmen among whom he moved, would justify the publication of a memoir of his life. It should be Mr. Thornton's duty to revive the recollection of Mr. Vansittart. The work should prove a success, but that gratifying result could only be attained by his learning to express himself with greater clearness than in the Lives of the Foreign Secretaries. There are many sentences in this work which, like sour grapes, set the teeth of the reader on edge.

W. P. COURTNEY.

The Mythe of Life: Four Sermons; with an Introduction on the Social Mission of the Church. By Charles William Stubbs, M.A., Vicar of Granborough. (Macmillan.)

WE could have wished that Mr. Stubbs had chosen a more appropriate title for his valuable little book. The Mythe of Life formed the subject of a lecture on the tenth book of Plato's Republic, which was delivered by him in St. Jude's Church, Whitechapel. And some sort of connexion between it and the subsequent sermons may certainly be traced; but the title fails to indicate the thoroughly practical character of most of the volume. The point which Mr. Stubbs urges with great power and no little eloquence is the larger range which Christianity must take if she is to retain her hold upon the masses. Religion must not only deal with future happiness and distant blessings, but do something to brighten and beautify the life that now is. The dulness of village life and the squalor of town life are the practical difficulties which beset the clergyman in his endeavours to ameliorate the condition of the poorer classes. To expect that high spiritual graces will flourish where decency and morality barely exist, is not less extravagant than to look for elevated hopes and desires where the daily round is made up of labour and sleep and feeding, and the whole existence is "of the earth earthy." Mr. Stubbs has seen too much of the realities of village life to join in the usual rhapsodies of poets and novelists, and is not the man to ask an agricultural labourer, "What is your highest idea of human happiness?" and be shocked with the reply: "A public-house fire roaring up the chimney, and a fiddle going." He thinks it his duty as a clergyman to provide his poorer neighbours with stimulants which shall not be vicious, and with pleasures which shall not be merely gross and sensual. His plan is to give the people in church cheerful services, hearty music, and simple sermons; to provide workmen's clubs and temperance coffee-rooms where the interest of the public and not that of the publican is the first thought; to circulate books and newspapers, and have plenty of "penny readings" and popular concerts, and to do all this as a part of the clerical work of the parish. And, lastly, he suggests another means by which some rays of light may penetrate the heavy atmosphere. "Let us make our village school-rooms into picture galleries and museums of art." He shows that, at a very small cost, the walls might be hung with objects more interesting and attractive than the maps and diagrams which now scarce relieve the bareness. Copies of good pictures, portraits of the heroes of our own country and other countries, and works of art selected for the specific end of training the taste of the children might be bought for little, and form the subject of many an entertaining lesson.

Mr. Stubbs, no doubt, is supreme in his own village school; but we shrewdly suspect that a committee of farmers, especially in these days of agricultural depression, would pooh-pooh his suggestion and decline to incur expenses which, after all, the auditor might justly disallow. Such matters must be left to the generosity of an aesthetic and enthusiastic rector, or to the young ladies of the Hall, or to the good offices of the Kyrle Society.

With the main purpose of the book we have no fault to find. On the contrary, it deserves, and has, our heartiest approval. The country parson has the best opportunities for benefiting the labourer if he will but avail himself of them. He is generally a landowner, and might surely in these times reap advantage himself by taking the labourer into partnership in the cultivation of his glebe. He is personally acquainted with the dwellings of the poor, and might surely do his best to render them decent and wholesome. He has had the parish committed to his charge; and there is nothing in his commission to show that his care is to be restricted to the souls, and not to extend to the bodies in which they are enshrined.

CHARLES J. ROBINSON.

The Georgics of Virgil. Translated into English Verse. By James Rhoades, Assistant-Master at Sherborne School. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

It is always pleasant to welcome a scholarly version of the Roman Hesiod, to ring again the changes on the corn, trees, cattle, and bees, whether under the inspiration of Virgil's text studied as by Mr. Doddridge Blackmore in his classic market-garden, or polished by Mr. Rhoades in the scholarly cloisters of Sherborne. No exercise gives alike greater nicety and exactness to the Muse; none tends to such well-weighed thought and mature production of which the painstaking and tentative grower need not be ashamed. The hardship is that space for quotation is perforce limited nowadays. It is simply vain to attempt even a taste of each Georgic. Even an admired sample of a favourite passage no sooner charms with a new and happy version than stern discipline bids us defer to a less-encumbered season the contemplation of the mysteries of grafting and inserting eyes, of the Corycian sage, and the trim, smiling gardens of Paestum. Howbeit, it is delightful ever to hark back to the beneficent guidance which reformed the golden age ("Ante Jovem nulli subigebant arva coloni": Georg. i. 125-60.)

"Before Jove
Fields knew no taming hand of husbandmen
To mark the plain, or mete with boundary line.
E'en this was impious; for the common stock
They gathered, and the earth of her own will
All things more freely, no man bidding, bore.
He to black serpents gave their venom bane,
And bade the wolf go prowl and ocean toss;
Shook from the leaves their honey, put fire
away,
And curbed the random river's running wine:
That use by gradual dint of thought on thought
Might forge the various arts, with furrow's help
The cornblade win, and strike out hidden fire
From the flint's heart.
Then divers arts arose. Toil conquered all,
Remorseless toil, and poverty's shrewd push
In times of hardship. Ceres was the first Set mortals on with toils to turn the sod
When now the awful groves 'gan fail to bear
Acorns and arbutus, and her wonted food
Dodona gave no more. Soon, too, the corn
Gat sorrow's increase, that an evil blight
Ate up the stalks, and thistle reared her spines
An idler in the fields; the crops die down;
Upsprings instead a shaggy growth of burrs
And cat-trops; and amidst the corn-fields trim
Unfruitful darnel and wild oats have sway.
Wherefore, unless thou shalt with ceaseless rake
The weeds pursue, with shouting scare the birds,
Prune with thine hook the dark field's matted shade,
Pray down the showers, all vainly shalt thou eye,
Alack! thy neighbour's heaped up harvest-mow,
And in the green wood from a shaken oak
Seek solace for thine hunger."

In verses 144, 145 we like better Mr. Blackmore's rendering,

"Then came the various arts: Oh! grand success
Of reckless toil and resolute distress."

But in 155 the same translator englishes "votisque vocaveris umbram," "And call with many a vow the shower to aid." Perhaps Mr. Rhoades's version is here the more terse. An excellent specimen passage might be quoted without detriment to the new translator from Georg. i. 370-86. The premonitory signs of rain, and indeed the portents which were harbingers of Caesar's death, are equally well rendered. Such passages breathe a classic atmosphere, and suggest a lively appreciation of Virgil's courtly, cultured muse. But we must cull a few lines on grafting and inoculating from Georg. ii. 65-82—"scilicet omnibus est," &c.

"But the rough arbutus with walnut fruit
Is grafted: so have barren planes ere now Stout apples borne, with chestnut flower the beech,
The mountain-ash with pear bloom whitened o'er,
And swine crunched acorns 'neath the boughs of elms.
Nor is the method of inserting eyes
And grafting one; for where the buds push forth
Amidst the bark and burst the membranes thin,
E'en on the knot a narrow rift is made
Wherein from some strong tree a germ they pen,
And to the moist rhind hid it cleave and grow.
Or other wise in knotless trunks is hewn
A breach, and deep into the solid grain
A path with wedges cloven: then fruitful slips
Are set herein—and no long time—behold!
To heaven upshot with teeming boughs the tree
Strange leaves admires and fruitage not its own."

It does not strike us that there is so much power in the rendering of the last four lines as in Mr. Blackmore's conclusion of the same passage, where we read:

"Nor long
Till a great tree with laughing boughs leaps out,
And looks up in astonishment and doubt
At stranger leaves and fruit that must be wrong."

Fain would we take another leap to the scenery of the Third Georgic, to Mantua, and

"Where Mincius winds more vast in lazy coils
And rims his margin with the tender reed," and, sallying thence, scan with modern critics the points of the cattle of old. One verbal question we must advert to. When invoking Pales, in iii. 294 et seq., to keep the sheep through the winter months in well-littered sheds, Mr. Rhoades talks of "pen-cotes" (p. 77). We doubt authority for this word, whether in English dictionary or local glossary.

JAMES DAVIES.

NEW NOVELS.

The Free Lances: a Romance of the Mexican Valley. By Capt. Mayne Reid. In 3 vols. (Remington & Co.)

The Future Marquis. By Catherine Childar. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

The Net with the Golden Meshes. By Matthew Seton. (Remington.)

The Heirs of Errington. By Emma Jane Worboise, Author of "Joan Carisbroke," &c. (James Clarke & Co.)

CAPT. MAYNE REID's novels are always heavily spiced with adventure. It would be scarcely fair to criticise them as works of literary art, for we imagine their highest purpose is to be entertaining. In this they usually succeed, and The Free Lances is no exception to the Captain's rule. "Cut and thrust" might have been its motto, and it is full of the blood-and-thunder business so dear to the hearts of boys, if not to the average Mudie readers. It opens with a picture of certain volunteers for Texas at New Orleans, the chosen captain of the band being the hero of the novel—or rather one of its heroes—Florence Kearney, an Irishman. He is in love with Luisa Valverde, whose father, a Mexican refugee, is a victim of the tyrant Santa Anna. Kearney has a rival, both in love and war, in Don Carlos Santander, with whom he fights a duel, and whose life he spares—an action which he lives to repent. The one having called the other a “cur of an Irishman,” and the latter having retorted with “cur of a Creole,” the feud becomes, of course, a deadly one, leading ultimately to the death of the base wretch Santander under extraordinary circumstances, which we must leave the reader to discover for himself. The truly graphic style of the novel may be gathered from this description of Santander’s bearing, after his card has been demanded by Kearney:—

“‘Take it!’ hissed the Creole, flinging his card on the table. Then, glaring around as if his glance would annihilate all, he clutched hold of his hat, bowed haughtily to Don Ignacio, looked daggers at his daughter, and strode out into the street.”

All which is very fine, and to the manner born of a Spanish or Mexican bravo; and that would be cold and contemptible criticism which could stop to enquire how Don Carlos could hiss out the words “Take it!” In the duel to the death, the reader will be in fear for some time lest his favourite hero, Kearney, should be pinked; but the Irishman happens to know tierce as well as carte, and, being able to keep a straight arm also, all goes off as it should do, and he remains the conqueror. The hair-breadth escapes which the gallant volunteer is taken through in the course of these three volumes are truly wonderful, and it would be really too bad to attempt a summary of them. The course of true love runs anything but smoothly for some time, but in the end all is adjusted, and two pairs of turtle doves are made happy. The very titles of some of the chapters will show what a treat there is in store for the reader. Take, for example:—“A Lady in the Case,” “A Colonel in Full Feather,” “Do your Darndest,” “Tyrant and Tool,” “A Wooden-legged Lothario,” “A Pair of Beautiful Petitioners,” “A Woman’s Scheme,” “In the Sewers,” “A Mysterious Missive,” “The Play of Eyes,” “Over the Cliff,” “A Danae’s Shower,” “Under Arrest,” and “Surrender.” The “reading” of this novel has been very badly done. The well-known Latin phrase appears as “res augustae domi”; we get Luisa and Louisa, Talpam and Tlalpam; arriere pensee, both words without accents; “Patriar y Libertad,” &c.

Miss Childar’s story, if not very strong in talent, is exceedingly readable. If it be, as we imagine, a first effort, it is very promising. Most persons will follow with interest the fortunes of Tom Hayling, a young artist, who afterwards becomes Marquis of Dorset, and of the girl who remains true to him through every vicissitude, Mary Lamont. It is something in a novel when the writer so draws her chief characters that you feel a genuine desire to know what becomes of them, and this is certainly the case as regards the present story. There is a wicked, undermining girl in the story, one Zoe Ridsdale, who makes the running for Mary, and we were rather curious to know what would become of her, for die she must according to the exigencies of the story. Miss Childar, nevertheless, disposes of Zoe by an exceedingly bold stroke, and one that would not disgrace a practised craftsman in the art of storytelling; yet we are bound to say that the manner in which this naughty woman leaves the world is a good deal more ingenious than probable. We noticed several things which, in our opinion, disfigured the book, notably another advertisement of Cockle’s pills. Now, as regards our literature, Capt. Burnaby did quite enough for Cockle. Just as there were strong men before Agamemnon, so there were pill-makers before Cockle, as indeed there have been since; and it only seems fair to give one of the other preparations a chance.

One scarcely knows what to say of Mr. Seton’s volume. It is certainly not without talent; but the humorous strokes are thrown on in such a slap-dash manner as to become burlesque. The Net with the Golden Meshes is the story retold of the collapse of a great Scottish bank. The life of splendour and luxury led by the chief director, and the ruin he ultimately brings on hundreds of families, are well depicted. Of course, there is a love-story in the case, but it has a terrible ending, Mr. Seton pointing by this example the moral of the far-reaching misery and ruin which these gigantic bank catastrophes involve. But there is surely exaggeration in the manner in which Mr. McRory, the rich bank director—a religious Pecksniff, and worse—is drawn. And when Mr. Seton describes him as “an active member of the Scottish Sabbath Desecration Alliance,” he has surely inadvertently omitted to place the word “Anti-” before the title of the society. When this amiable being is further described as “proffering” the elements to the attendants at the sacrament, we presume that the word “proffering” is meant. Far be it from us to place any limits upon the stupidity and ignorance of rich parvenus like Mr. McRory, but when a man pays seven thousand three hundred guineas for a picture at Christie’s he certainly ought to know whether it is “a J. M. Turner or a Linnle.” This Mr. McRory does not know, and he speaks of another picture by Faed, for which he also gave a large sum, as the work of “some-one beginning with an F—‘Frail,’ or ‘Firth,’ or ‘Frith,’ or some name like that; anyhow, it was the man who painted the ‘Derby Day’ and the ‘Railway Station.’” While Mr. McRory is robbing the poor, he is so consistent in his daily life that he would refrain from opening a letter on the Lord’s-day, or from taking a look into his Monday’s newspaper lest it should have been printed late on the Sabbath night! The plot of this short story is very slight, but it is worked out well enough.

Miss Worboise holds a unique position as a writer for that large class of persons who like novels, but like them with a distinctly religious tone. Her stories do not exhibit that masterly touch which we recognise as genius, but they still have many merits, chief of which is that they are always readable. The Heirs of Errington is no exception in this respect, and there is no doubt that it will be very popular with the author’s numerous admirers.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

The Collected Works of Francis Sibson, M.D., F.R.S. Edited by William M. Ord, M.D. In 4 vols. (Macmillan.) The late Dr. Sibson was one of the most industrious and painstaking of observers. At an early period of his career his attention was drawn to the changes in form and mutual relation of the internal viscera occurring under various conditions of health and disease; and he followed up this subject with untiring perseverance during a long and laborious life. Many, perhaps most, investigations in the domain of physiology and medicine are unavoidably ephemeral. Their results are speedily incorporated into wider generalisations, or replaced by others founded on newer and more accurate methods. It is the privilege of anatomical enquiries that they are less subject than any others to this law of absorption and replacement. Their value, such as it is, remains unaffected by the lapse of time. This is the excuse, if excuse be needed, for the re-issue of Sibson’s papers in a collected form; though the somewhat luxurious fashion in which the book is got up may doubtless be ascribed to the piety of survivors. Twenty-six papers are included in the collection. Of these a great majority are anatomical in substance if not in name; a few are concerned with the physiological action and therapeutic uses of certain narcotics. Those belonging to the former group are unquestionably of greater permanent value than those included in the latter. All are marked by the distinguishing qualities of the author’s mind—unwearied industry and what may almost be called a passion for accuracy and precision of statement, even when this does not seem to be called for by the intrinsic importance of the matter in hand. He had the artist’s reverence for every detail, however trifling, which might contribute to the completeness of the picture. The editor deserves much praise for the taste and judgment with which he has performed his task. The short biographical notice of the author is a model of its kind; it tells us all that we need know about him, and nothing that we have no right to know.

The Dentists’ Register for 1881. (Published by Spottiswoode and Co. for the General Medical Council.) A list, issued by authority, of persons registered under the Dental Act. The most interesting part of the volume is a table on p. 24 showing the nature of the qualifications in virtue of which the names of 5,266 persons have been put on the Register. We find that 565 have obtained licences in dental surgery from various examining boards in the United Kingdom; three are doctors in dental surgery of American universities; while no less than 4,698 owe their place on the Register to the fact that they were, on their own declaration, in bona fide practice of dentistry before July 1878. It follows, therefore, that registration does not, at present, afford any guarantee to the public that the registered person has been taught his business, or that he is, in any sense, competent to carry it on.

The Chain of Ages traced in its Prominent Links by Holy Scripture. By W. B. Galloway. (Sampson Low.) This is a book which it is an impertinence in an author to call upon a reviewer to read. The first and most obvious duty of a writer who undertakes to handle the chronology of ancient history is to make himself acquainted with all the materials for the work which have been brought to light by modern research. Any discussion of the subject is worthless which ignores the monumental evidence of Egypt and Assyria. Of all this, however, Mr. Galloway is not only utterly ignorant, but when he does show a glimmering consciousness of it he contrives to misunderstand his authorities. But enough has been said of a book which believes the age of the world to be revealed in the height of the "Great Pyramid," which finds the "lost tribes" in the English people, and which tells us that "the Ethiopian tyrant and Sophi or philosopher, Sesostris, by race designated 'Aithiops,' also pronounced and written 'Aphiops,' and by abbreviation 'Phiops,' varied as Aikheops or Aighiops, and thence 'Kheops' and Aegyptus, [is] the same person with 'Osymandyas.'" And yet the man who can write thus presumes to determine the chronology of the ancient world. Before finishing with Mr. Galloway, we hope for ever, we would ask how he came to know that, in the year B.C. 1796,

"the burning out of the region of Sodom and Gomorrah . . . which had been going on from generation to generation . . . caused a subsidence of the land to a lower level than the Ghor of the Arabah . . . and the waters therefore spreading and accumulating over a wide surface produced the flood in the time of Ogyges?"

We are afraid that these statements will not gain the assent either of geologists or of any visitors to the Dead Sea who can use their eyes.

Das Goldland Ofir. By Ad. Soetbeer. (Berlin: Herbig.) Dr. Soetbeer argues with considerable ingenuity, in favour of placing the Biblical land of Ophir on the western side of Arabia, in the neighbourhood of the present district of Asyr, where, according to Agatharkides, gold was found. The arguments, however, with which he attempts to set aside the identification of Ophir with the Indian Abhira are not convincing. He has not fairly met the philological arguments, more especially the remarkable similarity of the Hebrew thukiyim, "peacocks," to the Tamil toyei. His chief argument is based on the assumption that the gold brought from Ophir to Solomon was the product of a single expedition. But there is nothing in the Biblical account to justify this; on the contrary, it would seem from 1 Kings x. 22 that expeditions returned home every three years, and that the large amount of gold collected by Solomon was the combined result of these. Dr. Soetbeer is not likely to find other critics to agree with him in thinking that the passage he quotes from Eupolemos is other than a confused echo of Biblical history.

A Book of the Beginnings. By Gerald Massey. In 2 vols. (Williams and Norgate.) A book of this kind must excite a feeling of pity in the most icy-hearted critic. It bears evidence of unstinted labour, no cost has been spared in its production, and, above all, its author is a man of genius who thoroughly believes in all that he has written. And yet we are safe in predicting that no other sane man will be found to do the same. Mr. Massey finds the Egyptians everywhere. They have colonised the British Isles, have inspired the books of the Old Testament, and have even made their way to New Zealand. The method by which these conclusions are reached makes one despair of driving into the heads of the present generation any idea of what is meant by scientific enquiry. Mr. Massey goes to language to support his theories, and imagines that long lists of Egyptian words placed side by side with English or Hebrew or Maori words of more or less similar sound and meaning are enough to prove their common relationship. Act, for example, is the Egyptian "akh, verb of action; t, participial terminal." Can Mr. Massey, with the irony permissible to poets, be simply laughing at us? If so, the joke is somewhat heavy and over-long.

William Ellery Channing: a Centennial Memory. By Charles T. Brooks. (Boston, U.S.A.: Roberts.) Channing was a good and, from some points of view, a great man, but had we not known these things before we are pretty sure that we should have been unable to have extracted them from the pages of this biography. A weaker book we have seldom come upon. To find a fitting parallel we must turn to some of the silly Lives of modern saints—ecstatic nuns and so forth—which are from time to time put forth by the less-cultivated members of the Latin Church. Edification is the common excuse for this very feeble sort of literature. We do not know whether the American Unitarians have found it necessary to say anything to arrest judgment in Mr. Brooks's case. If they have done so we would remind them that silly biographies, though they may give some pleasure to a very few stupid people, and even be of real service during the contest for the election of a President, are, in themselves, an evil; and that it is little short of an outrage to write them about good and thoughtful people who are no longer with us. All English-speaking people honour the memory of Channing for many good reasons quite apart from his theological convictions, one of the most prominent of which is that he was an enemy of slavery before the great movement from which it received its death-blow had taken form. He was, indeed, an almost absolutely consistent advocate of rational freedom in nearly every direction, and yet never uttered his opinions in a clamorous or vulgar manner.

The Manliness of Christ. By Thomas Hughes, Q.C. (Macmillan.) The greater part of this work has already appeared in Good Words. It has, however, been carefully revised, and, if we mistake not, undergone considerable enlargement. The tone is orthodox throughout, but it is a wide and liberal orthodoxy far different from that of our old divines and most of their living representatives. To criticise such a book as it deserves would carry us very far away, and into regions where it is not at the present wise to enter. Thus much may be said, that assuming the Gospel narratives to be in the main true chronicles of events, and that the miraculous portions of them are an integral part of that truth, we do not believe that Mr. Hughes has overstrained his facts or painted his picture in too deep colours. Mr. Hughes is not by any means a commonplace writer or thinker; whatever he says on a grave subject, whether we agree with him or not, is worthy of serious thought. The following passage on miracles is highly instructive, though it suffers much in being cut off from its context:—

"It seems to me to be going quite beyond what can be proved, or even fairly assumed, to speak of His miracles as supernatural, in the sense that no man has ever done or can ever do the like. The evidence is surely all the other way, and seems rather to indicate that if we could only have lived up to the standard which we acknowledge in our inmost hearts to be the true one—could only have obeyed every motion and warning of the voice of God speaking in our hearts from the day when we first became conscious of and could hear it—if, in other words, our wills had from the first been disciplined, like the will of Christ, so as to be in perfect accord with the will of God—I see no reason to doubt that we too should have gained the power and the courage to show signs, of if you please, to work miracles, as Christ and His apostles worked them."

On whatever subject Mr. Hughes writes, speaks, or lectures, we may be sure of having historical and political illustrations; sometimes they are very apt, at others we cannot but think them incongruous. We fear the latter may be said of his noble words concerning John Brown the anti-slavery martyr. We are not concerned to discuss whether any mention of him in the precise place where it occurs is in the best possible taste, but if it be not we can quite easily forgive him, for the rising generation are but too likely to let John Brown drop out of memory, and we cannot afford, for many a day to come, to lose the stimulus that the contemplation of that noble and simple life is calculated to give.

Eastern Proverbs and Emblems, illustrating Old Truths. By the Rev. J. Long. (Trübner.) The title-page of this work is likely to mislead, especially as the book forms a part of "Trübner's Oriental Series." It ought to have borne some such words as "Biblical Emblems explained and compared with Eastern Proverbs." Mr. Long has selected from the Bible a number of texts, in the greater part of which some simile or comparison is contained, each of which he accompanies by moral reflections suggestive of sermon notes, with a few proverbs appended by way of conclusion. To the religious world the book may possibly prove remarkably attractive; but it can have no value for scholars. As by far the greater part of the volume is occupied by Mr. Long's moralising, the fairest way of dealing with it will be to cite, without comment, one of its briefer sections. The following specimen will speak for itself:—

"THE BURDEN OF SIN.—MATT. II. 30.

"A burthen presses heavily on the chest as the tenderest part, so sin on the heart, provided it be not past feeling, Eph. 5, 14; Christ, pressed by the weight of the world's sins, sweat blood, Luke 22, 44; a burthen impedes action, so does sin, Heb. 12, 1; believers are to bear one another's burthens Gal. 6, 6; not so did the priest who passed by on the other side of the way, Luke 10, 31; the Jewish law ordered one to relieve even the ass of an enemy. Sin is to be carried not as a golden chain round the neck, but as an iron chain round the feet. The devil, when he mocked Eve, did not see sin a burthen, neither did the old world when it ridiculed Noah's building the ark, Gen. 3, 4, 5. A burthen is unpleasant.

"China—Forethought is easy, repentance is hard.

"Bengal—Faith in God is the root of all devotion; deliverance from evil is only her servant.

"Japan—Good physic is bitter."

Aristology; or, the Art of Dining. By Thomas Walker, M.A. With Preface and Notes by Felix Summerly. (Bell.) The editor of this little book need not have disguised himself under a nom de plume. He deserves the thanks of all those—and they are many—whose digestion compels them to refuse the copious, but ill-judged, hospitality of modern dinner-givers. Bad as was the state of things against which Walker lifted up his testimony nearly half-a-century ago, it was hardly worse than it is now, notwithstanding the great changes which increased intercourse with the Continent has brought about. The sacrifice of comfort to show, the absence of originality and invention, the lack of any guiding principle, are as conspicuous as ever. Reform is urgently needed; and Walker's Cobbett-like plainness of speech may perhaps do something to lift the average Amphitryon out of the groove into which, consciously or unconsciously, he has allowed himself to settle.

NOTES AND NEWS.

DR. SCHLIEMANN has lately returned to Athens from a tour of exploration in the Troad, and has since started for Berlin. Among other discoveries he believes that he has ascertained the site of the altar of the Twelve Gods.

LIEUTS. CONDER AND MANSELL are now at Jerusalem. They have found that they cannot begin work in the Hauran at present, in consequence of the Druse troubles in that district.

For the second time an offer of a Professorship of English in one of the leading colleges in the United States has been offered, in most flattering terms, to Mr. Henry Sweet; and on this occasion the offer is backed by the guarantee of a thousand a year, and the help of a tutor for class-work, for eight months' lectures in the year. But, as absence from England means absence from Anglo-Saxon MSS., and severance from old friends and from those students whom Mr. Sweet is forming here into the new phonetic school of which he is the acknowledged head, he has felt obliged to decline the graceful and tempting offer of the American scholars to join them permanently in their teaching work in the States; though he has expressed the hope that, as soon as he is clear of the four books he has now in hand, he may be able to pass a winter in America and deliver one course of lectures there.

THE Clarendon Press are just publishing an edition of the Agamemnon of Aeschylus by Mr. Arthur Sidgwick, of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. The Agamemnon is well known to be so hard a play that it is only read at schools in the upper forms, and only there because of its incomparable beauty. This edition is, accordingly, rather more elaborate than the school editions of easier plays, and is intended to meet the needs both of sixth forms at schools and of university students.

MESSRS. C. KEAN PAUL AND CO. will publish immediately A New Commentary on the Gospel according to Matthew, being the first volume of a Commentary on the Historical Books of the New Testament, on which Mr. E. B. Nicholson, the principal librarian of the London Institution, has been for many years engaged. One marked characteristic of it will be the abundance of "Jewish" illustrations from the Talmud and other sources. Another will be the entire absence of theological discussion, and of the implication of particular theological opinions. Our new New Testament—An Explanation of the Need and a Criticism of the Fulfilment, also by Mr. Nicholson, is about to be published by Messrs. Rivington.

MESSRS. BEMROSE AND SONS have in the press The Chronicles of the Collegiate Church, or Free Chapel of All Saints, Derby, by Mr. J. Charles Cox, author of Notes on the Churches of Derbyshire, and Mr. W. H. St. John Hope. The work is compiled chiefly from the churchwardens' accounts and books of orders, which are complete from 1465 to the present time, and contain copious inventories of service-books, jewels, and vestments. It will be illustrated by thirteen plates of monuments, bell-marks, stained glass, &c.; and the head and tail-pieces are copied mainly from the beaten iron-work in the church and the details of the noble tower. Full Indices are given of persons and subjects.

MESSRS. W. SWAN SONNENSCHIEIN AND ALLEN's announcements include a second edition of Prantl and Vine's Elementary Text-book of Botany; a Student's Handbook of German Literature, by E. Nicholson; an addition to their series of Linear Blackboard (Outline) Wall-maps, viz., the Two Hemispheres; and a Comparison of Foreign Standards of Teaching, with an Introduction, by Mr. A. Sonnenschein. This last volume will also contain the new Standards just proposed by the Code Conference Committee.

MR. BROWNING'S Balaustion's Adventures is now in its third edition.

THE English Spelling Reform Association have addressed through their president, Mr. A. H. Sayce, a memorial to the Educational Committee of the Privy Council, praying that certain changes may be made in the present Code, and also offering to lay their views personally before the Committee by means of a deputation. The special complaint of the spelling reformers is that the present Code does not allow children, when examined in Standards I. and II., to offer any other system of spelling than that commonly in use. It is suggested that, as school-books have now been printed according to more than one of the improved systems, such new systems might now be permitted as alternatives by the school inspectors in both writing and dictation.

MRS. COWDEN CLARKE has nearly ready a new and revised edition of her Concordance to Shakspeare. We hope that it will include his poems; refer to lines as well as acts and scenes; separate words of different meaning spelt alike, as tear verb and tear (teer) noun; distinguish the senses of every word, as Schmidt's admirable Lexicon does; and give specimens, at least, of the chief uses of auxiliaries and particles, as Schmidt also does.

DR. EUG. OSWALD is engaged upon compiling a series of short articles on contemporary English authors for the Biographisches Lexikon der zeitgenössischen Litteratur, which the firm of J. Meyer will shortly publish at Leipzig, under the editorship of F. Bornmüller, as well as for a new edition of the well-known Conversations Lexikon, published by the same firm.

A NEW edition of Luther's complete works is now in course of publication at the instance of the German Lutheran Synod of St. Louis, Missouri. The text chosen is that of Dr. Walch, with a few slight alterations. Two volumes have already appeared, containing Luther's Commentary upon the Book of Genesis. The edition is a stereotyped one, and, though expensive, has already sold well in America.

THE Society of Friends of Archaeology in the Caucasus propose to hold a congress at Tiflis, beginning on September 20, under the honorary presidency of the Grand Duke Michael. The working presidents of the society are Count Uwaroff and Gen. A. Komaroff. The discussions will last for a fortnight, and will be subdivided among the following eight sections:—(1) Prehistoric antiquity, (2) classical antiquity, (3) Christian antiquity, (4) Muhammadan antiquity, (5) art, (6) epigraphy, (7) languages, (8) history and ethnology. The Government has granted a considerable sum of money towards the necessary expenses, and several archaeological excursions and excavations have already been planned.

THE Historische Verein of the Canton of Schwyz held its annual meeting on Ascension Day in Einsiedeln. Kanzlei-direktor Kälin read a paper on the relations between the great Benedictine Abbey and the Waldstatt Einsiedeln, dealing chiefly with the regulations which the civil authorities, the "Gnädigen Herren and Oberen" of Schwyz, enforced from time to time upon the pilgrims and the booth-keepers with whom they traded. It appears that it has always been difficult to prevent the dealers in pictures, crucifixes, beads, and pious books from adding "Schnaps" to their store, and inviting the pilgrims to drink. Landammann K. Styger read a monograph upon the Einsiedeln artist-family of the Kurigers, whose works in clay, marble, and wax were popular in Vienna and Paris at the beginning of our century. Two of the brothers, Xavier and Augustine, were murdered in Paris, according to the belief in Einsiedeln, by jealous rivals. A collection of works by the Kurigers was exhibited at the meeting. The committee of the society contemplate the publication of an annual as a Neujahrsblatt.

THE accomplished Zand scholar, M. James Darmesteter, has now produced his edition of Shakspeare's Macbeth, which we announced last year that he was preparing. He has by it placed himself at one bound in the very front rank of Shakspeare critics. The third section of his Introduction especially, on "The Work of Shakspeare and the History of his Genius," may challenge comparison with the best of the best work that has preceded it in any language. So also may his remarks on how Shakspeare treated his Macbeth materials, and re-created them into his great tragedy. M. Darmesteter belongs to the new school of Shakspeare criticism—

"L'école critique on historique, toute récente, est d'origine anglaise: elle est représentée par MM. Farnivall et Dowden, et par le groupe de la New Shakspeare Society fondée en 1874 par M. Farnivall;"

and of this school M. Darmesteter has proved himself the first and right able French apostle. We hope that his disciples will be worthy of him. His little book is one of the Classiques anglais of the Librairie Ch. Delagrave, Paris.

PROF. A. SMIRNOF, of the University of Kazan, has recently published, under the title of Angliiskie Moralisti XVII V., or "English Moralists of the Seventeenth Century," what is intended to form the first volume of "A History of English Ethics." He is evidently well acquainted with the subject of his work, and he has turned to good account his remarkably wide and deep knowledge. It is much to be hoped that his projected work may arrive at completion.

A GERMAN translation, by E. Spleidt, of John Ploughman's Pictures, by Mr. Spurgeon, is about to appear at Norden.

At the meeting of the Clifton Shakspeare Society held on May 28, reports in connexion with Taming of the Shrew were presented from the following departments:—Classical and Mythical Allusions, by Mr. C. A. Scott Watson; Dress and Social Customs, by Mrs. E. Thelwall; and Oaths and Exclamations, by Rev. H. P. Stokes, M.A. Communications on the authorship of the play were given by Rev. H. P. Stokes and Dr. J. E. Shaw. A paper on "Katharina," by Miss Constance O'Brien, was read; and Mr. C. P. Harris, B.A., read a note on "Petruchio." This meeting brought to an end the work of the society's sixth session. The society is now about to materially increase its library, so as to make it more helpful than it has hitherto been. The hon. secretary, Mr. L. M. Griffiths, 3 Hanover Place, Clifton, will be grateful for hints from Shakspeare students.

M. A. CAUVET has just published (Paris: Ollendorf) a book entitled La Prononciation française et la Diction, which is dedicated to M. Delaunay, the player. The author has followed the standard adopted by the Comédie française and by the Conservatoire, while he has not disdained to treat of the play of feature and the animated gesture which really form such an important element in speech, as they also do in the history of language.

THE letters upon Bimetallism recently contributed by M. Emile de Laveleye to the Indépendance Belge have just been published in a collective form by MM. Merzbach and Falk at Brussels. In a letter dated June 2, the eminent Belgian publicist ascribes the present crisis in English agriculture largely to our persistence in a gold standard.

MR. EDMUND MAURICE is at work on a history of 1848.

A "ROSSETTI SHAKSPEARE" is to be brought out by D. Lothrop and Co. in the United States.

A NEW and revised edition of Appleton's American Cyclopaedia is to appear shortly.

M. L. BECQ DE FOUQUIÈRES has published with Charavay Frères Lettres critiques sur la Vie, les Œuvres, les Manuscrits d'André Chénier.

THE Memoirs of Madame de Rémusat have reached an eighteenth edition in Paris.

THE Société des Amis des Livres has just issued its Annuaire, with contributions by M^{me}. Edmond Adam, M. Octave Uzanne, &c.

CANON CLAESSEN has just published at Louvain a History of the Archbishops of Malines.

DR. HERMANN ROLLET is about to publish (Vienna: Braumüller) an important work on Portraits of Goethe, illustrated with etchings by Unger, and many wood-cuts. Over a hundred original portraits of Goethe exist, and over three hundred different engravings or other reproductions of these.

WE learn from the Revue Critique that the eighth volume has just appeared of the edition of the works of Derjavin which is being published by the Academy of Science at St. Petersburg. This contains a biography extending over a thousand pages. A ninth volume will conclude the work, which was begun in 1864.

A CRITICAL edition of Klopstock's Messiah is being prepared by R. Hamel, of Rostock; and F. Muncker is engaged upon the publication of the correspondence of Klopstock with Hemmerde and Meier, which will also give details concerning the Messiah and its early editions.

AMONG the fresh Vice-Presidents of the New Shakspeare Society are the Marquis of Bath, the Earl of Bessborough, the Earl of Dartrey, Prof. March, of Lafayette College, U.S.A., Prof. Schipper, of Vienna, Prof. Wülcker, of Leipzig, and Prof. Zupitza, of Berlin.

AMONG forthcoming German books may be noticed: Die Religionen der europäischen Kultur-völker in ihrem geschichtlichen Ursprung, dealing especially with the origin of the religions of the Lithuanians, Slavs, Germans, Greeks, and Romans, by Julius Lippert (Berlin: Hofmann); Ueber die quintilianischen Declamationen, by Constantin Ritter (Freiburg: Mohr); the first part of a German translation of Hamilton's Elements of Quaternions, by Paul Glan (Leipzig: Barth); Der Feldzug in Nord-Virginien im August 1862, by F. Mangold (Hannover: Helwing); Das Alphabet des Meisters E. S. 1466, facsimile reproductions, by J. B. Obernetter (München: Kellner); &c.

A SOCIETY has been founded at Upsala, under the title of Svenska Literatursällskapet, with the double object of publishing old Swedish MSS. and of reprinting rare Swedish books. The president of the society is C. R. Nyblom, Professor of Literature in the University of Upsala. The first number of a periodical Review furthering and exemplifying the aims of the society has just appeared.

A MUSEUM of palaeography has been established at Venice, under the charge of Profs. Crechetti and Predrelli, in which will be collected inscriptions, MSS., charters, and all that bears upon the early history of writing.

A CORRESPONDENT asks:—

"Why do people find such fault with Carlyle's grumblings in his Reminiscences? They put up contentedly with his talk, his Latter-Day Pamphlets, &c., in which he abused every living thing and every living body, and now that they find in his book abuse of only many bodies, with strong praise of a few others and idolatry of his supposed angel, they turn round and complain of him. It seems to me most unreasonable. They ought to give him credit for having at last proclaimed that he had really found about one living person in a million who wasn't a fool or a follower of the devil."

OBITUARY.

M. LITTRÉ.

IN M. Littré, France has, by common consent, lost her foremost scholar in the best and widest sense of the word. Maximilien-Paul-Émile Littré was born in Paris on February 1, 1801, and had, therefore, more than completed his eightieth year. He at first chose medicine as his profession, and, though he did not practise, much of his varied intellectual activity was directed to the scientific and historical side of the subject; indeed, his first work of great importance was his edition and translation of Hippocrates, the first volume of which appeared in 1839, while the last (more than twenty years after) came out on the eve of the appearance of the Dictionary. Medicine and philology were, however, only part of the studies which occupied M. Littré. I am not aware whether his affection for, and familiarity with, Old French was a mere outgrowth of his philological researches for the purposes of lexicography, or whether, on the other hand, it was a determining cause of those researches. He certainly has quite other than merely lexicographic claims on the respect of students of Old French. In 1844 he took Fauriel's place in the company charged by the Academy of Inscriptions (of which he had been elected a member immediately after the appearance of the first volume of his Hippocrates) with the continuation of the Histoire littéraire, in which he did much good work. He did not devote himself to the task of editing and exhuming texts, but rather to that of comment and criticism; and he had a most remarkable faculty of writing the older tongue, which he showed especially in two translations, one of Homer, the other of Dante, published at an interval of more than thirty years. A great part of his time and energy was also taken up by his connexion with Comte and Positivism. He himself was, by temperament, inclined not to polemics against religion, but to a kind of ignoring of it in favour of science; and he had translated Strauss' Leben Jesu within four years of its publication. He adopted Positivism, as it at first presented itself, with vigorous partisanship, and produced in 1845 an excellent analysis of the Philosophie positive. His subsequent refusal to follow Comte in his later excursions, and the acrimonious polemic which sprang up between the party of which he was the real chief and the thorough-going disciples of the Politique and the Synthese and the Catéchisme and the rest, need only be mentioned here. Nor is it necessary to follow his connexion with politics, which was not small or unimportant, further than to say that he was an ardent Republican; that both in 1830 and 1848 he entertained hopes of the most sanguine kind; that he did considerable work as a journalist on the staff of the National and elsewhere; that in 1871 he was elected a Deputy and a Member of the Council-General of the Seine; and that in 1875 he was made a life Senator. His candidature at the Academy, and the obstinate, and for a long time successful, resistance with which it was met by Bishop Dupanloup, was one of the best-known things about him, though he was never understood to be very anxious for the honour. It is noteworthy, too, that he twice refused the Legion of Honour. In fact, there has, in all probability, never been a man of letters who was more unassuming, and more genuinely indifferent to anything save study for its own sake, keen as was the interest which he also felt in the practical things of life.

It is unnecessary, and would be almost impertinent, to attempt to pass sentence on the really great work of M. Littré's life in a few lines. All competent judges agree in placing the Dictionnaire de la Langue française among the combinations of knowledge, labour, craftsmanlike skill, and successful accomplishment of which the examples in all literature may be counted on two hands. It is, and is likely long to continue, an indispensable assistance to all students of French literature.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

OXFORD LETTER.

Queen's College, Oxford: June 8, 1881.

The labours of the Commissioners are almost completed. The revised statutes of the colleges, as well as of the university, have been for the most part issued, and we can form some idea of the new constitution under which we are to live. Those who had hoped that some provision would be made for learning and research will be grievously disappointed. Nothing can be more unlike the expectations with which the Commission was heralded or the speech in which Lord Salisbury introduced the question of university reform than the spirit of the work actually accomplished. From first to last the Commissioners betray no consciousness of the claims of research upon the university; the ideal at which they have aimed throughout is a vast examining-machine, managed by persons whose incomes are nicely adjusted to the amount of cramming they have to perform, and propelled by prizes in the shape of idle fellowships. All the evils which first stirred up the agitation for reform have been simply intensified and made permanent. That peculiar state of things which has been the creation of the last half-century, which is the cause of all the restless discontent that distinguishes modern Oxford, and of which so many of us complain, has been assumed to be the normal, necessary, and perpetual constitution of the university. Henceforward, it will be more difficult than ever for anyone connected with university or college work to have either opportunity or inclination for disinterested and unremunerative study. For that we shall have to go, even more than before, to the happier universities of Germany. We asked for more freedom, more opportunity for real scientific work—above all, a career for the student—and we have been given instead an iron system, from which the student is carefully excluded. It is the old story of asking for bread and receiving a stone. In their terror lest they might endow research, the Commissioners seem to have forgotten that there is such a thing as research at all.

It is true that the colleges will be required hereafter to contribute to the needs of the university, though the building propensities of these venerable corporations and the fall of rents are likely to postpone the actual day of contribution until another Commission has come to sit on us. But what do the Commissioners consider these needs to be? Not learning, not scientific research, not the endowment of the Bodleian on an adequate scale, not the creation of archaeological and scientific museums, but the establishment of a certain number of men to supplement the already over-numerous staff of college tutors and lecturers in the work of preparing undergraduates for the schools. This, and this alone, seems the Commissioners' conception of the duties of a professoriate and of their nondescript coadjutors, the university readers.

The most obnoxious portions of the professorial statute, about which I wrote last year, have been toned down and made more agreeable to the susceptibilities of the existing professors. But the spirit of the statute remains unaltered. Certainly, the professor is no longer to be placed on a lower level than the college tutor, but he is not to occupy a higher one. The work of the university professor and the college lecturer is to be precisely the same, and one can only wonder why any difference should be made between them. It will not be the fault of the Commissioners if the professor of the future ever gives a lecture above the heads of undergraduates preparing for an examination. His function will be that of the Camera at present—to assist unattached students who cannot afford private tuition to get through the schools. Of the possibility of any higher function, the Commissioners show no consciousness. The modes of election remain as unsatisfactory as ever; the duties of the professor are confined to residence during the academical year, and the delivery of a certain number of lectures in combination with the college teachers; and good care is taken that his official income shall not raise him above the rank of college tutors, or bring him near those exalted deities, the heads of colleges. The professor who teaches an unremunerative subject, like Celtic, is to have £400 a-year less than one who teaches a subject like Greek, in which he may expect to get both pupils and fees, the opinion of the Commissioners plainly being that a professor has no business with any subject which is not "recognised in the schools," and that anyone who comes dangerously near representing research must be starved out of the university as quickly as possible. Of course, no arrangements are made for the creation of life-professorships—that is, of professorships tenable for life by scholars of eminence—which, when vacated, would not be filled up unless scholars of equal eminence were forthcoming. Nor, among the new chairs that are to be constituted, is there any reference to Oriental subjects. While the interests of law and mathematics have been thoroughly looked after, the claims of our Eastern empire on our consideration are utterly ignored. The omission is rendered the more remarkable by the fact that the Commissioners have been specially memorialised on the subject, first by the recommendations of the Hebdomadal Council, then by the Royal Asiatic Society, and finally by a memorial forwarded to them last year, and signed by some of the most illustrious scholars in the country. But Oriental studies have not yet become subjects of examination here, and the professor of an Oriental language, whose pupils would be only graduates and scholars, is exactly the kind of man whom the Commissioners desire to drive out of our paradise.

Before I leave the professorial statute, in which the mind and aims of the Commission can be more clearly read than elsewhere, I would draw attention to two hardships from which the professor of the future will have to suffer. The first is the limitation of his official income, a limitation rendered the more invidious from its not being imposed on any other university or college official. At present, the Professor of Physiology receives £800 a-year as professor, and may receive an additional £300 as the fellow of a college; his successor will not be allowed to receive more than £900 a-year under any circumstances. The second is involved in the obligation imposed on a professor of giving up a fellowship he may hold for one in a college to which the professorship is attached. The result will be that he will be forced to resign a fellowship which he holds for life (upon the old foundation), and leave a college with which he has intimate relations, to receive instead a fellowship which he can retain only so long as he retains his professorship.

Those of us who were anxious for university reform may well feel disappointed at the result as it now lies before us. We urged the wants of the university, and pointed out how those wants could be supplied out of the revenues of the colleges; but the university which we had before our eyes was, like the universities of Germany or the Oxford of a former age, a nursery of science, of learning, and of research, not the university of the Commissioners, which has been modelled after one of the chief cramming establishments of modern Oxford. What is called education here—that is to say, preparation for some examination—is already over-endowed, and needs no further encouragement and support. On the contrary, it is more than doubtful whether endowment of any sort has not done it more harm than good, causing the pupil to undervalue the teaching for which he pays but little, and limiting his choice of instructors to those who are paid to teach him. Certainly, the incomes of modern schoolmasters seem to show that free trade is as productive of wealth in education as it is said to be in the commercial world. What really need endowment are those higher studies which command no price in the market, and for which the piety of earlier times provided funds now diverted to the support of a Chinese education.

As long as there was any chance of these funds being restored to their legitimate purpose it was the duty of all those who had the interest of knowledge at heart to resist any scheme for scattering them through the country. But now that the Commission has by its action taken this chance away, there is no longer any reason why Oxford and Cambridge should be inordinately endowed for doing the work that is done quite as well, if not better, elsewhere. The centres of population are not now to be found in them; and the cause of education would be better served by subsidising it for the sake of the working classes, than for the sake of that richer middle-class which frequents our two older universities, where, too, vested interests and inconvenient traditions necessarily prevent us from getting the full value out of our revenues. It cannot be long before the system of prize-fellowships which the Commissioners have determined to establish meets with a general remonstrance from the country. If these valuable prizes are to be given away for proficiency in a single examination, there can be no reason for confining them to Oxford, or to those who have taken an Oxford degree. Why should not a member of the Victoria University, a graduate of London, or, in short, any clever and well-prepared young man have an equal chance of gaining them? The holders will have no connexion with Oxford beyond that of drawing their incomes from her. So far as the university is concerned, they will be more "idle" than even the holders of the "idle fellowships," whom the author of the Bill under which the Commissioners have acted would have abolished for the benefit of research. Much, indeed, might have been made out of these "idle" sinecures. They might have been bestowed on hard-working students, pioneers of knowledge and science, fellowship being added to fellowship as the holder proved himself better and better qualified to take rank among the intellectual leaders of mankind. But the chance of doing some good with them has been thrown away, and a lost chance seldom returns.

Fortunately, Oxford is not the whole world. The movement known as the "Endowment of Research," though pressed upon the universities before the country was prepared to give its principles a practical application, has been making steady way far beyond the most sanguine expectations of its first promoters. The work they have done will bear fruit hereafter, though it may be not among the parks of Oxford or the gardens of Cambridge. We may still take courage and believe that a time will come when the fever of the examination-mania will have passed away from the English nation, when the misapplied revenues of Oxford have been carried elsewhere, and when it will be recognised that one of the first duties of a great people is to enlarge the boundaries of knowledge, to explore the dark paths of nature, and to call from its grave the buried past.

I have little to record about the Bodleian Library beyond the fact that an attempt to give some relief to its small and hardly worked staff has, for the present at least, failed. The library has been enriched with Japanese translations of Buddhist Sanskrit texts, the originals of which have been lost, through the liberality of Prof. Max Müller, Dr. Wylie, and two young Buddhist priests from Japan who have been sent from home to learn from Prof. Max Müller the primitive doctrines of their own faith. They have been good enough to compile a catalogue of the Japanese works now in the Bodleian. The number of Chinese books possessed by the library has also largely increased; unfortunately, there is no room for them except the floor of a lower apartment. MSS. have been lent to Dr. Buber, of Lemberg, who is engaged upon Tanchuma, and a MS. of Ferazdak has been forwarded to Prof. Wright. Mr. Shapira, of Jerusalem, is expected to arrive in London with the Hebrew MSS. he collected in Yemen last winter. I can guarantee the great value of some of them from my own inspection of them; one, for instance, which is written according to a hitherto unknown system of punctuation, would be the earliest Hebrew text of the Old Testament in existence if any confidence can be placed in one of its colophons, and is in any case a well-preserved and beautiful specimen of Hebrew writing. It would be a pity if the collection were allowed to go to Berlin like its predecessor.

I must not omit to mention that Dr. Schliemann has presented a very interesting collection of Trojan, Mykenian, Ithacan, and Orkhomenian pottery and other antiquities to the university museum. A. H. SAYCE.

THE CALDERON CELEBRATION.

THE Spanish literary and scientific societies and journals of the last fortnight have been almost exclusively occupied with the second centenary of Calderon. The Ateneo devoted an evening to the celebration, in which Señors Moreno Nieto, Morat y Prendergast, and José Echegaray were the chief orators. Among the papers, La Ilustración española y americana has given a supplement in honour of Calderon. El Imparcial had the happy idea of extracting the "cuentos" from the dramas, thus showing how happily Calderon tells these stories, bringing out the point clearly and in the fewest possible words. El Día has an illustrated number, dated 25 de Mayo de 1641, in which incidents of the life and time of Calderon are narrated in articles signed by Cánovas del Castillo, Alarcon, Castelar, Cayetano Rosell, M. Cañete, Madrazo, Menendez Pelayo, and others of the best pens of Spain. As an appreciation of Calderon and of the Spanish theatre, perhaps nothing better has been said than the conclusion of the lectures of the last-named.

"What our theatre gains in nationality it loses in universality. We cannot hope to be admired and worshipped by the whole world of culture, as are Sophocles and Shakspeare; we smack too much of the soil for that; we are too exclusively national to appear natural to, and to arouse the sympathies of, another people. By dint of hard study, by their aesthetic disinterestedness, and by their power of generalisation, the Germans have been able to identify themselves with its spirit; the English, never; they have remained content with Shakspeare, and the French with Molière. With the exception of Don Juan, it is difficult to make the heroes of our theatre really popular to other nations. This is an advantage and a demerit. Our drama is perhaps the second, or at least the third, in the world. It may be invoked as a war-flag in a time of romantic (literary) revolution; but it cannot be adopted as a type or model."

the beautiful, as is the case with the idealistic art of Sophocles, and with the realistic art of Shakespeare, the two equally admirable Poles of dramatic art."

THE "OEDIPUS TYRANNUS" AT HARVARD.

Boston, Mass.: May 24, 1881.

The Oedipus Tyrannus was performed four times last week in the Sanders Theatre of Harvard College, before large and interested audiences. With the exception of the Oedipus, which was taken by a recent graduate, now an instructor in the college, all the parts were played by students of the university, by far the greater number being undergraduates. The fact that the Agamemnon was played in Oxford last June has, I know, given this performance, especially in the minds of those who saw the Agamemnon, the air of being merely a base imitation—an aping of English manners. There have been, however, sufficiently important differences in the New England rendering to make it worthy of brief note, and this would be the case even if the Greek tragedies had been composed "exclusively for English audiences."

In the Agamemnon, the music was of the simplest kind. For the Oedipus, Mr. J. K. Pain, Professor of Music in the college, composed an overture, music for the choric passages, and a postlude, which may be compared—and, I think, favourably—with what Mendelssohn wrote for the Antigone. Of course, no one will believe this statement without hearing the music, but those who heard it are unanimous in their admiration of its beauty and dignity. Some regretted its introduction, in spite of its merit, because the Greeks were ignorant of modern music. To us, however, it gave a pleasure, which the Greeks probably would not have denied themselves if they had been offered the opportunity. The chorus of fifteen—the acting chorus—were grouped in the pit before the stage about the thymele; they sang the strophes, the antistrophes being sung by a supplementary chorus of about sixty, who sat in part of a semicircle running from one end of the pit to the other. The other half of this semicircle was occupied by the orchestra of thirty-five players—six first violins, four second violins, three violas, three violoncellos, three double basses, two flutes, two oboes, two clarinets, two horns, two trumpets, two bassoons, three trombones, and a pair of kettledrums. A fine effect was produced by some interludes arranged for strings, horns, and wood-wind in part of the dialogue between Oedipus and Creon, and the choruses were simply magnificent.

The dresses of the actors, attendants, and chorus were designed with great care, and were very handsome. The groupings on the stage were most impressive.

The acting was fine. The part of Oedipus was one from which any actor living might well have shrunk; the long speeches, the variety of intense emotions, were, however, given with wonderful beauty, and with a happy combination of intensity and that repose which, possibly, we have learned to associate with our idea of the Greeks from seeing them always in the form of statues. Certainly, the awful effect of the play was thoroughly impressed upon the audience, and not by the Oedipus alone; the Jocasta was admirably given. T. S. PERRY.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- ARMSTRONG, W. Alfred Stevens, Sculptor. A Biographical Study. Remington. 10s. 6d.
BRIGHT, H. A. The English Flower-Garden. Macmillan. 3s. 6d.
BYRON'S Poetry. Chosen and Arranged by Matthew Arnold. Macmillan. 4s. 6d.
DELAPOSTOLLE, E. M. Léonce. De la Condition du Prodiges dans le Droit romain, le Droit français et les Législations étrangères. Paris: Lemerre. 10 fr.
GRANT, A. C. Bush Life in Queensland. Blackwood. 21s.

- GUTHRIE, Mrs. Life in Western India. Hurst & Blackett. 21s.
HERMANN, E. Weitere Mittheilungen über Shakespeares literarische Kämpfe. 2. Bd. Die polemischen Beziehungen der lustigen Weiber v. Windsor. Erlangen: Deichert. 4 M.
HILL, G. Birkbeck. Col. Gordon in Central Africa, 1874-79. From Original Letters and Documents. De La Rue & Co. 21s.
HUOBS, Thos. Rugby, Tennessee: an Account of the New Settlement there. Macmillan. 4s. 6d.
HUO, Victor. Les quatre Vents de l'Esprit. Paris: Hetzel; Quantin. 15 fr.
HUNTER, W. W. The Imperial Gazetteer of India. Vols. I. to VI. Trübner. 42s.
LEO, O. V. Allgemeine Nationalökonomie. Jena: Costenoble. 2 M. 40 Pf.
O'SHAUGHNESSY, A. Songs of a Worker. Chatto & Windus. 1s. 6d.
Portraits illustres de la Pologne au XIX^e Siècle. Dernière Série. Paris: Marpon. 5 fr.
SHAKESPEARE'S Sonnets. Ed. E. Dowden. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 6s.

THEOLOGY.

- NIEBE, A. Die Leidensgeschichte unsers Herrn Jesu Christi nach den 4 Evangelien ausgelegt. 1. Bd. Wiesbaden: Niedner. 6 M.
SPEAKER'S Commentary. Vol. III. Murray. 28s.
WINTERBOTHAM, R. Numbers. ("The Pulpit Commentary.") C. Kegan Paul & Co. 15s.

HISTORY.

- HEIDENHEIMER, H. Petrus Martyr Anglerius u. sein Opus epistolarum. Berlin: Seehagen. 4 M. 50 Pf.
SAVOY, E. Des Tribunaux répressifs ordinaires de la Manche en Matière politique pendant la première Révolution. T. I. Coutances: Salettes. 7 fr. 50 c.
ZELLER, J. La Diplomatie française vers le Milieu du XVI^e Siècle, d'après la Correspondance de Guillaume Pellicier, évêque de Montpellier, Ambassadeur de François I^{er} à Venise (1539-42). Paris: Hachette.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- CELEKOWSKY, L. Prodrum der Flora v. Böhmen. 4. Thl. Prag: Ráiwat. 4 M. 80 Pf.
FONTANNE, F. Les Inventaires du Bassin férial du Sud-Est de la France. 1. Barel: Georg. 35 fr.
MARTIN, K., u. A. WICHMANN. Beiträge zur Geologie Ost-Asiens u. Australiens. 1. Hft. Sedimente Timors. Leiden: Brill. 5 M.
MOORE, T., and M. T. MASTERS. Epitome of Gardening. A. & C. Black. 6s. 6d.
ROSE, K. Beiträge zur Biologie niederster Organismen. Marburg: Elwert. 1 M.
SCHWARZ, K. Ebbu u. Fluth, deren Ursache experimentell nachgewiesen. München: Kellner. 1 M. 50 Pf.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BERLINER, A. Hebräische Inschriften in Italien. 1. Thl. 200 Inschriften aus Venedig. 16 u. 17. Jahrb. Frankfurt-a-M.: Kauffmann. 2 M.
BEANATY, J. Phokion u. seine neueren Beurtheiler. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der griech. Philosophie u. Politik. Berlin: Besser. 4 M.
CLAUS, A. De Dianae antiquissima apud Graecos natura. Breslau: Hirt. 1 M. 50 Pf.
POLAK, H. J. Ad Odyseam ejusque scholiastarum curae secundae. Fasc. 1. Leiden: Brill. 6s.
PROPERTIUS. Select Elegies of. Edited by J. P. Postgate. Macmillan. 6s.
ROTHE, O. Quaestiones grammaticae ad usum Plauti potissimum et Terentii spectantes. Berlin: Calvary. 2 M.
ZEITSCHRIFT f. ägyptische Sprache u. Alterthumskunde. Hrg. v. C. R. Lepsius unter Mitwirk. v. H. Brugsch. Jahrg. 1881. 1. Hft. Leipzig: Hinrichs.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE REVISED VERSION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

Edinburgh: June 7, 1881.

As there are several mis-readings in my article of last week on the Revised Version, I may perhaps be permitted to explain that it was printed from the proof, my revision having arrived too late, apparently, to be made use of. It is probably not worth while to correct these errors now, as they did not materially alter the meaning; but I should like to say that some of my criticisms were intended to be qualified in a sense favourable to the Revised Version. I suppose I must have written "incorruptibility" at p. 406, col. 3, l. 24; but the word should be "incorruption."

R. B. DRUMMOND.

EDITIONS OF POLYCARP AND BARNABAS.

Laverton Rectory, Bath: June 1, 1881.

You lately inserted a letter of mine on some curious blunders in several editions of Polycarp. I now send you an account of two other curious blunders, one in several editions of Polycarp, the other in almost all editions of Barnabas except those of quite recent date. They will show in a remarkable manner the carelessness of many editors in printing their texts, and the tenacity with which an error, when once admitted, is apt to maintain its ground.

I. Near the beginning of chap. vii. of Polycarp's Epistle, ἐλαυθῆναι (for ἐλαυθῆναι) occurs in the following editions:—Ussher's (1644), Le Moyne's (1685), Ittig's (1699), Aldrich's (1708), Smith's (1709), Russel's (1746), and probably in others to which I have no means of referring. The correct form appears in the editio princeps of Halloix (1633), from which Ussher took his text. The mistake in which must therefore have been due to an error of the transcriber, or printer. It is singular that it is not corrected either in Ussher's own printed copy or in the long list of emendanda at the end of his edition. The correct form is given, however, in Cotelier's edition (1672), and in Le Clerc's two reprints (1698 and 1724), though the contrary is implied by Routh with respect to all three editions, and by Jacobson with respect to that of Cotelier.

II. In chap. vi. of the Epistle of Barnabas, ἐν ἰσχύι (for ἐν ἰσχύι) appears in the following editions:—Menard's (1645), Voss's (1646 and 1680), Cotelier's (1672), and Le Clerc's two reprints (1698 and 1724), Le Moyne's (1685), Fell's (1685), Russel's (1746), Reithmayr's (1844), and (which is most surprising of all, though the mistake is corrected in the emendanda) Dressel's (1857).

No doubt the error was originally due to a mere misprint in Menard's edition, which is one of the most incorrectly printed books in existence. Unfortunately, both in this and in numerous other instances, subsequent editors have been misled by the errors (many of them mere misprints) in Menard's text. In the notes also several curious mistakes occur, which are for the most part reproduced in Le Clerc's two editions, though some of the notes are, as they stand, perfectly unintelligible. As far as I know, this incorrectness in the printing of Menard's edition has never hitherto been pointed out.

There is, however, one old text of Barnabas's Epistle—in fact, the earliest printed of all—in which ἰσχύι is given. This is that of Ussher, printed at Oxford in 1642, and hitherto supposed to have been irrecoverably destroyed in the fire of October 6, 1644. Of a considerable portion, however, of Ussher's text, and of the whole of his Preface, I have been fortunate enough to discover a copy in the Bodleian, and the Delegates of the Clarendon Press propose to reprint this in facsimile size, page for page, with an Introduction of mine on the literary history of Ussher's entire edition of Polycarp, Ignatius, and Barnabas. I have for some time past been engaged in preparing this Introduction, but there are several most interesting points connected with the subject respecting which I am anxious to obtain further information. Some of these I propose to state in a future letter to the ACADEMY, and I shall be very grateful to any of your readers who can render me any assistance in the matter, either by writing to me at the above address or through the medium of your columns. I have already received most valuable assistance from several quarters, and especially from Dr. Ingram, the Librarian of Trinity College, Dublin, who most kindly examines for me, and sends me extracts from, any books which I have not myself the means of consulting.

I may add that a transcript of this unique Bodleian copy is now in my possession, having been most beautifully and accurately executed by Mr. Madan, who from the first has taken the greatest possible interest in the discovery.

I am now engaged in making a minute collation of Ussher's text (so far as it is preserved in this copy) with that of other editions. Two discoveries have resulted from this collation:—

I. Ussher repeatedly gave the correct readings of the old Latin version where they were given incorrectly by Menard, and from him by all other editors, till the correct readings were recently restored from the famous Corbey MS. (now at St. Petersburg) by Hilgenfeld and Gebhardt. In numerous instances where Hilgenfeld pronounces all previous editions to be wrong, Ussher's was right.

II. The few notices of Ussher's readings given by Fell (hitherto our only authority upon the point) are in some cases positively incorrect, and in very many others most defective.

Fell's account, also, of the printing and destruction of Ussher's edition is seriously erroneous, and has misled almost all subsequent writers upon the subject.

J. H. BACKHOUSE.

PS.—(1) With respect to Menard's edition, it is only due to him and to the printers to state that the work was a posthumous one, and that the mistakes are probably in a great measure due to the state in which Menard's MS. was left. Apparently, the fault chiefly rests with Luke d'Achery, who took charge of the publication, and who ought to have revised his friend's MS. more carefully. Moreover, it appears from two notices near the beginning and at the end of the book that the printing was executed very rapidly—between November 10 and 30, 1644. (2) I stated in my last letter that in the fourth chapter of Polycarp's Epistle no editor has adopted Young's proposed correction of ὑμῶν into ἡμῶν. I have since, however, found that, in two editions (1833 and 1840) of Archbishop Wake's translation "our" is given, though the first and second editions (1693 and 1710) have "your." It would be interesting to ascertain when and by whom the alteration was first made, and whether it was due to Wake himself. I am inclined to believe that it was a mere printer's or editor's would-be correction, made to suit the supposed requirements of the context.

ON THE USE OF TROCHAIC PENTAMETER BY SHAKESPEARE AND OTHERS.

Hampstead, N.W.: June 7, 1881.

In his Elements of English Prosody, Mr. Ruskin says (p. 55):—

"Upon adding the fifth foot to our gradually lengthening line, we find ourselves fallen suddenly upon hitherto unfelt limitation. The verses we have hitherto examined may be constructed at pleasure of any kind of metre—dactyl, trochee, iamb, or anapaest. But, all at once, we now find this liberty of choice refused. We may write a pentameter verse in iambs only . . . the historical fact being quite indubitable and unalterable that no poet has ever attempted to write pentameter in any foot but the iamb, and that the addition of another choreus to a choreic tetrameter, or of another dactyl to a dactylic one, will instantly make them helplessly prosaic and unreadable."

I cannot but feel that, in making this statement, Mr. Ruskin has left out of consideration certain musical effects to be found in Shakspeare and Keats (and probably in other poets), as well as, in a more developed form, in Browning.

Two instances occur to me of Shakspeare's use of an occasional trochaic pentameter. One of these is in Coriolanus, I. ix. 65.

"Caius, | Marcus, | Corio | lanus, | Bear |
The addition," &c.

Even if Corio be scanned as a dactyl, it must be granted that the whole line is trochaic. It seems to me that in passing from the iambic

"call him,
With all the applause and clamour of the host,"
to the trochaic line I have quoted, we are conscious of a certain stately movement, peculiarly suitable to the occasion of the bestowal of the surname of honour on the victor. Is not the beautiful effect also as of the shaping of the line without the shaper's conscious touch?

The other instance is in Lear, V. iii. 258, where the iambic melody of "Thou'lt come no more" passes into the trochaic of the line following. It seems to me that we have here one of the finest verse-effects in Shakspeare. The terrible despair-cry,

"Howl! howl! howl! howl! O, you are men of stones;

Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so That heaven's vault shall crack,"

has died down;

"Why should a dog, a horse, a rat, have life,
And thou no life at all?"

says the old majesty, whom these same crosses have spoiled. It is not the wild, eager questioning of one seeking to find the solution of the problems that have sorely puzzled him, but the half-sorrowful, half-vague wonder of one whose sap of life is spent, and who cannot feel torture any more. Then slowly fall those trochees that are almost his last utterance ere death mercifully lays his hand on the vexed and forwearing heart:—

"Never, | never, | never, | never, | never. |"

In Keats's Hyperion, i., we have again this change of music—

"there shall be
Beautiful things made new for the surprise
Of the sky-children; I will give command:
Thea! | Thea! | Thea! | where is | Saturn? |"

If it be said that the instances I have quoted are only of isolated lines used for a special reason, I would refer to a poem of some two hundred lines written in trochaic pentameter—Browning's perfect love-poem One Word More. "Lines I write the first time and the last time," says our greatest living poet. Is this poem "hopelessly prosaic and unreadable"? or has Browning therein found

"his love a language
Fit and fair and simple and sufficient?"

Is an answer needed?

E. H. HIOKEY.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, June 13, 7.30 p.m. Aristotelian Society: "Ferrier," by Dr. T. Burna Gibson.

8.30 p.m. Geographical Society: "A Journey of Exploration in Western Szechuere," by Mr. W. E. Colborne Baber.

TUESDAY, June 14, 8 p.m. Anthropological Society: "Exhibition of Danish and French Photographs," by Mr. J. Park Harrison; "The Discovery of Flint Implements in the Gravel of the Nile Valley," by Major-Gen. A. Pitt-Rivers, F.R.S., President; "The Human Fossil at Nice," by Mr. Alfred Tylor; "Sepulchral Remains at Rathdown, Co. Wicklow," by Mr. Gerrard A. Kinahan; "Notes on Some Excavations made in Tumuli near Copiapó, Chili, in June 1880," by Mr. J. H. Madga; "Some Stone Implements from British Guiana," by Mr. F. E. im Thurn; "The Origin of the Semites," by Mr. G. Bertin.

THURSDAY, June 16, 4.30 p.m. Royal.
8 p.m. Linnean: "Flora of the Kuram Valley," by Surgeon-Major Atchison; "The Neuroptera of Madeira and the Azores," by Mr. R. MacLachlan; "Central African Plants collected by Major Serpa Pinto," by Count Ficalho and Mr. W. P. Hiern.

8 p.m. Chemical: "The Isomeric Acids obtained from the Ethers of Salicylic Aldehyde and from Conmarin," by Mr. W. H. Parkin; "Notes on Naphthalene Derivatives," by Mr. H. E. Armstrong; "The Synthetical Production of Ammonia," by Mr. G. S. Johnson; "The Sulphates of Aluminium," by Mr. S. Pickering.

8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
FRIDAY, June 17, 8 p.m. Philological: "The Psychological Method in its Application to Language," by Mr. H. Baynes; "Scottish Place-names," by Mr. W. R. Browne.

SCIENCE.

The Nicomachean Ethics of Aristotle.
Translated by F. H. Peters, M.A., Fellow of University College, Oxford. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

THIS new translation of the Ethics will probably be received with general favour, and not undeservedly. It is a very honest and scholarly endeavour to put the book before us in a faithful English form, not trimmed into elegance nor metamorphosed into modern philosophy, but with Aristotle's own thoughts and ways of thinking presented as far as possible in Aristotle's own words. Mr. Peters has been content to give us a close reproduction of the original, and this is, after all, no easy matter. To emulate the masterly brevity with which Aristotle packs much meaning into few words is indeed a task that would strain the powers of any living writer, and no ordinary translator can hope to discharge it adequately. But there are degrees of success or failure, and Mr. Peters' translation will find a place among the more successful.

It owes this success to its fidelity. The translator has achieved more than some others because he has attempted less. He seems to have proceeded to some extent on the very just principle that it is not a translator's business to re-write his author. What he has to do is to say in English just what the author said in Greek, the same things in the same form, matter and manner both in fac-simile. If the author is obscure, the translator should be obscure. If the original admits of two meanings, and there is a reasonable doubt which was intended, the translation should have two meanings too. It is sometimes a duty to be resolutely difficult and deliberately ambiguous. Irregularities and incorrectnesses of expression are not to be patched up and put right. We want authors as they wrote, not as we think they should have written. Still less, in dealing with ancient authors, are we at liberty to put our own modern meaning on their less advanced language. We have no business to substitute a special term for a general one, so long as we have a general one that will answer the purpose. The special term has a precision that the writer's thoughts had not. Nor have we any business, if we can avoid it, to put one of our modern general terms for an old one that was more specific. We are placing the writer at a point of view which he never reached; least of all should we force upon him some theorising term of modern origin, and commit him to a principle that half the critics deny him to have held. We should rather use some vaguer expression which is consistent with our explanation and not inconsistent with theirs.

Mr. Peters has not carried out these principles to their full extent; indeed few translators would have the courage and the self-control to do so. The fidelity of the translation would probably be imputed as a fault to the translator, and he would be blamed for the way in which the original was written. But the book before us is distinctly of the right kind. If we have not the actual and very Aristotle, we have at least something more like him than what some translators have given us. When the Greek is abrupt and awkward, the English is often abrupt and awkward too—as it should be. The extreme brevity of the Greek is not, as a rule, expanded. Usually, too, Mr. Peters has been conscientious with his philosophical terms, and has not put into Aristotle's mouth any that can be thought unfit for him. But he does not act on this golden rule when he translates voûs in the sixth book by "intuitive reason." Whether Aristotle would or would not have used such an expression if he had been writing in a later age, it is a great deal more definite than the word voûs, and Mr. Peters is well aware that many people think it is not at all what Aristotle meant.

In a book with so many difficulties as the Ethics, no translator can expect that his renderings of this or that passage will satisfy everyone, or that any critic whatever can be satisfied throughout. No reasonable critic, on the other hand, though he may differ in opinion from Mr. Peters here and there, will presume often to say dogmatically that so scholarly and able a translator is wrong. There are, however, some few passages where it is difficult to think him right. In ix. 4, 4, the well-known passage γενόμενος δ' ἄλλος οὐδεὶς αἰρεῖται πᾶντ' ἔχειν ἐκεῖνο τὸ γεγόμενον· ἔχει γὰρ καὶ νῦν ὁ θεὸς τὰγαθόν, ἀλλ' ὥν ὅτι ποτ' ἔστιν is translated, "but no man desires that as he becomes another man [i.e., as he grows older] that other self should be, in all respects, the same as the present self. (With God, indeed, this may be, for God already is in complete possession of the good; but that is only as being what he is [not man but God].)" This unusually diffuse rendering is surely unsatisfactory. Apart from the strange meaning put upon γενόμενος δ' ἄλλος and the unauthorised change of πάντα into ταῦτά, it involves an awkward insertion, and the questionable assumption that, in Aristotle's opinion, God γίγνεται ἄλλος. viii. 9, 6, supports a much easier explanation. In ix. 7, 4, it seems plain, both from the context and from other considerations, that ἐνεργεῖα δὲ ὁ ποιήσας τὸ ἔργον ἐστι πως and not ἐστὶ is the right reading. The unmeaning proposition that the maker is in a sense what he makes is in no way wanted; whereas the statement that by making he asserts his actual or active existence is not only intelligible and true, but also in strict logical connexion with what precedes and follows. If Mr. Peters were right, the words that follow, στέργει δὲ τὸ ἔργον διότι καὶ τὸ εἶναι, οὐχὶ τὸ εἶναι καὶ εὐατόν. When, again, in v. 5, 17, we find ἡ δὲ δικαιοσύνη μεσότης τις ἐστίν, οὐ τὸν αὐτὸν δὲ τρόπον ταῖς ἄλλαις ἀρεταῖς, ἀλλ' ὅτι μέσον ἐστίν· ἡ δ' ἀδικία τῶν ἄκρων, translated "it does indeed observe a mean, but both the extremes fall under the single vice injustice," we feel that Mr. Peters is putting off on Aristotle some very bad logic, and that in defiance of the Greek. He is making him confuse the proposition that justice is not an ordinary mean with the proposition that injustice is not an ordinary extreme. Mr. Peters' way of taking the phrase βίος τέλειος in i. 7, 16, and elsewhere is a common way, but almost demonstrably unsound. In every place the context not only admits, but requires, the limitation of its meaning to duration of time. We distort the plain meaning of words if we make it include any notion of external prosperity; and such an addition is not really wanted, because prosperity is presupposed in good ἐνέργεια, which are impossible without it. There can be no doubt that the author of the Magna Moralia understood it to refer only to time.

But in spite of these and other passages about which opinions differ, it should be repeated that the translation seems to be a work of essentially sound scholarship. The notes which Mr. Peters has added are less thoroughly satisfactory. Most readers will certainly agree with his own remark upon them, that they are too many to accompany a translation, and, of course, far too few to constitute a commentary. It is sometimes not very plain why one place has a note and another not. They seem to stand in no determinate relation to the difficulties, but to be sprinkled about the ten books a little capriciously. They will also probably be found not quite equal in their kind to the translation. A word in conclusion as to the singular way in which the book is broken up in the printing into very short paragraphs, amounting constantly to five or six in a small page, and often consisting of only one or two lines. There seems to be no advantage in throwing it into this form. No one will understand it any the better, and it looks like a child's reading-book.

HERBERT RICHARDS.

A Memoir on the Echinodermata of the Arctic Sea to the West of Greenland. By P. Martin Duncan, F.R.S., and W. Percy Sladen, F.G.S. (Van Voorst.)

THIS memoir, which is illustrated by six plates, gives an account of the Echinodermata collected during the voyage of her Majesty's ships Alert and Discovery, under Sir G. S. Nares, in the Polar Sea, by the naturalists of the expedition, Major H. W. Fielden and Mr. Hart. The greater number were obtained between the very high latitudes 79° 20' N. and 82° 27' N.—that is, from Franklin-Pierce Bay to Floeberg Beach. Together with these are also described the specimens which Dr. J. Gwyn Jeffreys dredged during the Valorous expedition. The latter collection has already been noticed in the "Report on the Valorous Expedition" by Dr. Gwyn Jeffreys and Dr. Carpenter in the Proceedings of the Royal Society for 1876, in which the Echinodermata were described by the Rev. A. M. Norman. The present authors also published a brief account of the principal collection in the Annals and Magazine of Natural History for 1877.

Thirty species in all are described, nearly all of them being from the north of the Arctic Circle. The Holothuroidea, as a group, do not seem in this region to extend very far north of the Circle, although they do so elsewhere. A Myriotrochus is an exception, being found as far north as 81° 41' N. Among the Holothuroidea described, occur none of the important new forms which were obtained by Prof. Nordenskjöld to the north of Siberia and by the Challenger expedition in deep water, and which were described by Dr. Hjalmar Thel. The Echinoidea are represented by a single species only in the Smith Sound area, while of Asteroidea ten species were obtained from the same region, and seven of Ophiuroidea. These latter are very numerous in individuals, though comparatively so few in species. The finest species among them, the large Astrophyton Agassizii, extends up to lat. 78° 19' N. The present authors appear to have overlooked Mr. Norman's reference to a second species of Astrophyton (A. cuenemisi) which was among the Valorous collection, having been dredged at the entrance of Ballin's Bay in 175 fathoms. They mention the one species only. The species of Comatula found north of the Circle were three. They extend up to lat. 81° 41' N.

No new species are described by the authors from among the collection. Many of the species, however, exhibit curious and interesting variations, and throw much light on systematic questions. The whole of the species in the collection appear to have a wide range in longitude as well as latitude. For example, the only Echinoid Strongylocentrotus dröbachiensis has a vast distribution as far north as Discovery Bay and south to Florida, from Iceland to Spitzbergen, and Novaya Zemlya to the British Isles. It has been found in Behring's Straits, Kamtschatka, and on the American coast to Vancouver. "It is essentially a Polar species, migrating now and then to the South, and it forms part of a true Polar fauna."

The conclusion of the authors with regard to distribution is that the Arctic Echinoderm fauna, "as a whole, is not an extension northwards of species from more temperate climates, but is essentially circumpolar." The Arctic marine fauna has, however, as yet been so little investigated that possibly this position may not be maintained altogether in the future. Dr. Gwyn Jeffreys' conclusion, formed after the Valorous expedition, with regard to the Mollusca of Greenland, is that these are decidedly more European than American, a westerly course of migration, and not an easterly, having occurred, so that the Mollusca are not circumpolar. The authors are to be congratulated on the completion of this handsome monograph.

H. N. MOSELEY.

SOME TRAVEL BOOKS.

General Index to the Fourth Ten Volumes of the Journal of the Royal Geographical Society. Compiled by Order of the Council. (John Murray.) This work, which will be of very great use to students and others desirous of consulting the mass of valuable matter contained in the society's Journal, has been compiled on the plan adopted by Col. Yule with the previous ten volumes. It consists of three distinct parts, the first of which comprises indices to the papers and to the illustrations, classified alphabetically under the headings of Europe, Asia, Africa, America, Australia, Oceania, Arctic, and Miscellaneous. The second part contains abstracts of the ten presidential addresses, and thus furnishes in a handy form a very fair history of geographical work during the period. The third part of the work is the index proper, in which are also given brief analyses of the more important papers; and this part is in some sense a gazetteer, as the name of the country is almost invariably given after those of towns, provinces, tribes, mountains, rivers, &c.

THE recent publication of M. J. L. Dutreuil de Rhins' Carte de l'Indo-Chine orientale (Paris: Dépôt des Cartes de la Marine) reminds us of the fact that the French have secured a footing in Eastern Asia which will enable them to build up a great colonial empire, extending over thousands of square miles, peopled by millions of industrious inhabitants, and traversed by rivers affording access to the very heart of China. As compared with British India, this "Further" India is more thoroughly Oriental in its geographical position; for, while the former turns its face towards Europe, the latter looks to the East, and forms part of the constellation in which China and Japan are the most brilliant lights. But to return to the map under notice. It is published in four sheets, on a scale of 1 : 950,000; in addition to which there is what may be called a popular edition on half that scale. The author has spent five years in the compilation of the map, and the results of all explorations, whether French or otherwise, have been embodied in it. In an accompanying pamphlet the difficulties which had to be overcome in spelling the native names are duly set forth, and persons who have been engaged in similar work will be able to sympathise with the author and his learned co-adjutor, M. Lesserteur, of the Seminary of Foreign Missions. The old spelling of the missionaries, with its many diacritical signs and arbitrary employment of letters, has been rejected, and a phonetic system, based upon the value ordinarily given to letters in French, has been substituted. As a consequence, we get rid of the puzzling X so frequent on maps of Further India, which represents the sound of our S. We wish M. Dutreuil had gone one step farther and adopted an alphabet as intelligible to English as it is to French readers. It seems a pity that all efforts for introducing an international system of spelling geographical names should have failed hitherto, although it might easily be brought about by a few mutual concessions. England has already set a good example by adopting the Italian and German sounds of the vowels, and might possibly be induced to make still further concessions if greater uniformity in the spelling of geographical names would result therefrom.

LIEUT. G. KREITNER, who accompanied Count Bela Sechenyi in his travels through India, Japan, China, Tibet, and Burmah, has begun the publication (Vienna: A. Holder) of a description of their journey, under the title of Im fernen Osten. The work is to appear in thirty parts, and will contain upwards of two hundred original wood-cuts and several maps. From the geographer's point of view, it ought to prove of exceptional interest, as it gives an account of certain places, such as Lan-choo-foo, Soo-choo, and Sha-chow-wi, which we believe have never before been described.

THE June number of the Monthly Record of Geography contains the text of the lecture recently delivered by Sir R. Temple on Sikkim and the lake region on its eastern frontier. Some unusually good illustrations are given with the article, as well as a useful map of the whole of Sikkim and of part of the adjoining region. Mr. E. Delmar Morgan's account of Kegel's expedition from Kulja to Turfan is carefully written and annotated; but the most useful contribution to geography in the number is, without doubt, Mr. Selous' brief account of his explorations in Mashona-land. On the little map which Mr. Ravenstein has drawn to illustrate it Mr. Selous' routes are shown, as well as his rectification of the courses hitherto assigned to the rivers. In this respect Mr. Selous' chief discovery was that the Umfuli does not flow directly into the Zambesi, as was supposed, but into its tributary, the Umnyati. The Geographical Notes furnish recent intelligence respecting the progress of expeditions in Western Equatorial Africa, and particularly in regard to the proceedings of the Livingstone (Congo) Inland Mission party under Mr. McCall. There is also a note on the climate of French Cochinchina, and a letter from Mr. James Stevenson which refers to recent discussions about the long-vexed question of the longitude of Lake Nyassa.

Istruzioni scientifiche pei Viaggiatori raccolte da Arturo Issel (Rome: E. Botta) is a manual of scientific enquiry for the use of travellers, admittedly based upon similar works previously published in English, French, and German, but possessing features of its own which entitle it to consideration. Prof. A. Issel and his collaborators, among whom are included some of the most eminent scientific men of Italy, have done their work conscientiously. They have more especially aimed at rendering their instructions of practical service. Still, we cannot help thinking that they have allotted a disproportionate space to theoretical considerations. Theories should be acquired at home; a traveller in the field requires, above all, practical instructions. Tell him what to observe, and how, but do not trouble him with the why. A really practical explorers' guide and remembrancer has still to be written. The Hints to Travellers published by the Council of the Royal Geographical Society are handy, no doubt, but they, too, contain much that may be dispensed with in the field, while omitting several things which would prove of real service.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

THE London Missionary Society have recently received a munificent offer from Mr. James Stevenson, who has probably done more than any other individual towards promoting the exploration of the Nyassa region. Desiring to see the line of communication with the interior of East Africa by way of the Rivers Zambesi and Shiré and Lake Nyassa extended as rapidly as possible, Mr. Stevenson has offered to this society, conjointly with the Livingstonia Mission and the Central African Trading Company, to spend £3,000 on the construction of a road between the north end of Lake Nyassa and the south end of Tanganyika, and further to invest £1,000 in the company, on condition that each society should undertake a certain responsibility in connexion with the road. On their part the London Missionary Society have agreed to place a steamer on Lake Tanganyika, to found a station near its southern end, and to send out all the supplies for their expeditions at Ujiji, Mtowa, &c., by this route.

ACCORDING to letters from the Congo, Mr. H. M. Stanley contemplates departing, at least temporarily, from his original plan of making a road continuously along the north bank of the river. His farthest station is now at Isangila; and for some distance beyond this point the country is inhabited by the Basundi, a very troublesome tribe, whom, on his famous journey down the Congo, Mr. Stanley found to be suspicious, quarrelsome, and easily affronted. Quite lately they refused to let Mr. McCall pass through their country to Manyanga, and he had to take to canoes. Mr. Stanley also has determined to do this reach by water, for which course he is well prepared, as he has a steam launch and two steel whale-boats above the falls.

At the end of last November the Algerian missionaries in Urundi, near the northern end of Lake Tanganyika, despatched a party to found their first station on the west coast of the lake. The place chosen was Mulonowa, in the Masansi country, on the shores of the large gulf which Mr. Stanley named after Capt. Burton. Behind the village is a range of hills separating it from the country of the Wabembe, who are said to be cannibals, and frequently engaged in making fierce raids on their neighbours. The country round is covered with fine trees, the thick foliage of which affords ample protection against the tropical sun.

WE hear that the Swedish Missionary Society are about to send an expedition to the Congo, which will co-operate with that of the Livingstone (Congo) Inland Mission. It is expected that the party will start next month.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK, of Paternoster Row, has published an etching, by M. Léon Richeton, of Dr. Moffat, the well-known African missionary and traveller,

SCIENCE NOTES.

A Mid-Silurian Flora in North Wales.—Dr. Hicks has lately discovered some extremely interesting plant-remains in Pen-y-glog quarry, near Corwen, in Denbighshire—a locality which furnished him, several years ago, with obscure traces of similar fossils. The beds in which they occur may be placed at about the horizon of the Upper Llandovery rocks. The fossils include carbonaceous fragments, having the characteristic structure of the plant, which Mr. Carruthers has named Nematophyculus, and which he regards as an anomalous form of alga. It is the same plant which Dr. Dawson had previously described as Prototaxites. Associated with these marine plants are numerous spherical bodies agreeing with Sir Joseph Hooker's Pachytheca from the Ludlow bone-bed. These are probably the spore-cases of lycopodiaceous plants. Taken in conjunction with the evidence of other less definite fossils, their presence seems to indicate an extensive land-flora, which was probably supported on land to the south and west, chiefly islands, surrounded by a moderately deep sea in which graptolites abounded and in which the algae flourished. M. de Saporta's description of a fossil fern from the Mid-Silurian rocks of Angers, in France—and therefore of about the same geological age—was noticed in the ACADEMY for November 3, 1877.

THE annual meeting which the geologists of the Upper Rhine district have held for the last ten years has just taken place at Gebweiler. All the great towns from Basel to Mainz were represented. The chief subjects of discussion were the earthquake and meteorite questions. A visit was paid to inspect the famous "Meteorstein" which fell in the neighbourhood of Ensisheim, on November 7, 1492, the oldest-known, which is preserved in the Ensisheimer Rathhaus. The document recording its discovery is in Old-German verse—

"Als man zahlt vierzenhundert Jar,
Uff Sant Florentzen-tag das ist war,
Nüntzig und zwei um mittentag,
Gescha ein grusam Donnerschlag.
Drei zentner schwer fil diser Stein,
Hie in dem Feld von Ensisheim,
Drij Eck hat er verscherwetzet gar,
Wie Erz gestalt und Erd es war.
Tünov, Nekar, Arch, Ill, und Rin, Switz, Uri, hört den Klapp der In,
Auch doent er den Burgundern vor,
In forchten die Franzosen ser."

Of the three "Zentners" of which the rhyme speaks, only seventy-five kilogrammes are now left. The other half has disappeared by the chipping of the stone from time to time to give portions to German Emperors and other favoured collectors.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—(Thursday, June 2.)

THE LORD TALBOT DE MALAHIDE, President, in the Chair.—The Rev. W. J. Loftie read some notes on "Recent Discoveries among the Egyptian Pyramids." One sentence of the paper in question deserves notice: "There are no universities in Europe of any importance without Egyptian teachers except those of England."—Mr. J. Park Harrison read a paper on "Incised Figures upon Slate, and Other Remains, from Towyn, Merionethshire." The incised slate was sent to the author, for examination and exhibition, by Mr. Richard Williams, of Clynnoog, Newtown, Mont., who obtained possession of it in the autumn of last year. The figures upon it were conclusively shown to be engraved and not to be mere surface-markings, and it was evident to the meeting that they had a meaning and were of great interest. Mr. Harrison believed that the work was Irish, and showed from the writings of Sir W. Wilde and Sullivan, who minutely describe the dress and arms of the ancient Irish, that the figures on the slate were very similar in form, the resemblance of some of the outlines to Irish axes being very marked.—Capt. E. Hoare read a paper on some early tiles from Stanhoe and the ruined church of Barwick-in-the Brakes, Norfolk.—Mr. W. Thompson Watkin sent a paper on "Roman Inscriptions discovered in Britain in 1880." This is Mr. Watkin's eighth supplement to Dr. Hübner's volume of Britanno-Roman inscriptions, and his fifth annual list.—Mr. J. H. Parker called attention to some photographs of a remarkable series of wood-carvings in the church of Trull, near Taunton, dated 1560, which represent ecclesiastical dignitaries and officials in "unreformed" vestments.—Mr. W. Gain exhibited a plan and contributed notes on earth-works at Laxton and Egmanston, Notts.—Mr. Loftie exhibited a very fine series, perhaps the finest in Europe, of scarabs bearing kings' names.—Mr. Harrison sent a collection of antiquities, some as late as the seventeenth century, from Towyn.—Mr. Watkin exhibited a photograph of the great statue found last year at York, and gave reasons in his paper for suggesting that Britannia may be here represented.—Mr. G. Joslin laid before the meeting a rubbing from the inscribed Roman altar lately found at Colchester.—The Rev. A. Porter produced a fine Roman cameo, an Indian sardonyx, found in the late Mr. Davis's garden at York, and representing a youthful fawn.—Mr. O. Morgan exhibited a drawing of a beautiful Roman tessellated pavement lately uncovered at Caerwent, and drew attention to its remarkable characteristics of the various fish of the district being represented upon it, the salmon and the eel being very apparent. Mr. Morgan also exhibited a couteau de chasse of the unusual length of nineteen inches, apparently of the sixteenth century.—Mr. F. Rindler sent a human vertebra with a flint arrow-head embedded in it. This highly interesting relic was found by Mr. Madge in a burial-mound near Copiapo, Chili.

PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—(Friday, June 3.)

A. J. ELLIS, Esq., President, in the Chair.—The paper read was "History of English Sounds, Part III., with Some Etymologies," by Mr. H. Sweet. The etymologies were:—(1) Chicken (Old-English ciccen), not formed from cock, but by direct imitation. (2) Lo, rhyming on do in the Cursor Mundi, cannot be the Old-English lā; the form low points probably to lōg, which may possibly be the Old-English lōca. (3) Swoon, from the participle geswōgen. (4) Loathsome, from relatsum by substitution of the more familiar lāð. (5) Chill, not from cēle, which does not exist, but from cele = original kālī*. The subject of the rest of the paper was Old-English quantity as shown by the accents of the MSS., whose general accuracy was vindicated. Besides the lengthenings before ū, nd, &c., which were pointed out in an earlier paper, the following were some of the most important results:—(1) Change of bræc, &c., into bræc in West Saxon by the influence of the plural bræcon, whence Chaucer's seel: feet, &c., the modern sat, &c., being due to Mercian, which, like the other un-Saxon dialects, lengthened only a few preterites—cōm, nōm, and apparently āt. (2) The former explanation of ōn and ūn was withdrawn, and the lengthening was attributed to the rarity of words ending in -on and -un, and the influence of those in -ōn and -ūn. Similarly, the only words in -of are of, lof, and hof, all of which were lengthened in the earliest period. The same is the explanation of vil, git, and many other words. (3) Niwe and hwo by analogy. (4) Shortening before double consonants, as in sohte and brotte. (5) Length preserved before st, sc, as in gāst, Crist; and (6) in recent inflections and derivatives, such as lōdde, gitsian.

FINE ART.

THE SALON OF 1881.

(Fourth and Concluding Notice.)

BEFORE passing to the consideration of the sculpture, something must be said of a few at least of the many and meritorious landscapes of which this year can boast. Not to speak of old favourites like Karl Daubigny, Harpignies, Lavielle, and others previously well known to us, there seems to be a large proportion of good work by younger men, although, oddly enough, there is hardly anything of first-rate importance. M. Lavielle has treated La Crue de la Corbionne à Bretoncelles with even more than his accustomed delicacy of observation; the study of the values in the middle distance, the graceful drawing of the leafless branches black across the pale gray-golden sky in which the moon is slowly rising above the meadows lying under water, are points specially worthy of attention. M. Masure, another pupil of Corot's, contributes in Murée basse an excellent study of an expanse of sea rippling under a cloudy sky showing breaks of red. M. Billotte has two delicately treated studies of evening effects: Le Soir—Effet de Lune, and Le Soir—Neige fondante, of which perhaps the moonlight is the more successful. The snow in his second work looks a little painty, especially if we turn to it after M. Denduyt's Dégel, in which the very action of the thaw going on under the pale gleam of a winter's sunset is rendered with remarkable truth. But M. Billotte's Effet de Lune rewards much looking; it is as broadly and finely conceived as M. Le Poittevin's Effet du Soir—Étretat, and presents a wonderful variety of suggestive detail. In the foreground is a woman driving home bullocks towards a quiet homestead far hidden in the wood; the full moon is shining in a lovely, tremulous sky over green meadows and fields in which the plough is at rest, and making infinite mystery of the middle distance and of the exquisite undulations, most delicately drawn, of the distant hills. Nor should a very finely composed landscape by Léon Flahault be neglected—a landscape which shows that the simplest subject, if the lines be only noble, will fill the largest canvas. Nothing could be simpler than the subject which M. Flahault has chosen—a broad road, along which a herdsman is slowly coming towards us behind his flock; there are fields to right and left, and on the right begins a belt of trees which stretches onwards dwindling and becoming a depth of dark just where the road turns in the very centre of the picture. The whole effect depends on the happy instinct with which the curves of the road, the line of the belt of trees, and the cloudy movement of the sky have been brought into relation with each other. The sky of M. Joubert's prettily chosen subject—Une Gorge de Montagnes d'Arrets (Morbihan)—is noticeable for its fine gradations from blue to golden-gray, against which the branches of a group of leafless poplars tell with much grace of effect; the course of the little stream in which two white herons are fishing is marked by pollard willows, and the white plumage of the birds accentuates the darkest point among the gray rocks of the foreground. Sketches of both these works will be found in M. Dumas' excellent Catalogue illustré of the Salon, which is this year even better than last. It scarcely seems to be sufficiently understood that M. Dumas admits no sketches in his catalogue except those executed by the artists themselves. He does not attempt to give complete records of the works selected, but simply such notes as their authors themselves present to him, and which must presumably have some personal value, and represent the points in each case to which they attach chief importance. Space, however, forbids our dwelling at length on this convenient book. Nor will space permit us to make mention of much in the section of engraving which is worthy of note. Gaillard, Gammerel, Rajon, Flameng, Bracquemond, and other distinguished names are all represented this year, and M. Bracquemond's reproduction of Delacroix's picture, Séance de la Convention du 20 Mai, 1793, présidée par Boissy d'Anglas, is extremely remarkable on account of the exactness of the rendering of the character of the painting and of the nature of the execution; for the sombre grandeur of the ensemble, and the frankness and simplicity of the means employed. But, though there is much that is very good, I do not think that there is anything of capital importance; and, if this is true of the sections of engraving and of painting, it is even more true of that of sculpture.

M. Barrias occupies at least a considerable place with La Défense de Paris en 1870—a subject which he has embodied in an enormous group, the central figure of which is the Republic in the uniform of a Garde nationale, with a crown of towers on her head: the conception and treatment alike show a rather unhappy mixture of classic allegory and la modernité, with—in the figure of the little beggar-boy asleep behind—reminiscences of Italian style. The second contribution of M. Barrias, a standing statue of Bernard Palissy, looks—in spite of the ugliness of the bronze, which has the air of a coloured cast—a more real piece of work; there seems rather too much apron and oven and pots and fossils; but the head and hands are good in character, and the expression of the eyes is fine, so that, though all that one reads, or that tradition hands down to us, concerning Palissy leads one to look for a more rugged type, one may well be content to accept a version which, if too polished, is at any rate grave, thoughtful, and dignified.

Works of very great size, if not of very great merit, do indeed predominate in the garden this year, and Lord Ronald Gower bears away the palm, even from M. Barrias, as to size, with the production described in the catalogue as "Shakespeare—statue, plâtre"—a thing which looks like a Brobdignagian Twelfth-cake, and has been appropriately installed in front of the restaurant. I will not undertake to criticise a work which I confess myself wholly unable to understand, but the comments of professional sculptors, whether "modern" or no, seemed to vary only between "Tiens, c'est mauvais!" and "Tiens, c'est drôle!" to either of which now and then was added a long-drawn "Le pauvre bon-homme de Shakspear!" Another group of immense size, called Charité romaine, by M. Lemaire, is also of immense pretension; and, if the execution is not of that order which invites us to examine it in detail, the whole presents an amusing variety of treatment. Two bas-reliefs—one of which embodies, we are told, L'Amour de la Vérité, and the other L'Amour du Bien de la Nature—are inserted in the vast pedestal, and these are modelled after the example of Italian sixteenth-century work, but the group above is in all the glory of the blanket drapery which has recently become the fashion; even the kerchief on the head of the female figure is cut out of this solid material. Notwithstanding its apparent weight, a formless morsel of this stuff flies from her head, and suggests a pretence of concealing her action, as it rests on that of the aged man to whom she offers her breast. If blanketing is the chosen material, it is of course necessary to give it an air of proper solidity and thickness; but why should M. Aimé Millet have bestowed these same qualities on the lace veil which drapes the head and shoulders of his reclining statue for the tomb of the Princesse Christine de Montpensier? After the successful bronze of Denise Papin which he exhibited last year, M. Millet's present contribution awakes feelings of disappointment; this statue of Princess Christine surely requires some more months of labour to bring it up to a level of good workmanship, such as one has the right to expect from a sculptor of M. Millet's reputation. In this respect, that accomplished master, M. Guillaume, usually sets an excellent example; he is never original, but he is rarely negligent, and there are some charming points of finish in his pretty and graceful group of Andromache. The body of Andromache seems, perhaps, not quite sufficiently felt, and there is a bunched line of drapery just where you want to get firm grip of the forms of the right knee and leg; but the general arrangement of the folds is very attractive, and the wrists and elbow-joints of the figure are a masterly study of supple beauty.

M. Gautherin's Paradis perdu is also noteworthy—a little heavy, perhaps, but admirably worked out and well composed. The composition does not, though, look as if it were of an order proper to the talent of the sculptor, who is best known to the public by his charming figure of Clotilde de Surville. It is, indeed, said that the design for this group is not precisely original; and that we are here in presence of one of those incidents of reminiscence which now and again give birth to unfortunate, and sometimes unjust, suspicions. Near to M. Gautherin's group stands M. Gérôme's Anacreon; the poet boars in his arms a lively Cupid and an infant Bacchus drowsy with wine; he smiles, as Cupid lays his fingers on his beard, and steps forward bearing his lyre on his back. There is much that is extremely happy and interesting in this group; but the general effect is marred by a tendency to linelessness, and the pleated drapery, which falls in long, regular folds about the figure of Anacreon, requires, it seems to me (like the pattern of M. Aimé Millet's lace veil), an infinity of work directed here and there to the effacing of harsh and rough accent, so as to bring variety into the surface, and spaces of contrast which would enhance the play of light and shade, and do away with the unpleasant look of streakiness which now prevails. Oddly enough, what is said of the drapery may also be repeated of the face of the poet, whose wrinkled smile takes an aspect of grimace, from—as it seems to me—precisely the same defect of workmanship.

For a charming bit of execution, we may go to M. Allar, whose graceful group, La Mort d'Alceste, now appears in marble, or to M. Coutan's Eros, a picturesque rendering of Love, who, holding his bow in his left hand, draws a shaft, from the quiver at his back, with his right. This figure poises itself upon the left foot, which is set on a globe rolling in uncomfortable puffs of marble cloud, necessary to the balance of the work; close after flies a dove, on whose back Love places his left foot, while her mate clings closely to the moving ball. The movement of the body, in the sense of the curves of the bow, is extremely well felt, and expressive of pliancy and sway; and the torso is noticeably full of work, and yet young. The whole effect is that of a graceful decorative object, which would look admirably attractive en bibelot, like M. Fremiet's capital little bronze of the Great Condé or M. Moreau-Vauthier's pretty Fortune, of which there is, this year, a drawing-room table reduction in ivory, the charm of which is a little marred by the violent blue of the enameled ball on which the figure rests, and which is not brought into harmony even by the splendid enrichments of a pedestal adorned with gold and silver and precious stones. In connexion with this class of work may also be taken M. Carrier-Belleuse's life-size Filomela, a conventionally pretty figure, with gold-stringed lute and tinted hair, delicate, affected, and silly-looking, but supple and dainty in workmanship.

To quite another order belongs M. Godebski's Persuasion, or, as he himself calls his work on its pedestal, La Luxure et la Chasteté. The two figures—a satyr with an uncertain nymph upon his knee—are well put together, the movement comes well, the whole group is well balanced, and profiles from every point of view; but the work is as canaille as M. Morot's St. Anthony, the head of the satyr is unnecessarily hideous, and the general impression is disgusting.

Among the works of less pretension, and of younger men, which must be briefly mentioned in conclusion, are several single figures of considerable excellence, among which M. Labartet's Narcisse is worth attention, the torso especially being noticeable for the thorough modelling which it displays. The Abel of M. Carles, too, is very closely studied, the curve of the body at the hips is finely rendered, and the attachments of the arms are good. M. Mabillet sends a Mélégre standing on the boar's head, which looks an energetic piece of work; and the statue of Persée, by M. Martin, which stands opposite to M. Mabillet's Mélégre, although it suggests disadvantageous recollections of Cellini and Le Merici's treatment of the same subject, has merit of its own. The head of Perseus is well capped, good and dignified in expression; the dragon is rather grotesque—as dragons are apt to be—but is well arranged, and makes a good mass, on which Perseus stands firmly, his right foot planted on the rock round which the beast coils, his left upon its back; the attitude has the merit of looking easy and natural, and the extremities are rather more studied than is now usual. Searching workmanship is, if not becoming rarer among French sculptors, certainly not on the increase, and much that is very attractive at the first look is, consequently, only a source of disappointment on closer inspection. Take, for instance, M. Gaudéy's Nymphé Echo, which is full of movement and life—she runs and listens in the most lively way—and then look at her feet; it is no use to say to oneself, "This is only the plaster; one will find all perfectly executed when the work is put into marble." Experience shows one that what is left undone in the clay is usually left undone also in the marble. It is true that the labour which may be bestowed in achieving a result which will be visible only to the few is all but interminable. "Ça ne finit donc pas, la sculpture!" said a painter—renowned for scrupulous workmanship—when he set himself for the first time to put life into the marble. There is, of course, always a danger—to the weaker men—of adding finish which is inappropriate, and therefore injurious to the effect of the something good on which they may have begun; but it would bode ill to the prospects of any art if the number of those who make inexorable demands on themselves in its service should appear to diminish. And in our modern life we have so little time for that long dwelling by which alone we can adequately appreciate the result of the sculptor's long labours, that it seems incumbent even on those who only look and admire to strive to raise the level of their demands, lest the most zealous should be disheartened by the ease with which we seem to be satisfied, and the very carelessness of our pleasure.

E. F. S. PATTISON.

THE DECORATIVE ART EXHIBITION.

THE need of some exhibition to illustrate periodically the progress of decorative art has for some time been felt, and the patrons and promoters of the present collection at 103 New Bond Street may be thanked for assisting to satisfy it. It is not to be expected that the first attempt, in premises which, though extensive and well decorated, are scarcely palatial would succeed in assembling all that is good and new; but so wide a field has been ranged by Mr. Gullick, the director, and such admirable taste shown in the selection of the articles, that it may be safely said to represent not unworthily the study and skill which have of late years, both in England and on the Continent, been employed in purely decorative art.

It is one of the merits of this exhibition that it takes a large view of what is decorative, and very properly admits designs the aim of which is higher than that of mere ornament, if the conception is sufficiently broad and noble to be impressive, without regard to detail. It is here that the extremes touch. The greatest work in painting is also the most nobly decorative; and an exhibition of decorative art should rightly include, as this does, such monumental cartoons as Mr. Goodall's Jochbed and Sarah, and the latest ceramic fancies of Boulenger and Co.

Here and there, perhaps, the line is a little overstepped, as in Mr. Gullick's cleverly painted head of a Spanish lady, but this is very seldom; and the work we have mentioned scarcely needs an excuse for its presence when we remember that it is to Mr. Gullick's labour and taste that this very interesting collection has been brought together for our pleasure.

In wall and window decoration it is pleasant to see so much fine and appropriate work by English artists. Mr. Westlake has some designs, marked by his usual learning, purity, and sweetness; and Mr. Henry Holiday's cartoons for stained glass and chalk studies of the figure need fear no comparison with any modern work of the same kind. He has evidently, like all the nobler artists of the present day, supplemented the study of what is best in ancient art with constant recourse to nature, and has used both to guide without strangling his own artistic impulses.

To artists who have achieved the highest honours in art purely pictorial the exhibition owes many works of interest. Ingenuity, perhaps, rather than genius, marks the curious design by Mr. Millais, in which the tracery of a church window is ornamented with angels, pairs of which bend over the apex of each light, their wings arching on each side and their lips meeting in a holy salute above. Suggestive, but unfinished, like so much of this artist's imaginative work, is Mr. Watt's sketch of The Sun god (Hyperion), the Earth, and the Moon; and Mr. Alma-Tadema has a recumbent figure of a girl which might have decorated a panel at Pompeii, and a drawing for an onyx-and-marble window in his own residence which shows not only his well-known imitative skill, but the care and thoroughness which he applies to all that he undertakes. Mr. Herbert's study for the head of King Lear in his well-known fresco at Westminster, and a replica in "buon fresco" of Mr. Armitage's severe head of St. Simon at St. John's Church, Islington, are also noble contributions by our Royal Academicians. For domestic decoration, nothing could be better than Mr. Marks' wonderful frieze of storks and other birds, including a secretary; or the splendidly painted panels of fruit by Mr. William Hughes. Among many other clever works of the same order we noticed Mr. Walter Crane's panels for mosaic; an exquisitely painted satin-wood panel by Mr. J. S. Pearce; and a very original notion for a decorative panel of Cupid's Awakening, by W. C. Simons, in which a very successful attempt has been made to contrast nature and art by the introduction of a few very forcibly painted roses, which look as if they had been freshly picked and hung over the frame of the picture. Some panels by Mr. H. W. Schafer, Charles Coleman, and other works by other hands deserve more notice than we can give them. In its way unrivalled is a design for tapestry by M. Ch. Lamière.

In furniture, we noticed especially a lady's bureau in box-wood exquisitely carved, exhibited by Gueret Frères; Messrs. Gillow's beautiful doors for the Royal Pavilion at the Paris Exhibition of 1878; a comparatively simple but very light and elegant satin-wood cabinet, by S. Robertson; and some Vernis Martin tables by P. Sormani et Fils.

If we leave off particularising now, it is only for want of space. The visitor who goes to enjoy the sight of beautiful things will need no guide in rooms where ugliness and want of taste are so rare. It is but a change of refined pleasure to turn from the wood-carvings of Messrs. Gibson and Kendall to the Limoges enamels of M^{me}. de Cool, from Mr. N. Hitch's clever painted stone reliefs to the tapestry of M. Brignolas, from the perfect embroidery of the School of Art Needlework to Mr. Berne's marvellous ironwork, or from the masterpieces of the Venice and Murano Glass Company and M. Salviati to the exquisite gold and silver ornaments and jewellery exhibited by MM. Melillo and Giugliano. To those who study the progress of decorative art, the exhibition will be interesting and encouraging. We trust that the exhibition will become one of the annual treats of the London season. There is plenty of room for an exhibition which shall bear the same relation to the South Kensington Museum as the Royal Academy does to the National Gallery. If the same spirit and taste continue to govern its council, it is not likely to want due encouragement; and it is to be hoped that it will be something besides a treat to the educated—viz., a means of instruction to the artisan. We trust that the direction will see their way to give special facilities to this class for examining their collection of treasures. That English manufactures should be marked by originality, or at least novelty, as well as by beauty of design, is necessary from a commercial, as well as desirable from an aesthetic, point of view; and for this purpose it is important that our artisans should not only study good models, but be au courant with the latest movements of decorative ideas, both at home and abroad. Though nearly all new work is based upon the old, and generally, perhaps, inferior in power of suggestion, the modern work is the more fertile; it has not only a fresher touch of life, but it engenders emulation—one of the greatest stimulants to invention.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

PROF. MENZEL'S DRAWINGS.

THE Exhibition of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours has received an important addition in the form of a few drawings by its distinguished honorary member, Prof. Adolf Menzel, the well-known illustrator of Kugler's Life of Frederick the Great and the jubilee edition of Zerbrochener Krug. Prof. Menzel's labours for the magnificent but privately printed edition of the works of Frederick the Great, commenced by direction of the late King of Prussia, must have absorbed so much of his time as to partly account for the comparative localisation of his fame; but his long and industrious life has been productive of works in almost all methods of pictorial art, from lithographs to oils. It is a matter of some regret that the rules of the society, who have honoured themselves not less than the artist in admitting him to membership, prevent them from introducing more than, as it were, a small portion of his genius to the English public.

It would appear probable, and we hope our surmise is correct, that even in the few works of Prof. Menzel here exhibited the society have stretched a point in favour of the artist. Two of the drawings—viz., those of Frederick the Great and his sister—are mainly in pastel, and are wonderful examples of what solidity and transparency can be "got" by thoroughly skilful use of this material. Otherwise, they exhibit, beside their fine drawing and other technical qualities, the rare power of designing portraits of historical persons as though they had been drawn from the life. It is difficult to believe that this rubicund, thick-throated monarch did not "stand" just thus before Prof. Menzel, and that the artist has never seen this lady taking a volume from her book-case. The other drawings exhibit great versatility. One, in body-colour, represents a lady of the seventeenth century standing by a spinet, turning over the leaves of her music-book as though she were selecting an air. The lid of the instrument is richly painted inside with some allegorical or pastoral subject in the manner of the time, and is opened against a tapestried wall, giving an opportunity for clever discrimination of texture and colour; she herself is attired in a black dress with white ruffles and a large white cap, and stands with her back to a window. The technical difficulties of rendering the complicated effect of light thus chosen are completely surmounted, and the silvery brightness of this part of the picture is admirably balanced by the warmth and various colour of the furniture. Still more daring and complex lights distinguish a drawing of the interior of an inn, with a monk peeping into the kitchen, out of which pours the rich glow of the fire. Two fine studies of hands (full size), also in body-colour, and three small life-like portraits (in transparent water-colour) of officers in the German Army, complete the list at present; but two or three more—one of which at least will, we believe, show the artist's skill in landscape—will be added in a few days. Few as the drawings are, they are sufficient to show the Professor's "hand;" and the one frame which contains the three little portraits just mentioned would alone entitle him to hold front rank among the masters of water-colour.

C. M.

THE EXHIBITION IN FLORENCE OF THE PICTURES IN THE MAGAZINES OF THE UFFIZI.

In a former article in the ACADEMY, some of the pictures which for many years have been hidden in the extensive magazines of the Uffizi were described. Among these are four portraits by Sir Peter Lely, commissioned by Prince Cosmo of Tuscany when he visited England, and a very interesting tempera painting which I assigned reasons for believing to be a specimen of Sandro Botticelli. The pictures have been carefully examined, and will be reported upon by a commission appointed by the Minister of Public Instruction; but one only of the commissioners, the Cavaliere Gaetano Milanese, accepted my theory of the Botticelli. He made use of the article in the ACADEMY in support of his opinion; and, after a long series of earnest debates, and a comparison of this work with other examples of the great master, I am now informed that its claims are admitted and that it will be placed in the gallery. It is by no means in every respect a first-rate example; but as showing Botticelli's method of procedure, and the principles of painting advocated by Cennino Cennini, it is invaluable; while, as containing numerous portraits of Savonarola and his contemporaries and adherents, its interest is unique.

Among the pictures lately exhibited are topographical views of villas which belonged to the Grand Dukes of Tuscany, with their formal gardens and groups of courtiers of the seventeenth century, many playing at croquet or other games. In the present state of Italian villas near Florence little idea can be formed of their former splendour, spoilt and altered as they have been. These pictures, therefore, have a special interest. One, a view of Caffagiolo, shows the Tuscan country mansion in its noblest form, and at the same time famous as the site of the manufacture of the most beautiful majolica produced in Tuscany.

A series of long, narrow pictures have been used as a frieze of a hall or gallery, representing the procession which took place at Bologna on the coronation of Charles V. by Clement VII. This remarkable work, cleverly painted, is copied from an engraving of which only four specimens are known to exist. The last of these, purchased by the late Sir William Stirling Maxwell for £200, was by him reproduced in a handsome folio volume, the work of Messrs. Waterston, of Edinburgh. I have lent this to the commissioners, that they may estimate the value of the painting. There is, I believe, no copy of the old print in Italy.

The eminent artist and portrait painter, the Cavaliere Ciseri, has, I am informed, proposed that the long suite of rooms connected with the Florence Gallery should be prepared to receive a careful selection of these pictures, thus forming a museum of substantial value of an historic and illustrative character. It may be permitted to state that this use of the pictures has been already suggested in the columns of the ACADEMY. If Signor Ciseri's proposal is adopted, it may be the means of saving now, and in future times, many pictures of an illustrative character, too apt to be condemned because not of high quality as works of art.

Many more pictures remain to be exhibited. Of the hundreds hitherto exposed, the first impression is that the range of subjects for some centuries has been very limited; that during all these years artists rarely displayed any originality in the choice of theme. That such should have been the case in religious pictures is easily understood; but why Potiphar's wife should have employed so many artists, why Lucretia should turn-up in every file of paintings, why the same nymphs and fauns should crowd the walls, can only suggest wonder at the prevalent perversion of taste for long periods.

C. HEATH WILSON.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

WE understand that Mr. T. A. Trollope will contribute to the July number of the Magazine of Art an article on Guido's so-called "Cenci Portrait." The paper, which will be illustrated, is intended to prove that the well-known picture has no connexion with "Beatrice Cenci."

MR. C. MAGNIAC, M.P., has accepted the presidency of the meeting of the Royal Archaeological Institute to be held at Bedford on July 26.

THE Louvre, which has hitherto only possessed one unimportant drawing as an example of Sir Thomas Lawrence, bought recently at the sale of Mr. Bale's collection at Christie and Manson's the fine portrait of Lord Whitworth, which is generally acknowledged to be a good specimen of Lawrence's style. Lord Whitworth was at one time Viceroy of Ireland, and was the English ambassador at Paris at the time when the Peace of Amiens was signed. The picture has therefore an historic, as well as an artistic, value. It is well known from its having been engraved in the black manner by Charles Turner. The Louvre paid 350 guineas for it.

THE new picture by Hans Makart is now on exhibition at the Künstlerhaus at Vienna. Its title is Summer, and the subject is a party of bathers of the fair sex—some in the water, some dressing—among whom are recognised the best-known beauties of the Austrian capital.

A SWISS painter, Herr Boss, of Muri, has been called to Munich in order to undertake, in conjunction with a fellow-pupil of the Bern Art School, the "renovation" of the frescoes upon the Isar-thor. These frescoes represent the triumphant entry of Ludwig the Bavarian after the Battle of Amping, and were painted by Bernhard von Neher, who was one of the earliest pupils of Cornelius, contemporary with Kaulbach.

THE death has lately taken place of the well-known collector and archaeologist, M. Benjamin Fillon, whose sale about four years ago created so much interest in art circles and among book-collectors. M. Benjamin Fillon was a frequent contributor to the Gazette des Beaux-Arts and other art papers, and has rendered many services to art and archaeology.

THE cathedral church of Gran has been made the subject of a work that will be invaluable to all those interested in religious art. This is the Geschichtliches, Beschreibendes und Urkundliches aus dem Graner Domschatz, which has just been published both in German and Hungarian at the cost of Card. Johann Simor, Primate of Hungary and Archbishop of Gran. The compiler is Dr. F. Danks, of the cathedral chapter. An historical description is given of the many art treasures preserved here, especially those collected by the "literary king" of Hungary, Matthias Corvinus. There are fifty-five plates showing photographic reproductions of rare hymn-books, missals, evangelaria, vestments, and metal-work.

In a recent number of the Gegenwart, Prof. A. von Werner, Director of the Academy at Berlin, argues at length against the authenticity of the celebrated picture recently acquired by the Berlin Museum, which is commonly ascribed to Rubens.

AT a recent session of the Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, M. Fr. Lenormant read a paper on Elagabalus, the Sun-god of Emesa, or Homs, in Syria. The god was worshipped under the form of a conical black stone, originally an aërolite, like the famous image of the Ephesian Artemis, and was inscribed with mysterious characters. It stood ordinarily on a metal pedestal, adorned with an eagle with spread wings. M. Lenormant derived the name of the deity from the Semitic el, "god," and the Accadian gibil, "fire," and observed that an unedited cuneiform inscription explains the Accadian Fire-god Gibil as "the god of the black stone." As the Greeks and Romans identified the old Fire-god of Emesa with the sun, the names Heliogabalus and Sol Elagabalus became current. The god was served by hereditary high-priests, who, in the later days of the Seleukids, usurped the sovereignty of the city and took the title of kings. Their rule lasted, as is shown by coins, up to the time of Antoninus Pius, after which they became again simply high-priests. One of these was Bassianus, who at the age of fourteen was proclaimed Emperor by the soldiers through the intrigues of his mother, Julia Soamias. He assumed the name of Marcus Aurelius Antoninus, though generally known in history as Eliogabalus. The one aim of his life was to extend the worship of his god, whom he is represented on his coins as worshipping in the garb of a Syrian priest. The black stone was removed to Rome, and a temple built in its honour on the Palatine, while another conical black stone representing the Phœnician Tanit, the female consort of the Sun-god, was brought from Carthage in order to be married to Elagabalus. Children are said to have been sacrificed to the new gods of Rome. However this may be, the black stone was restored to Emesa after the Emperor's death, though the temple, called Elagabalium, continued to exist at Rome as late as the reign of Constantine.

AN altar-piece by Giovanni Sanzio, the father of Raphael, existing in a church at Castello di Gradara, near Pesaro, has lately been repaired by order of the Italian Minister of Public Instruction. The artist employed was Signor Filippo Fiscali, of Florence. The picture had suffered to a grievous extent by the dampness of the church, the smoke of candles, and general neglect. The method of repairing it is an interesting testimony to the change of ideas on this subject which has taken place among the Italians. The detached colour has been carefully laid down; the coating of dirt, the accumulation of centuries, has been removed without injury to the true surface; parts entirely fallen away have been stuccoed and then washed with water-colour of a harmonious neutral tint. Thus no retouching or imitative mending is attempted anywhere. This is a great advance in sound principles, and it is thus that the frescoes in Assisi have been repaired. Several works of Giovanni Sanzio have recently come to light, all described as pictures of remarkable power, good design for his period, and rich and powerful colour. In consequence, some surprise has been expressed that Giovanni should have thought it necessary to place his son under the instruction of Pietro Perugino, being himself so capable a master of the art. However that may be, these pictures show, in an interesting manner, that the genius of the immortal son was inherited from a father who was in reality a much better artist than has hitherto been credited.

THE Hall of the Lilies of the Palace of the Municipality of Florence is to be restored under the direction of the eminent artist Signor Cavaliere Ciseri; and the fresco in the same room by Ghirlandajo, so recklessly injured by Giorgio Vasari, is to be restored by Prof. Cambi.

THE Portfolio is very good this month, both in matter and illustration. Mr. Hamerton again contributes a well-considered paper upon "Style," in which he marks the difference between technical style, defined as "the grace of the workman in the exercise of his craft," and intellectual style, "the result of culture." But surely, beside these acquired styles, there is the artist's own style, as individual to him as to the writer; so that we are enabled to tell the work of one man from that of another simply by means of their different styles. Technical style is well compared by Mr. Hamerton to what is termed "good form" in cricket and rowing. This is acquired usually by good training, but even in cricket each bowler and batsman has his peculiar style, apart from his accidental tricks of manner, perfectly recognisable by players. The two etchings of the number are by W. B. Hole and Jacob Hood, the latter representing with Rembrandtesque effect the process of glass-blowing in a Lancashire factory.

Harper's Magazine, always strong in topographical articles, commences this month what promises to be an interesting series of papers on "The White Mountains," by Samuel Drake, illustrated by some exquisite wood-cuts of the scenery, and another on Portugal, by Mrs. Lizzie W. Champney, called "A Neglected Corner of Europe," with excellent illustrations drawn by J. W. Champney. Edwin Booth and Benedetto Ciletti, the clever young Sicilian sculptor, whose group of Canaris di Scio gained for him a gold medal and the Cross of the Legion of Honour at Paris in 1878, furnish subjects for two other interesting papers.

THE colossal equestrian statue that the Milanese have erected to the memory of their liberator, Napoleon III., is generally admitted to be one of the finest works of the kind that have been produced for many years. The Emperor is admirably posed, and his military costume is treated with great success. The horse seems proud of his burden, and is full of vigour—a war horse of noble character and courage. The whole group, indeed, in all its line, is truly excellent. It is the work of a Milanese sculptor, Prof. Francesco Barzaghi, and it adds greatly to his already high reputation. The casting, which is most successful, has been done by MM. Galli, of Florence.

IN last week's L'Art are given two remarkable etchings. The one by J. Letoux represents an old street in Vitré, Brittany, with its rich architecture thrown into strong light and shade; the other is a clever rendering, by Jules Jacquemart, of the well-known picture by Jan van der Meer, of Delft, called The Soldier and the Laughing Girl.

THE STAGE.

THE GYMNASSE COMPANY AT THE GAIETY THEATRE.

BRIGHT acting and lively writing make the French performances at the Gaiety Theatre attractive, even when there is no "star" greater than M. St.-Germain and no piece newer than La Papillonne. But in truth it would be easy to underrate the Papillonne and difficult to surpass M. St.-Germain. The play is M. Sardou's. It is a play that may rank almost with his early ones. It is nearly twenty years old, and we have only recently had an adaptation of it at the Criterion, in which Mr. Charles Wyndham bustles and hurries effectively for the space of a couple of hours. La Papillonne deals with a character that is always amusing—a male flirt so constant in the pursuit of his vocation that he may be deemed more professional than amateur; and it deals with a matter which has to be handled very lightly on the stage, if it is handled at all, and that is the rebellion of a truant and a wanderer against the idea of conjugal fidelity. When the hero of La Papillonne—who is really a very light person indeed, and quite incapable of thinking out a difficult problem—asks whether his admiration for his own roses should prevent him from admiring those in his neighbour's garden, and whether he is to take no interest in a book that is lent him because he happens to care for one that he himself possesses, he is suggesting the question which even William Blake found it desirable to answer in the form of an allegory, declaring only that "Love, free love, cannot be bound

To any tree that grows on ground."

And that is not a question which can be answered at all upon the stage—not even in the boldest philosophy of M. Alexandre Dumas. Such a theme, at the theatre, is not raised for discussion at all. It is only, and very rightly, raised for ridicule. And M. St.-Germain in the Papillonne shows us its funniest side in the most delicate of ways. The play is a witty and an extravagant farce. If it pretended to be a picture of real life, and this gentleman, who follows every agreeable face with new enthusiasm, were presented to us as a being we might any day meet in reputable drawing-rooms, the thing would be an offence. But plot and character and witty observation, all belong to some wild world with whose imaginary problems nineteenth-century life has nothing to do.

Mdme. Celine Montaland, Mdle. Brindeau, and M. Landrol take part in the performance, as well as the finished comedian of whom we have already spoken. Mdle. Brindeau is in no wise remarkable, save for that tranquility of grace which is wholly French. Mdme. Celine Montaland was a much-talked-about young beauty some fifteen years ago, and she is now at the stage at which a talked-about beauty wisely bethinks herself that she may become an artist. She has some few gifts of her own, and the traditions of the theatre. M. Landrol we expect to see to far greater advantage than in this light piece of M. Sardou's. He is a serious and fully accomplished artist, upon whom the heaviest burdens of the Gymnase repertory have long been wont to rest. He is a comedian only a small portion of whose play is called upon to be comic. He was the hero of the Visite de Noces—the most sternly analytical piece ever placed upon the modern stage. He played in it with Desclée, and his art seconded her genius. Obviously, then, neither the width nor the depth of his power can fairly be gauged by his performance in the Papillonne.

And as for M. St.-Germain himself, he is not seen at his best in this piece. One must get to the theatre early, in time for the Monsieur en Habit noir—the little piece on which the curtain first rises—if one is to know what an adroit and dexterous artist M. St.-Germain is. The piece has very little plot, and it has only one character—a middle-aged bachelor who, having made up his mind to marry, repairs to the house of the young woman's father, and there awaits his presence to propose for the daughter's hand. The twenty minutes that the play consumes are occupied with the expression of M. St.-Germain's fears, of his enthusiasm, of his hesitation, of his careful consideration of the family's condition, of his deliberation on his own hitherto unfettered existence—finally, of his decision to leave the house without dropping so much as a hint how serious had been his mission. Few English actors have anything approaching to M. St.-Germain's gift of occupying, without seeming stupidly to monopolise, so much time and attention. He gets on by himself almost as well as does Mme. Chaumont—as did M. Levasseur. And he does this by the exercise of an art as minute as Meissonier's, as penetrating as Vibert's.

STAGE NOTES.

THE protests of certain subscribers who wished for variety in the Meininger performances were sufficient to induce the management, during last week and the present week, to keep pretty much to the original programme, and not to repeat Julius Caesar with marked frequency because of its success. Julius Caesar has given place to Twelfth Night and Twelfth Night to The Robbers; indeed, it has been impossible to follow all the performances in detail—the performances, it must be remembered, of a very numerous company, to whom speedy change of repertory is easy and habitual. But there has been no reason that we are aware of to change the generally favourable, though not enthusiastic, opinion of the Meininger actors expressed last Saturday, when we took occasion to point out that the characteristic of the company was the excellence of its minor players, the careful drilling of its supernumeraries, the perfection of what is called the ensemble. Certainly, the discovery of one little fact (for which we are indebted to a writer in the Daily News to whom we are accustomed to be indebted for things less unimportant)—the little fact that Herr Barnay has not been mixed up with the Meiningers quite so intimately as we had imagined—can have no substantial bearing on the judgment formed of the company's capacity. We were willing to credit the Meiningen Theatre with having had more to do with the development of Herr Barnay's talent than it seems was the case. All the more truly then may it be said that the admirable company whose visit we welcome is a company of scientifically trained scholars, not a company of people of genius. It is curious that there are still in London a certain number of playgoers who do not miss the genius and the charm if they can discover the training. But these are generally beginners in the study of the drama; and the like of them, were it a question of literature or music, would probably opine that a group of grammarians could have written Wordsworth's Prelude, and that a knowledge of counterpoint was all that was required to make a Meyerbeer. We have long faithfully endeavoured to disabuse them of any such impression. The distance between genius and scholarship is one that divides two worlds.

MDME. MODJESKA has moved with Mr. Wilson Barrett's company to the Princess's Theatre, and has appeared there in a version of Frou-frou announced as prepared by Mr. Comyns Carr. The version has the advantage of being prepared by a keen student of the stage, and one alive to the graces of English style. It is fitted, we believe, a good deal to the particular actress who now plays the principal part, and differs in some essential respects from the version which was prepared for Miss Ellen Terry. It is not likely that much fault can reasonably be found with either adaptation, but the success of a piece must of course always be largely dependent on the individuality of the performers, and we cannot say that Mme. Modjeska's individuality is at all fitted to the lightness of Frou-frou. We have all seen many Frou-frous; the Frou-frou of Mdle. Desclée to begin with—and it is the impression that she made to begin with that remains to the end. Then Mdle. Léonide Leblanc's "Frou-frou"—that of a woman who had more tenderness than intellect. Then Mdle. Beatrice's; perhaps Miss Ellen Terry's (though that has been played only in the provinces); certainly Mdle. Sarah Bernhardt's. Of these, the first and the last were incomparably the finest, and Mme. Modjeska does little to pale the glories of either. As a piece of generally refined motive, and full of opportunities for quite subtle emotional disturbance—of a kind denied to the melodrama and denied sometimes to the tragedy—it is no wonder that Frou-frou appealed to Mme. Modjeska, even though, along with things in which she might succeed brilliantly, it contained things in which she must inevitably fail. She is not ineffective in the character by any means; she is only unequal, and, therefore, not satisfactory. That curious union of girlish bravado and girlish timidity which Desclée gave so admirably in the first act—how can anyone with anything short of Desclée's genius or Desclée's temperament give it at all? Sarah Bernhardt did not succeed in this; but then in one subsequent act—the act of gradually roused quarrel between the two sisters—Sarah Bernhardt had not so much a success as a triumph. Nothing more intensely living, in the way of a gentlewoman's quarrel, was ever seen upon the stage. Perhaps Mme. Modjeska is beheld at her best in the act that passes at Venice, where the runaway lovers are trying to be happy and Frou-frou is really sighing for the amusements of Paris. The weariness that hardly recognises itself as weariness; the satiety that is as yet undeclared; the feeling of the hour when neither has had courage to say the word that each is thinking of—all that is within Mme. Modjeska's range; and that she sufficiently represents. Again, Mme. Modjeska is known to be great in pathetic deaths, and the death of Frou-frou is really far more pathetic than that of "the lady with the camelias." Mr. Wilson Barrett and Mr. Forbes-Robertson appear prominently in the piece, as the husband and the lover of the heroine. Miss Ada Ward represents the self-sacrificing sister, whose stolid devotion is in part the cause of all the misadventures. Mr. G. W. Anson acts Brigard, the Bohemian parent of the young women. He plays skilfully and with pains, but poor old M. Ravel's lightness of touch is much to be desired in a part of this nature. Nor is this by any means the only part in the piece which might have been made more effective by a wiser distribution of the characters.

MUSIC.

HERR ANTON RUBINSTEIN'S PIANO-FORTE RECITAL; ETC.

THE immense audience at St. James's Hall last Thursday week, on the occasion of Herr Rubinstein's first pianoforte recital this season, proved that the wonderful performances of the greatest of pianists four seasons ago have not been forgotten. After hearing him, one may perhaps come to the conclusion that his interpretations of the great masters are not altogether orthodox, and that his technique, though extraordinary, is not absolute perfection. But, while he is playing, the power of judging and criticising vanishes; so thoroughly does he possess you, so magic a spell does he cast around you. One can only listen and admire. It is not difficult to explain the secret of this fascination. He possesses one of the greatest and rarest of gifts—a fine touch—so that at times he sings rather than plays; and he understands the law of contrast, for he can render equally well passages requiring force and fire, and those demanding the utmost grace and delicacy. But more than all this, he thoroughly enters into the spirit of the various works, and gives them out as if they were inspired improvisations, so that what Wagner has said of Liszt can also be said of Rubinstein—viz., that his playing is "not mere reproduction, but real production." This marked individuality is the cause of his faults and eccentricities as well as of his power and success; for this reason, the former may well be excused. The errors of genius are not repulsive; they attract—nay, at times become positively interesting. Rubinstein's playing of Chopin is a case in point. His readings are daringly original, and many liberties does he take with the text; but his performance of Chopin's works is certainly one of the most characteristic and attractive features of his recitals. The programme of the first concert contained no novelties, but the selection was interesting and varied, including pieces by Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin, and Rubinstein. From an artistic point of view, we consider the performance of Schumann's magnificent fantasia in C (op. 17) the greatest success of the recital. The second concert will take place on Monday, June 20.

The programmes of the last two Richter concerts (Monday, May 30, and Thursday, June 2) contained but one novelty; but some of the performances were exceptionally fine. This novelty was the last of a set of six symphonies composed by Haydn in 1786 for the "Concerts de la Loge olympique." According to Herr Pohl, it was played for the first time in Vienna under the direction of Herr Richter last March. It is one of the composer's brightest and most genial compositions. At the sixth concert, Mozart's symphony in D—The Parisian—was performed. Herr Richter has for the second time recognised English talent by giving Mr. C. V. Stanford's psalm, God is our Hope and Strength, for soli, chorus, orchestra, and organ. There was good reason for choosing a work by this composer, for his opera, The Veiled Prophet of Khorassan, has recently been performed with marked success at Hanover. The psalm is cleverly written, but is not particularly original; it was composed in 1875.

On Wednesday last, Herr Carl Heymann gave a pianoforte recital at St. James's Hall. He was very successful in his rendering of an allegro by Scarlatti, and Bach's organ fantasia and fugue in G minor, transcribed by Liszt. He has a really excellent technique, and his playing is particularly neat, graceful, and delicate. We cannot say that his interpretation of Beethoven's Sonata Appassionata was satisfactory; there was too much of the player and too little of the composer. The programme commenced with Rubinstein's sonata in D, for piano and violoncello, in which the pianist was assisted by Herr Hollmann, who has a fine tone, excellent fingers, and plays with taste and skill. The sonata was performed by both artists in a brilliant and energetic manner.

J. S. SHEDLOCK,

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a NewsVendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . .	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S PUBLICATIONS.

Now ready.

PROCEEDINGS of the SCIENTIFIC MEETINGS of the SOCIETY for 1881. Part I. Containing the Papers read at the Scientific Meetings in January and February, 1881. With Twenty-six Plates, mostly Coloured, 12s.; with Plates Uncoloured, 5s.

TRANSACTIONS of the SOCIETY.

Vol. XI., Part V., price 21s. Containing Descriptions of some New and Rare Cephalopoda, Part II. By Professor OWEN, C.B., F.R.S. With Twelve Plates.

May be obtained at the Society's Office, 11, Hanover-square, W.; at Messrs. LONGMAN'S, the Society's Publishers, Paternoster-row, E.C.; or through any Bookseller.

Just published, price 1s.; per post, 1s. 1d.

SCOTTICISMS, Arranged and Connected.

By ALEXANDER MACKIE, M.A., formerly Assistant to Professor Bain.

London: HAMILTON, ADAMS, & CO.; Edinburgh and Glasgow: JOHN MENZIES & CO.; Aberdeen: A. & R. BILGIE.

TO PROPRIETORS of NEWSPAPERS

and PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SON'S, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, Brief News & Opinion, the Furniture Gazette, the Review, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPLETE, ECONOMIC, and PUNCTUAL PRODUCTION of PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether illustrated or plain. Estimates furnished to Proprietors of New Periodicals, for either Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—74 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

LONDON LIBRARY.

12, ST JAMES'S SQUARE.—Founded in 1841.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

PRESIDENT—THOMAS CARLYLE, Esq.

This Library contains 90,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature in various Languages. Subscription, £3 a-year, or £2 with Entrance-fee of £5; Life Membership, £20.

Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town, Members. Reading-room open from Ten to Half-past Six. Prospectus on application. ROBERT HARRISON, Secretary and Librarian.

BIBLE REVISION

THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA:

The Six Principal English Versions of the New Testament, in parallel columns, beneath the Greek Original Text. Wiclif, 1380.—Tyndale, 1534.—Cranmer, 1539.—Geneva, 1557.—Rheims, 1582.—Authorized, 1611. A very handsome vol., 4to, £2 2s.; or Morocco, gilt edges.

"In form and substance it is an admirable present for any clergyman." Observer.

London: S. DAOSTER & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row.
And sold by all Booksellers.

Sent post-free by the (Edinburgh) Publishers.

THE REVISED NEW TESTAMENT

anticipated in its Chief Renderings by YOUNG'S "LITERAL TRANSLATION of the BIBLE," in passages selected (by Prof. ROBERTS) to show the Character of the "REVISED" Version.

SPECIMENS of YOUNG'S "LITERAL TRANSLATION of the BIBLE," Second Edition, million type, 8vo, cloth, 15s.; sewed, 12s., free by post. With Recommendations of Professors, Clergymen, and Reviews of all Evangelical Bodies. Also of the "ANALYTICAL CONCORDANCE to the BIBLE," 4to, 36s. to 63s., according to Contents and Binding.

Edinburgh: G. A. YOUNG & CO., 18, Nicolson-street;

London: HODDER & STOUTON; and all Booksellers.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JUNE

contains:—Clement Marot and the Huguenot Psalter—The Great Composers: Berlioz—Mr. Pepys the Musician, by F. Huffer—Why the Greeks made no Advance in Harmony—Stella: Lyrical Drama by Amerling—Mozart—The Opera-House and Crystal Palace Concerts—Mr. C. Hallé's Recitals—Festival Services at St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey, &c.—Wagner's "Nibelungen" at Berlin—Occasional Notes, Foreign and Country News, Reviews, Correspondence, &c. Price 3d.; post-free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JUNE

contains:—"Cradle Song," Part Song, by OLIVER KING. Price, separately, 14d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER, & CO., 1, Berners-street, W., and 80 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

fluid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. By gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drowsy feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile. Prepared by J. PEPPIER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London. The name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s 9d. and 4s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY,

186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON'S numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their Books. There are 500 Bookstalls available for this purpose. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or 186, Strand, London.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in charge a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

I.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A LONDON TERMINUS, OR 186, STRAND—

	6 Months.	12 Months.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
For One Volume at a time	0 12 0	1 1 0
(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Two Volumes	0 17 6	1 11 6
(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Four "	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Eight "	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Fifteen "	3 0 0	5 5 0

II.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A COUNTRY BOOKSTALL—

	6 Months.	12 Months.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
For One Volume at a time	0 12 0	1 1 0
(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Two Volumes	0 17 6	1 11 6
(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Three "	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Four "	1 8 0	2 10 0
For Six "	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Twelve "	3 0 0	5 5 0

III.—FOR COUNTRY BOOK CLUBS, READING SOCIETIES, &c.

For Twenty-four Volumes at a time	5 5 0	9 9 0
For Thirty-six "	8 0 0	14 2 6
For Forty-eight "	10 10 0	18 16 0
For Sixty "	13 0 0	23 9 0
For Seventy-two "	15 10 0	28 2 0
For Eighty-four "	18 0 0	32 15 0

For every additional Twelve Volumes, £4 12s. 6d.

TERMS FOR SPECIAL TRAVELLING SUBSCRIPTIONS, Lists of Books in circulation, or any other information can be obtained at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or at 186, Strand, London.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings for Gentlemen's Libraries.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

To-night, at 8.15, Mrs. CENTLIVE'S Comedy,
THE BUSYBODY.Messdames Litton, Cresswell, Harris; Messrs. Kyrle Bellow, F. Everhill, J. Banister, Raynham, Stephens, Selton.

Preceded, at 7.30, by ONE TOUCH OF NATURE.

Doors open at 7; carriages at 10.50. Seats booked at the Princess's and Court Theatres from 11 till 5. No fees.

MONDAY NEXT, JUNE 13TH,

THE COUNTRY GIRL,
the second Comedy of Miss Litton's Series of Performances, will be produced.

Miss LITTON as PEGGY.

DRURY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

The MEININGEN COURT COMPANY of his Serene Highness the GRAND
DUKE OF SAXE-MEININGEN, under the gracious patronage of H.R.H. the
PRINCE OF WALES.

To-night, WILHELM TELL (Schiller).

Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, June 13, 14, 15, called WINTERSMÄRCHEN (WINTER'S TALE, Shakspeare).

Thursday, Friday, June 16, 17, called DIE AHNFRAU (Grillparzer).

Saturday, June 18,

called IPHIGENIE (Goethe).

Prices—Boxes, £1 1s. to 46 6s.; stalls, 12s. 6d.; dress circle, 6s.; first circle, 3s.; balcony, 2s.; pit, 2s. 6d.; amphitheatre, 2s.; gallery, 1s.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.15, WAITING CONSENT,

a new Comedietta by Mrs. FAIRBAIRN.

At 8, a new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, called THE UPER CURSE.

Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Billington, E. W. Garden, G. Shelton, and E. D.

Ward; Messdames Effie Liston, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorne.

At 10, WELSH RABBITS,

a musical and dramatic absurdity, by Messrs. R. BECE and KNIGHT

SUMMERS, will be produced, with new scenery, dresses, and appointments.

Messrs. J. L. Toole and E. W. Garden; Messdames Emily Thorne, Eliza

Johnstone.

Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to £3 3s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THE OPERA SEASON

Under the direction of Mr. ALEXANDER HENDERSON.

To-night, at 8, an entirely new and original Opera Comique, in three acts, by OFFENBACH, entitled

LA BOULANGERE.

Under the immediate direction of Mr. H. H. Fernle.

New and elaborate scenery by Ryan and Hicks. Dresses, after designs by Grévin and Faustini, by Alias.

Preceded, at 7.30, by a Comedy, after Molière and Halévy, entitled

SHEUNG HOOT-FHOOT.

Messdames Amadi, Maud Taylor, Turner, Palsie, Graham, Evelyn, and Wadman; Messrs. Celli, Temple, Ashford, Mansfield, Stepan, and Paulton.

Greatly augmented chorus and orchestra, under the direction of Mr.

Miller. Ballet master, Mr. Lauri.

Box-office now open. Acting Manager, Mr. W. A. BURT.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(200 yards from the Angel.)

DELILAH,

To-night, at 8,

By JAMES WILLING.

Messrs. Leonard Boyne, E. Wilmore, W. Vincent, A. H. Hatton, R.

Wilford, &c.; Messdames Stella Breverton, Fanny Addison, Blanche Newton,

Alice Raynor, Della Cudihart, and Amy Siddons.

Preceded, at 7.30, by a favourite Farce. Doors open at 6.45.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. DOYLE CARTE.

To-night, at 8.30, a new Aesthetic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. OILBRET and ARTHUR SULLIVAN, entitled

PATIENCE.

Messrs. George Grossmith, Rutland Barrington, Richard Temple, F.

Thornton, and Durward Leli; Messdames Leonora Braham, Jessie Bond, Julia Wynne, Fortescue, and Alice Barnett.

Produced under the personal direction of the Author and Composer.

Conductor, Mr. F. Cellier.

Preceded, at 8, by

UNCLE SAMUEL,

by ARTHUR LAW and GEORGE GROSSMITH.

Doors open at 7.30.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BRUCH.

To-night, at 8.40, a new Comedy, in three acts, called

THE COLONEL.

By F. C. BURNAND.

Preceded, at 8, by the one-act Drama, by O. C. HERBERT,

OUR DITTREEST FOR.

Doors open at 7.30. Box-office open daily from 11 to 5, under the control of Mr. MILLER.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

To-night, at 8, FROU-FROU will be performed (in English).

Preceded, at 7, by TURN HIM OUT.

Characters by Messdames Belona Modjeska, M. A. Giffard, Eugénie

Edwards, Dora Vivian, A. Cooke, &c., and Ada Ward; Messrs. Wilson

Barrett, Forbes-Robertson, E. Price, Norman Forbes, Brian Barry, Layard, &c., and G. W. Anson.

Seats booked at the Princess's and Court Theatres, and at all the Liberaries. Doors open at 8.30. Carriages at 11. No fees.

Stage Manager, Mr. HARRY JACKSON. Acting Manager, Mr. H. HERMAN.

ROYALTY THEATRE

Managers, Miss KATE LAWLER.

To-night, at 7.30, ROSALIE.

At 8.15, THE MEMBER FOR STOCUM.

At 9.30, DON JUAN JUNIOR.

Messdames Kate Lawler, Harriet Coveney, Ruth Francis, Florence Laven-der, F. Clitheroe, Elsie Ward, and Annie Lawler; Messrs. Arthur Williams, Frank Wyatt, S. Dallas, H. Martell, and Frank Cooper.

Stage Manager, FRANK ROTHSA. Acting Manager, CECIL RALPH.

Doors open at 7.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

SUMMER EXHIBITION
NOW OPEN

Daily 9 to 7.

Admission, One Shilling; Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION. 1878.

FRY'S

Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA

"If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa."

Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."

W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol,

"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted."

CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

EXTRACT

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

SUN LIFE OFFICE, LONDON.

Established 1810.

CHIEF OFFICE, 63, THREADEMERE STREET.

BRANCH OFFICES, 60, CHANCERY CROSS;

And Oxford-street, corner of Vere-street.

Very low premiums without participation in Profits, especially for young lives. Half Premium, Non-Forfeiture, and Endowment Assurances granted.

Prompt settlement of Claims.

The Society's newly revised Prospectus, and a greatly simplified form of Proposal, will be forwarded on application.

J. G. PRIESTLEY, Actuary.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHANCERY CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of

Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

1st March, 1880. FRANCIS HAVENSCROFT, Manager.

PROVIDE AGAINST ACCIDENTS!

ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN!

A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury, may be secured by a Policy of the

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY,

The Oldest and Largest Company insuring against Accidents of all kinds

The Rt. Hon. Lord KINNAIRD, Chairman.

SUBSCRIBED CAPITAL, £1,000,000.

PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £230,000.

MODERATE PREMIUMS.

Bonus allowed to Insurers after Five Years.

£1,630,000

HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, and West end Office, 8, Grand Hotel Buildings, Chancery-cross, or 64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.

Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.

Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.

Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.

Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache,

Gout, and Indigestion.

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies,

Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones.

Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal.

Cash prices.

No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Priced Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21,

Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from £6 6s. to 50 guineas.

Drawing-room Suites, from £9 9s. to 45 guineas.

Dining-room Suites, from £7 7s. to 40 guineas.

And all other goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21

Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

BRAND & CO.'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

PROTECTION FROM FIRE.

BRYANT & MAY'S

PATENT SAFETY

MATCHES.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

ADVANTAGES.

Are not POISONOUS

Are free from SMELL

Are manufactured

Without Phosphorus

Are perfectly harmless

To the Operatives employed

Are very DAMP PROOF

LIGHT ONLY ON THE BOX.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

PROTECTION TO HEALTH.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

GOLDEN TREASURY SERIES.—NEW VOLUME.

POETRY of BYRON. Chosen and Arranged by MATTHEW ARNOLD. 18mo, 4s. 6d.

. Also a Limited Edition, on large paper, crown 8vo, 9s.

EDMUND BURKE'S LETTERS and PAPERS on IRISH AFFAIRS. Edited, with a Preface, by MATTHEW ARNOLD, D.C.L.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

RUGBY, TENNESSEE: an Account of the New Settlement there. By THOMAS HUGHES, Q.C. With a Report on the Soils of the Cumberland Plateau. By F. W. KILLEBREW, A.M., Ph.D., Commissioner of Agriculture for the State. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

THE ENGLISH FLOWER GARDEN. By H. A.
BRIGHT, Author of "A Year in a Lancashire Garden." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

JEAN-FRANÇOIS MILLET, Peasant and Painter.
Translated from the French of ALFRED SENSIER. With numerous Illustrations.
Globe 4to, 16s.

JOHN INGLESANT: a Romance. By J. H. Short-
HOUSE. 2 vols., 8vo 21s.

ART AT HOME SERIES.

THE LIBRARY. By Andrew Lang. With a Chapter on English Illustrated Books by AUSTIN DOBSON. With numerous Illustrations.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. (New Volume.)

"A more delightful book of the kind it would be difficult to imagine and impossible to find."—Saturday Review.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S BIOGRAPHICAL SERIES.—NEW VOLUME.

LIFE and WORK of MARY CARPENTER. By Rev. J. E. CARPENTER. With Portrait. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown
8vo, 6s.

LORD BEACONSFIELD, MEMORIALS of. Reprinted from the Standard. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

EVERSLEY EDITION.

CHARLES KINGSLEY'S NOVELS.

WESTWARD HO! With Portrait. 2 vols., globe 8vo, 10s.

[Just published.

TWO YEARS AGO. 2 vols., globe 8vo, 10s.

[Now ready.

THE NEW TESTAMENT in the ORIGINAL GREEK.

The Text Revised by B. F. WESTCOTT, D.D., Regius Professor of Divinity, Canon of Peterborough, and F. J. A. HORT, D.D., Hulsean Professor of Divinity, late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

. The Introduction and Appendix will very shortly be published, uniform, in a separate volume.

THE RESURRECTION of OUR LORD: the Croall

Lecture for 1879-80. By the Rev. WILLIAM MILLIGAN, D.D., Professor of Divinity and Biblical Criticism in the University of Aberdeen. 8vo, 9s.

THE RELATIONS of SCIENCE and RELIGION:

being the Morse Lecture, 1880, connected with Union Theological Seminary, New York. By HENRY CALDERWOOD, LL.D., Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE NEW PHRYNICHUS: being a Revised Text of the Ecloga of the Grammarian Phrynichus. With Introduction and Commentary by W. GUNION RUTHERFORD, M.A., of Balliol College, Oxford, Assistant Classical Master in St. Paul's School. 8vo, 18s.

EURIPIDES—MEDEA. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by A. W. VERRALL, M.A., Fellow and Lecturer of Trinity College, Cambridge. 8vo, 7s. 6d. [Macmillan's Classical Library.]

PROPERTIUS—SELECT ELEGIES of. Edited, with

Notes, Appendices, and a General Introduction to the Study of Propertius, by J. P. POSTGATE, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Professor of Comparative Philology in University College, London. Fcap. 8vo, 6s.
[Macmillan's Classical Series.]

BOOKS FOR HOLIDAY RAMBLES.

MACMILLAN'S POPULAR NOVELS.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. each volume.

By CHARLES KINGSLEY.

TWO YEARS AGO.	HYPATIA.
"WESTWARD HO!"	YEAST.
ALTON LOCKE. With Portrait.	HEREWARD the WAKE.

By HENRY JAMES, JUN.

THE EUROPEANS.	THE MADONNA of the FUTURE
THE AMERICAN.	and other Tales.
DAISY MILLER: an International	RODERICK HUDSON.
Episode. Four Meetings.

By WILLIAM BLACK.

WHITE WINGS: a Yachting	MADCAP VIOLET.
Romance.	THE STRANGE ADVENTURES
A PRINCESS of THULE.	a PHAETON. Illustrated.
THE MAID of KILLEENA, and	GREEN PASTURES & PICCADILLY
other Tales.	MACLEOD of DARE. Illustrated.

By the AUTHOR of "JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN."

THE HEAD of the FAMILY. Illus.	AGATHA'S HUSBAND. Illustrated.
THE OGILVIES. Illustrated.	OLIVE. Illustrated.

By CHARLOTTE M. YONGE.

THE HEIR of REDCLYFFE. Illus.	CLEVER WOMEN of the FAMILY.
HEARTSEASE. Illustrated.	Illustrated.
THE DAISY CHAIN. Illustrated.	THE YOUNG STEPMOTHER. Illus.
THE TRIAL: More Links in the	THE DOVE in the EAGLE'S NEST.
Daisy Chain. Illustrated.	Illustrated.
HOPE and FEARS. Illustrated.	THE CAGED LION. Illustrated.
DYNEVOR TERRACE. Illustrated.	THE CHAPLET of PEARLS. Illus.
MY YOUNG ALCIDES. Illustrated.	LADY HESTER and the DANVERS
THE PILLARS of the HOUSE.	PAPERS. Illustrated.
2 vols. Illustrated.	THE THREE BRIDES. Illustrated.

By FRANCES H. BURNETT.

"HAWORTH'S."	"LOUISIANA," and "THAT LASS o' LOWRIES." Two Stories. Illus.

By LADY AUGUSTA NOEL.

OWEN GWINNE'S GREAT	FROM GENERATION to GENERA-
WORK.	TION.

By MRS. OLIPHANT.

YOUNG MUSGRAVE.	A BELEAGUERED CITY.
THE CURATE in CHARGE.	A SON of the SOIL.

By ANNIE KEARY.

CASTLE DALY.	A YORK and a LANCASTER ROSE.
OLDBURY.	A DOUBTING HEART.

By GEORGE FLEMING.

A NILE NOVEL.	MIRAGE.
---------------	---------

TOM BROWN'S SCHOOLDAYS.	SEBASTIAN. By KATHARINE COOPER.
TOM BROWN at OXFORD.	VIRGIN SOIL. By J. S. TOURGÉNIEF.
THE FOOL of QUALITY. By H.	Translated by ASHTON W. DILKE.
BROOKE.	THE LAUGHING MILL, and other
REALMAH. By the Author of "Friends	Tales. By JULIAN HAWTHORNE.
in Council."	THE HARBOUR BAR.
HUGH CRICHTON'S ROMANCE. By	CHRISTINA NORTH. By E. M. ARCHER.
C. R. COLERIDGE.	UNDER the LIMES. By E. M. ARCHER.
MY TIME and WHAT I'VE DONE	BENGAL PEASANT LIFE. By
WITH IT. By F. C. BURNAND.	LAL BEHARI DAIY.
ROSE TURQUAND. By E. HOPKINS.	VIDA: the Study of a Girl. By AMY
OLD SIR DOUGLAS. By the Hon.	DUNSMUIR.
Mrs. NORTON.	ELSIE: a Lowland Sketch.

LONDON: MACMILLAN & CO., BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 476.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
THE ST. GILES'S LECTURES, by S. R. GARDINER . . .	445
JEFFRIES' WOOD MAGIC, by GRANT ALLEN . . .	446
CAPT. TROTTER'S MAROCCO, by COSMO MONKHOUSE . . .	446
HEATH'S EDGAR QUININ, by G. SAINTSBURY . . .	447
LANE-POOLE'S EGYPT, by MISS AMELIA B. EDWARDS . . .	448
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM WALLACE . . .	449
RECENT SCHOOL BOOKS . . .	449
NOTES AND NEWS . . .	451
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS . . .	453
A TRANSLATION FROM BÉRANGER: LE CINQ MAI, by the Rev. JAMES ROBERTSON . . .	453
OBITUARY: ANDREW WILSON; THE REV. E. RICHMOND HODGES; &c. . .	453-4
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS . . .	454
SELECTED BOOKS . . .	454
CORRESPONDENCE:—
"The Evil One" of the Revisers, by Dr. A. Neubauer; Bishop Leafrie's MSS., formerly at Exeter, by the Rev. E. Warren; Hebrew MSS. at the British Museum, by Christian D. Ginsburg; Proposed Reproduction of the "Quadrifoglio del Decorso de la Vita humana," by Henry Wallis; The Birthplace of Wordsworth, by Joseph S. Fletcher . . .
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK . . .	456
HOLDEN'S EDITION OF CICERO'S ORATION FOR PLACIUS, by Prof. A. S. WILKINS . . .	456
EDGEWORTH'S MATHEMATICAL PSYCHICS, by ALFRED MARSHALL . . .	457
NOTES OF TRAVEL . . .	457
SCIENCE NOTES . . .	458
PHILOLOGY NOTES . . .	458
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES . . .	458
THE SPANISH AND PORTUGUESE EXHIBITION, by COSMO MONKHOUSE . . .	459
THE BLACK AND WHITE EXHIBITION . . .	460
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . .	461
SARAH BRENNHAEDT, by FREDK. WEDMORE . . .	462
STAGE NOTES . . .	463
MME. SOPHIE MENTER AND HERR ANTON RUBINSTEIN, by J. S. SHEDLOCK . . .	463

OWENS COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

Under a recent benevolent Council propose to appoint to FIVE FELLOWSHIPS IN SCIENCE OR LITERATURE, each of the value of £100, tenable for one year, but renewable for two years further. The appointment will be made, not on the results of examination, but after consideration of documentary and other evidence. Every holder of a Fellowship will be expected to devote his time to the prosecution of some special study approved by the Council. Further particulars may be obtained on application to the Principal. Candidates must send in their applications in writing on or before the 1st October next.

J. HOLME NICHOLSON, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

The PROFESSORSHIP OF ARCHITECTURE will be VACANT at the Close of the Session. Applications for the Appointment will be received on or before JUNE 30TH.

TALFOURD ELY, M.A., Secretary.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—KENSINGTON.

HOUSE, Calverley Park.—PREPARATION FOR THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. R. STEBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 200 Guineas.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, Ely.

place, St. Stephen's-green, Dublin.—Founded 1852, for preparation of Candidates for Competitive Examinations; over 1,000 Pupils have passed direct from the Academy. The Special Classes for R.I. CONSTABULARY Cadetships have carried off 80 per cent. of the Cadetships offered for competition last year: First Place, four times. Special Work for Woolwich and Sandhurst; over 320 have passed Army Exams., including 2nd, 3rd, 6th, 6th, 7th, at recent Competitions.—Apply to W. J. CHETWOD CRAWLEY, LL.B., F.G.S., F.R.G.S., Director and Sole Proprietor.

STUDIOS.—Holland Park-road, Kensington.

—To be LET or SOLD, First-Floor STUDIO, with good living Accommodation. The Colouring of the Walls, subject to certain conditions, is left to the choice of the incoming Tenant.—For information and keys apply to G. D. PHILLIPS & SMITH, House Agents, 41A, Holland-road, Kensington. Keys can be had on Sundays at the Riding School, Holland Park-road, W.

FLOWER PAINTING.—A LADY gives

LESSONS in a New Style which can be applied for Decoration; also Fan Painting on Satin, &c. Terms moderate.—Address, Miss BARRITT, 10, Duke-street, Grosvenor-square, W.

MANUSCRIPT COPYING.—Authors and

Dramatic Writers requiring Manuscripts Copied or Extracts made at the British Museum are invited to apply to the SECRETARY of the SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN, 22, Berners-street, W.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE, 22, Albemarle-street, London, W.

The next ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING will be held at YORK, commencing on WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 31.

President-Elect—SIR JOHN LUSBOCK, BART., M.P., D.C.L., F.R.S.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS OF MEMOIRS.

Meetings of the Organising Committees for the several Sections will be held shortly, and Authors are requested to give notice of their intention to offer Papers.

G. GRIFFITH, Acting Secretary, Harrow, Middlesex.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 22, at 8.

A PAPER will be read by C. F. KEARY, Esq., on "THE GENUINE and the SPURIOUS in the EDDAIC MYTHOLOGY—PART II."

W. S. W. VAUX, Sec. R.S.L.

THE FOLK-LORE SOCIETY.

The THIRD ANNUAL MEETING will be held at 22, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, on WEDNESDAY, the 22ND JUNE, 1881, at 4.30 o'clock P.M.

The Right Honourable EARL BEAUCHAMP, F.R.S., President of the Society, in the Chair.

Cards of Admission for Non-Members of the Society may be obtained of G. L. GOMME, Hon. Secretary, 2, Park-villas, Castlemau, Barnes, S.W.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the President and Council will proceed to ELECT, on TUESDAY, JULY 19, TWO TURNER ANNUITANTS and TWO COOKE ANNUITANTS. Applicants for the Turner Annuities, which are of the value of £50 each, must be Artists of repute in need of aid through the unavoidable failure of professional employment or other causes. Applicants for the Cooke Annuities, which are of the value of £30 each, must be Painters in Oil or Water-Colours, not less than sixty years of age, and in distress from age, sickness, or some other cause.—Forms of application can be obtained by letter addressed to "THE SECRETARY," Royal Academy of Arts, Piccadilly, W. They must be filled in and returned on or before Tuesday, July 19th.

THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.

The EXHIBITION now includes a Collection of Works by Prof. MENZEL. 5, PALL MALL EAST. Open from 10 to 6. Admission, 1s.; Catalogue, 6d.

ALFRED D. FRIPP, Secretary.

LA SOCIETE des AQUARELLISTES

FRANCAIS.—NOW ON VIEW, an EXHIBITION OF WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS by the Members of the above Society, at GOSNELL & GOSNELL, 25, BRIDGE-STREET, LONDON, E.C. Admission, One Shilling. An illustrated Catalogue has been published.

MR. MARTIN COLNAGHI (GUARDI

GALLERY, 11, HAYMARKET) begs to inform the Lovers of Art that his FIFTH SUMMER EXHIBITION contains Works by the great colourist HERRMANN PHILIP, others by DANIEL CHARDIN, and by the young Spanish painter José Benlliure. Open daily from 10 till dusk.

HERBERT EXHIBITION.—"THE

JUDGMENT OF DANIEL." Painted for the House of Lords, and Thirty-five other Works by J. R. HERBERT, R.A., NOW ON VIEW at the HANOVER GALLERY, 47, NEW BOND STREET. Admission, One shilling. 9.30 to 6.

TO CONNOISSEURS AND COLLECTORS.

A FINE COLLECTION OF OLD ENGLISH

CARVED OAK FURNITURE—including Historical Specimens, with dates, names, armorial bearings, mottoes, &c.; noble Fireplaces, tombs, Elizabethan, two Settles, Chests, six Cabinets, Tables, Chairs, &c., &c.; amongst these are relics of Charles I., Milton, Byron, Hume, and Stephenson—will be SOLD BY AUCTION by MESSRS. S. JOEL & SONS, in their large Rooms, 65 & 67, PILGRIM STREET, NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, on TUESDAY, 21ST JUNE, 1881. Catalogues ready.

Sale by Auction of the SCIENTIFIC LIBRARY of the celebrated Mathematician, the late Professor MICH. CHARLES, of the Institute of France.

MR. A. CLAUDIN, Publisher and Book-

Value, Laureate of the Institute of France, 3, Rue Guisguand, Paris, has received instructions to SELL BY AUCTION, at Paris, on the 27TH of JUNE instant, and Eighteen following Days, this most valuable and unrivalled COLLECTION. The Catalogue, bibliographically arranged, and consisting of 4,000 Lots, is just issued. Sent post-free all through the United Kingdom on applying by letter, enclosing 6d. in English stamps, to A. CLAUDIN, 3, Rue Guisguand, Paris, who will also receive orders of commission for the Sale.

PASCAL DEMESTIE, Licentiate of the Paris Academy, Lecturer at the Tours Lyceum, Tours, France. RECEIVES FOREIGNERS preparing for Examinations, or Wanting to Learn French. Well-qualified Masters from the Lyceum, with Extra Fees Family life, good rooms, careful supervision.—Apply to PASCAL DEMESTIE, Rue du Gazonnet, 23, Tours.

TO PROPRIETORS OF NEWSPAPERS

and PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, Capital & Labour, the Furniture Gazette, the Review, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPLETE, ECONOMIC, and PUNCTUAL PRODUCTION OF PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether illustrated or Plain. Estimates furnished to Proprietors of New Periodicals, for either Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—74 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

[COPY.]

35, ALEXANDRA ROAD, WIMBLEDON, 7th June, 1881.

SIR,—Having observed by the public press that my pamphlet lately left before you, "The Penny Postage Scheme of 1837—Was it an Invention or a Copy?" had been looked upon as too long to obtain the consideration of your Committee, permit me more briefly to state, that I therein pointed out a document which had lately come under my notice at the British Museum Library, of date April, 1836, termed the "5th Report of the Commissioners of Post Office Enquiry," in which was embodied and recommended as respects Prices Current and such-like Circulars, then subject to the same high and variable rates as were letters, a low and uniform rate of postage, charged by weight, and pre-paid by stamp, at the rate of 1d. the 4-oz.—the identical principles and figures proposed with respect to letters by Sir Rowland Hill in his scheme of the following year.

SECOND.—That Sir Rowland Hill, in his writings, had abstained from all reference to this document, while putting himself in its place, though there was evidence he had read it.

In short, that the principles and figures of the Penny Postage Scheme of 1837, so far from having been the conceptions of the late Sir Rowland Hill as hitherto understood, were a copy from a pre-existing document.

You will doubtless consider these facts of sufficient importance, not alone for the consideration of your Committee, but also that of the subscribers at large.

I remain, respectfully, Sir,

Your most obedient Servant,

To the Hon. Secretary, PATRICK CHALMERS.
"The Sir Rowland Hill Memorial Fund," Mansion House.

PRIZE ESSAY!!

A PRIZE OF ONE HUNDRED POUNDS

(£100) will be paid by "THE EQUIVABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY OF THE UNITED STATES" (London Office, 81, Cheapside, E.C.), to the AUTHOR of the BEST ESSAY, on the subject named below; and TWENTY-FIVE Pounds (£25) to the AUTHOR of the SECOND BEST ESSAY.

Subject, LIFE ASSURANCE! With special reference to its influence, in promoting habits of economy, thrift, and sobriety; and the consequent repression of intemperance, poverty, and crime. Its bearing upon the reduction of the Poor Rate, the cost of repression of crime, and in stimulating the productive industry of the country; and hence the National benefit conferred on the Community in lessening taxation, while giving increased power to pay; and finally its influence upon our social surroundings, in strengthening family ties, and in rendering sacred the HOME.

Conditions!! Essay (not to exceed, when printed, the length of thirty-two octavo pages of longprimer type) to be sent to the undersigned not later than October 1, 1881, unassigned, but marked with a nom de plume, or number, by means of which identity may be secured. Endorsed outside, "Prize Essay Contest."

A Committee consisting of the following gentlemen have consented to adjudicate upon the Essays sent in:—

S. C. HALL, F.S.A.
CORNELIUS WALFORD, F.S.A., F.R.S.
THOMAS HOULES ("Tom Brown"), Q.C., F.S.A., Umpire.

Their award in writing, and the accepted Essay, will be made public. The names of Authors will not be published without their assent.

THE PRESS!! Editors making this proposal known to their readers and sending a marked copy of their publication to the undersigned, shall receive an early copy of the "Prize Essay" when printed.

The Society reserves the right of awarding a THIRD PRIZE OF TEN POUNDS (£10) to any writer recommended by the "Selection Committee," as having produced an Essay of merit, although it may not have conformed entirely to the preceding conditions.

S. G. GOODRICH, Director, Resident in London, London, June 11th, 1881. 81, Cheapside, London, E.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

NEW AND CHOICE BOOKS.

All the best Books of the Season and of the past Thirty Years are in circulation at MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, and may be had without delay by all Subscribers of One Guinea per Annum and upwards. Prospectuses postage free on application.

CHEAP BOOKS.

More than One Thousand Popular Books of the Past and Present Seasons are now on SALE at MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY. See MUDIE'S CLEARANCE CATALOGUE for JUNE. New Edition, now ready, postage free.

THE LONDON BOOK SOCIETY.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY MESSENGERS call to deliver Book at the Residences of Subscribers in Every Part of London and the Immediate Neighbourhood, on a plan which has given general satisfaction for many years.

Several Thousand Families in London and the Suburbs already subscribe to this Department of the Library, and obtain a Constant Succession of the Best New Books on or soon after the day of publication.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED),
NEW OXFORD STREET.
City Office: 2, King-street, Cheapside.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

THE CORRESPONDENCE of TALLEY-RAND and LOUIS XVIII. during the CONGRESS of VIENNA. With a Preface, Observations, and Notes by M. G. PALLAIN. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 21s.

"This remarkable correspondence."—Times.

POPULAR NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF
"FOLLY MORRISON."

LIEUTENANT BARNABAS. By Frank BARRETT, Author of "Folly Morrison," &c. 3 vols.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE ROMANCE OF WAR."
THE CAMERONIANS. By James Grant, Author of "The Romance of War," &c. 3 vols.

MISS LEWIS'S NEW NOVEL.

TWO PRETTY GIRLS. By Miss M. A. LEWIS. 3 vols.
"The arrows of a chaperon have never been more cleverly drawn, with the due mixture of humour and pathos, than by Miss Lewis. The novel is brightly written, and the descriptions have much piquancy and show a keener sense of humour."—Morning Post.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART."
AN OCEAN FREE-LANCE. By W. Clark RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c. 3 vols.

Also immediately.

A NEW NOVEL BY A NEW AUTHOR, ENTITLED
KING LAZARUS.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

THE NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION OF
THE WELLFIELDS. By Jessie Fothergill, Author of "Probation" and "The First Violin." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A well and powerfully written novel."—St. James's Gazette.
"Each novel as the 'Wellfields' render important services to art."—Academy.

BENTLEY'S EDITION.

THE WORKS of JANE AUSTEN.
The only Complete Edition. "Library Edition," in Six Volumes, crown 8vo, well printed and bound in cloth, with a Memoir and Portrait of the Authoress, and Five Illustrations on Steel by Pickering, 39s. Each Volume can be had also separately, price 6s.

SENSE and SENSIBILITY.

"I have now read over again all Miss Austen's novels. Charming they are. There are in the world no compositions which approach nearer to perfection."—Macaulay's Journal.

PRIDE and PREJUDICE.

"The perfect type of a novel of common life; the story is so coarsely and dramatically told, the language so simple, the shades of human character so clearly presented, and the operation of various motives so delicately traced, attest this gifted woman to have been the perfect mistress of her art."—Arnold's English Literature.
"One of the best of Miss Austen's unequalled works. How perfectly it is written!"—Spectator.

EMMA.

"Shakespeare has neither equal nor second; but among the writers who have approached nearest to the manner of the great master we have no hesitation in placing Jane Austen, a woman of whom England is justly proud."—Macaulay's Essays.

MANSFIELD PARK.

"Miss Austen has a talent for describing the involvements and feelings and characters of ordinary life which is to me the most wonderful I ever met with. Her exquisite touch, which renders commonplace things and character interesting from the truth of the description and sentiment, is denied to me."—Sir Walter Scott.

NORTHANGER ABBEY.

"Read Dickens' 'Hard Times,' and another book of Pliny's 'Letters.' Read 'Northanger Abbey,' worth all Dickens and Pliny together. Yet it was the work of a girl. She was certainly not more than twenty-six. Wonderful creature!"—Macaulay's Journal.

PERSUASION.

"Miss Austen's fame will outlive the generations that did not appreciate her, and her works will be ranked with the English classics as long as the language lasts."—Atlas.

LADY SUSAN.

"We do not know a more agreeable writer than Miss Austen. The great charm of her characters is their reality. They are the truest pictures of English middle and country life of her own time."—Literary Gazette.
"Miss Austen's merits have long been established beyond question; she is emphatically the novelist of home."—Spectator.

THE WATSONS.

With a Memoir and Portrait of the Authoress.
"Miss Austen's life, as well as her talent, seems to us unique among the lives of authoresses of fiction."—Quarterly Review.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,
NEW BURLINGTON STREET,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

C. KEGAN PAUL & CO.'S LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 30s.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR THOMAS MUNRO, Bart., K.C.B., GOVERNOR OF MADRAS.

Selected from his Minutes and other Official Writings.

Edited, with an Introductory Memoir and Notes, by Sir ALEXANDER ARBUTHNOT, K.C.S.I., C.I.E.

THE PARCHMENT LIBRARY.

SHAKSPERE'S SONNETS.

Edited by EDWARD DOWDEN,
Author of "Shakspeare, his Mind and Art," &c.
With a Frontispiece etched by Leopold Lowenstam, after the Death Mask.

Elzevir 8vo, limp parchment antique, 6s.; vellum, 7s. 6d.

ENGLISH HISTORY.

INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF ENGLISH HISTORY.

By SAMUEL R. GARDINER,
Professor of Modern History in King's College, London;

And J. BASS MULLINGER, M.A.,
St. John's College, Cambridge.

Large crown 8vo, cloth, 9s.

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

ILLUSIONS: a Psychological Study.

By JAMES SULLY,
Author of "Sensation and Intuition," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

MYTHOLOGY AND FOLK-LORE.

INTRODUCTION TO THE SCIENCE OF COMPARATIVE MYTHOLOGY AND FOLK-LORE.

By the Rev. Sir GEORGE W. COX, Bart.,
Author of "The Mythology of the Aryan Nations," &c.

Large crown 8vo, cloth, 9s.

"This learned, lucidly written, and thoroughly interesting book."—St. James's Gazette.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

THE CREED OF SCIENCE, RELIGIOUS, MORAL, AND SOCIAL.

By WILLIAM GRAHAM, M.A.,
Author of "Idealism: an Essay, Metaphysical and Critical."

Nearly ready.

MATABELE LAND AND THE VICTORIA FALLS:

A Naturalist's Wanderings in the Interior of South Africa.

From the Letters and Journals of the late FRANK OATES, F.R.G.S.

Edited by C. G. OATES, B.A.

In I vol., demy 8vo, with Seven Coloured and Three Plain Plates illustrating the new Species discovered, Six Chromolithographs of African Scenery, and a large number of Woodcuts; besides Four Maps, of which three are Route Maps and one a general one.

With Frontispiece, Elzevir 8vo, parchment, 5s.

XXXII. BALLADES IN BLUE CHINA.

By A. LANG.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

BELLEROPHON.

By ARRAN and ISLA LEIGH.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

MEMORIES OF A MONTH AMONG THE MERE IRISH.

By W. H. FLOREDDICE.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

LATTER DAY TEACHERS.

SIX LECTURES.

By RICHARD ACLAND ARMSTRONG, B.A.

LONDON: 1, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO.'S LIST.

Now ready, small post 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

THE CHOICE OF BOOKS.

By CHARLES F. RICHARDSON.

This book is neatly printed on hand-made paper, rough edges, and bound in parchment.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s. 6d.

STUDIES OF ASSASSINATION.

By WIRT SIKES,
Author of "British Goblins," &c.

England from an American Point of View.

ENGLAND: WITHOUT AND WITHIN.

By RICHARD GRANT WHITE.

Just ready, 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d.

ON the INDIAN HILLS; or, Coffee Planting
in Southern India. By EDWIN LESTER ARNOLD, Author of "A Summer Holiday in Scandinavia," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s. [Ready.]

Now ready, royal 8vo, cloth extra, price 21s.

VOLUME VIII. of
GUIZOT'S HISTORY of FRANCE.
Completing the Work. Fully Illustrated.

* * * The eight volumes of this most complete and splendidly illustrated History of France, by one of the greatest of modern historians, can now be had, royal 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, price 21s. each volume.

Now ready, price 8s. 6d.

THE HALF-YEARLY VOLUME of HARPER'S MAGAZINE. With over 400 Illustrations. Royal 8vo, cloth extra, price 8s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS.

Now ready, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

SURRENDER. By Leslie Keith, Author of "A Simple Maiden."

Now ready, crown 8vo, 3 vols., price 31s. 6d.

DAVID BROOME, Artist. By Mrs. Robert O'REILLY, Author of "Phoebe's Fortunes," "Sussex Stories," &c.

Now ready, 2 vols., price 21s.

JAMES WOODFORD, Carpenter and Chartist. By HENRY SOLLY.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON,
Crown-buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1831.

No. 476, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

St. Giles's Lectures. First Series.—The Scottish Church. (Chambers.)

THE publication of the lectures delivered at St. Giles's by ministers of the Established Church of Scotland will afford gratification and instruction to many who had not the advantage of spending last winter in Edinburgh. The names of the authors are a sufficient guarantee that the subject has been treated with knowledge and discrimination, and the English reader soon becomes aware that he is in presence of a body of opinion very different from anything that he has been in the habit of associating with the Kirk. Such a sentence as this, taken from Dr. Cunningham's reflections on the Articles of Perth (p. 175)—

"Now, in the nineteenth century, we feel it might be possible to conform the worship of the Church of Scotland to that of England; but its polity never"— would certainly have raised a storm of indignation not very many years ago "from Maidenkirke to John o' Groat's." It will take some more years to show whether this is to be the attitude of the Established Church, and also, which is perhaps a more important question, what is to be its attitude in the face of the far deeper questions which are being raised at this very moment by the Free Church Assembly.

To all who wish to know what the Church of Scotland has been, these lectures may be heartily commended. Perhaps there is sometimes a disposition to dwell on the broader and more liberal characteristics of the worthies of the past—as, for instance, in Dr. Macleod's noble vindication of John Knox; but, on the whole, the work is excellent, and the division of labour enables each lecturer to take up that portion of the long narrative with which he is specially familiar. Only one of the lecturers, Dr. Herbert Story, exhibits a tendency to rhetorical illustration which is not always founded on a sober knowledge. In such a sentence as this, for instance—

"And shall Trelawney die?" chanted the Mendip miners when they heard that James had sent their bishop to the towers:

"Then twenty thousand under ground
Will know the reason why."

The incarceration of all the bishops in Scotland would have evoked no such loyal sentiment" (p. 431)—

Dr. Story is evidently unaware that the poem in question was written by Hawker of Morwenstow. If he had known anything about the poem in question, he would have found out that the men under ground were not Mendip miners, even if he had not been awake to the fact that the Mendip Hills are in the diocese of Bath and Wells, and not in the diocese of Bristol, of which Trelawney was bishop.

Another of Dr. Story's sentences raises a question of greater importance. Of the Presbyterians of the seventeenth century, he says:—

"Liberty, dear to them, as to all people of their blood and race, was especially dear because the possession of it was bound up in the same bundle with the most sacred treasures of their religion. What the Pilgrim Fathers had crossed the Atlantic to find beyond the seas, they were resolved to attain at home—freedom of life and thought; above all, 'freedom to worship God.'"

That the Pilgrim Fathers crossed the Atlantic in search of freedom to worship God will be news to those who prefer to take their history from John Robinson and Governor Bradford rather than from Mrs. Hemans. Before it is acknowledged that the Scottish Presbyterians contended for liberty it ought to be clearly understood what liberty means. That the Scottish Church and nation waged a long and heroic struggle for their national faith is beyond doubt; but the charge usually made against them is that they did not pay much regard to that individual liberty which is as precious a possession as national independence. No doubt the yoke of Presbyterianism was far less heavy than it seems to outside observers. No ecclesiastical revolution was effected with so little bloodshed as the Protestant Revolution of the sixteenth century and the Presbyterian Revolution of the seventeenth. Yet, as readers of Drummond of Hawthornden know, the latter revolution was viewed with apprehension by quiet men who had no wish to interfere with their neighbours. The natural feeling of Scotchmen leads some of the lecturers to blink this fact.

It is impossible to write the history of any Church without constant reference to the society in which it grows up and flourishes. The usual contrast drawn between the popular Scottish Reformation and the Royal Reformation of England is, to a great extent, misleading. Henry VIII. was but a passing phenomenon in the English Church. The characteristic of that Church is that it is controlled by the lay society of the upper classes. Such a society is sure to give rise to divergencies of thought, which ultimately find their safety in guarantees for religious liberty. It was a mere accident that the Scottish Church of the Reformation arose in defiance of the Sovereign and by the help of the nobility. The dominant note of its history is to be found in its relations with the nobility, and not in its relations with the King. The fact is again and again brought out in the narrative of these lectures, but full weight is never assigned to it.

The Scottish Church as it arose at the time of the Reformation was a clerical Church quite as much as it was a popular Church. There is a close connexion between the two ideas. The masses wanted a simple and uniform creed, and a discipline which would weld the units of the middle and lower classes into a body capable of holding its own against the rude feudal nobility. This was what Calvinism gave; and, when this was once given, the strength of the new organisation and its repugnance to habits of independent thought were the necessary results.

The nobility enabled James to put down the Presbyterianism of the Melvilles, and they, not as Dr. Cunningham says (p. 175), "the cringing courtiers," enabled him to carry the Articles of Perth. Changing sides for a moment through fear of the loss of the Church lands, they supported Charles, soon to drop back into their antagonism with the ministers, and to bring in the Episcopacy of the Restoration. It is curiously significant of the direction which Presbyterianism was taking, that the Scottish Presbyterians clung to the King through the whole struggle whenever they could do so with safety to themselves. Their devotion to royalty in the persons even of Charles I. and Charles II. was not the ridiculous thing which it appears to modern historians. It was the natural result of an instinctive feeling that the King was their natural leader against the nobility. In our own days the secession of the Free Church on the question of patronage shows that the old antagonism has not yet died out.

The connexion between the victory of Presbyterianism and the victory of the middle classes is plain enough to the student of the great struggle which opened the epoch of the Civil Wars. The contest between Argyle and Montrose was a contest between the rule of the middle classes and the rule of the nobility. Scottish historians have hardly devoted sufficient attention to the change which, in the Parliament of 1639, made the Lords of the Articles a truly representative body, in which eight nobles found themselves face to face with sixteen country gentlemen and burgesses, and which was even then subjected for the first time to the control of Parliament as a whole.

It is hardly a matter of complaint that this important feature of Scottish Church history is not sufficiently brought out. Every plan has its disadvantages as well as its advantages, and the employment of special lecturers for special periods no doubt makes it difficult to find room for a general view of the whole subject. The last four lectures, dealing with the history of the Church from 1707 to the present day, will be especially interesting to Englishmen as bringing before them information on a subject of which they have usually but too little acquaintance; and it is especially satisfactory that the lecture which deals with the Disruption fell into the hands of so candid a writer as Prof. Charteris. Of the earlier lectures, that of Prof. Flint, telling the story from 1660 to 1690, seems worthy of note, though it may be suggested to him that the last word on Lauderdale cannot be spoken till the seventy or eighty volumes of his correspondence which have lately come into the British Museum have been examined by a competent historian. There is an impression in the South that Scotch professors enjoy holidays beyond the ordinary run of mortals outside the land of the lotus-eaters; and, if Prof. Flint would undertake the work in his leisure time, a good many people would be thankful to him.

To conclude, a prefatory note states "that each lecturer is only responsible for what is contained in his own lecture." Once only the reader is tempted to wish that there had been an editor to the volume who might have done as Lord Melbourne did when he put his back against the door and informed his Cabinet that it did not matter what they said, but that before they went out they must make up their minds to say the same thing. If there is one point on which some agreement would be expected in lectures delivered in St. Giles's it would be in the story of the throwing of the celebrated stool which started a great revolution on its course. Strangely enough, though three writers refer to the matter, they are by no means in agreement with one another. In an excellent archaeological account of the church of St. Giles prefixed to the series, Dr. Chambers tells us that "a strenuous female" began the disturbance on the Dean's "intimating that the collect for the day was that of the seventh Sunday after Trinity." As, according to contemporary accounts, the riot began at the beginning of the service, and there was no collect to be "intimated" till long afterwards, this account may be dismissed as entirely without foundation, and probably invented to account for the apocryphal "Deil colic in the wame of thee" ascribed to Jenny Geddes. Dr. Cunningham gives a name to "the strenuous female" as "the half-mythical, half-historical Jenny Geddes," and ascribes to her the "Dost thou say mass in my lug?" which appears really to have been uttered by the lady in the background who hit the young man on the head with her Bible. He also introduces "Forbes, the new Bishop of Edinburgh," as trying "to appease the people," though Forbes, as Dr. Chambers quotes Spottiswoode to show, had died three years before. Finally, we have Prof. Flint, who stands up stoutly for Jenny Geddes as being by no means half-mythical, and maintains, in contradiction to Dr. Hill Burton, the identity of the Royalist herb-woman of 1660 with the thrower of the stool of 1637. SAMUEL R. GARDINER.

Wood Magic: a Fable. By Richard Jefferies, Author of "The Gamekeeper at Home," &c. (Cassells.)

WHAT is it all about? That is the question. And the answer is, You must find out for yourself. Buy the book and read it, and then you will know. If you read it through, and still remain in doubt, you may be sure you are not one of the persons for whom it was written, and you had better give it up at once and for ever. When Alice in Wonderland first came out, there were a large number of excellent persons who went about asking one another what it all meant. They had heard it was very clever and amusing; they had read it through, and could see nothing in it; and they were convinced that other people must have some definite key or clue to its meaning, which they would not communicate, in order that they might selfishly enjoy the mystery all to themselves. Such matter-of-fact good people firmly believed that the story of Alice had really some esoteric application to the policy of the Liberal Government, or to the metaphysical system of Fichte, or to the exegesis of the Book of Revelation. If one told them that it meant no more than was obvious on the surface, they took it as an insult to their understanding. To such readers, Wood Magic will turn out a sore stumbling-block. Like Paradise Lost, it proves naughting. It is only a delicate, fanciful, fantastic, and beautiful apologue, full of exquisite description, strung upon a slender thread of narrative, and couched in pure, rich, and dainty English. It is a little like some parts of Kingsley's Water Babies, without the eccentric extravagances of that charming book; but it is a great deal more like Mr. Jefferies' own works than anything else, and that is, in its own way, the highest praise one can bestow upon it.

To give a compte-rendu of such a light and graceful phantasy as this would be cold-blooded, and, moreover, it would be impossible. The book must be read; it cannot be dissected. Mr. Jefferies' style remains much the same as ever, only it has gained in polish and lost nothing in that peculiar power over the rural vocabulary which is one of its author's strongest points. It would be mere impertinence to write at the present time that Mr. Jefferies has a wonderful faculty for close observation of nature, for the interpretation of small hints and suggestions, for the realisation of animal and plant life. All that need not now be said. But, to some extent, in Wood Magic he has taken a fresh departure. There is a story, a fabulous, marvellous, curious story, with a charming little boy for its hero, and birds and moles and rats and weasels for its dramatis personae. Sir Bevis, the little boy in question, wanders about among the insects and creeping things of the wood, with the best intentions in the world, after a childish fashion, but manages, nevertheless, to do rather more harm than good in the long run. His portrait is sketched with a minute fidelity and an evidently loving touch, which constrains one to identify him with the Harold to whom the book is inscribed. Sir Bevis, indeed, is the backbone of the story—as mischievous and as genuine a child as one could wish to come across on a summer's morning. Beside him there flits by a long phantasmagoria of talking beasts and birds, whose history centres round the exploits of King Kapeback, the successful magpie, and the Emperor Choo Hoo, the celebrated rebel. But the animals are not at all like the Reynard or the King Stork of our classical fables; they are real living wild creatures, rather than mere lay figures for the display of cardinal virtues and vices. Mr. Jefferies throws an amount of life and reality into his fable to which we are quite unaccustomed.

And yet it is in many respects a saddening book. Whether the author means it or not—and it is difficult to say what his underlying intention may really be—this naturalistic picture of life in the woods, with all its frank struggle of brute force and cunning, and with its queer side-satire on human action, has a terrible moral of its own. The animals hate and fear one another, eat the weaker and are eaten by the stronger, exactly after the cruel fashion of Nature herself. That "Nature is one with rapine, a harm no preacher can heal," seems, indeed, at times to be the central thought of the book. Mr. Jefferies lends no countenance to the hypothesis of a beneficent Providence overruling all the evil of the world for good. His universe is like the real one, a perpetual conflict of selfish aims. Even his human beings are built upon the same egoistic pattern. There is a terrible, too realistic episode of a wounded keeper lying helpless in the covert through a long day and stormy night, while his wife does not seek him, because, when once she had looked for him in great alarm, she found him drunk at the alehouse, and he beat her for her trouble; and a labourer, slouching by with a wire in his pocket, will not go into the copse at his call, lest it should turn out to be a mere ruse for catching a poacher. Even little Bevis himself is a strange compound of childish temper with good impulses. All this side of the book is powerful and strongly written, but it is almost painful in its naked exhibition of the world we live in. Is it not the fact that man—cultivated man, at least—has now grown too ethical for the planet in which his lot is cast, and shrinks from contemplating the horrible life-and-death struggle which goes on half-unsuspected in beautiful nature around him? At any rate, it is a relief to turn from the darkest passages to the fresh and breezy hits that intervene, and, above all, to the last chapter, where Bevis makes friends with the wind, and learns from it the secret of a happy life. This, the final moral, impressed upon him beside the grave of a prehistoric chieftain, appears to be something after a simple fashion:—Oh, let us all go and be dolichocephalic savages! Not a bad moral either in a country which has four millions of people cooped up in a breathless, barren London, not to mention sundry stray half-millions cooped up here and there in still more breathless and barren Glasgows, Liverpools, and Manchesters. Mr. Jefferies' antidote for pessimism appears to be a healthy open-air life. That, we imagine, is the last word of this curious, beautiful, and enticing, but somewhat mystic parable.

GRANT ALLEN.

Our Mission to the Court of Morocco in 1880.

By Capt. Philip Durham Trotter. (Edinburgh: David Douglas.)

THIS is a chronicle of the mission of Sir John Drummond Hay as Envoy Extraordinary to the Court of Morocco in the spring of last year. The political results of the mission appear to have been—(1) A guarantee to remove the restrictions on the export of grain, seed, &c., other than corn. (2) Negotiations to be entered into for the improvement of trade, and a port south of Mogador to be opened. (3) The issue of letters by the Sultan in regard to the settlement of claims by British subjects. (4) A decree allowing Jews a personal appeal to the Sultan. (5) The revision of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation of 1856 between Great Britain and Morocco. (6) The establishment of diplomatic relations between the Sultans of Turkey and Morocco. (7) Extension of the mole at Mogador, and some repairs to the ruins of that at Tangier to facilitate the passage of boats to and from the ships. As, however, Capt. Trotter's authority for most of this information is "a garrulous Court official at Fez," and as the documents to ratify the concessions (or some of them) do not appear to have been signed, and as, if signed, the spirit of the present Vizier is so hostile to Nazarenes and reforms that they are likely to remain a dead letter, the interest attaching to Capt. Trotter's labours is scarcely political.

In archaeological interest the book is also very barren. But this was not Capt. Trotter's fault, as the route was rigidly marked out day by day, and little leisure was allowed for excursions, or even for examination of such remains of Roman architecture and ruins of other civilisations as they passed. There are, however, some good photographs of Volubilis; while further details of such places as Ad Mercury and the Druidical Circle at El Uted can be found in other books—as, for instance, Mr. Watson's recent account of his journey to Wazan. The most valuable addition to our knowledge is probably the twelve names added by Miss Drummond Hay to the known flora of Morocco.

Sir John Hay was accompanied by Lady Hay and their daughter; and Capt. Trotter joined the mission in a private capacity, though his knowledge of the heliograph was utilised to explain its use at the Court, a telephone and a set of heliographic instruments being the presents taken to the Sultan from the British Government.

Their route to Fez was the usual one through Alcazar, but they returned home by Mequinez and Rabat, and then up the coast to El Araish and Azila. Of the journey to Fez and back Capt. Trotter gives but a slight and not very graphic account, as if the whole thing had been rather a bore. Very different in effect from the vivid pictures of Amicis, which make every person he met with individual, and every member of his mission an acquaintance, one knows at the end of the book little more of Capt. Trotter and his companions or of the numerous Moors he encountered than at the beginning. The servants were "an obliging lot"—one of them "a handsome youth," another "a murderous-looking ruffian." Of Alcazar he says, "We took rather a fancy to it." The courtesy and hospitality of the Moors, of which he had abundant proof, wrings from him the patronising remark: "Uncivilised, as doubtless they are according to our acceptation of the term, I will always maintain that a Moor of the higher ranks is as good a specimen of one of Nature's gentlemen as one could wish to see."

The most interesting incident recorded in the journey to Fez is a visit paid by Miss Hay, Capt. Trotter, and others to the village of Beni-Aamer, a people half-Berber, as fair as Europeans, where they had to undergo Moorish "high teas" at the houses of two rival Sheikhs. At one of these Miss Hay seems to have had a narrow escape of being sacrificed to the religious ardour, or barbarous whim, of her female entertainers.

"They had invited her on to the roof to see the view, and, after nearly tearing her clothes to pieces to see what they were made of, one young lady of twelve or fourteen called out, 'Let us throw the Nazarene down from the roof, and see what will become of her,' which suggestion, however, was fortunately not carried out."

It is only fair to add that "at the other house, on the contrary, a pretty attention was shown her by the head of our host's harem, who came into the room to receive her, and led her to the upper end of it, where there was a door opening into another room. She then seated herself behind the door, and remained during the séance, saying, 'I thought you would feel strange among so many men alone, and I came to meet you, and will not leave you all the time.'"

Arrived at Fez, interviews with the Sultan and breakfasts and suppers with the dignitaries are the principal events. The telephone and heliograph were exhibited, but not with great success. The army was inspected by Capt. Trotter, and a report of it drawn up which contained some sound advice not very likely to be acted upon. The Sultan showed a little interest in, and more fear of, photography, and, after promising to "stand," sent deputies in the shape of three dark-complexioned ladies. If his Sharifian Majesty has any sense of humour he no doubt laughs in his sleeve at the disappointment of the Nazarenes, and the photograph of the substitutes is more likely to cause a laugh than anything else in the book. Among other sights, they witnessed an exhibition of snake charmers, and the terrible dance of the Aissowieh, both of which are forcibly described by Capt. Trotter. The general belief that the charmers extract the fangs or teeth of the serpents they allow to bite them is likely to be shaken by a story told of Sir John Hay, who, some years ago, wanted to let one of the reptiles bite his hand. The snake charmer recommended him to try the effect on some animal first. A fowl was brought, duly bitten, and died within the hour. On being cut open, the flesh was found to be black and discoloured.

While it cannot be denied that the pages of this book are not seldom dull, they contain many lively anecdotes and bits of description; and it should also in fairness be added, in mitigation of previous remarks, that the book adds to our knowledge of at least one member of the mission, and that the most important—viz., Sir John Drummond Hay. It is interesting to find that the parable has its uses even in the present day, and that it is the favourite vehicle adopted by our minister at Tangier to convey advice to the Sultan. On one occasion, when hinting that it would be better to have a soldier at the head of the army, his Excellency said, "Suppose your Majesty bought a frigate and wanted someone to sail it, would you employ the Amin of the market as captain?" "Certainly not," said the Sultan; "I should employ some sailor." "Well, your Majesty, it is much the same in the case of the army; and your present commander-in-chief, though an able administrator, knows nothing of the interior discipline." "This simile," adds Capt. Trotter, "sank into the royal mind," and a soldier was appointed commander-in-chief.

It is probably one of the secrets of Sir John Hay's success and popularity that he knows how to adopt Oriental modes of thought and expression in his intercourse with the natives; but it is doubtful whether the following consolation offered by him to an unfortunate old Moor who was plagued with a disease of the eyes was more palatable to its recipient than the words of Eliphaz the Temanite were to his afflicted friend:—

"Our religion teaches us that it is the wisdom of God which deprives us one by one of our senses and enjoyments as we get on in years, so that at last we hail the approach of death as the advent of a friend."

The book is beautifully printed, has a good Index, an excellent map, and some very interesting illustrations after photographs by the Hon. D. Lawless.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

Edgar Quinet: his Early Life and Writings.
By R. Heath. (Trübner.)

It was very fitting that somebody should undertake to tell in English the interesting story of Edgar Quinet's early life. Few people have been in different ways more autobiographic than the author of Merlin l'Enchanteur; and his autobiographic sketches exhibit a nature somewhat wanting, indeed, in reticence, strength, and the possession of the lumen siccum, but thoroughly amiable on the moral side, and possessed of not a little faculty, both creative and appreciative, on the intellectual. When Mr. Heath assures us that Quinet is "a prince among thinkers" we may perhaps shake our heads. Such an estimate indicates a certain inability to distinguish between the vague, formless, if brightly coloured, cloud-towers of a poetico-historical theosophy and the solid edifices in which the real princes among thinkers have from time to time established one or other of the permanent phases of human thought. But that Quinet was an eloquent writer, a generous and many-sided enthusiast, a student of history and of literature who made up in poetic insight for what he lacked in sober critical appreciation—that everybody must admit. Moreover, the literary and philosophical importance of the writer sinks in such a book as this beside the interest of the portrait of the man. Quinet's intellectual education as here given is interesting enough; and his actual bringing-up among his family and his friends supplies the materials, if not of a very eventful story, at any rate of a very pleasant one.

Born in 1803, just at the beginning of the definitely autocratic and aggressive period of Napoleon's rule, and brought up in a frontier department, it was unavoidable that Quinet should take a great interest in politics, if only because his parents, in their devotion to the Republic and their hatred of the usurper, never allowed contemporary politics to be talked or Napoleon's name to be mentioned in their house. No newspapers were admitted; and Edgar heard almost the first news of the invasion from a party of Hungarian cavalry, who found his faculty of talking Latin not a little serviceable to them until an unlucky Hussar, in a moment of wrath, used the words "te verberabo," which set the youthful Edgar's rights-of-man conception of his personal dignity all in a blaze. He had the usual experience of school-life at Bourg, and then at Lyons, where Jules Janin was his schoolfellow; and at the latter place, we are told, he used to pass all his spare time in a tool-house with a violin. When he was set free at seventeen, some disputes with his father (a Republican, but something of a family martinet) took place; but Quinet had his will, and, with better luck than some other young men of similar tastes, betook himself to literature. His first important venture—a short satirical piece, Les Tablettes du Juif errant, had preceded it—was a translation of Herder, which at once indicated, and perhaps determined, the bent of his thought and obtained him a considerable position as an aspirant in letters. Quinet, like everyone else of genius or talent in the generation to which he belonged, was deeply impressed with the necessity of regenerating the world. He had been brought up by his mother—a remarkable person—in an odd kind of undogmatic Christianity with which Herder fitted in well enough. Quinet's Morison's pill, from the beginning, and till the end, was a kind of poetico-theological conception of history. To do this conception justice it was constructive, not destructive. Few things, perhaps, more thoroughly explain Quinet's attitude than his criticism of Strauss. "Nothing," says Mr. Heath, truly enough, "seems to astonish him more than the tranquil way in which Strauss proceeds with a work which, if successful, would prove one of the saddest ever effected." It was essentially Quinet's object and mission to create, or, if he could, to prop up and restore. The form his creations took was often odd enough. The famous criticism, "What does it prove?" might really be applied to the stupendous Ahasuerus-Napoleon-Prometheus trilogy, for this certainly was intended to prove something. Elsewhere the author is critical in form; but it is still noteworthy that, at any rate in his earlier work, his criticism always tends to construction. Little orthodox as he was in the ordinary sense of the term, he is constantly on the orthodox side. As he is against Strauss in theology, so he is against Wolf in poetry and against Niebuhr in history. Certainly, though few people would have called Quinet a conservative, he had the root of the conservative matter in him; and a slight difference of early training and circumstance might have made him the staunchest champion of the existing in everything.

Mr. Heath's sketches of his childhood; of the scenery of the Department of the Ain, where he passed the greater part of his life, until his appointment to a professorial chair at Lyons; of his journeys to England, Germany, Greece, and Italy; of his engagement and marriage with Minna Moré, are interesting and lively enough, though his style is occasionally over-Gallicised. Mr. Heath has added to his book a "condensation," in eighty pages, of the Génie des Religions, which will give English readers who are not acquainted with the original a very fair idea of Quinet's stimulating, imaginative, and, in a way, erudite, but somewhat rhapsodising and superficial, manner of dealing with history. If, as may be plausibly maintained, stimulation rather than actual information is the function of professorial teaching, he must have been an ideal professor for such hearers as were suited to him. Others, perhaps, may have been provoked, by his prone-ness to "gush," to adopt a more negative style of thought on his favourite subjects than they would otherwise have adopted, or else to exaggerate their teacher's tendency, and themselves rant and generalise unbearably. It was perhaps Quinet's greatest misfortune that he never seems to have made up his mind whether he was a prose-writer or a poet. It is possible, no doubt, to be both, but then you must not write your poetry in prose and your prose in poetry. Quinet not unfrequently made each of these mistakes.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

Egypt. By Stanley Lane-Poole. (Sampson Low.)

EGYPT belongs, by right of literary descent, to the Lanes and Pooles; and the author of this excellent little volume writes with the authority of one whose family, through three generations, has continued to hand on the torch of Arabic literature and learning. But with literature and learning the present book is little concerned. Mr. Lane-Poole, whose reputation is essentially philological and numismatic, breaks what is, for him, new ground in producing for the service of the general public a popular account of the geographical, agricultural, commercial, and social Egypt of to-day.

To say in less than two hundred pages all that might, could, and should be said upon so inexhaustible a theme is of course impossible; but Mr. Lane-Poole has at all events contrived to tell in that small space all that any reader who is not a specialist need seek to know. His style is bright, concise, and straightforward; and in the art of conveying a general effect by means of a few sharp touches he is peculiarly successful. Take, for instance, the freshness and brevity of the following description of the Nile valley and the Desert:—

"Without the Nile there would be no Egypt; the great African Sahara would spread uninterruptedly to the Red Sea. Egypt is simply a groove worn by the Nile in the desert, and made habitable by its waters. The irregular table-land, gradually rising from the Libyan plateau to its highest point near the Red Sea, can support no life. The Egyptian desert is not, indeed, the expanse of shifting sand—the summer snow-drift—which it is often imagined to be; but it is not the less sterile and uninhabitable. It is generally a high plateau of hard, dry, barren rock, covered here and there with gravel and sand and débris, raised sometimes in heights, sometimes depressed into valleys where water runs and never rests; relieved at wide intervals by deep hollows, where springs rise and form a green oasis—a dimple in the stern face of the desert. The Nile is the life-giving power here, for the water which finds its way to the deep-down surface of the oases has filtered through under the sandstone from the river hundreds of miles away. But the greatest creation of the Nile—a sort of long oasis worn in the rock by the ever-flowing stream, and made green and fertile by its waters—is the land of Egypt itself."

Of the decline of Egyptian commerce, Mr. Lane-Poole has a sorry tale to tell. The transport trade received its death-blow at the opening of the Suez Canal; and the exports (consisting chiefly of cotton, cereals, and sugar) are alarmingly on the decline.

They were estimated, eight years ago, at £16,000,000; but in 1878 they had fallen to half that amount. The imports are valued at about £5,000,000, and consist chiefly of manufactured goods, coal, oil, and machinery. About seventy per cent. of the trade of Egypt is done with Great Britain. The exquisite industrial arts of which Cairo was once the centre are at a still lower ebb. The masons who built the noble mosques of Sultan Hassan, of Kait-Bey, of Kalaaon; the skilled armourers whose fine blades and rich mountings rivalled those of Damascus; the glass-stainers whose colours were the envy of the East; the weavers whose fine linen almost equalled that of the ancient Egyptians, have passed away and left no successors. Even the turner's art is dying out for want of encouragement; and the beautiful lattice-work of the meshrebeeyah windows is everywhere disappearing in favour of common glass and European sashes. In his chapter on the manners and customs of the modern Egyptians, Mr. Lane-Poole has performed a literary tour de force in neither imitating nor reproducing the classic pages of Edward William Lane. His sympathy with the people, their mode of thought, their superstitions, amusements, and religious observances, is no less warm than that of his great-uncle; but he treats the subject from his own point of view and in his own way. On hareem-life, polygamy, and divorce, he is plain-spoken—almost too plain-spoken, perhaps—and altogether unprejudiced. "Polygamy," he says,

"is much more a theoretical than a practical institution; and, although he is allowed by his religious law to have four wives, not one Egyptian in twenty has even two."

Nor does Mr. Lane-Poole hesitate to compare the polygamous Egyptian with his monogamous English and French contemporaries, and to submit that the former is the more moral of the three.

As regards revenue, taxation, and statistics generally, the author's information—possibly the latest attainable—comes down only to 1878; while some of his facts have become obsolete since they were committed to paper. The slave trade, for example, instead of being "in process of abolition," is again frightfully upon the increase; the pyramid of Unas has been identified; and recent research renders it at least doubtful whether the polygonal columns at Beni-Hassan can be unhesitatingly classed as "the prototypes of the Doric." Also, what does Mr. Lane-Poole mean, in his description of the Great Temple at Abou Simbel, by stating that "above the sandy bank appears the high façade of the pylon, behind which hall after hall leads into the heart of the mountain"? The pylons at Abou Simbel (which were built of crude brick, like the pylons of the largest temple, now almost wholly destroyed, at Wady Halfeh) exist only as foundations. The base of the southernmost tower, consisting of walls seven feet in thickness, built in courses of moulded brick, and finished at the angles with the usual torus, or round moulding, was discovered in 1874 by a dahabeeyah party, of which the present writer was one; while the shapeless mass of similar brickwork which blocks the narrow footway between the greater and lesser temples must unquestionably mark the site of the northern tower. Moreover, it is especially to be noted that these pylons, instead of standing broadwise, side by side, in advance of the temple, as elsewhere, were placed at a considerable distance to the right and left, and set endwise, at right angles to the temple—an arrangement necessitated by want of space between the mountain and the river. All this, however, I have elsewhere duly recorded. The high façade of Mr. Lane-Poole's "pylon" must, meanwhile, be taken to mean the smooth and sculptured face of the mountain itself, which is, in fact, the temple-front; whereas a pylon—generally understood as a detached structure—is, as its name indicates, not a temple-front, but a gateway.

AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

NEW NOVELS.

Among the Hills. By E. Frances Poynter. In 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Elsie Grey. By Cecil Clarke. (Griffith & Farran.)

The Cameronians. By James Grant. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Legends and Tales of the Harz Mountains. By Toofie Lauder. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

IN Among the Hills we have a valuable, though unpretentious, addition to what is coming to be known as "the idyllic school" of fiction. The little village of Haysted among the hills, thirty years ago, before a railroad came near it, is thus presented in one of those bits of Dutch landscape-painting which, to many, will constitute the chief charm of the book:—

"The forge was clanging; the shop-bell was tinkling at the butcher's door hard by; a flock of sheep was being driven along the road; a yellow van had drawn up in the shade of the copper beech before the old red-brick inn, and a woman with her head out of window was quarrelling with two surly-looking men, who stood smoking and drinking outside; Farmer Brown on his white horse sat waiting for his afternoon glass of ale; nasturtiums and geraniums blazed in the little front gardens."

Place in such a scene, though not in harmony with it, Hetty Adams, a deformed girl, with a mind poisoned by the knowledge of her deformity, or, as the author prefers to describe her,

"one who, with keen sensibilities and some capacity for greatness, found herself imprisoned in a narrow and untoward lot, out of which it seemed exceptionally hard to struggle into freedom and light."

Let her add to her misery by falling in love with a man who cannot return her passion, and the problem of her reconciliation to her circumstances will seem an especially hard one to solve. It is the solution of this problem that constitutes such plot as is to be found in Among the Hills. Both from the "psychological" and from the "idyllic" point of view, it deserves high praise as a work of art. Not one of the characters is drawn in a slovenly manner; on the contrary, Jeanie Adams—the foil to, and unconscious rival of, Hetty, with her healthy body and mind—her mother, and a schoolmaster who is exceptionally ugly even in a book of ugly portraits, are as well drawn as is Hetty herself.

Elsie Grey, whether it be, as is professed on the title-page, "a tale of truth" or not, is a work of the class which the genius of Dickens has rendered possible. To discover—or to create—romance in the humble and humdrum life of the frequenters and inhabitants of a dingy old Court in the City, to make interesting the "bits of emotions" of a lame and self-conscious clerk—this is what the author of Elsie Grey would probably not have attempted but for now historical example. The attempt, however, has been very successful. The lives and humours of Barbary Court are admirably presented; and Mrs. Sparrow, as a warm-hearted City house-keeper of the Martha type, and her husband, Luke, are characters of whom Dickens himself need not have been ashamed. It was very judicious, too, of the author to remove the leading figures to a German city; it gave them air, and prevented their sentimentalities from becoming maudlin. Elsie Grey, however, is a weak-eyed and somewhat unsubstantial heroine; and "poor Mr. Loriner," whom we are invited, with Elsie Grey, to fall in love with, is the cause of the only decidedly false passages. The work is full of promise; but the writer, in working such a peculiar vein, runs not a few dangers. In particular, vulgarity must not be confounded with humour. Such a caricature as "St. Allfudge's" is not suggestive in a pleasing sense.

It is rather a comforting fact that Mr. James Grant is still Mr. James Grant, for that means that boys are still boys. In a world lying in self-consciousness, in a time when we talk of "the essential passions" as if they no longer made and marred human lives, the author who thrilled the boyhood of men now in middle age with his Romances of War and his Black Dragoons still finds a market. Mr. Grant has, further, the courage not to seek to modify his style. One scene in The Cameronians is indeed laid during the Servian War; otherwise, it might have been published any time during the last thirty years. We have the old dashing descriptions; the flesh-and-blood heroine; the hero with the mystery of his birth, and his innumerable hair-breadth escapes; and the villains with their oaths, their brandy, their plots, and their failures. Above all, there is the familiar appearance of Mr. Grant himself as a nineteenth-century Cavalier, swearing by blood and culture, and always ready with a hard word, or, if needs be, a swashing blow for hypocrites, "crop-eared Roundheads," and the like. The Cameronians is in several respects superior to many of Mr. Grant's more recent works. It is more carefully written; and the account given of the Servian War is decidedly above the average "special's" mark. Many of the scenes, too, are laid in Scotland, particularly in Edinburgh, and so Mr. Grant is able to make use of his favourite historical knowledge. Altogether, the book is enjoyable reading, especially as a relief from psychological fiction. Mr. Grant is, as usual, weak in the department of humour, and plays to the gallery. He goes too far, however, when he styles the "superior fiend" of the story "Hew Caddish Montgomerie," and the clumsy attempt to explain "Caddish" as a contraction for "Cavendish" only makes matters worse.

Legends and Tales of the Harz Mountains needs no special criticism. It is what it professes to be, and there is a great deal of it. The author (or translator) would have done well to have made the volume more of a selection and less of a conglomeration. His (or her) style, too, has undergone a considerable amount of Germanisation, which shows itself in uncouth and un-English phrases like "around-lying" and "too-late brought," and such unsweetened, not to say unenlightened, translation as—

"In the time long ago, when all this district was covered with dense forests, swamps, and morasses, where now ripen the golden corn, fruits, and every blessing that crowns the husbandman's toil, and wild beasts preyed on the around-lying mountains, evil spirits practised their devices in the Gegensteine."

This is, however, an excellent book to take up and dip into at moments of ease. Nor will it be enjoyed by boys and girls only.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

RECENT SCHOOL BOOKS.

English History Reading Books. Part I. By Miss Yonge. (National Society's Depository.) This is a collection of "historical stories" for very young children, intended to serve as an introduction to a fuller History. In these stories Miss Yonge has most wisely avoided relating "horrors and cruelties," which she rightly says in the Preface "had better not be dwelt on till it is possible to teach something more of their causes." A few of the stories are happily chosen, as "The Cup of Water;" but Miss Yonge has allowed herself to be carried away by her reverence for royalty, and has crowded her book with trivial incidents in the lives of kings and queens. Surely it would have been easy to write simple stories of such men and women as St. Hilda, St. Alphege, Simon de Montfort, Wycliffe, Caxton, Sir T. More, and many others whose names do not once occur in this book—stories beautiful in themselves, and which would have taught children that the History of England is something more than the history of her kings and queens.

English History Reading Books. Parts III, IV. By Miss Yonge. (National Society's Depository.) It will be a great disappointment to many of those with whom Miss Yonge's name has weight to find how little this attractive-looking series of reading-books can be depended on for giving children a clear and correct account of English history. The defects which have already been noticed in part ii. (see ACADEMY for April 2, 1881) are no less obvious in parts iii. and iv. Inaccuracies are of frequent occurrence. The Chancellor in the reign of Henry II. is described as "the head of all the lawyers." Henry III. is said to have beautified Westminster Abbey, "which had been begun by Edward the Confessor." Such an account cannot fail to impress upon children the belief that the chief part of the present Abbey dates from the reign of Edward the Confessor! 1264 is given as the year when towns first sent members to Parliament, and Miss Yonge says that "every burgh" chose them! Simon de Montfort is said to have inherited the Earldom of Leicester from his mother; and the Fire of London is made to begin in the country and end in the City. Some of these incorrect statements (which are only a few among many) may seem unimportant, but they show a total want of that minute care and accuracy which are essential to an historian. Another grave defect in these books is the author's habit of referring to customs and events of which no clear explanation has been given, as in the references to treasure-trove, trial by peers, and the American colonists. A bare mention of the Pilgrim Fathers is all the information given about the colonisation of America, so that the War of Independence is unintelligible. The plan of giving definitions at the end of each chapter is no doubt good; but such definitions, unless accurate and simple, are worse than useless. To define Parliament as "the Council of the Nation" can convey no clear idea to a child's mind. Some definitions, too, are inexact, as those of homage and Cardinal. If, instead of crowding these books with details, Miss Yonge had given only the leading events of each reign, explaining all that needed explanation (such as vote by ballot), and if she had made some attempt to trace the growth of the nation, and to show the influence of men and events upon that growth, she would have done good service to the cause of education; whereas now she has but added one more to the already large number of unsatisfactory histories for children.

Outline of English History: Second Period, A.D. 1603 to 1880. By S. R. Gardiner. (Longmans.) This book can hardly become so popular with children as the volume on the first period is sure to be, since the history of modern times can never have for the young the charm which that of the Middle Ages possesses. Some elements of romance disappeared with those ages, and life has grown more complicated and perplexing. Nevertheless, Prof. Gardiner need not fear the verdict that will be passed upon his little book by his readers. Teachers and children alike will thank him for writing a history of the last three centuries so clear and so full of interest. But he has not been content with this. He has shown how and why "each generation has been better in something than the one before it," and has stimulated his readers to strive in their turn "to make the generation in which we live better than the last." If this book could be read in all the schools of the land, there would be some hope that the rising generation of the working classes might learn in what true liberalism and true progress consist, and might be taught by the lives of the best men and women of the past "that freedom is good because it sets us at liberty to make the best of ourselves for the sake of others."

English History Reading Books. Richard I. and Edward I. By E. S. Armitage. (Longmans.) The children attending those schools into which the series of English History Reading Books published by Messrs. Longmans and Co. is introduced will be fortunate. Not only will they be taught, and taught accurately, all that is best worth knowing of our nation's life, as a whole, by Prof. Gardiner's Outline of English History, but they will also have the pleasure of making fuller acquaintance than would be possible from an outline with a few of the greatest and most popular characters and events of English history. Mrs. Armitage's little book tells in simple language the story of Richard I.'s exploits, as described in the old Chronicles, and of all that Edward I. did for his country. The choice of these two Kings as subjects for companion pictures was a happy one, for, alike in some points, the striking differences between them will help children to see what constitutes real greatness in a Sovereign. The account of the Third Crusade gives a graphic picture of the methods of warfare in the Middle Ages. To do this was, perhaps, Mrs. Armitage's reason for giving at such great length the story of a Crusade of which the results were so trifling. Justice is not done to the character of Saladin, who certainly was not a Turk, though Mrs. Armitage implies that he was. It is to be regretted that details of horrors are given which would have been much better omitted in a book for young children; and there are one or two statements made that are open to objection. Is it likely to encourage the children of bad parents to try to lead good lives to be told that "bad fathers make bad sons"? Again, the greatness of a man who "sticks to the thing that he has begun, and carries it through," must depend on the nature of the thing begun. Such defects, however, detract but little from the merits of a book which is sure to be soon a great favourite in our National schools.

Geography Reading Books. Part III., for Standard IV. (National Society.) Geographical Reader. For Standard III. The World. By J. M. D. Meiklejohn. (W. and B. Chambers.) Of these two books the first will be most useful as a reader, the second as a geography. The author of the book published by the National Society would, no doubt, give a series of most interesting lessons; but chatty oral lessons interspersed with personal anecdotes are apt to lose their power of appealing to the imagination, and consequently to the memory, when written down and separated from the personality of the teacher. Nevertheless, if it be granted that a geography of Great Britain must be written in 209 small pages, and that, when written, the book is to be considered rather a reader than a geography, the author must be congratulated on having performed a difficult task perhaps almost as well as it could be done. Mr. Meiklejohn's little book, if used as he intends, will prove most useful as a geography; more so than as a reader, as by his plan a great part of each lesson will be employed in questioning. By providing a series of introductory questions to most of the lessons, he points out to the teacher the necessity of finding out what previous knowledge he has to build upon, and also of arousing a curiosity about the new matter to be imparted. After the lesson is read, it is to be talked over; then there follows an exercise to be answered in writing, which will set the pupil thinking over what he has read, and of matters connected with it. These exercises should form an excellent training, as, in order to answer many of them, the pupil will have to trust to his own observation and ingenuity. At the end comes a table of revision lessons, to be learnt by heart after the respective lessons to which their numbers refer, which states in a concise form the main facts of each. Altogether, the book is most carefully planned, and forms a series of most excellent lessons.

Geography, by W. M. Lupton (Longmans), is said to be designed to assist candidates preparing for Army, Civil Service, Local, and other examinations. If the aim of these examinations is to pick out people with good memories, no better manual could be chosen for preparation. If, on the other hand, candidates are expected to show any intellectual capacity, they will get but little help from this book. To show that the above statements are in no way exaggerations it may be stated that on one page, taken at random, there are no less than eighty-nine names to be learnt by heart, forty of which are names of towns with the population attached.

Geographical Readers, Book III., for Standard IV., by Charlotte M. Mason (Stanford), is a book which will prove as useful to those teachers who are fortunately not bound to combine geography and reading lessons as to those who are. The writer possesses just the qualities necessary for a good geography teacher—the power of graphic description and the power of grouping facts so as to make them easily remembered. In reading the accounts of some of our chief manufacturing towns, one would almost think one was reading a letter from a writer who had but just seen what he describes. It is surprising how the author has managed to describe adequately so much in so small a space.

Geography: The British Empire. By L. B. Lang. (Rivingtons.) Mrs. Lang seems to be impressed with the idea—in itself a good one, if the lessons are for an advanced class—that a description of the geography of Great Britain should be accompanied by some account of its geological structure. If not only the geography of Great Britain, but that of all its colonies and dependencies, is to be given in a single small book, the amount of geology which could be got in, even by the most skilful writer, would not be likely to be of much interest to pupils who had no previous knowledge of the subject. When, however, the writer defines igneous rocks as rocks "formed by fire," without modification or explanation, and fossils as "dead plants and animals turned to stone by heat and pressure," it may be doubted whether the geology will be of any use. One might have thought that Mr. Creighton's name was a guarantee against errors—in history, at least; but what else can we consider the statements that the Romans drove the Celts to the hills, and that from "these Celts" (i.e., those driven back by the Romans) the Welsh, Cornishmen, and Highlanders are descended?

Earth, Air, and Water, by C. A. Martineau (Routledge), will provide subject-matter for a set of very good lessons on physical geography for a teacher of junior classes.

Specimen Essays. By John Gibson, M.A., and F. R. Burrows, B.A. (Reeves and Turner.) This is one of the daily increasing number of books written for examinees. It is not, however, a cram-book in the worst sense. It does not illustrate the vices of the modern examination system, as books dealing with more definite subjects too often do. Essay writing cannot very easily be crammed. All the teacher can do is to set his pupils on the best road to good writing. Messrs. Gibson and Burrows have collected a good many useful hints and examples. Some of their counsels are excellent—as the caution against modelling your style on any one author; the advice to limit your reading, as far as possible, to masters of style; and the suggestion that it is wise to omit any sentence in your essay that strikes you as particularly clever. We are not sure that Hallam is the best author to hold up as an example to beginners; and the sentence quoted in the Introduction hardly tallies with the recommendation on p. 20 to eschew the "endless windings of a paragraph." The rules for punctuation are not quite clear, and the authors of the Specimen Essays seem to find the subject a trying one. They pepper their sentences with commas, and adopt the German system of punctuation before clauses introduced by relative pronouns. The proper use of "that" and "which" is not always observed. The essays themselves are clear and well arranged. There is nothing of the fatal smartness which too often characterises the would-be model essayist, and the style is duly subordinated to the matter. Such a construction, however, as "Russia has still to be civilised at home, and a boundless field for energy in Asia," is inadmissible; and the statement that Buddhism may have derived some of its precepts from Christianity is chronologically confounding. It would have been well, too, had the authors set their faces against the use of the article "an" before "history." The essay on "Town and Country" is the best; and "Travelling" is good, but for the use of "subject" for "object," and the sentence "travellers search for traces of the battle, which was fought there," where the comma is wrong, and "which" should be "that." The essay on "English Novels" is remarkable for treating Thackeray and Dickens as mere humorists, and for selecting Mr. George MacDonald and Mrs. Craik as leading examples of the modern novelist. Poor Mr. Trollope and Mr. T. Hardy may search for their names in vain; and Jane Austen, Charlotte Brontë, Kingsley, and others of some note are laid on the shelf. Despite a certain slightness, the essays are good models; and, if boys will learn to write up to these examples in examinations, much of the amusement and the indignation of the examiner will be lost.

Poetic Readers. Parts I. and II. (Marshall, Japp and Co.) These little volumes contain many verses well adapted to their purpose. The pieces are well graduated; and the kindness of several well-known living English authors has enabled the compiler to include some choice little poems, like Mr. Dobson's "Before Sedan," which would otherwise be out of the reach of young pupils. There are, however, many faults to be found with the selection. It contains too many American poems, and these not always of the best; and there is much carelessness and not a little want of taste shown in printing the English contributions. If we mistake not, Mr. Swinburne's "Water Fairy" has been sadly mutilated; Mr. Andrew Lang's clever Ballade of "Cleopatra's Needle" is utterly spoilt by misprints; and it would have been difficult to choose a worse example either of parody or of Mr. F. Locker than that writer's "Unfortunate Miss Bailey." The Index to the second part has no reference to the pages, and the glossaries are very poor; such words as "indignant," "jovial," and "rebuke" are carefully explained, while the pupil will look in vain for nearly all the unusual words, such as "gnomon," "hacienda," "calamus," "caisson," "Aldebaran," and "caracke." The section on "Special Forms of Verse" is ludicrously inadequate. The idea to issue a poetical reader, entirely composed of verses by living authors, as a supplement to other selections, was a good one; and a little more care would have made these little volumes a valuable addition to the teacher's shelves.

MR. S. H. JEVES, in his Guide to Studying for Classical Entrance Scholarships (Oxford: Thornton) has provided parents and teachers with an excellent manual by which to guide their sons or pupils in preparing for university scholarships. Mr. Jeyes writes more especially for Oxford candidates; but the work will suit Cambridge equally well. In seven succinct chapters he gives directions as to the best way of preparing for the different sorts of papers ordinarily set in scholarships—English essay, historical questions, miscellaneous questions, critical questions, translations, composition, divinity; and also for the best way of tackling with the paper when the boy is confronted with it in actual examination. The observations are of the most practical kind, conveyed in carefully considered and well-economised sentences, and each chapter concludes with a set of questions on the subject it discusses. The book is well done, and ought to be useful.

We are glad to be able to notice a careful edition of K. Gutzkow's amusing comedy, Zopf und Schwert, by Mr. H. J. Wolstenholme (Pitt Press). Gutzkow's German, although doubtless a very good model of the modern conversational style, is by no means easy, and all help is valuable. These notes are abundant, and contain references to standard grammatical works. No doubt the ladies of Bedford College and Newnham, to whom Mr. Wolstenholme lectures, will read them with diligence and profit; but we venture to think that anyone who has to teach boys will do well to keep the book in his own hands and select from it the more important points to be impressed orally on his pupils. Boys will not wade through long notes. We are glad, however, to see that learners are often left to their own judgment in matters of translation.

BELONGING to the same series is Mr. Colbeck's edition of Bonnechese's Life of Lazare Hoche. Some schools have not come to a decision on the rival merits of Englishmen and foreigners as teachers of modern languages. Harrow appears to have decided to hold both suits, and, with such strong cards as M. Masson and the present editor, is not unlikely to score against all competitors. For points of grammar Mr. Colbeck refers to Eve and Bandiss; for history he supplies an introductory sketch of the period—a model of compression—yet redeemed from dullness by a few touches which we may almost hope will commend it even to boys. His etymology, too, seems always accurate, though, perhaps, he is too bountiful—e.g., in offering derivations for ombrageux, côte, and suppôt, while acolyte (a puzzling word to a modern school-boy) is not derived. The indispensable two or three little plans are appended.

HERR H. SACHS' German Conversational Grammar (Whittingham) is hardly likely to be much used except by such theorists as himself; or perhaps it would be more pleasing to this Athanasius to call the mundus theorists and himself practical. We are "to give up entirely the defective system of submitting to the pupil translations by writing on subjects and sentences which he is not yet able fluently to express by speaking. The natural way is first to learn to speak and afterwards to write." Possibly, if the object be to teach boys and girls to patter in one language or another, hardly knowing which is which; the result is at least more showy, the process much less exhausting both to teacher and learner, and comparable to the early Victorian method of teaching drawing, whereby the pupil, though unable to draw a straight line, and entirely ignorant of perspective, was happily enabled, with the drawing-master's aid, to furnish with water-colour landscapes every spare bedroom in the largest house.

DR. MAGUIRE has brought out a second series of Test Questions on selected portions of English literature and history. "Qui s'excuse, s'accuse," and no one would have breathed a suspicion of the hateful word cramming had not the author been too eager to disclaim the charge. Nowadays the dullest must, at least, go in for examinations, and surely they are entitled to help from some good-natured friend or another. To be serious, merely turning over these pages is to any but veteran teachers almost as bad as the old Etonian's dreams of the twigs and the block. Now, indeed, we know something—our own ignorance.

MR. C. P. MASON's pamphlet on the Subjunctive and So-called Potential Mood (Bell) is so polemical that we feel aggrieved that he does not conclude with "What, then, does Dr. — mean?" He is still harder upon "a Mr. Greenlaw," whose defence of a "crotchet" and "baseless theories" have met with no mercy from Mr. Mason, who lives, it seems to us, in a glass house of his own, for his adversaries may well attack his views on quum. Still, all teachers might do worse than study this little book.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. STANLEY JEVONS is at work upon a treatise on political economy, to be entitled The Principles of Economics. The materials have long been under preparation, but the extent of the work is such that it cannot be ready for press for some time to come. Mr. Jevons intends to supplement this treatise by a kind of historical introduction to the study of the science, in the form of a student's edition of Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations. Messrs. Macmillan and Co. are to be the publishers.

THE concluding portion (part iv., No. 2) of Select Titles from the Digest of Justinian, edited by Prof. T. E. Holland and Mr. C. L. Shadwell, will be issued very shortly, together with the complete work, by the Clarendon Press. The selected titles have been grouped under heads which are familiar to readers of the Institutes—viz., Introductory or General Matter, the Law of Family, the Law of Property, and the Law of Obligations; and under each of these heads the order in which the several titles follow one another is made to correspond as nearly as may be with that observed in the Institutes. Each title has been supplied with an analytical head-note, and with illustrative references to parallel passages in the Corpus Juris and in the Institutes of Gaius. The text is that of the edition of the Digest published by Mommsen, with the assistance of Krueger (Berlin, 1870).

WE understand that, in answer to the correspondence which has recently appeared in a contemporary concerning the desirability of a Church Year Book being issued, Mr. Elliot Stock will publish annually The Year Book of the Church, and that the work will be edited by Mr. Charles Mackeson, the compiler of The Guide to the Churches of London.

MESSRS. BENTLEY have in the press a new edition of Thiers' History of the French Revolution, translated by Mr. Frederick Shoberl. It will be illustrated with forty-one engravings and portraits, engraved by W. Greatbach.

THE Common Prayer, translated into the Mohawk language for the use of the Indians in the vicinity of New York, and printed at New York in 1715, is one of the rarest books in the class of American linguistics. When the third edition was published in 1787, it was stated that very few copies had survived the War of Independence, in which the Mohawk tribes, having joined the Royal cause against that of the States, suffered severely, and were expatriated to Canada. It was therefore an event of some bibliographical importance when a copy turned up in a sale at Puttick and Simpson's auction-rooms last week. Mr. Quaritch was the purchaser.

WE understand that a work by F. A. Philbrick, Q.C., and Mr. Westoby is on the point of being published by the Philatelic Society of London. Its title will be The Postage and Telegraph Stamps of Great Britain, and it will include a short history of the Post-Office and Post-Office reforms. It will be profusely illustrated.

THE remaining three volumes of Mr. W. W. Hunter's Imperial Gazetteer of India, making eight in all, will be published by Messrs. Trübner in July. A full Index to the whole will be given.

WE hear that Mr. S. C. Hall's Rhymes in Council will be dedicated by special permission to the grandchildren of the Queen.

MR. GRIGGS has finished his facsimile of the 1602 Quarto of Shakespeare's Merry Wives, and has begun that of 1 Henry IV.

WE are glad to hear that the selected edition of Mr. Austin Dobson's poems published by Henry Holt and Co., of New York, has attained a success both pleasing and profitable to publishers and author.

UNDER the title of The Russians beyond the Caspian, Mr. Charles Marvin is writing a fresh work, describing minutely Skobelev's recent campaign against the Tekkes of Akhal. The book will contain a full account of the military operations, from the landing of Skobelev in 1880 to the storming of Geok Tepé, based exclusively upon Russian information obtained from eye-witnesses, and will be illustrated with numerous scenes of the Turcoman region and the conflicts between the Russians and the natives, together with a series of plans of the siege operations, and the latest Russian maps of the conquered region.

IN a few days will be issued Midsummer Dreams, edited by George W. Plant. It is the summer number of Society, and will contain, among other contributions, a story by Mr. Joseph Hatton, entitled "A Previous Conviction." Mr. G. Manville Fenn will also furnish a tale; and Cuthbert Bede, author of Verdant Green, will write on "Robert Burns's Betrothal to Highland Mary" and "Sea Green." Mr. William Andrews, hon. secretary of the Hull Literary Club, will contribute a long paper on "The Folk-Lore of Midsummer Eve." Mr. Horace Weir will furnish an account of a pleasant holiday in "The Western Highlands." Among the contributors will also be Sir Charles Young, Annie Thomas, Howard Paul, Edward Oxenford, Clement Scott, Willmott Dixon, and others. It will be profusely illustrated by popular artists.

MR. JOHN POTTER BRISCOE, of Nottingham, the author of Nottinghamshire Facts and Fictions, is preparing a new edition of the Sonnets and Songs of Robert Millhouse, the artisan poet of Nottingham, who has been called the Burns of Sherwood Forest. The work, which will include a memoir of the poet, will be published by Messrs. Norris and Cokayne, of Nottingham.

MR. WILLIAM POOLE, of 12A, Paternoster Row, will shortly issue a new volume of poems, from the pen of Joseph S. Fletcher, to be entitled Songs after Sunset.

MR. A. P. ALLSOPP is preparing a dictionary of Public School Words and Phrases. The schools with which he proposes chiefly to deal are Eton, Harrow, Rugby, Marlborough, Charterhouse, Westminster, Winchester, and Shrewsbury. Explanations and derivations (if possible) will be given; and the mode of pronunciation will also be shown, if peculiar, together with any other particulars which may be forthcoming. Mr. Allsopp would be grateful for any communications that may be sent to him at Hindlip Hall, Worcester.

A FIRM of New York publishers have ordered a thousand copies of Mr. Henry Dunning Macleod's Elements of Economics (vol. i. just published).

THE Revue Critique for May 30 contains a review of Mr. Morfill's Russia (Sampson Low) by M. L. Leger, in which, while full justice is done to the merits of the book, a number of errata are pointed out in view of a second edition.

M. LUCIEN RIGAUD has followed up the success of his Dictionnaire du Jargon parisien with a Dictionnaire des Liens communs de la Conversation (Paris: Ollendorff), in which he has collected conversational words current among all classes in France, from the highest to the lowest.

MM. CHARAVAY, of Paris, announce that they have in the press the two following works:—Histoire d'Henriette d'Angleterre et Mémoires historiques, by Mme. de la Fayette; and Contes et Poésies fugitives de Voltaire. The same firm have in hand a "Bibliothèque des Français," edited by MM. Anatole France and Fernand Calmettes, of which the two first volumes, containing La Fontaine's Fables, have already appeared. These are beautifully printed, with illustrations and a style of ornament characteristic of La Fontaine's time.

M. JAMES DARNESTETER is preparing an annotated edition of Byron's Child Harold for Delagrave's series of Classiques anglais.

IN order to avail themselves to the utmost of the opening of the London University examinations to women, the council of Bedford College propose to strengthen their position by establishing an endowment fund. At the last examination in honours at matriculation, a student from Bedford College obtained the first place out of a list of thirty successful candidates; and there are now no less than thirty-six students at the college preparing for the several examinations. Bedford College has at present no endowment beyond a few small scholarships. The special purpose of the endowment which the council are now seeking to raise is to augment the payment of the teachers. Considering that almost every institution for the higher teaching of men is already subsidised in this manner, it is not too much to hope that this appeal to the public will receive the support it deserves. A graceful feature in the case is that, among the subscriptions already promised, several come from former students of the college.

WE learn from the Nation that the Smithsonian Institution has just published the Memorial of Joseph Henry ordered by Congress. It consists of the funeral proceedings, the exercises at the Capitol, the action of societies, &c., concluding with the Act of Congress authorising a bronze statue of Henry by W. W. Story.

THE conversazione of the professors and friends of University College, London, is fixed for June 27, at 8.30 p.m.; and the Working Men's College excursion to Lord, for Saturday, July 2. The visitors are to dine in Christchurch Hall at two o'clock (paying for their dinner), hear organ recitals in Magdalen and New College Chapels afterwards, and then have tea, by invitation of two of the fellows, at All Souls'.

MDME. MICHELET is engaged in preparing for publication an abridgement of her husband's History of France, written entirely in his own words. It will consist of three volumes, of which the third, treating of the Revolution, will appear first, as being essential for the right understanding of the other two.

THE tenth Report of the Rochdale Free Public Library shows an addition of 552 volumes to the reference and of 1,385 volumes to the lending department during the year ending March 31 last.

A FREE public library will be opened at Richmond, Surrey, on June 18, in a building which has been especially erected on the Little Green. A special feature of this institution will be a juvenile library.

THE two legal prizes, named after Odilon Barrot, which have recently been awarded by the French Academy, have both of them an interest for Englishmen. The subject of one was "The Institution of the Jury in France and in England;" the subject of the other was "Civil Procedure in France and in England from the Thirteenth Century to the Present Day." The former was awarded to an advocate at Ghent, the latter to a professor at Douai.

M. L. FAVRE is about to publish a new and considerably enlarged edition of Ragueau's Glossary of French Law, edited in the last century by Eusèbe de Laurière, and now very scarce.

M. CALMANN LÉVY has just brought out vol. i. of a new edition of the abbé F. Galiani's Correspondence, revised from the originals, and containing all the suppressed passages and a large number of unpublished letters. MM. Perey and Maugras contribute a study on the life and works of Galiani, who numbered among his correspondents Mme. d'Épinay, Mme. Necker, Mme. Geoffrin, Diderot, Grimm, d'Alembert, de Sartine, and d'Holbach.

MESSRS. BERGER-LEVRAULT, of Paris and Nancy, are bringing out a new Military Dictionary, the first part of which (extending to the beginning of the article on "Artillery") has just appeared. Special attention has been devoted to foreign military affairs, and to the bibliography of the subject. The general editor is M. Amédée le Faure, deputy for La Creuse.

M. FISCHBACHER has just published an essay on the origin of Unitarian Christianity in England, by G. Bonet-Maury, Professor in the Faculty of Protestant Theology in Paris; and a second edition of M. Sabatier's sketch of the history of St. Paul's thought.

PROF. AENEAS J. G. MACKAY, LL.D., has resigned the Chair of Constitutional Law and History in the University of Edinburgh. Dr. Mackay has held the chair for seven years.

MR. M. M. KUNTE, well known to European Orientalists as the winner of the second prize at the International Congress of Oriental Scholars held at Florence, has been appointed to the head-mastership of the High School and College at Ahmedabad. His prize essay, The Vicissitudes of Aryan Civilisation in India, published by Messrs. Trübner and Co., has excited great interest in Germany, and is full of curious information, though the conclusions may not, perhaps, always be so carefully reasoned out as English scholars could wish. His monthly publication of the text, commentary, and translation of the principal systems of ancient Indian philosophy is an undertaking of high merit, and well deserving of the support of Oriental scholars in Europe. It is a publication that ought to have a place in every public library. Mr. M. M. Kunte has even attempted English poetry, and his philosophical poem, The Rishi, should be read by the side of Arnold's Light of Asia, the former representing a picture of the ancient Brahmanic faith, while the latter paints in glowing colour the legendary life of Buddha.

MESSRS. ROBERT CLARKE, of Chicago, announce that they have in preparation The North-West in 1634, with a sketch of the life of John Nicolet, the discoverer, by Mr. C. W. Butterfield.

FROM one of the bulletins of the United States Census Report, it appears that the total number of daily papers published in the United States is 962, of which the larger half appear in the evening. Connected with them are 682 weekly issues. The average circulation is only 2,800 copies. Of the total, eighty-one are printed in German, and nine in other foreign languages.

"THE SHORTHAND SOCIETY" is the title of an association founded at a meeting of gentlemen over whom Mr. Cornelius Walford, F.R.S., presided, and held at the City Club, Ludgate Circus, on Tuesday evening. The object for which the society has been formed is the study of the science and literature of shorthand, and the discussion of the principles which should govern the construction of systems of shorthand and abbreviated longhand adapted for general use. A committee was appointed to draw up rules, to be submitted to a further meeting on the 28th inst., at the same place.

AN interesting series of documents, bearing date 1271, 1274, and 1279, which throw some light on the mediæval Italian colonies in Armenia, and more especially on those from Genoa and Pisa, has been published in the Archives de l'Orient latin (vol. i., 1880).

Companion to the Revised Version of the English New Testament. By Alex. Roberts, D.D. (Cassells.) This little volume will be found extremely useful by all who, not being able to consult the Greek Testament for themselves, yet desire to know something of the grounds for the leading alterations in the Revised Version. In part i., Prof. Roberts discusses the "changes arising from an amended text." He explains how various readings have arisen, notices briefly the leading sources, and sketches the history of the printed text from which the Authorised Version was made, and gives examples both of the minor and more important changes consequent on the adoption of an improved text. In part ii., he discusses the "changes arising from an amended translation," and gives several interesting examples of the errors in the Authorised and the corrections of the Revised Version. Prof. Roberts was himself a member of the company, but does not reveal any of their secrets. He only tells us that "innocent archaisms" was an expression frequently on their lips. We understand that the first edition of this book has already been exhausted. A second edition is now being rapidly produced, and will be ready in a few days.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to us:—

"Mention was made in a recent number of the ACADEMY of Col. R. L. Playfair having lately read a paper at the French Association at Algiers, giving an account of a visit which he had paid to the Kroumir country. Can Col. Playfair or any of your contributors supply the correct spelling of 'Kroumir'? So written, the word outrages Arabic orthography, which does not tolerate the conjunction of two consecutive consonants without an intervening vowel. Strange to say, I have not lighted on the word in any of the Arabic journals, either of Tunis, Egypt, or Constantinople, which have largely discussed Tunisian affairs. It would be an additional satisfaction if the etymology also of the word could be supplied. In connexion with this topic, I may mention that what European journals call the 'Enfida' estate—the dispute between the rival claimants to which is still unsettled—is uniformly written 'an-Nafidah' by Arabic authors. It is greatly to be regretted that European travellers and newspaper correspondents do not take more pains to ascertain the correct names of the localities which they visit and report on."

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

WE have received:—Memorials of Lord Beaconsfield, Reprinted from the Standard (Macmillan); The Rev. Rowland Hill, Preacher and Wit, by Edward B. Broome, with an Introduction by the Rev. John Stoughton, D.D. (Cassell); English and Irish Land Questions: Collected Essays, by the Right Hon. G. Shaw Lefevre, M.P. (Cassell); Parson Malthus, by James Bonar (Glasgow: James MacLehose); On the Value of Political Economy to Mankind: being the Oxford Cobden Prize Essay for 1880, by A. H. Cumming (same publisher); Demos-thenes, with Extracts from his Orations, and a Critical Discussion of the "Trial on the Crown," by L. Brédif, translated by M. J. Macmahon (Chicago: Griggs; London: Triibner); &c., &c.

OF new editions we have received the following:—The Church Seasons Historically and Poetically Illustrated, by Alexander H. Grant, Second Edition, Revised (John Hogg); May Carols; or, Ancilla Domini, by Aubrey De Vere, Third Edition, Enlarged (Burns and Oates); Botany for Schools and Science Classes—"Elementary Science Manuals," by W. J. Browne, M.A., Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged (Dublin: Sullivan Bros.); Progress and Poverty: an Enquiry into the Cause of Industrial Depressions and of Increase of Want with Increase of Wealth—the Remedy, by Henry George, Fourth Edition (C. Kegan Paul and Co.); History of the Free Trade Movement in England, by Augustus Mongredien, Fifteenth Thousand (Cassell); The Life of George Stephenson, by Samuel Smiles, Centenary Edition (John Murray); Le Théâtre en Angleterre depuis la Conquête jusqu'aux Prédecesseurs immédiates de Shakespeare, par J. J. Jusserand, Deuxième Edition (Paris: Leroux); L'Apôtre Paul: Esquisse d'une Histoire de sa Pensée, par A. S. Sabatier, Deuxième Edition, revue et augmentée (Paris: Fischbacher); &c., &c.

WE have also to acknowledge the following pamphlets:—The Fireside Story of Ireland, by Dion Bouicault (Routledge); Shorthand Made Easy; or, the Locomotive System of Stenography (Stanford); A Practical Method of Analysis of the Simpler Chemical Salts, Arranged in a Concise Form, by H. A. Phillips (Aberdeen: D. Wyllie); Plutarch's Lives of the Gracchi, Translated from the Text of Sintenis, by William W. Marshall, B.A. (Oxford: James Thornton); The Silver and Double Standard Questions, by Edward Langley (Eppingham Wilson); Schopenhauer's Erlösungslehre, von Dr. Raphael Koeber (Berlin: Duncker); Constructive Conservatism: a Speech delivered before the Constitutional Union, March 22, 1881, by C. Algernon Whitmore (Stanford); Encyklopädie der neueren Geschichte: in Verbindung mit namhaften deutschen und ausserdeutschen Historikern, hrsg. von Wilhelm Herbst, vierte und fünfte Lieferungen (Gotha: Perthes); Die Einheit der Naturkräfte, und die Deutung ihrer gemeinsamen Formel, von O. Schmitzdumont (Berlin: Duncker); Reallexicon der deutschen Alterthümer: ein Hand und Nachschlagebuch für Studierende und Laien, bearbeitet von Ernst Götzinger, Heft I. (Leipzig: Woldemar Urban); The Cycle of Development, by Hodder M. Westropp (Bell); Partial Corrections of English Spellings, approved of by the Philological Society (Triibner); &c., &c.

A TRANSLATION FROM BÉRANGER.

LE CINQ MAI.

I.

SPANIARDS took me on friendly deck,
Far away by an Indian strand;—
Wait and stray from an empire's wreck,
Sick at heart in a stranger land.
Five years gone! But the Cape is past;—
Crossing the line on the wave at last:—
France, poor soldier, again to see!
There my boy has a shroud for me.

II.

"Land!" cries the pilot; "Sainte-Hélène!"
There he is drooping in watch and ward.
Hate dies down in you, hearts of Spain,—
His chains we curse, and his butcher guard.
Nothing can I do, nothing to save;
Times are past for a glorious grave.
France, poor soldier, again to see!
There my boy has a shroud for me.

III.

Is he asleep? that bolt of steel
Shattering thrones, a score at a breath;—
Shall he not rise in his wrath, his heel
Crushing the kings as he goes to death?
Hope recoils from that iron shore:
Gods and the eagle are friends no more.
France, poor soldier, again to see!
There my boy has a shroud for me.

IV.

Victory strained to follow his will;
Then she flagged, but he would not stay:
Twice betrayed, he has foiled them still;—
Ah! but the snakes that entwine his way!
Venom lurks in the laurel wreath;
Conquering brows are crowned with death.
France, poor soldier, again to see!
There my boy has a shroud for me.

V.

Let but a sail peep over the main.
"He!" cry the monarchs; "escaped his iale?
Come he to ask for his world again?
Arm two million rank and file!"
He, perchance, with his anguish spent,
A last farewell to his France has sent.
France, poor soldier, again to see!
There my boy has a shroud for me.

VI.

Grand in spirit and great in worth,
Why did a sceptre tempt his pride?
High above every throne on earth
Glows that peak in the waters wide;—
His glory's light as a beacon borne
To a world in its youth, and a world out-worn.
France, poor soldier, again to see!
There my boy has a shroud for me.

VII.

Hearts of Spain! what flickers on shore?
A banner of black? O Heaven! 'tis true!
He—and to die? Our Star no more!
Ah! you are weeping, his foes, e'en you.
Silent, far from the rock we fly:—
The sun is withered from out the sky.
France, poor soldier, again to see!
There my boy has a shroud for me.

JAMES ROBERTSON.

OBITUARY.

MR. ANDREW WILSON.

IT is with much regret that we notice the death of Mr. Andrew Wilson, on June 8, at Bank House, near the lower end of Ulleswater. The world knew him best as the author of that most interesting of Indian travel books, The Abode of Snow; but we may perhaps be allowed to say here that he was a valued and, when his health permitted, a regular contributor to the ACADEMY. Unhappily, for many years past his health had been extremely bad, nor did he derive much benefit from a visit he paid last autumn to Normandy. In April of the present year he wrote:—

"I have been very and distressingly ill with what the doctors have discovered to be disease of the mitral valve of the heart—a disease that repeatedly put me through a process which convulsed my whole frame, and which I can compare to nothing so well as being hanged slowly, and then being cut down before the operation was quite completed."

Nothing could be more characteristic of the man than the way in which he here describes his own sufferings. In May he wrote again, forwarding the article on Mr. Keene's Meccah which appeared in the ACADEMY of June 4, and of which he was with difficulty able to correct a proof. We believe that this was his last piece of literary work. He then said that he "had been pulled back by the same change of weather that carried off Lord Beaconsfield." Perhaps the unseasonable cold with which last week began may have hastened his death; but, though he sometimes deceived himself, his friends knew that he had not long to live. A born traveller, he would often say that he wished to end his days in the heart of Central Africa. We quote from the Times, which says that he was fifty-one years of age, the following notice of his literary career:—

"Mr. Andrew Wilson commenced his literary career as a writer for the Bombay Times. Circumstances led him subsequently to return to England, where he became a contributor to Blackwood's Magazine—a literary connexion which was maintained during the remainder of his life. When about thirty years of age, he became editor of the China Mail, and he accompanied the Pekin Expedition to Tientsin. He travelled a great deal in the South of China from time to time, and by living among the natives as one of themselves he obtained a knowledge of the people such as few foreigners possessed, and was eminently fitted for the task which was afterwards entrusted to him of writing the history of the Taiping Rebellion and chronicling the deeds of Colonel Gordon's 'ever-victorious army.' This work was done in England. Mr. Wilson afterwards travelled a great deal on the continent of Europe, and a series of articles on Switzerland which appeared in Blackwood attracted a good deal of notice. Some eight or nine years ago he returned to India, and edited for a time the Star of India and the Bombay Gazette; but the impulse of travel was so strong upon him that in 1874, when he was on his way to Simla to recruit his health, he felt impelled, on beholding the snow-clad peaks of the Himalayas, to undertake a journey into the upper valleys of the 'abode of snow.' At the time, he was physically unfitted for such an arduous undertaking, as he was unable to walk a hundred yards or mount a horse; but he organised a party of native bearers, by whom he was carried in a dandi; and, unaccompanied by any European, he completed his journey from Simla to the borders of Chinese Tibet, and thence along the whole line of the Western Himalayas. His way lay through valleys for the most part 12,000 feet above the level of the sea, and sometimes reaching to an altitude of 18,000 feet. At times he had to travel along narrow goat-paths or ledges of deep precipices, across immense glaciers, and over rough blocks of granite and treacherous slabs of slate. But no danger or difficulty daunted him, and the graphic narrative of his wanderings in those remote regions, and his graceful descriptions of the snowy solitudes of the 'stony girdle of the earth,' made his Abode of Snow a most fascinating book.

We learn from the Carlisle Journal that Mr. Wilson was the son of the late Dr. Wilson, of Bombay, the celebrated Free Kirk missionary, and that, being originally intended for the ministry, he received his education at Edinburgh University, and subsequently at Tübingen.

THE REV. E. RICHMOND HODGES.

A GENUINE student was lost to us in the Rev. E. Richmond Hodges, who died, at the age of fifty-five, on the 9th of last month. While an apprentice in London, Mr. Hodges fell across an old Hebrew grammar, which fascinated the lad's mind and made him determine to be become a Semitic scholar. The result was that, after acting as scripture reader for a short time, he was sent by the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews first to Palestine, then to Algeria, which he did not leave until 1856. A few years afterwards he found himself compelled to resign his connexion with the society, and was thus able to devote himself more fully than before to his linguistic studies. He was for some time a minister of the Reformed Episcopal Church, but two or three years ago was ordained a clergyman of the Established Church of England. Mr. Hodges was specially known as a student of Oriental languages. His first literary work, we believe, was one on Ancient Egypt, published in 1851; about this time he also wrote another book, entitled Conversations with an Atheist, which, however, does not appear to have seen the light. In 1863 he brought out a new and revised edition of Craik's Principia Hebraica—a fact which has escaped the notice of Mr. Craik's biographer, Mr. Elfe Tayler—and later on he assisted Dr. Gotch in the Old Testament portion of the work known as The Holy Bible in Paragraphs and Sections, with Emendations of the Text, though his share in the work was not acknowledged in the Preface. The new edition of Cory's Ancient Fragments, which he prepared in 1876, will be fresh in the minds of our readers; and at the time of his death he was engaged upon An English Version of the Armenian History of Moses of Khorene, besides being on the point of bringing out a lecture on The Worship of Mithras, illustrated with engravings, more especially of the objects found at Rome in 1870. He had already published a revised version of Julius Mickle's English translation of Camoens'

Lusiad in 1877. Mr. Hodges' contributions to what may be termed serial literature were many and various. He was the author of the article on American Languages in the new edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, as well as of fourteen articles on languages in the Supplement to the English Encyclopædia; and the fourth volume of the National History of England contains a series of sketches of the progress of the arts and sciences from his pen.

PROF. B. A. DOHRN, a distinguished Oriental scholar, died lately at St. Petersburg. He was born in 1805, studied theology at Halle and Leipzig, but afterwards turned his attention exclusively to the languages of the East. In 1826 he was appointed Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Kharkov. Six years later, he was called to the Chair of Asiatic History and Geography in the Oriental Institute at St. Petersburg, which he resigned in 1843 to become senior librarian of the Imperial Public Library. Prof. Dohrn published, in 1846, Das asiatische Museum der kaiserl. Akademie der Wissenschaften, and in 1852 Catalogue des Manuscrits et Xylographes orientaux. His last undertaking was an elaborate work on the migrations of the ancient Huns in Tabaristan.

THE death is announced at New York of Mr. William Ross Wallace, the American poet, in his sixtieth year. Although a native of Kentucky, he had Scottish blood in his veins, and frequently wrote stirring poems upon Scottish subjects.

THE widow of the poet Uhland has just died at Stuttgart, in her eighty-second year. She wrote a biography of her husband, whom she survived nineteen years.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

The Antiquary. June 1881. (Elliot Stock.) This number of the Antiquary is not quite up to the mark of its immediate predecessors; we miss articles giving absolutely new knowledge on historical subjects. There are, however, several good second-rate papers. Mr. Brailsford's account of the Nevill Monuments at Staindrop is interesting, as they are historical records, in stone, of a high degree of importance. Mr. Gomme discourses on field names which relate to allotments to village officers. He gives two instances of fields which show that the village piper had an allotment of land in some places. This is new to us. We, however, know more than one instance of small enclosures being called pepper close. This strange name we have thought may have originated from a peppercorn rent having been paid for the land, but this is for several reasons unlikely. It is much more probable that, when the name became unintelligible to the rustics, piper became in their mouths pepper. Mr. Gomme is known as our highest authority on this kind of lore. It is much to be wished that he would give us a dictionary of field names; such a collection would be very imperfect at first, but would grow from year to year. Mr. Hewlitt furnishes some strange medical recipes and other kindred matter from the treasures of the Record Office. The constitutions of our ancestors must indeed have been strong when they survived the medical treatment which these extracts reveal. Mr. Britten does good service by reviewing M. Eugène Rolland's Faune populaire de la France. We have read the two first volumes, but the third we have not yet seen. We can confirm in every particular the high terms of praise Mr. Britten gives. M. Rolland's book is, we believe, one of the most useful books on folk-lore that has ever been produced.

THE Revista de Ciencias Históricas appears in its new bi-monthly form for April and May. As usual, it is full of interest for archaeologists.

Julian de Chía opens with notes on the Dukedom (1351) and Principality (1416) of Gerona, created to furnish a title to the heir of the Aragonese monarchy. An interesting paper by Rubio y Lluch extracts details of the Catalan settlements in Greece and the Levant from the history of Chalcocondylas, a Greek writer of the fifteenth century. From the continuation of the Life of Don Pedro, the Constable of Portugal, by Balaguer y Merino, we learn that in 1466 he was a suitor for the hand of Margaret, sister of our Edward IV. Padre Fita gives a further instalment of the Supplements to Larramendi's Dictionary; and Señor Girbal concludes his inventory of the Treasure of the Cathedral of Gerona in the sixteenth century. In numismatics we have a paper by Pujol y Camps on the Roman coins lately found at Segaro; and another on the Keltiberian coins of Hispania Citerior, with illustrations. The editor has also an excellent illustrated description of the Nuraghi of Sardinia, maintaining that they were dwellings and not tombs. From a private communication we find that we somewhat misrepresented his views in our last compte-rendu. He does not think that the dolmens were the work of the Iberi, but that they are 'the expression of an epoch in civilisation, not of a people.'

In the Revista Contemporanea of May 30 Señor Diaz Cobeña draws a parallel between the treatment of jealousy in Shakspeare's Othello and in Calderon's El mayor Monstruo los Celos; the preference is given to the more idealistic treatment of the latter. Becerro de Bengoa tells the history of the Genoese establishment on the Island of Tabarka off the coast of Tunis, from the sixteenth to the eighteenth century, and also gives the text of the charter of privileges of the Spanish Redemptist Fathers at Tunis in 1720. Señor Foradada briefly sketches the romantic career of Pedro de Alvarado, the companion of Cortez. The conclusion of Villamil y Castro's papers on the prosperity of Galicia in the twelfth century from authentic documents is full of interest. A Montaberry deals with the same period under guise of fiction in his 'Juventud dorada.' The Monetary Conference of 1881 is discussed by Señor Sanromá.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BANES, J. F. Index Geographicus Indicus. Stanford. 21s.
 BURKE's Letters and Papers on Irish Affairs. Ed. Matthew Arnold. Macmillan. 6s.
 COLQUHOUN, J. A. S. With the Kurram Force in the Cabul Campaign of 1878-79. W. H. Allen & Co. 16s.
 FABBETTI, A. Dell' antica Città d' Industria detta prima Bordinomago e de' suoi Monumenti. Torino: Loescher. 12 fr. 50 c.
 SYMONDS, J. A. Renaissance in Italy: Italian Literature. Smith, Elder & Co. 32s.
 TORMA, K. Amphitheatri Aquinensis pars septentrionalis. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 4 M.
 WINSTANLEY, W. A Visit to Abyssinia. Hurst & Blackett. 21s.
 WINTER, ein, in Griechenland 1879-80. Leipzig: Teubner. 2 M.
 YHLEN, G. V. Die Seefischerei an der Westküste Schwedens. Gothenburg: Pehrson. 4 M. 50 Pf.

THEOLOGY.

- ATHANASIUS, St., Historical Writings of. With Introduction by W. Bright, D.D. Clarendon Press. 10s. 6d.
 KREIM, Th. Rom u. das Christenthum. Hrg. v. H. Ziegler. Berlin: Reimer. 10 M.
 LIPPERT, J. Die Religionen der europäischen Culturvölker, der Litauer, Slaven, Germanen, Griechen u. Römer, in ihrem geschichtlichen Ursprunge. Berlin: Hofmann. 8 M.

HISTORY.

- ARBUTHNOT, Sir A. Selections from the Minutes and other Official Writings of Major-Gen. Sir Thomas Munro, Bart., K.C.B., Governor of Madras. O. Kegan Paul & Co. 30s.
 CODEX diplomaticus Hungaricus Andegavensis. Ed. J. Nagy. Vol. 2. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 10 M.
 FASTI consulares inde a Caesaris nece usque ad imperium Diocletiani. Compositi J. Klein. Leipzig: Teubner. 4 M.
 GARDINER, S. R., and J. BAS MULLINGERS. Introduction to the Study of English History. O. Kegan Paul & Co. 9s.
 MADVIG, J. N. Die Verfassung u. Verwaltung d. römischen Staats. 1. Bd. Leipzig: Teubner. 12 M.

MONUMENTA oemittalia regni Hungariae. Ed. V. Franknöl. Vol. 7. Leipzig: Brockhaus, 8 M.
PLANTA, P. O. v. Die curritischen Herrschaften in der Feudalzeit. 1. Lfg. Bern: Wiese, 2 M.
REINKENS, J. H. Melchior v. Diepenbroek. Ein Zeit- u. Lebensbild. Leipzig: Fernau, 8 M.
SCHENK, E. Die Lösung der Wallensteinsfrage. Berlin: Hofmann, 12 M.
SILVANI, D. La Corte e la Società romana nei Secoli XVIII. ed. XIX. Vol. I. Torino: Loescher, 5 fr.
WACKENAGEL, R. Rechnungsbuch der Froben u. Episcopius. Buchdrucker u. Buchbinder zu Basel 1557-64. Basel: Schwabe, 10 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

HARNACK, A. Die Elemente der Differential- u. Integralrechnung. Leipzig: Teubner, 7 M. 60 Pf.
KILLIAS, E. Die Schmetterlinge Graubündens. Chur: Hitz, 3 M.
LUBBERS, Ch. Medicinisch-pharmaceutische Botanik. 17. Lfg. Leipzig: Haessel, 2 M.
PFYFFER, W. Pflanzenphysiologie. Ein Handbuch d. Stoffwechsels u. Kraftwechsels in der Pflanze. 1. Bd. Der Stoffwechsel. Leipzig: Engelmann, 8 M.
REICHENAU, W. v. Die monistische Philosophie v. Spinoza bis auf unsere Tage. Köln: Mayer, 7 M.
RUPERTSBERGER, M. Biologie der Käfer Europas. Linz: Fink, 6 M.
SAMMELNÖRN, die anthropologischen. Deutschlands. Berlin. 1. Thl. Zusammenge stellt v. G. Broesike. Braunschweig, 7 M. 20 Pf.
WARNSTORF, C. Die europäischen Tortmoose. Eine Kritik u. Beschreibung derselben. Berlin: Grieben, 3 M.

PHILOLOGY.

ARCHIMEDIA opera omnia cum commentariis Eutocii. Ed. J. L. Heiberg. Vol. 2. Leipzig: Teubner, 6 M.
BROCK, S. Studien üb. die Entstehung der nordischen Götter- u. Helden-sagen. Uebers. v. O. Brenner. 1. Reihe. 1. Hft. München: Kaiser, 2 M.
DOORNKAAT-KOOLMAN, J. ten. Wörterbuch der ostfriesischen Sprache. 12. Hft. Norden: Braams, 2 M.
KLOTZ, R. De numero dochmiacae observationes. Leipzig: Teubner, 1 M.
RIBBECK, O. Friedrich Wilhelm Ritschl. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Philologie. 2. Bd. Leipzig: Teubner, 12 M.
SEBASTI Grammatici qui feruntur in Versili carmine commentarii. Recensuerunt G. Thilo et H. Haagen. Vol. I. Fasc. 2. Leipzig: Teubner, 10 M.
THUCYDIDES. Translated into English, with Introduction, Notes, &c., by B. Jowett. Clarendon Press, 32s.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"THE EVIL ONE" OF THE REVISERS.

Bodleian Library: June 10, 1881.

In the discussion about the change made by the Revisers in introducing "the evil one," I see that no notice has been taken of the excellent excursus on the Lord's Prayer by the Rev. Dr. J. Ch. Taylor, Master of St. John's College, Cambridge, inserted at the end of his edition and translation of the earliest Rabbinical collection of ethical sentences, entitled Sayings of the Jewish Fathers.

The learned author adopts the right method when he seeks to discover what the original Hebrew or Aramaic may have been for the words ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ. He is surely right in supposing that "the original form of the petition can scarcely have been min hara, 'from the evil.'" But I do not agree with him that it may have been yetsen hara, or yitsra bisha; for, if so, the Greek translation would have represented it by two words. It cannot be doubted, from expressions in the New Testament, such as Talitha cumi (Mark v. 41), and more especially lama sabachthani (Matt. xxvii. 46), that Christ talked and prayed in the Aramaic dialect, spoken at the time in Galilee, as well as among the common people at Jerusalem. The Aramaic original of ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ seems to have been מִן בִּישָׁא, which can be translated "from evil," "from the evil," but in no case "from the evil one." The Rabbinical schools most probably represented it by the word מִרְעָה (Ps. xxvii. 27), "from evil," of which the following prayer by Rabbi [Jehudah], the compiler of the Mishnah, is an amplification. I quote Dr. Taylor's translation:—

"May it be thy will, O Lord, our God, and the God of our fathers, to deliver us from the shameless, and from the shamelessness; from Evil man and from Evil hap [from Evil thought (yetsen), from Evil companion, from Evil neighbour, and from Satan the destroyer]; from hard judgment, and from a hard 'adversary,' whether he be a son of the covenant, or not a son of the covenant" (Babyl. Talmud, Berakhoth, fol. 16 b).

The words in brackets, I may mention, are omitted in MSS. of the Talmud, and in some earlier editions (see Rabbinowicz, Variae Lectiones ad Talm., &c., t. i.), and are not to be found in the prayer-book of the Eastern rite. I may add that the original short petition found in the Lord's Prayer still exists in the ritual of the Karaites, in which it stands as follows:—Veal thebienu lidey nissayyon umikkol pegaim raim hatsilenu, "And bring us not into the hands of temptation, but deliver us from all evil haps" (see the edition of Kala in the Crimea, 1805, t. i., p. 117). The word "temptation" in Talmudic literature does not refer to temptation by Satan, and "Evil" means in general all possible evil things. Anyhow, both Syriac translations have "from evil" or "from the evil," the Coptic has "from evil," and the Ethiopic (equally derived from the Greek text) has "from all evil," which would agree with the correct Hebrew expression—mikkol ra.

So many discoveries have been made during the last few years in the way of antiquities, inscriptions, and MSS. that we should not be much surprised if the original of the Gospel according to the Hebrews should turn up one day either entire or in fragments. If so, we may yet have the opportunity of learning what the original was of ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ.

A. NEUBAUER.

BISHOP LEOFRIC'S MSS., FORMERLY AT EXETER.
St. John's College, Oxford: June, 1881.

May I appeal through your columns for assistance in discovering the locality of the sixty-one MSS. which are known, on contemporary authority, to have been given by Leofric, first Bishop of Exeter, to the library of that cathedral A.D. 1050-73?

The following list of them is written, in an eleventh-century hand, on a fly-leaf of an Evangelium in the Bodleian Library (D. ii. 16 auct.). It has been printed, not quite correctly, by Dugdale (Monasticon, ed. 1819, vol. ii. p. 527) and Wanley (Thesaurus, p. 80). (1, 2) ii fulle mæsse boc; (3) i collectaneum; (4, 5) ii pistol boc; (6, 7) ii fulle sang boc; (8) i nihtsang; (9) i ad te leuau; (10) i tropere; (11, 12) ii salteras; (13) se briddan saltero swa man singþ on rome; (14, 15) ii ymneras; (16) i deorwyðe bletsing boc; (17, 18, 19) iii oðre; (20) i englisc christes boc; (21, 22) ii sumer ræding boc; (23) i winter ræding boc; (24) i regula canonicorum; (25) i martyrologium; (26) i canon on leden; (27) i scrift boc on englisc; (28) i full spoc boc wintres 7 sumeres; (29) i boeties boc on englisc; (30) i mycel englisc boc be gewhileum þingum on leoðwisan geworht; (31) liber pastoralis; (32) liber dialogorum; (33, 34, 35, 36) libri iiii prophetarum; (37) liber boetii de consolatione; (38) isagoge porphyrii; (39) i passionalis; (40) liber prosperi; (41) liber prudentii psychomachio; (42) liber prudentii ymnorum; (43) liber prudentii de martyribus; (44) liber ezechieli prophete; (45) cantica canticorum; (46) liber isaie prophete on sundron; (47) liber isidoris othmologiarum; (48) passiones apostolorum; (49) expositio bede super euangelium luce; (50) expositio bede super apocalipsin; (51) expositio bede super vii epistolas canonicas; (52) liber isidori de nouo et ueteri testamento; (53) liber isidori de miraculis christi; (54) liber oserii; (55) liber machabeorum; (56) liber persii; (57) sedulius boc; (58) liber aratoris; (59) diadema monachorum; (60) glose statii; (61) liber officialis amalarii.

Of the above list, (3) is in the British Museum (Harl. 2961); (17?) (24) (25) and (27) are in C. C. C. C. (S. 2 12, D 5, L 12); (28) is in the Camb. Univ. Lib. (GG iii. 28); (1) (37) (41) (42) (43) (56) are in the Bodleian Library (MS. 579; Auct. F. 1, 15; Auct. F. iii. 6), having been presented to it in 1602 through the instrumentality of Sir Thomas Bodley, a native of Exeter; only one MS.—(30)—is still in the Library of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter.

Hampeon's statement that a Saxon Menology now in the Brit. Mus. (Julius A. x.) once belonged to Leofric is erroneous (Medii Oevi Kalender, i. 392).

Leofric's gifts generally have, probably all had, a colophon on the fly-leaf in Anglo-Saxon and Latin, containing the names of the donor and donee, and a malediction on anyone who should be concerned in the removal of the MS.

I append the inscription on fol. 1. a. of (1):—
"Hunc missalem Leofricus episcopus dat ecclesie sancti petri in exonia, ad utilitatem successorum suorum. Si quis illum inde abstulerit, eterne subiaceat maledictioni. Fiat. Fiat. Confirma hoc, deus, quod operatus es in nobis."

"Das hoc leofric bisceop gef sancto petro 7 eallum his æftergengum in to exancestre gode mid to þenienne. 7 gif hig ænig ut alrede, hæbb ne godes curs and wræððe ealra halgena."

No members of the Chapter of Exeter, past or present, are recorded to have been "one penny the worse" for this imprecation; but if there exists any literary "Jackdaw of Rheims" who has secreted one of these treasures, and the plumage of whose conscience is ruffled by this letter, he may be assured of "plenary absolution" from a grateful public if he will furnish any information as to its past history or present position.

Being engaged in transcribing (1) for publication, I am especially anxious to discover (2). Among the list of Mr. Bourscough's MSS. at the close of the seventeenth century, this entry occurs:—"7663, 44. 'Liturgia antiqua, eadem ut videtur, quam Leofricus Episcopus dedit ecclesiae S. Petri Exoniensi' (Bernard's Catalogue, A.D. 1697, p. 233)."

In 1705 Wanley, after a brief description of the Leofric Missal (1), adds:—"Alter autem nunc est peculium Rev. et doctissimi viri D. R. Bourscough, Rectoris ecclesiae de Toteness, in agro Devonensi" (Thesaurus, p. 82).

Mr. E. Bishop has supplied me with almost conclusive reasons for believing that Bernard and Wanley were mistaken, and that the MS. referred to by them as in Mr. Bourscough's possession is the Collectaneum (3), now in the British Museum.

It is, therefore, still just possible that the missing Missal is lurking in some library, or in the lumber-room of some old mansion in the city or neighbourhood of Exeter.

F. E. WARREN.

HEBREW MSS. AT THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

Virginia Water, Chertsey: June 15, 1881.

In his description of the Hebrew MSS. which Mr. Shapira collected in Yemen last winter, and which are shortly to be brought to England, Mr. Sayce remarks: "It would be a pity if the collection were allowed to go to Berlin like its predecessor." I am sure that Mr. Sayce and all students of the Hebrew text will be glad to hear that Mr. Shapira's former collection, or rather collections, did not go to Berlin, but are now safely deposited in the British Museum. Mr. Shapira brought to England two separate collections which he made in Yemen; the first, he brought in 1877. From this collection the heads of the MS. Department selected no less than forty MSS. Fifteen of these are Rolls of the Pentateuch, and the remaining twenty-five are mostly portions of the Hebrew Scriptures, some of them with the so-called superlineary or Assyrian punctuation. Among these is the ancient and important portion of the Pentateuch a page of which has been published by the Palaeographical Society in their Transactions, part iv., plate liv., 1879.

In 1879 Mr. Shapira brought over to England a second collection, which he also made in Yemen. Of these, the authorities in the British Museum selected fourteen MSS. The MSS., therefore, which found their way to Berlin are those which have been rejected here because they were either duplicates, which the Yemen MSS. often are, or because they were deemed unimportant after they were most carefully examined. These facts may be found stated in the Parliamentary Returns of 1879 and 1880.

Having worked at the Hebrew MSS. for many years in the British Museum in connexion with my edition of the Massorah, it is due to the heads of the Department to say that they have never refused to recommend the purchase of any Hebrew MSS. of importance. The foreign dealers who bring over these MSS., as a rule do not know much about their value, and often ask most extravagant prices. This renders it very difficult to deal with them; and the difficulty arising from their ignorance and their determination to bargain is greatly increased by notices in the public press of their collection which they entirely misunderstand.

CHRISTIAN D. GINSBURG.

PROPOSED REPRODUCTION OF THE "QUATRI-REGIO DEL DECORSO DELLA VITA HUMANA."

Woodbury, Biggin Hill, Norwood: June 12, 1881.

Many of your readers interested in early engravings know the 120 or more wood-cuts illustrating the Quatregio del Decorso della Vita humana, etc., Firenze, MDVIII. The book is very scarce; consequently impossible to be obtained, and, if it could be, only at a fabulous price.

Dr. Lippmann, Director of the Department of Prints, Berlin Museum, and myself have been considering the means of having it reproduced in facsimile. We find that 150 copies could be printed, on paper resembling an original copy, at the rate of a guinea a copy; and this, taking into consideration the size of the volume and its 200 pages, is a very reasonable sum. Intending subscribers can send me their names; to save trouble in distribution, we should prefer subscriptions for five or ten copies, but will not refuse single subscriptions.

HENRY WALLIS.

THE BIRTHPLACE OF WORDSWORTH.

London: June 15, 1881.

The biographies which have been until now issued of Wordsworth state that he was born at Cockermouth, in Cumberland. Having recently returned from that place, I am in a position to state that the antiquaries of the town have great doubts as to whether the poet was born there, and their doubts would seem to be strengthened by the fact that there is no record whatever of such a birth in any of the registers of the parish. Can any of your readers give me some additional information on this subject?

JOSEPH S. FLETCHER.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, June 20, 4 p.m. Asiatic: "The Duty Muhammadans, in British India, owe, on the Principles of their own Law, to the Government of the Country," by Mr. R. B. E. Baillie; "Extracts from Mr. O. P. Bell's Report on the Maldivo Islands," by Mr. Albert Gray; "The Sino-Indian Origin of the Lāt Alphabet," by M. de la Couperie. 7.30 p.m. Aristotelian: "Schopenhauer and Hartmann," by Mr. T. Fenton. 8 p.m. Education. 8 p.m. Victoria Institute.

TUESDAY, June 21, 7.45 p.m. Statistical: "The English Stations in the Hill Regions of Iocia: their Value and Importance; with Some Statistics of their Products and Trade," by Mr. Hyde Clarke. 8.30 p.m. Zoological: "The Petrel called Thalassidroma nerei by Gould, and its Affinities," by Mr. W. A. Forbes; "Observations on the Habits of the Echidna hystrix of Australia," by Mr. George F. Bennett; "The Lizards of the genera Lacerta and Acanthodactylus in the British Museum," by Mr. G. A. Boulenger.

WEDNESDAY, June 22, 8 p.m. Royal Society of Literature: "The Genuine and Spurious in the Eddic Mythology," Part II, by Mr. O. F. Keary. 8 p.m. Geological.

FRIDAY, June 24, 8 p.m. Philological: "The Morphology of the Indo-Germanic Root," by Mr. T. Marshall, jun. 7 p.m. Quekett.

SATURDAY, June 25, 3 p.m. Physical: "Apparatus for Lecture Experiments on Current Induction," by Mr. W. Grant; "Results of Experiments with a Modification of Bunsen's Calorimeter," by Prof. Balfour Stewart and Mr. W. Stroud.

SCIENCE.

M. Tulli Ciceronis pro Gnaeo Plancio Oratio ad Iudices. Edited, with Commentary and Introduction, by the Rev. H. A. Holden, LL.D. (Cambridge University Press.)

CICERO's speech pro Plancio well deserves a place among those usually read at school or college. It is not, indeed, equal in power to some of the more famous orations, and it has not, of course, the historical importance of the Catilinarians or the Verrines. But it shows the orator in as favourable a light as any. We have the statesman of experience, sketching with a light but sure hand the caprices of the popular assemblies; the accomplished gentleman, making an effective defence for an acquaintance to whom he was under considerable obligations, without in any way giving just cause of offence to the (apparently) more intimate friend who was acting as prosecutor; the genuine humorist, narrating with admirable art a story, his enjoyment of which is in no way impaired by the fact that it tells against his own youthful vanity. When we remember, too, the light which this speech throws upon electioneering devices at Rome, and the numerous, but unsuccessful, attempts to foil them, we cannot help wondering at the comparative neglect into which it has fallen.

In one respect, however, this is less than Dr. Holden imagines. It is not quite accurate to say that "no separate edition of it has ever been published with English notes." An edition (not anonymous) was published some few years ago; but those into whose hands this fell will probably be of opinion that the credit of English scholarship has not suffered from its being thus ignored.

Dr. Holden's own edition is all that could be expected from his elegant and practised scholarship. Opinions will probably differ as to the scale which he has chosen for his annotations. Some will think fifty-four pages of Introduction and 175 of notes an over-liberal allowance for forty-two of text; and, doubtless, it would be inconvenient if all editions of any speech of Cicero's were to contain a full table of the principal events in his life, and tolerably complete biographies of men like Cato or Crassus. But Dr. Holden has evidently made up his mind as to the character of the commentary most likely to be generally useful; and he has carried out his views with admirable thoroughness. The student, reading by himself and without access to a good reference library, will be very thankful for his liberality; and it is in no case likely to do much harm. Large use is made of what all teachers of experience will acknowledge to be the most valuable form of commentary—frequent references to the best grammars; it is only to be regretted that Mr. Roby's School Grammar did not appear in time to be included among them. Dr. Holden acknowledges in the fullest manner his obligations to the editions of Wunder and Köpke. As the former has long been out of print, and is now as scarce as it is valuable, and as the latter, with its excellent Introduction, is written in German, his borrowings from these stores are hardly less an accession to the material at the command of the ordinary school-boy than his own contributions. The summary of the argument is very well done, and will be of great help in following the line of reasoning, in which it is not always easy to see the links. One curious assertion of Cicero's Dr. Holden allows to pass without comment, though it is certainly not without its difficulty. By the law under which Plancius was arraigned, the prosecutor was allowed to name the tribes from which the jury was to be selected. In this case tribes were named with which the defendant had no connexion whatever, and Cicero charges the prosecutor with having violated the spirit of the law, maintaining that the intention of the Senate in sanctioning (not surely, as Dr. Holden says, in passing) the law was that the tribes asserted to have been corrupted should be named, on the ground that a jury taken from these would be most likely to know the facts of the case. Apart from the probability that a jury so selected might contain some persons themselves bribed by the defendant—for even iudices were by no means superior to corruption—this reveals a point of view curiously at variance with that of the English law. So far from the jury being required to dismiss from their minds all previous impressions as to the case, and to judge on the evidence laid before them, it is actually made a matter of reproach to the prosecutor that he took pains to secure an unbiassed panel.

In the notes there are very few points to which exception can be taken. I doubt whether lubrica (§ 5) can fairly be explained "nerven;" there is nothing in the context, nor in the parallel passage referred to, which justifies a departure from the usual meaning. In the note on Congus (§ 58), it might have been noticed that his name is only restored by conjecture to the passage quoted from De Orat. i. § 256. In the note on § 84 the statement of the scholiast that Molon was a surname of Apollonius (followed in the Introduction, p. xlix.) should have been corrected in accordance with the statement of Strabo, who expressly distinguishes the two men. A note might well have been given on the use of frequenter in § 83—a use so rare in Cicero that even so unerring a scholar as Prof. J. E. B. Mayor (on Plin. iii. 1, 9) denies its occurrence. A curiously misleading ambiguity of expression occurs on p. xlix., where, under B.C. 82, we find "Birth of Terence." To Dr. Holden, of course, this name stands for P. Terentius Varro Atacinus; it is to be feared that many a school-boy may take it for the more familiar poet of the Andria.

It is one part of the critic's duty to hunt for egregio inspersos corpore naevos; it is a more pleasant part to acknowledge with gratitude first-rate work. And those are certainly happy who can read this brilliant speech with Dr. Holden's commentary instead of the praiseworthy, but tedious, quarto pages of Wunder, or the slipshod looseness of the ignored English annotator.

A. S. WILKINS.

Mathematical Psychics: an Essay on the Application of Mathematics to the Moral Sciences. By F. Y. Edgeworth. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

THIS book shows clear signs of genius, and is a promise of great things to come. It is called "An Essay on the Application of Mathematics to the Moral Sciences." But the moral sciences are various and vast; and a goodly volume might be filled with a mere enumeration of the openings which they offer for the use of mathematical language and mathematical method. The essay before us attempts no such task, but is mainly devoted to the fundamental problem of the mathematical rendering of the "Calculus of Pleasure;" and this is regarded from two points of view, as the "Economic Calculus" and as the "Calculus of Utilitarian Ethics."

The discussion of this problem is introduced by an argument tending to show that "mathematical reasonings are possible without numerical data." It is well put, but there is a certain air of unreality about all such arguments. To a person who thinks that mathematics are a complex kind of arithmetic, a sort of highly involved double rule of three, argument is useless. While to a person who does know the meaning of the terms used, it seems but a truism to say, in words which Mr. Edgeworth quotes from Cournot:—

"L'une des fonctions les plus importantes de l'analyse consiste précisément à assigner des relations déterminées entre des quantités dont les valeurs numériques, et même les formes algébriques, sont absolument inassignables."

The real question is not whether it is possible, but whether it is profitable to apply mathematical reasonings in the moral sciences. And this is a question which cannot be answered a priori; it can be answered only from the experience of those who make the attempt. When a man has cleared up his mind about a difficult economic question by mathematical reasoning, he generally finds it best to throw aside his mathematics and express what he has to say in language that is understood of the people.

The general aim of Mr. Edgeworth's "Economic Calculus" is to investigate the conditions under which the terms and extent of a contract between two people can be determined beforehand, the utility to each of them of the things with regard to which the contract is made being known. He considers this problem—firstly, when each of the two dealers stands alone; and, secondly, when he is one of a number of competing dealers. He supposes that if X. exchanges an amount x of his commodity for an amount y of the commodity which Y. has to dispose of, the total gratification which X. will get from what is left of his commodity after subtracting x from it, together with that which he will get from an amount y of the other commodity, may be represented by

$P = F(x, y)$. This total gratification he calls, rather awkwardly, "the utility of X." In like manner he represents the utility of Y by $\Pi = \Phi(xy)$. He then seeks for "the contract curve"—that is, the locus of points corresponding to contracts, which, when once made, are settlements, in this sense that no change of the terms can be proposed which will be acceptable to both parties; its equation is, of course,

$$\frac{dP}{dx} \cdot \frac{d\Pi}{dy} - \frac{dP}{dy} \cdot \frac{d\Pi}{dx} = 0.$$

This equation is, as Mr. Edgeworth points out, almost the same as Mr. Jevons' celebrated equation of exchange. But he gives it a new interpretation, and applies it to new uses; and by reasonings which, partly from the frequent use of unexplained metaphor, are rather hard to follow, he deduces a list of cases in which the terms of contract are unstable or indeterminate. He argues, for instance, in one of his numerous appendices, that contracts between employers and workmen, and between Irish landlords and cottier tenants, are not generally made under the conditions which enable the terms of the contract to be determined beforehand; the terms depend to a great extent upon the advantageous position with regard to bargaining, and the skill in bargaining, of the several parties concerned. This is, of course, not entirely new, but it is put in a new way.

His readers may sometimes wish that he had kept his work by him a little longer till he had worked it out more fully, and obtained that simplicity which comes only through long labour. But, taking it at what it claims to be, "a tentative study," we can only admire its brilliancy, force, and originality.

It will be interesting to watch the development of his theory, and, in particular, to see how far he succeeds in preventing his mathematics from running away with him, and carrying him out of sight of the actual facts of economics. For he has adopted a mode of expressing the problem of exchange which gives him at once a wide grasp and great freedom of movement, but which has the disadvantage of not being very easily translated so as to express the conditions of ordinary mercantile transactions. He takes barter as his typical bargain, and lets x and y represent, as we have seen, quantities of the two things bartered. No doubt this is the right way of treating some problems of international trade, and, what is nearly the same thing, of the trade between the members of different compact industrial groups, whether the groups are formally organised or not. But there are many reasons for thinking that the greater part of economic theory can be dealt with most easily by letting x represent the amount of the commodity dealt in, and y the price of the unit of that commodity expressed in the terms of money, which is supposed provisionally to have a uniform purchasing power. This method certainly lends itself most easily to the task of interpreting the past and directing the future of statistical enquiries—a consideration of the first importance. If, however, Mr. Edgeworth can prevent his theories from becoming too abstract he may do great things by them.

There is little room left to discuss his Calculus of Utilitarian Ethics; but this is the less to be regretted because the greater part of the substance of it has been published by him before. Suffice it that he starts from the position that different men have different capacities for happiness and different capacities for work, and applies mathematics with great originality and suggestiveness to the enquiry how work and wealth must be distributed so as to give the greatest possible happiness. Perhaps the problem which he attacks is incapable of a complete solution; but it may be safely said that no one can read his discussion of it without profit.

ALFRED MARSHALL.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

WE believe that Col. C. E. Stewart, B.S.C., will read a paper before the Royal Geographical Society on June 27 on his journey on the northern frontier of Persia and in Central Asia, to which we recently referred. Col. Stewart travelled in the disguise of an Armenian horse-dealer, and was thus able to move about with comparative freedom.

GENERAL THE HON. W. FEILDING, accompanied by Mr. J. Robinson, has just started for Brisbane to lead an exploring expedition, which is to survey the country between Roma, in the interior of Queensland, and the Gulf of Carpentaria.

In a recent letter from Banza Montiko, near the Yellala Falls of the Congo, Mr. Richards, of the Livingstone (Congo) Inland Mission, mentions that he had visited two towns a short distance off, where no European has hitherto been; he also learned that there were two others farther on, and he therefore thinks there must be a larger population in the district than was supposed. One of the towns visited, Mr. Richards describes as the "nicest African town" he has yet seen in the Congo region; it has a broad road, and the huts on each side are ranged almost in line, though detached from each other. A nearly straight row of trees is planted on each side of the road, and another line crossing it forms an archway. The people appeared more intelligent than their neighbours, but were very shy for some time.

ON February 26 we mentioned that the Rev. W. P. Johnson, of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa, had, for the first time, followed up the course of the Lujenda River in the direction of Lake Nyassa, which it seemed probable that he would have no difficulty in reaching. This he has at last done in a somewhat unexpected manner. Towards the end of last year he settled at Mwemba, Mataka's town to the eastward of the southern end of the Lake, and appears to have been well received. Some time back, we learn, the Gwangwara had made a raid on Mataka's country, and carried off almost the whole of the cattle and crops. Provisions became exceedingly scarce, and Mr. Johnson had difficulty even in getting native food. His health gradually suffered, and, having unfortunately poisoned his hands when attending to some natives, he resolved to communicate with Livingstonia, as he had no medicines left. Accordingly, on February 11, Dr. Laws, much to his surprise, received a letter from him, and, as we gather, went to meet him at Mlabwe. Mr. Johnson was taken to Livingstonia, where his health rapidly improved under careful treatment, and he hoped to return very shortly to Mwemba.

It is announced that the second volume of Dr. Nachtigall's work on the Sahara and the Soudan will shortly be published.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Memoir of Dr. Broca.—The last number of the Journal of the Anthropological Institute, which, though dated in February, has only just been issued, opens with an admirable memoir of Paul Broca, from the pen of Mr. E. W. Brabrook, who was one of the Directors of the Institute at the time he prepared this obituary notice. The memoir strikingly sets forth the manner in which Broca struggled for permission to form the Anthropological Society in Paris, and subsequently to organise his School of Anthropology. Much interest will be felt in some of the letters which Broca addressed to his scientific friends in London, and which are here published. An excellent photographic portrait accompanies the memoir. We observe with pleasure that the Institute appeals to scientific men in this country to subscribe towards the Broca Memorial which is about to be erected in Paris.

MR. BERNARD QUARITCH has now ready a monograph on the Noctariidae, or family of sun-birds, by Capt. G. E. Shelley, author of A Handbook to the Birds of Egypt, &c. It is published in twelve parts quarto, with 120 coloured plates.

A BRIGHT comet, the appearance of which is announced from the Southern hemisphere, may be expected to become visible in our Northern latitudes in the course of next week. The first news of its appearance was received on June 2 in a mutilated telegram from Buenos Ayres. A telegram sent from the Cape on June 8, "Bright comet, June sixteen Gamma Orionis, June twenty-seven Beta Aurigae," renders it plausible that the comet may be looked for near the sun on the mornings of the latter part of the week, and that in the following week it will be above the Northern horizon.

IN the course of deducing the results of his zone-observations, Dr. Gould, at Cordoba, has come upon a very interesting case of large proper motion in the case of the star Lacaille 9,352, a star of 7.5 magnitude in the constellation Piscis austrinus, in right ascension 22h. 57m. 47s. and declination $-36^{\circ} 34' 3''$ for 1875. The annual proper motion of the star amounts to nearly seven seconds of arc, and is only a little less than that of the star Groombridge 1,830, the largest proper motion hitherto known, and discovered by Argelander forty years ago. Another case, of less amount, but in other respects even more interesting, has been brought to light by Prof. Schoenfeld at Bonn. It refers to the two stars Argol, Oeltzen, 14,318 and 14,320, stars of only the ninth magnitude, in right ascension 15h. 2m. 15s. and declination $-15^{\circ} 47' 5''$ and $-15^{\circ} 42' 5''$ for 1855, which have an annual proper motion common to both of not less than 3.7", which, in the case of stars five minutes asunder, is unique.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

MR. WHARTON, of Jesus College, Oxford, intends shortly to publish an etymological Greek Lexicon, giving a succinct account of the formation of all words (not being derivatives or compounds) found in Greek writers down to 300 B.C., followed by a systematic arrangement of the laws of Greek morphology. Special attention will be given to the loan-words, which form an important element of the Greek vocabulary.

THE great French Celtic scholar, M. d'Arbois de Jubainville, who is at present on a visit to Dublin to examine certain ancient MSS., has, we learn from the Revue Critique, recently collected and published (Paris: Larose) four papers upon the Senchus Mór, entitled Etudes sur le Droit celtique. After discussing the language and probable date of the Senchus Mór, he considers its contents under three heads—public assemblies, kings, and jurisconsults. We believe that M. d'Arbois hopes shortly to return to this country, with the object of inspecting the Ogham inscriptions in Wales.

AT a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, M. de Rosny read a paper upon a MS. which has recently been sent to him from Japan. He inferred from it two startling conclusions—first, that there existed in Japan in early times a primitive monotheism before the introduction of Chinese doctrines; second, that the Japanese possessed, also before the introduction of writing from China, an ancient alphabet of Indian origin.

Revue Egyptologique. II^e Année. No. 1. (Paris: E. Leroux.) M. Revillout begins his second volume with a further instalment of the Demotic Chronicle of Paris. Having last time translated and commented the more ancient prophecies relating to the period of Persian occupation,* he now gives us the later series, referring to the second uprising of the Egyptians against the Greeks—i.e., to that great national movement which, during the first twenty years of Ptolemy Epiphanes, kept all Middle and Upper Egypt in a perpetual ferment, spread northward as far as Lycopolis, and resulted (as M. Revillout has shown in the Zeitschrift f. ägypt. Sp.) in the local sovereignties of Harmachis and Ankhtu. The fine lines about Nectanebo I., which were at first sight taken for strophes of an historical epic, are given again with M. Revillout's latest interpretation. Despite the glosses of the ancient commentator, who distinctly states that the Pharaoh of the scene is King Nectanebo, and the time that of the second Persian invasion, M. Revillout is now of opinion that these glosses are to be regarded as a blind; that the period is the reign of Ptolemy Epiphanes; that for "the Medes" we are to read "the Greeks," and for Nectanebo, Harmachis. The text, when narrowly sifted, bears out this novel interpretation, which, however, only consummate scholarship, and a subtlety of apprehension which almost amounts to inspiration, could have enabled M. Revillout to divine. A curious light is thrown in this connexion upon the superstitions attaching to the insignia of royalty in ancient Egypt. The story of Tahuti, or Thouti, translated into English by the late C. W. Goodwin, and more lately into French by Prof. Maspero, showed how an inherent and irresistible force was supposed to reside in the staff of the Pharaoh, whether wielded by himself or another. We now learn that the pschent, or double crown, was endued with conscious, twofold, supernatural life. Disunited—as when a Ptolemy reigned at Alexandria and a Harmachis at Thebes—the red and white crowns languished for each other. They loved their legitimate heir, and they hated the usurper. They sighed; they hungered; they supplicated Amen in favour of the one upon whose brow they desired to shine in the splendour of union. For the crowns were not merely symbols of sovereignty; they were solar emblems, and partook of the divine essence. "Un Fragment de la Légende Osirienne," from the same hand, is founded on a passage from the Leyden hieratic papyrus No. 344, which purports to be a magical formula against serpent-bites, and is chiefly interesting as it gives evidence of being derived from an Osirian myth relating to the infancy of Horus. Next follow continuations of M. Revillout's articles on "Le Serment décisive," "Les Affres de la Mort chez les Egyptiens," and "Les Recits de Dioscore," to say nothing of a rich series of legal documents, including a deed of sale, a marriage contract, and two deeds for the endowment of temples, translated and commented by the same indefatigable scholar. The whole present number of the Review, in fact, with one exception, is again furnished by M. Revillout, that exception being an article entitled "Les Sarcophages D 5 et 7 du Louvre," in which the curious adventures of two wandering sarcophagi which were brought from Egypt to Marseilles in 1632, and, after many vicissitudes, now enjoy an honourable asylum in the Louvre, are told with some humour by M. Paul Pierret.

DR. FRITZ HOMMEL, who is already favourably known to Orientalists in this country, will publish shortly a work on the Semites and their Importance for the History of Culture, being the Introduction to a comprehensive encyclopædia of Semitic philology and antiquities.

THE second gathering of Scandinavian philologists will be held this year at Christiania, from August 10 to 13.

A SOCIETY has recently been founded in Sweden for promoting the study of Norse dialects and Norse folk-lore. A Review will be published, and monthly meetings will be held. The secretary is Prof. Sophus Bugge, of Christiania.

THE last number of the Hermathena (No. vii.) contains a series of emendations in Latin authors by Messrs. Tyrrell and A. Palmer. The latter also, in a paper on "Baehrens and the Codex Neapolitanus," maintains against Baehrens the superiority of this MS. to all others at present known. Some unedited conjectures of Markland on Catullus, Tibullus, and Lucretius are communicated by Mr. Stachelscheid. In "Horae Taciteae" Messrs. Church and Brodribb reply to the strictures of Mr. Nesbitt on their translation of the Histories of Tacitus. Mr. Bury contributes notes on the recently discovered Eleusinian inscription of 446 B.C. Mr. Tyrrell discusses the fragments of a Greek dramatist discovered on a papyrus of the second century B.C., maintaining that they are not by Euripides. Prof. Mahaffy has a short paper of notes on various points of Greek history and scholarship. Dr. Ingram makes remarks on some etymologies given in Liddell and Scott's Lexicon, and Dr. Maguire reviews Myers' translation of Pindar. Some remarks on Celtic literature and on the Brehon laws are contributed by Dr. Atkinson.

IN the two last numbers of Bursian's Jahresbericht, Egenolf reviews recent literature on the Greek grammarians, Schanz that on Plato, Susemihl that on Aristotle and Theophrastus. Similar reports are given by Brieger on Lucretius, by Wölfflin on Tacitus, by Heinze on the post-Aristotelian philosophy, by Lorenz on Plautus, by Eussner on the Roman historians with the exception of Tacitus, by Curtze on the exact sciences in antiquity, and by Reifferscheid on the history of Roman literature.

THE prix Delalande-Guerineau has been awarded this year by the French Academy to M. Jules Gilliéron for his two works upon the dialects of Canton Valais, entitled Patois de la Commune de Vionnaz, Bas-Valais, and Petit Atlas phonétique du Valais roman.

THE collection of Swedish popular songs originally published in 1814-16 by Geiger and Afzelius is now appearing in a new edition, revised and enlarged (Stockholm: Haeggstroem), under the title of Svenska Folkvisor, ny betydligt tillökad upplaga utgifven. Of nine parts, seven have already been issued.

THE Revue Critique for June 6 contains an elaborate review, by M. A. Barth, of Nilkanth Janardan Kirtane's edition of the Hamkhya Mahākāvya, published at the Bombay Education Society's Press.

* See the ACADEMY, April 16, 1881, No. 467.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY OF BIBLICAL ARCHAEOLOGY.—(Tuesday, June 7.)

SAMUEL BIRCH, ESQ., D.C.L., LL.D., President, in the Chair.—Mr. Theo. G. Pinches read some remarks upon the recent discoveries of Mr. Rassam. Aboo-habba is a site about sixteen miles south-west of Baghdad, and represents the Sippara (the principal seat of the Sun-god worship) of the inscriptions. The antiquities from this place are mostly from the temple of the Sun-god, called E-Barra. These consist of a stone about one foot high by nine inches wide, the earthenware trough or box in which it was kept, a mould which covered and protected part of the stone, and two cylinders bearing the name of Nabonidus. The stone contains a long inscription, and, at the top of the obverse, a representation of the shrine, in which a figure of the Sun-god is shown sitting. Above the shrine are two small figures, who seem to be guiding with cords the course of the sun, which stands on a kind of table below them. Servants of the Sun-god lead into his presence a worshipper, intended, most likely, for the king by whose order the stone was cut. The workmanship of the whole is very fine, and in perfect condition. The inscription, which covers the rest of the obverse and the whole of the reverse, begins by mentioning the wrong-doings of the Sutu, "a wicked enemy," who seem to have carried off the property of the temple of the Sun-god, and destroyed the sanctuaries. Simmas-Sigu, king at that time, asked for the restoration of the property, which was refused. Simmas-Sigu then began the restoration of the temple, entrusting the work to one Ekur-anna-ibassi, a man bearing the Akkadian title of gassu. The work was continued in the reign of E-Ulbar-sakin-sumi, but it remained for Nabu-aplaidin, King of Babylon, "the proclaimed of Marduk, the beloved of Anu and Bel, gladdener of the heart of A-edina, the man, the warrior, who attained to the kingdom, the bearer of the strong bow, the destroyer of wicked Sutu, who had made their sin great, he who made Turgis, of the land of Akkad, to found fortresses, establishing the altars," &c., &c. Then comes a long description of the repair of, and additions to, the shrine and temple, and the confirmation to the seed of Ekur-suma-ibassi of the guardianship of the sanctuary, now adorned with the image of the Sun-god, and with chased gold and bright crystal. Besides this, the king founded a shrine for the Sun-god in Bit-kar-zagina, beside the Euphrates, where victims were offered, and honey and wine bestowed. The inscription, which now becomes very difficult, speaks of the service of the temple, and the delivery of the stone, of which a copy was made, into the hands of certain men. The date "Babylon, month Nizan, 20th day, and 31st year of Nabu-aplaidin, king of Babylon," is then given, after which come the usual curses on those who should destroy, and blessings on those who should restore, the monument in question. During the course of years, however, the stone got broken, and was rivetted together with iron, most likely in the time of Nabopolassar, who made the earthen box in which to keep it, and the inscribed covering to protect the bas-relief. Later, Nabonidus repaired and adorned the temple, placing in its foundation the two clay cylinders recording the event. The bearing of this inscription upon Babylonian chronology was noticed, and some remarks upon the worship of the Sun-god, with special reference to Sippara, the principal seat of the worship, added.—After some notes by the President upon the newly discovered pyramid at Sakara, and a paper by Prof. E. L. Lushington upon the stèle of Mentuhotep, communications were read from the Rev. P. Le Page Renouf concerning a certain polyphonic hieroglyphic sign, which he read as hotep, and interpreted to mean "before;" and from Mr. Geo. Bertin, who suggested that both rhythm and rhyme are to be detected in Akkadian texts, the verses being divided into stanzas of twenty lines, each of five or six syllables.

FINE ART.

THE SPANISH AND PORTUGUESE EXHIBITION.

THE superb collection of Spanish and Portuguese ornamental art which has been brought together at South Kensington in a very short space of time is a remarkable instance of what power and will can do when they work together. The exhibition of 1851, if it has not had the same effect on politics, has at least produced international fellowship in matters of art, and no sooner was this project set on foot than king and queen, prince, ambassador, priest, custodian, collector, and connoisseur, set to work to give it the completest possible effect. H.R.H. Prince Leopold was the chairman of the general committee, and, at his request, their Majesties the Kings of Spain and Portugal gave their cordial support to the undertaking. Sub-committees in Spain and Portugal were appointed, and another in France, where art-treasures from the Peninsula have been eagerly sought for and studied of late years. The result has been that few, if any, important collections exist, except that at the Cluny Museum, which have not almost unreservedly been placed at the disposal of the authorities at South Kensington. The greatest number of contributions from Spain come from the Royal Armoury and the National Archaeological Museum of Madrid. From France the collections of the Baron Davillier and M. Spitzer afford the best specimens. From Portugal treasures have been sent by the King, the Cardinal Patriarch of Lisbon, the Academy of Fine Arts, and several cathedrals and convents.

In England, the extremely rich possessions of all kinds belonging to the Museum have been supplemented by the fine collection of Mr. Francis Cook, and articles of great interest and importance lent by the Queen and others too numerous to mention.

But, while we thank all who have in any way assisted towards the completion of the undertaking, we must not forget that it is to the authorities at South Kensington and to Mr. J. C. Robinson that the greatest praise is due. To him and them we owe the formation of our splendid collection before the Archaeological Museum at Madrid was born; and to him and to them (and in them we must include Sir Henry Cole, as well as Sir Philip Owen and Mr. Soden Smith) this exhibition is not the single result of an isolated effort, but one of many fruits of long labour specially directed to the advancement of knowledge and art for national purposes. Two other names also deserve a special mention. We have on more than one occasion called attention to the general neglect of Peninsular art and the enlightenment which we owe to the labours of Señor Riano and the Baron Davillier. To this exhibition the latter contributes some very valuable and beautiful specimens; and the catalogue is prefaced by the well-known essay by the former gentleman, which is the best introduction to the study of Spanish art which has yet been written.

The Visigothic treasure of the seventh century found at Guarrazar in 1858 is, we are glad to say, represented here. The wonderful votive crowns of the Kings Swinthila and Receswinth have not been spared from the Royal Armoury at Madrid and the Cluny Museum at Paris, but the National Archaeological Museum at Madrid has sent two arms of a cross with bold perforated and chased gold work and broad smooth jewels (35). Four pendants and three gold rings of Visigothic work will also be found in the case belonging to the Baron Davillier, and one of Mr. Aug. Franks' treasures is a covered bowl, probably of similar date and origin. As an example of early ivory carving, rich and intricate, and at the same time purely Byzantine in design, a crucifix now in the possession of the Archaeological Museum at Madrid is remarkable (41). It was presented by King Ferdinand and his Queen to the church of St. Isidoro of Leon in 1063. A still older Romanesque ivory casket comes from the same church (42). Of distinctly Moorish work, perhaps the most remarkable objects are the large wine jars like the famous Alhambra vase. One of these is that known as once belonging to Fortuny and now to M. Charles Stein; and the other, more perfect, comes from the Archaeological Museum at Madrid. From the latter institution also proceeds the singularly fine bronze lamp from the mosque of the Alhambra (40). Among many specimens of the skill of the Arabs pressed into the service of Christians none is more interesting than the mantle and biretta of the Infante Don Philip of Castile (thirteenth century), in the elaborate gold and silk ornamentation of which an Arabic word in Cufic characters is woven (69 and 70). These have been removed from the tomb of the Infante in Villacazar de Sirga to the Museum. The Queen's so-called "Armada flagon" is one of those historical pieces whose authenticity it is unpleasant to doubt; but we are afraid that the faith of the most ignorant and credulous will be shaken if they happen to observe, in another portion of the Museum, an exact reproduction of this handsome piece of plate labelled "English, eighteenth century." More interesting are some highly decorated arms lent also by her Majesty, one of which (a sword) was at one time supposed to have belonged to the Cid. The blade of this interesting weapon is said to belong to the sixteenth and the hilt to the fourteenth or fifteenth century. In M. Spitzer's collection will also be found some very interesting specimens of Spanish arms, among which are a steel mace damascened with gold, made for Henri II. of France by Diego Gaias, and a splendid iron shield embossed with Hercules and the Nemean Lion. From the Royal Armoury of Madrid come some splendid suits of armour made for Philip III., some fine old swords, and two very interesting leather shields embroidered with silver and silk (15-21). Among other articles of singular beauty as well as historical interest, are M. Spitzer's onyx cameo portrait of Philip II., and Lady Charlotte Schreiber's "Sternsee" jewel, presented by Charles V. to the Governor of Harlingen, Humalda by name, in gratitude for his warning of a tempest which engulfed the ship in which his Majesty had intended to cross the Zuiderzee. The name "Sternsee" (Star of the Sea) which Charles applied to Humalda on this occasion is inscribed on the jewel, and has since been borne by the descendants of Humalda. In exquisitely worked and elaborately enamelled and begemmed jewels of this class, badges, pendants, pectoral crosses, tiny reliquaries, &c., the exhibition is very rich. The finest collection is that of Mr. Francis Cook; but beautiful specimens belong to the Baron Davillier, Mr. F. Davis, and M. Spitzer. The last-named has also an exceptionally elaborate and dainty pomander.

It is, however, in gold and silver work that the Spanish and Portuguese have specially excelled. The large quantities of the precious metals obtained from their South American conquests no doubt stimulated the manufacture; but from the earliest times it seems to have been their favourite craft, and in richness of decoration and ornament their "plate," whether ecclesiastical or domestic, has never been surpassed. It is strange that scarcely any object of this class has been lent to this exhibition from Spain; but an exceedingly rich collection has been made in Portugal, which, together with the large number of fine specimens belonging to the South Kensington Museum, and those lent by French and English collectors, especially M. Spitzer and Mr. F. Cook, make a display which is truly magnificent.

It is said to be difficult to distinguish between Spanish and Portuguese work, and the countries were so long without any distinct political division that this is not remarkable. The fashion of attaching bells to the chalices and monstrances is, however, Lusian, and of this there are several fine examples. The possession of Goa in Hindostan also seems to have had a slight influence on some Portuguese work; and a very remarkable gold plateau, lent by the King of Portugal from the Palace of Ajuda, is decorated with palm-trees and elephants (88). Of the numerous paxes none is, perhaps, quite so elaborate or beautiful in its work as one in the style called after Don Manuel, which represents the Virgin and Child under a canopy of very rich flamboyant tracery. This marvellous piece of work is enriched with columns bearing saints in niches, surmounted by a cupola and a figure of God the Father (114). Interesting as showing a strange mixture of Gothic and Renaissance styles is a large monstrance (125); and among the chalices with large plain cups may be specially noticed one with a very singularly decorated knob with wire ornament and jewels. The processional crosses, monstrances, paxes, chalices, flagons, plateaux, &c., are so numerous and splendid that it is scarcely possible to make any selection of value in this article; but special attention may not be improperly given to those which are decorated with enamel. Of such articles the South Kensington Museum possesses two very beautiful circular plates with bold borders embossed with strange animals and wild men of the woods, and raised centres covered with figures in beautiful thin, transparent enamel (143 and 144-179). The Academy of Fine Arts at Lisbon sends a chalice (129) with base, and the Convent of Santa Clara, Evora, an exquisite nimbus with disks and leaves and angels similarly enriched. M. Spitzer has also a fine specimen of this beautiful method of adornment—viz., a silver-gilt plateau with a female head in enamel. Some of these are said to be Spanish, others Portuguese, and belong to the fourteenth and fifteenth century.

Another branch of art which reached the highest perfection of technical skill in the Peninsula was ecclesiastical embroidery, and nothing is more surprising that the splendid preservation of the copes, chasubles, frontals, and pulpit covers that are exhibited here. Such an opportunity has perhaps never arisen for studying magnificent specimens of such work, but it would stretch our article to inconvenient length to do more than call general attention to them. As specimens of minute and beautiful needlework, perhaps those which are hung in the same case as that containing the Guarrazar cross-arms are the most wonderful. They are of the sixteenth century.

The wisest manner of arranging such a heterogeneous collection of treasures as those at a museum like South Kensington may be open to discussion; but we think that the plan the authorities are now generally adopting, of arranging them according to the country of production, is that which will contribute most to general culture. The individuality of each nation is grasped even among a conflict of styles, and it is of more importance artistically, as well as historically, to be able to detect what is Italian from what is French in feeling, than the work of one century from that of another, for the study of art, and especially of decorative art, were barren but for the humanity behind it. Nothing could more show the value of such an arrangement than the present collection of Iberian art, in which styles, tastes, and even centuries are unusually mixed. Yet, though Peninsular art has been fed from sources too numerous to mention here, and shows perhaps less regard for purity of style than any other, it has a character of its own. The Christians in Spain and Portugal, though not original in the creative sense, have never been slavish imitators. Taking artistic ideas impartially from all sources—from friendly neighbours as from hated conquerors—they have not so much adapted as adopted the various tastes of the world. All that came to their net was fish, and they dressed it to suit their own luxurious palates. Partly, perhaps, from continual contact with Oriental and African races, and partly from other more recondite causes, one of which may be that the arts have come to them already matured by other nations, their tendency has always been to over-elaborate. To enrich what was already rich, to crowd with ornament what was already crowded, never to purge or refine, has been the aim of Iberian artists. The rebound from this extreme sensuousness even to the other extreme of asceticism is seen also in their religious art, in the pictures of Zurbaran and the statues of Cano; from the pleasures of this world to the fear of the next the pendulum swings, but the interspace of delicately graduated sentiment is little marked. Serious and strong in the pursuit whether of pleasure or salvation, frank and human, but seldom spiritual or fanciful, their work in any kind never sinks very low or rises to the highest.

Naturally, from the decorative character of this exhibition, the Peninsular delight in ornament is specially prominent here. With the exception of two enormous retablos and some carved and painted statuettes in wood, the work, whether for ecclesiastical or secular purposes, is mainly ornamental. The most remarkable of the statuettes is that of St. Francis of Assisi, ascribed to Alonzo Cano, now the property of M. Charles Stein, which, like that at the cathedral of Toledo described in Ford's Handbook, is "a masterpiece of cadaverous ecstatic sentiment." "On croirait voir une Zurbaran en sculpture," says the Baron Davillier in an article in the Gazette des Beaux-Arts, afterwards republished in book form under the title of Les Arts Décoratifs en Espagne. To a far earlier time belong the retablos, the older of which is the property of the South Kensington Museum, and is well known. The other belongs to Mr. J. C. Robinson, and was formerly in the cathedral of Ciudad Rodrigo, where it was much damaged by Wellington's bombs at the siege in 1811. The portion now exhibited consists of twenty-nine panels, each five feet in height by three feet seven inches in width, painted with scenes principally taken from the New Testament. The inspiration is Flemish, but the types of some of the faces and other details show that it was the work of Spanish artists. Its possessor thinks that four artists were employed, and that thirteen are by the hand of Fernando Gallegos, one of the greatest of the Spanish painters of the fifteenth century. It is impossible, at present, to do justice to these remarkable pictures, which are in excellent preservation, and distinguished by freshness of colour and minute finish. The recent researches of Señor Riano lend an interest to the specimens of Alcora ware, especially those imitative of Monstiers; but this and many other objects of interest, such as the glass and MSS., we must leave unnoticed.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

THE BLACK AND WHITE EXHIBITION.

THE presence of two clever drawings by her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales (605 and 606), and of some few works of great artistic merit, do not prevent this exhibition from being the least interesting yet held by the committee. The room is crowded with etchings we have seen before, and drawings for the illustrations of Punch and the publications of Cassell and Co., which, though very good of their kind, do not quite satisfy the desire for new impressions which is pardonable on entering a picture gallery. Of the rest, with scarcely an exception, the only works which rise above the level of mediocrity are contributed by foreigners.

If the interest of the exhibition is cared for by its promoters, they should show more personal zeal in contributions. It is not a good sign for the future that the names of Edward J. Poynter, R.A., H. S. Marks, R.A., Hubert Herkomer, A.R.A., Heywood Hardy, Hamilton Maccallum, and Paul Rajon appear in the list of the committee and not in that of the exhibitors. Now that the painter-etchers have started an exhibition of their own, the more original artists with the needle may be expected to desert the Black and White; and, unless our painters support it by sending their studies and sketches, it can scarcely fail to degenerate into an exhibition of reproductive and stale art. That this should be its inglorious termination we should much deplore, as the study of chiaroscuro and tone is much needed by our school; and such an arena is well fitted to encourage timid talent which does not dare colour, and to stimulate careful and correct design. Some of the most interesting work here is by hands little known—at least to us. The small head of Irene, for instance, by C. K. McCausland (472) shows a refined sense of character; and two drawings by W. B. Portescue (136, 403), in the manner of Millet, great promise. Nor is there any better drawing of the kind than Evening Gleam on the Lagoons, by F. C. Nightingale (7).

The names of J. W. Waterhouse, Walter Crane, Edgar Hanley, F. A. Hopkins, Joseph Clark, Samuel Read, S. T. Dadd, H. H. Johnston, Robert Macbeth, Colin Hunter, J. Tissot, F. W. Lawson, J. C. Dollmann, John O'Connor, H. H. Coudery, Henry Harper, and some others are guarantees for work of a certain quality; but there is nothing here by any of them which will in any way affect their reputations. Their contributions are fair specimens of their well-known skill, calling for no special remark; and, with the exception, perhaps, of a few of the book-illustrations before mentioned, and one or two etchings, the only English works which are specially interesting or accomplished may be counted on the fingers. One of these is the quaint drawing by the late W. Burgess, A.R.A., of St. Simeon Stylites (79), in the style of an early German wood-cut. Another is N. H. J. Westlake's severely beautiful design for a mortuary card (470); others, Francis Powell's fine charcoal study of Wind-tossed Waves (380), and some exquisite little illustrations by Henry Holiday. We are glad also to see here a good specimen of Carl Haag (312), but we fear that we cannot claim his perfect skill and fine feeling as altogether English.

The average level of interest in this exhibition is, however, greatly raised when we take into account the contributions from other countries.

Three works by Jimenez y Aranda (313, 377, 399) are specially important as showing that this clever painter of Spanish character is gifted with an imagination of unusual power. They are illustrations of a poem by D. G. Nutter de Avece, and called La Vision de Fray Martin. Although the poem is unknown to us, and the catalogue supplies no quotations, the scenes explain themselves. In one, the monk, at his seat in the choir, is seen surrounded by groups of skeletons, devils, and enchantresses, such as we are accustomed to see in pictures of the Vision of St. Anthony. Behind him, and whispering in his ear, stands the arch-trempress, a female figure of more strength, perhaps, than beauty. Strongly contrasted with this world of devilry are the solemn rows of his brother monks kneeling in their stalls, who, with their varied expressions of devotion, dullness, and sensuality, recall the companions of The Neophyte of Gustave Doré. In the second (or what we suppose is the second, for the pictures, with singular carelessness or stupidity, are not hung together) the devil has "taken him up into a high mountain," and shows him a vision of ecclesiastical preferment, from the dull round of monkish life to the pomp of the Papal chair. In the third is shown the ruin of his ambition. He lies prone on the ground, which is strewn with shattered columns; while above, against a background of mountains, flies, with shouting mouth, his triumphant temptress. It is, of course, more than probable that we may be not altogether correct in our interpretation of these remarkable designs, but our description will at all events give some notion of their great power. If it were only for their technical qualities (they are in chalk), they would be worthy of special attention. A collection which contains drawings by M. Léon Lhermitte is sure, on this account alone, to be worth seeing; and the present contains some of his choicest work. He gives us the interiors of a carpenter's shop, a printer's, a lecture-room, and a church, besides two sunny market scenes. Our preference is for L'Imprimeur, which is unusually powerful. We give the foremost place to these works rather than to the large cartoon by Adolph Pichler of The Death of Jacob—a composition of life-sized figures, well disposed and lighted. The expressions and types of Jacob's sons are well distinguished, but the work as a whole is uninteresting, and academic. What appears to us to be the best piece of domestic comedy here is also foreign—viz., Le Fils unique, by Paul Jazet. The pose and expression of the house-keeper, and the drawing of the host stretching across the table to fill his guest's wine-glass, are admirable. Perfect also in its way is the etched head of Un Raffiné (14), by L. Leloir. The landscapes of Achille Dien, a beautiful drawing of Aénone by B. Lemon (460), and a fine study of lamplight by A. Lebourg (431) are also valuable contributions.

The etchings are, as usual, numerous and good, though not a few of the usual contributors are absent. The most remarkable are perhaps two very large ones by Bracquemond (166, 378), one of which is a portrait of M. Edmond de Goncourt. The "first states," exhibited side by side with the finished impressions, are instructive as showing how laborious and intellectual is the process by which alone certainty of effect can be obtained in such large and complicated plates. Of other etchings we can only mention the numerous and beautiful contributions of the American artist, Stephen Parrish. There are very few men besides Mr. Seymour Haden who have so thoroughly the pure etcher's gift, and know so surely how to limit their effects to those most fit for expression by the needle.

C. M.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

ON June 2 Mr. George Aitchison was elected to the associateship of the Royal Academy vacant by the death of Mr. William Burges. We have nothing to say against Mr. Aitchison, who is at least as good a man as some of his new colleagues, but we should like to know what he has done that he should be chosen over the heads of so many of the best architects of the day. To mention only two, there is Mr. Butterfield, the best man now living of the first Gothic movement; and Mr. Bodley, the real leader of its later development. The former should have had precedence of every present architectural member of the Academy, and the latter of all except Mr. Street. The best architecs are not generally men who thrust themselves into notoriety, and it is natural that the busy world should often not know who they are. But this is no excuse for the Royal Academy, who are entrusted by the public with the recognition of artistic merit, and it is their duty to find out how the honours of which they are the trustees may be most worthily bestowed. The great numerical majority of the painters puts the elections entirely into their hands; and if they know so little of the sister art as not to be able to select the best men in it, or even to tell a good architect from a bad one, they should at least take the advice of someone who does know, and not distribute their patronage haphazard to their personal friends, or to anybody whose name happens to be for the time conspicuously before the world. If anyone will take the trouble to go through the names of the architects who have been Academicians during the last fifty years, he will find there the names of some good men, but will miss many of the best, and find not a few who ought never to have been there at all. Just now the list is better than usual; but it appears to be so only by accident. And it is no marvel that the initials R.A. are not much coveted by architects except by those who want them for trade purposes.

At the request of the King of Bavaria, a detailed and richly illustrated description of the art treasures at Hertford House, in London, and in the Château de Bagatelle, near Paris, filling two volumes, has been compiled by the German art-historian, Dr. J.-P. Richter. On the completion of the work, the Order of St. Michael (first class) was conferred on the compiler.

SIR NOEL PATON has just completed an alto-relievo, which is to be cast in bronze, as a decoration for the new reading-room that has been recently added by Sir Peter Coats to the free library and museum which he presented to the town of Paisley several years ago. The subject of the work is indicated by the text from the Vulgate which is inscribed on an upper space of the background—Odientes malum, adhaerentes bono. In the centre we see the human soul imaged as a figure in the full vigour of young manhood, half-clad in the skins of wild beasts, led into his wilderness to be tempted, but not unministered to of angels. He stands erect, resisting the blandishments of the lower nature, personified as a fair female figure, lightly draped, rose-crowned, and with long flowing hair, who appears to the left waving aloft in one hand the deadly smoking cup of her enchantments, and with the other stretched forth to seize him. With his left arm he repels the tempting apparition, and his right hand is held in the grasp of an angel who hovers above, over-arching him with her extended wings. His left foot crushes a great serpent that coils on the ground beside the impure pleasure; his right limb is extended in a strenuous attitude, its foot set upon a rock—the first of a series of ascending ledges which stretch away into the distance—on which springs a tall white lily, emblematic in its whiteness of the initial requirement of the higher human life, of the "clean hands and pure heart" which are needful to him who would climb the Hill of God. The figures are admirably modelled, with much beauty of form, expressiveness of feature, and vigour of action; the whole subject is full of the elevated and imaginative thinking which is characteristic of all the artist's works.

SIR NOEL has also been engaged during the last year upon a large canvas, dealing with one of those symbolic scenes which have of late mainly occupied his pencil. The title of the present picture is Faith arming the Christian Warrior. The two life-sized figures are seen in an upper chamber—chapel-like in its architecture and fittings. Through a window to the left we have a glimpse of outer things: the spired pinnacle of a turret points with silent finger to the peace and quietude of the evening heavens, to their russet clouds and clear space of pale greenish sky with the steadfast shine of a single star in its midst. But in the street beneath there are strife and battle; rising from it we see thick drifts of murky smoke, and the fierce, ruddy glow of flames, which is reflected on the armour of the Christian within, who must presently descend into the midst of the tumult, there to play the man. He stands, grave and resolute of visage, clad in full panoply of plate and chain-mail, adjusting the straps of the shield which his left arm carries. Beside him kneels the figure of Faith girding on his sword—a woman-form, with a face (which is seen in profile) of a sweet and noble beauty, golden-haired, clad in drapery of pure white, and furnished with great pinions of a soft dove colour. The figures are relieved against curtains of green; on one side is an altar with a crucifix and the bread and chalice of the Sacrament; on the other, is a prie-Dieu richly draped with red and gold embroidery, and with an antique copy of the Scriptures lying open upon it. The subject is grandly conceived and wonderfully rich in the details of its symbolism. It is well advanced towards completion, and bids fair to be one of the most impressive of the artist's works.

MR. W. THOMPSON WATKIN has now ready for the press one of the most important works that have recently appeared upon the history of Roman rule in Britain, entitled Roman Lancashire. He has here brought together the many scattered records which exist of discoveries of Roman antiquities in the county of Lancaster, and he has engraved every article of interest now extant, including altars, tablets, inscriptions, rings, fibulae, &c. The roads are elaborately dealt with, and in particular the tenth iter of Antoninus, with the several stations upon it. Besides a general map of the county, there is also given a map of the Roman station of Manchester. Much entirely new information has been acquired from coins and MSS. The wood-cuts will be introduced in the text in the same manner as in the Lapidarium Septentrionale; and for several of the inscriptions special photographs have been taken. Intending subscribers should address themselves to Mr. W. Thompson Watkin, 39 Plumptre Street, Liverpool.

THE St. Stephen's Art Society have opened a gallery in Palace Chamber, Westminster, for the exhibition and sale of pictures and drawings by their own members. It is a sort of Artists' Co-operative Society. The exhibition is to be permanent; each artist sending a picture, and changing it, if not sold, once a month. Monthly catalogues are to be issued. Here, at the present time, may be seen many able and interesting works; and it is probable that next month the collection will be better still. Among others, we noticed a capital little picture by Mr. Ernest Crofts, a fine landscape by Mr. Biscoombe Gardner, a charming figure of A Village Maiden by Mrs. Jopling, drawings by Mr. Walter Severn, Mr. Albert Goodwin, and Miss Linnie Watt, and works by Messrs. Whipple Hindley, Buxton Knight, W. C. Symonds, F. Hines, F. Lawson, and E. Nichol, which would have quite repaid a small admission fee. It is, however, the unique charm of this exhibition to be free.

THE directors of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, have issued an interesting Memorial Catalogue of the paintings of the late Sanford Robinson Gifford, a landscape artist of considerable Transatlantic celebrity, who died on August 29, 1880, in the fifty-eighth year of his age. Mr. S. R. Gifford was essentially a painter of sunlight, of dazzling atmospheric effects, and of brilliant combinations of colour. The pictures enumerated in this record—which does not profess to be complete—number upwards of 730. The catalogue is illustrated with five engravings and two portraits of the artist.

THE first volume of the new series of Decoration published by Messrs. Sampson Low is already in its third edition. The second volume, which commences with the July number, will have a series of large decorative pictures, among which may be mentioned "Terpander singing in the Market-place of Mitylené," and the "Epithalamios" and "Homéros," which were exhibited at the Royal Academy a few years ago. These pictures will each fill a half imperial sheet, and will contain from twenty to forty figures. Among the smaller illustrations will be full-sized drawings of the four early Greek subjects which formed the chief decorations of the large vases which were leading features of Messrs. Mintow's exhibit at Paris, to which the Grand Prix was awarded. The subjects of those designs are respectively:—The Caryatic Dance, the Pyrrhic Dance, a Lydian Ditty, and a Phrygian Chant; each contains six or seven figures. The designs for friezes, ceilings, chimney-pieces, and interior decoration, as well as the Japanese sketches, which formed a speciality of the first volume, will be continued throughout the second.

THE celebrated picture of the Congress of Berlin, 1878, by Prof. Anton von Werner, which was painted for the Town Hall of Berlin, will shortly be exhibited for one month at the gallery of the Fine Art Society, New Bond Street.

THERE is now on view for a few days, at Mr. Rogers' studio in Maddox Street, the celebrated masterpiece in wood-carving by Démontreuil, entitled L'Oiseau surprenant.

A NEW volume from the pen of the author of Studies of the Eighteenth Century in Italy is in preparation, and will consist of essays on æsthetic principles similar to those of "In Umbria" in the last number of Fraser. Vernon Lee's Studies is announced in an Italian translation, with a Preface by Alessandro Arnaboldi, one of the most distinguished living Italian poets.

BURSTS of the following will shortly be placed in the rooms of the Institute by order of the French Government:—Of the Académie française: Thiers, Jules Favre, and Claude Bernard; of the Académie des Inscriptions: Mariette; of the Académie des Sciences morales: Michelet; of the Académie des Beaux-Arts: Baron Taylor.

Cyprus Antiquities. (Holmes and Sons.) This beautifully got-up album is not only an ornament to the drawing-room table, but a valuable contribution to the history of ancient art and archaeology. It consists of photographs of the objects belonging to the Lawrence-Cesnola collection, excavated by Major A. P. di Cesnola in Cyprus in 1876-80, and is introduced by a photograph of a map of the island published in 1589. The photographs occupy the right-hand page, the left-hand page being filled with letterpress. The antiquities discovered by Major di Cesnola are very numerous, and comprise Hellenic and pre-Hellenic pottery, gems, gold ornaments, statuary, terra-cottas, and glass, the amount of the latter being very considerable. There is also a large number of inscriptions—Phoenician, Cypriote, and Greek; those in the Cypriote characters being unusually plentiful and important. Among them may be signalled an inscription on a leaden plate which presents us with several new forms of the characters, as well as with some curious grammatical peculiarities of the Greek dialect of Cyprus. Another inscription is repeated on the chaton of a gold ring and a shell which once formed part of a lady's toilet-box.

Still more interesting is a bowl of Phœnician workmanship, the design of which resembles that of the Palestrina bowl lately studied by M. Clermont-Ganneau, but differs from it in being wholly Egyptian in style without any admixture of an Assyrian element. The large collection of cut stones will be very serviceable in determining the question which has been mooted as to the Hittite origin of the art that characterises the early engraved gems of Cyprus and the neighbouring continent; while the pottery, with its geometrical patterns, figures, suns, and "swastikas," will be welcome to students of Dr. Schliemann's discoveries. Our best thanks are due to Major di Cesnola for the complete and sumptuous way in which he has placed the results of his excavations at the disposal of scholars.

AFTER the Salon is over, there is to be arranged at the Palais de l'Industrie an exhibition of all the works of art collected and excavated by the Archaeological Commission that was sent last year by the French Government to Tunis. Fortunately, the fighting in the neighbourhood has not interrupted their labours. We have before mentioned some of the antiquities that have been found—ruined temples, broken sculpture, Roman mosaics, and a large quantity of pottery, mostly Roman vases. All these objects are to be formed into a Tunisian Museum, which will eventually be added to the Louvre, but meanwhile an exhibition is to be formed of them in the Champs Elysées.

THE death is announced of M. Ronillard, a distinguished French sculptor. He was for thirty years Professor in the Ecole des Beaux-Arts, and was an officer of the Légion d'Honneur.

THE first medal for painting was not awarded by the jury of the Paris Salon, but second medals were given more liberally than was intended, four candidates beyond the specified number having obtained the requisite amount of votes. In sculpture, M. André Allar carried off the first medal by his Mort d'Alceste; in architecture, M. Blondel, for his restorations of Roman buildings; and in engraving, M. Bracquemond, for his Séance de la Convention du 20 Mai 1793 after E. Delacroix.

THE total sum realised by the sale of the Double collection—pictures, books, and objects of art—was 333,840 frs.

THE Gazette des Beaux-Arts is of course much taken up by the Salon this month, but it has, besides, several articles of interest. M. Ravaisson continues his learned analysis of the writings of Leonardo da Vinci. One of the suggestions he makes in this number is that Leonardo visited France before the time when he went there under Francis I. Amoretti, the early biographer of Leonardo, had before supposed this, and, from a passage in one of the MSS., had fixed the date of this visit in 1506. This date has since been shown to be incorrect, and Amoretti's hypothesis has been given up; but M. Ravaisson finds that it is not proved that Leonardo did not make a journey to France in the time of Louis XII. He regards him as "the most French of the great Italian masters of the Renaissance." "The Part played by the Movement of the Eyes in the Aesthetic Emotions" is the title of a study in optics by G. Guérout. The sketches by Callot in the Albertina recently published by Prof. Thausing are reviewed, and several reproduced, while our London exhibitions at the Royal Academy and Grosvenor Gallery are criticised in a very summary manner by M. Théodore Duret. He defines the influences and tendencies of the various forms taken by English art in a few pointed sentences that nevertheless show, it must be owned, considerable insight into the subject.

THE STAGE.

SARAH BERNHARDT.

La Dame aux Camélias, in which Mdlle. Sarah Bernhardt has preferred to make her re-appearance in Europe, is not one of those plays which stand the most complete test of excellence—familiarity. The more the reader reads or the spectator sees of it, the more is it made plain that it is thoroughly unworthy of the author of several dramatic masterpieces. It is quite surprising, indeed, how the vigorous and masculine writer of La Princesse Georges and of Une Visite de Noce should have been capable, even as one of the mistakes of his youth, of giving us the sentimental twaddle of La Dame aux Camélias. Did ever such feebleness precede such strength? It is not that La Dame aux Camélias is immoral; no one can be sure at all that it is that. But that it is sickly, mawkish, and infirm, there can be no manner of question. It has not even the virtue of the unintellectual drama—a good plot, an intrigue skilfully conducted. It has not the biting witticisms with which cynical studies like the Visite de Noce are wont to be relieved. One laughs at it very little, but one can hardly weep; it is a dreary disclosure of a life that is before all things inexpressibly stupid—filled, as the heroine says of herself, with a "gaieté plus triste que le chagrin." And yet this wearisome creation of effeminate youth—irretrievably commonplace where it is not idiotically lachrymose—has held the stage for at least a generation. It sometimes happens, however, at the theatre, that a play without any high or engaging quality outlasts many a work of sterling merit. The English counterpart to the Dame aux Camélias—except, of course, in subject—is The Lady of Lyons, a piece still popular almost by reason of its false sentiment, its veneer of sentimentality, the persistency of its romantic illusions, its obstinate avoidance of truth. Actors and actresses like The Lady of Lyons because its long speeches, which are neither prose nor poetry, afford them the opportunity of expressing conventionally the emotions which it is proper to feel; and a "leading lady" at the theatre may still for a while like the Dame aux Camélias because it is an instrument which, with all its faults, offers many and varied notes to the experienced touch.

But it is a pity that Mdlle. Sarah Bernhardt should have made her re-appearance in a play which, save to the most morbid tastes, proffers no interest except such as belongs to the actress and not to the piece. We may admit that Mdlle. Bernhardt has distanced all competitors in the part. At once more subtle and more real than Mme. Modjeska's—endowed, too, with an infinitely greater charm—her performance cannot but cast into the shade even that of Mme. Doche, when Mme. Doche was at her best; and our only regret is that so much art and so much energy and spirit should have been thrown into the impersonation of any character in a piece so inconceivably worthless. The dullest of French tragedies—Rachel, we read the other day, is said to have acknowledged that French tragedies are dull and dead—would have been grateful as an alternative to the sickness and languor of the Dame aux Camélias.

Mdlle. Bernhardt, however, has stood the difficult test; she has emerged from her ordeal successfully; a sensation journey and a stupid play have not made havoc of her art. She retains to the full every characteristic of her strange personality—the slowness and liveness and the young queenly carriage which enable her, in what is nearly middle age, to be most fittingly occupied in the representation of youth; the delicacy and extraordinary range of facial expression; the wonderful compass of her voice, its liquidness and freshness; and that art in the variations of tone and of emphasis whose source is to be found in the readiness of her intelligence. We do not know what she can feel, but we suppose there is nothing she cannot understand. By her American journey she suffered some discredit, but, it is satisfactory to believe, no permanent injury. An element of Barnum was only too discernible in the arrangements for the gigantic tour; but the spirit of Barnum has not been permitted to invade the theatre; affiche and réclame have been reserved for the gossipy newspapers and for the special railway-carriage. On the stage we have to do with an artist still studiously careful of harmonious effect. Mdlle. Bernhardt does not lend herself to even that measure of sensational practice which has been allowed to legitimate comedians who probably have rarely left Paris, and certainly have never crossed the States in special railway-cars. The death scene in the Dame aux Camélias might easily be made the vehicle of an exhibition of horrors, but with Mdlle. Bernhardt it is gentle, poetical, and reserved. And if the death of the heroine is treated poetically, and is decently veiled, so is the life. Indeed, from beginning to end Mdlle. Bernhardt's representation is not only free from exaggeration, but it might be said of it, as of the production of the idyllic poetaster in Patience, that it "contains nothing that could bring the blush of shame to the cheek of modesty."

The character of such a woman as Marguerite Gauthier is conceived to be in the romantic imagination of a youthful dramatist, is realised very perfectly by Mdlle. Bernhardt, and with such a continuous and varied skill that it eludes analysis. All that it is possible to bring into the part, of innocence and naïve surprise, of passionate girlish affection, of respect for the honourable and the old, of regretful yet easily dismissed meditation on a discreditable past, the actress succeeds in bringing. The ready sensitiveness of heart and flexibility of purpose which lay the heroine specially open to the temptations of her career, and yet make her career peculiarly repellant to her when once she has entered upon it, Mdlle. Bernhardt exposes by a hundred touches of extraordinary sympathy or of carefully calculated art. She shows the nature that, in spite of the experience of the grossest surroundings, holds fast and long to its illusions, and sighs most over a beau rêve évanoui. Perhaps the actress is strongest in Margaret's interview with the father of her lover. He comes to dissuade her from continuing the connexion, for her lover's own sake, and for the sake of his own daughter, whose hand has just been engaged in betrothal with a member of a family "honourable, and wishing that in mine all should be honourable." Nothing could well be more unnatural than the appeal, except the favourable fashion in which the appeal is responded to; but this makes all the more undeniable the force of the art by which the almost impossible is made to seem the likely thing. Something of the marvellous reality of conflict between two breathing persons and two opposed interests which made memorable the quarrel scene of Frou-frou is seen here, so that the most practised in stage deceptions feel themselves roused to concern in the fortunes of persons twice imaginary—imaginary, first, because they are of fiction and not of fact; imaginary, again, because the invention employed in creating them was of the poorest, faintest, and least potent order. Yet so much through this scene does the actress beat herself about as a harassed and distressed thing—now defending her own, now ready to sacrifice, now finding the sacrifice too hard, and now again undertaking the trial as an atonement—that all sense is lost of the fictitious nature of the story and of its imaginative weakness.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

STAGE NOTES.

At the Haymarket Theatre there has been a revival this week of the late Mr. Robertson's Society and of the one-act comedy of Good for Nothing. Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft are the chief attractions of the cast.

The Gaiety company have been acting at Sadler's Wells, and remain there till the end of next week.

MR. EDWIN BOOTH, having brought his successful engagement at the Lyceum to a close, is leaving England immediately. The revival of Hamlet will be the next event of interest at the Lyceum.

MISS LITTON has appeared this week at the Court Theatre in The Country Girl, one of those adaptations of our earlier comedy in which she is seen to most advantage. There is no occasion to speak of this bright performance in detail, as it was duly discussed in these columns in the winter. Mr. Kyrle Bellew, a very favourite young actor, has joined the company at the Court, and appears nightly in The Bachelor of Arts, a play little acted since the days of Charles Mathews.

MUSIC.

MDME. SOPHIE MENTER AND HERR ANTON RUBINSTEIN.

MDME. SOPHIE MENTER gave her first recital at St. James's Hall on Thursday, June 9. She played to perfection Bach's toccata and fugue in D minor arranged by C. Tausig, and with exquisite grace and delicacy a pastorale and capriccio by Scarlatti. As a pupil of the renowned Abbé Liszt, it was but natural that she should play some of his music; she chose three transcriptions of songs by Schubert, and the fantasia on The Huguenots. The first three are graceful and pleasing, and Mdme. Menter's interpretation of them was all that could be desired. Her performance of the fantasia was a marvel of virtuoso playing; but it is to be hoped that the comparatively cold reception given to this piece will prove to her that Liszt's operatic fantasias are out of date, and that the musical public are not satisfied with music which only possesses the quality of being abnormally difficult. At the Crystal Palace, and again at the Philharmonic Society, she played Liszt's Don Juan fantasia. This is, we think, his best specimen, and Mdme. Menter was perhaps to be excused for wishing to show us how well she could overcome the enormous difficulties. Having accomplished this, she ought to have been satisfied, and, at a serious recital, to have chosen a piece more worthy of her talent and of her audience. Her Chopin selection was not particularly happy, and here there were two pieces in which there was more of Liszt and Tausig than of Chopin—viz., the Chant polonais and the mazurka in D. Her performance of Beethoven's sonata op. 109 was not altogether satisfactory. She played Schumann's Etudes symphoniques with great brilliancy and technical perfection, and was highly successful in Rubinstein's Valse caprice.

A grand concert was given last Saturday at the Crystal Palace, in which Herr Rubinstein appeared as composer, conductor, and pianist. His rendering of Schumann's concerto in A minor was certainly not lacking in dash and brilliancy, but neither by the pianist nor by orchestral players was proper justice given to this fine work. The slow movement was lacking in delicacy and poetical feeling, and the finale lost much of its charm by the furious pace at which it was taken. Herr Auer performed Rubinstein's violin concerto in G (op. 46). Like most of his early productions, this work contains much clever, clear, and pleasing writing. The slow movement is charming and melodious, and the orchestration delicate and effective. The opening allegro and finale are full of showy and brilliant passages for the solo instrument. The concerto was played by Herr Auer in a clever and artistic manner, but not with sufficient power. The great event of the day was the performance of Rubinstein's Tower of Babel, a sacred drama in one act. This work was first performed at Düsseldorf in 1872. Judging from the numerous indications in the score, it is intended for representation on the stage; if it suffer in interest through performance on a concert platform, the composer is alone responsible. It was brought forward and conducted by Herr Rubinstein. In the first tableau, the wondrous Tower is being built by order of Nimrod, the "mighty hunter," and, regardless of chronology, Abraham appears and reproves the proud monarch for his impious daring; at the close, the doomed pile is destroyed by lightning. The solo parts (Nimrod, Abraham, and an Overseer—taken by Signor Foli, Mr. Barton McGuckin, and Mr. Cross) seem lacking in interest; but a double chorus descriptive of the building of the Tower contains some powerful and dramatic writing. If the work fail, however, to satisfy from a musical point of view, the fault lies, we fancy, more with the subject than with the composer. The story throughout is intended to be dramatic, but never does it excite emotion or awaken any real interest. In the second tableau, we have three choruses descriptive of the emigration of the Shemites, the Hamites, and the Japhetites. In these, the composer is less ambitious and more successful. They form three specimens of Herr Rubinstein's most pleasing and characteristic style. They were much applauded, and the public would willingly have heard the last over again. The work concludes with an elaborate chorus of Angels, Mortals, and Demons.

In speaking of Herr Rubinstein, we must say a few words about his second pianoforte recital, last Monday, at St. James's Hall. All who listened to the great pianist must surely have felt that his performance on that occasion was unusually powerful and impressive. Particularly would we mention his playing of Beethoven's sonata op. 90, Schumann's Etudes symphoniques, the three last movements of Weber's sonata in A flat, and some charming pieces of his own composition. It was a treat impossible to describe, and certainly not to be forgotten.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

13, Great Marlborough-street.

HURST & BLACKETT'S NEW WORKS.

LIFE in WESTERN INDIA. By

Mrs. GUTHRIE, Author of "Through Russia," "My Year in an Indian Fort," &c. 2 vols., with Illustrations, 21s.
"Mrs. Guthrie's 'Life in Western India' is worthy the pen of this accomplished writer. Her familiarity with Indian life enables her to portray in faithful and vivid hues the character of the Hindus and Mohammedan tribes; noting the peculiarities of their social and religious traditions, and representing their personal habits and manners with picturesque fidelity."—Daily Telegraph.

CATHARINE of ARAGON, and

the SOURCES of the ENGLISH REFORMATION. Edited from the French of ALBERT DU BOIS, with Notes, by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE, Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe," &c. 2 vols., 21s.
"This book is valuable as an able compendium of documents about Catharine, and also as a statement of the causes which led to the English Reformation. It should be read by all who want to take a comprehensive view of the period. Miss Yonge's work is thoroughly and conscientiously done."—Graphic.

LODGE'S PEERAGE and

BARONETAGE for 1881. Under the Especial Patronage of HER MAJESTY. Corrected by the Nobility. Fifteenth Edition. 1 vol., with the Arms beautifully engraved, 31s. 6d., bound, gilt edges.

CHEAP EDITION of LORD

BRACKENBURY. By AMELIA R. EDWARDS, Author of "Barbara's History," &c. Forming the New Volume of HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY. 5s., bound, and illustrated.

THE NEW NOVELS.

LOVE, HONOUR, and OBEY. By

IZA DUFFUS HARDY. 3 vols.

AMONG the HILLS. By E. Frances

FOYSTER, Author of "My Little Lady," &c. 2 vols.

THE FUTURE MARQUIS. By

CATHARINE CRILDAR. 3 vols.

"Miss Childer's story is exceedingly readable."—Academy.
"An interesting story, written in an agreeable manner. The characters are not only clearly defined, but are natural in themselves. It ought to attain considerable popularity."—John Bull.

SYDNEY. By Georgiana M. Craik,

Author of "Dorcas," "Anne Warwick," &c. 3 vols.

"There is much to commend in this novel. It is a very pretty story, cleverly devised and wholesomely carried out."—Saturday Review.

"Miss Craik has treated her subject with great freshness and simplicity, and by doing so has succeeded in giving a marked individuality both to her heroine and her book."—Pall Mall Gazette.

HARRY JOSCELYN. By Mrs.

OLIPHANT, Author of "Chronicles of Carlingford," &c. 3 vols.

"In 'Harry Joscelyn' Mrs. Oliphant makes judicious use of sharp and telling contrasts. Nothing can be better than her pictures of the bleak Cumberland fells and their rough inhabitants, except her clever sketches of Anglo-Italian life in Leghorn. Harry himself is a clever and interesting study."—Times.

"This book is very clever and entertaining."—Pall Mall Gazette.

LOVE-KNOTS. By the Author of

"URSULA'S LOVE STORY," &c. 3 vols.

"There is a good deal of interest in these cleverly knitted 'Love-Knots.'"—Athenaeum.

HIS LITTLE MOTHER. By the AUTHOR OF "JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN," 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

RESEDA. By Mrs. Randolph, Author of "Orestia," &c. 3 vols.

[Next week.]

CHEAP EDITIONS.

Each Work complete in 1 vol., price 5s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by Sir J. GILBERT MILLAIS, HUNT, LEECH, FOYSTER, FOSTER, TENNIEL, SANDYS, E. HUGHES, SAMBOURNE, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S

STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS of POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

Sam Slick's Nature and Human Nature. John Halifax, Gentleman. The Crescent and the Cross. By Elliot Warburton. Nithsdale. By Miss Kavanagh. A Woman's Thoughts about Women. By the Author of "John Halifax." Adam Graeme. By Mrs. Oliphant. Sam Slick's Wise Saw. Cardinal Wiseman's Popes. A Life for a Life. By the Author of "John Halifax." Leigh Hunt's Old Court Suburb. Margaret and her Bridesmaids. Sam Slick's Old Judge. Darius. By Elliot Warburton. Sir B. Burke's Family Romance. The Laird of Norlaw. By Mrs. Oliphant. The Englishwoman in Italy. Nothing New. By the Author of "John Halifax." Freer's Life of Jeanne d'Albret. The Valley of a Hundred Fires. Burke's Romance of the Forum. Adèle. By Miss Kavanagh. Studies from Life. By the Author of "John Halifax." Grandmother's Money. Jefferson's Book about Doctors. Mistress and Maid. By the Author of "John Halifax." Les Misérables. By Victor Hugo. St. Olave's. Lord and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton. Sam Slick's American Humour. Barbara's History. By Amelia R. Edwards. Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant. No Church. Christian's Mistake. By the Author of "John Halifax." Alice Forbes. By George MacDonald, LL.D. Agnes. By Mrs. Oliphant. A Noble Life. By the Author of "John Halifax." Dixon's New America. Robert Falconer. By George MacDonald, LL.D. The Woman's Kingdom. By the Author of "John Halifax." Anna of an Eventful Life. By G. W. Basset, LL.D. David Elginbrod. By George MacDonald, LL.D. A Brave Lady. By the Author of "John Halifax." Hannah. By the Author of "John Halifax." Sam Slick's Americans at Home. The Unkind Word. By the Author of "John Halifax." A Rose in June. By Mrs. Oliphant. My Little Lady. By E. Frances Foyster. Phoebe Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant. Life of Marie Antoinette. By Professor G. D. Yonge. Sir Gibbie. By George MacDonald, LL.D. Young Mrs. Jardine. By the Author of "John Halifax." Lord Brackenbury. By Amelia R. Edwards.

NOW READY.

Vols. I. to VI. ("ABAR" to "MYSORE"), 8vo, half-morocco, price £2 2s.

THE

IMPERIAL GAZETTEER OF INDIA,

By W. W. HUNTER, C.I.E., LL.D.,

Director-General of Statistics to the Government of India.

Published by Command of the Secretary of State for India.

"It is a treasury from which the politician and economist may draw countless stores of valuable information, and into which the general reader can dip with the certainty of always finding something both to interest and instruct him."—Times.

The remaining Three Volumes, "NAAF" to "ZUTTHUT," will be issued in July, price £1 1s., making £3 3s. for the set of Nine Volumes.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

Now complete, in 3 vols., post 8vo, pp. 350, 404, 384 and Index, cloth, price £1 11s. 6d.

A HISTORY OF MATERIALISM.

By PROFESSOR F. A. LANGE.

Authorised Translation from the German by ERNEST C. THOMAS.

"Although it is only a few years since Lange's book was originally published, it already ranks as a classic in the philosophical literature of Germany. . . . So far as he has proceeded, Mr. Thomas has done his work with great spirit and intelligence. We have tested the translation at different points, and have always found that it reflects the original freely and accurately."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"We see no reason for not endorsing the translator's judgment that it is raised far above the level of ordinary controversial writing by its thoroughness, comprehensiveness, and impartiality."

Contemporary Review.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

This day is published, 8vo, 10s. 6d.

BRITISH INDIA and its RULERS. By H. S. CUN-

NINGHAM, M.A., one of the Judges of the High Court of Calcutta, and late Member of the Famine Commission.

LONDON: WM. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE.

Now ready, at all the Libraries, 3 vols.

A LOST CAUSE: a Story of the Polish Rebellion.

By W. W. ALDRED.

LONDON: WM. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE.

Now ready, crown 8vo, Illustrated, 3s. 6d.

THE HORSE: as he Was, as he Is, and as he Ought to Be. By JAMES IRVINE LUPTON, F.R.C.V.S., Author of "The External Anatomy of the Horse," &c.

LONDON: WM. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE.

Now ready, Vol. XII.—EGYPTIAN TEXTS.

RECORDS of the PAST:

Being English Translations of the Assyrian and Egyptian Monuments.

Published under the sanction of the Society of Biblical Archaeology.

Edited by S. BIRCH, LL.D.

With an Index to the Contents of the Series. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

LONDON: S. PAGETER & SONS, 15, PATERNOSTER-ROW.

ENGLISH ETCHINGS: a Monthly

Publication of Original Etchings, the work of English Artists. Part I., JUNE. Price 3s. 6d.; Japanese Proof Parts, £1 1s.

CONTENTS OF PART I. (JUNE).

STONE QUARRIES, LUDLOW: TWILIGHT. By S. H. BAKER.

LOCH EARN. By R. CUERRE.

A SHEER HULK. By GEORGE STEVENSON.

IN CHANCERY. By OLIVER BAKER.

LONDON: WILLIAM REEVES, Publisher, 185, Fleet-street.

32 pp., price 6d.; Annual Subscription, 6s. 6d., post-free.

THE ORCHESTRA and the CHOIR.

Edited by W. A. BARRETT, Mus.B., F.R.S.L., &c. A Monthly Review: Musical, Dramatic, and Literary.

LONDON: Sold by W. REEVES, Depot for Musical Works, Fleet-street.

MR. HERBERT SPENCER.

Second Thousand, 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE DATA of ETHICS: being the First Portion of the "PRINCIPLES of ETHICS." By HERBERT SPENCER.

A detailed List of Mr. SPENCER'S Works may be had on application.

WILLIAMS & NORRIS, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 29, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

Now ready, imp. 4to, cloth, price Three Guineas.

CHARITABLE and PAROCHIAL

ESTABLISHMENTS. By H. SAXON SNELL, Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects, Member of Council of the Sanitary Institute of Great Britain, &c., &c.

Illustrated with Forty-seven Lithographic Plates, besides Woodcuts of Piers, Elevations, and details of Howdahs, Workhouses, Infirmarys, Casual Wards, schools, and such-like Establishments, erected and designed by the Author; also containing copious extracts from Official Documents of Government Regulations for the erection of these classes of Buildings, and suggestions to Public Boards contemplating the erection or alteration and enlargement of Buildings.

LONDON: B. T. BATSFORD, 52, High Holborn.

Now ready, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE PROPHECY of SAINT ORAN,

and other Poems. By MATHILDE BLIND.

LONDON: NEWMAN & CO., 43, Hart-street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JUNE

contains—Clement Marot and the Huguenot Pastor—The Great Composers: Berlioz—Mr. Pappa the Musician, by F. Hueffer—Why the Greeks made no Advance in Harmony—Stella: Lyric Drama by Augustus Maaschke—The Opera—Richter and Crystal Palace Concerts—Mr. C. Hallé's Recitals—Festival Services at St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey, &c.—Wagner's "Nibelungen" at Berlin—Occasional Notes, Foreign and Country News, Reviews, Correspondence, &c. Price 3d.; post-free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JUNE

contains—"Cradle Song," Part Song, by OLIVER KING. Price, separately, 1d.

LONDON: NOVELLO, EWER, & CO., 1, Berners-street, W., and 80 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

To-night, at 9, WYCHERLEY'S Comedy,
THE COUNTRY GIRL,
the second Comedy of Miss LITTON'S Series of Performances, will be produced.
Miss LITTON as PEGGY.
Preceded, at 7.30, by a Comedy in two acts,
THE BACHELOR OF ARTS.
Doors open at 7; carriages at 10.50. Seats booked at the Princess's and Court Theatres from 11 till 5. No fees.
Stage Manager, Mr. RAYNAM. Acting Manager, Mr. H. BERMAN.

DURRY LANE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

The MEININGEN COURT COMPANY of his Serene Highness the GRAND
DUKE OF SAXE MEININGEN, under the gracious patronage of H.R.H. the
PRINCE OF WALES.
To-night, IPIHGENIE (Goethe).
MONDAY, TUESDAY, JUNE 20, 21,
FIESCO (Schiller).

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.15, WAITING CONSENT,
a new Comedy by Mrs. FAIRBANK.
At 8, a new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, called THE UPPER CRUST.
Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Hillington, E. W. Garden, G. Shelton, and E. D.
Ward; Mesdames Effie Liston, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorne.
At 10, WELSH RABBITS,
a musical and dramatic absurdity, by Messrs. R. REECE and KNIGHT
SUMMERS, with new scenery, dresses, and appointments.
Messrs. J. L. Toole and E. W. Garden; Mesdames Emily Thorne, Eliza
Johnstone.
Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to £3 3s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THE OPERA SEASON
Under the direction of Mr. ALEXANDER HENDERSON.

To-night, at 8, an entirely new and original Opera Comique, in three acts, by OFFENBACH, entitled
LA BOULANGERE.
Under the immediate direction of Mr. H. B. Farnie.
New and elaborate scenery by Ryan and Hicks. Dresses, after designs by Grévin and Kauffin, by Atlas.
Preceded, at 7.30, by a Comedy, after Meilhac and Halévy, entitled SEEING FROU-FROU.
Mesdames Amadi, Mand Taylor, Turner, Dubois, Graham, Evelyn, and Wadman; Messrs. Celi, Temple, Ashford, Maustield, Stepan, and Paulton.
Greatly augmented chorus and orchestra, under the direction of Mr.
Hilier. Ballet master, Mr. Lauri.
Box-office now open. Acting Manager, Mr. W. A. DURT.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. D'OLLY CARTE.

To-night, at 8.30, a new Aesthetic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN, entitled
PATIENCE.
Messrs. George Grossmith, Rutland Barrington, Richard Temple, F.
Thornton, and Burward Lot's Mesdames Leonora Braham, Jessie Dond, Julia Gwynne, Fortescue, and Alice Barnett.
Produced under the personal direction of the Author and Composer.
Conductor, Mr. F. Cellier.
Preceded, at 8, by UNCLE SAMUEL,
by ARTHUR LAW and GEORGE GROSSMITH.
Doors open at 7.30.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BRUCE.

To-night, at 8.40, a new Comedy, in three acts, called
THE COLONEL.
By F. C. BURNAND.
Preceded, at 8, by the one-act Drama, by G. C. HERBERT,
OUR BITTEREST FOE.
Doors open at 7.30. Box-office open daily from 11 to 5, under the control of Mr. MILLER.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

FAREWELL PERFORMANCES OF MADAME MODJESKA.
In compliance with numerous requests, MADAME MODJESKA will, before the end of the season, appear in some of the impersonations which excited so much admiration when given at the Royal Court Theatre.
On MONDAY, TUESDAY, and WEDNESDAY, JUNE 20, 21, and 22,
ADRIENNE LECOUCVREUX.
On THURSDAY, FRIDAY, and SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 24, and 25,
HEARTSEASE.
MONDAY, TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, JUNE 27, 28, 29, and 30, Mr. WILL'S Play,
JUANA.
On FRIDAY, JULY 1, SPECIAL PERFORMANCE, during which MADAME MODJESKA will appear in a selection of her characters.
Seats can be booked now.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER.

To-night, at 7.30, ROSALIE.
At 8.15, THE MEMBER FOR SLOCOM.
At 8.30, DON JUAN JUNIOR.
Mesdames Kate Lawler, Harriet Cowley, Ruth Francis, Florence Laven-der, F. Clitheroe, Elise Ward, and Annie Lawler; Messrs. Arthur Williams, Frank Wyatt, B. Dallas, H. Martell, and Frank Cooper.
Stage Manager, FRANK HOTHAM. Acting Manager, CECIL HALEIGH.
Doors open at 7.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

SUMMER EXHIBITION
NOW OPEN

Daily 9 to 7.

Admission, One Shilling; Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA "If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa."
Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.
"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."
W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol,
"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted."
CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

EXTRACT Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

LONDON LIBRARY.

12, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE.—Founded in 1841.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

PRESIDENT—THOMAS CARLYLE, Esq.

This Library contains 90,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature in various Languages. Subscription, £3 a-year, or £2 with Entrance-fee of £5; Life Membership, £25.

Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town, Members
Reading-room open from Ten to Half-past Six. Prospectus on application.
ROBERT HARRISON, Secretary and Librarian.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

(Twenty doors west of Mudie's Library.)

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Collotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.
AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Meissonier, Corot, De Nouvilles, Burne-Jones, Rossetti, Cave Thomas, &c., &c., &c.

MUSEO DEL PRADO, MADRID.

Subscription issue of 337 Autotype reproductions of Paintings in this Celebrated Gallery (executed by Braun & Cie, Dornach) under the superintendence of the Director of the Gallery. The work contains 34 examples of Murillo, 48 Velasquez, 1 Raphael, 25 Titian, 16 Vandyck, 32 Rubens, &c., and will be complete in Eight bi-Monthly issues. For particulars and terms of subscription, apply to the MANAGER, The Autotype Company, 531, Oxford-street.

PICTURES CLEANED, RESTORED, FRAMED.

To adorn the walls of Home with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 531, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Ealing Dene, Middlesex.

General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWTER.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHARING CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practices of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.
The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

1st March, 1880.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

TRAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A solid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. By gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drowsy feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Traxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s 9d, and 4s, 6d, each. Sold by all Chemists.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.
Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.
Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.
Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.
Thoroughly restores the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

*Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache,
Gout, and Indigestion,*

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies
Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT ON
MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.
The original, best, and most liberal.
Cash prices.

No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Priced Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.
F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21,
Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from £5 6s. to 50 guineas.
Drawing-room Suites, from £7 9s. to 45 guineas.
Dining-room Suites, from £7 7s. to 40 guineas.

And all other goods in great variety.
F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21
Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

BRAND & CO'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS:—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S

SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY,

186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the RAILWAY BOOKSTALLS.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON'S numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their books. There are 500 Bookstall available for this purpose. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or 186, Strand, London.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in charge a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

I.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A LONDON TERMINUS, OR 186, STRAND—

	6 Months.			12 Months.
	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
For One Volume at a time	0	12	0	1	1	0
(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Two Volumes " " " " " "	0	17	6	1	11	6
(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Four " " " " " "	1	3	0	2	2	0
For Eight " " " " " "	1	15	0	3	3	0
For Fifteen " " " " " "	3	0	0	5	5	0

II.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A COUNTRY BOOKSTALL—

For One Volume at a time	0	12	0	1	1	0
(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Two Volumes " " " " " "	0	17	6	1	11	6
(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Three " " " " " "	1	3	0	2	2	0
For Four " " " " " "	1	8	0	2	10	0
For Six " " " " " "	1	15	0	3	3	0
For Twelve " " " " " "	3	0	0	5	5	0

III.—FOR COUNTRY BOOK CLUBS, READING SOCIETIES, &c.

For Twenty-four Volumes at a time	5	5	0	9	9	0
For Thirty-six " " " " " "	8	0	0	14	2	6
For Forty-eight " " " " " "	10	10	0	18	16	0
For Sixty " " " " " "	13	0	0	23	9	0
For Seventy-two " " " " " "	15	10	0	28	2	0
For Eighty-four " " " " " "	18	0	0	32	15	0

For every additional Twelve Volumes, £4 12s. 6d.

TERMS FOR SPECIAL TRAVELLING SUBSCRIPTIONS, Lists of Books in circulation, or any other information can be obtained at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or at 186, Strand, London.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings for Gentlemen's Libraries.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 477.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JUNE 25, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
CAPT. BURTON'S TRANSLATION OF CAMERON'S LUSIADS, by OSWALD CRAWFORD	465
BURROWS' REGISTER OF THE VISITORS OF OXFORD UNIVERSITY, 1647-59, by J. BASS MULLINGER	466
CHIBOL'S 'TWIXT GREEK AND TURK, by the Rev. H. F. TOZER	467
DEAN STANLEY'S CHRISTIAN INSTITUTIONS, by the Rev. W. H. SIMCOX	467
TWO BOOKS ON RIDING, by J. INNES MINCHIN	468
BRITTEN'S EDITION OF AUBREY'S REMAINS, by the Rev. HILDERICO FRIEND	469
CURRENT LITERATURE	470
NOTES AND NEWS	471
OBITUARY: PROF. ROLLESTON, by H. N. MOSELEY, & C. MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	473
SELECTED BOOKS	474
CLIVE'S DESPATCH ANNOUNCING HIS VICTORY AT PLASSEY	474
CORRESPONDENCE:— A Possible Autograph of Shakspeare, by T. S. PERRY; A Help for the Beginner in the Gothic Language, by H. KREBS; Swift's Giddy Fits, by Dr. J. WICKHAM LEGG; Gascoigne's "Liber Veritatis," by Reginald Lane-Poole	474-5
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	475
DR. CONTRA'S PRINCIPLES OF MONOCULAR AND BINOCULAR VISION, by JAMES SULLY	475
REDHOUSE'S TRANSLATION OF THE MESSEVY, by STANLEY LANE-POOLE	476
THE COLLECTED WORKS OF THE LATE PROF. MACCULLAGH, by Prof. A. W. REINOLD	477
NOTES OF TRAVEL	477
SCIENCE NOTES	478
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	478
"THE TWENTY STYLES OF ARCHITECTURE," by J. HENRY MIDDLETON	478
MILY'S EXCAVATIONS AT CARNAC (BRITANNY), by W. C. LUKIS	479
LE SALON À LONDRES, by COSMO MONTEHOUSE	480
THE STATUES OF LORENZO AND GIULIANO IN THE MEDICI CHAPEL, by C. HEATH WILSON	481
ART SALES	481
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	482
THE STAGE	483
"IL DEMONIO," BY HEER ANTON RUBINSTEIN, by J. S. SHERLOCK	483

OWENS COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

Under a recent bequest the Council propose to appoint to FIVE FELLOWSHIPS in SCIENCE or LITERATURE, each of the value of £100, renewable for one year, but renewable for two years further. The appointment will be made, not on the results of examination, but after consideration of documentary and other evidence. Every holder of a Fellowship will be expected to devote his time to the prosecution of some special study approved of by the Council. Further particulars may be obtained on application to the Principal. Candidates must send in their applications in writing on or before the 1st October next.

J. HOLME NICHOLSON, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

The PROFESSORSHIP OF ARCHITECTURE will be VACANT at the Close of the Session. Applications for the Appointment will be received on or before JUNE 25TH.

TALFOURD ELY, M.A., Secretary.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—KENSINGTON

HOUSE, Calverley Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. R. STEBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 200 Guineas.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY, MANCHESTER.

The STATUTES and REGULATIONS regarding DEGREES, EXAMINATIONS, and COURSES of STUDY are now published. Students and others desirous of information may obtain copies on application to the Registrar.

R. ADAMSON, Registrar.

THE ROAD TO RUIN.—The FIVE famous

PICTURES by W. P. FRITH, R.A., are NOW ON VIEW, by permission of the owner, Colonel ELLIS, at the ART UNION GALLERY, 112, Strand. 10 to 6. Admission by visiting card or Art Union receipt.

THE DECORATIVE ART EXHIBITION,

NOW OPEN at the NEW GALLERIES, 103, NEW BOND STREET, comprises Pictures, Designs, Sculpture, Works of Art in Metal, Pottery, Porcelain, Art Furniture, Oriental and every other description of Decorative Work. Admission is.

OLIVER CROMWELL, Etched by M.

WALTNER from the celebrated Miniature by SAMUEL COOPER in the collection of the Duke of Buccleuch, Now Ready.—P. & D. COLNAGHI & CO., 13 & 14, Pall Mall East.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

MONDAY, JULY 4TH, at 4 P.M.
MR. M. V. PORTMAN will read a PAPER on "THE ANDAMAN ISLANDS and the ANDAMANESSE."
W. S. W. VAUX, Sec. Roy. Asiat. Soc.

HERBERT EXHIBITION.—A LOAN

COLLECTION OF THIRTY-FIVE PICTURES, including "THE JUDGMENT OF DANIEL" (the young Daniel in Babylon convicting the accusers of Susanna), Painted for the House of Lords by J. R. HERBERT, R.A.—"We feel assured that this beautiful work will be received with acclamation as one of the grandest pleasures of our time."—Times.—ON VIEW at the HANOVER GALLERY, 47, NEW BOND STREET. Admission, One Shilling. 9.30 to 6.

CURIOUS AND UNCOMMON BOOKS.—

Catalogue, post-free, from J. TEAL, Bookseller, 16, Southgate, Halifax.

PAINTING FROM NATURE.—Mr. J. W.

LUXTON KNIGHT is prepared to take a STUDENT on his SUMMER SKETCHING TOUR.—Address, Palace Chambers, St. Stephen's, 9, Bridge-street, Westminster.

ARUNDEL SOCIETY.—NEW OCCA-

SIONAL PUBLICATIONS.

The following Chromo-lithographs by Messrs. Storey & Kramer have just been brought out by the Society for separate sale:—

1. "THE VISION OF S. CATHARINE," from the Fresco by Bazzi (Sodoma) in S. Donato, Siena. Price to Members, 21s.; to Strangers, 27s. 6d.

2. SEPULCHRAL MONUMENT OF CAN GRANDE DELLA SCALA, at Verona. Price to Members, 10s.; to Strangers, 12s. 6d.

3. DITTO OF COUNT CASTELBARCO, at Verona. Same price.

A Prospectus, with descriptions and reduced Engravings of these three subjects, may be obtained gratis on application to the Secretary.

ARUNDEL SOCIETY.—FORMER

PUBLICATIONS.

Classified Lists of all the former Publications of the Society, including Chromo-lithographs from the Works of the greatest Painters of the early Italian, Flemish, and German Schools, with Prices of those still on Sale to Members and Strangers, at from 10s. to 45s., may be obtained by application to the Secretary.

Frames and Portfolios for the Society's Publications are also sold at the Office.

24, Old Bond-street, W. F. LAMBE PRICE, Sec.

RARE ETCHINGS, ENGRAVINGS, and

DRAWINGS by the most esteemed OLD MASTERS may be obtained at GEORGE LOVE'S OLD PRINT SHOP, 81, BUNHILL ROW, LONDON. The Engravings, &c., are in fine condition, and have formed portions of the most celebrated collections. A Catalogue of a small portion of the Stock will be sent on receipt of two penny postage stamps.

* Established above 60 years.

"THE EVENING NEWS," a

Halfpenny Liberal Evening Paper, will be published early in JULY. Offices: 83, 84, & 85, Farringdon-street, London, E.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

NEW AND CHOICE BOOKS.

See MUDIE'S LIBRARY CIRCULAR for JULY.

Ready early next week. Postage free on application.

The New Edition of MUDIE'S LIBRARY CIRCULAR contains the Lives of Bishop Wilberforce, Lord Campbell,

Dr. Whewell, &c.—Travels in Africa, by Major Pinto,

Dr. Holub, Joseph Thomson, &c.—Mrs. Guthrie's Life in Western India—Wood Magic, by R. Jefferies—Sunrise, by William Black; and nearly Eight Hundred other Recent Works of acknowledged Merit and General Interest.

CHEAP AND SCARCE BOOKS.

See MUDIE'S CLEARANCE CATALOGUE for JULY.

Ready early next week. Postage free on application.

The New Edition of MUDIE'S CLEARANCE CATA-

LOGUE contains Carlyle's Reminiscences—Miss Bird's

Japa—Othman's Land of Gilead—McCarthy's History of Our Own Times—Stirling's Old Drury Lane—Trollope's

Life of Cicero—Mary Marston, by George MacDonald—

Lord Beaconsfield's Endymion; and more than One Thousand other Popular Books of the Past and Present

Seasons at the lowest current prices.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED),
NEW OXFORD STREET.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

For JULY, 1881. No. DCCLXXXIX. Price 2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

DESIEGED IN THE TRANSVAAL: THE DEFENCE OF STANDERTON
REMINISCENCES OF PRISON-LIFE.
THE LAND OF KHEMI.—PART II.—THE LABYRINTH AND THE LAKES.
THE PRIVATE SECRETARY.—PART IX.
A FRENCH LADY AND HER FRIENDS.
KINO MEMBA'S POINT: A WEST AFRICAN STORY.
RECOLLECTIONS À LA FOURCHETTE.
TUNIS.
ANDREW WILSON.

Edinburgh and London: WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS.

Price 7d.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL

For JULY 1.

Little Men and Little Women.
Some Stories about Dogs.
A Girl's Adventure.
The Cost of a General Election.
Sells. Conclusion.
Some Curious Fashion Freaks.
Island Life.
A Day or Two in the Isle of Man.
The Family Diamonds.
Wild Fowl—Farming Pay?
Printers' Blunders.
On the Use of Flowers.
The "White Water" of the Arabian Sea.
Asylums and the Insane
Some Whimsical Parish Customs.
Art in Manners.
Monkeys in Confinement.
A Chapter of Real Life.
An Hour with a Farmer of the Old School.
Ramblings among the Hills.
Irish Matchmaking.
Rabbits in New Zealand.
Odd Offences.
The Mouth: Science and Art.
The Sea-Shell Division.
Three Poetical Pieces.

THE FORTUNES OF BERTRAM OAKLEY.
By J. B. HARWOOD.—Chapters XXVI.—XXXII.

London and Edinburgh: W. & R. CHAMBERS.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 261. For JULY. Price 1s.

CONTENTS OF THE NUMBER.

1. FROM the CAMBRIDGE LECTURE-ROOMS: BONAPARTE. By Professor J. R. SEELEY.
2. THE PORTRAIT of a LADY. By HENRY JAMES, Jun. Chapters XXXIX.—XLII.
3. A PEEP at FRENCH SCHOOLS. By JAMES BONAR.
4. A SUNFLOWER. By M. B.
5. OTHELLO at the LYCEUM.
6. WORKHOUSE INFIRMARIES. By STANLEY LANE-POOLE.
7. THE FIRST ENGLISH POET. By WILLIAM ALLINGHAM.
8. IN WYOMING. By Professor ARCHIBALD GRIKIE, F.R.S., F.G.S., &c.

London: MACMILLAN & CO.

On July 1st will be published, Part I., 2s. 6d.,

THE MICROGRAPHIC DICTIONARY:

a Guide to the Examination and Investigation of the Structure and Nature of Microscopic Objects. By J. W. GRIFFITH, M.D., &c., and ARTHUR HENFREY, F.R.S., &c., Professor of Botany in King's College, London. Fourth Edition. Illustrated by Fifty-three Plates and more than Eight Hundred Woodcuts. Edited by Dr. GRIFFITH, assisted by the Rev. M. J. BECKLEY and Professor T. RUPERT JONES. To be completed in about Twenty-one Monthly Parts.

London: JOHN VAN VOORST, 1, Paternoster-row.

ENGLISH ETCHINGS: a Monthly

Publication of Original Etchings, the work of English Artists. Part I., JUNE. Price 3s. 6d.; Japanese Proof Plates, £1 1s.

CONTENTS OF PART II. (JULY).

IRROQUOIS, the WINNER of the DERBY, 1881. By PERCY THOMAS F.S.P.E.

BAITING his HOOK. By A. W. BAYES.

A STUDY from NATURE. By M. SNAPE.

FERNS. By F. E. DE ST. DALMAN.

London: WILLIAM REEVES, Publisher, 185, Fleet-street.

Now ready, Vol. XII.—EGYPTIAN TEXTS.

RECORDS of the PAST:

Being English Translations of the Assyrian and Egyptian Monuments.

Published under the sanction of the Society of Biblical Archaeology.

Edited by S. BIRCH, LL.D.

With an Index to the Contents of the Series. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

London: S. BAGSTER & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row.

Now ready, imp. 4to, cloth, price Three Guineas.

CHARITABLE and PAROCHIAL

ESTABLISHMENTS. By H. SAXON SMELL, Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects, Member of Council of the Sanitary Institute of Great Britain, &c., &c.

Illustrated with Forty-seven Lithographic Plates, besides Woodcuts of Plans, Elevations, and details of Houses, Workshops, Infirmeries, Casual Wards, schools, and such-like Establishments, erected and designed by the Author; also containing copious extracts from Official Documents of Government regulations for the erection of these classes of Buildings, and suggestions to Public Bodies contemplating the erection or alteration and enlargement of Buildings.

London: H. T. BATSFORD, 52, High Holborn.

FIVE POPULAR NOVELS.

"POLICY and PASSION

is of quite exceptional interest, and the power displayed in it is beyond the common. As the book contains besides some capital sketches of character, much fresh and original landscape, and is of singular interest as an étude de mœurs, it is evidently a book to be warmly recommended and widely read."—Truth.

"POLICY and PASSION

is a novel of considerable power and of decided interest."—Athenæum.

"POLICY and PASSION

is a remarkably good book, abundantly supplied with sketches of character."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"POLICY and PASSION

is, beyond question, a powerful and interesting book. . . . In Thomas Longleaf we have a masterly sketch."—Vanity Fair.

"AN OCEAN FREE LANCE

n respect of variety, spirit, vivid energy, and mastery of touch, is amply worthy of the author, who has never yet been surpassed by anyone who has written of the sea."—Graphic.

"AN OCEAN FREE LANCE, is crammed full of daring combats, alarming sea-fogs, and adventures. A storm in mid-ocean is described as powerfully as the famous storm on land in 'David Copperfield.'"—Vanity Fair.

LIEUTENANT BARNABAS. By

FRANK BARRETT, Author of "Polly Morrison." 3 vols., crown 8vo.

THE CAMERONIANS. By James

GRANT, Author of "The Romance of War," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

TWO PRETTY GIRLS. By Miss

M. A. LEWIS. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

Also early next week will be published

A NEW NOVEL,

ENTITLED

KING LAZARUS,

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street.

At all Booksellers'.

THE CORRESPONDENCE of TAL-

LEYRAND and LOUIS XVIII. during the CONGRESS of VIENNA. With a Preface, Observations, and Notes by M. G. PALLAIN. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 21s.

"These letters are delightful reading. . . . Written with a literary skill and a grim humour which are delightful."—Vanity Fair.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,

NEW BURLINGTON STREET,

Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

SMITH, ELDER, & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

On June 29 (One Shilling), No. 259.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For JULY.

With Illustrations by GEORGE DU MAURIER and W. SMALL.

CONTENTS.

A GRAPE from a THORN. By JAMES PAYN. (With an Illustration.) Chap. XXVII.—A Female Champion. XXVIII.—Dying Words. XXIX.—A Friend in Need. XXX.—A Charitable Committee. XXXI.—Declined with Thanks.

SAMUEL PEPEY. The Diary—A Liberal Genius—Respectability. PAULINE: a Dramatic Tale. By JULIAN HAWTHORNE. I.—The Artist and his Friends. II.—Lewen from America. III.—Artist and Pupil. IV.—The Prima Donna. V.—Diplomatic Service.

HECTOR BERLIOZ: a Biography.

A NEW STUDY of TENNYSON.—III.

LOVE the DEBT. (With an Illustration.) Chap. XX.—Won by a Neck. XXI.—Struggles of the Infant Church. XXII.—Mabel's Reprieve.

In his address at the London University on Presentation Day, EARL GRANVILLE said: "I am also greatly pleased that a Deaf and Dumb gentleman trained by the Rev. Thomas Arnold has passed the matriculation examination."

Now ready, crown 4to, price 15s.

A METHOD of TEACHING the DEAF and DUMB SPEECH, LIP-READING, and LANGUAGE.

With Illustrations and Exercises.

By THOMAS ARNOLD.

MR. J. A. SYMONDS' "RENAISSANCE IN ITALY."

Ready immediately, 2 vols., demy 8vo, with a Portrait of the Author, price 32s.

RENAISSANCE in ITALY: Italian Literature.

By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS, M.A., Author of "Studies of the Greek Poets," "Sketches in Italy and Greece," &c.

Being Vols. IV. and V. of "Renaissance in Italy," and concluding the Work.

CHURCH and CHAPEL:

Sermons on the Church of England and Dissent.

Edited by the Rev. R. H. HADDEN, B.A., Curate of St. Botolph, Bishopsgate.

With Introduction by the Very Rev. the DEAN of WESTMINSTER.

Crown 8vo.

[In the press.]

Large crown 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE.

Certain Selected Plays, Abridged for the Use of the Young.

By SAMUEL BRANDRAM, M.A. Oxon.

"Mr. Brandram, whose emphatic readings have done so much towards an intelligent appreciation of Shakespeare, has added another claim on our gratitude by his publication of 'Selected Plays, Abridged for the Use of the Young.'"—Guardian.

With Four Illustrations, crown 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

MISS WILLIAMSON'S DIVAGATIONS.

By MISS THACKERAY (MRS. RICHMOND RITCHIE).

Reprinted from the Cornhill Magazine, &c.

"Miss Thackeray has, as a writer of fiction, such a special gift that we gladly welcome her re-appearance in volume form. No novelist of the present day has anything approaching to her two powers—of making little things tell in description by simply adjusting them properly to their surroundings, and of striking a gently sarcastic rather than cynical humour out of the most ordinary circumstances. These powers come out especially in the first and last stories in this volume."—Academy.

Crown 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

FARMING IN A SMALL WAY.

By JAMES LONG.

Author of "Poultry for Prizes and Profit," "The Goat," &c.

"We heartily recommend all who are interested in farming in a small way to secure it while there is yet time."—Gardener's Magazine.

NEW NOVELS.

MRS. GEOFFREY.

By the Author of "Molly Bawn," "Phyllis," "Beauty's Daughters," &c. 3 vols., post 8vo.

"We are glad to find that the author of 'Phyllis' and of 'Molly Bawn' has lost none of her former cunning. There is a freshness and vigour about her style which is particularly fascinating, and amidst so much that is dull and flaccid in recent fiction it is pleasant to meet with so bright and attractive a story as 'Mrs. Geoffrey.'"—John Bull.

FOUR CROTCHETS to a BAR.

By the Author of "The Gwilliams."

3 vols., post 8vo.

[Just published.]

CLIFFORD GRAY: a Romance of Modern Life.

By W. M. HARDINGE. 1 vol., post 8vo.

[In a few days.]

London: SMITH, ELDER, & Co., 15, Waterloo-place.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO.'S

LIST.

ENGLAND FROM AN AMERICAN POINT OF VIEW.

ENGLAND: Without and Within. By

RICHARD GRANT WHITE. Now ready, 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d.

EPITOME OF CONTENTS.

A "Yankee's" View of English Society—English Skies—Eating and Drinking—England on the Rails—British Railways: their Excellence and Comfort—Manners of Railway Officials—London Streets—Trustfulness of Traders—London Omnibuses and Conductors—Beggars—Living in London—A Sunday on the Thames—A Day at Windsor—Eton Boys—A Little Prig—Rural England—Farmers—Cottages—English Villages—English Men—Superiority of Sex—English Women: Distinctive Traits, Types of Beauty, Dress, Intelligence, Tone—English Manners—Some Habits of English Life—"Nobility and Gentry"—Sports—Parks and Palaces—The Language of the English—John Bull—Oxford and Cambridge—Drink—The English Shires—Shakespeare—Random Recollections—British Philistinism—Greatness and Glory of England.

Now ready, small post 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

THE CHOICE of BOOKS. By Charles

F. RICHARDSON. This book is neatly printed on hand-made paper, rough edges, and bound in parchment.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s. 6d.

STUDIES of ASSASSINATION. By Wirt

Sikes, Author of "British Goblins," &c.

ON the INDIAN HILLS; or, Coffee Planting

in Southern India. By EDWIN LESTER AAROLD, Author of "A Summer Holiday in Scandinavia," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 24s. [Ready.]

Now ready, small 4to, cloth extra, gilt edges, price 10s.

FARM FESTIVALS. By Will Carlton,

Author of "Farm Ballads." Copyright.

Now ready, in 2 vols. (over 1,200 pages), demy 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, price 32s.

LIFE of VOLTAIRE. By James Parton.

With Two fine Portraits.

Now ready, royal 8vo, cloth extra, price 21s.

VOLUME VIII. of GUIZOT'S HISTORY of FRANCE. Completing the Work. Fully Illustrated.

* * The eight volumes of this most complete and splendidly illustrated History of France, by one of the greatest of modern historians, can now be had, royal 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, price 21s. each volume.

Now ready, price 8s. 6d.

THE HALF-YEARLY VOLUME of

HARPER'S MAGAZINE. With over 400 Illustrations. Royal 8vo, cloth extra, price 8s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS.

Now ready, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

SURRENDER. By Leslie Keith, Author of

"A Simple Maiden."

Now ready, crown 8vo, 3 vols., price 31s. 6d.

DAVID BROOME, Artist. By Mrs. Robert

O'REILLY, Author of "Phoebe's Fortunes," "Sussex Stories," &c.

Now ready, 2 vols., price 21s.

JAMES WOODFORD, Carpenter and

Charlist. By HENRY SOLLY.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON,

Crown-buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 25, 1881.

No. 477, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Os Lusíadas (The Lusíads). Englished by Richard Francis Burton. (London: Bernard Quaritch.)

OF making of translations of the Lusíads there seems to be no end. When Mr. Aubertin, following in the wake of many previous translators, brought out his Englished Lusíads a year or two ago, a translation which included the Portuguese original side by side with a most creditable version, together with some capital illustrations of the text, there really seemed to be no need of further wrestling with the difficulties of this particular epic. Notwithstanding which, Mr. Duff has since done the poem into rhymed stanzas not without good taste and fidelity; and since this again, a translation into verse has been published by an American gentleman, whose chief title to praise is his industry.

With Capt. Burton's version before him, the first feeling of the critic is one of wonder that anyone should be bold enough to turn his hand to so hackneyed a task, and the second some curiosity to see how so accomplished a literary veteran has fared in his enterprise.

It may be said at once that Capt. Burton's translation is beyond all comparison the closest, the most flexible, and the most poetic version that has yet appeared of the great Portuguese epic. It is not to be denied, however, that the translator, if he is faithful to his original, has committed some considerable infidelities towards his own language. He strains and contorts our native tongue sometimes fearfully; foreign and classic idioms come freely to his pen; he borrows an archaic word, or a provincial, or a purely technical, or a Scotch word, or a Latin or German, without compunction; and, rather than not fit his text with an equivalent and his stanza with a rhythm or a rhyme, he will boldly coin a new word of his own. Capt. Burton is a man of extensive and recondite acquirements, and he presupposes in his readers an acquaintance almost as extensive as his own with strange learning and with the multifarious occupations of mankind. Simple English readers may sometimes be tempted to exclaim with Dangle in The Critic, "Egad, I think the interpreter is the hardest to understand of the two;" and even sometimes have to recur to the original to clear away an obscurity in the translation. The present writer is obliged to confess that his grave task of criticism has been relieved by occasional amusement, as he reflected upon the consternation of translators of the more sedate and conventional sort at the licence which Capt. Burton has allowed himself. Mr. Aubertin, for instance, whose moderate praise was sounded in this very Review, and by this very pen, a short time ago—what can he think of the new version? He sat down before the Lusíads with all the pomp of regular warfare, and, if he did not take the stronghold, he made a good siege of it; and now he sees the place fall to what he must consider an attack against all the rules of war. Though Capt. Burton expressly disclaims the idea of his effort being the final attempt at rendering the epic of the great Portuguese poet, soldier, traveller, and scholar, it is to be supposed that no one will attempt it after him, for no translator can again be expected to combine the qualifications of Capt. Burton, who, like Camoens, is himself at once a traveller, a scholar, a littérateur, a soldier, and, as he now incontestably proves himself to be, a true poet.

The truth is, that, if Camoens was to be translated at all, it was not to be done on the old lines. In most versions into foreign languages, except one into Spanish, the Lusíads appear as a bald, an artificial, and a very wearisome performance—a farrago of foreign adventure, of geography, of patriotic and inaccurate history, and of doubtful classicism. The attitude of the intelligent foreign critic has mostly been, "It must be good, for the Portuguese say so, and they ought to know." The truth is that Camoens wrote an impossible epos, but, being a great poet and an exquisite stylist, he left the mark of genius on his stanzas. That mark has unfortunately as a rule been effaced by the translators into staid English verse, with all the sins upon them of omission and commission common to the majority of translators. The fire that burns in this Portuguese Odyssey has certainly never warmed the reader of the epic in an English version. To say that in Capt. Burton's version there is all of this same fire and poetic fervour would be to say of his translation what cannot be said of any translation of any great poet. It cannot be said even of Fairfax, or of Carey, or of Tieck, that they have mirrored more than a faint likeness of Tasso, of Dante, and of Shakspeare; and of Capt. Burton all that can be said is that in his lines the English reader will find the most living image yet given of the great Portuguese epos. A critic may entertain reasonable doubts whether Capt. Burton's method be absolutely a fair one, but the translator may urge that by no other could his task be accomplished at all; and, after a little charitable consideration, such hard words as "to weet" and "to nill," "val-varte," "fair-faxt," "treachetour," "sprent," "salty," "whilere," "haught," and "sit-hence" will come to seem no stumbling-blocks at all. Capt. Burton's version has been called archaic, but so is the Portuguese of the original; it is the Portuguese of three hundred years ago, and even when it was written it was hardly more the language of its own day than the Faerie Queen was the English spoken by Spenser's contemporaries. It was, therefore, I think, good judgment in Capt. Burton to turn the Lusíads into a somewhat archaic English.

It remains to pick out a line or a stanza here and there for remark, and though, as may easily be supposed, in the turning of such a multitude of stanzas, one now and again may prove altogether refractory, the present writer will not stoop to so mean and easy a way of discharging the critic's function as to pick out such exceptional failures, but rather he will set forth a few extracts of the kind that, in the eyes of the critics best qualified to judge—the Portuguese—make the glory of the poem. The reader shall judge how the translator has Englished these passages.

Like all of the Latin race, the Portuguese delight in rhetoric, even though it adorns a commonplace, and approve the man who can turn what common men think or feel into a glowing phrase. They delight, therefore, in the grandiose rhetoric of Camoens; and when it is in the patriotic vein, as it mostly is, they are carried to enthusiasm. Our own too well-known boast, that the sun never sets on our empire, was made long before we had a right to make it, and the stanza in which the boast is made is not only a fine specimen of Camoens' verse, but a special test for the translator.

"Vós, poderoso Rei, cujo alto imperio
O Sol, logo em nascendo, vê primeiro,
Vê-o também no meio do hemispherio,
E, quando desce, o deixa derradeiro:
Vós, que esperamos jugo, e vituperio
Do torpe Ismaelita cavalleiro,
Do Tarco oriental, e do gentio,
Que inda bebe o licor do sancto rio."

The monarch addressed is that King Sebastian whose unwise warlike zeal carried him to Africa to lose his army and his life, and to wreck his country's fortunes on the field of Alcaer Quibir. The Sancto Rio of the last line is the sacred River Ganges. Burton is surely very happy in

"Thou, mighty sovran! o'er whose lofty reign
The rising Sun rains earliest smile of light;
Sees it from middle firmamental plain;
And sights it sinking on the breast of Night:
Thou, whom we hope to hail the blight, the bane
Of the dishonoured Ishmaëlitish knight,
And Orient Turk, and Gentoo-misbeliever
That drinks the liquor of the Sacred River."

Next to his patriotic rhetoric, the Portuguese admire Camoens' sentimental rhetoric, and some of this I would quote too, but that the tender strains of love do not seem very congenial to Capt. Burton's pen. At any rate, his rendering of these passages is not quite so felicitous as of some others, and I will leave, therefore, the much-cited episode of Ignez de Castro for once unquoted. On the other hand, Capt. Burton is admirable where Camoens has no equal but Homer himself—where the poet deals with stirring feats of arms. Few more vivid battle-pieces exist in verse or prose than that in which Camoens, describing how the Moors tempted the Portuguese to an ambush only to meet their own defeat, likens them to a bull-fighter who taunts the bull in bravado, and is himself gored to death.

"Qual no corro sanguino o ledo amante,
Vendo a formosa dama desejada,
O touro busca, e pondo-se diante,
Salta, corre, sibila, acena e brada;
Mas o animal atroz nesse instante,
Com a fronte cornigera inclinada,
Bramando duro corre, e os olhos cerra,
Derriba, fere, e mata e põe por terra."

The wonderful spirit of this stanza, its terse linking of familiar images, and the swiftness of its utterance are aptly rendered by Burton's

"As in the gory ring some gallant gay,
On his fair ladye-love with firm-fixt eyes,
Seeketh the furious bull, and hars the way,
Bounds, runs and whistles; becks and shouts
and cries:
The cruel monster sans a thought's delay,
Lowering its hornéd front, in fury flies
With eyne fast closed; and, roaring horrid sound, Throws, gores, and leaves him lifeless on the ground."

To a Portuguese, Camoens is an omnis homo, as Shakspeare to us. His countrymen find in him all poetic, all descriptive, all narrative, all pathetic, all romantic excellence—nil fetigit quod non ornavit; and the Lusiads furnish many a text of practical philosophy. I select from among scores of wise maxims a home-truth from the camp—a truism, perhaps, but useful, and most excellently expressed—

"A disciplina milltar prestante
Não se apprehende, Senhor, na phantasia
Sonhando, imaginando ou estudando
Senão vendo, tratando e pelejando."

Here again the English is not far behind, if, indeed, it is not quite equal to, the strength and energy of the original:

"Senhor! the soldiers' discipline is more Than men may learn by mother-fancy guided:
Not musing, dreaming, reading what they write;
'Tis seeing, doing, fighting, teach to fight."

With such a really good translation as Capt. Burton's before one, it is a moment when we may measure the vast distance that separates a great work of genius from even the best conceivable version of it into a foreign tongue, and one may in this case, not invidiously, start this query, Did ever a translator, since the world began, achieve a translation which, were the original unknown, would gain him a second-rate, a third-rate, or even a fourth-rate reputation in the world of letters?

Be the answer to this melancholy question what it may, Capt. Burton has in the volumes before us sounded, for the first time, an echo not unworthy of the "great organ-voice" of Portugal. OSWALD CRAWFORD.

The Register of the Visitors of the University of Oxford, from A.D. 1647 to A.D. 1658.
Edited by Montagu Burrows. (Camden Society.)

THE Camden Society continues to render a large amount of unobtrusive service to the cause of historical studies in this country, and the present volume will probably attract the attention of a wider circle than many in the same series. Its main value lies in the refutation which it affords of the criticism so often directed against the Puritan régime as altogether illiberal in relation to learning. If, indeed, we were to accept the representations of the Caroline writers after the Restoration who profess to describe the condition of the universities during the Protectorate, the Puritan would appear worthy of being classed only with the Vandal or the Lombard. Fortunately, the Register before us, which at that time would have been ignominiously spurned from the university registry, found shelter at the Bodleian, and has survived to afford an effective refutation of such calumny. Prof. Burrows, who rightly describes the volume as presenting "a unique opportunity of studying the principles on which the authorities of the Commonwealth acted, and of watching in its very origin and secret recesses the struggle between the conflicting forces of politics and religion at that remarkable period," sums up the valuable Introduction which he has prefixed to this record by concluding that "no other visitation or commission during the whole long and eventful history of Oxford University ever had such a task to accomplish," and that "perhaps none, if we consider the circumstances of the times, ever did the work entrusted to them better."

The work was certainly not carried on with violence or precipitancy. The order of Parliament for a visitation was not issued until May 1, 1647; the Register of the visitors does not commence until September 30 in the same year, and assumes a continuous form only from the following March. Substantially, it may be said to be the record of a struggle between the party in possession and the party in power, carried on with much ingenuity and pertinacity by the former and with no less coolness and resolution by the latter. Landlords at the present time seeking to evict their shifty, impecunious, and refractory tenantry in Ireland will be able to enter into these records with almost sympathetic interest. Prof. Burrows, indeed, asserts that "it is impossible to read the hundreds of different replies given in the Register without a deep interest. Every shade of ingenuity is to be found expressed. Every sort of spirit is to be traced, from the jaunty, contemptuous, and sometimes witty answer of the seasoned Cavalier, regarding the loss of his fellowship or scholarship, just as he would a bullet in battle, as the fortune of war, to the pitiful, almost agonised wail of the man who is giving up all with infinite reluctance for conscience' sake, and thinks he may even yet soften the hearts of his judges."

It is worthy of note that the measures characterised by greater severity appear to have emanated from the London committee, who were all laymen, and not from the visitors themselves, who were mostly clergymen. The first Board, headed by Reynolds, the Dean of Christ Church, was Presbyterian in its composition. It was succeeded in June 1652 by another, in which the Independent element predominated, and whose action was marked by greater vigour and determination. A third Board, appointed January 1653-4, carried on the work of reform with equal or even increased energy. Among the different members, three figures—those of the successive Vice-Chancellors, Dr. Edward Reynolds, Dr. John Owen (the well-known writer), and Dr. John Conant—stand out in strong relief. They were alike men of distinguished learning; and each supported, though with a somewhat varying interpretation, what he believed to be the cause of primitive Christianity and the Elizabethan Church. Of Conant, whose successful government of Exeter College did so much to raise that society in public estimation, we have an interesting sketch. He was distinguished by his uncompromising opposition to Cromwell's scheme for the foundation of a university at Durham. Conant's biographer, however, refers to this fact in terms which are calculated to leave a somewhat erroneous impression on the minds of his readers—namely, that it was through Conant's efforts that the "grant was stifled." Cromwell carried his scheme into effect some eight years later; but the grant was rescinded at the Restoration, when the deans and prebendaries of Durham were re-installed. "There had previously," says Mr. Burrows, been a similar movement in favour of York." He might have added, "and of Manchester," both these towns, though the population of the former was scarcely ten thousand, that of the latter not six thousand, having petitioned to be made universities in the year 1641.

There is not a little here that serves to illustrate the character of Cromwell, and, as is generally the case, with a favourable result. He was Chancellor of the university in 1653; and it is to his "keen instinct" that Mr. Burrows assigns the recognition of the necessity of restoring the universities "as soon as it was safe" to their "ancient dignified position." It was chiefly, indeed, owing to his firmness that they were not altogether suppressed by the Barebones Parliament. Vestrae utique benevolentiae acceptum deferimus quod hodie superstites sint Aademiae eruditionis officinae—such was the language of Oxford on presenting the congratulatory address on his assumption of the Protectorate.

Strange to say, the university came out of the long ordeal not only still vigorous, but apparently benefited by the Puritan discipline. Anthony Wood is obliged, sadly against the grain, to concede as much; while Clarendon, much puzzled at the phenomenon, endeavours to find an explanation by supposing some innate selective faculty in "so rich a soil," which "choked the weeds, and would not suffer the poisonous seeds, which were sown with industry enough, to spring up." Mr. Burrows very justly observes that the Laudian and the Puritan schools had this important conception in common: that the enforcement of strict discipline was absolutely essential, "along with religious influences which should pervade every portion of university and college life." The term "religious," however, must be taken in the right sense. What the history of such hodies really teaches us is that nothing is more prejudicial to their welfare than the introduction of Christian polemics and the assertion of any special interpretation of Christian dogma; but that, wherever the essential teaching of Christian ethics is enforced, bringing with it simple habits of life, and the maintenance not only of authority, but also of genuine sympathy between the teacher and the taught, the student reaps the true advantage of university education, and the whole community prospers.

It is a little surprising to find a writer of Mr. Burrows' information co-ordinating the earlier history of the two universities in relation to the national religious history. He speaks of Oxford and Cambridge as having alike "powerfully aided the Reforming movement," and having, in consequence, "in spite of an occasional attack," been "sedulously protected in their property and privileges." In reality, up to the time of the Chancellorship of the Earl of Leicester, Oxford was a great centre of opposition to Reformation doctrine; and to Cambridge belongs the honour of having nurtured the Reformation in England and the more equivocal distinction of having fostered the development of our earlier and most extreme Puritanism. It is certain, again, that under the Tudors the privileges of both universities were unscrupulously invaded, the colleges cruelly despoiled, and it was, in fact, little short of a miracle that they escaped the fate of the monasteries.

J. BASS MULLINGER.

Twixt Greek and Turk; or, Jottings during a Journey through Thessaly, Macedonia, and Epirus, in the Autumn of 1880. By M. Valentine Chirol. (Blackwood.)

JUST as the convention has been signed between Greece and Turkey for the cession of Thessaly, Mr. Chirol presents us with a book relating to the regions which will, for some time to come, be the frontier lands of those two countries. The route which he followed has been described by other travellers before him, but none, in all probability, have made the journey under such adventurous circumstances. At Constantinople he was discouraged by the authorities from making the attempt, and consequently he was unable to obtain a firman to give official sanction to his expedition and facilitate his progress. As far as political agitation was concerned, there seems to have been little or nothing to endanger a traveller's safety; but the prevailing brigandage in Western Europe, of which we have heard much, but still only a part, was sufficient to deter even a stout-hearted explorer. Mr. Chirol ventured, however, and his boldness was rewarded with success. Throughout the greater part of his route he was attended by a considerable retinue of guards, but in the most dangerous district, in the neighbourhood of Mount Olympus, he had the good fortune to travel in the company of a Turkish Pasha, who was on his way from Larissa to Monastir, and was escorted by a sufficient force to defy the brigands. The journey was well planned, and included visits to most of the peoples of European Turkey. In this respect the title of the book hardly does it justice, for it comprises accounts, not only of Greeks and Turks, but also of Bulgarians, Wallachs, and Albanians.

Starting from Constantinople, Mr. Chirol made his way in a coasting steamer to Volo, which place afforded the safest approach to the interior of Thessaly. Here he was strongly impressed with the beauty of the land-locked bay, and the steep sides of Pelion, which overlook it, thickly clothed with trees, and dotted with numerous white villages. Crossing the Thessalian plain to Larissa, he remarks on the productiveness of the soil, and the consequent wealth of the province; notwithstanding which, he adds, Thessaly is practically bankrupt: "Constantinople devours all its wealth, and leaves to it only the burden of its debts." From Larissa to Monastir he made an excursion, the account of which is one of the most interesting parts of his book, for his route lay through the little-known passes to the west of Olympus, and the country of the Thessalian Wallachs, a large colony of whom is settled in this neighbourhood, being the chief representatives at the present day of that nation which, in the Middle Ages, caused Thessaly to be called Great Vlachia. After he entered Macedonia, he found himself almost immediately in the midst of a Bulgarian population, and this continued to be the case as he advanced northwards. After a short stay at Monastir, he returned to Larissa, but this time, having no friendly Pasha to escort him, he was obliged to make his way to the nearest station on the Salonica and Mitrovitza Railway, and approach once more by way of Volo. Before turning his face in the direction of the Adriatic he paid a visit to the Vale of Tempe; and his description of the famous gorge is especially graphic because he passed through it twice, once in sunshine and once in storm.

In the north-west of Thessaly, the place that most attracted Mr. Chirol was the rocks of Meteora, on which stand the famous monasteries of that name. Everyone who has read that delightful book, Curzon's Monasteries of the Levant, will remember the account it contains of those strange aerial abodes, each perched on its own columnar mass of conglomerate, the perpendicular sides of which have to be scaled, in some cases to a height of 200 feet, by a succession of ropeladders, though the visitor usually prefers "to trust the Church rather than his own private judgment," and to be hauled up by the monks in a net by means of a rope and pulley. Judging from Mr. Chirol's account, those who wish to perform this feat will do well not to delay, since these venerable institutions will soon be a thing of the past. Of the largest of them he says,

"There are only four occupants left in the monastery, which once counted over a hundred inmates. . . . The youngest of the four monks is over sixty; and, when the last one dies, the solitary servant of the monastery will climb down the face of the cliff . . . and the Great Monastery of Meteora will be abandoned to the havoc of the elements."

From this point Mr. Chirol crossed the Pindus and descended to Yanina, and thence visited the most interesting spots in Southern Epirus—the newly discovered site of Dodona, the castle and ruined villages of Suli, the gorge of the Acheron, and Parga. At the end of his journey, before crossing to Corfu, he had the luck to be present at a great demonstration in favour of autonomy on the part of the Mussulman Albanians of Epirus, to which he was conducted by a local chieftain.

The book is well and interestingly written. The author has an eye for the picturesque and considerable descriptive power, in consequence of which his sketches both of scenery and incidents are usually graphic. Nor is the element of humour wanting—as, for instance, when he describes a gathering of Christians and Moslems at a bishop's table, where his neighbour was "an ascetic and toothless Archimandrite, who at first evidently viewed the proceedings with grave doubts as to their orthodoxy, and occasionally relieved his mind by whispering, with a grim, sardonic smile, the name of Gladstone into my ear, as if it were a charm to exorcise evil spirits."

In reference to Eastern politics, he professes himself neutral; and perhaps, to judge from what he says in his Preface, he might be called, what a distinguished Eastern statesman used to call himself—anti-philo-anything. But the equipoise of opposing forces tends naturally to rest; and so, perhaps, in Mr. Chirol's case, it is owing to his feeling no very marked sympathies that, though he is reconciled to impending changes, he does not seem to regard them with much satisfaction. The Albanians appear to have attracted him more than any other nationality; while, as regards the Greeks, his feelings set rather in the opposite direction. Notwithstanding this, he shows a kindly spirit in appreciating the members of various nationalities with whom he was brought into contact; and, as he mixed with various classes of the people in the course of his journey, he has much to communicate with regard to their habits and ideas. It is especially on these points that the information contained in this volume is valuable.

H. F. TOZER.

Christian Institutions: Essays on Ecclesiastical Subjects. By A. P. Stanley, D.D., Dean of Westminster. (Murray.)

IT is no doubt desirable that the guides of public thought and action should be acquainted with the latest discoveries and most accurate knowledge attained by the students of subjects bearing on practical life; it would be desirable, if it were possible, that the most active and thorough students should guide men's thoughts and actions themselves. Unfortunately, this is seldom possible. Scientific study and practical influence alike require the devotion of a whole life. We have to acquiesce in a division of labour between the accurate student and the party leader, and must be satisfied if the second does not ignore or condemn the first. The result is not often happy when he endeavours to compete with him; either he speaks with the crudity of an amateur on a question which he has only half studied, not having the time or the disciplined habits for more; or else, if he began as a genuine student and had knowledge that might at one time have formed the starting-point of a scientific career, the exigencies of practical life oblige him to apply his knowledge faster than he can develop it—to live on his intellectual capital instead of investing it.

It is not the work of the ACADEMY to enquire into Dr. Stanley's merits as a leader of contemporary theological thought; but it is our duty to say that his work as a student of Christian antiquity is spoiled by his habit of investigating every question with a purpose, and making its solution point to what he thinks theologically true and practically edifying. We are familiar with that method in the hands of conservative or reactionary theologians, and in them the method has often been condemned; but it is the method itself that is in fault, not the particular conclusions sought to be supported by it. When a liberal thinker adopts the same method, the result is no more dispassionate or scientific, but only rather more incongruous.

The essays in this volume have most if not all of them appeared as magazine articles already. We are told that they were "written at long intervals of time," and this might excuse occasional inconsistencies of detail between them; * though, in collecting them to "form a connected whole," it might have been well if the author had modified whatever did not express his deliberate and final judgment. But a more serious fault is the habitual inaccuracy which characterises the book, where the author ventured to write from his general knowledge without fresh study of his authorities. Some of these inaccuracies are so gross that nothing can excuse them except a frank confession of hurry and pressing practical duties—a confession, in fact, that the work is a pamphlet in ecclesiastical politics, not a study of ecclesiastical antiquity.

It is not pleasant to have to speak in this tone of a man who has attained, and in his own way merited, so high a position as Dean Stanley; and such a criticism as this ought not to be made without instances to substantiate it. Here are a few:—

P. 17.—"Last of all [innovations in the mode of administering baptism] the strong, though silent, protest against the magical theory of baptism itself was effected in the postponement of the rite of confirmation."

Has Dr. Stanley never read in the Lives of SS. Anselm and Hugh how, in the eleventh and following centuries, bishops were beset on their journeys and requested to confirm those who had been, doubtless, baptised in infancy? Apparently, moreover, confirmation was then desired on the "magical" theory, not, as in the modern English Church, because it gave occasion for a conscious repetition of the baptismal profession.

P. 20.—"Baptism by sprinkling was rejected by the whole ancient Church (except in the rare case of death-beds or extreme necessity) as no baptism at all. Almost the first exception was the heretic Novatian."

Novatian was not an exception; he was baptised by sprinkling on what was supposed to be a death-bed. And though his ordination after this baptism was irregular, and though the way it is spoken of by St. Cornelius (ap. Eus. vi. 43) seems as though sprinkling were thought an improper way of administering baptism, yet the recognition of Novatian orders proves that "the whole ancient Church" regarded it as valid. One may add that Novatian is blamed for not coming "to be sealed by the bishop"—i.e., to be confirmed, as a rite separate from baptism.

P. 69.—"In the 141st Psalm, the Psalmist says, 'Let the lifting up of my hands in prayer be to thee as the evening sacrifice.'"

The italicised words are neither in the original nor in the English version (at least not in the one most familiar to Churchmen). However, though not a correct quotation of half a verse, this is a fair paraphrase of the whole; but it is more serious when we are told of the 51st Psalm "rejecting altogether burnt-offerings and sacrifices for sin." There is probably a confusion between the 51st and the 40th Psalms in the form of the quotation;

* E.g., on p. 29 we are told, "In the early centuries it was only the bishop" that baptised, and it was only gradually that "the right was extended at last to laymen, and, in defiance of all early usage, to women;" while on p. 136 we read, "baptism, according to the rules of the ancient Church, can be performed by anyone."

but, anyway, the last verse of the 51st proves that the Psalmist, though conscious of the inadequacy of such sacrifices, and the need of something more spiritual, does not venture to "reject them altogether."

P. 117.—"In one of the three undisputed, or at any rate least disputed, Epistles of Ignatius of Antioch, 'The Blood of Christ,' he said, 'is love or charity.'"

This is indeed correct; that is, the words are a fair extract, though not an exact quotation, from the glorious passage at the end of the 7th chapter of the Epistle to the Romans, the "least disputed" of all the Ignatian writings. But Dr. Stanley will make a blunder, and puts a reference to Ad Trall. 8; where, indeed, the same sentiment does occur, but which is not one of the three undisputed Epistles.

P. 208.—"It was by virtue of his pontificate that Julius Caesar, in his pontifical residence, enabled Clodius to penetrate into the convent of the Vestals close by."

After that, we need quote no more. Caesar was not a devotee to the Roman gods, nor a purist in morals; and his screening Clodius after his sacrilegious escapade was not very creditable. But the man who describes Caesar as acting "by virtue of his pontificate" as an incestuous pandar, has forgotten the history of Pagan Rome, and has only half learnt that of Christian.

Of course, Dean Stanley cannot write a book that shall not be clever, and some of the chapters are, regarded as pamphlets, decidedly telling ones. That on "Ecclesiastical Vestments" is tolerably free from blunders in its history, and would be quite satisfactory but for a rather characteristic disposition to maximise the perversity of opponents. Perhaps the worst instance of this is in the paper on "The Roman Catacombs" (p. 263):—

"Perhaps if they [the forms of epitaph used in them] were now used they would be thought Deistic, or Theistic, or Pantheistic, or Atheistic."

But that article has some really suggestive observations on the difference between the literary and the popular religion of an age; that on "The Council and Creed of Constantinople" brings out very well the seamy side of the so-called Primitive Church; and, to anyone who knows more than the author about the subject, the book, as a whole, may be really of use as disentangling those usages and ideas which the Tractarians used to group under the title of "Primitive," whether they dated from the first century, the third, or the fifth.

WILLIAM HENRY SIMCOX.

TWO BOOKS ON RIDING.

Ladies on Horseback. By Mrs. Power O'Donoghue. (Chatto & Windus.)

How to Ride and School a Horse. With a System of Horse Gymnastics. By Edward L. Anderson. (W. H. Allen.)

THE first of these books, which are both issued by the same publishers, is a reprint of papers that appeared in the Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News, containing practical advice to ladies in the road and the hunting-field by a lady who is undoubtedly qualified from personal knowledge to give such advice. Mrs. O'Donoghue is not only a high-class horsewoman who can take her place in the first flight in the hunting-field and hold her own across country with the Empress of Austria herself, but she describes her experiences in a natural and spirited manner that may fairly bear comparison with the best class of male sporting writers, the late Major Whyte-Melville, or the great Nimrod himself.

To be a fine horsewoman is undoubtedly a gift of Nature granted to few, and one that by most cannot be acquired, as it is founded entirely on self-confidence and a love of the animal. Two girls may have exactly the same opportunities, and the one that by nature is nervous on horseback will never get over that fundamental difficulty, or be able to do more than sit in conscious terror on the best-trained machine; while the other, after a few rides, is at home on the saddle, and only requires experience and a little guidance to become a finished horsewoman. Women who possess this natural gift could not have a better instructress than Mrs. O'Donoghue, while those without it may at least profit by her advice on what to them is the most important part of the business—the cost of their habit, veil, and gloves.

A side-saddle, with the extra crutch, affords quite as secure a grip, in fact a more powerful one than can be obtained astride a horse; and it is only in physical strength, which may too often be only abused, that a man has any advantage as a rider over a woman. The only cases where strength is wanted with a horse is to conquer vice, and no woman should ride any horse the character of which is not guaranteed. It is not suitable for any lady to take up the duty of a horse-breaker. Mrs. O'Donoghue tells us in her Preface that, even in her case, an accident has put an end to her riding altogether, and the unfortunate fact could hardly surprise any reader of her book. Her love of riding, and her too great daring, have led her into dangers from strange horses, against riding which she has the good sense to warn her readers. The following description of an adventure with a runaway horse in Ireland is a fair specimen of the lady's powers as rider and writer. She has accepted the offer of a strange mount, about which an old friend wanted her opinion, to follow a drag hunt:—

"The instant that the hounds were laid on and the hunt started, my big mount commenced to pull hard, and by the time the first fence was reached his superior strength had completely mastered mine. He was pulling like a steam-engine, head down, ears laid backward, neck set like iron. My blistered hands were powerless to hold him. He rushed wildly at the fence, and striking the horse of a lady who was just landing over it, turned him and his rider a complete somersault. I subsequently learned that the lady escaped unhurt, but I could not at the moment pause to enquire, for my huge mount, clearing the jump, and ten feet beyond it, completely took head, and tore me away from the field,

'Over park, over pale,
Through bush, through briar,' until my head fairly reeled, and I felt that some terrible calamity must ensue. Happily, he was a glorious fencer, or I must have perished, for he jumped every obstacle with a rush; etaked fences, wide ditches—so wide that he landed over them on his belly—tangled gorse, and branches of rivers swollen by recent rains; he flew them all. At length, when my strength was quite exhausted, and my dizzy brain utterly powerless and confused, I beheld before me a stone wall, a high one, with heavy coping stones upon the top. At this I resolved to breast him, and run my chance of life or death in the turn over, which, from the pace at which we were approaching it, I knew must be a mighty one. In a moment we were up to it, and, with a cry to heaven for mercy, I dug him with my spur, and sent him at it. To my utter astonishment, for the wall was six and a-half feet high, he put down his head, rushed at it, cleared it without ever laying a shoe on the topmost stones, and landed with a frightful slip and clatter, but still safely on his feet—where? in the midst of a farm-yard" (p. 68).

The above spirited passage warrants the high terms in which I have spoken of the authoress as a sporting writer, but it also exhibits the unpardonable carelessness of style of which she is too often guilty. What can she mean by a ditch so wide that a horse lands over it on his belly? a feat certainly far more difficult than clearing a six and a-half foot stone wall. Inaccuracies like the following cannot but strike the most friendly eye in glancing through the book:—"Nothing would do that girl but to go bang through the most crowded parts of the city;" "She now loves and cares the poor, and suffers the rich to care themselves," &c. It is marvellous that such expressions could have been passed even by the editor of a sporting paper; and I trust that, if Mrs. O'Donoghue's book reaches a second edition, she will take a friendly hint and remove blemishes that must sorely offend every lover of pure English. I would also strongly advise her to close the book with her own papers, and not add a hundred and twenty pages of correspondence thereon that appeared in the sporting paper for which she wrote, the reproduction of which savours strongly of book-making.

I had almost forgotten to allude to the fact that Mrs. O'Donoghue advocates the feeding of hunters on boiled food. As one who for years trained race-horses in the Madras Presidency on boiled gram, I can fully appreciate the advantages of the system of feeding which she advocates.

The second book on my list is very short; but, like the curate's celebrated sermon preached before Mr. Canning, it has not escaped being tedious. I can conscientiously state that it is the most uninteresting work on what is generally an interesting subject that it has ever been my lot to read.

JAMES INNES MINCHIN.

Aubrey's Remaines of Gentilisme and Judaisme. Edited and Annotated by James Britten, F.L.S. (Published for the Folk-Lore Society by Satchell & Co.)

THIS valuable reprint—got up with all the taste and care which characterises the publications of the Folk-Lore Society—takes us back to the years 1686–87. For the biography of Aubrey, the reader is referred to the Memoir issued by John Britton in 1845. Our present concern is with his work, not with his life. Here, for the first time, we have the MS. copy of Aubrey's Remaines printed in its entirety. More or less copious extracts from it were published—as all students of folk-lore are aware—in Ellis's edition of Brand's Popular Antiquities, where we also find the Miscellanies of Aubrey frequently quoted. From these latter the editor of Remaines has not made extracts. He says:—

"to have done so would have unduly extended the present volume, and moreover it is easily accessible in the cheap and handy reprint issued in 1837 by J. Russell Smith, which no folklorist should be without."

In Time's Telescope for 1826, and again in a volume published by the Camden Society in 1839 entitled Anecdotes and Traditions, further extracts from Aubrey were made; but these works are scarcely obtainable. The notes added by Mr. Thoms to the latter work have, however, been given in the present volume, forming a very valuable appendix. In addition to these notes and the apposite annotations of the editor, we have also those of Dr. White Kennett; from which it may be inferred that everything has been done for the elucidation of a work which in itself is fragmentary and disconnected.

"The MS. was evidently intended by Aubrey as a rough draft of what was intended [sic] to have been an elaborate work. As it stands, it is disjointed, and there are numerous repetitions, while the same subject is alluded to in many separate passages. It was thought best to print the whole as it stood, and to trust to a comprehensive index to bring together the various references to the same subject."

A reference to the very valuable and, so far as one can judge, accurate Index is sufficient to make this clear. Thus, under Ague we find reference to eight different pages; under Christmas, eight; under Lots, ten; under Omens, twelve; and so on. Nowadays, when few books are thought worthy an index, or few writers find time to make one, it is refreshing to the weary student to find his labour so minimised, and the reader will give his best thanks to the editor for his painstaking work.

But for the Remaines themselves. The title given them by Aubrey might be a little misleading to some who come to the book expecting to find in it a description of the manners and customs of Jew and Gentile in the popular sense. But the student no sooner opens the book than he finds his thoughts set to work, and he begins to turn over the contents of his mental library to find parallels and illustrations of the facts there recorded. To take the first example which comes to hand (pp. 6, 7):—

"Per totidem (sc. x.) menses a funere conjugis uxor

Sustinet in vidua tristitia signa domo.—[35, 36].

It is still accounted undecent for widows to marry within a yeare (I thinke) Dr. Tayler sayes, because in that time the husbands body may be presumed to be rotten."

A foot-note refers us to Coote's Romans of Britain, pp. 288–91; but, being unable just now to consult that volume, we may be permitted to raise a question respecting the above-mentioned custom. Why, in the first place, do we find the "totidem (sc. x.) menses" changed into "not within a year"? May the answer not be that the Roman year once consisted of only ten months? The side-questions suggested by this are so numerous that we cannot go into them now; but we here tread on interesting ground. Why should ten months, in the first place, be specified? Certainly not "because in that time the husbands body may be presumed to be rotten." A more probable answer is that ten months is in many places regarded as the period of gestation, and, as in some countries it is considered improper to cohabit during that period, it would be contrary to all ideas of decency for a widow to marry during the ten months immediately following her husbands death. When the ten-months period gave place to another system of time-computation, the period during which a widow should show signs of grief for the departed was naturally made to agree with the change. We venture this opinion on our own responsibility, merely premising that the thought was suggested by a careful study of Chinese customs and folk-lore, from which source we may yet hope for much light on many perplexing problems of antiquity. In connexion with this particular point readers may consult the work of Dr. Gray, China, I., ch. vii., p. 185, and the tale of "The Philosopher and his Wife" in Davis's Chinese.

Many are the pagan customs which still cling to us, and lay claim to a connexion with Christian observances at Christmas-tide and other seasons. Thus (p. 40)—

"Mdm. that non obstante the Change of Religion . . . the Plough-men have their Twelve-cake, and they goe into the Ox-house to the oxen, with the Wassell-bowle and drink to the ox w. the crumpled horne that treads out the corne."

How widespread a custom! In the Black Mountain—as we learn from the article on "Christmas and Ancestor Worship" in Macmillan for January, p. 228—the cattle are wassailed in a similar manner. East and West, in Japan and China, as in Servia, France, and England, we find similar customs. They may be survivals of agricultural times, or of the period when sun-worship was intimately connected—as it still is in China—with the time of the winter solstice. "Not race, but the natural allegorical rites with which men celebrate the return of spring, the hope of harvest, the memory of the dead, all the chief events of the solar year, and of mundane life, produce these resemblances in ritual." We are told (p. 13) that

"the vulgar in the West of England doe call the month of March, Lide. A proverbial rhythme—

'Eate Leekes in Lide, and Ramsins in May,
And all the yeare after Physitians may play.'"

This reminds us of a Devonshire proverb, still frequently quoted, and which may be familiar to many readers:

"Eat an apple ere you go to bed,
The doctors then may beg their bread."

Everywhere (see p. 21) we find similar superstitious respecting the wind.

"The seamon will not endure to have one whistle on ship-board: believing that it rayees winds. On Malvern-hills in Worcestershire, &c., theroabout when they faune their Corne, and want wind, they cry Youle! Youle! Youle! to invoke it, w^{ch} word (no doubt) is a corruption of Æolus (3^d God of y^e Winds)."

Similarly, on the Yang-tse, if one expectorate over the bow of the boat when starting on a journey, the wind-god will be offended; and to pronounce the word fêng, "wind," would be to endanger the lives of the crew. On the other hand, certain methods are adopted for producing a favourable wind. The wind was against us one day as, after a long absence from home, travelling by boat in a Southern province of the Celestial Empire, we longed to reach the end of our journey; but the boatmen remarked that if we would put up our hats to the breeze a south wind would spring up. We obeyed, and after four hours' waiting, on coming to a curve in the river, found the wind favourable, upon which the boatmen affirmed that it was all because their instructions had been followed! The lines quoted above give us an interesting peep at the state of affairs in England previous to the invention of the winnowing machine,* and bring to mind the quaint wood-cut contained in an Eastern work, entitled Illustrations of Husbandry and Weaving, which represents persons throwing the grain into the air, as one may frequently see people in foreign countries doing at the present day, that the wind may blow away the chaff.

How similar, too, are the methods adopted for ascertaining the length of time persons may be expected to live! Thus:—

"In Germany [p. 26] in the night before Christmas, they take a trencher, and put upon it a little heap of salt, as big as a walnut, more or less, for such and such a one, and for themselves too, [and set it in a safe place, in the morning, when they find the heap or heaps entire, all will live the following years, but if any or more are melted down a little, they take it y^e the same man or woman will dye, for which it was designed."

So among the Serbs the chesnitza, or bread-cake used at the Christmas festivities, is employed in a similar way. If the lines made on it come out well, it augurs good for the family, and vice versa. When broken, the fall of a crumb betokens the death of a member of the family before the next Christmas, but, if no crumb falls, all will live through the year. Similar, in principle at least, is the custom observed among the Santals of Bengal at marriage. Rice which has been steeped in water is placed in a pot, and if the grain germinates abundantly there will be a corresponding fertility in the family; if sparingly, few children will be the result of the marriage; and if the grain rots, the marriage will be untimely. Farrer, in his Primitive Manners and Customs, has shown us in an interesting way how the savage mind attributes to natural objects the same powers and principles as exist in man.

Some years ago reference was made in a colonial publication to the custom, known to exist among a native tribe, of connecting the grave of certain dead persons with a stream of running water by means of a thread. No satisfactory explanation has been given, so far as we are aware, of this particular custom, but the probability is that it is the same in origin with that mentioned by "Juvenal Satyr. VI. [519-521] where he speaks of throwing a purple thread into y^e river to carry away ones sinne" (p. 36). Who does not know that still in the East gongs are beaten to drive away the dogs or other creatures which are supposed to be devouring the moon at the time of an eclipse? But Aubrey quotes Osborn's Advice, p. 105, to the effect that "the wild Irish, or Welch, (who) during Eclipses run about beating &c. pans thinking their clamour & vexations available to the assistance of the higher orbes" (p. 37). So attention has more than once been called to the fact that the French proverb, "Dieu garde la lune des loups," said in deprecation of a dread of remote danger, is a survival of a similar rude philosophy of nature which is still prevalent in the capital of Turkey, and in the days of St. Augustine was current over Europe. (See Tylor's Primitive Culture, i. 333.)

Many other points might be noted, but sufficient has been said to show how suggestive the Remaines are, and that every student of folk-lore should study them.

HILDERIC FRIEND.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

Collectanea Genealogica. Edited by Joseph Foster. (21 Boundary Road, N.W.) Mr. Foster has taken a new departure. Not content with peerages, baronetages, royal descents, &c., he now offers to the public the raw material from which such works are manufactured. Part i., recently issued, is a volume of 130 pages, of which thirty-two are devoted to various subjects of immediate interest, the most important, perhaps, being an exhaustive résumé of all that can at present be learned of the history of the family of Disraeli, including extracts from the registers of the synagogue, monumental inscriptions, &c., and ending with the will in extenso of the late Earl of Beaconsfield. Other articles are of scarcely less interest, and all worthy of permanent record in this handsome shape. But the great value of the publication consists in the serial works commenced in this part, to each of which sixteen pages are devoted, and which are to be continued in future numbers, each with its separate pagination, so that when any one is completed it can be withdrawn from the others and bound up in a volume by itself. When the works now commenced are finished, the subscribers to the Collectanea will find themselves in possession, not only of one or more volumes of the Collectanea proper, but also of others containing strictly alphabetical lists of all the members of Parliament from the earliest period to modern times, with records of their parliamentary careers and other personal information; of the marriages and deaths of the nobility, gentry, and other distinguished persons of the country during the last two centuries, gleaned from various authentic sources; of the pedigrees of families to be found in the British Museum MSS.; and of the funeral certificates of the nobility and gentry of Ireland from 1607 to 1729. Other lists will be commenced as these are exhausted; and in time, if Mr. Foster's enterprise is properly supported, the students of history and biography will find on their shelves a series of volumes of reference which will save them a vast amount of time and labour, and will also find, to a great extent, their work done to their hands. It would be impossible for any genuine student to see the volume just issued without recognising the enormous benefit which Mr. Foster proposes to bestow upon literary men, but which it is evident he cannot accomplish without the generous support of those interested in such matters. That support must be practical, by placing the volumes in their own libraries, and not sentimental, by consulting them in that of the British Museum.

A Short History of the English Colonies in America. By Henry Cabot Lodge. (New York: Harper and Brothers.) When the author of a work with such a title as this frankly states in his Preface that he makes "absolutely no pretence to original research," and that his "sketches" are "merely his own presentation of facts, which ought to be familiar to everyone," he places himself beyond the pale of serious criticism, so far as the English world of letters is concerned. If Mr. Lodge has nothing new to tell us, absolutely nothing with which we are not already familiar, we fail to see any possible necessity for his appearance in print at all. A careful examination of the volume proves the accuracy of the author's frank confession. There really is nothing new in his book—absolutely nothing that we did not know before. Having said this, we are bound to add that Mr. Lodge estimates too modestly the service he has rendered to ordinary students by reproducing in this handsome volume his lectures originally delivered before the Lowell Institute of Boston. If he tells us nothing new, he has placed before us in an artistic and convenient form the facts and details with which we were already familiar, so that we may lay our hand upon any one of them on the instant, and, where necessary, has appended references from which we may pursue their investigation in the original sources. The only serious objection to the work is its too intense Americanism. Mr. Lodge, however, addresses an American audience, and that must be his only excuse—a poor one, at best—for reproducing many old traditions that have long since been exploded, and occasionally depending for his facts upon authorities no longer considered trustworthy. He has produced a readable book, but clearly lacks the broad spirit of an impartial historian.

Life and Letters of Ogier Ghiselin de Busbecq. By C. T. Forster and F. H. B. Daniell. In 2 vols. (C. Kegan Paul and Co.) We are a little puzzled to explain how the joint-authors of this book came to publish it in its present form. The Turkish Letters of Busbecq were favourite reading in the beginning of the seventeenth century, and deserved the popularity which they enjoyed; but it is difficult to see why they should be the subjects of a modern revival which weights their literary interest with a second volume of diplomatic despatches from France which are by no means intelligible to the general reader. Busbecq himself was a cultivated man, with a modern spirit of curiosity and enquiry into the archaeology, natural history, and manners of the people among whom his business took him. His "Turkish letters" will always form the chief authority from the European side for the condition and politics of the Turks in the days of Solymán the Magnificent. They are in themselves extremely readable, and may compare in interest with the journal of any traveller of any age. A translation of them, with a short account of Busbecq, and how he came to write them, would have made an interesting little book, and might have found many readers if sold at a moderate price. But Messrs. Forster and Daniell have not appealed to the general public, nor have they made a book which might interest a select few, nor have they done much for the student. They have not published a cheap translation of the amusing parts of Busbecq, nor have they made an historical sketch of "Busbecq and his times," nor have they edited his works with scholarly notes and appendices. They have steered between these three possible courses.

* Sir John Davis thinks we got the pattern or idea from China, not vice versa.

They have given to the student a Life of Busbecq, or rather of researches into the history of his family, which have considerable interest for the affairs of the Netherlands. They have given the general public a translation of the Turkish letters, with a few useful notes. They have added to this Busbecq's letters from France, and have attempted to piece them into an intelligible whole by references to the writings of Mr. Motley. We would like to believe in the existence of a public to which this book would be likely to appeal; but we feel that anyone interested in the history of the times would prefer to read Busbecq in his original Latin, and would not find much help in the notes which accompany this translation. The translation, it is right to say, is good, and reads pleasantly; but it is conceived in an entirely modern spirit, and does not in the turn of its phrases carry us back to the sixteenth century.

Men Worth Remembering.—Robert Hall. By the Rev. E. Paxton Hood. (Hodder and Stoughton.) Robert Hall was the Prince of Preachers, and some might say the Prince of Talkers. His powers of condensation and caustic criticism not infrequently remind the reader of Johnson. Those who have read Bishop Watson's autobiography will acknowledge that the great Cham himself never said a sharper thing than Robert Hall's condensed summary of that complaining bishop's career:—"He married public virtue in his early days, and seemed for ever after to be quarrelling with his wife." No great work is now connected with the name of the "English Bossuet;" it is as a conversationalist and pulpit orator that he lives in the memory of mankind. There are so many wise and witty remarks recorded by Mr. Paxton Hood that we re-echo his wish that some Boswell had stood by the side and noted down the sayings of Robert Hall. Like many other great men, he was an intense believer in apparitions, and the superstitious side of his character found increased development during the years which he spent in one of the dull spots of the earth to be found in Eastern England. This defect was more than compensated by his wonderful power of pursuing his daily task even when racked with the severest paroxysms of pain. There is so little incident in Robert Hall's life that Mr. Paxton Hood must have found it no easy work to compile a biography which should retain the attention of a busy age. He has made his work very interesting, though we are often repelled by its stilted style.

Practical Organ-building. By the Rev. W. E. Dickson, M.A., Precentor of Ely Cathedral. (Crosby Lockwood.) Every organ-lover must thank Mr. Dickson for his workmanlike little book on organ-building. It is purely technical. "The Workshop, the Tools, the Lathe, and the Materials" is the heading of the first chapter; and the edifice is steadily built up in every detail, the builder pausing in his joinings, fittings, measurements, and cuttings to explain and dilate upon his art with loving minuteness. He inclines to all that is sound and solid; warns against hurried work or attempts to get flashy, unbalanced effects out of inadequate materials or scamped work; encourages honest joints, nice fittings, which he prefers to glue and nails; and would rather have a little organ, well balanced, without a swell, than a swell without a well-balanced organ. Everything, however, is on a small scale. It is the chamber organ with a few pleasant stops and two manuals, not the huge orchestral instrument, with crowds of French fancy pipes and ghostly effects and half-a-dozen manuals. The book is for the amateur builder, but he will find there all that is necessary to enable him personally to construct a perfect little organ with his own hands, and nothing more.

The Romance of the London Directory. By Charles W. Bardsley, M.A., Vicar of Ulverston. (Hand and Heart Office.) This is an interesting little book with an inappropriate title. Although, doubtless, a romance might be drawn out of the London Directory, no attempt to do so has ever been attempted, and the subject discussed bears little relation to the Directory, and is quite unconnected with romance. Such a misnomer is unfortunate, as no one would guess that the book really consists of chapters on the curiosities of English surnames. The author knows his subject well, and has brought together a large amount of information on the various modes of growth of our national names. He justly observes in his Preface—"The only means of discovering the origin of our surnames is to find the earliest form of entry. Light upon that, and half the difficulty vanishes." This, however, is not always easy to get, and many of our names are, therefore, still unexplained. Mr. Bardsley gives a curious table to show how large a proportion of London names can be traced to a local origin, thus illustrating Camden's jingle:—

"In 'ford,' in 'ham,' in 'ley,' and 'ton,'
The most of English surnames run."

Taking the total number of distinct surnames in the Directory under the first five letters at 5,335, they can be divided out under the following heads:—2,587 local; 769 baptismal; 212 occupative; 107 official; 299 nicknames; 1,067 foreign; 494 doubtful. If the foreign and doubtful are omitted, the local class will be found to be nearly double the rest. Of these classes, the official is one of the most curious. In these names are preserved a record of offices long since passed away:—The Carvers, the Sewers, the Napiers and Nappers, the Ewers, the Pages, the Cup-pages, the Small-pages, the Little-pages, the Says and the Sayers who attended the baron at his meals, are all to be found in London now; as are also the Hayward who guarded the fences, the Forester, Forster or Foster, the Woodward, the Parker, the Warrener or Warner, the Woodreeve, now found as Woodruff or Woodroff; Pinder or Pounder, and the Catchpoll, who caught his victim by the neck. The other classes of names referred to above are equally well illustrated by the author.

The Practical Fisherman. By J. H. Keene. (Bazaar Office.) It is difficult to discover wherein this book is more practical than the manuals of "Ephemera." Francis, Manley, and a dozen other well-known books. The natural history of each species of freshwater fish, and a few allusions to the legends of folklore connected with each, are followed by hints and directions on catching it. Mr. Keene treats fully of baits, pastes, and flies; indeed, more than forty trout-flies are described. The initiated seldom require more than half-a-dozen. The best part of the book consists in the concluding chapters, on rods, lines, hooks, and tackle generally. These are excellent, containing all that any fisherman can desire. The chapter on the salmon is somewhat discursive. Nothing new is contained in the seventy pages devoted to trout. We may add to the meagre details on Salmo ferox that natural baits are always preferable, and that after the beginning of the season this fish appears to learn the deceits of spoons and artificial minnows, and is far more difficult to take than when fishing for the year begins. The excellence of the trout fishing to be obtained under the new management on Loch Leven (and that in an east wind, which is generally fatal to sport elsewhere) is not noticed. We can assure Mr. Keene that grayling do possess a distinct smell and flavour of cucumber, on which he is sceptical. The chapters on the salmonidae are more anecdotal than exhaustive, but those on coarse freshwater fish leave little to be desired. We observe, however, that the author gives no particulars of the "pith" bait, which is such a favourite with the Nottingham anglers, nor of the different "quill gnats" which are now considered indispensable by the Ichen fly-fisher. It would have been a great addition to the chapter on that curious fish the burbot (Lota vulgaris), the freshwater cod of a few East Anglian rivers, had Mr. Keene pointed out that this limited distribution is due to geological reasons, to the ancient connexion of our island with the Continent. The volume is prettily got up, and contains some good plates of fish, with many useful diagrams of flight-hooks and the like. A tolerably lengthy list of misprints is appended to it, but many others still disfigure the text. Latin words and proper names are frequently maimed like a brown trout which has escaped the cruel jaws of a Salmo ferox. Had a little more care been expended on the correction of the press this book would have been a useful manual for young anglers.

Off the Reel. Stories by Lilian B. Hughes. (James Speirs.) These sketches are very slight in texture, but show considerable refinement of treatment and delicacy of fancy. The stories have scarcely any fable, the interest depending chiefly upon the portraiture of character and incidents of child-life. It remains to be seen whether the power undoubtedly displayed in the present little volume is capable of being united to the dramatic power needed for the successful writer of fiction.

NOTES AND NEWS.

A VOLUME of poems by Miss E. H. Hickey is in the hands of Messrs. C. Kegan Paul and Co., and will appear in the autumn. The collection will include several hitherto unpublished pieces, as well as a good number which have appeared in Macmillan's Magazine, the Cornhill Magazine, and other periodicals, and which have, for the most part, been rewritten.

A THREE-VOLUME novel by the author of St. Olave's will shortly be published by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett, under the title of A Man's Mistake.

WE are glad to hear that Prof. C. A. Buchheim, of King's College, London, has undertaken to edit for the Clarendon Press an annotated edition of Lessing's Nathan der Weise, uniform with the same editor's series of "German Classics."

THE authoress of The Queen of Connaught has just finished a new story on the Irish question, entitled The Priest's Blessing. It is a kind of study of the life of an Irish peasant, from the cradle to the grave, and constitutes a formidable indictment against the Roman Catholic priesthood. It will be published in a few days by Messrs. F. V. White and Co., and may be expected to arouse considerable comment.

WE understand that Mr. Mackeson, the editor of the Year-Book of the Church, has received from the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, the Bishop of London, and more than twenty other bishops of the English and Welsh dioceses, permission to dedicate the work to their lordships, and to issue it under their sanction. It will present facts, without any expression of opinion, and will furnish a complete record of work and progress in the Church of England.

WE hear that Dr. Joshua Duke, of the Indian Medical Service, who is now stationed at Ghilgit, in Kashmir, with Col. Tanner, the acting Resident, is engaged in writing a new book upon Kashmir, its natural history, its people, and its scenery. To it he proposes to append an account of Sir F. Roberts's famous march from Kabul to Kandahar, in which he took part.

It is to be hoped that M^{me}. de Witt has at last brought to an end the notes of her late father-in-law. It is impossible to accept the more recent volumes of the History of France (Sampson Low), of which the eighth, bringing down the story to 1848, has just been published, as in any sense the work of the writer whose name it bears. There is in it the echo of his thoughts and no more, with occasional fragments from his Memoirs embedded in the narrative. The translation is evidently done in a hurry, and many sentences are hardly intelligible.

A LITTLE handbook for tourists in North Scotland has been published by D. Macbrayne, entitled Glasgow to the Highlands. It is furnished with a map and several well-executed illustrations of scenery, and seems to be in every way complete.

A MEMORIAL speech, recently made at Budapest by Dr. Theodore Duka, of London, and containing a graphic description both of the educational and entomological labours of the late William Stephen Atkinson, formerly Director of Public Instruction at Bengal and Vice-President of the Asiatic Society, has just been published by the Hungarian Academy of Sciences.

IN consequence of the resignation of the Rev. C. Bigg, D.D., the Council have elected the Rev. Thomas Hayes Belcher, M.A., to be Principal of Brighton College. Mr. Belcher was open classical scholar of Queen's College, Oxford; first classman in moderations (classics), second classman in final schools, and proxime accessit to the Gaisford prize for Greek verse in the University of Oxford. Mr. Belcher was for over two years senior assistant-master of the Cathedral School, Hereford, and has been for seven years the senior assistant-master at Malvern College. He will enter on his duties at the commencement of the September term.

MR. W. J. ROLFE, of Cambridgeport, U.S.A., calls our attention to a great mistake in Mr. Fleay's tables of the numbers of lines in Shakspeare's plays, in Mr. Fleay's Manual, pp. 136, 259, and the New Shakspeare Society's Transactions, 1874, pp. 16, 354. In these tables, Antony and Cleopatra is entered as Shakspeare's longest play, with 3,964 lines; whereas, in fact, it has more than 900 lines less—namely, 3,059. It appears that Mr. Fleay has himself practically corrected this mistake, and several others in the same tables, though without alluding to them, in the fresh tables he has just printed in Dr. Ingleby's Man and Book, part ii. If Mr. Fleay's fresh totals of lines are right, then every such total in his former tables is wrong, which is cheering for those who have based calculations on them. But as the new total for Troilus and Cressida is $1,457 + 1,389 + 258 = 3,104$ lines, and the play has 3,496 lines in the Globe edition, verification of the fresh tables is evidently needed. In Henry V. the first total is 180 wrong, the well-known mistake of 100 in the Globe numbers of act V., so. ii., having been overlooked, and the lines of III. iv. being wrongly given. The other plays showing the widest differences in the two sets of tables are Winter's Tale—i., 2,758 lines, ii., 3,074; and Richard II.—i., 2,644 lines, ii., 2,756. From these the variations lessen to one line in Measure for Measure—i., 2,809, ii., 2,810. Hamlet is Shakspeare's longest play, and has in the Globe 3,931 lines; his shortest is The Comedy of Errors, with 1,777 lines: these have been re-counted.

WE learn from the Scotsman that stones have recently been erected on the battlefield of Culloden, inscribed with the names of the several Highland clans which tradition associates with the graves still to be traced there. The clans thus commemorated are M'Gillivray, M'Lean, and M'Lauchlan on one stone; and Stuart of Appin, Cameron, and Mackintosh.

An inscription has also been placed on the great cairn, which is a conspicuous object on Culloden Moor.

THE Royal Spanish Academy has awarded a medal, through the Spanish ambassador, to the Rev. Alexander J. D. D'Orsey, lecturer at King's College, for his poem on Calderon, "the Shakspeare of Spain."

A RECENT number of the Archiv für Post und Telegraphie contained some interesting information concerning the circulation of newspapers and periodicals in Germany. The total number of papers to be obtained through the Post-Office (the regular mode of distribution in Germany) is 7,596, in thirty-one different languages. Of these, 5,047 are German, 568 French, 469 English, 209 Austrian, and 128 American. Of the German papers, again, 388 are printed at Berlin, 230 at Leipzig, 76 at Munich, 75 at Dresden, and 70 at Stuttgart. The oldest paper in Germany is the Frankfurter Zeitung, which dates from 1615; the Leipziger Zeitung first appeared in 1660.

PROF. ETIENNE CHASTEL has resigned the Chair of Ecclesiastical History in the Academy and University of Geneva, after holding it for forty-two years. He proposes to devote the leisure thus gained to the completion of his Histoire du Christianisme.

PROF. HORNING is engaged in editing the MS. remains of his deceased friend and colleague, Prof. Amiel, the Genevese poet.

THE opening chapters of a new story entitled "A Heart's Problem," by Mr. Charles Gibbon, will appear in the July number of Belgravia.

THE first six "Historical Handbooks" published at Budapest by the Athenæum Publishing Company—all that have as yet appeared—are translations from the English, and comprise Fyffe's Greece, Creighton's Rome, Jebb's Greek Literature, Mahaffy's Greek Antiquities, Wilkins' Roman Antiquities, and Sime's Germany, while Higginson's North America is in the press. Sir George Cox's Greek Mythology and Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare have also been recently translated. The Hungarians are making a decided effort to emancipate themselves in education matters from the exclusive influence of Germany, and where they are not able to write original books—which they have lately done for both the Greek and Latin grammars—they seek a substitute outside Germany.

THE Deutsche Literaturzeitung for June 4 contains a review of Mr. Matthew's English Works of Wyclif (Trübner) by Dr. Buddensieg.

THE Allgemeiner deutscher Schriftstellerverband, or Society of German Men of Letters, has addressed a petition to Prince Bismarck, praying that he will take steps to found an Imperial Library. It is complained that all the existing libraries are managed too much from the point of view of the specialist, and that none contains a complete representation of the existing state of culture of the German people. Following our English precedent, it is suggested that one copy of every work published in Germany should be claimed for the proposed Imperial Library. The petition states that in France two copies must similarly be sent to the Ministry of the Interior; in Italy, three copies to the Prefect of the Province; in Austria, four copies to the Government; and in the United States, two copies to the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

PROF. WÜLKER has just published, at G. Wigand's, Kassel, the first half of part i. of his new edition of Grein's Bibliothek der Angelsächsischen Poesie. It contains the Gleeman's Song, Waldere (print of the MS. and a critical text), the Battle of Finnesburg, and the text of Beowulf from the MS. The second part, which is now at press and should be out in October, will contain a critical text of Beowulf, Doer's Complaint, the Wanderer (lately englisht in our columns by Miss Hickey), the Seafarer, the Ruin, the exiled Wife's Complaint, the Husband's Message, Spells, Runic verses on the Whale, a Runic Poem, Gnomie Verses (from the Exeter and Cotton MSS.), a Father's Advice to his Son, the Battle of Maldon, Poems from the Saxon Chronicle, and a Poem on Durham. Next spring Prof. Wülcker will go to Vercelli to copy afresh the celebrated Vercelli MS., both poems and homilies, and will then edit that.

THE Marquess of Tseng has lately thrown out a hint to his diplomatic colleagues which, if acted upon, will add a new feature to despatch-writing. In reply to the Imperial missive ordering him to proceed to St. Petersburg in connexion with the Kuldja affair, he telegraphed to Peking his acknowledgment in a couplet which, being translated, ran thus:—
"My knowledge is scant, and my powers are frail,
At the voice of the thunder I tremble and quail."

H.R.H. PRINCE LEOPOLD will open University College, Nottingham, which includes the Free Public Library and Natural History Museum, on the 30th inst. This handsome building was erected by the Corporation at a cost of upwards of £70,000.

A SECOND edition of Mr. Arthur Crump's book, A New Departure in the Domain of Political Economy, will be issued shortly by Messrs. Longmans.

A PAPER on "Life at Rideau Hall," the Government House of the Dominion of Canada, will be one of the features of the July Harper's Magazine. It is written by a sister of W. D. Howells, the American novelist, and its illustrations include, beside portraits of H.R.H. the Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne, pictures of the Hall, of the drawing-room, and of the Princess's boudoir and sketching-box.

IN a meadow at Vazerol in Graubünden stands the memorial-stone of the traditional oath of the Three Leagues of Rhaetia in 1471. The four-hundredth anniversary of this "unification" of the present canton of Graubünden was celebrated ten years ago. The stone—a magnificent block of almost black "horn-blende"—according to the Freie Rhetier of Chur, comes from the heights of the Val Bella at Parpan. An iron tablet has just been placed upon it with the inscription, "Zur Erinnerung an die IV Säkular-feier des Bundesschwurs, Anno 1471 zu Vazerol." The documentary research of recent scholars has proved that the alliance of the Three Leagues dates farther back than the traditional year. The Graue Bund made an "eternal league" with the Gotteshaus-bund in 1450, and two years later the League of God's House made a similar federal pact with the Zehngerichten-bund.

So Shakspeare was counted one of the "meane" or humble folk in 1604, when his full Hamlet was first published. His company is thus noticed by his contemporary, Gilbert Dugdale, when speaking of the honours conferred by James I. on the English:—

"Not only to the indifferent of worth and the worthy of honour [nobles and gentry] did he [the King] freely deale about these causes, but to the meane gave grace: as taking to him the late Lord Chamberlaines Servants [Burbage, Shakspeare, &c.], now the Kings Acters; the Queene taking to her the Earle of Worstors Servants, that are now her Acters; the Prince their Sonne, Henry Prince of Wales, full of hops, tooke to him the Earle of Nottingham his Servants, who are now his Acters; so that, of Lords Servants they are now the Servants of the King, Queene, and Prince."

OBITUARY.

PROF. ROLLESTON.

It will be already too well known to all our readers that Prof. Rolleston has passed away. Many months ago it became apparent that he was suffering from a very serious disorder, of recovery from which there was little or no probability. He was advised to take entire rest and change on the Continent, and had, until just before his death, been residing in Italy, during the early part of his visit to which country he travelled in company with Sir William Gull and Dr. Acland. The change of scene was unavailing, and he grew rapidly worse. He was moved to Paris, and, when it appeared that the end was rapidly approaching, to Oxford, where he died, in his own house, on Thursday, June 16, in his fifty-second year, his loss being sincerely mourned by the whole university, by all interested in science, by all his pupils, past and present, and by a host of admirers among the general public.

Prof. George Rolleston was born at Maltby, in Yorkshire. As a boy he was fond of sport of all kinds, and he had many a story of his early exploits in the woods or fields in pursuit of rabbits or other game to tell, some of which he brought in appositely now and then to illustrate facts in natural history or physiology. During the first part of his Oxford career he devoted himself to the study of classics, in which he took a first class in 1850, being elected to a fellowship at Pembroke in 1851. He studied medicine at St. Bartholemew's Hospital, and graduated M.B. at Oxford in 1854, M.D. in 1857. He became a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1859. During the Crimean War he served as assistant-physician to the British Civil Hospital at Smyrna. He always looked back to this part of his career with great satisfaction, and no doubt he acquired a great deal of information during this portion of his life which was of service to him subsequently. On his return from the Crimea in 1857 he was appointed assistant-physician to the London Hospital for Sick Children, and shortly afterwards Lees Reader in Anatomy at Oxford. He was author of a Report on Smyrna, of an Address to the British Medical Association in 1868, and he delivered the Harveian Oration in 1873. He served as a member of the General Medical Council up to the time of his death. Such is a brief account of his medical career. Up to the time of his appointment to the Linacre Professorship he was engaged in the private practice of his profession with very considerable success, and there can be little doubt that, had he continued practice, he would have been extremely successful, and attained considerable wealth; and even, perhaps, greater reputation than awaited him in his devotion to exclusively scientific pursuits. He had before him every prospect of a brilliant professional career when he accepted the post of Linacre Professor of Physiology and renounced private practice altogether. His enthusiasm in the cause of the subject which he had to develop and teach knew no bounds. Under his care, although very small funds were available, the comparative-anatomy collection in the museum—then newly built, with the collection belonging to the Lees trustees as a nucleus—gradually increased until it assumed its present important proportions. He made the biological school of the university what it now is. He was a most devoted and energetic teacher, and had a remarkable faculty for developing an enthusiasm for his science akin to his own in the minds of his pupils. There are none of these who do not owe him a debt of gratitude for this at least. He spared no pains, but was always ready to look over essays, or to give practical demonstrations and explanations to his students. With all who showed real interest in their studies he was on most friendly terms—with many on terms of intimacy, and such students derived a fund of information in every-day conversation with him. He had indeed a difficult task before him in having to cover a very wide field—one far too wide for a single man to be called upon to represent. The entire range of healthy animal biology was thrown on his shoulders; and he had to lecture on physiology, histology, comparative anatomy, and anthropology, and to give practical instruction to some few pupils in human anatomy as well. During his tenure of the professorship, the knowledge of all these subjects became greatly developed, and increased rapidly in extent and complexity, and it became more and more impossible for one teacher to deal with them all. He felt this difficulty of his position keenly, and looked forward to the time when, by the appointment of additional biological professors, the work would be divided into manageable departments, and he would have more time for private work. The realisation of plans made with this end in view he has unhappily not lived to see. His energy was so great that he was constantly engaged in other arduous business besides that entailed by his chair. He took a most prominent and vigorous part in all controversies in university affairs, and served, till his death, as a member of the Council of the university. He also worked hard on the Oxford Local Board, and could never restrain himself from action when he thought there was an abuse to be exposed or some reform to be carried out. He was an eloquent speaker, and frequently addressed public meetings on various social subjects, and especially in favour of the Permissive Bill.

He was always at work, and allowed himself scarcely any leisure, and no doubt his decline in health was largely due to the extreme strain which was thus constantly put upon his naturally excitable nervous system. His earliest contribution to natural history was a paper on the homologies of the lobes of the liver in mammals, published in 1861. This was followed by a paper on the affinities of the brain of the orang-utan; and another on the affinities and differences of the brain of man and the brains of certain animals. Among his subsequent papers may be mentioned the following:—"On the Anatomy of a Man supposed to have been 106 Years old;" "On the Homologies of the Pectoral Muscles of Birds;" "On Domestic Cats, and the Cat of the Ancient Greeks," wherein, as is well known, he identified the latter animal with the marten and not the true cat; and on the various races of domestic pigs. He studied the structure of domestic animals with especial care as bearing upon anthropological questions, and especially on prehistoric ethnology and archaeology, to which subjects he devoted the best part of his energies towards the latter part of his career. He published numerous memoirs on craniological subjects, and contributed an important essay to Canon Greenwell's British Barrows on the skeletons excavated. His work, Forms of Animal Life, prepared by him mainly for the use of his own pupils, and published in 1870, is well known. He had for a considerable time before his death been preparing a new edition of the work. He was president of the Biological Section of the British Association at Liverpool in 1870, and of the Anthropological Subsection in 1875.

The funeral, which took place on Monday last, was largely attended by resident members of the university, former pupils, and distinguished men of science. At a meeting held in the museum, under the presidency of Dr. Acland, it was determined that a subscription should be raised with a view of instituting a permanent memorial of Prof. Rolleston in the form of a scholarship or otherwise, and a meeting will shortly be held in London for the purpose of taking further steps in the matter. There can be no doubt that the movement will be amply supported. H. N. MOSELEY.

We learn that a committee has been formed, with power to add to its number, for the purpose, above referred to, of perpetuating Prof. Rolleston's name by a suitable memorial, and that the following gentlemen have been elected honorary secretaries:—Dr. C. Mansell-Moullin, 17 George Street, Hanover Square, W., and Dr. Theodore Acland, St. Thomas's Hospital, S.E., London; Mr. E. B. Poulton, M.A. Wykeham House, and Mr. A. P. Thomas, M.A., Anatomical Department, Museum, Oxford.

SIR DUNCAN MACGREGOR, who died at 2 Vanbrugh Park, Blackheath, on the 8th inst., at the ripe old age of ninety-four, was the author of a Narration of the Loss by Fire of the Kent East-Indiaman, which has passed through frequent editions since its first appearance in 1825. The event attracted general interest at that time from the gallant part performed in the hour of danger by the soldiers of the 31st Regiment of Foot, who were then on their voyage to India. The last edition of this little work was issued by the Religious Tract Society a few weeks ago; there were contained in it some additions by Mr. John MacGregor ("Rob Roy"), a son of the author, who was himself rescued from the burning vessel by a Cornish miner.

We regret to notice the death of Mr. John J. McLennan. Next week we hope to give a notice of his life, and of his contributions to anthropology.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Goethe-Jahrbuch (1881) opens with an interesting article by Georg Brandes on "Goethe and Denmark." In spite of the prohibition as injurious to morals of an early translation of Werther, Denmark did not escape the Werther fever. But it was Steffens who first opened the eyes of young Denmark to the real greatness of Goethe. From him Oehlenschläger learnt to understand Goethe as artist and thinker. In Oehlenschläger's "Correggio," the character of the principal dramatic person, Brandes takes for a study from the author himself; Tieck, he supposes, supplied an original for Julio Romano, and Goethe for Buonarroti. It was a little piteous and comic that the real Tieck greeted the play with an exceedingly harsh review; and that Goethe would not permit the poor poet (who had travelled for that purpose twenty miles out of his way) to read it aloud for him. From a group of Scandinavian men of science came the warmest and most intelligent appreciation of Goethe; this group included Hauch, Sibbern, and Oersted. When Oersted visited Weimar, Goethe welcomed him as one savant might welcome another. "What can a man of my age do better," he finely said, "than throw himself into the arms of Nature?" Sophia Oersted, after having converted Baggessen from his hostility to Goethe, inspired Sibbern with that enthusiasm for the great poet which lasted for life, and which may be read most largely in Sibbern's correspondence with Henriette Herz. "Do not forget your promise," wrote Sophia when Sibbern was departing for Weimar, "to beg or steal something for me from Goethe." But when Sibbern arrived, Goethe was at Carlsbad, and to see Christiane, Goethe's ill-chosen wife, then forty-eight years old, dancing with the Jena students made poor amends for his disappointment. He was not to return, however, without having several meetings with the old man "of majestic beauty," and yet unbowed by years. J. L. Heiberg (1791-1860), one of the most striking figures in Danish literature of the present century, a disciple in philosophy of Hegel, found in Goethe the ideal artist of all time, according to the Hegelian conception of art. A remarkable piece of criticism is quoted from Heiberg by Brandes. During the period of constitutional liberalism and theological reaction Goethe fell out of favour in consequence of his alleged political indifference, his unascetic views of life, and his inconstancy in love. The romantic, pietistic Kierkegaard, and the novelist M. Goldschmidt, represent this movement of opposition. Young Denmark of the present day has learnt once more—partly from French critics—to revere Goethe; to revere him, says Brandes, because his great word is not "Renounce," but "Understand;" because he was a universal man; because he found no supernatural out of and above nature, and "was himself (as we speak of a State within the State) a little world of Nature within the world of Nature." The Jahrbuch gives forty-one new letters of Goethe. Among many interesting contributions we may mention as of special value a monograph by the editor, Dr. L. Geiger, on "Goethe in Dornberg," and a study by Wilmanns on the origin of Erwin und Elmire.

THE Deutsche Rundschau for June publishes a Russian State paper of considerable political interest—a secret memoir about the Nihilist movement, prepared for the Emperor's use in 1875 by the Minister of Justice, Count v. d. Pahlen. There is also the first instalment of the autobiography of Count Scherr Thoss, who took a prominent part in the Hungarian Revolution of 1848, and went as an exile to Berlin. The political condition of Berlin in 1848 is also illustrated by some letters of a Prussian officer written during the revolutionary epoch in that city. In literature, Herr Brandes writes an appreciative criticism of Gustave Flaubert. Herr Nachtigal contributes a useful article on "Tunis," which he left in 1868, after a long residence as physician to the Bey; his first article, which is to be continued, deals with the political condition of the country.

IN the Revista Contemporanea of June 15 Señor Sanromá concludes his comments on the "Monetary Conference of 1881," summing up in favour of a relative, but not of an absolute, monometallism. Luis Barthe has a sketch of the Life of Robespierre, after the latest-printed French sources, tending towards a rehabilitation. Ovilo Canales continues his careful "Political and Social Studies on Morocco," the present instalment treating of the administration and of justice. Classical scholars may compare a long Latin Sapphic "Ode to Calderon," by Don Ignacio Cantero, with the best prize verses of English and German universities. Other articles are "Woman: a Biological Sketch," by Moreno Fernandez; and "La Juventud dorada," by Mentaherry, in which the scenes are laid in Spain in the first half of the thirteenth century. There is also a eulogistic review of the Discurso of Cánovas del Castillo on his reception into the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- CLABETTE, Jules. Monsieur le Ministre. Paris: Dentu. 3 fr. 50 c.
CUNNINGHAM, H. S. British India and its Rulers. W. H. Allen & Co. 10s. 6d.
CURCI, O. M. La Nuova Italia ed i vecchi Zelanti. Milano: Hoepli. 3 fr. 50 c.
DUBOIS DE PESQUIDOUX. L'Art au XIX^e Siècle, l'Art dans les deux Mondes. Paris: Plon.
MONUMENTA sepulchralia eorumque epitaphia in collegiata ecclesia B. M. Claustroneoburgi. Ed. U. Kosteritz. Wien: Mayer. 18 M.

- RICHARDSON, O. F. The Choice of Books. Sampson Low & Co. 3s. 6d.
SCHYAEZ, J. Die Demokratie. 1. Bd. 1. Hefte. 3. Abth. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 3 M. 60 Pf.
THACKRAY, Miss. Madame de Sévigné. ("Foreign Classics for English Readers.") Blackwood. 2s. 6d.
VALLÉE, O. de. André Chénier et les Jacobins. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY.

- LEHNER, F. A. v. Die Marienverehrung in den ersten Jahrhunderten. Stuttgart: Cotta. 6 M.

HISTORY.

- COLLECTION de Documents pour servir à l'Histoire des Hôpitaux de Paris, p. p. M. Bricte. T. 1. Délivrations de l'ancien Bureau de l'Hôtel-Dieu. Paris: Picaud.
CIGNONI, G. Agostino Chigi il Magnifico. Rome. 8 fr.
D'ARBOIS DE JUBAINVILLE, H. Histoire des Ducs et Comtes de Champagne depuis le VI^e Siècle jusqu'en 1811. Paris: Durand. 60 fr.
DAVIS, Jefferson. The Rise and Fall of the Confederate Government. Longmans. 42s.
JAKOB, O. H. Die Gymnastik der Hellenen. Neue Bearbtg. Stuttgart: Heitz. 8 M.
LÉOUZOUZ DE LUC, L. Correspondance diplomatique du Baron de Ségol-Holstein, Ambassadeur de Suède en France, etc. (1783-99). Paris: Hachette. 7 fr. 50 c.
MARTENS, W. Die römische Frage unter Papst Pius VI. Karl dem Grossen. Stuttgart: Cotta. 6 M.
MEDING, O. Memoiren zur Zeitgeschichte. 2. Abth. Das Jahr 1866. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 6 M.
PIGNOT, J. H. Un Jurisconsulte au XVI^e Siècle. Barthélemy de Chassenaz, premier Commentateur de la Coutume de Bourgogne et Président du Parlement de Provence. Paris: Larose.
RAVAISON, F. Archives de la Bastille. T. 12. (1709 à 1772.) Paris: Durand. 9 fr.
STILLMEIER-KATÉNIC, E. v. Thomas de Mahy, Marquis de Favras, u. seine Gemahlin. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der französischen Revolution aus den J. 1789 u. 1790. Wien: Braumüller. 4 M.
THIERHIEIM, A. Christoph Martin Frhr. v. Degenfeld, General der Venezianer. General-Gouverneur v. Dalmatien u. Albanien u. dessen Söhne (1600-1733). Wien: Braumüller. 6 M.
UTISENOVIC, O. Lebensgeschichte d. Cardinals Georg Utisenovic genant Martinianus. Wien: Braumüller. 6 M.
ZELLES, J. Quae primae fuerint legationes a Francisco I. in Orientem missae (MDXXIV.-MDXXXVIII.). Paris: Hachette.
ZIEGLAUER, F. v. Die politische Reformbewegung in Siebenbürgen zur Zeit Josef's II. u. Leopold's II. Wien: Braumüller. 12 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- ALLARD, E. Mémoire sur les Phares électriques. Paris: Challamel. 15 fr.
CLAUS, C. Ueb. Aequorea forskalea Esch. als Aequoride d. adriat. Meeres. 2 M. 40 Pf. Neue Beiträge zur Kenntnis der Coepoden unter besond. Berücksicht. der Triester Fauna. 7 M. 20 Pf. Wien: Hölder.
COHEN, E. Sammlung v. Mykrophotographien zur Veranschaulichung der mikroskopischen Structur v. Mineralien u. Gesteinen. 3. u. 4. Lfg. Stuttgart: Schweizerbart. 12 M.
EWALD, A. Ueb. den Modus der Nervenverbreitung im elektrischen Organ v. Torpedo. Heidelberg: Winter. 2 M. 40 Pf.
GRAEFFE, E. Uebersicht der Seetierfauna d. Golfes v. Triest. I. Die Echinodermen. Wien: Hölder. 1 M. 20 Pf.
GROBEN, C. Die Entwicklungsgeschichte v. Cetocephalus septentrionalis Goadis. Wien: Hölder. 9 M. 60 Pf.
QUENSTEDT, F. A. Petrefactenkunde Deutschlands. 1. Abth. 6. Bd. 7. Hft. Korallen. (Stenokorallen.) 12. Hft. Leipzig: Fues. 18 M.
VISIANTI, K. de. Florae Dalmaticae supplementum alterum, adjectis plantis in Bosnia, Hercegovina et Montenegro crescentibus. Pars 2. Venetiis. 10 fr.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- AETERNODOROS aus Daidis Symbolik der Träume. Uebers u. mit Anmerkungen begleitet v. F. S. Krauss. Wien: Hartleben. 4 M.
BELOT, E. La République d'Athènes. Lettre sur le Gouvernement des Athéniens adressée en 378 avant J.-C. par Xénophon au Roi de Sparte, Agésilas. Texte grec, etc. Paris: Durand. 16 fr.
BIBLIOTHECA classica. Verzeichniss der auf dem Gebiete der class. Alterthums-wissenschaft erschienenen Bücher, etc. 8. Jahrg. 1881. 1. Hft. Berlin: Calvary. 1 M. 50 Pf.
DEECKE, W. u. O. PAULI. Etruskische Forschungen u. Studien. 1. Hft. Stuttgart: Heitz. 5 M.
DEITEAS, H. Studien zu griechischen Musikern. Ueber das Verhältniss d. Martians Capella zu Aristides Quintilianus. Posen: Jolowicz. 1 M.
HATTAL Snorra Sturlusonar. Hreg v. Th. Möbius. 2. Thl. Gedicht u. Commentar. Halle: Waisenhauss. 2 M. 80 Pf.
MARTIALIS, M. V. Epigrammaton liber primus. Rec. commentarius instructus J. Fisch. Tübingen: Laupp. 3 M.
RANKE, E. Rhythmica. Wien: Braumüller. 3 M.
WRANPELMAYER, H. Colex Woltenbutelanus Nr. 205, olim Helmstadiensis Nr. 304, primum ad complures Ciceronis orationes collatus. Pars 5. et 6. Hannover: Schmorl. 3 M. 20 Pf.

CLIVE'S DESPATCH ANNOUNCING HIS VICTORY AT PLASSEY.

IN a review in the ACADEMY of Dr. Birdwood's Report on the Old Records in the India Office (1879), regret was expressed that Dr. Birdwood had not thought fit to publish Clive's MS.

despatch to the Secret Committee of the Court of Directors, announcing his victory at Plassey. This omission has now been partially remedied by Mr. Hunter, in the fourth volume of his newly issued Imperial Gazetteer of India (p. 389); and, as we anticipated, the result is of such a nature as to modify considerably the commonly received story of the battle. Plassey was fought on June 23, 1757; the despatch, signed by Clive himself, is dated July 26.

We quote the following from Mr. Hunter, the inverted commas representing Clive's own words:—

"Clive is said to have fought in spite of his council of war. The truth is, he could scarcely avoid a battle. The Nawab attacked with his whole artillery at six a.m.; but Clive kept his men well under shelter, 'lodged in a large grove surrounded with good mud banks.' At noon the enemy drew off into their entrenched camp for dinner. Clive only hoped to make a 'successful attack at night.' Meanwhile, the enemy being probably undressed over their cooking pots, he sprang upon one of their advanced posts which had given him trouble, and stormed 'an angle of their camp.' Several of the Nawab's chief officers fell. The Nawab himself, dismayed by the unexpected confusion, fled on a camel; his troops dispersed in a panic; and Clive found he had won a great victory. Mir Jafar's cavalry, which had hovered round undecided during the battle, and had been repeatedly fired on by Clive 'to make them keep their distance,' now joined our camp. The road to Murshidabad lay open."

CORRESPONDENCE.

A POSSIBLE AUTOGRAPH OF SHAKSPERE.

Boston, Mass.: June, 1881.

I enclose herewith an unsatisfactory tracing of a possible autograph of Shakspeare that was found recently in a copy of North's Plutarch (1603) purchased by the public library of this city. The book was offered to the librarian by an Englishman who said that he had himself bought it in London, at some second-hand bookseller's, for a song, and that he found it contained what seemed to be a Shakspeare autograph. As everyone who reads these lines can confirm from his own experience, the statement that here was this rare autograph aroused the strongest feelings of doubt, and the book was bought, autograph and all, for what would be a moderate price (one guinea) for the book alone, more from a desire to secure a copy of that edition than from any ready belief that the library was securing a copy of Shakspeare's handwriting.

The autograph, if it be an autograph at all, was written on one of the scraps of paper which are frequently to be found between the binding and the sheets of old books. This volume contains, besides this scrap, some fragments of old deeds, written on parchment, some scraps with later writing, and the fragment with the signature, "Wilm Shakspeare," and underneath the words "hundred and twenty pounds." My tracing is so imperfect that you will not be able to see that the re in hundred and in the name are alike, that there is no trace of ea. The Wilm corresponds clearly to the acknowledged signature of the poet, and the letters of the first syllable of the name bear a close resemblance to what we know to be his handwriting. The p, however, and indeed all the final letters, are clearer than those in the will.

Against the notion that this may be a genuine autograph is the unlikelihood of its appearance. In its favour, that it was found in a place where it was possible that it should appear, the scrap on which it was written being one of many that the binder had apparently found in some scrivener's office; that, on the one hand, it is by no means a facsimile of the acknowledged autographs, and yet in many respects very like them; while, on the other, it is wholly unlike the Ireland forgeries, with the originals of which I compared it to-day, and that the additional words would be only additional chances for detection, if this is counterfeit work; moreover, one of the most experienced collectors of autographs in this country examined it with me to-day, and assured me that, in his opinion, this was genuine. The supposition that it is a counterfeit has to answer one question—When was the counterfeit made? Not by the man who sold it to the library, because he asked no more for the book on that account, and gets no glory from it.

Of course, these arguments do not decide the question, which can only be settled by experts. I hope, however, soon to send you a photograph of the signature, copies of which will be given to those competent to judge the question.

T. S. PERRY.

[There are so many supposed Shakspeare autographs about—many made probably in the early part of this century—that our correspondent should be slow in assuming the authenticity of this Boston one. Till the book can be otherwise connected with Shakspeare, the signature cannot, of course, be taken as genuine, though it has the general MS. form of the poet's name, not the printed-book form. On the face of it, the entry, if of Shakspeare's date, is most likely an entry, by someone else than Shakspeare, of a debt due from the poet, or something of the kind.—ED.]

A HELP FOR THE BEGINNER IN THE GOTHIC LANGUAGE.

Oxford: June 18, 1881.

Every student of Teutonic philology is well aware of the serious obstacles put into his way when he first attempts to master the elements of the Gothic language, into which Ulfilas translated the Bible. The grammatical difficulties besetting an accurate parsing of every form appear at first to be almost insuperable. Nevertheless, this impediment might have been overcome by many a beginner had it not been for the lack of an easy commentary and a full explanation of the text after the model of Greek and Latin, as well as Modern French and German, primers. It is the merit of a recent work to have supplied such a want, to which I wish briefly to draw the attention of those readers of the ACADEMY interested in Teutonic philology. While all the preceding chief editions of Ulfilas—viz., those by Gabelentz and Löbe, Massmann, Stamm, Heyne, and Bernhardt—are confined to the text, with a grammar and glossary, the authors of this new treatise, bearing the title, Ulfilas, Evangelium Marci, grammatisch erklärt von Dr. E. Müller und Dr. H. Hoeppe (octavo, Berlin, 1881), offer us the first practical commentary and an accurate word-explanation of the Gospel according to St. Mark, which is preceded by an introductory outline of the regular inflections. Having carefully gone through the first chapter of St. Mark by means of this Commentary, I found the authors' statement in the Preface confirmed—that they have analysed every single form, and referred, at the same time, to their grammatical outline of the regular inflection. In the subsequent chapters, the explanations are gradually confined to the irregular forms. As a cheap and handy Gothic reader, I think it deserves to be recommended, and that it will be found most useful to the beginner.

H. KREBS.

SWIFT'S GIDDY FITS.

47 Green Street, W.: June, 1881.

Those who have looked over the letters of Swift to Stella and other correspondents must have been struck with his many complaints of giddiness and "fits." In the journal to Stella,

January 13, 1710-11, he says: "Oh! faith, I had an ugly giddy fit last night;" and on October 31, 1710, again "I had a fit of giddiness; the room turned round for about a minute, and then it went off, leaving me sickish but not very." Later on in life, he writes (letter to Mr. Blashford, December 17, 1734): "I was seized with so cruel a fit of that giddiness which at times hath pursued me from my youth that I was forced to lie down on a bed in the empty house for two hours." With this giddiness there was a deafness of the left ear (journal to Stella, September 7, 1711), and on September 21, 1710, he promises to see Dr. Cockburn about his ears. This "giddiness and weakness and sickness in my stomach" are spoken of almost to the last, with "being extremely deaf."

This giddiness and sickness Swift himself attributed to a surfeit of fruit; and we find him careful not to eat fruit, nor drink "bohea tea," and he takes abundant exercise to keep his troubles under. I have only met with one explanation of this set of symptoms—that in Dr. Beddoes' Hygeia, towards the end of the ninth essay, an explanation which need not be further pursued here; but I would venture to suggest, if it has not been already suggested, that these symptoms of Swift's are amply explained by a supposition of his having been the subject of Menière's disease, or Menière's vertigo. This group of symptoms has only been recognised by physicians for about twenty years; giddiness, or vertigo, followed by sickness, with some disease of the ear, or deafness, forming its "notes." It was believed by Menière to be due to some disease of the semicircular canals of the ear, and this view is strengthened by the fact that like symptoms follow the injury of the semicircular canals in the brutes.

J. WICKHAM LEGG.

GASCOIGNE'S "LIBER VERITATIS."

London: June 11, 1881.

Mr. Gairdner's statement (ACADEMY, June 11, 1881, p. 427) that the British Museum possesses a copy of Gascoigne's "Liber Veritatum" in the Cottonian MS., Vitellius, c. ix., is a little misleading. The volume, in fact, only contains six pages transcribed from the Oxford MS. (ff. 158-60); and the reason why these extracts, and these only, find a place in Sir Robert Cotton's book is not far to seek. When the Plague drove Parliament to Oxford in August 1625, Sir R. Cotton made a speech bearing upon the financial and other disorders of the day, in the course of which he said:—

"To draw you out to life the Image of former Kings extremities, I will tell you what I found since this assembly at Oxford, written by a Reverend man twice Vice-Chancellor of this place; his name was Gascoigne, a man that saw the Tragedie of De la Poole [the Duke of Suffolk]: He tells you that the Revenues of the Crown were so Rent away by ill Council, that the King was enforced to live de Tallagis Populi: That the King was grown in debt quinque centena millia librarum: That his great Favourite, in treating of a Forreigne Marriage, had lost his Master a Forreigne Duchie: That to work his enda, he had caused the King to adjourne the Parliament in Villis et remotis partibus Regni, when few people, propter defectum hospitii & victualium could attend, and by shifting that assembly from place to place to informe (I will use the Authors words) illos paucos qui remanebunt de Communitate Regni, concedere Regi quamvis pessima. When the Parliament endeavoured by an act of Resumption, the just and frequent way to repaire the languishing State of the Crown . . . this great man told the King it was ad dedecus Regis, and forced him from it. To which the Commons answered, although vexati laboribus et expensis, Quod nunquam concederet tuncam Regi, untill by the authoritie of Parliament, resumeret actualiter omnia pertinentia Coronæ Angliæ; And that it was magis ad dedecus Regis, to leave so many poor men in intollerable Want, to whom the King stood then indebted. Yet nought could all good Council work, untill by Parliament that had great man was banished: which was no sooner done; but an act of Resumption followed the inrollment of the Act of his Exilement."

This passage (which I extract from "Cottoni Posthumæ: divers choice Pieces of that Renowned Antiquary, Sir Robert Cotton," pp. 279-81, London, 1651) is not only very loosely quoted, but very hastily put together, as anyone will see who cares to compare it with Mr. Gairdner's transcript. Its interest lies not only in the support it adds to Mr. Gairdner's quotation, but also in the light it throws on the way Sir Robert Cotton's library grew up. The scribe was Dr. Richard James, Fellow of Corpus Christi College, who was largely employed by Cotton, and ultimately became his librarian.

It may be added that another set of extracts from Gascoigne occurs in the Harleian collection, 6949, pp. 1-25. These were taken from George Harbin's copy, which is now, I understand, in Sir Thomas Phillipps's Library at Cheltenham.

REGINALD LANE-POOLE.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, June 27, 7.30 p.m. Aristotelian: "Rosmini," by Mr. Thomas Davidson.
8.30 p.m. Geographical: "The Country of the Tekke Turkomans, and the T-jend and Murghab Rivers," by Lieut.-Col. C. E. Stewart.
TUESDAY, June 28, 8 p.m. Anthropological.
WEDNESDAY, June 29. Society of Arts: Annual General Meeting.
THURSDAY, June 30, 8 p.m. Victoria Institute: Annual Meeting.

SCIENCE.

Sight: an Exposition of the Principles of Monocular and Binocular Vision. By Joseph Le Conte, LL.D. "International Scientific Series." (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

It is a pity that the author of this interesting book leads us at the outset to expect a work dealing with vision as a whole—that is to say, its physics, its physiology, and its psychology, after the manner of Helmholtz's classic Handbuch der physiologischen Optik. A mere glance at the contents will show anyone how many gaps are left in the subject. The physiology is very inadequately dealt with, and as for the psychology it is conspicuous by its absence.

The first part, dealing with monocular vision, though a slight sketch and very defective, is a clear statement of some of the best-known results of modern research. Perhaps the most remarkable thing in this part is the quiet assumption that the sense of direction in vision, as in touch, is a primordial property of the nerves. The puzzle of erect vision, we are told, over which the "class of philosophers" known as "metaphysicians" have obfuscated themselves, is at once solved by the scientific statement that it is a function of the retina to project impressions "along the ray line."

The author gives much more space to the subject of binocular vision. Here he is evidently more at home, and he is to a great extent recording facts which he has personally observed. The large number of curious experiments which are here described, and which are illustrated by excellent diagrams, would themselves give a value to the volume. The author begins by giving in his adhesion to the theory of corresponding points in the two retinas. He courageously maintains that every case of two impressions not falling on corresponding points gives rise to double vision. In order to reconcile this theory with the facts of binocular perspective, he contends, first of all, that solidity or depth is commonly perceived by a successive fixation of the eyes on different points of the object. In the second place, in order to meet Dove's experiment, by which a perception of solidity is produced by means of an electric flash in a fraction of a second far too short to admit of ocular movement, he maintains that all perception of solidity by the resting eyes involves the recognition of double images, and indeed depends on this. Prof. Le Conte says that he himself is distinctly aware of the presence of double images, even in the case of fixating a point of a small thin book. And he meets the objection that we do not in many cases detect the doubling by the useful modern argument of "unconscious cerebration" (p. 146).

We have now briefly traversed two out of the three parts of Prof. Le Conte's volume. The remaining part deals with "Some Disputed Points in Binocular Vision." The topics discussed are the rotation of the eye about the axis in parallel and convergent movements of the axes, the form of the horopter, or the system of external points or loci answering to corresponding points, and so seen single, and finally a new mode of representing the results of the author's researches by diagrammatic illustration. With respect to the first point, that of rotation, the author arrives at results differing from those formulated in Lissing's law, and accepted by Helmholtz and others. According to him, this law holds good only of parallel movements, convergent movements being always accompanied by some amount of rotation. The observations recorded in favour of this conclusion are of a curious and interesting character, and it may be safely said that the author's experiments call for a reconsideration of the subject. With respect to the second subject, the horopter, the writer seeks to prove that when the optic axes are in the primary visual plane, that is to say, horizontal, the horopter is a line, whatever distance the object fixated may have. And he suggests that this fact, like that of distinct monocular vision being confined to a point or very small area, may be explained by the consideration that it aids "thoughtful attention" to a definite part of the visible scene. The author's new mode of representing the apparent, as distinguished from the actual, "visual facts" is very ingenious and interesting. It is an extension of E. Hering's notion of a single Cyclopean eye situated midway between the two eyes—an imaginary organ, by-the-by, which, as the author shows (p. 222), may be actually seen by placing the face against a mirror so that forehead and nose touch the glass, and then gazing on vacancy.

There is no doubt that Prof. Le Conte has given us very interesting matter in this volume, and it may seem ungracious to ask whether the space at his command might have been better employed. Yet his short concluding chapter, on "The Comparative Physiology of Binocular Vision," makes one regret that other aspects of the subject have not received more attention. In this chapter the author puts himself at the evolutionist's point of view, and asks what advantages arise to the higher animals, and more especially to man, from his double eye, with its corresponding points and its binocular vision. And what he says in answer to this is exceedingly instructive. But, in order to understand the genesis of vision, we must take a complete survey of abnormal as well as normal phenomena. We must remember, for example, that people who habitually squint do not combine the impressions made on the centres, the corresponding points par excellence, and that, when cured and needing to combine these, they are for a time unable to do so. Such facts show clearly enough that a power may be acquired in the individual life indistinguishable from what the author regards as an innate function of the optic structures. It is not at all unlikely that there is an innate disposition to combine the impressions of corresponding points; though the facts of stereoscopic perspective, as usually apprehended, show that this tendency is by no means a uniform one. It is even possible that this disposition may be connected with the anatomical fact of the optic chiasm to which the author is inclined to refer it, though this is exceedingly doubtful. But in any case we can only understand this disposition as the inherited result of ancestral habit. Omitting the facts of stereoscopic combination in the perception of solidity, one may say that the impressions of corresponding points tend to coalesce because they have uniformly answered in our experience to a single tangible object. The impressions made on the eyes of the lower animals which look away from one another do not coalesce because they have never answered to a single object. The phenomena of vision cannot be understood apart from those of touch. Even a complete description of the facts themselves, such as Helmholtz gives us, carries us back again and again to the truths discovered for science by a "metaphysician," that seeing is interpreting a visual language. And as soon as we begin, as Wundt and our author do, to ask why the structures and functions of the eye are what they are, we are compelled to recognise the fact that the eye has gradually adjusted itself as an organ for anticipating those experiences of movement and contact which have always been the essential thing in animal self-preservation. Prof. Le Conte, by trying to treat optics apart from psychology, has missed the really interesting side of vision, and has disabled himself for dealing with the problem which he himself raises at the end of his work.

JAMES SULLY.

The Mesnevy of Mevlânâ Jelâl-ed-dîn Muhammed Er-Rûmî; Book the First: together with some Account of the Life and Acts of the Author, &c., illustrated by a Selection of Characteristic Anecdotes, as collected by El-Eflâkî. Translated, and the Poetry Versified, by James W. Redhouse. (Trübner.)

It is difficult to know which to admire more, the versatility or the accuracy of Mr. Redhouse's work. A new edition of his Turkish Dictionary, some translations for Mr. Clous-ton's Arabian Poetry for English Readers, an investigation of Arabic astronomical terms, and the rendering from the Persian of Jelâl-ed-dîn's Mesnevy now before us must have all engaged him at about the same time, and all are characterised by the almost fastidious accuracy for which the Oriental interpreter to the Foreign Office is noted. The present is among his most important productions. Jelâl-ed-dîn Er-Rûmî was not merely a skilful Persian poet of the thirteenth century; he was a leader of Mohammadan mystics, and founder of the famous and influential order known as the dancing or whirling dervishes. His Mesnevy poem (said to contain 26,660 couplets, in six books, of which the first alone is translated in the present volume) may be taken as the summa theologica of the Sûfys, and, indeed, in its preamble it claims a rank equal to that of the Koran itself:—

"This is the book of the Rhymed Couplets (Mesnevy). It contains the roots of the roots of the roots of the Religion (Islam); and treats of the discovery of the mysteries of re-union and sure knowledge. It is the Grand Jurisprudence of God, the most glorious Law of the Deity, the most manifest Evidence of the Divine Being. The refulgence thereof 'is like that of a lantern in which is a lamp,' that scatters beams more bright than the morn. It is the paradise of the heart, with springs and foliage. . . . It is a comfort to men's breasts, an expeller of cares. It is an exposition of the Qur'ân, an amplification of spiritual aliments, and a dulcifier of the disposition; written 'by the hands of honourable scribes,' who inscribe thereon the prohibition: 'Let none touch it save the purified.' It is (a revelation) 'sent down (from on high) by the Lord of (all) the worlds,' which vanity approacheth not from before, nor from behind; which God watches over and observes, He being 'the best as a Preserver,' and 'the Most Compassionate of the merciful ones,' unto whom pertain (many) titles, His utmost title being God, whose name be exalted."

Prefixed to the Mesnevy itself are a number of anecdotes compiled by El-Eflâkî, a disciple of Jelâl-ed-dîn's grandson, El-'Arîf, and giving much curious information as to the life, not merely of the poet, but of his ancestors and descendants. From his childhood to his death, as chief teacher of the Dervish College at Iconium, a long series of miracles, portents, dreams, and visions are reported in these admiring anecdotes. As a boy of six, Jelâl-ed-dîn scorned the puny leaps of his playfellows, and sprang up into heaven and inspected the signs of the zodiac. As a young man, he used to take nocturnal walks from Damascus to Abraham's tomb at Hebron, a trifling distance of some 350 miles; and, after conversing there with green-robed saints, would return home betimes in the morning. In his capacity of professor at Iconium he was accustomed to receive angelic visitors through chinks in the wall, from whom he gained suggestions for his discourses, which turned on all subjects, from the voice of the ass to the divine essence, but invariably drew forth a wonderful moral, and made converts of the most sceptical listeners. He performed miracles without stint, but used them chiefly for the great object of conversion. He would swallow unheard-of doses of medicine in order to convince a doubting physician. Jelâl-ed-dîn is, in fact, a typical Eastern saint of the first rank. The anecdotes about him are mythical in the corrupt sense of the word, and their value lies solely in the light they throw upon his teaching and its interpretation in the hands of his followers.

For this teaching, however, the most important authority is his own poem, in which every aspect of Sūfy doctrine is forcibly described. The Mesnevy book is arranged in the favourite Oriental mode, of instructive tales interspersed with religious disquisitions and pointed with some moral conducive to the acceptance of Sūfy principles. To the Western mind it is a dreary manner of composition. A well-ordered treatise on Sūfism, in prose or verse, would be more acceptable than a series of uninteresting tales, in which every trivial incident is turned to good account, and each action bristles with moral lessons. Nevertheless, this is the form of didactic composition which especially delights the Eastern mind—as the popularity of the Gulistān and Bostān of Sady, and many other works besides the Mesnevy, testifies. The importance of the author's position as a leader in Oriental mysticism gives the Mesnevy an interest which could not attach to it merely as a poem, however much we may admire the grace of the original Persian. In every page of the Mesnevy we find arguments and parallels and illustrations which have a real value to the student of the most interesting of all the developments (or rather grafts) of Islam. The sixth tale, "The Greater Warfare," is a very characteristic exposition of Sūfism. There the doctrine hat "the body is a cage to the soul," the yearning of the bridegroom, man, for God, the bride, the ecstasy of the admission to the Presence, the beatitude of the re-absorption in the Divine Being, are all clearly set forth, though the exposition of them is put in the mouth of the Khalif 'Omar, who assuredly knew nothing of spiritual ecstasy or remanation, and would not have understood anything of what he is made to say in "The Greater Warfare."

It is a great gain to the unlearned to possess so important a work in a trustworthy English translation. Mr. Redhouse deserves all thanks for his labour. The difficulty of his task must have been considerably increased by his principle of preserving the rhymed couplets in his rendering, and we are not sure that this principle was altogether the best in the circumstances. The exigencies of rhyme are apt to produce an undue freedom in rendering, and the Mesnevy is no exception to this general tendency. Moreover, one expects more from a rhymed version than from a merely metrical or a prose translation; and, as nothing is harder than to compose a good verse translation, the expectation is generally disappointed. Rhymed versions of Oriental poems are commonly lame; and most readers will agree that good prose is better than poor verse. Mr. Redhouse, in his Preface, disarms criticism by an apology for his poetry; and we can only say that there would have been no need of excuse if the learned translator had restricted himself to prose. The elegant little Persian classics translated by S. R., and published by Messrs. Williams & Norgate, show how well prose can serve the turn; and we confess to a preference for the greater simplicity and dignity of the few prose examples of the Mesnevy included in the volume of Sady belonging to that series.

No one will challenge Mr. Redhouse's accuracy when not impeded by the necessity of rhyme. If a fault is to be found, it lies in an unnecessary precision in matters of detail. For instance, the advantage of some of the orthographic foot-notes may be doubted. Why append to the name Mekka the note "incorrectly written Mecca by Europeans"? (p. 105). Incorrect is a strong expression for the representation of Kāf by c; and it is possible to retort on Mr. Redhouse the question, where has he secreted the silent hé at the end of Mekkah? He writes of "Madina," "Medina is the usual incorrect spelling of the name," though feth in this case commonly has the sound of e in "bed." And if Omar is incorrect, so undoubtedly is 'Umer (p. 102). Doubtless Mr. Redhouse has some reason for writing Helagu instead of Hulagu; but we cannot acquiesce in his custom of calling Jelāl-ed-din plain "Jelāl." "El-Jelāl" would be the ordinary abbreviated form. Such minute criticisms are only applicable to a writer of such precision as Mr. Redhouse. They do not affect the general character of the work, which, apart from questions of style and verse, is admirable.

STANLEY LANE-POOLE.

The Collected Works of James MacCullagh, LL.D., Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Dublin. Edited by John H. Jellett, B.D., and Samuel Haughton, Clk., M.D. (Dublin: Hodges & Co.; London: Longmans.)

MOST of the scientific papers of the late Prof. MacCullagh are of great interest and permanent value, and it was right they should be published in a collected form. The work of collection and editing has been carefully performed by Profs. Jellett and Haughton, and the result is a handsome volume of the Dublin University series.

The most important of these papers are those on Physical Optics, which were published in the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy between the years 1830 and 1845. They are twenty-three in number, and occupy 250 pages of the present volume. MacCullagh was a disciple of Fresnel, and in his earliest work sought to elucidate Fresnel's theory by geometrical theorems. Later, his attention was directed, chiefly in consequence of the experiments of Brewster, to the general problem of the reflection and refraction of polarised light at the surface of crystalline media, only particular cases of which had been solved by Fresnel. The problem is discussed at length in memoirs xi. and xiv. In the former of these he deduces a solution from certain assumed physical principles, and in the second he seeks to establish the theory upon a strictly mechanical basis by means of the general dynamical equation of Lagrange. Fresnel's theory rests upon certain assumptions respecting the constitution of the ether and the direction of vibration. MacCullagh showed that the same results could be reached by other assumptions, which appeared to him the more probable. Fresnel assumed that the density of the ether is different in different media, its value depending upon the refractive index of the medium; and, moreover, that, in the case of a ray of plane polarised light, the vibrations are perpendicular to the plane of polarisation. MacCullagh, on the contrary, assumed the density of the ether to be constant for all media, and it followed as a consequence from this that the vibrations of the ether in plane polarised light must be considered to be parallel to the plane of polarisation. Views similar to those of MacCullagh were advocated about the same time by Prof. F. E. Neumann, of Königsberg. Which of these opposed views is to be accepted is still a vexed question, though probably the adherents of Fresnel's hypothesis are in a majority.

Of Prof. MacCullagh's contributions to pure geometry the most valuable is that on "Surfaces of the Second Order." In this elaborate memoir a new definition is given of this class of surfaces analogous to the well-known mode of defining curves of the second order by means of focus and directrix.

The articles on the "Rotation of a Solid Body round a Fixed Point" and on the "Attraction of Spheroids and Ellipsoids" were not published during the lifetime of the author. They are records of courses of lectures given by Prof. MacCullagh which were preserved by Profs. Haughton and Alliman, and by them communicated to the Royal Irish Academy. Two papers on Egyptian chronology are printed at the end of the volume. In these, Prof. MacCullagh sought to connect the narrative of Moses with the available fragments of Egyptian history, and to give an answer to the question—Who were the Egyptian Sovereigns that were contemporary with Moses?

A. W. REINOLD.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

LIEUT. BOVE, of the Italian Navy, who accompanied Prof. Nordenskiöld in the Vega, has just returned from a visit to Buenos Ayres in connexion with the projected Antarctic expedition. Though he is stated to have received some pecuniary support from the Argentine Geographical Institute, we learn from the Buenos Ayres Standard that he has signally failed to raise any enthusiasm there for the scheme, and it seems there is the same apathy on the subject in South America as in this country.

It appears probable that there will be a good deal of activity this season on the Northwest coast of Siberia, especially in the Obi and Yenisei Gulfs. M. Sibirakoff is fitting out three sledge expeditions to take supplies to the Oscar Dickson and Nordland, which have been frozen up during the past winter in the Gulf of Obi, and of which no intelligence has been received since he left them in September last. The steamer Nordenskiöld is also being fitted out at Gothenburg for another voyage to the mouth of the Yenisei.

THE objects of the above-mentioned expeditions are chiefly commercial, but science will not be unrepresented in the same region, for we learn that a Russian hydrographic expedition started for the Obi on May 27. The party is under the command of Col. Moisseïeff, of the pilot service, who is accompanied by Capt. Abramoff and Lieuts. Philippoff and Mikheïeff. M. Fuchs will act as astronomer, and two students skilled in surgery and natural history are also attached to the expedition. Two steam cutters for their use have been sent on by rail to Rybinsk, whence they will proceed by the Volga and the Kama to Perm. It is intended that their crews should be instructed in hydrography and the navigation of the Gulf of Obi and the Kara Sea, which as yet is very imperfectly understood, as was shown by the difficulty experienced by M. Sibiriakoff's expedition last September.

THE American Arctic expedition sailed from San Francisco in the Rodgers on June 16. The vessel is provisioned for three years, and has been fitted out by the aid of a grant of 175,000 dols. recently voted by Congress, her object being to search for the exploring vessel Jeanette (formerly the Pandora), of which nothing has been heard for so long. Many people in the United States believe that the Jeanette is frozen up near Wrangell Land or Herald Island, where the Rodgers is to search for her.

A TELEGRAM from Brisbane states that Mr. Watson's Transcontinental Railway Survey party had arrived at the Gulf of Carpentaria. Mr. Watson reports that the district traversed was a fine country, offering scarcely any engineering difficulties. The health of the expedition was good until their arrival at Point Parker, when some cases of fever occurred.

GEN. TÜRRE has obtained a concession for a ship-canal through the Isthmus of Corinth; and at the same time discouraging news has been received regarding M. de Lesseps' kindred scheme on the Panama Isthmus. The works there are said to be making slow progress, and disorganisation prevails among the employés.

NEWS has been received from Aden of the murder of Signor Giuletti's expedition in the Danakil country on the eastern edge of the Abyssinian plateau. They set out from Beilul, in the Bay of Assab, in the middle of April, in the direction of Mussalli, intending to explore the source of the River Gualima. Their journey was to have extended over about 160 miles of country, but they appear to have been murdered by the Assab Gallas when only four days' march from Beilul.

SOME news has lately been received of the movements of the expeditions to the interior of Patagonia under Gen. Villegas, which were referred to in the ACADEMY last March. The third division, of which the destination is Lake Nahuel Huapi, was towards the end of March eighteen miles from the banks of the little River Vasco, which runs from south to north. The general nature of the country traversed is described as stony, but the aridity of the soil could be easily overcome by artificial irrigation. It was thought that the country was especially suited for stock-raising. The small streams by which it is intersected are only three feet broad, with pure and limpid waters, which are kept at a refreshing temperature even at midday by the overhanging plants. A small steamer, the Neuquem, has been sent up the Rio Negro, and it was hoped that there would be sufficient water in the Limay tributary after April for her to reach Lake Nahuel Huapi. Her officers have prepared a complete and detailed chart of the Rio Negro as far as the confluence of the Limay and Neuquem.

IT is characteristic of the prudent Swiss Alpine guide that no less than 119 men of that calling, all belonging to the Berner Oberland, have effected insurances in one single Zürich Accident Insurance Company for sums amounting in their total to 266,000 frs.

SCIENCE NOTES.

The Engraved Slate from Towyn.—Some anthropological interest attaches to a curiously marked slab of slate which was found, about two years ago, at Towyn, near Aberystwith. Anyone carefully looking at the slate could see at once that the markings were not accidental; and, at the instance, we believe, of Prof. Rhys, the matter was referred to Mr. J. Park Harrison. This gentleman has exercised upon the Towyn slate the same patience which he brought to bear upon the characters on the Easter Island tablets and upon the markings on the chalk of the Cissbury pits. After a visit to Towyn and a minute examination of the slate, he concludes that the engraved outlines are figures of bronze celts, sepulchral urns or vases, two-handled baskets, and possibly, in one case, a form of tunic such as is represented as having been worn by the Belgae. Why such objects were thus delineated, and when and by whom they were engraved, are questions which yet await solution. Mr. Harrison has brought the subject before the Anthropological Institute, the Society of Antiquaries, and the Royal Archaeological Institute.

The Meteorological Station on Ben Nevis.—This station, situated on the highest spot on Great Britain, was opened on June 1. We are indebted to the Scotsman for the following details. It is not a permanent observatory, with a habitation adjoining, that has been undertaken; but only the placing of a set of instruments on the summit upon suitable stands, and protected by a stone screen. With the exception of an anemometer, the set of instruments is complete, including radiation thermometers. Mr. Wragge, who is acting as observer on behalf of the Scottish Meteorological Society, lives at Fort William, at the foot of the mountain, and on the sea-level. Every day he ascends the mountain, starting at five in the morning; and, after spending about an hour on the top for taking observations from nine to ten, he gets home again by about two in the afternoon. In the early part of June the path up the mountain was often deep in snow and enveloped in mist; but Mr. Wragge has marked out the track with a succession of cairns. On June 8, the minimum registered by the dry thermometer was 20° 9' F.

THE Council of Victoria University, Owens College, at their last meeting, elected Mr. Arthur Schuster, Ph.D. (Heidelberg), F.R.S., to the newly instituted Professorship of Applied Mathematics. Dr. Schuster was formerly a student of Owens College, and in 1875 was appointed by a committee of the Royal Society to take charge of the expedition which was sent at the expense of the Government to observe the total solar eclipse in Siam.

THE Medical Society of Berlin is making preparations to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of Prof. Virchow's appointment to his chair. Prof. Virchow was called to Berlin from Würzburg in 1856, and began to lecture in the autumn session of that year. October 13, which is also the Professor's sixtieth birthday, has therefore been chosen for the day of the celebration.

THE Geological Society of Belgium has resolved to publish a catalogue of all the books, maps, and papers to be found in the several libraries of the country relating to geology, mineralogy, and palaeontology.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY FOR THE PROMOTION OF HELLENIC STUDIES.—(Thursday, June 16.)

C. T. NEWTON, Esq., C.B., Vice-President, in the Chair.—The annual meeting of the society was held, and the Report of the council was read, giving an account of the activities of the society for the past year, the chief of which are the publication of the first volume of the Journal of Hellenic Studies, and the establishment of relations with the Parnassos Society of Athens, for the benefit of members who may travel in Greece.—Prof. P. Gardner read extracts from a paper by Dr. Heinrich Schliemann, giving a full account of the results of his excavations at the Boeotian Orchomenos, which paper is to appear, with several illustrations, in the next part of the society's Journal. Dr. Schliemann's results were in some respects startling. He showed, among other things, that the beehive-shaped treasury of Minyas was in use in Macedonian and Roman times, and then contained a sanctuary and several statues. The last part of Dr. Schliemann's excavations, carried out by him in conjunction with Prof. Sayce, was devoted to the investigation of a square thalamos which opened out of the main circular chamber, and the roof of which was adorned with patterns of great beauty.—Extracts were read by the Chairman from a paper by Mr. Cecil Smith on an interesting vase of the British Museum which represents the exploits of Theseus.—Miss Amelia B. Edwards exhibited a very beautiful gold ear-ring, said to have been found at Athens, and representing two draped archaic female figures.

FINE ART.

The Twenty Styles of Architecture. By the Editor of "The Hundred Greatest Men." (Sampson Low.)

THE science of architecture is unfortunately one of those branches of study which seems specially to commend itself to those who imagine that a satisfactory knowledge of a complicated and technical subject is to be acquired in a cheap way by the perusal of a few compact handbooks. One often meets people who, on the strength of having looked through Parker's Glossary and Fergusson's valuable, though somewhat inaccurate, work on the architecture of all countries and ages, talk glibly about styles and orders in a way to impress their less erudite friends with a sense of their complete mastery of the subject. And this is not the worst; for occasionally they go farther, and, anxious to enrich the world with some of this stock of easily acquired information, produce a book which is not only worthless, but so misleading, from the falseness of its so-called facts and the looseness of its deductions, that one cannot but regard its publication as being an unmixed evil.

This new work on "the Twenty Styles" is one of the worst of this class. It consists of a series of poorly executed plates of different buildings, selected apparently without any definite system, many of them grossly inaccurate, some purely imaginary, and all devoid of any scale. The explanatory letterpress and list of "facts" about each are full of the wildest mis-statements; and the general remarks are quite valueless from the fact that the author assumes every individual peculiarity of the selected building to be a differentia of its style.

The first large plate is a view of the great hall of Karnac, with the real height of the columns considerably reduced. By way of explanation, the text opposite begins—

"Thebes, next to Athens and Rome the most important city of antiquity, was the capital of Upper Egypt; and its most flourishing period was the age of the Pharaohs, twelve hundred years before the Christian era. This was the first great building epoch."

The real date of the great Temple of Karnac was between 1600 B.C. (Bunsen) or 1700 B.C. (Mariette), and about 1400 B.C. when Sethi I. added the great hall here mis-represented. As to 1200 B.C. being "the first great building epoch," has the author never heard of the splendid tombs of Sakkarah, the Temple (so-called) of the Sphinx, or the Pyramids of Maydoom, Sakkarah, and Gizeh, all of which are in date nearer 4000 B.C. than 1200 B.C.? Under the heading "Egyptian Style," drawings of the Temples of Edfou and Philae follow. Perhaps luckily, the writer commits himself to no date for these; and the reader is allowed to suppose that the "Bed of Pharaoh" is a work of Egyptian design quite untempered by Greek influence.

The next plate is supposed to be a mixture of the temples at Agrigentum and Paestum, but is really quite unlike either—the Temple of Neptune at Paestum having no internal columns at the end of the cella, or figures of giants, and the Olympeion at Agrigentum having no columns at all in the cella. A receipt is given "To make a Greek Interior" by dividing the cella into three aisles (sic) by two rows of columns. This happens to be the arrangement at Paestum; but no notice is taken of the many equally important Greek interiors which had no dis-engaged columns, as in the Temple of Apollo near Phigaleia, the Temples of Hera and Concord at Agrigentum, and many others. The principle of entasis is described thus:—

"The columns [in a Greek temple] do not taper evenly like those of Philae, but show a slight swelling, being broadest, not at the base, but just above it [entasis]."

It is difficult to imagine what the feelings of an Ancient Greek would have been had he been shown a column whose greatest diameter was not at the base. The date of the Temple of Neptune is given with beautiful preciseness as "erected 526 B.C."—a date probably at least seventy years too early, though it is impossible to fix it within a decade or two.

Plates of the Parthenon, the Erechtheum, and the Choragic monument of Lysicrates follow next. About the first of these occurs the mysterious remark that the capitals are brought "within the edge of the building, while at Paestum they extend beyond it." The difficult question of the attribution of the various parts of the Erechtheum is settled thus:—

"The central portion was perhaps devoted to the worship of Athene; the portico on the right conducted to the tomb of Erechtheus; the balcony on the left was dedicated to Pandrosa."

Much nonsense has already been written about the Erechtheum, but I hardly think that any part of it has been described as a balcony before, nor has the name Pandrosa been given to Cecrops' faithful daughter. The monument of Lysicrates is said to be "the first and only example of the Corinthian order in Greece." Comment would be superfluous. The cornice is said to be crowned with a cymatium, and its "cell and portico" are said to "form one." The peculiarity of the cornice really is that there is no cymatium; and as to the portico, that has no existence at all.

"The Characteristics of the Greek Style" are tabulated in a manner at once novel and striking—

- "1. The primitive form is a cabin with a gable of low pitch.
- "2. Upon this is engrafted the portico, which serves as a measurement characterising the edifice as strong and heavy, or light and delicate.
- "3. The first element of the portico or order is the colonnade, a row of columns forming an endless horizontal chain.
- "4. The other element of the order is the entablature, composed of three string-courses, and forming an endless horizontal belt."

The notion of comparing the peristyle, which is apparently what the writer means by "the portico," to "an endless horizontal chain" has at least the merit of originality.

A disquisition on the Pantheon in Rome gives our author an opportunity to contrast the peculiarities of the Greek and Roman styles.

"The reader sees before him a grand dome with a porch; though not of the greatest beauty, it has the advantage in being the largest in the world as well as the first. Its diameter is one hundred and forty feet; it rests upon the ground, however, instead of being elevated, like St. Peter's, two hundred feet in the air."

One can excuse the author's never having heard of the enormous dome of the Sanchi Tope, or the Treasury of Atreus; but a writer whose book is dated from Rome should scarcely ask us to believe that the dome of the Pantheon "rests upon the ground."

"A comparison may be drawn between the Greek and Roman column. In Greek columns the shaft was made of a number of blocks; in the Roman it is a single stone (monolith)."

The truth is that the earlier Greek buildings, such as the Temple of Corinth and the Temple of Zeus Panhellenius in Aegina, had either all or by far the greater number of their columns monolithic, and there are plenty of Roman columns built up of many blocks.

About half the volume is taken up with discussions such as these on the classic styles, and the reader, if sufficiently persevering, then passes on to mediæval times. San Paolo fuori le mura is the first example given. We are told that the interior has been recently restored in white marble; but seeing that the whole of the nave and aisles, ruined by fire, were levelled to the ground, and rebuilt, not after the old design, one would hardly select the word "restored" as one to be applied to the operation.

It is interesting to learn when windows were first invented, though somewhat startling to find that it was not till after A.D. 388.

"Along the wall near the roof is a long row of round-headed openings to admit light. These are found in no Pagan building. Origin of windows."

Under the heading "St. Clement's, Rome," we are told

"St. Clement's is the primitive type of a church; it is the only remaining example showing interior arrangements."

In Italy alone, numbers of other churches still have in good preservation their original ambones, presbytery seats, cathedra, &c., as, for example, San Lorenzo fuori le mura, and the basilica of Torcello, near Venice.

The distinction between a basilica and a cathedral is sketched out thus:—

"Cathedral of Pisa.—The structure is called a cathedral by compliment, being rather higher than the early Christian basilicas, and possessing a transept with cupolated tower."

A number of plates of other buildings, supposed to be typical specimens of their style, follow in succession to the dreary end of the book, and with each its due allowance of explanatory and critical text; but it would be a thankless task to discuss them any further. The examples given are fair specimens of the value and trustworthiness of the whole.

The book is, in short, one which can serve no other purpose than perhaps a warning to those who may contemplate the publication of a treatise on a subject as unfamiliar to them as the science and history of architecture apparently are to the author of these "Twenty Styles." J. HENRY MIDDLETON.

Excavations at Carnac (Brittany): a Record of Archaeological Researches in the Alignments of Kermario. By James Miln. (Edinburgh: David Douglas.)

THE author's brief Preface of twelve lines reads like a half-conscious presage of an impending sorrowful visitation. It was written a few days only before he was snatched away, and while the volume was in the printer's hands. The publisher tells us that the revision of the proof-sheets was completed the day before the short illness began which terminated an active and useful life; and almost the last word the author penned was sepulture! His sudden removal is a great and lamentable loss to his relatives and friends, as well as to his Breton fellow-labourers, by whom he was highly esteemed, and from whom he learned, when he was drooping in his sickness, that his services to Morbihan archaeology had merited an honourable recognition which they had unanimously accorded to him. Not only are his two published volumes a faithful chronicle of his careful and enterprising researches, and full of information for British antiquaries, but the exhumed relics will long remain, we trust, in South Brittany associated with his name, to interest and enlighten the numerous visitors who are annually attracted thither from all parts of the world by the fame of its wonderful and mysterious remains.

Illa hic monumenta reliquit.

The first volume of Mr. Miln's archaeological researches at Carnac (Bossenno) was reviewed in the ACADEMY of September 15, 1877, and received our hearty commendation. The present volume, which has not much more than half as many pages as the other contained, opens out a new and unforeseen line of investigation.

There are not many tourists who know anything of the Alignments of Kermario. They lie away from the track usually followed, and are seldom visited by any but those who spend a few days at Carnac, and explore the surrounding country on foot. Those of our readers who have journeyed from Auray to Carnac by the new road will remember that this road crosses the Alignments of Menec, near their eastern extremity, where many of the monoliths have been overthrown by diggers for sand. The west end of the Kermario Alignments lies a few hundreds of yards away on the left hand from this point, in the direction of the mill of Kermaux, which is a prominent object in the landscape. Among these lines, in some places following their direction, and in others traversing them, there are low, sloping embankments or earth-works, resembling ancient hedges; and it was in these, as well as in the open spaces about them, that Mr. Miln and his companions carried on their excavations. These earth-works were found to enclose rudely constructed, uncemented stone walls, in which some of the overturned smaller monoliths of the Alignments had been utilised here and there. The result of these explorations has been the unearthing of a large number of primitive dwellings and the collection of many relics of stone, bronze, clay, and glass.

Mr. Miln came to the conclusion that the several lines of walls and buildings indicated two, or probably three, distinct occupations—viz., (1) Rude defensive walls and dwellings erected by "the Celts at a period anterior to the Roman invasion;" (2) Defensive works of better construction of Roman origin, and some of the ancient dwellings improved, adapted to their requirements, and rendered habitable, by the Roman soldiery who were stationed there; (3) The return to them of the enervated and helpless inhabitants, after the fall of the Roman Empire, as to a place of refuge, when their coasts were ravaged by the barbarous and plundering Northmen. This conclusion was arrived at by a comparison of the buildings, and of the objects they contained.

The discovery of these primitive constructions among the menhirs of Kermario is conclusive as regards the very great antiquity of these Alignments, and overthrows the conjectures of certain theorists who have wished to assign to them a post-Roman date.

We accept Mr. Miln's derivations of Kermario and Kerlescant with a little hesitation. His Carnac friends, who assisted in his long-continued investigations, and who have a tendency to jump to hasty conclusions, appear to have imbued him with their views. It is natural that they should regard local field- and place-names with the reverence that belongs to natives of the soil; but as enthusiasts in archaeology they are, perhaps, somewhat prejudiced in favour of the great antiquity of such names. We do not blame them for it; but, while we are prepared to admit that the present nomenclature may often tell of old customs, it is possible that we may sometimes be misled by the sound of words. Mr. Miln says that Kermario "may be considered as indicating a sepulchral destination," and may signify "village of the dead." Ker is Armorican for village, and marô for dead. But the word is mario, which may mean Mary; and the Farm which is to the south of the Alignments, and bears the name of Kermario, may simply mean a house or mansion under the protection of the Blessed Virgin, and may have given its name to the locality and to this portion of the Alignments. The inhabitants of the district do not pronounce the word Kermarô, but always as though it were written Kervariou. It is certain that the other lands across which this vast monument stretches bear modern names, as Lann-er-Velein (moorland of the mill), Lann-er-Houarem (moorland of the warren), Lann-er-Goayeux (moorland of the streamlets); and so Lann Manô Kermario may mean moorland of the height, where St. Mary's mansion stands.

It is also doubtful if Kerlescant is a corrupt form of Kerloquet or Kerlosquet, as supposed by Mr. Miln. Losk is a noun which signifies burning, and loskañ, in the dialect of the Côtes-du-Nord, is the verb to consume with fire. But no discovery has been made to support the idea that the cremation of human bodies was practised either at Kerlosquet or at Kerlescant at the period when these systems of Alignments were erected. Still, whatever may be the signification of these names, it must always be a matter of doubt how long they have been borne by these localities. If they are ancient in any degree they may not be of an earlier date than the Middle Ages; and, even if their derivations are what the author has conjectured, they may have been applied to fields, places, and monuments by those who drew upon their imagination. They may have no higher antiquity than "Ty-choriquet," "Bé-ergroah," "Mané-er-H'rôk," &c., as applied to other monuments of the Morbihan.

If we are correct in our supposition that the derivations of these place-names were the suggestions of Mr. Miln's Carnac friends, we observe that his mind appears to have been allured likewise in the direction of the battle-field theory of the Kermario lines by casual visitors. At p. 66 he remarks:—

"One feels that this is a dominant position. Twice it has occurred, when walking with military officers among these stone alleys, that they made the same observation: 'These Alignments occupy the most advantageous position that a general could select for disposing his troops.' And in fact we have the material proof of combats having taken place on this site at some remote epoch in the quantity of projectiles in granite and pieces of broken celts which lie scattered about on the moorland."

These supposed projectiles, which are small, round, granite pebbles, he appears to have found in the newly discovered dwellings, which he admits were constructions of a much more recent date than the Alignments themselves. Consequently, the battle-field origin of the Alignments obtains no material confirmation from them.

In recommending this volume to our archaeological readers we regret that we are unable to express our admiration of the illustrations. There are several excellent maps of the localities explored, but the drawings of the objects are greatly inferior to those which illustrate the Bossemno relics in the preceding volume. W. C. LUKIS.

LE SALON À LONDRES.

To most admirers of French art this exhibition will be a disappointment. That the pictures should be marked by daring effects and unconventional motives; that the drawing should, as a rule, be strong and bold; that the figures should belong to the faces, and that the features should be thoroughly at one; that there should be no uncertainty in the painter's aim or vacillation in carrying it through; that tone should be preserved even at sacrifice of colour—these are expectations which are fairly realised. But when we think of other than technical qualities which make French art delightful to us—the nobleness of sentiment which it sometimes attains to, its intellectual grasp, its spirit, its sense of the pathos of human life, its vivacious seizure of character, its love of dainty delights, its feeling for certain qualities of nature, its elegance and freedom—the exhibition fails to satisfy. It has, moreover, one quality which is specially uncharacteristic of France, and that is "dulness."

One work it contains is thoroughly satisfactory and worthy of the great name of the artist, and that is Meissonier's portrait of M. Alexandre Dumas, exquisite, of course, in technique, and full of character to the finger-tips. When we turn to another great name—viz., that of M. Gérôme—we find, alas! only a fiasco. The figure of St. Jerome, lying with his head most uncomfortably twisted against a lion, and his skinny legs stretched out towards us, is anything but dignified. Nor is the "uncanny" ring which surrounds his head suggestive of a saintly halo. It is green and heavy, as of copper covered with verdigris, and seems only kept in position by the pressure of the saint's head against the lion's side.

In M. Bonnat's Job we have a work very French, but very repulsive—a masterpiece of morbid realism. No one can deny the power and skill with which the artist has placed before us the emaciated, many-plagued old man; but it needs not only a mind, but a body, unqueamish, to tolerate its loathsome details; and we do not understand why, as he evidently intended to be as unpleasant as possible, he omitted the boils. He has surely missed an opportunity.

It is pleasant to turn from this living corruption to the strange sweet face of M. Albert Maignan's Jeanne-Marie (26) in her close-buttoned hood and quaint brooch. Slight, but deft in execution, sweet in colour and sentiment, the work is like a flower. Exquisitely finished, and fine as a study of character, is his plain-faced, blue-eyed Country Woman (41). By M. Dejonghe, there is a charming picture of modern life called The Two Friends—a girl lying with her head on a dog, her mother regarding them with a delighted smile. The room is brilliantly lighted by the sun, which comes in from an open window with a balcony full of plants, giving great play of broken lights skilfully managed. The figure of the lady, half lolling in her chair, is admirably drawn; and admirable also is the rendering of the texture of her yellow silk dress and the black lace sleeves warmed with her rosy arms. Of the contributions by M. Emile Lévy we prefer the Portrait of a Lady (52), curious but successful in colour, and one of the few faces here attractive from the charm of character. Attractive, also, from its clever painting and original motive, is the pretty, black-haired girl that M. Perret has drawn for us, Dreaming in the Grass. Lovely in colour is M. James Tissot's Interrupted (50), but it is spoilt by the insipid, ill-balanced face. Of still-life there are three examples—two by M. Vollon, painted with extreme force and rich in colour, and one by M. Rousseau (15), in which a tablecloth and silver cup are rendered with great delicacy and purity. Of M. Henner there are two examples—one a portrait of a lady whose sallow complexion is rendered by the artist as if he loved it, but, colour apart, a masterly piece of painting. There is no denying the forcible composition of The Death of Cramm by M. Evariste Luminais, or the technical merit of such pictures as the Saadia of M. Saint-Pierre and

The Mandora Player of M. Theobald Chartran, or the masterly, if rough, execution and truly Oriental character of the Serpent Charmer by M. Benjamin Constant. Such disappointment as we have expressed is not at the absence of clever pictures by clever artists, but that their works here exhibited do not display French art, or even their own powers, to the best advantage. Nothing by M. Lefebvre can be despised, and he has three very clever pictures here, but the most important—viz., his Pandora—does not do him justice; and that M. Baudry should be represented only by a portrait is a pity. Nor is it possible to be enthusiastic about examples of such men as MM. Roybet, Le Roux, and Madrazo which only recel worthier work by the same hands.

In sculpture, there are some excellent small terra-cottas by M. Carpeaux, who has found a new and legitimate employment for sculpture in rendering the suppleness of the human body. Perhaps the emotions excited by listening to a shell or decorating the head with one are scarcely sufficient to account for such elaborate grace of attitude as he has given to two of his pretty children; but we must remember that these children are not of Northern type. He can be severe enough, and dignified with the simple dignity of hard, outdoor, modern labour, when he models for us a Fish-girl of France, or he can make lissom limbs ripple with abandoned mirth when he shapes a Bacchante. On the whole, we think no French artist is so well represented here as M. Carpeaux.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

THE STATUES OF LORENZO AND GIULIANO IN THE MEDICI CHAPEL.

THE statues of Lorenzo and Giuliano de Medici on their monuments in the Medici Chapel have been taken down from their niches to be moulded—a rare event, which affords an opportunity of examining the backs of these famous works of Michelangelo. I have been permitted, under favourable circumstances, to do so; and, as it may be the only opportunity within some generations, I propose to describe what I have seen.

The statues are placed on low pedestals, to facilitate the making of the moulds, in two small rooms, each having one window, so that both are favourably lighted. The first impression is that of the pains which Michelangelo has taken in modelling the relief of all the parts to adapt them to be well seen at the height at which they are placed above the eye in their niches. Thus the enormous pectorals of Giuliano have almost the relief of the breasts of a woman; and all the muscles of the body are seen to be equally exaggerated when placed opposite the eye under a concentrated light, while the flow of the curves and the varied surfaces of these gigantic muscles are magnificent, not only in the perfect knowledge shown of the forms, but also in the beauty of the surface. The naked knees and sandalled lower limbs of Giuliano are indescribably fine in form; while the perfectness of the symmetry with which they are completed in the marble reminds me strongly of the equal beauty with which similar features are rendered in the frescoes of the vault of the Sistine when closely examined. The hands of Giuliano present the same astonishing combination of exaggeration in the bony structure combined with grace of line and beauty of finish. In the general forms they recel the well-known pen-drawing of a hand made by Michelangelo to satisfy the emissary of the Card. San Giorgio, which shows at what an early period of his career the style was adopted which was developed in the Medici Chapel.

I need not dwell on the head of this statue, which, if not known in the original, is familiar to many by the help of casts; but I observed a peculiarity lost in these—the locks, like those of the Bacchus and of the David, are perforated, so that light passes through them in places, producing singular and beautiful effects of chiaroscuro. The ears are not finished, and are placed rather too high in the head.

The details of the armour and of the small amount of drapery are in Michelangelo's picturesque manner, much undercut to get sharp marked shadow, quite as much as if the statues had been intended to be cast in bronze.

These statues were polished by Fra Giovanni Montorsolo, but he limited this operation to the front portions.

The back of the Giuliano is finished exclusively with the marvellous flow of the chisel of the great master himself. It offers a lesson to sculptors of all schools and all times which it would be well to follow, presenting something very different from the merely dexterous chiselling of the marble cutters who, for the most part, execute the works of modern masters. As the marks of the tool bend and flow over the surface of the marble, the genius and sentiment of the great artist are seen in every touch. In the centre of the back of the cuirass, between the shoulders, there is one of those fantastic masks which Michelangelo liked to carve from his boyish days.

The mould on the Lorenzo was carried farther up than on the Giuliano; consequently, I can say less of this marvel of the sculptor's art. The face, when seen near, is still more impressive than when observed from the floor of the chapel. It may well be considered the greatest creation of Michelangelo's inspiration. As to its technical execution it is unsurpassed, and it seems to me that English sculptors in particular would do well to make its majestic forms the objects of special study. The hand on which the chin rests is unfinished, and is clumsy in its details; the other, on the thigh, is very beautiful.

On the back of this statue there is a rude projection of marble, which may be called a pilaster. I think that it must have been intended to cut this away, had not the death of Clement dispersed the artists engaged in the chapel, leaving everything unfinished; and then a new Pope required from the artist the realisation of other ideas. Much of the unfinished work of Michelangelo is to be attributed to the succession of Pontiffs utterly indifferent to the commissions of their predecessors, and thoughtful only of employing the first artist in the world in their special service. Michelangelo passed from the Medici Chapel once more to the Sistine, and again from sculpture to painting.

The pilaster to which I have alluded has made it necessary to cut out the back of the niche in which the Lorenzo sits in such deep and gloomy thought.

Fine casts of these statues from the new and excellent moulds may well be considered among the most precious gifts that could be placed before the sculptors of any school, especially if they are kept near the eye, when the infinite skill with which they have been executed and the grandeur of their forms in every part may be fully appreciated. C. HEATH WILSON.

ART SALES.

A WRITER in the art columns of a weekly contemporary, evidently not in possession of much knowledge of the subject, has said that the celebrated Bale Collection—to which we return for the last time to-day—was famous "for etchings and engravings by the Old Masters." The truth is, it was famous for almost everything except these things. The sale of the wonderful assemblage of drawings by early English artists we have already recorded. That of the numerous priceless objects in crystal and jade, and in fine porcelain, has been elsewhere described. We write to-day chiefly of the drawings by Old Masters, and of the engravings of a modern—the Liber Studiorum prints of Turner—since both constituted important parts of the Bale Collection. As to the "etchings and engravings by the Old Masters," there were few that invite comment. Some of Vandyke's etchings, in early states, sold for good prices; and one exalted price was reached by the Van den Wouver of this master—an extraordinary rarity, for which about £450 was paid by the agent of Baron Rothschild. It is said that the British Museum competed with the agent of the Baron for this print. One highly important Marc Antonio sold for £241; and The Cottage with White Pales, by Rembrandt, fetched the unusually high sum of £155. But, generally, the etchings by Rembrandt were not such as to command extravagant prices; thus, a second state of the Hundred Guilder went for only £75 (we have seen it fetch £250), and the Cottage with Dutch Haybarn went for only £45.

Among the Old Masters' drawings, which were most of them of acknowledged authenticity and of wide fame, we note first two studies of Botticelli for the Calumny. They fetched £54. By Dürer, a Stag Beetle, drawn in the water-colour which he was from time to time accustomed to employ, sold for £79. It is said to have been in the Strawberry Hill collection. By Leonardo da Vinci, a study of a Child, heightened with white, on gray paper, realised £309. By Raffaele, by far the most important drawing was that of The Maries and Two other Figures—being a study for the Pietà engraved by Marc Antonio. It had passed through the hands of Dr. Mead and of John Barnard before falling into those of Mr. Bale, and was now purchased by Mr. Malcolm of Poltalloch for £535. This is an invaluable possession, and is added to a cabinet of known preciousness.

Of Turner's Liber Studiorum, Mr. C. S. Bale possessed a fairly large collection—some of them first and some later states, some trial proofs (engravers' proofs), generally struggled for by wealthy amateurs more on account of scarcity than beauty, and some of the pure etchings, at once beautiful and rare, though obviously incomplete. A somewhat too black impression of the first state of the Bridge and Cows, coming originally from the engraver of that subject—Charles Turner—fell to the bid of £14 14s. An engraver's proof of the Woman and Tambourine, also blackish, though from the generally well-chosen Stokes collection, sold for £23 2s. The pure etching of the Flint Castle fetched £16, and the first state of the print—not a peculiarly fine impression of it—£32 11s. A first state of Oakhampton Castle fetched £21. The etching of the Mont St. Gothard sold for £16 16s., and an exceptionally fine engraver's proof of this plate reached £86 2s. (Coinaghi)—an engraver's proof of very different quality selling happily for less than half the amount. A bright impression—a first published state—of the Sea-Piece in the Possession of the Earl of Egremont realised £33 12s. (Agnew). The etching of Hind Head Hill—a subject far more attractive in the completed state than in the pure etching—fetched £17. An engraver's proof of the subject, worked on by the artist, but dull in effect as an engraving, sold for £42—the sky heavy and without character, instead of moving and alive, as in fine impressions of the published states. Of the London from Greenwich there appeared an engraver's proof that was really very fine—indeed, an engraver's proof so exceptionally fine as to be equal to a fine published state. It sold, rightly enough, for £60, Mr. Agnew being the purchaser. Of the noble and solemn composition of the Severn and Wye—one of the crowning works of the Liber Studiorum—there was a fair first state, which sold for £35 14s. A so-called second state of another of those plates which are wholly of Turner's own execution—the Inverary Pier, Loch Fyne, Morning—sold for £23 2s. An excellent impression of the Crypt of Kirkstall Abbey—a first state, with the reflected lights plainly discernible in the vaulted roof of the ruined place—fetched likewise £23 2s. A fair first state of the Peat Bog, with the rare reflection in the water of the bonfire by the edge of the tarn, realised £32 11s. (Agnew). An engraver's proof of Chepstow Castle was sold for £57 15s. (Agnew), and an engraver's proof of the Mer de Glace for £60 (Agnew). A so-called second state of Rivara—probably in reality a first—sold for £8 8s. There was a fairly completed engraver's proof of the Solway Moss, not so heavily printed as to be loaded with ink, selling for £53 11s. (Agnew). Mr. Horne was the purchaser of an exceedingly interesting proof of Norham Castle, that proof falling to his bid of £73 10s. It derived a part of its value from the fact that it bore on it certain MS. notes by Turner. The Fine Art Society bought a first state of Raglan Castle for £49, and a first state of the famous, if over-rated, Aesacus and Hesperie, "with the white face," for £89. The sum of £210 was paid by Mr. Agnew for an engraver's proof of Ben Arthur, with the shadowed space at the end of the valley hard and impenetrable.

At the conclusion of the sale of Libers—which, on the whole, displayed, not for the first time, that accurate knowledge of the several impressions, and of their artistic worth, is rare among purchasers—there were offered a few examples from the delicate series, England and Wales, and the more manly series of the Southern Coast. The prices of these, however, it is not necessary to record, as the subjects appeared several in a lot, so that there would be little means of getting at the money value of each separately. It may be said roughly, however, that the prices of all the good engraved work after Turner tend to increase.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. JOHN BURR has been elected to the presidency of the Society of British Artists, in succession to Mr. Alfred Clint. Mr. Burr has been for several years vice-president of the society.

AN exhibition will be held at Simla about the middle of September for the encouragement of those decorative industries which have a direct connexion with the fine arts of India, Persia, and Arabia handed down by tradition. Special prizes are offered for carving in ivory and wood, for lacquer and enamel work, for painting on copper and gold, and for the inlaid metal work of Moradabad.

WE have received from Messrs. Horrocks and Hetherington, of London and Leeds, some specimens of what are called "memorial cards"—i.e., cards to be sent in memory of a deceased relation or friend. Whether the practice is a pleasing one, people must answer for themselves. These cards, however, almost reach the standard of fine art. We like best those that are coloured in shades of gray, with a silver border predominating over the black, so as to give a sort of half-mourning. All are creditably designed, printed, and got-up.

THE Artists' General Benevolent Institution thankfully acknowledge the receipt of fifty pounds from Admiral Carr-Glyn under the will of the late Miss Adelaide Neilson.

AMONG the pictures lately exhibited in the Sala del Cinquecento, Florence, was one of considerable interest to English people, and which would be more appropriately placed at Windsor than in the Florence gallery. It represented James Prince of Wales and his sister, the children of James II. and his Queen, Mary of Modena. The little prince wears the Order of the Garter. Both children are pleasingly painted by Nicholas Sargillier, who has been called the French Vandyke. The inscription on the picture is as follows:—"Jacobus Principe Walliae Ludovica Principessa," and the date is apparently 1699.

THE illustrated Revue of the Geneva Society of Arts is to be changed for the future into a Revue de la Suisse Romande. Many of the ablest authors and artists of the French-speaking cantons have promised their co-operation, including, among others, MM. Calame, Lemaître, de Meuron, G. Roux, Berthoud, Bachelin, and Anker. The Revue now appears once a fortnight, with autographic illustrations in the text, and photo-lithographic copies of the principal pictures in the exhibitions of Geneva, Neuchâtel, and other galleries of Western Switzerland. Etchings by A. Darier and Jeanmaire are also promised. The publisher is J. Sandoz, of Geneva and Neuchâtel.

THE second volume is now appearing in parts of the Rafael-Werk (Dresden: Ad. Gutbier), of which we spoke some little time ago on the publication of the first volume. It contains reproductions of all of Rafael's frescoes and tapestries which have never before been collected. The explanatory text is from the pen of Prof. Lübke. Following an example that is not usual in Germany, a limited number of artist's proofs are offered to subscribers to the whole work. Of the first volume, a new edition has already been called for.

TWENTY-ONE pictures have been purchased at the Melbourne Exhibition to form the nucleus of an art gallery at Adelaide.

MR. GREVILLE J. CHESTER has just published some Notes on the Present and Future of the Archaeological Collections of the University of Oxford (Simpkin, Marshall and Co.), which are decidedly of a "rousing" character. He certainly has no favourable opinion of the way in which archaeology is looked after or rather overlooked by the university. In fact, things are as bad as they can well be. The archaeological objects belonging to the university "are divided into five collections, to the great injury of each, and these are stowed away in at least four different buildings." "Some fine Cyprian vases . . . are, with other objects, actually placed higgledy-piggledy on the floor of the same unworthy and obscure place [i.e., the Taylor Institution], into which, on the occasion of a recent visit, the rain was dropping freely through the skylight." In spite, however, of the little care the university takes of its treasures, Mr. Chester begrudges to Queen's College its "secret and rapidly perishing collection of Egyptian antiquities." He would have everything in the way of archaeology crammed into the Ashmolean, possibly to be "packed away in a box in an outhouse in the basement, to which access by a ladder might easily have been had from the street"—a matter already touched upon in the ACADEMY, and thereby made "the subject of a painful correspondence." Mr. Chester, however, has faith in the expansive capabilities of the Ashmolean:—

"The cause of the overcrowding of the Ashmolean is the action of the university authorities, who, for the sake of holding occasional examinations of undergraduates, have, during the building of the new schools, for years past confiscated the upper room. Someone might surely have remembered that, after all, education and instruction are better than examination"

—a supposition which shows that Mr. Chester has been absent from Oxford for a long time. We must account in the same way for the remark that "the university ought to publish its own catalogues in its own printing-press, and not saddle the expense upon an individual [Mr. J. H. Parker] to whom, in a pecuniary way, it already owes so much." In these days of reforming Commissions, nous avons changé tout cela. At the end of his charge, Mr. Chester offers some practical suggestions "of instant importance;" but altogether, what with a plentiful besprinkling of italics and the apparition of the author's bête noire, the horns and hoofs of Prof. Monier Williams's stuffed bullock, the pamphlet is lively reading.

THE present exhibition in the upper rooms of the Berlin National Gallery differs entirely in character from those that have preceded it. Hitherto these exhibitions have been confined to the works of one or more German artists recently deceased, but the Director has now organised a brilliant collection of the works of the painter-etchers of France and England. Germany acknowledges that she has remained somewhat behind in the matter of etching, and it is perhaps to excite her artists to rivalry in this rapid mode of expression that this exhibition has been formed. The principal contributor is Dr. Meier, of Bremen, who sends a splendid collection of etchings, showing the development of this art in France from Charles Méryon, Jules Ballin, and Adolphe Appian to the great painter-etchers of the present day. English etching is represented by Seymour Haden, James Whistler, C. P. Slocumbe, Arthur Vershed, David Law, Edwin Edwards, J. C. Robinson, Heseltine, R. W. Macbeth, and the two naturalised foreigners, J. Tissot and Hubert Herkomer.

AN art exhibition is now open at Helsingfors, in Finland. It is said to be extremely interesting.

A DISTINGUISHED French archaeologist, M. Desiré Charnay, has lately returned from a second voyage to Yucatan, where he has passed a long time exploring the ancient forests in search of Mexican antiquities. He brings back with him some large photographic views of magnificent ruins found in the heart of the forest, as well as a vast number of impressions of inscriptions which he has discovered. He has communicated the results of his researches to the Geographical Society, which will publish the inscriptions. Some idea of their extent may be conveyed by the fact that the writings on one monument alone at Palenqué cover a space of eighty square metres. The decipherment of these ancient Mexican inscriptions offers immense interest, for they are the vestiges of a civilisation of which, in spite of recent researches, no really satisfactory knowledge has yet been gained.

THE prix de Salon has been bestowed on M. Boucher, a young sculptor, for his plaster group called L'Amour filial. The prix de Salon this year only entitles to two years' foreign travel instead of three, but, in addition, eight bourses de voyage have been voted to help young artists by aiding them to accomplish foreign travel.

SOME excitement has been caused at the Louvre by the mysterious disappearance of a small picture by Lenain, called The Card-Players. It was carried off by someone in the middle of the day while the galleries were open to visitors, and none of the officials perceived the theft. It is now stated to have been returned just as mysteriously.

M. A. QUANTIN is just publishing an édition de luxe of Benvenuto Cellini's autobiography, translated by Léopold Leclanché, with notes by M. Franco, and nine etchings by F. La guillermie.

At the last meeting of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, a paper was read by Dr. A. Mitchell, the secretary, upon a small vase of brass or bronze recently found in an island off the coast of Islay which contains the remains of an old church. A similar vessel, of which the use is unknown, is figured by Miss Stokes in the Christian Inscriptions of Ireland. Another paper was read upon a collection of implements and ornaments of stone, bronze, &c., from Glenluce, in Wigtownshire. The objects number more than three thousand in all, including some that are very rare in Scotland and even unique, but their chief value consists in their forming an almost exhaustive collection from a special district.

THE STAGE.

Iphigenie auf Tauris has been one of the principal productions of the Meiningen players since we last wrote—though “Meiningen players” we can hardly with accuracy say, since two of the principal parts have been taken by Herr Barnay and Fräulein Haverland, both of them guests of our guests, as we said two or three weeks ago. There is no such crowd of drilled supernumeraries in Iphigenie auf Tauris as in Julius Cæsar—that is, an equal effect can scarcely be produced by such a crowd. Neither, of course, is there such a crowd of actors with speaking parts. Iphigenie auf Tauris approaches the classical, approaches the simple, and but few personages cross the stage to repeat its lines. Students of Goethe, himself ardent in theatrical reform, and deserving in his turn to benefit by the reforms of others, may fairly profess themselves satisfied with the fashion in which his play is rendered by the modern representative troop of German actors now with us in London.

ONE or two changes in the performance of Hamlet at the Lyceum on the occasion of the present revival deserve notice after it has been stated that Mr. Irving is of course the Prince of Denmark and Miss Ellen Terry the Ophelia. Miss Pauncefort, one of the most respectable and competent, if not one of the most interesting, of legitimate actresses, resumes her part of the Queen; and Mr. Mead, who has been absent from the theatre a good deal since the first performance of the play during the lifetime of Mr. Bateman, is again the Ghost, his sonorous voice and very deliberate, not to say unwilling, delivery of his words quite falling in with everybody's notion of what nobody has seen. Mr. Terriss now appears in the play for the first time. He is, in the opinion of many, better suited to the kind of part assigned to him in The Cup. Before the close of the season at the Lyceum—an event announced for about the last week of July—there will be a revival of several other plays which hold their own in Mr. Irving's repertory.

MIDLE. SARAH BERNHARDT will appear one day next week, for the benefit of a sister-actress, in Coppée's charming little poem Le Passant, and we are glad of it, as the part she plays in it is a pleasant one—only very delicately plaintive. But far too much stress has been laid on its importance by the anonymous correspondent of a newspaper. It is in truth only a light sort of reputation that could have been made by the performance of Zanetto, and from its comparatively easy success Middle. Sarah Bernhardt speedily passed on to the realisation of far more serious triumphs.

MUSIC.

“IL DEMONIO,” BY HERR ANTON RUBINSTEIN.

ON Elburz, the highest peak of the Caucasian range, Zoroaster is said to have placed the abode of Arisman, the prince of demons. Evil spirits play an important part in Russian popular fiction, especially in the region of Caucasia, with its snow-clad mountains, its sombre forests, its rivers, and foaming cataracts. In Herr Rubinstein's opera, The Demon, produced last Tuesday evening at Covent Garden, the various scenes take place in Georgia, one of its principal provinces. When the curtain rises, nothing is visible but mist, clouds, and lightning. Choruses of Evil Spirits, of the Winds, of the Waters, of Fountains, of the Trees, Flowers, Rocks, are heard. The Demon (M. Lassalle) is then discovered on a rock by the banks of the River Aragua, in front of the castle of Prince Gudal. He is met by the Angel of Light (Mme. Trebelli), who exhorts him, but in vain, to cease cursing, and to return to Heaven's boundless love. Gudal's daughter, Tamara (Mme. Albani), her Governess (Mdlle. Ghiotti), and her playmates then appear. The Demon sees and falls in love with Tamara, and asks her to bless him with her love. She alone has seen the apparition, and her playmates cannot understand her terror and troubled looks. She follows the maidens back into the castle. The scene then changes to a wild, rocky pass in the mountains. Prince Sinodal (Signor Marini), betrothed to Tamara, is on his way to Gudal's castle. The caravan halts for the night; the Prince's old servant (Signor Silvestri) tries to persuade his master to go and offer up prayers in a neighbouring chapel. The Prince, however, falls to sleep, whispering the name of his beloved Tamara. The Demon appears, and immediately afterwards Tartars enter, who plunder the caravan and kill the unfortunate Prince. In the second act we see the company assembled at Gudal's castle for the nuptials. A messenger (Signor Manfredi) announces the speedy arrival of the bridegroom; but, soon after, songs and dances are interrupted by sounds of grief. The dead body of Sinodal is carried into the hall. Tamara, struck with grief and horror, resolves, despite the entreaties of her father, to end her days in a cloister. The Demon again appears to her, and speaks of his love. In the third act we are introduced to Tamara's cell in the cloister. She is restless and agitated. The Demon enters and speaks of his wretched fate, his love for her. As he is about to embrace her, the Angel comes forward, and Tamara dies in his protecting arms. She is carried to heaven by angels, and the Demon sinks into the abysses.

Such is a brief outline of the plot of this legendary and fantastic piece. The instrumental introduction and chorus of Evil Spirits in the first act contain a theme which we may designate as the “Demon Motive.” It plays an important part throughout the opera. It is heard when Prince Sinodal rises from his couch and kneels in prayer on the night of his death, and just before the first chorus of the second act. At the close of the last act, as the angels are carrying Tamara up to heaven, it is again introduced. Another clever use of Leitmotive occurs in the instrumental introduction to the third act, intended to depict Tamara's agitated and restless state of mind. Soft strains of sacred music are mixed up with portions of the music in which the Demon has appealed to her love; when she first notices his entrance into the cell, the theme is given out by oboe solo, with which he implored her love even while she was kneeling before the corpse of the ill-fated Prince. Many other instances might be mentioned. Another feature of interest is the local colouring given to the music by a successful imitation of national tunes. The marked rhythms, the peculiar intervals of the Eastern scale, and the abrupt modulations are very, perhaps too, prominent in the chorus sung by Tamara's playmates in the first act, and in the charming dances and choruses connected with the marriage festivities in the second act.

The orchestration throughout the opera is extremely interesting and effective. The dramatic character of the work is announced at the very commencement of the first act by a stroke of the tam-tam or gong followed by a roll of the drum. Organ and harps are introduced in the combined “choruses of Nature” at the opening. In Prince Sinodal's scena, the corne inglese, the bass clarinet, and the viole accompanying the voice an octave lower, produce a sombre and weird effect. When the dark figures of the Tartars appear in the caravan scene, only tenor violins, basses, and drums are heard, interrupted by a sustained note for horns; and again, when all are kneeling and praying before the Prince's dead body in the castle, the only instruments employed are bassoons, tenors, and basses. The orchestral accompaniment to the Demon's song in the same scene is original and striking. The strings are divided and muted, and in the score there are parts written for a harp, a glass-harmonica, and a pianino. The trombones are effectively used throughout the work, especially in piano passages, after the manner of Schubert.

Legendary subjects attract composers on account of the dramatic elements which they contain, and therefore, in Herr Rubinstein's opera, the music allotted to the unfortunate Tamara and the love-sick Demon first calls for notice. There are passages of great force and dramatic interest in the second act, when the dead body of the Prince is brought into the hall of the castle; and also in the long scene in Tamara's cell. If, however, at moments one feels the power of the music, the interest created is not sustained; some disturbing element intervenes and breaks the spell. There is but one step from the sublime to the ridiculous—from the drama to the opera bouffe; and one feels at times on that dividing step. The composer is always in earnest, but does not always succeed in carrying out his thoughts and plans. Not to be misunderstood, let us clearly say that a composer cannot attempt a more difficult task than that of writing new “demon” music which shall be original and powerful, and able to be favourably compared with the successful examples of other writers.

The choruses throughout the opera, with one or two exceptions, contain some of Herr Rubinstein's brightest and most pleasing music. Particularly, indeed, would we note the graceful and characteristic ballet-music of the second act; the maidens' song, with the florid counter-theme sung by Tamara; and the clever and expressive concerted music in the second act.

The mise-en-scène was magnificent, and the splendid costumes and different stage effects contributed to the success of the work.

We cannot enter into detail about the acting; it will be sufficient to say that all strove to do their very best. Herr Rubinstein conducted, and he must surely have been pleased with the attention and zeal displayed by the orchestra. The house was very full, the piece well received, and the composer and the singers were twice recalled after each act.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . .	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

BOOKS RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

Crown 8vo, cloth, with Twelve Coloured Diagrams, 6s.
BALANCE SHEET OF THE WORLD
FOR TEN YEARS, 1870-1880.

By MICHAEL O. MULLHALL, F.R.S.,
Author of "The Progress of the World," &c.
"A very interesting and well-arranged little volume, showing in a clear manner the general characteristics of the economic movement of the last ten years. Mr. Mullhall's view regarding the position of all the world is a decidedly optimistic one. He gives the figures of the population, wealth, taxes, and debt of all the nations of the world, together with figures relating to agriculture, commerce, mining, the carrying trade, and the earnings of nations in 1880, as compared with 1870."—Statist.

Medium 8vo, cloth, with Maps and Illustrations, 2s.
PRE-HISTORIC EUROPE: A GEOLOGICAL SKETCH.

By JAMES GEIKIE, LL.D., F.R.S., &c.,
Of H.M. Geological Survey of Scotland; Author of "The Great Ice Age."
"He attempts to describe, in a more systematic manner than has hitherto been attempted, that succession of changes, climatic and geographical, which, taken together, constitute the historical geology of Pleistocene, Postglacial, and recent times. This he does in a more thorough and complete manner than, we venture to think, has ever been done before."—Times.

FIFTH EDITION, GREATLY ENLARGED, post 8vo, cloth, 13s.
THE PHYSICAL GEOLOGY
AND GEOGRAPHY OF GREAT BRITAIN.

By ANDREW C. RAMSAY, LL.D., F.R.S.,
Director-General of the Geological Surveys of the United Kingdom.
With Geological Map, printed in Colours, and numerous Additions, Illustrations of Fossils, Sections, and Landscapes.
"No better introduction to the principles of geology could possibly be recommended to the English reader. It is a work of the highest value, and one worthy to take a foremost place among popular manuals of science."—Nature.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, with upwards of 103 Illustrations, 6s.
LIFE AND HER CHILDREN.

GLIMPSSES OF ANIMAL LIFE FROM THE AMOEBA TO THE INSECTS.
By ARADELLA D. BUCKLEY,
Authoress of "The Fairy Land of Science," &c.
CONTENTS.

- | | |
|--|--|
| CHAP. | CHAP. |
| 1. Life and her Children. | 8. The Mailed Warriors of the Sea, with Hinged Bodies and Joluted Feet. |
| 2. Life's Simplest Children; how they Live, and Move, and Build. | 9. The snare-Warriors and their Hunting Relations. |
| 3. How Sponges Live. | 10. Insect Suckers and Biters, which change their Coats but not their Bodies. |
| 4. The Lasso-Throwers of the Ponds and Ocean. | 11. Insect Guawars and Sippers, which remodel their Bodies within their Coats. |
| 5. How Starfish Walk and Sea-Urchins Grow. | 12. Intelligent Insects with Helpless Children, as illustrated by the Ants. |
| 6. The Mantle-covered Animals, and how they Live, with Heads and without them. | |
| 7. The Outcasts of Animal Life, and the Elastic-Ringed Animals by Sea and by Land. | |

"We cannot fancy a more interesting book to put in the hands of a boy or an enquiring turn of mind during a seaside sojourn."—Academy.
"What constitutes the book's chief charm is the marvellously simple, yet quite scientific, style which runs through it. . . . The work forms a charming introduction to the study of zoology—the science of living things."—Nature.

Post 8vo, cloth, Illustrated by Maps, on a uniform scale, 315 pp., 2s. 3d.
GEOGRAPHICAL READER.—BOOK III, for STANDARD IV.
THE COUNTIES OF ENGLAND.

By CHARLOTTE M. MASON,
Authoress of "The Forty Shires: their History, Scenery, Arts, and Legends."
"To the scores and scores of friends who from time to time have asked us to recommend a manual which in a brief form presents full and reliable information of the English counties, we say here is the very book."—Practical Teacher.
"We recommend the work very strongly. It is furnished with Maps in Stanford's best style."—Educational Times.

Also,
BOOK I. for STANDARD II., ELEMENTARY GEOGRAPHY. Illustrated. 124 pp., 1s.
BOOK II. for STANDARD III., THE BRITISH EMPIRE and the GREAT DIVISIONS of the GLOBE. [In the press.]

THIRD EDITION, with 32 Full-Page Illustrations, post 8vo, cloth, 4s.
BOTANY FOR CHILDREN.

An Illustrated Elementary Text-Book for Junior Classes and Young Children.
By the Rev. GEORGE HENSLOW, M.A., F.L.S., F.G.S.,
Author of "Floral Dissections."
An Edition, with the Illustrations Coloured by Hand, is also published, cloth gilt, gilt edges, price 14s.
"Just such an elementary text-book of Botany as might be put into practical use in schools, without the slightest doubt that children would take to it."—Science Gossip.

LONDON:

EDWARD STANFORD, 55, CHARING CROSS, S.W.

TRÜBNER & CO'S
LIST.

Vols. I. to VI. ("ABAR" to "MYSORE"), 8vo, half-morocco, price £2 2s.

THE

IMPERIAL GAZETTEER OF INDIA.

By W. W. HUNTER, C.I.E., LL.D.,

Director-General of Statistics to the Government of India.

Published by Command of the Secretary of State for India.

"It is a treasury from which the politician and economist may draw countless stores of valuable information, and into which the general reader can dip with the certainty of always finding something both to interest and instruct him."—Times.

* * The three remaining volumes will be issued in July, price £1 1s., making £3 3s. for the Nine Volumes.

THE ESSENCE OF CHRISTIANITY.

By L. FEUERBACH. Translated from the Second German Edition by MARIAN EVANS, Translator of Strauss's "Life of Jesus." Second Edition, post 8vo, cloth. [Nearly ready.]

HISTORY OF MATERIALISM.

And Criticism of its Present Importance. By F. A. LANGE. Authorised Translation by E. C. THOMAS, late Scholar of Trinity College, Oxford. Vol. III., completing the work, with an Index, post 8vo, cloth. [Nearly ready.]

FAITH AND FREEDOM.

Fourteen Sermons. By E. M. GILDART, M.A., Formerly Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford; sometime Curate of St. George's, Everton; late Minister of Hope-street Church, Liverpool, and now of the Croydon Free Christian Church. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

FRANCE and the FRENCH,
in the SECOND HALF of the
NINETEENTH CENTURY.

By KARL HILLEBRAND. Translated from the Third German Edition. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"The best part by far is that in which he describes, with great analytical skill, the intellectual life of France during the last few years, and compares it incidentally with that of other countries."—Globe.

EDGAR QUINET:HIS EARLY LIFE AND WRITINGS.

By RICHARD HEATH. Post 8vo, with Portrait, Illustrations, and an Autograph Letter, cloth, 12s. 6d.

"Altogether, Mr. Heath has an interesting and pleasant story to tell, and tells it fairly well."—Athenaeum.

EASTERN PROVERBS and EMBLEMS, ILLUSTRATING OLD TRUTHS.

By the Rev. J. LONG, Member of the Bengal Asiatic Society, F.R.G.S. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"High praise is due to the industry and research . . . which has placed before Western scholars the concentrated and compressed essence of the homely wisdom which has been for untold ages accumulating in the East."—Scotsman.

EDUCATION: Scientific and Technical;

or, How the Inductive Sciences are Taught, and how they Ought to be Taught. By ROBERT GALLOWAY, M.R.I.A., F.C.S. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"Mr. Galloway's qualifications as an adviser on the theory and practice of education are of the highest rank."—Dublin Evening Mail.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of
MARK RUTHERFORD,

Disseminating Minister. Edited by his Friend, REUBEN SHARPOTT. Crown 8vo, boards, 5s.

"The story was well worth telling; and it is admirably told, with much power and much pathos, and with a certain homely grace that is very fascinating."—St. James's Gazette.

INDIAN POETRY.

By EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I., M.A., &c., Author of "The Light of Asia," Containing a New Edition of "The Indian Song of Songs," from the Sanskrit of the Gita Govinda of Jayadeva, &c. Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"Englishmen who have never before placed themselves under the spell of Hindoo sacred romance could not have a better guide than Mr. Arnold."—Times.

DR. APPLETON:his LIFE and LITERARY RELICS.

By J. H. APPLETON, M.A., late Vicar of St. Mark's, Staplefield, Sussex; and A. H. SAYCE, M.A., Queen's College, Oxford. Post 8vo, with Portrait, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"The brief story of his life is told with much feeling and simplicity."—Scotsman.

BUDDHIST BIRTH STORIES; Or, JATAKA TALES.

From the Jatakavannanā. Translated from the Original Pali by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS. Vol. I. Post 8vo, cloth, 18s.

"It will be of the greatest interest and importance to students."—St. James's Gazette.

THE ENEMIES of BOOKS.

By WILLIAM BLADES, Typographer. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, on laid paper, with Five Plates, parchment, 5s.

"His pleasant volume."—Saturday Review.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

Just published, 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

KEIM'S HISTORY of JESUS of NAZARA.

Considered in its connexion with the National Life of Israel, and related in detail. Translated by ARTHUR HAYES. Vol. V. The Messianic Progress to Jerusalem—The Entry into Jerusalem—The Decisive Struggle—The Farewell—The Last Supper.

Vols. I. to IV. at the same price each.

Subscribers to the THEOLOGICAL TRANSLATION FUND LIBRARY receive this volume for 7s. Prospectus, with Contents of the Series, post-free on application.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

CAPTAIN TROTTER'S JOURNEY TO PEZ.

In 1 vol., square demy 8vo, 24s.

OUR MISSION to the COURT of MAROCCO in 1880, under Sir JOHN DROMMOND HAY, K.C.B., Minister Plenipotentiary at Tangier, and Envoy Extraordinary to His Majesty the Sultan of Morocco. By Captain PHILIP DUNHAM TROTTER, 93rd Highlanders. Illustrated from Photographs by the Hon. D. LAWLESS, 11th Brigade.

"Captain Trotter's book appears opportunely, considering the interest in North African affairs excited by the French operations in Tunis."—Athenaeum.

Edinburgh: DAVID DOUGLAS; and all Booksellers.

TO PROPRIETORS of NEWSPAPERS

and PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, Capital & Labour, the Farmers' Gazette, the Review, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPLETE, ECONOMIC, and PUNCTUAL PRODUCTION of PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether illustrated or plain. Estimates furnished to Proprietors of New Periodicals, for either Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—74 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

(Twenty doors west of Mudie's Library.)

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Collotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.

AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Meissonier, Corot, De Neuville, Burne-Jones, Rossetti, Cave Thomas, &c., &c., &c.

MUSEO DEL PRADO, MADRID.

Subscription issue of 397 Autotype reproductions of Paintings in this Celebrated Gallery (executed by Braun & Cie., Munich) under the superintendence of the Director of the Gallery. The work contains 34 examples of Murillo, 48 Velasquez, 1 Raphael, 25 Titian, 18 Van Dyck, 38 Rubens, &c., and will be complete in Eighty Monthly Issues. For particulars and terms of subscription, apply to the MANAGER, The Autotype Company, 531, Oxford-street.

PICTURES CLEANED, RESTORED, FRAMED.

To adorn the walls of Homes with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 531, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Ealing Dene, Middlesex.

General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWYER.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHARING CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

1st March, 1880. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

SUN LIFE OFFICE, LONDON.

Established 1810.

CHIEF OFFICE, 83, THEAONEBOLE STREET.

BRANCH OFFICES, 60, CHARING CROSS;

And Oxford-street, corner of Vere-street.

Very low premiums without participation in Profits, especially for young lives. Half Premium, Non-Furniture, and Endowment Assurances granted.

Prompt settlement of Claims.

The Society's newly revised Prospectus, and a greatly simplified form of Proposal, will be forwarded on application.

J. O. PRIESTLEY, Actuary.

PROVIDE AGAINST ACCIDENTS!
ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN!

A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury, may be secured by a Policy of the

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY,

The Oldest and Largest Company insuring against Accidents of all kinds

The Rt. Hon. Lord KINNAIRD, Chairman.

SUBSCRIBED CAPITAL, £1,000,000.

PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £230,000.

MODERATE PREMIUMS.

Bonus allowed to Insurers after Five Years.

£1,630,000

HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, and West and Office, 8, Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing-cross, or 64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

To-night, at 9, WTCHELET'S Comedy,
THE COUNTRY GIRL,
the second Comedy of Miss Litton's Series of Performances, will be produced. Miss LITTON as PEGGY.
Preceded, at 7.30, by a Comedy in two acts,
THE BACHELOR OF ARTS.
Doors open at 7; carriages at 10.50. Seats booked at the Princess's and Court Theatres from 11 till 5. No fees.
Stage Manager, Mr. RAYNHAM. Acting Manager, Mr. H. HERMAN.

DURRY LANE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

The MEININGEN COURT COMPANY of his Serene Highness the GRAND DUKE OF SAXE MEININGEN, under the gracious patronage of H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

This morning (Saturday) and to-night,
WILLIAM TELL.
Herren Barnay, Nesper, Telier, Kober, Richard, Heine, Arndt, Godeck; Fraulein Haverland, Moser-Sperner, Werner, and the little Godecks.
WILLIAM TELL has rivalled "Julius Caesar" in its popularity, and, in consequence of the numerous applications from persons who were disappointed in getting seats at the previous performances, will be repeated this Morning and Evening. The scenery has been pronounced by experienced travellers in Switzerland to be the most perfect representation of that magnificent country, and the son rising on the Uri Rothstock mountain, in the scene of the meeting of the cantons, is the most realistic and natural effect ever produced on the stage, being a sublime copy of that which travellers go hundreds of miles to see.
On Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, June 27, 28, 29,
DAS KÄTCHEN VON HEILBRONN (H. von Kleist).

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.15, WAITING CONSENT,
a new Comedietta by Mrs. FAIRBAIN.
At 8, a new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BROWN, called THE PICKER CRYSTAL.
Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Billington, E. W. Garden, G. Shelton, and E. D. Ward; Mesdames Effie Litton, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorne.
At 10, WELSH RABBITS,
a musical and dramatic absurdity, by Messrs. R. REECE and KNIGHT SUMMERS, with new scenery, dresses, and appointments.
Messrs. J. L. Toole and E. W. Garden; Mesdames Emily Thorne and Eliza Johnston.
Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to 2s. 3s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THE OPERA SEASON

Under the direction of Mr. ALEXANDER HENDERSON.

To-night, at 8, an entirely new and original Opera Comique, in three acts, by OFFENBACH, entitled
LA BOULANGERE.
Under the immediate direction of Mr. H. B. Farnie.
New and elaborate scenery by Ryan and Hicks. Dresses, after designs by Grévin and Faustin, by Alais.
Preceded, at 7.30, by a Comedy, after Meilhac and Halévy, entitled SEENING FLOU-FLOU.
Mesdames Amélie, Maud Taylor, Turner, Dubois, Graham, Evelyn, and Wadman; Messrs. Collis, Temple, Ashford, Mansfield, Stopan, and Lantion.
Greatly augmented chorus and orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Hillier. Ballet master, Mr. Lauri.
Box-office now open. Acting Manager, Mr. W. A. BURT.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. D'OLYLT CARTE.

To-night, at 8.30, a new Aesthetic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN, entitled PATIENCE.
Messrs. George Grossmith, Rutland Barrington, Richard Temple, F. Thornton, and Burward Lelli; Mesdames Leonora Draham, Jessie Bond, Julia Gwynne, Fortescue, and Alice Barnett.
Produced under the personal direction of the Author and Composer.
Conductor, Mr. F. Collier.
Preceded, at 8, by
UNCLE SAMUEL,
by ARTHUR LAW and GEORGE GROSSMITH.
Doors open at 7.30.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BRUCE.

To-night, at 8.40, a new Comedy, in three acts, called
THE COLONEL.
By F. C. BURNAND.
Preceded, at 8, by the one-act Drama, by G. C. HERBERT,
OUR BITTEREST FOE.
Doors open at 7.30. Box-office open daily from 11 to 5, under the control of Mr. MILLER.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

FAREWELL PERFORMANCES OF MADAME MODJESKA.
To-night, at 8, Mr. MORTIMER'S
HEARTSEASE.
MONDAY, TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, JUNE 27, 28, 29, and 30, Mr. WILLS'S Play, JUNANA.
Preceded, at 7, by
TURN HIM OUT.
On FRIDAY, JULY 1, SPECIAL PERFORMANCE, during which MADAME MODJESKA will appear in her most famous impersonations.
Box-office open from 11 to 5. Doors open at 6.30.
Carriages at 11. No fees.
Stage Manager, Mr. HARRY JACKSON. Acting Manager, Mr. H. HERMAN.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER.

TO-NIGHT, Miss KATE LAWLER'S BENEFIT, and LAST NIGHT of the SEASON.
At 7.30, ROSALIE.
At 8.15, THE MEMBER FOR SLOCUM.
At 8.50, DON JUAN CUNEO.
Mesdames Kate Lawler, Harriet Coveney, Ruth Francis, Florence Lavender, F. Clithero, Elise Ward, and Annie Lawler; Messrs. Arthur Williams, Frank Wyatt, S. Dallas, H. Martell, and Frank Cooper.
Stage Manager, FRANK ROTHBART. Acting Manager, CECIL RALEIGH.
Doors open at 7.

POPULAR NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

MY SISTER the ACTRESS. By Florence Marryat,
Author of "A Broken Blossom," "Love's Conflict," &c. 3 vols.

DR. VICTORIA. By Major-General Alexander, C.B.
3 vols.
"A vigorous, brightly told story of English society."—Scotsman.

BREEMAR. By a new Writer. 2 vols.

F. V. WHITE & CO. (Successors to Samuel Tinsley & Co.), 31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

SUMMER EXHIBITION

NOW OPEN

Daily 9 to 7.

Admission, One Shilling; Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S

Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA

"If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa."

Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."

W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.

"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted."

CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

EXTRACT

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

Gold combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. By gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drowsy feeling, with sensations of fullness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. LEPPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s 9d. and 4s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.
Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.
Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.
Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.
Thoroughly restores the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

BRAND & CO'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

READ THE FOLLOWING CURE OF HAY FEVER—SUMMER CATARRH—by DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.

Mr. Brown, 168, Hockley-hill, Birmingham, writes: "One person suffered from Hay Fever, took the Wafers, and found almost immediate relief. They give instant relief, and rapidly cure Asthma, Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, and taste pleasantly.
Price 1s. 1jd. and 2s. 9d. per box by all Druggists.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on
MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.
The original, best, and most liberal.

Cash prices.

Illustrated Price Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.
F. MOEDER, 246, 248, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from £6 6s. to 50 guineas.
Drawing-room Suites, from 49 9s. to 45 guineas.
Dining-room Suites, from 27 7s. to 40 guineas.
And all other goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 246, 248, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21 Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

PROTECTION FROM FIRE.

BRYANT & MAY'S

PATENT SAFETY

MATCHES.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

ADVANTAGES.

Are not POISONOUS
Are free from SMELL
Are manufactured
Without Phosphorus
Are perfectly harmless
To the Operatives employed
Are very DAMP PROOF

LIGHT ONLY ON THE BOX.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

PROTECTION TO HEALTH.

MESSRS. RIVINGTON'S EDUCATIONAL LIST.

ARNOLD'S PRACTICAL INTRODUCTION to LATIN

PROSE COMPOSITION. By GEORGE G. BRADLEY, M.A., Master of University College, Oxford, and late Head-Master of Marlborough College. A New and Revised Edition. Crown 8vo. [In September.]

LECTURES in LATIN PROSE, with Illustrative Exercises.

By GEORGE G. BRADLEY, M.A.

[In preparation.]

THE JUGURTHA of SALLUST. By E. P. Brooke,

M.A., Assistant-Master at Rugby School.

[In preparation.]

A SECOND LATIN READING BOOK: forming a continuation of Easy Latin Stories. By G. L. BENNETT, M.A., Head-Master of the High School, Plymouth. Crown 8vo. [In preparation.]

A LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY for JUNIOR

FORMS of SCHOOLS. By C. G. GEPP, M.A., late Head-Master of King Edward VI. School, Stratford-upon-Avon. 16mo. [In the press.]

LIVY. Book II. Edited, with Notes, &c., by Henry

BEICHER, M.A., Assistant-Master at King's College, London, and one of the Classical Examiners to the University of London.

[Nearly ready.]

SELECTIONS from THUCYDIDES: an Easy Greek

Reading Book. By E. H. MOORE, M.A., Assistant-Master at the High School, Plymouth. [In preparation.]

ARNOLD'S PRACTICAL INTRODUCTION to GREEK

PROSE COMPOSITION. By EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., LL.D., Fellow and Tutor of Balliol College, Oxford. A New and Revised Edition. Crown 8vo. [In August.]

ESSAYS on ARISTOTLE. Edited by Evelyn Abbott,

M.A., LL.D., Fellow and Tutor of Balliol College, Oxford.

This volume is intended to be a continuation of Hellenica, and, though the Essays are concerned with Aristotle only, they will be written from the same point of view as the Essays in the previous volume. [In preparation.]

INTRODUCTION to GREEK VERSE COMPOSITION.

By ARTHUR SIDGWICK, M.A., Tutor of Corpus Christi College, Oxford; late Assistant-Master at Rugby School, and Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; and F. D. MORICE, M.A., Assistant-Master at Rugby School, and Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford. [In preparation.]

A SHORT HISTORY of ENGLAND for SCHOOLS.

By F. YORK-POWELL, M.A., Lecturer at Christ Church, Oxford. With Maps and Illustrations. Small 8vo. [In the press.]

AN INTRODUCTION to the STUDY of HEAT. By

J. HAMBLIN SMITH, M.A., of Gonville and Caius College, and late Lecturer in Classics at St. Peter's College, Cambridge. Small 8vo, 3s.

A PRACTICAL ENGLISH GRAMMAR. For the Higher Forms of Schools, and for Students preparing for Examinations. By W. TIDMARSH, B.A., Head-Master of Putney School. Small 8vo. [In the press.]

HISTORICAL BIOGRAPHIES. Edited by the Rev.

M. CREIGHTON, M.A., late Fellow and Tutor of Merton College, Oxford. With Maps and Plans. Small 8vo.

SIMON de MONTFORT. By M. CREIGHTON, M.A. 2s. 6d.

THE BLACK PRINCE. By LOUISE CREIGHTON. 2s. 6d.

SIR WALTER RALEGH. By LOUISE CREIGHTON. With Portrait. 3s.

THE DUKE of WELLINGTON. By ROSAMOND WAITE. With Portrait. 3s. 6d.

THE DUKE of MARLBOROUGH. By LOUISE CREIGHTON. With Portrait. 3s. 6d.

OLIVER CROMWELL. By F. W. CORNISH, M.A. [Nearly ready.]

THE BEGINNER'S DRILL-BOOK of ENGLISH

GRAMMAR. Adapted for Middle-Class and Elementary Schools. By JAMES BURTON, B.A., First English Master in the High School of the Liverpool Institute. Small 8vo, 1s. 6d.

LATIN TEXTS. For use in Schools, &c. 18mo.

In attached wrapper.

THE AENEID of VERGIL. Book I. 2d.; II. 2d.; III. 2d.; IV. 2d.; V. 2d.; VI. 3d.; VII. 2d.; VIII. 2d.; IX. 2d.; X. 3d.; XI. 3d.; XII. 3d.

THE GEORGICS of VERGIL. Book I. 2d.; II. 2d.; III. 2d.; IV. 2d.

THE BUCOLICS of VERGIL. 2d.

VERGIL.—THE BUCOLICS, GEORGICS, and AENEID in One Volume. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

CAESAR de BELLO GALLICO. Book I. 3d.; II. 2d.; III. 2d.; IV. 2d.; V. 3d.; VI. 2d.; VII. 3d.; VIII. 3d.

CAESAR de BELLO GALLICO. In One Volume. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

SELECTIONS from CAESAR.—The GALLIC WAR.

Edited, with Preface, Life of Caesar, Text, Notes, Geographical and Biographical Index, and Map of Gaul, by G. L. BENNETT, M.A., Head-Master of the High School, Plymouth. Small 8vo, 2s.

SELECTIONS from the AENEID of VERGIL. With

Notes. By G. L. BENNETT, M.A. Small 8vo, 1s. 6d.

FIRST STEPS in LATIN. By F. Ritchie, M.A.,

Assistant-Master at the High School, Plymouth. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

GRADATIM: an Easy Translation Book for Beginners. By H. R. HEATLEY, M.A., and H. N. KINGDON, B.A., Assistant-Masters at Hillbrow School, Rugby. Small 8vo, 1s. 6d.

STORIES from OVID in HEXAMETER VERSE.—

METAMORPHOSES. With Notes and Marginal References to the Public School Latin Primer. By R. W. TAYLOR, M.A., Head-Master of Kelly College, Tavistock, and late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. New and Revised Edition. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE ANABASIS of XENOPHON. Edited, with

Preface, Introduction, Historical Sketch, Itinerary, Syntax Rules, Notes, Indices, Vocabularies, and Maps, by R. W. TAYLOR, M.A. Crown 8vo.

BOOKS I. and II., 3s. 6d.

BOOKS III. and IV., 3s. 6d.

Also, separately, BOOK I., 2s. 6d.; BOOK II., 2s.

SCENES from GREEK PLAYS. Rugby Edition.

Abridged and Adapted for the Use of Schools. By ARTHUR SIDGWICK, M.A., Tutor of Corpus Christi College, Oxford; late Assistant-Master at Rugby School, and Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Small 8vo, 1s. 6d. each.

ARISTOPHANES.—THE CLOUDS. THE FROGS. THE KNIGHTS. PLUTUS.

EURIPIDES.—IPHIGENIA in TAURUS. THE CYCLOPS. ION. ELECTRA. ALCESTIS. BACCHAE. HECUBA.

AN ELEMENTARY GREEK GRAMMAR. By J.

HAMBLIN SMITH, M.A., of Gonville and Caius College, and late Lecturer in Classics at St. Peter's College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

A FIRST HISTORY of ENGLAND. By Louise

CREIGHTON, Author of "Life of the Black Prince," "Sir Walter Raleigh," &c. With Forty Illustrations. 18mo, 2s. 6d.

A HISTORY of ENGLAND. By the Rev. J. Franck

BRIGHT, M.A., Fellow of University College, and Historical Lecturer at Balliol, New, and University Colleges, Oxford; late Master of the Modern School at Marlborough College. With numerous Maps and Plans. New Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo.

PERIOD I.—MEDIAEVAL MONARCHY: the Departure of the Romans to Richard III. From A.D. 449 to A.D. 1485. 4s. 6d.

PERIOD II.—PERSONAL MONARCHY: Henry VII. to James II. From A.D. 1485 to A.D. 1688. 5s.

PERIOD III.—CONSTITUTIONAL MONARCHY: William and Mary to the Present Time. From A.D. 1689 to A.D. 1837. 7s. 6d.

RIVINGTONS, WATERLOO PLACE, PALL MALL, LONDON.

BINDING DEPT. JUN 20 1961

University of Toronto
Library

DO NOT REMOVE
THE CARD
FROM THIS POCKET

Acme Library Card Pocket
LOWE-MARTIN CO. LIMITED

